The gross earnings of this St. John and Quebec railroad for the five months from October 31, 1918, to March 31, 1919, were $31,505.08. At that rate they would amount to $75,612.12 per annum. For the further period of six months from March 31, 1919, to September 30, 1919, the gross earnings were $24,873.08, or at the rate of $49,746.12 per annum. For the four years that the railway has been in operation, from April 1, 1915, to March 31, 1919, the total gross earnings were $145,121.45. So it will be readily seen that if the management of the Canadian National railways has to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $100,000 yearly for running rights over ten miles of road, when the traffic over the whole road for which they want those running rights will only earn at best $49,746 per annum, it would take over four years to earn the money to pay for the running rights over this ten mile section for one year. Surely this is poor business.

The criticism I have to offer, Mr. Speaker, is this: When this road was first contemplated it was proposed to build it so as to connect with the Transcontinental at Grand Falls and with the Intercolonial system at St. John. But unfortunately this railroad has been made a political football from its inception. If the road had been built as it was first intended from Grand Falls to St. John it would have been competing with the Canadian Pacific between these two points. I would not like to say that the Canadian Pacific held this project up, but there have been some sinister influences at work ever since the line was first surveyed and construction begun. Instead of beginning at one end they began construction in the middle; they built in both directions and have not got to either end yet, although it has been under construction and partly in operation for four years. It still lacks some forty miles of connecting with the Transcontinental at Grand Falls and it lacks the necessary ten miles that would give it connection with the Intercolonial at St. John. However, my criticism in connection with the securing of these running rights is that the management of the Canadian National railways did not endeavour—it would seem from the statement of the premier of New Brunswick—to secure running rights over the Canadian Pacific until the road was completed and trains were being operated. I know for a fact that trains were operated to Westfield on the St. John and Quebec railway for nearly a week before the Canadian Pacific would allow their train to run into St. John over this road because the arrangements had not been made. According to the Premier of the province of New Brunswick if the management of the Canadian National railways had endeavoured, before the road was completed, to secure running rights from the Canadian Pacific according to its agreement they would have obtained those running rights at that time and would have got much better terms from that company, because they could have said "Why, your terms do not suit us. We can build that ten mile section and the interest on the cost of construction yearly will not be more than it would cost us for running rights. We will build to St. John and compete with you." If they had taken that stand the cost involved to the country would have been less than $100,000 yearly. That is the criticism I have to offer on the subject of not securing running rights for this road, because I am informed on credible authority that no agreement has yet been signed with the Canadian Pacific. If I am wrong the Minister of Railways will be able to correct me and I will be pleased to submit to his correction. I asked for the production of all the papers and correspondence in connection with this matter some time ago, and although I was promised them they have not yet been brought down. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that whoever is responsible for the carrying out of this promise will see that I get those papers, and I hope that the Minister of Railways, when the railway estimates are before the House, will furnish Parliament and the country with the information in answer to the statement of the Premier of New Brunswick.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have already taken up more time than I expected to, but there is still another matter that I would like to speak on.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. CALDWELL: No doubt hon. members opposite would like me to cease from further remarks because I do not think they have been at all enjoying what I have been saying. I would like to dwell for a few moments on the attitude of hon. members opposite towards the farmers of Canada. They have not missed an opportunity to belittle the farmers or the men who were elected on the Farmers' platform—if you care to call it that. We think that the new Progressive party sounds a little better. Still we are not ashamed of the Farmers' platform; it is a good platform, it is a platform that was promulgated by the men who feed you all.

On more than one occasion hon. gentlemen opposite have accused the farmers of being profiteers. Not to be partial with my favours, I would say that members of the Liberal party have also accused us of being profiteers—although not as often or as severely as members on the Government side have done. There has been a great deal said about the present high cost of potatoes in Canada or, to be more correct the high cost of potatoes during the last six weeks or two months. Now I desire to give the House a little inside information as to the reason for the high cost of potatoes.

I would like also to state that the potato growers of Canada have not benefited very much by the high cost of potatoes during the last few months for the simple reason that they had none to sell. I think I will be able to prove this to you before I have concluded my remarks. However I want to indulge in a little retrospect before I do that. In 1918 the Union Government instituted a "Greater Production Campaign" and it was one of the wisest things they ever did. I may say I was a member of the Greater Production Committee for our province. I think perhaps I spent as much time as any one individual in New Brunswick in advocating greater production. I attended a number of meetings with the speaker whom the Government paid a good salary for his work. I did not get any salary or any expenses—I did not want any. I also assisted at a number of these meetings. However, I want to tell you that the speaker I have referred to was doubtless as good a man as the Government could have got in New Brunswick—I refer to Professor Keirstead, of the university of New Brunswick. The Government could not have secured a better man for the purpose and he did his work well. Our farmers responded nobly to that appeal. Being potato growers largely in New Brunswick, and not wheat growers, our farmers increased their acreage of potatoes, perhaps forty per cent that year, but, due to adverse weather conditions and the poor grade of fertilizer we got, we were not able to secure as good results as were hoped for. We were not able to get any of the Alsatian potash at all. Now any man who is familiar with potato growing knows that potash is one of the essential plant foods for potatoes. Before the war we were able to get fertilizer, containing ten per cent of Alsatian potash, at $36 per ton. In 1918 some of the fertilizer we were able to obtain, without the ten per cent of Alsatian potash, cost us $65 or $70 a ton. You will readily understand therefor that the resultant yield was not nearly as good as formerly; the crop per acre in New Brunswick in 1918 was smaller than ever before. Consequently the cost per barrel of growing this crop of potatoes was higher. The cost per barrel is always higher when you get a small yield because the raising of potatoes is not like manufacturing an axe, a wheelbarrow or anything of that kind. It cost us that year $65 or $70 per acre for fertilizer, and it costs us so much per acre to raise potatoes regardless of whether we got a big yield or a small one. We only secured a yield of fifty or sixty barrels per acre at a much greater cost per barrel than in the case of the 100 or the 125 barrels per acre which had been our usual yield in New Brunswick. In this connection I want to assure you that I know what I am talking about as I was president of the New Brunswick Potato Growers' Association for the first two years it was in operation. It was an organization formed for the better production of potatoes; it was not a commercial organization but was formed for the purpose of promoting seed selection and better methods of cultivation, and getting a larger yield per acre. No official of that organization got any salary at all; we all gave our time gratis. The New Brunswick potato growers benefited largely by that organization. The average cost per bag of raising potatoes in 1918 in New Brunswick was $1.30—that is grown and harvested. It cost the farmers about ten cents per bag to deliver them at the railway—that is the way we sell them and not in our field. The potatoes sold until some time in November for $1.50 per bag, so you will very readily see the farmers were not making large profits. When the potatoes delivered at the station cost $1.40 and we got $1.50 per bag you will see we were not making any big profit taking into consideration the work done in planting this crop. However, on the 21st of November an article appeared in several Canadian papers—and I am going to read it to you. I am not like the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Nicholson); I am not ashamed to give you the name of the paper and the date. I could not help thinking when the hon. member was quoting that article with regard to the way the British protected themselves by raising prices to cut out competition that that quotation was taken from one of the Hearst publications. I was inclined to think so by the tone of it, because I think it is one of the most unusual things in the world to raise your price to cut out competition. I never was able to do it. This is the information which was sent out by the Canada Food Board:

> Potato Crop of Canada for 1918 Set New Record. Exportable Surplus. Over and Above all Needs for Domestic Use and Seeding Canada has 28,433,000 Bushels to Send Abroad.
>
> OTTAWA, November 20.—A revised estimate of the Canadian potato crop from figures in possession of the Canada Food Board shows an exportable surplus in six provinces of 28,433,000 bushels over all requirements for domestic use and seeding.

It goes on to say that in the other provinces of Canada there will be none for export, but that the total export for Canada will be 28,433,000 bushels. In view of the fact that Canada had never exported more than 4,000,000 bushels in one year, you can judge what effect this had in the market in which we were selling our potatoes,—and that year we were exporting largely to the United States and Cuba. I received a letter from a prominent dealer in Cuba who had evidently got my name as President of the New Brunswick Potato Growers' Association, and perhaps he thought I was a more important man than I really was. In this letter he inquired about conditions in New Brunswick and asked if this large amount of potatoes was actually available in Canada for export. I told him that while I did not have anything but the Government report, I did not believe any such thing, and I think that later information which I have received has fully justified that statement. However, this report had gone out broadcast to the dealers in the United States and Cuba to whom we were shipping our potatoes, and it was natural that they should expect to get potatoes for little or nothing. Potatoes are not like wheat or hay; they are perishable, and you must sell them within a year from the time they are produced. Now, I had the export returns for that year and knew what they were, but I put a question on the Order Paper to which I received an answer on April 19th, because I wanted the Department of Agriculture to put themselves on record. I was somewhat in the position of the Minister of the Interior, who said in a recent speech in this House with regard to resolutions passed by the G.W.V.A., that he was just a little suspicious of their motives in moving these resolutions. Well, I was just a little suspicious that my hon. friends opposite might question my figures, but I knew that they could not deny their own. The question was as follows)

What was the total export of potatoes from Canada to all countries from the crop grown in 1918, giving the number of bushels exported each month from August 1, 1918, to July 31, 1919?

To which the reply was:

Hon. Mr. Burrell: The total export of potatoes from Canada to all countries from August 1, 1918, to July 31, 1919, is as follows: The department has no information as to the export of potatoes as to crop grown in 1918.

The reason why I asked for the returns by the month was this: we begin to harvest our potatoes towards the end of August and we finish marketing them before the end of the following July, because they are perishable. Very few are shipped in July, so that shipments from August 1918 to July 1919 cover the 1918 crop. No potatoes of the former year's crop are carried over until August of the following year; nor are any left in the country from the crop of the year before to be shipped out after the end of July. The answer then proceeded to give the following figures of the exports by months between August 1st, 1918, and July 31st, 1919:

1918.	Bushels.
Month of:
August	4,321
September	27,861
October	275,952
November	515,800
December	328,866
1919.
Month of:
January	438,343
February	350,653
March	599,613
April	472,939
May	877,659
June	200,227
July	58,613

Instead of 28,000,000 bushels, which the Canada Food Board stated to be the exportable surplus, these figures show a total of 4,150,847 bushels of potatoes available for export from Canada for that year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to give you the effect of this statement which was published in the Canadian newspapers and heralded broadcast throughout the world. Up to the 24th November, about three or four days after this statement appeared in the Canadian papers, potatoes had been selling at $1.50 a bag or $3 a barrel. The price immediately dropped off after this: it went down to 75 cents a bag; at least half the potatoes that were exported from New Brunswick were sold at from 75 cents to $1 a bag—potatoes that cost the farmers $1.40 a bag to produce and haul to the railway siding. So you can understand that the farmers of New Brunswick were not making much money in the growing of potatoes; they were not profiteering. In March, however, the supply of potatoes ran out; this 28,000,000 bushels did not materialize and the price went up at one jump to $3 a barrel or $1.50 a bag. It advanced to $2.50 a bag, and there was not a sufficient supply to meet the demand. Consequently our potato growers in New Brunswick—and I think what is true of New Brunswick is true of the other potato-growing sections of Canada—in the spring of 1919 did not plant a very big acreage of potatoes, and I do not think that the people of this country can blame them very much for that. They said: If the Government, while urging increase of acreage and of production generally and calling upon the farmers to raise a larger crop at greater expense than ever before, issue an absolutely false statement that causes us to lose 65 cents a bag on our potatoes, certainly we are not going to be caught in that trap again. As I say, therefore, the farmers planted a very short acreage of potatoes last year, and as high as $12 a barrel has been offered for them. In that connection, as I said before—and I do not fear successful contradiction—the potatoes were not in the country. Now, it may be said that this statement was sent out by some official who is no longer in the service of the Government. But I am inclined to think that the same man is there yet, because a further estimate was made of the quantity of potatoes said to be in the farmers' hands on April 24, 1920. I got the following from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics a short time ago:

Ottawa, April 24, 1920. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics issued to-day a press bulletin giving in summary form the results of its annual inquiry as to the total quantities of wheat, oats, barley and flaxseed in Canada, at the end of March, the stocks of all kinds of agricultural products remaining in farmers' hands at the same date.

I will give the quotation only in regard to potatoes, because it is potatoes that I am talking about. This statement says that the stock of potatoes in the farmers' hands on April 24, 1920, as stated by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics was 31,646,000 bushels, compared with 32,836,000 bushels last year and 24,130,500 bushels in 1918. Now, here is a quotation from a paper,—and by the way, I am able to give the authority for this too; I do not believe in making any quotations without citing the authority for them. This despatch is headed: "Says Canada is Swept Clean of Potatoes." It is a Canadian press despatch dated at Montreal, April 23, the day before the statement was issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to which I have referred.

Montreal, April 23.—Are American buyers invading Canada in droves to buy up every potato that can be discovered? The assertion that they are doing so is made by local dealers who give this as the greatest reason for the high price now being paid here by the housewives for the family supplies.

Here is the way a dealer sums up the situation:

"It is almost impossible to get potatoes anywhere in the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island now."

And these are the big potato-growing provinces.

"The Americans have sent swarms of buyers into the Dominion and there are four or five men bidding for everything that is available. One United States buyer told us he had got five carloads at $5.75 per bag f.o.b. in Prince Edward Island; another said he had found eighty cars for Pittsburg at the same rate. I tried to get two cars for Montreal in Prince Edward Island. After a long time I got them at $4.75 f.o.b. there for a bag of 90 lbs. It costs about 75 cents per bag to bring them on to Montreal, making the cost here about $5.50. But the real reason why Montrealers are paying such enormous prices now is that the country has been swept clean of its crop by the Americans and so it has passed over the border."

I want to tell the House why the potato growers received such high prices for these potatoes. You will say: Well, the farmers are profiteering in getting such high prices for these potatoes. The farmers had already sold all the potatoes they intended to sell, as I can prove that by any number of witnesses, but I think my word is sufficient. These were potatoes which the farmers had intended to plant his spring, and a large number of potato growers have sold half the quantity of their seed potatoes this spring, having been tempted by the high prices. Consequently, the acreage planted in potatoes will be short this year, and owing to the statement issued by the Canada Food Board on November 21, 1918, there will be high prices for potatoes next fall because these things have far-reaching results. As Premier Drury wisely said in the Ontario legislature a short time ago, when he was asked to put an embargo on a few cars of potatoes on track in Toronto, "it is a very unsafe thing to interfere with the law of supply and demand."

I think that concludes my remarks. No, it does not; I have one other thing.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CALDWELL: Do not be disturbed though, Mr. Speaker, because I will not detain you very long. I want to compare the attitude this Government adopts towards our farmers with the attitude of the authorities in the United States to their farmers, and I want to read this quotation also from the Associated Press:

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Decrease in agricultural production may result in the United States becoming dependent on overseas food supplies, Herbert Hoover—

That is a name to conjure with in the United States and perhaps in Canada, I am sure it is in Europe, when you come to talk of food supplies and food matters.

—to-day declared in a letter to Representative Diddlick, Republican, Montana, setting forth the former Food Administrator's views as to practical measures to insure better returns to the farmer for his labour and investment.

Asserting that present high prices of commodities sooner or later will decrease, Mr. Hoover said " this deflation must not begin on the farmer." Shortage in production outside the United States, wild extravagance, and misuse of extended credits for speculation and profiteering and non-essential production are contributing factors in the present inflated prices, he wrote. When the collapse occurs, he predicted, intermediate dealers will be able to pass the greatest portion to the back of the farmer, no matter how carefully handled.

"The whole marketing system in many of our commodities is indirect, expensive, wasteful, obsolete and increases the margin unduly," the latter continued.

Our manufacturing industries have developed out of pace with our agriculture and labour is being drawn in thousands from the farm to the town at wages which the farmer cannot contend against

A commission studying the whole situation, Mr. Hoover declared, would deal with these things with that same common sense—

I should like hon. members to listen to this:

—with which similar commissions of farmers met the great economic problems of the food administration during the war with equal consideration for farmer, distributor and consumer.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS (Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell). I thought when he was giving us that long defence of the high price of potatoes, he took fully longer time to explain why the farmer was getting this high price than the famous manufacturer from Sherbrooke, who gave utterance to that famous phrase that he "was not working for the glory of God", took in explaining the cost of his woollen product. I am inclined to think that even that Sherbrooke manufacturer made a better shift of his defence in connection with the high price of woollen goods than the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton in connection with the high price of potatoes.

The hon. member, in the course of his remarks, made this most remarkable statement, that he could not understand a Minister of Finance delivering a Budget and stating that the resolutions contained in it would come into force the day on which it was delivered. He was under the impression that it would be necessary for the Budget to pass this House and receive the assent of the Governor General. If the hon. gentleman had only stopped to think for a moment, he would have seen what a tremendous loss to the country it would have meant in any Budget proposal which dealt with trade and in which profiteering to a most gigantic extent might have taken place provided such notice were given. It is to be hoped that the hon. gentleman who is leading the Agrarian party has in his ranks men who more thoroughly understand how business is conducted than the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton, or this country would suffer very severely if the prognostications which these gentlemen give us should ever come true, namely, that they would govern the affairs of this country along the lines which they have laid down.

Mr. CALDWELL: I rise to a question of privilege. I do not think the hon. gentleman can find anywhere in my remarks a statement that I expect to govern this country.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS: If that is a question of privilege, I hope the hon. gentleman is satisfied.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not hear the hon. gentleman when he rose, and I thought he was rising to ask a question. He would not be in order in any case, in rising now to a question of privilege..

Mr. DOUGLAS (Strathcona): I am not going to detain the House for every long at this late hour; but I wish to discuss the Budget for a few moments and to give reasons for the course which I shall pursue when the vote takes place on the amendment of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's. We have heard, in the discussion of the Budget, the question of protection,—moderate, adequate, and high—and free trade. I have been a member of this House for about eleven years, and I have heard that same subject discussed during all the time I have been a member of this House. For a great part of that time I supported a Government which had as its platform a policy of tariff for revenue, and I am in the same position to-night. The view which I hold is that the Government should lay down a tariff which would be productive of revenue, and I see that principle evolved in the Budget as laid down here. We have come through a series of extreme years caused by the war. We have incurred an enormous debt which has to be met, no matter what our theories or pet views may be, and I am convinced that the revenue of this country must be raised from every conceivable source. I might have the profoundest respect for the moderate tariff or tariff-for-revenue views. Under ordinary conditions a moderate tariff would supply the means for raising the revenue of this country, but under present-day conditions, with a debt of over two bilion dollars, with a sparse population such as we have, I am convinced that we have to resort to every measure of taxation to preserve the credit of Canada at this particular time.

When the question comes up, what is protection, I find this position. I have listened very carefully to this debate on the Budget this session because I took a course last year which caused me to be careful how I should go at the present time. I have listened very carefully to the arguments brought forward as to how the revenue might be raised. I have listened to hon. gentlemen of the progressive party telling us how they would raise the revenue, but I have failed up to this moment to hear one constructive speech, which would lead me to believe that they could raise the necessary money to carry on the affairs of this country by any programme they have brought forward. The amendment of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) has left me in the same quandry. If that amendment were carried, logically it defeats all the proposals under the present Budget. It does away with the income tax, it does away with the luxury tax, it does away with the sales tax. It obliterates all the new proposals and says: We want to assist the consumer by reducing tariff taxation. Now that does not commend itself to my best thought. I do not believe it is logical. I do not believe the people of this country would take me seriously if I would support an amendment of that kind under present-day conditions.

I do not for one moment want any one to imagine that I have discarded any of the beliefs which I hold as to what constitutes a tariff in this country. We hear the question of adequate or moderate protection raised. I have made many inquiries as to what protection means. To my mind any tariff, whether it is five per cent or ten per cent, constitutes protection to a certain degree. I cannot conceive of any tariff being placed on goods imported into this country which would not afford some measure of protection. To that extent I am a protectionist.

When we consider the plan for raising the revenue put forward on behalf of opponents of the Government we are confronted with the platform put forward by the official Opposition. To my mind, it is a good platform. If the official Opposition would go further, and if I believed that the people of this country thought that they would raise the revenue under the platform which has been laid down, I should find no fault with it. But I am convinced, as I stated before, that that platform is not sufficient to raise the necessary revenue for this country under present conditions.

I commend the Government for the imposition of an income tax. It is a true Liberal principle. It is a direct tax. I commend them also for the new Budget proposals. I perhaps might criticise the details of the presumed luxury tax. I think $9 for a pair of shoes may not be the proper basis for exemption. I do not think $45 for a suit of clothes is the proper basis for exemption. I am positive that $5 for a hat is not the proper basis for exemption. I am also sure that $5 for underwear is not the proper basis for exemption. But these are matters of detail. The principle is there that those who can pay must pay, and if the effect is to curb extravagance then I am heart and soul in favour of the tax. When it comes to the question of the sales tax, we hear the statement made on all hands, why, the consumer pays it. Certainly he pays it. We are all consumers in this country, and how can we avoid paying it? It makes no difference how the taxes are imposed, the consumer pays them, because there is nobody else to pay them.

As to this question of the manufacturer absorbing, the manufacturer absorbs just as much as his business will permit him to absorb, just as my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) absorbs the potato crop. Just so far as he can get the price, just that far is the absorption. That is taken up by all manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and other distributers. I have no brief for any of the merchandising class, but my judgment is that in this Dominion of Canada our trade is conducted along as honourable lines as in any other country. I am of opinion that the less restrictions we put on trade the better it is for the country, and when we get rid of this tremendous load we are carrying at the present time, I say, give us all the freedom of trade that we can have. In the meantime we are dealing with conditions which must be met, and in my judgment the present proposals put forward by the Minister of Finance are the best proposals that I have heard from any party in this House, and I therefore intend to support the Budget.

Mr. J. A. ROBB: On behalf of the Opposition I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I think the arrangement is not being observed by my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Robb). Another speaker was to have spoken on that side of the House, then the adjournment was to be moved by myself.

Mr. SPEAKER: A motion for adjournment has been submitted, and I must put it. It is not debatable.

Motion negatived.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I have hesitated a good deal to enter on a discussion of this matter, having spoken on many Budgets during the last fifteen years, but if there is one subject more than another that I think I know a little about it is commercial and manufacturing propositions. It has been my life study and my life work, and I have had a great deal of experience not only in manufacturing, but as an importer and exporter of merchandise. So with these qualifications, I think I would certainly be expected by my constituents to express my opinions upon a question such as this. As the night has worn away and day is at hand I think it would now be in order for me to move that the debate be adjourned to be renewed this day at three o'clock. I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: We are confronted here with a situation which is somewhat awkward. Unless hon. members will permit the motion to be made by unanimous consent, the debate cannot at this stage be adjourned.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. SPEAKER: There cannot be two successive motions to adjourn the debate unless there is some intermediate proceeding.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Well, I have proceeded to a certain extent already.

The SPEAKER: The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) moves that the debate be now adjourned. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand that some hon. members insist that the motion be not entertained unanimously?

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to make a statement, I may say that it is quite true, as the hon. member for Brantford has said, that there was an understanding that we would put up another man, but that understanding was arrived at early in the evening when we expected our friend would come on not later than eleven o'clock. For my part I have no objection to adjourning the debate, on the understanding that the hon. member will be brief to-morrow and not occupy the whole day.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On the motion of Rt. Hon. Mr. Doherty the House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. Friday.

Friday, May 28, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

REPORTS TABLED.

Report of the Militia Council for the Dominion of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1919.—Hon. Mr. Guthrie.

Memorandum No. 6, European war, respecting work of the Department of Militia and Defence, from November 1, 1918, to October 31, 1919.—Hon. Mr. Guthrie.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS.

Rt. Hon. C. J. DOHERTY moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 137, to amend the Criminal Code.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. DOHERTY: This Bill deals with quite a few articles of the Criminal Code, but several of them are mere matters of procedure, which, perhaps, do not call for any development at the present time. For instance, there is a provision designating the courts in the different provinces, to which the word "court" when used in the Code is to apply. This is to meet changes in designation in the courts of different provinces, resulting from provincial laws.

There is a provision amending the articles that deal with the possession of firearms and the necessity of obtaining permits in order to be entitled to have such firearms in possession and to carry them. The effect of the provision is to extend the present law so as to include a larger number of kinds of firearms.

There is a provision making it an offence to use as a sworn document or affidavit, representing it to be such, an instrument which has not been sworn to. We have had from different parts of the country, representations that such action has been taken at different times and that it should be made an offence.

There are provisions dealing with raising the age of consent, which are the same provisions which this House has already passed on more than one occasion, but which failed to pass in the Senate.

There is an amendment to section 235, which is the section dealing with gambling, and more particularly the section which, under the law as it stands at present, permits the carrying on of wagers and betting upon a race track. It is proposed to modify the present legislation by limiting the method of organized betting which is permissible, to the use of the pari-mutuel machine, and furthermore to make it a condition of the permission that the profits derived from the betting operations shall be restricted to a limited percentage of the amounts at stake That is the extent of the modification in the law on that subject.

There is an amendment to section 300 for the purpose of making a person convicted of attempting to commit rape liable to be sentenced to be whipped. Under the existing law, whereas a person found guilty of indecent assault may be sentenced to be whipped, a person found guilty of the graver offence of attempted rape is not subject to that punishment. Several judges have called attention to this anomaly and pointed out that it ought to be remedied.

There is a provision making an offence and providing punishment for the unlawful wearing of a uniform of any of the forces of His Majesty, or badges, buttons and so forth, indicating military service.

There is a provision requiring that in order that a person may be arrested or summoned from one province to be brought into another, the warrant should be issued in all cases on the authorization of the Attorney General of the province in which it is issued. This is making a general application a requirement which is already contained in the Act for the protection of provincial prohibitory laws.

There is a provision making more severe the penalties for persons convicted of keeping bawdy houses.

M BUREAU: What are the penalties?

M. DOHERTY: This is the amendment:

The provisions of section 1035 shall not apply or extend to any person convicted more than twice under said paragraph (f) of section 773 for keeping a common bawdy house or of keeping a common bawdy house in any premises with respect to which premises more than two convictions have been made, whether the same person has been convicted as keeper thereof or not, and any person so convicted shall not in either case be sentenced to less than three months' imprisonment, nor shall any sentence imposed in either of the cases be suspended under the provisions of section 1081 without the concurrence of the counsel for the Crown in the prosecution of the offender.

The purpose is to make imprisonment imperative in the case of a third offence and to provide that where the offence is committed more than twice in the same premises, even though it be committed by a different person, the third time the offence is committed, it shall be treated as a third offence. It has been pointed out by the administrators of the law that it has been impossible to get convictions as for a second or as for a third offence; though the premises continued to be used for carrying on the business, because after each conviction there would be a substitute or a new person carrying on the business.

Mr. BUREAU: The offence follows the real estate instead of the person?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: That is a new theory.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is perhaps a novelty, but I think the circumstances justify it.

We have a provision to meet this situation which has arisen. There being no appeal in criminal matters in cases where the courts of appeal of the provinces are unanimous, it has happened that on several differnt questions arising under the Criminal Code, the Court of Appeal of one province has decided in one sense and the Court of Appeal of another province has decided in another sense, and there being no appeal, we have contradictory jurisprudence interpreting the same law.

It is proposed to enact that in any case where the judgment of the Court of Appeal of a province is in contradiction of the judgment of another Court of Appeal of another province on the same point, the Attorney General or the accused shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. The purpose is simply to make it possible to have a uniform jurisprudence in the application of this law, which is common to the whole Dominion and rests on a Dominion statute. There are also provisions in regard to appeals in two of the western provinces which have been asked for by the authorities there. There is also a provision to enable the Attorney General to make application in the province of Quebec for a change of venue in cases where there happens to be perhaps only one case in a district and it is not thought desirable to have a criminal court in that district to try only one or two cases. The Attorney General of the province has made application for this provision and it seems to be one that ought to be granted.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 138 to amend the Penitentiary Act.

Mr. BUREAU: Explain.

Mr. DOHERTY: There are just three provisions to the Bill. The first one is to make clear the power of the minister with regard to the making of regulations. The second one is to provide that wardens, when they are appointed, instead of being appointed warden of a particular penitentiary, shall be appointed simply wardens and be susceptible of being moved from one penitentiary to another according as the best interests of the administration may require. The third provision repeals an Act which fixes a schedule of salary for the penitentiary officers, the usefulness of that Act disapearing in view of the operation of the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ADMIRALTY ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 139 to amend the Admiralty Act.

Mr. BUREAU: Explain.

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose of the Bill is to confer power upon the Governor in Council to appoint a deputy judge in Admiralty. At present the power to make such appointment is in the hands exclusively of the Judge in Admiralty. It has happened that the Judge in Admiralty being taken ill unexpectedly, and so ill as not to be able even to make the appointment of a deputy judge, there was no possibility of appointing a deputy no matter how great the necessity might be. The present amendment proposes to confer power on the Governor in Council to appoint a deputy judge in such a case.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 140 to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. BUREAU: Explain.

Mr. DOHERTY: There are just two provisions in the Bill. One is to give greater power of remand to the judge of the Delinquent Court. The present limitation on the period of time, which is eight days, I think, has been found to work great inconvenience by judges administering the law. This provision is to enable the judge to remand for such time as he may think proper. The second provision has to do with the defining of the situation from the point of view of the application of the Juvenile Delinquent law to persons of the Ruthenian-Greek rite of the Roman Catholic church.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Railways) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 141 respecting the Canadian National railways.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. J. D. REID: The House will understand that we cannot make any further extensions to the Canadian National railways until a charter covering the extensions has been granted by Parliament. There are three small extensions required to the present lines of railway in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and we have an item in the Estimates providing for them, but it is necessary to obtain a charter before the work can be proceeded with. It is my intention to refer the Bill to the Railway Committee, which is the usual practice in connection with applications for a railway charter.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

SENATE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill No. 136 (from the Senate) for the relief of James Lyon Lincoln Cobbin.—Mr. Douglas (Strathcona).

THE PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU (Three Rivers and St. Maurice): I should like to ask the Committee of the House of Commons which has supervision of the Parliamentary restaurant if there is any official list of those entitled to be admitted to the restaurant.

If there is, I would ask that it be laid on the table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is most unusual for an hon. member to submit a question to a committee.

Mr. BUREAU: I submit the question to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: I shall submit the question to the chairman of the committee and endeavour to see that an answer is given.

Mr. BUREAU: I wanted to direct my question to the chairman of the committee. May I ask for an answer from him?

Mr. SPEAKER: It is most irregular to submit a question to the chairman of a committee in this way.

Mr. BUREAU: I thought we could put a question to any member of the House.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, upon giving notice in the usual way.

Mr. SPEAKER: That could be done by giving notice in the usual way, but not upon the Orders of the Day.

Mr. BUREAU: I think I am right.

THE BUDGET.

DEBATE CONTINUED ON THE ANNUAL STATEMENT PRESENTED BY THE MINISTER OF FINANCE.

The House resumed from Thursday, May 27, the debate on the motion of Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, the occasion of the delivery of the Budget Speech in this House of Commons of Canada is probably the most important event that occurs during the session The Budget is of particular moment at this time inasmuch as around it there is being waged a controversy that threatens to be the principal object of attack and defence in the approaching elections whenever they may come. For this reason it is my purpose to devote most of the time at my disposal—I assure you, Sir, that I do not intend to take up an undue portion of the time of the House—particularly to the tariff issue. Before doing so, however, I might perhaps be allowed to make a few running comments upon what has transpired since the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) delivered his Budget Speech to this House about ten days ago.

This was the first opportunity this House had of listening to the new Minister of Finance, and I venture the assertion, Sir, that all will agree that the hon. minister acquitted himself admirably. I do not think that it will be seriously denied that he has discharged his responsible duties in connection with the Budget in an able manner. This, I believe, will be conceded, even though we do not all agree with everything he has proposed; for I admit that protests are arriving in fairly large numbers with regard to certain of the details of the Budget, and paticularly the tax on luxuries. These, however, are matters of comparatively small importance and they can be dealt with better in Committee of the Whole House than in a speech on the Budget. I therefore do not purpose at this present moment to criticise the proposals with regard to the luxury tax and other items that are being objected to in certain quarters; I reserve the right to take up these questions when they are before the House in Committee of the Whole.

The new taxes proposed are fairly drastic and are expected to raise a considerable amount of revenue. It must be evident to all, Mr. Speaker, that a vast revenue is required for this country at the present time; and however much we may desire to see the burdens of the people lessened to as great an extent as possible, it is not practicable at this juncture that reductions of a substantial nature can be made in the tariff or in the income tax, the business profits tax, or in any other provision intended for the raising of revenue. The business profits tax as it has been collected in the past has been more or less of a detriment to manufacturers and others inasmuch as it has tended perhaps to an undue inflation in some respects in the salaries of some of the higher officials; and in other ways it has probably reduced the possibilities of making the necessary extensions to plant which in the past have always been taken out of the results of the year's operations. Every hon. gentleman who is acquainted with the laws of trade will realize that it is not possible, because it is eminently undesirable, to float new capital for any institution too often. If you come before the public too frequently with any security, no matter how gilt-edged it may be, you will encounter great difficulty in selling. Every one knows that a corporation must find it difficult to sell its securities if it is constantly coming before investors and offering those securities in order to make extensions and establish branches possibly in distant parts. The manufacturer and the merchant have therefore in the past looked to profits for their extensions and betterments, and any one who thinks that a manufacturing concern or a business is all profit has only to enter that department of commercial activity to be convinced to the contrary, and convinced very suddenly and to an alarming extent. My experience in new enterprises has been such, Mr. Speaker that I venture to say that not fifty per cent of the manufacturing projects of the country have succeeded in making any money, and in many cases they have lost the capital that was originally invested. That has been my experience after trying a great many companies, and I can say therefore that the idea is altogether fallacious which some people, and particularly our friends across the way, seem to promulgate, that it is easy to make money out of a business or out of a manufacturing concern.

The income tax is materially increased by the Budget proposals. That probably was also to be expected, but it does not perhaps press very heavily on many of the fairly well-to-do people in this country. It will have this effect, however, as any one can see, that those who are philanthropically inclined, and who from time to time have contributed very liberally to all the charities, and good works of the social world, and of the church, sustaining every beneficent object which is promoted in their community, are going to have less money at their disposal to devote to these purposes, than had the Government not come forward and taken a comparatively large slice of their income. This fact must be apparent to all: but I say that while the proposal of the Government may bring money into the coffers of the country it is not necessarily going to interfere with the personal living of the individual so much as it will with the assistance which he has been contributing to the various institutions of the country, which in the past he has felt morally called upon to support.

I had hoped that the large deficit that has been shown in the operation of the National railways would have been taken care of before the Budget was presented. That, however, has not been done and I am not sure whether or not it is contemplated to do it; but I wish to reiterate what I said at the opening of the session, namely, that in my judgment the rates in regard to both passenger and freight traffic should be immediately increased. I say that as one who will have to contribute a very large share towards such increase, but it is only proper that our railways should be placed on a self-sustaining basis so far as operating expenses are concerned. That, as I say, has not been done so far, but with a railway deficit of some $47,000,000 I can see that our treasury will be considerably taxed to take care of this amount to say nothing of all the other financial burdens that the war has placed upon us. I would therefore commend to the Minister of Finance, and particularly to the Minister of Railways (Mr. J. D. Reid) the earliest possible attention to this matter, because I look upon it as a crying necessity, and I trust that before very long some means will be found to meet this immense deficit in connection with the National railways.

Another matter which will receive immediate attention from the Government is the West India trade, and I want to go on record as being very keenly desirous to see largely developed our interchange of trade with the British West Indies. I hope that the delegates who are coming to Ottawa to represent the British West Indies and adjacent territories will receive a sympathetic hearing from the members of the Government and particularly from the members of this House. There is no class of trade which we could extend to better advantage and which should appeal more to our sympathy. Therefore, I hail with satisfaction the idea that these gentlemen are about to enter upon a conference with a view to vastly increasing the trade between Canada and the West Indies. It is well known that our Canadian territory is not in the banana belt and while we can raise in the Niagara district and in some parts of British Columbia a good many products that are almost semi-tropical, we cannot in a sense take care of the products from the tropics, that are required for our people. The West Indies can furnish us all these necessary products, and being under the British flag and being a part of the same Empire as that to which we belong, I am favourable to anything that will bring about closer commercial relations between the British West Indies and the Dominion of Canada.

I believe that is a sound policy; a patriotic policy; and one that should be pursued in the interest of the Empire.

A few years ago we gave a preference to the sugar of the British West Indies and where would we have been to-day had it not been for our foresight? During the war, and since, Canada has been pinched in her sugar supply and we have had great difficulty in getting sufficient for our requirements but the fact remains that Canada is perhaps better off than many other countries in the world, not barring free trade Great Britain, which, prior to the war, lived on the bounty-fed sugar of Germany and Austria, and which after the war broke out, was short of sugar. When the boys sent home for a parcel they always said: "Do not forget the sugar; do not forget the candies; we cannot get them here." That was the result of the foresight of Canada in giving a preference to the sugar planter of the British West Indies at a time when the produce of the West India plantations was being driven from the market by the fierce competition of the bounty-fed sugar of Germany and Austria. The British free trader said: "It does not matter; people are getting cheap goods and our policy is to buy in the cheapest market and to sell in the dearest and may it always remain so." It is not a very wholesome thought that the black inhabitants, the coloured races, of our West Indies, should be practically pushed into the ground as a result of the encouragement of the bounty-fed sugar of Germany and Austria which finally used all the resources that they had gained from their trade with Britain to try and drive the British Empire, British institutions and civilization, generally from the earth, crushing all other peoples who did not place their necks under the heel of the Hun. I am glad that now the West Indies are to receive consideration.

Mr. DEVLIN: Is the hon. gentleman in favour of a confederation with the West Indies?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The political question is a matter involving considerations that differ from the trade question. I am in favour, as I said, of the broadest kind of trade with the West Indies. I scarcely think that the people of Canada are prepared to pit their votes as citizens against those of the inhabitants of the West Indies. I do not think they are prepared to admit that perfect political equality should exist between the inhabitants of the West Indies and Canada. Personally I have very great sympathy with the black races. I have felt when I have heard so much about congressional resolutions in favour of Ireland that it would not be a bad thing if we went on record in regard to upholding the rights of the coloured races especially in the south. I was nettled pretty badly when I saw eighty-eight Congressmen telling England how she should govern Ireland while at the same time receiving pictures that would almost bring tears to the eyes of any human being showing five, eight, or ten blacks hanging in a row who had been done to death without trial and without justification at the hands of a ruthless mob. They had been hung up and in some cases, burned at the stake without any trial whatever. Still eighty-eight members of the Congress of the United States are prepared to tell the British Government how they should handle the Irish question while at the same time they are meting out treatment to the races in the south and elsewhere that brings a blush to the cheek of everybody who has any regard for the equality and brotherhood of man. My hon. friend (Mr. Devlin) who I believe may have more or less sympathy with the resolutions that have gone forward might take these matters into his consideration at the same time and if he will bring in a resolution in condemnation of these outrages I shall be prepared to support it.

Mr. DEVLIN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I will not qualify the hon. gentleman's language; he has been stating an absolute falsehood in connection with—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I hope the hon. member (Mr. Devlin) will withdraw that term. I am quite sure he does not mean to imply that the hon. member (Mr. Cockshutt) has uttered a falsehood deliberately.

Mr. DEVLIN: His statement is absolutely false, Mr. Speaker, I rise—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I hope the hon. member will not repeat the statement he made in the first place; otherwise I must say that it is not parliamentary and that it will be necessary to withdraw it.

Mr. DEVLIN: I have absolutely nothing to withdraw from what I have just said respecting the statement made by the hon. gentleman concerning my conduct in connection with other countries. I asked him a simple question. I asked it as a Canadian citizen and then he turns upon me and makes statements in connection with what my sentiments might be in order to cast a reflection—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DEVLIN: You have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is not stating his point of order. As to the wisdom or propriety of the manner in which the hon. member for Brantford interpreted the question submitted by the hon. member for Wright—that is one thing but I do not apprehend that he encroached upon the rules of the House in what he said.

Mr. DEVLIN: Is not a rule of the House that one member cannot impute motives to another member?

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not understand that there was anything in the remarks of the hon. member for Brantford which reflected on the hon. member for Wright.

Mr. DEVLIN: Oh, no; I have absolutely nothing to say as to a reflection. I am simply on the point of order that the hon. gentleman imputed to my remarks as a Canadian citizen a sense which they did not bear and something that I had not mentioned at all and which had no connection with them. I asked him about the blacks and he speaks of Ireland.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sure that the hon. member for Brantford would be the first to deny that he had any intention of imputing motives. It is open to the hon. member to make such argument as he chooses so long as he does not reflect upon the character and motives of the hon. member for Wright, and I do not apprehend that the hon. member has cast any reflection upon the hon. member for Wright.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I think, Sir, that you have quite correctly interpreted the rule and stated the fact about my not casting any reflection on the hon. gentleman. I simply said that he possibly had sympathy with the resolution.

Mr. DEVLIN: With what?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: With the resolution sent to Lloyd George.

Mr. DEVLIN: Which resolution?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I do not desire to be questioned further.

Mr. DEVLIN: Which resolution?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: My remarks are there on the record, they speak for themselves and it is not necessary that we should continue this discussion.

Mr. DEVLIN: I still stand by what I said before.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member for Brantford has the floor; he may not be interrupted except with his consent.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. DEVLIN: I am not interrupting him, Mr. Speaker, but he imputes to me—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member for Brantford has stated that I have properly indicated his position with respect to the matter.

Mr. DEVLIN: What is his position?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The hon. member is only endeavouring to interrupt but I shall not be turned aside from my remarks on the Budget by any such matters as he is endeavouring to place before the House.

Mr. DEVLIN: Be man enough to say to what resolution you refer?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I have said that I believe the hon. gentleman if he says he has no sympathy with this resolution.

Mr. DEVLIN: What resolution?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The resolution that I referred to.

Mr. DEVLIN: What resolution?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The resolution sent from the Congress of the United States by 88 members.

Mr. DEVLIN: Now you are speaking of another thing.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: That is what I was speaking of.

Mr. DEVLIN: Why did you not say so?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: That is what I was speaking of all through and I had no intention of ruffling the feelings of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BUREAU: Let the hon. member for Brantford ramble over the United States.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Our trade returns have been shown to be very satisfactory, Mr. Speaker, and I think it should be a matter of congratulation to the country that the trade of Canada is in the splendid position it is in at present. Employment has been plentiful; and in spite of all the attacks that have been made upon the Government and upon their proposals it has not yet been shown that there is any serious suffering in Canada. With regard to labour, from one end of the country to the other work is abundant at the highest wages ever known in the history of the country; and when the labouring man is prosperous, when he has a full dinner pail and is getting the reward of faithful service there is always peace, plenty and quietness in the land. I believe that the bulk of our people throughout the Dominion are well satisfied with the trade conditions that exist and with the extent of the employment that is being found in all the great centres of the country, as well as on the farms, in the forests and in the mines.

Our imports and exports have, within the last two or three years, reached the highest figure ever known in the Dominion; and it will be seen that although we are sometimes told that this is a very highly protectionist country, upwards of one-third of the imports of Canada come in absolutely free of duty —no duty whatever is collected on over one-third of the imports that come into the Dominion, which is very close to the figures that obtain even in Great Britain. I have here a copy of the Budget Speech delivered by Austen Chamberlain, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, the other day. It is in very brief form, and perhaps I may be permitted to make two or three observations in regard to that Budget. Speaking of the two hours' speech delivered on the 19th of April by Mr. Chamberlain, the article from which I am quoting goes on to say that during the past year, 1919-20, the revenue was £1,340,000,000, and the expenditure £1,660,000,000, leaving a deficit of £326,000,000 in the Budget of Great Britain for the year mentioned. Therefore I think that if hon. members opposite will contrast the financial statement made in free trade England with the statement made in this House, they will realize that the Canadian Finance Minister has been able to bring down a fairly satisfactory Budget when he declares that about $49,000,000 or $50,000,000 of a surplus is expected as against a deficit of £326,000,000 in Great Britain on the operations of the past year. If the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) were in the House I would draw his attention to the fact that $250,000,000—and that was published in one of our papers only recently—was given as a bonus by the Government of Great Britain to ensure cheap bread. The hon. member, a day or two ago, told us we were shipping Canadian flour to Great Britain and then receiving it back in the shape of biscuits and that that was what a free trade country was able to do. He forgot to notice, however, that $250,000,000 was required to be paid out by the British Government to enable the poor man to buy his loaf at a price he could afford to pay; $250,000,000 was lost to the Exchequer in Great Britain on the bread business alone.

Mr. CRERAR: I would ask the hon. member if that is the permanent policy of Great Britain?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: It is not the permanent policy, probably, but it has been in vogue, as my hon. friend knows, for about three years. The hon. member for Red Deer made the statement only the other day that biscuits were being shipped back to this country made out of Canadian flour by biscuit manufacturers in Great Britain who received the flour free and could afford to do that and so they fed us in Canada with our own flour made into biscuits. I am pointing out that in order to enable their own people to buy bread at a fairly satisfactory price they have contributed $250,000,000 out of the treasury to enable the poor man to live within his earnings.

The first item in the national balance sheet—and I commend this specially to our friends over the way—is customs £150,000,000, or in round figures according to the ordinary rates of exchange, $750,000,000 in customs duties alone which, divided among about 45,000,000 of people would make between $16 and $17 per head. Let me pause here to say that I hope the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) who is now leaving the Chamber, will not be long absent, as I intend to address a remark or two of interest to him. So that over there $750,000,000 in round figures were raised in customs duties from 45,000,000 people making, as I say, $16 or $17 per head which was collected from the British people in customs duties in free trade England; whereas in Canada, under what my hon. friends opposite are pleased to call a very high protectionist policy, we contributed a shade over $20 per head during the past year—calling the customs duties $160,000,000 and our population 8,000,000 that would make exactly $20 per head contributed by the people of Canada. The excise duty which was collected in Great Britain—that is, the internal revenue—was £198,000,000 making a total of £348,000,000 for both customs and excise. On motor vehicles duties amounting to £4,500,000 were collected in addition to what I have stated; the estate duties amounted to £45,000,000; stamp duties £25,000,000 in round figures; land tax £2,500,000; income tax £385,000,000; excess profits tax £220,000,000; corporation profits tax £3,000,000; and land value duties £500,000, a total inland revenue of £682,000,000. The combined total receipts from taxes were £1,035,000,000. Then postal services gave £37,000,000; telegraph service £6,000,000; telephone service £10,000,000; or £53,000,000 for these three services; miscellaneous £650,000; ordinary receipts £744,000; special receipts £8,756,000; miscellaneous ordinary receipts £18,000,000; special receipts £302,000,000, making total receipts from non-taxed revenue of £383,000,000, and a total revenue of £1,418,000,000. The total expenditure is also given but the items are not of very much interest and therefore I shall not read them. The total expenditure was £1,184,102,000 and for debt reduction £234,000,000. So that the Budget, as delivered in the House of Commons in Great Britain, shows that they were over £300,000,000 in debt at the end of last year and though they anticipate a surplus this year it remains to be seen whether or not it may be realized.

Another matter I wish to debate for a moment is that of the Canadian Merchant Marine service. The other day when the question was before the House the member for Red Deer told the Minister of Marine that he could never expect to make his ships pay unless he not only shipped out goods but also brought goods in and filled his ships. I wanted to point out to the hon. member at that time the weakness of his argument but not wishing to intervene in the debate I refrained. Now, I think I should draw attention to the point and say that the hon. member, and those associated with him, stand for a policy that will never bring in by ships what they say should be brought in. These hon. gentlemen are ready to send out cargoes to sell to Great Britain, but when it comes to the vast amount of our imports they want to bring them in on the short haul from the United States, thereby killing our railways as well as our industries. All the excess importation comes from the United States, and under the policy proposed it will continue to come in increasing amount from that source, and it will never fill our ships with return freight—as the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) can well tell him—after they discharge their cargoes in Great Britain.

That is the policy we object to, for it is not a national policy, and it will kill our merchant marine so long as return cargoes are necessary. As a result of our excess importation from the United States to the extent of $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 we have not only a great loss of traffic to our railways and to our people, but we have also a grievous slump in the value of the Canadian dollar to the extent of from 10 to 15 per cent, so that to-day when we want a dollar's worth of American goods—having bought too much already from across the line—we have to pay $1.10 to $1.15.

[Mr. Cockshutt.]

That result has been brought about entirely by over-importation from the United States and by neglecting what our friends opposite sometime say they wish to see—a very large importation from the Mother Country, which owes us a heavy balance because she buys from us a great deal more than we buy from her. Therefore I submit that the argument that a merchant marine cannot pay because we do not bring in goods by shiploads, will not hold good as long as we continue to bring in by the short haul rail route from the United States the goods that we should be buying from our friends and relations overseas.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to refer to a few of the speeches that have been delivered in this debate. As a Budget debate it has been one of the best I have heard during my fifteen years as a member of this House. The speeches have been of a high order throughout, and most of the hon. gentlemen who spoke confined themselves very closely to subjects germane to the question. I have already briefly referred to the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton). I want also to compliment my friend (Mr. Fielding) who moved the amendment. We know that he was in office for fifteen years, and though he was I believe of somewhat free trade
4 p.m. inclinations when he entered office, he discharged his duties as Minister of Finance and initiated a trade policy which was very fairly satisfactory to most of the people of this country, and during his term of office very little protest was heard even from a man who is supposed to be so high a protectionist as myself. I very rarely found it necessary to wait on my hon. friend in relation to any grievance from any of the large number of industries that flourish in the city of Brantford. I am willing to pay him that tribute. He was good enough to remind us in the course of his speech that he was the father of the dumping clause in the tariff. I want to give him the highest commendation for that clause, although it was taken exception to last night by some hon. members, for I think it is one of the wisest provisions in the tariff; and it has succeeded, as I will show a little later, in finding a way to get after the man who endeavours to destroy his weaker brother starting in business.

Mr. BELAND: Will you support the amendment?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I am not saying I will support the amendment. I am giving a little meed of praise where I think it is due.

Mr. BUREAU: For fear he might become Minister of Finance again.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I cannot say anything so flattering of the member who sits behind him representing Brome (Mr. McMaster). He is continually shouting, "Let the voice of the people be heard."

Mr. BUREAU: Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: "Let the voice of the people prevail."

Mr. BUREAU: Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I am sure we were all astounded to hear from the member for St. John city (Mr. Elkin) that the member for Brome has the distinction of representing the smallest number of people of any member in this House.

Mr. McMASTER: But think of their quality.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: He represents between 13,000 and 14,000 people. Now, if he can make his voice heard in this House, as he does, on every occasion, in season and out of season, as the representative of only 13,000 people, what would be the sound of his voice if sitting for the division of St. James with its 60,000 electors? Surely it would be as the voice of a modern Stentor. The member for Brome according to his light and knowledge is perhaps one of the most heterodox members of this House in relation to trade policy. I am sorry to have to say so, but I say it in all kindness, in the hope that my hon friend will mend his ways, because I want to say there are McMasters in Montreal who, I understand, are somewhat closely related to the hon. gentleman, and who deplore his speeches on trade questions; and if he does not give better value in law than he does in business I am sorry for his clients.

I want to say a word or two with regard to the new addition to this House in the person of the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) who yesterday addressed the House for the first time. His speech was most creditable to a young member and would indeed have been creditable to the oldest and most experienced member. His perfect control of voice, the charm of his manner and the excellence of his matter, as well as the chaste English in which he expressed his views, were models for those who so to speak, are to the manner born. No one could have delivered a finer address. I have, however, to add this by way of criticism, that after he had told us that he had a fresh mandate from the people, and had received all the light and knowledge that his constituents could give him on the tariff, which is the most important matter before the House at the present time, he had a very milk-and-water statement to present to us. He practically said that he did not run on a protection platform; but he admitted that he had stood on what he called a platform of "moderate protection."

Mr. BELAND: He presented you with an egg.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Yes. I have not broken it yet, but I hope the yolk will turn out to be good.

Mr. BUREAU: It may be a Chinese egg.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The hon. gentleman from St. James succeeds a gentleman whom we all respected and whose demise we regret. The late Mr. Lapointe coming from the same division, had the manliness to get up in this House on the Budget debate of last year and tell a lot of hon. gentlemen over the way where "they got off at," and I think he turned rather savagely on them on that occasion. Not only did he so express himself, but he translated his views into action by voting with the Government on that occasion. Therefore I hope that his bright successor will give his enlightened vote on this occasion in the same way as did his predecessor on a similar occasion, because, with all due respect to my hon. friend, the late Mr. Lapointe faithfully represented the St. James division with its large manufacturing and industrial interests. I believe that he received no rebuke from any of his constituents for his action on the occasion I refer to—at any rate, no protest was made public.

There have been heard, too, some notable speeches by members on this side of the House, particularly by those who very seldom speak. I refer to the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Elkin), to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion), to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), to the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson), and many others, but the others, perhaps, are older members—yes, and also to the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Stacey) who made a plea for "team" play between all the people of Canada, and I commend that plea particularly to hon. gentlemen opposite. It is one of the brightest thoughts that were brought before this House during the whole debate, and we are a Dominion of nine provinces, enough to make a team out of. We can make a country out of this; but that must be done by team play, by co-operation and standing together, not by ploughing the lone furrow or hoeing the lone row and having regard only to our own narrow interest of our particular selves, but by fighting and standing for united team play, for a united country, for a country of nine provinces, each of which looks after his brethren's interests as well as his own. If that policy is engaged in, I feel sure that a bright prospect is in store for this country.

I wish to deal with the tariff, and I must hurry along as I do not desire to detain the House at any great length, this being the principal subject with which I have to deal. I am a man of very moderate views, as is well known to all members of the House, yet, you know, Mr. Speaker, that some of our agricultural friends have dubbed me the high priest of protection. I do not object to that term if I can only live up to the sacredness of the garments that I wear. The priestly office that has been bestowed upon me, by my farmer friends in particular, is one that I esteem rather than despise. I was wondering whether I could carry out the analogy a little further; and being a man who studies the Scriptures somewhat, and noting how our friends in the Agrarian corner gathered together the other night on the vote and that they were led in by a chief whip whose name, by the rules of the House, I am not allowed to mention, I may say that from the way they followed him, it appeared to me as though the members of this Agrarian aggregation were Levites, and we find that in the Scriptures, priests and Levites are very closely associated. Taking that thought up and being desirous in a most friendly way of inculcating into my friends across the way a little palatable truth, I am going to speak in a parable as a priest should do, and I hope my Levite friends will try to follow me.

Once upon a time there were two farmers who lived, we shall not say where, but they had adjoining farms. One of them had 10,000 acres upon which he had 10,000 steers.

Mr. BELAND: Some farmer.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Yes, my hon. friend may say "some farmer," and rightly so. On the other side of the fence was another farmer who had 50 high-bred cattle, shorthorns, muleys, and others that were accustomed to peaceful habits. Between those two farms, from end to end, there stretched a barbed-wire fence.

Mr. J. F. REID (Mackenzie): Protection.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Yes, that is what I am coming to, but do not forestall me. These farmers lived on excellent terms with each other. This being a time when we hear a great deal about the brotherhood of man and the desirability of being friends with every people in the world, these neighbours one morning met at the barbed-wire fence, and they got to talking. The man who had the 10,000 steers, who lived on the south side of the fence, if you can realize that, said to the other: "Do you know, I have been thinking that, in accordance with the rules of the brotherhood of man and of the teaching of Holy Writ, in the early days there were no fences, no divisions between cattle and cattle, nor between farmer and farmer. I have been thinking, if we could only arrive at an arrangement whereby we could do away with the expense of this immense quantity of barbed-wire and cedar posts, both of which cost a very large amount of money in these days, we could both save a great deal of money, and those 50 cattle of yours, which are in that beautiful meadow with clover up to their knees, would have a wider market and range on the south side of the fence. I propose, therefore, that we abolish this barbed-wire fence, and your short-horns and polled angus can stray over my 10,000 acres, and this would be a vast advantage to your flock as well as mine. Why should we have a division between us? The farmer who lived on the north side of the fence was either from Missouri or Scotland, and he said that he would take the matter into consideration. He went home and talked the matter over with his wife, saying that he thought a good deal of consideration should be given to this friendly neighbour who lived over the way and who had made a friendly proposal, and that it would be a good idea for these 50 short-horns and polled angus to be allowed to enter into company with the 10,000 steers on the other side of the fence, thus having 20,000 acres over which they could stray instead of 10,000. But he said: "I think we shall look over the situation a little first and see how it will work out." This was in the spring of the year; the grass was growing; there was food for all of the animals, and they were resting contentedly or grazing on the north side of the line. But later on when, under the summer sun, drouth set in, the situation did not look quite as good, and this farmer again visited the field, and he found these 10,000 acres that were occupied by the 10,000 steers nipped down pretty nearly to the roots. In other words, the 10,000 steers were too many for the land, and his friend again meets him at the fence and he says: "Well, what have you thought about my suggestion?" "Well," he says, "it has a good many points about it; but I am thinking, now that the drouth has set in, probably my animals will require what is on this side of the fence, and I do not think I can agree, but I will not say definitely now." Later on the situation became more acute, and the farmer on the north side of the fence, visiting this land about the 1st September, finds a ramping, raging number of steers who are pressing against the barbed wire, shaking every cedar post on it, threatening to come on with a rush, and some of the breachy animals nearly going over the top. These animals are Texas steers; their horns look longer now that they are so lean; their ribs can all be counted, and their hip bones are sticking through their hides. The Scotchman goes home and he says: "Wife, I have learned a lesson; that fence is not coming down. If the Lord spares me until morning and the fence does not give way, I shall have some more cedar posts in the ground and I shall have an extra strand of barbed wire on the top to keep those breachy brutes on their side of the line."

That is the parable. I want now to bring home to my hon. friends, in a trade way exactly the situation. With a free trade policy, you have no fence; you have no protection; your fields are open. On the other side of the line there is a ramping, raging herd of 10,000 manufacturers who are feeling the pinch of the time, who are ready to put in goods at cost, who are ready to sacrifice any balance left over at the end of the year, and they say to our friends: "Let us in; we will pay for the fence, yes, we will pay the duty;" and as the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) says: "You shall not come over at that; we shall have a dumping clause that will keep you out." That is exactly the position with Canadian industry in relation to the United States. It is all very well to glory about the beauties of free trade; but it is a fair weather policy; it cannot be changed to meet any emergency. No one can show where free trade can come to the rescue of any man who is in danger. Protection is the first law of nature: The Almighty created every creature with beak or claws or teeth to defend itself. The Almighty has placed between nations resources that also can protect them, and the first duty of this or any other Government is to look after the welfare of its own citizens. It is all very well to talk about the brotherhood of man, but you will not be brothers to your fellowmen, you will not be on the earth at all unless you have some regard to the living of yourselves and your families. And you cannot get it in that way. I say in all kindness and without any desire to offend any of my friends that I look upon this Farmers' group as a dangerous one. They are small in numbers but they are far more dangerous than the Opposition of larger numbers alongside of them. They say they have got into the limelight and are receiving more attention than they deserve. I am not sure about that. When a false move is made it should be nipped in the bud, and I look upon this movement as the most dangerous that has ever been started in the Dominion of Canada. I may be wrong, but that is my belief. These men in the Farmers' group are not the only farmers in this House. We have twenty or thirty farmers sitting on this side of the House, and there are twenty or thirty in the Opposition, who are just as much farmers as my friends of the Agrarian group. I say to my friends down there in all sincerity and kindness that this country cannot be allowed to pass into the hands of any class no matter how good they may be, no matter how high they stand in honesty, justice, truth and faithfulness. We cannot allow this country to pass into the hands of any one class. In the debate on the speech from the Throne I made the statement that I looked upon this as a class movement. That statement was combated at the time by the leader of the party. Well, I have here their platform, and it bears out all that I said. I propose to read one or two items from this platform which has already been read very often in this House. It is the United Farmers' platform, the new national policy. I think this is the most up-to-date edition, but so many editions have been issued that it is difficult to say whether or not this is really the final edition. When a new party is formed and a definite platform is laid down, we have no recourse but to take these gentlemen at their word. I believe myself that these gentlemen across the way who form the Agrarian party mean to carry out their platform if they get into power. I say that it is the most destructive policy, from a trade standpoint, that was ever propounded in our country, and that it cannot receive and never should receive the endorsement of the people of Canada. This country is composed of a vast amount of interests and of a vast amount of callings, every man to his occupation, every man to his duty as he sees it; and when men run for office in this country they should run as citizens of Canada and perform their duty in this House as citizens of Canada, and not as representing any one class. I say that with regard to the farmer and with regard to labour. Let us see what the platform of the United Farmers says. After reviewing the combines and after lambasting protection for fair, it proceeds to the third clause to give definite tariff proposals.

Therefore be it resolved that the Canadian Council of Agriculture, representing the organized farmers of Canada,—

I call special attention to that "the organized farmers of Canada." They do not profess to have called into that Council any labouring man, any merchant, any manufacturer, any railway man, any banker, any educationalist, any clergyman, or anybody except the United Farmers. I do not know how many belong to this organization, but it will be news to me if the United Farmers of Canada represent 25 per cent of the farmers of Canada. I very much doubt it.

Mr. BELAND: I doubt it also.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: After one class has laid down a definite platform it is too late in the day to dub it afterwards "A National Policy." You cannot do that. What my hon. friends should do is to get together with their brothers of all parties if they want to form a new party. Let the labouring men come in, who are nearly as numerous as themselves in this Dominion, and who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow every day of the year, winter and summer. Let them call in the miners and the railway men, of whom there are 150,000 in this country, and all other classes of the community. Every one of them is entitled to be called in to help frame a national platform. It is not good enough to say that you have put the platform out two years ago, and that it is a National Policy that you have propounded. You have propounded simply a farmers' policy, and I say that it represents only the United Farmers, and that there are many excellent farmers outside of the United Farmers, and I hope they will remain outside. My hon. friend—and this refers to the leading Levite in the case, in his speech the other night said: "We, the farmers of Canada, desire all food to be admitted free." It sounded to me very much like, "We, the tailors of Tooley Street." Has this hon. gentleman consulted the farmers of Ontario in that respect? I venture to say that if he will make the same proposal to the fruit growers and the vegetable growers and the dairying interests of Western Ontario they will say to him, "You may speak for yourself, but not for us." The farmers in Western Ontario have voted protection time and again, and if this case is properly put up to them at the next election, not by a long way will the Agrarian group carry the farmers of Ontario with them. Nearly every item we have ever consumed has a tax upon it, and I stand for protection for every farm product—butter, cheese, eggs, milk, cream, vegetables of all kinds, fruits of all kinds. I would have every one of them protected, and protected handsomely. Protection has been of vast benefit to the farmers of our district regardless of party. Everybody who knows the conditions knows that. We know that many of the products of the farm are sold in the United States far cheaper than in Canada, and still there is a duty of four cents a pound on hog products. To whose advantage is that? To the farmer's? What about eggs? The farmer across the line in the South has his hens running in the open all the time in winter. His hens do not require to be warmly housed or to have electric lights in the shed to make them believe the day is longer than it is, but our farmers have to have modern equipment for their henhouses, and the Agrarian group would ask them to compete with the American farmer, although it costs our farmers from 4 to 10 cents more a dozen, and I think that is very much under the mark, to produce their eggs in winter than in summer, while the hens in the South are running in the open all the year round. The same is true of sheep. They run at large and need no protection in the winter. They are out in the open and pick up their living all the time. The same is true of cattle and horses. Yet hon. gentlemen across the way ask our farmers to compete with the farmers of the South in these different lines. Everybody knows that the American crop is always earlier than ours, and the early vegetables and early fruits from the United States would take the cream off the market. Everybody knows that that would be the result of removing our protective barriers. If they were let down, many of our fruit men and vegetable men in Western Ontario would be driven out of business.

Coming back to the platform of the United Farmers, this is what they propose:

(a) An immediate and substantial all-round reduction of the customs tariff.

Though I am a protectionist I am prepared to stand more or less in line with that. But I say to my farmer friends that they do not carry that out in the later part of their platform, as I shall show in a moment. It goes on:

(b) By reducing the customs duty on goods imported from Great Britain to one-half the rates charged under the general tariff, and that further gradual, uniform reductions be made in the remaining tariff on British imports that will ensure complete free trade between Great Britain and Canada in five years.

Mr. Speaker, did you ever hear a more preposterous proposition for a country such as this? Do our friends opposite realize what that means? I do not think they do. Free trade with Britain means free trade with the world. It means that American goods would come into Canada via Great Britain. It is just like having three wells of water connected by three pipes. The three pipes will convey the water to absolutely the same level in every one of the wells. You connect the United States with Great Britain in free trade and allow Great Britain to connect up with Canada and you will have American goods going to Liverpool and coming into Canada by the back door. That is what it means. Free trade with Great Britain means free trade with the world. The platform goes on:

By endeavouring to secure unrestricted reciprocal trade, etc.

Well, we have had that and the parable and I do not intend to pursue that further.

By placing all foodstuffs on the free list.

That would suit my hon. friend the leading Levite; I have already dealt with it. Now, then, I come to something spicey:

That agricultural implements, farm and household machinery, vehicles, fertilizers, coal, lumber, gasoline, illuminating fuel and lubricating oils be placed on the free list, and that all raw materials and machinery used in their manufacture also be placed on the free list.

Did you ever hear anything more astounding than that Mr. Speaker? The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) yesterday read a list which took him ten or fifteen minutes to go through, and it showed what would be embraced in that class. It would hit directly and indirectly every industry in Canada, because they do not propose to put these items alone on the free list but all materials that enter into their manufacture, and that would cover all the subsidiary interests that supply these various factories. It would wipe out the protective tariff altogether, practically speaking. I have here the figures as published in the Globe of the farm implement industry. I have not time to read the article, nor do I desire to prolong my remarks unduly; but it states that there is an amount of capital, in round numbers, of $74,000,000 involved in the manufacture of agricultural implements and the total product is $34,000,000 per annum. I should think that that is the smallest amount of manufactured goods from so large a capital turned out in any industry in Canada. What is the reason? The hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) stated the reason the other evening and that is, the long terms of credit that are given, the manufacturers getting their money back once a year. It therefore takes over two dollars, pretty nearly $2.50, to produce $1 worth of goods, getting returns once a year, whereas some businesses turn their capital over five, six, seven and eight times in the year. That is a feature that should not be lost sight of. Now, Mr. Speaker, the term "implement of production" is a very comprehensive one and is used very glibly by some people. It embraces almost every conceivable tool from a needle to a threshing machine. Everything that one can think of as an instrument for the production of anything that is made comes withing that category, and it is a most absurd term by which to classify a tariff. There was one implement, Mr. Speaker, which was not productive and which was introduced once into the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and I do not suppose that hon. gentlemen intend to include such an implement as that in the classification. But taking it all in all, this very broad term embraces pretty nearly everything we can think of.

Mr. BUREAU: What was the implement to which you refer?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: That implement was one that called upon this Government to guarantee bonds in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific and I think that the Minister of Finance will tell you what it cost. I do not think that you should be anxious to introduce any more implements of that kind in Canada. That implement cost $10,000,000 in one year and we had to guarantee at 100 bonds that were selling as low as 84, which would mean some 16 cents on the dollar. The Minister of Finance can give the figures, but I am only reminding hon. gentlemen that when they want all implements free it is not desirable to embrace that particular description of implement in the list, and it would be well to make some mental reservation in regard to that point.

Mr. BUREAU: That implement does not fatten the short horns.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: No, but it makes some hole in the side of the long horns. The document further says:

> That all tariff concessions granted to other countries be immediately extended to Great Britain.

That does not amount to much after what I have said. This is another proposal:

> By a direct tax on unimproved land values, including all natural resources.

I hope that when the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) speaks he will tell us how much revenue that is going to raise. I do not think that the Minister of Finance will be very materially assisted if he adopts the proposal contained in that section. The next suggestion for raising revenue is:

> By a graduated personal income tax.

What do they mean by that clause? We think we have a good income tax already which is hitting us pretty hard; what more do hon. gentlemen want in that respect? I shall refer to that matter in a moment or two, because it is worthy of note. The next clause reads:

> By a graduated inheritance tax.

They are not willing to let a man die free and enter the Kingdom of Heaven, but after he is gone they must tax him through his family, his widow and children who remain to enter into the labours of the old gentleman when he is called to his long home. The Ontario Government has already gone a long way in that direction and I trust my hon. friends are not going to make the future world more uncomfortable than it is likely to be for a good many of us.

Mr. BUREAU: They want you to abandon your wealth.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The next clause in this platform reads:

> By a graduated income tax on the profits of corporations.

I think we have that already, good and hard, as they say. Our friends, Mr. Speaker, I notice are very good at compounding doses for the other man but they are not so ready to take any of their own medicine. It is very much like the man who mixes the nauseous compound. He is eager to prescribe it for the other chap but he says, "I don't think my stomach needs such medicine at the present time."

Mr. BUREAU: Do as I say and not as I do.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Yes, indeed, that is just the idea that underlies this suggestion. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the Ottawa Evening Citizen of May 7 which has some remarkable headlines. I read the following in that paper:

> Vigorous criticism of the income tax system before Commons Committee to-day.—Too many questions, and many wealthy men said to be escaping its provisions. Many defaulters found in Toronto.—Ten thousand letters sent out in two weeks. No million dollar incomes in Canada.

These are the headlines which appear in this newspaper and they make fairly interesting reading. I understand that our Agrarian friends were keen on the hunt for some one that was not paying up. Now, I have not heard of any particular rush on the part of our Agrarian friends across the way to get into the list of those who have paid up. In reading this item I find it states that 80 members of the House made no returns in the year 1917. I want it understood, Mr. Speaker, that I was not one of the eighty, and I think that if every other man who is not would get up and say so we would know who the eighty were.

Mr. BELAND: I did not make any return.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The investigation reveals that there are eighty men who did not possess $500 income outside of the indemnity which they received that year. I do not cast any reflections on any of those gentlemen, but when people tell us that they want an income tax I certainly think they ought to live up to the privileges of the one they have got before they try to get another. In Ontario, with 183,000 farmers, I am told that there were only 314 who made returns. That does not show any very great rush to get to the tax collector. I am told further, by the Commissioner of Taxation, that in the city of Toronto, which is stated to contain a large body of defaulters, there was more income tax paid in one particular year than by the three western provinces of Canada added together. Yet, notwithstanding that fact, this paper says that there is a large body of defaulters in Toronto. I am not from the city of Toronto, Mr. Speaker, and therefore I can say a word or two with regard to that city in this respect; and I desire to state now that there is no city in the Dominion of Canada which, during the whole term of the war, made more sacrifice and was more willing to contribute to the cause in both men and money, than was Toronto.

It is a most unfair and unwarranted slander upon the chief city of the province of Ontario to head it up "a large body of defaulters in the city of Toronto." When our friends of the Agrarian party propound this income tax policy I want them to get busy and get in their own returns. I think everybody should be called upon to keep books. I have to make my returns to the last dollar so far as I can make them up. I want to do my duty to the country. Even with the increased amount that the Minister of Finance has called for, I will try to hold up my end though it may be unfair to my charities because I cannot give voluntarily and have it taken from me by force as well. I must first look after what the Government calls for. Speaking as a priest to the Levites I ask my brethren across the way, nay, I entreat them, to live up to their principles. I do not want to be too hard on my hon. friends and I am glad to see them smile—I like to see them smile—

I am a good friend of the farmer although they do not always recognize it. I am not saying anything here that I am not prepared to say in any township of my own county and I have in it two farmers particularly who are amongst the hottest in the U.F.O. I can mention two or three names and I will do so before I get through. I want to see the farmers represented in this House. I think the farmers are not here in sufficient numbers and I want them to be here. I also want the labour men to be represented here. When my hon. friends say that I represent the manufacturers I want to tell them that the statement is not based upon fact. I have never been a member of the Manufacturers' Association in my life. Upon only two occasions have I ever entered their doors and that was upon their invitation. I am very broad-minded in regard to the farmer. On four different occasions in my political life of upwards of forty years, although the city number over three-quarters of the population of my riding, I backed farmer candidates in the county of Brant. I will give you their names. You will recognize one of them, I am sure. I backed Colonel Fraser, Peter Doran, Thomas Lloyd Jones and Paul Hoffman, all respectable men. When they ran, they did not run as farmers but they ran as citizens of Canada. Any man that cannot enter this House as representing the whole people of Canada, in my judgment, should not sit in Parliament.

Mr. BUREAU: Did they run as Conservatives or as farmers?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: They ran as Conservatives and as citizens of Canada and Conservatives are good citizens of Canada. I would not refer to myself as a Conservative. I do not think I have called myself a Conservative since the Union Government was formed. I am not going to say what I will call myself in the future but I have backed the Union Government and I am going to stay with it at present. I have not gone back on the Union Government except on one occasion and that was that I might support my friends the farmers. I voted with my good friend the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark); I voted with the Levites and others and I voted against the proposals of last years' Budget? I voted to show my sympathy with the farmer. In fact, I am a small farmer myself. Although I say I am a "small farmer" yet I do quite a little farming. I have farmed enough to know the difficulties; I have farmed enough to know what these gentlemen are up against. Perhaps I will qualify as an agriculturist rather than as a farmer. A judge in my county gave a definition of the difference between an agriculturist and a farmer. He said that a farmer is a man who makes his money in the country and spends it in the city, while an agriculturist is a man who makes his money in the city and spends it in the country. I think it hits off the situation as far as my farming is concerned, and probably that of a good many others, but I have been farming enough to know the difficulties and dangers which beset the agriculturist and the farmer. I have the very broadest sympathy with the ideas of these gentlemen, but if they want to form a new party and that is a very laudable enterprise, they should call together all the citizens of Canada and call them not after they have got their platform constructed but call them before, and ask them to help them to make it. Let them help to put down a few of the planks and if they do that they will have to tear up some of those that they have already put in and they will have a platform that will be a good deal better than the one they have now.

What about the labour man? We are told that an alliance is to be formed between the labour men and the farmers and that is where the danger lies to a certain extent but once the labour man realizes what this Agrarian party is he will not be long with it. I have spoken with a great many labour men. We have in our county two or three of the hottest U.F.O.'s that could be found in the province of Ontario. I have had the privilege of conversation with them, I have watched their operations for years and I may say that for the last fifteen years they have been agitating in this direction. The U.F.O. has not been formed to fight the tariff. The tariff is not what brought the farmers of Ontario into line,—it was to fight the Military Service Act that the U.F.O. was formed. It is only two years ago that the stormiest delegation that I have ever witnessed came down to Ottawa, not to fight the tariff, but to fight the Military Service Act which called for their sons being sent to the front when the tide of battle hung in the balance and it was a question whether our enemy, the Hun, would be the victor. If the enemy had won this country would have neither farm nor factory but it would have been under the heel of the Hun. These gentlemen when they came to Ottawa even threatened the Parliament Buildings. I know I met quite a mob of them at the front door of the Museum. They were down not to fight the tariff but to protest against this Government calling up their sons although it had been stated that farmers' sons would be more or less exempt.

All honour to the farmer who lives according to his principles but as I have said the working men of this country are almost as numerous as the farmers and they are entitled to the very same consideration as the farmers. Figures have been quoted showing that the production of the factory exceeds that of the farm by $1,000,000,000 per annum in Canada. Remember, this is no longer a purely agricultural country. My Levite friends desire to be fair, I am sure, but they do not want to say that it is a purely agricultural country when the statistics show that we produce about $1,000,000,000 more in the factories than on the farms. That being the fact, why should you ignore this vast body of labour? When you speak of the manufacturer you want to remember that he is not just one man. The manufacturer may consist of a manager, or a president, or some of his associates, and five or ten directors. The directors may represent anywhere from ten to ten thousand shareholders holding script in all parts of Canada and who are dependent upon the operations of the factory more or less for a living for themselves and their families. That manufacturer has in his factory from ten to one thousand, and in many cases five thousand hands, and when you are speaking of a certain manufacturer you are not speaking of favours to one man but you are speaking of the dinner pail of thousands of working men on whose labour depends the maintenance of successful industry.

Canada has shown that in competition with the world, under fair conditions, she is the equal of almost any nation on the earth. As our capital, appliances and our markets are as good as those of other nations we can meet and hold our own with the best of them; but in a thinly populated country comprising 4,000,000 square miles and with our people scattered from coast to coast we cannot compete with the skillful manipulation and equipment and the enormous product of the factories to the south. They can run week in and week out, year in and year out, on one particular line, whereas we have to make a hundred lines and produce them in small quantities. In other words, a man selling one hundred reapers and making $50 on each reaper would realize $5,000 per annum; but if he sold 1,000 reapers and made $25 on each, his return would be $25,000 per annum, or five times as much as in the case of the original proposition. This being the case it is the amount of output that we have that will enable us to compete.

Now, I say in all sincerity to my hon. friends across the Chamber: do not begin to pull down—this is not the time to do so—build up.

Mr. BUREAU: Yes, build up a tariff.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: If this free trade policy that I have berated more or less in a very kindly way is made the fight at the next election, you are going to see more bitterness engendered in Canada than in any fight that has been waged in this country in a great number of years. Finally the issue is going to resolve itself into this—the city against the country, and the country against the city. It would be the most deplorable kind of fight that could possibly be conducted—

Mr. BUREAU: Then do not suggest it.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: —and while I have no desire to see my hon. friends opposite occupy the Government benches I would ten times sooner see them seated there than I would to see there the representatives of any mere class in Canada. It is not safe for the country that such a thing should take place—it is not safe for our civilization and for our Confederation—and I beseech my hon. friends across the way as a priest—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: —addressing most contrite Levites that they will take this under their serious consideration and bring down a materially altered platform which both sides can support, and thus let us have one united party work for the real welfare of our beloved country.

Mr. ARTHUR TRAHAN (Nicolet): Mr. Speaker, although a member coming from the province of Quebec it affords me great pleasure to stay here at the week end—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. TRAHAN: —to take part in this debate. I do not see the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Mackie) present.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. TRAHAN: Where is he?

Mr. BELAND: Do not forget that to-day is Friday.

Mr. TRAHAN: Has the hon. member gone for a week-end trip? I leave the answer to the members of this House. As my hon. friend from Beauce (Mr. Béland) reminds me to-day is Friday and it is also fish day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member for East Edmonton has gone home.

Mr. TRAHAN: The annual Budget is the diagnosis of the financial and economic health of the nation. The speech delivered the other day by the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) reveals that our country is suffering severely from a very serious disease consisting of a progressive weakness of our national credit. It has been created through excess of consumption, deficiency of production and financial and fiscal sluggishness complicated with extravagance and waste both public and individual. It has also been created by currency inflation, inflated bank deposits, and inflated public debt. As the general manager of the Bank of Montreal said on December 1st, 1919: "even with a full measure of faith in our country we must find the near future very difficult to visualize;" and according to the president of the same bank "the state of the national finances deserves a wider and more profound consideration than the subject appears to receive. . . . . The situation is a very serious one. . . . . The feeling as to the future is less optimistic than it has been."

To use the very expression of the Finance Minister himself Canada is faced with a pyramid of debt. Our country is to-day mortgaged by a net debt of $2,273,305,436.92. It has increased by $1,937,308,586.78 in six years and by $210.51 per head of the population as compared with 1914, since at that time it stood at $335,996,850.10 and at $43.69 per head, whereas now it is $254 per head, more than one-eighth of $2,000 the estimated individual wealth per head of the nation.

This tremendous increase of our net debt is not wholly due to the war for, as stated by the Finance Minister, "our total expenditure for the war up to and including March 31, 1920, now amounts to $1,674,000,000." Thus we have, independently of the war, an increase in our net debt of $273,308,586.78 resulting from the bad administration of the Government, of their yearly deficits, and of their iniquitous transactions such as, for instance, the Canadian Northern deal.

Our annual interest charges which were $12,000,000 in 1914 now amount to $142,000,000, that is to say nearly twelve times more than before the war, and our total yearly expenditure is 300 per cent more than in 1914.

Moreover, our currency has been watered by the Government to a most disgraceful extent and, as the consequence, the cost of living has increased by 125 per cent and the purchasing power of the dollar has been reduced to 47 cents. Indeed, in August, 1914, at the outbreak of the war, our gold reserve was 86 per cent of the total issue of Dominion notes, amounting then to $112,793,833.28, and it is now reduced to 32 per cent—a loss of 54 cents in the dollar, since the total Dominion note issue is at present, according to the minister himself, $311,932,791, and our gold reserve held by the Government was $96,161,366 on March 31 last, as compared with $97,136,426.85 at the outbreak of the war in August, 1914. Consequently the Dominion note issue has increased from August, 1914, to March 31, 1920, by $199,138,958, and the gold reserve held by the Government has decreased by $975,060,—nearly one million dollars.

This is contrary to the law, which requires the Government to hold in gold 25 per cent up to $50,000,000 of note issue, and dollar for dollar for any further issue. If the law had been observed, we should have $273,500,000 of gold to redeem our currency; that is to say, $177,000,000 more than we have at the present time. The minister dodges the issue by dividing the Dominion currency into two classes: One, issued against gold and amounting to $128,366,066; the other is the remainder issued against approved securities. Twenty-six million dollars, says he, was issued under the authority of the Dominion Note Act, 1915, and secured as therein provided.

What are these securities, Mr. Speaker? If you look at the statute, chapter 4, you see that for $16,000,000 they are securities of the Canadian Northern railway and of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. It seems to me that if, as the minister said the other day, the advances of the Government to the Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific railway cannot be treated as active assets, their securities given to guarantee the redemption of $16,000,000 of Dominion currency cannot be considered as sufficient for the protection of the public.

The minister adds that $50,000,000 of Dominion currency is secured by the pledge of approved securities, but he has omitted to give us the list of such securities. That list would have been very interesting for it would have enabled us to ascertain the real value of those securities. But no matter what their value may be, they are not as liquid as gold. The minister closes his statement by saying that " $107,566,725 was issued to the banks, secured by the pledge of approved securities, consisting largely of Imperial Treasury bills and our own Treasury bills." The amount of those Treasury bills so applied to guarantee the redemption of our Dominion currency is not given by the minister, although it is a very important matter.

Mark you, Sir, the Government instead of holding gold to redeem its currency, as required by law, gives its own paper to guarantee other paper. What sound finance! In these transactions the Government plays a double game. It gets advances from the banks; that is to say, it can draw cheques on them, but it pays them in currency notes. It obtains credit from the banks by giving to them the instrument of credit.

Now, if we take the return of the chartered banks, dated March 31, 1920, we shall find that they claim to have deposited in the Central Gold Reserves $108,200,000. Yet the minister in his statement said that there is only $79,900,000 gold held by the banks. Could he explain the difference between the figure given by the banks in their return and the figure he has given us in his Budget Speech? Is the difference of nearly $29,000,000 included in the $97,700,000 Dominion notes, which are held in the central gold reserves? It looks like that, Mr. Speaker, and that the minister must be wrong when he deducts this $97,700,000 from our total Dominion and bank note circulation to establish the percentage of the gold reserve to our total outstanding circulation. Because, I repeat it, Sir, it is paper which guarantees paper, and it is not a sound guarantee.

I submit that in order to have the exact ratio of gold to our circulation, we must take into consideration only the gold that we have, and not these so-called securities or other Dominion notes or Treasury bills. If we adopt this basis, which is the sole legal and sound economic basis, we find that the percentage of gold reserve to the Dominion and bank note issue is only 35½ per cent, since the total outstanding circulation is $537,702,420, and the total gold amounts to $190,777,106. This percentage is below the 40 per cent required by the federal reserve legislation of the United States, so much praised by the minister, and in that fact lies, to a large extent, our adverse rate of exchange on the New York market. This manufacturing of hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars of irredeemable currency by the Government and by the banks, the huge amounts of Government borrowings during the last six years, have not increased by one iota the production of useful and necessary commodities in Canada; on the contrary, the Minister of Finance, in his financial statement, has admitted that "the production of the country, instead of increasing, has actually decreased." As a result, the spending power of the people has grown very rapidly, but it has to be exercised upon a smaller quantity of commodities, and that produces the effect of a force pump and brings about the high cost of living. Prices of commodities have risen in proportion to the amount of water put into our fiduciary circulation; our dollar and bank notes have shrunk to 35.5 per cent, and their purchasing power has shrunk accordingly. "The real explanation of the high cost of living," said Mr. Lloyd George in the House of Commons in February last, "is the devaluation of money. You may put on a percentage to the cost for profit, but it is only a percentage and not a considerable one. The real inflation of prices is due to the fact that money has not got the value which it had before the war."

We have also inflation of credits, which is intimately connected with currency inflation. The Government, by their incessant borrowings, have created $2,100,000,000 of fresh domestic credit instruments. This is lost forever, because these loans were contracted for a non-productive purpose. As a natural sequence, Sir, bank deposits have increased by $863,397,502, from $991,734,246 in March, 1914, to $1,855,151,598 on March 31, 1920. Dealing with this subject, the Minister of Finance said the other day that "the public purchasing power, gauged by the total currency in circulation and total bank deposits in Canada, increased 91 per cent in 1919 over the prices in 1914." To my mind, this statement is not accurate, and is probably the result of a lapsus on the part of the minister. It is not the purchasing power of the public which has increased by 91 per cent, but the spending power, quite a different thing. Why? Because this huge increase of bank deposits does not represent real wealth, actual goods, services, or commodities, but is only potential fiduciary circulation. Common people may, it is true, spend more money, but with the same amount of money they can buy only a less amount of goods, services or commodities than before the war. If you make to-day a census of the fortunes in this country, the total, expressed in dollars, will be far greater than before the war. But this superior value is a phantom without reality; it results, not from an increase of real wealth, but from excessive creation of monetary tokens. The circulation of paper money in super-abundant quantities increases the spending power; but as the price rises, the purchasing power decreases.

To sum up, the public spending power has increased by 91 per cent; the cost of living has also increased by 125 per cent, and the purchasing power of our Dominion and banknote paper has been reduced to 47 cents in the dollar.

It is well, as suggested by Sir Edmund Walker, to apply the acid test of measuring the national wealth in terms of commodities instead of money. If you do so, Mr. Speaker, you will find that in 1914 you could buy $991,000,000 worth of goods, services and commodities with the money deposited in banks, since the purchasing power of our dollar was, at that time, at par, and that, with the $1,855,000,000 of bank deposits on March 31, 1920, you could buy to-day only $870,000,000 worth of goods, because, although the spending power has been increased, the purchasing power has been reduced to 47 cents on the dollar. The decrease in our national production last year, as is admitted by the minister, confirms this opinion.

The same principle applies to our trade. It has increased in nominal value rather than in quantity, and in support of this contention let me quote from the Financial Times of January 17, 1920:

> Sir Edmund Walker puts the economic situation of the world tersely and forcefully when, after pointing out that clearing house and trade returns, though showing higher figures in money, generally represent transactions based on smaller quantities of merchandise, he says: "Because we think in terms of dollars and not of merchandise, we live in a fool's paradise."
>
> The two chief reasons for high prices and the low purchasing power of the dollar are an actual scarcity of the things which the world needs and an inflated currency.

By their improvident policy of issuing irredeemable currency to the dangerous extent above mentioned the Government has violated the written laws of the country, but has been unable to free itself and the people from the economic laws which govern exchange. Obligations incurred in floating loans abroad and the interest which falls due on these loans have but little influence on our exchange. The current rate of exchange is 12.5 per cent against Canada and has been created principally by currency inflation and expansion of credits. Fiduciary inflation, Sir, reacts at the same time on the growth of imports and the reduction of exports. When the importer of foreign goods is assured of being able to sell anything at any price on account of the magnitude of the spending power possessed by consumers of all classes, premiums upon exchanges have no restrictive action in checking imports. Fiduciary inflation is also prejudicial to exports. It produces a general rise of prices and services, and therefore a rise in the price of raw products and manual labour. As a result, the cost of production is burdened in such proportions that the natural producer is handicapped on the foreign markets by the producers of the countries where inflation has not reached the same level. This explains in part why Canada has actually an adverse trade balance with the United States, who have been able to maintain their currency on a gold basis. One may say that depreciation of currency should act as a corrective to adverse trade balances by checking imports and stimulating exports. That may be true, theoretically speaking, but we are obliged to recognize that actual facts run counter to this doctrine, which does not take into account human nature. Our commercial statistics with the United States are a conclusive answer to this theory. People are working less and consuming more. They have lost the idea of values; prices are no more discussed; thrift has been abandoned; luxuries are bought in abundance; greediness, loss of dress, and other motives provoke the people to buy beyond all prudence. Why? Because the Government has set a bad example of spending millions and millions without regard to economy, and has been playing ducks and drakes with the people's money, and as you are aware, Sir, a bad example is contagious; also because the Government by their borrowing policy and their unlimited issue of irredeemable currency have inflated the spending powers of the people for luxuries and encouraged the "orgy of self-indulgent expenditure by the general public." Currency inflation, then, is the main cause of our adverse rate of exchange. This contention is supported by the example of Japan. Although since 1914 Japan has increased its paper note issue by £72,000,000, it has increased its gold reserve by £54,000,000, and is still on a gold basis. In fact the Japanese yen, whose par value is 49.8 cents was at a premium in the New York market on May 26, 1920, being then quoted at 50.5 cents, making $1.01 for a value of one dollar. The reason for this is obvious. There is no currency inflation in Japan. Some have expressed the opinion that exchange was so badly against us because of our adverse trade balance with the United States. Let me quote in this connection an extract from the Farmers' Sun of February 28, 1920. A correspondent of this paper, writing of the speech made by the hon. Minister of the Interior at Winnipeg, says:

> He ascribed it to our adverse balance of trade with the U.S.A. because we had been buying from her $740,000,000 odd worth of goods and selling only $450,000,000. Our American exports are, he admits, 64 per cent of our imports from that country, and that is why our dollar is only worth 85 cents in New York. But in 1911, when Mr. Meighen and others of his breed were howling "let well enough alone," our exports to America were only 41 per cent of our imports. We bought from the U.S. $274,844,858 and sold our neighbours $112,208,676 worth of goods But in 1911 the Canadian dollar was at par across the border, so some explanations must be looked for. Mr. Meighen might have—but refrained from so doing—explained that there were other more potent causes. We have much more paper money in circulation per head of population than the U.S., and our currency was debauched by Sir Thomas White to a most disgraceful extent. America has remained on a gold basis, which we cheerfully abandoned.

[Mr. Trahan.]

In order to alleviate the penalty imposed upon us by our adverse exchange it has been suggested that we should restrict imports. This is not an adequate remedy. By it you endeavour to avert the consequences of the evil, but you do not suppress the cause. The true remedy is that suggested by the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference in their declaration when they say that "it is essential, under the present economic conditions of the world, that early steps be taken to secure the deflation of credit and currency by the immediate limitation and gradual curtailment of the note circulation." This is in contradiction to what the Minister of Finance stated in his Budget Speech. He says that the situation is one in which it is impossible by any direct governmental action to bring about deflation either in circulation or in credit without danger of economic disaster. Yet the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference, as I have stated, says that it is essential that early steps be taken to secure the deflation of credit and currency by the immediate limitation and gradual curtailment of the note circulation. They also suggest the reduction of current governmental expenditure within the limits of revenue. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether this is not a direct governmental action? Further, they suggest the imposition of such additional taxation as is necessary to secure this result, and the establishing of short-term obligations by means of loans subscribed out of the savings of the people.

Another remedy is suggested by the general manager of the Bank of Montreal, who, speaking of the exchange situation at the 1919 general meeting of the shareholders, said:

> Repayment to Canada of the moneys, aggregating $420,000,000, owed to us by Great Britain and the Allies, would quickly cause the premium in question to disappear.

Why, Sir? Because it would help us to deflate our currency and credits. While on this subject, let me say that I regret that in his Budget the Minister of Finance did not give us a detailed statement of our accounts with Great Britain and the Allies. It would have been very interesting for us to know whether all the overseas accounts have been finally closed and proper adjustment has been made. There should be no secrecy in this important matter, and I blame the Government for not having given us the opportunity to scrutinize this question.

The Government, Sir, has inoculated our country with a dreadful disease, namely, inflation, and as a result we are facing an unprecedented financial and economic crisis. Our national debt is enormous; the cost of living is appalling; the rate of exchange operates seriously against us, and unrest is general. I hold the Government responsible for this calamitous situation and I say that by their iniquitous war policy and their waste and extravagance they have depressed the value of Canadian money and aggravated the burdens imposed by high prices. When for the first time during the session of 1918 I asked the Government to adopt immediately a constructive policy by preventing the decline of production and the increase in the cost of living; when at that time I asked them to subordinate their military zeal to the interests of the purest economic patriotism in order to ensure and maintain the economic life of the nation; when I warned them against the evils of the policy of financing this country on paper, I was met by the usual answer: "We must win the war;" and the progressive march towards bankruptcy was continued by the Government. Though favouring the participation of Canada in the war, I thought, with many others, that our efforts should have been proportionate to our resources, that we should not have ruined ourselves in winning the war, and that in the framing of our war policy we should not have forgotten Canadian interests and Canada's future. I protested against the policy embodied in the slogan "The last man and the last dollar" adopted by the Government, who had chosen to place British interests first and Canadian interests in a secondary position. The results of the Government's war policy are before you and the country, Mr. Speaker, and the people will know how to weigh them. Suffice it to compare those results with the results obtained by Japan, which entered the war at its very beginning and stayed in it to the end, and which as one of the principal Allied and Associated Powers signed the Peace Treaty and entered the League of Nations, being a member of the Big Five. Japan's participation in the war was inspired by high ideals but was kept within just bounds. It furnished foodstuffs and munitions and it kept in the field a reasonable number of men. The loyalty of Japan to the Allies was never questioned and the Japanese were never called slackers or deserters.

Let us see now the consequences of the war for Japan and Canada. Japan's debt per head has increased only by 16/100 of a pound or 78 cents per head; Canada's debt per head has increased by £42 or $210.54. Japan's currencey has been maintained on a gold basis; our own has been unduly inflated; the Japanese yen is sold at a premium of $1.04 per $100 on the New York market; we pay exchange at the rate of $12.50 upon the same amount. The financial and economic situation of Japan is sound—brilliant; we are facing bankruptcy.

Again, I ask, Sir: What was the best war policy? I leave the answer to the judgment of the people and of history.

At all events, be that as it may, it is more than ever time for Canada to look after its own business. Having done so much for the Empire and the world, it is time that we did something for Canada. The hon. the Minister of Finance said the other day that "It is impossible for any Canadian to do too much for Canada." But in the course of his remarks he stated that "It is impossible by any direct Government action to bring about deflation either in circulation or in credits without great danger of economic disaster."

May I be permitted, Sir, to differ entirely with this last statement? It indicates that the hon. Minister of Finance recognizes that his Budget proposals are an empirical treatment of the financial and economic disease from which Canada so severely suffers. People are beginning to realize what the tremendous waste of war and enormous public debts mean. They also realize that increased production is necessary not only to lower the cost of living but also to pay the overloaded charges of our national Budget. But, Sir, it is not enough to produce; you must produce cheaply. Many forget that increased production can lower prices only in the measure allowed by the net cost of products. They believe that prices are fallen when supply equals demand. They do not consider the purchasing power of the consumer which has decreased proportionately to the increase in the cost of production and to the decrease of the purchasing power of the dollar. Prices are necessarily constituted by the following elements:

1. National expenditures which enter into prices by way of taxation.

2. Cost of production, transportation and commerce, these three including:

(a) Reward of organization and direction;

(b) Reward of technical skill and invention;

(c) Reward of manual labour;

(d) Reward of lands and capital.

Supply and demand alone are unable to modify prices which necessarily include all these elements. If selling prices cannot pay all these costs, on account of the so-called law of supply and demand, production, transportation and commerce would immediately lay aside their work. Whatever may be the supply, whatever may be the demand, generally prices cannot fall below the total costs above mentioned; their variations are solely determined by the variations of the cost of each of their constituent elements.

Consequently, we may safely assert that national expenditure forms a component part of the cost of production. This cost has been increased since 1914 because, to a large extent, the whole of Canadian production is burdened with national expenditures far greater than in 1914. At that time, when we were buying one dollar's worth of goods, we were paying, at the highest, four per cent of national expenditure; we were then buying an article or part of an article in which we would receive at least 96 cents' worth of work and invention. This year, for the same purchase, we pay 10 per cent of national expenditure. Our purchasing power has then decreased in that proportion. We pay daily the cost of the war and other extravagant expenditures of the Government. Every time we buy a pound of butter we give ten per cent above the real value of butter in order to reimburse the millions which we have spent on acount of the war and of the bad administration of the Government. Mark, you, Sir, national expenditures are borne by production. Taxation, either direct or indirect, enters into the price of goods. While in 1914 the total expenditure was $186,241,047.63, this year it will exceed $600,000,000. The sum of $600,000,000 enters into the selling prices of goods, and by his Budget proposals the Minister of Finance instead of alleviating the burden of taxation aggravates it by $70,000,000 of new taxation which will increase so much more the cost of living. Truly, Mr. Speaker, this is empirical treatment to cure the disease of the high cost of living. The watchword of the Government seems to be "More taxation, more expenditure."

Mr. McMASTER: Hear, hear.

Mr. TRAHAN: The Liberal watchword is "Less taxation, less expenditure." There must be direct Government action to adopt the policy of retrenchment and to curtail the public expenditures. Will it endanger the economic situation of the whole country if the Government were practising thrift and economy? I say to the Government: Wipe off the Estimates the $12,000,000 for the Militia, and the $20,000,000 for shipbuilding, modify your railway policy in order to avoid the $47,000,000 of deficit caused by the great mistake of public ownership; and economize $20,000,000 for the Civil Service, and then you will this year have a saving of nearly $100,000,000. Then you will not need the new taxation, which will amount to nearly $70,000,000, and you will contribute to a certain degree towards lowering the cost of living by reducing the net cost of production.

Another method to attain this end would be the adoption of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). The more, Mr. Speaker, you study the financial and economic conditions of the world and the financial and economic conditions of Canada, the more you are convinced that it is neither by absolute free trade nor by extreme protection that you can give to our economic life the wideness which it needs. As I said on another occasion, a judicious, practical and patriotic opportunism must, above all, during this period of hardship, actuate and direct every true Canadian in the most noble enterprises for the economic restoration of this Dominion. Neither protection nor free trade are dogmas, and it is our duty to determine to what extent, under press of circumstances, it is proper to practise commercial freedom.

Every one admits that in order to restore our financial and economic situation we must increase production and produce more cheaply. Well, Sir, is it not a fact that protective or prohibitive duties on raw material and on instruments of production have a direct effect upon the net cost of production of industries and of agriculture? Yet, to increase our production we need raw materials, because, first of all, the manufacturer is a consumer; he cannot produce without tools and raw material, and, very often, he is obliged to import them.

The same must be said of the farmer who, before being a producer, is a consumer, and needs agricultural implements and many other articles which should, if imported, come into this country free of customs taxation. Rapid and easy importation of these articles is absolutely necessary to our economic restoration. Excessive customs duties are drawbacks which contribute to increase the cost of living and to raise the price of imported goods and, as a consequence, the price of goods manufactured or produced in Canada. Some producers may benefit thereby, but masses of consumers will suffer. What are the high protectionists doing? They endeavour, by prohibitive duties, to substitute political prices for economic prices, and to eliminate all products similar to those which they manufacture so as to oblige their fellow-countrymen to buy only from them. By this system they can raise their prices by adding to them the duty and the cost of transportation plus the exchange on foreign products imported. Their profits do not arise from economic conditions; they arise from the action these protectionists have been able to exercise, with the help of the Government, against the consumers, who are the masses of the people.

The present Government very truly constitutes a union with high protectionists to oppress the people by way of excessive customs taxation. Under such a regime Canada is a loser, because high prices lessen consumption of national products at home as well as abroad. It is not at all unlikely that the nominal value of these products is to be greater, prices being higher; but quantities are lower. This, Sir, is an exact description of our economic situation as shown by the Minister of Finance in his Budget Speech; our production has decreased, and the prices of all commodities and necessities of life have more than doubled.

Is it not then proper that, with a view to the amelioration of our present difficulties, Parliament should adopt the amendment proposed by my hon. friend the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding)? Surely an immediate revision of the tariff in the liberal sense suggested by this amendment should be made. This reform is obviously one of the necessary means to ensure the triumph of the policy of increasing production by reducing its net cost. Such a policy will better the present conditions in Canada and enable this country to meet its heavy financial obligations.

The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen), answering the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) quoted at considerable length extracts from reports of commissions appointed by the British Government, in order to prove that in Great Britain there is a movement towards protection. Apart from the fact that no action has been taken upon those reports, may I be permitted, Sir, to point out to the hon. minister that the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference has reached conclusions which, in my judgment, contradict the argument of the hon. minister and are in complete harmony with the amendment before the House. Let me read extracts from this Declaration by the Supreme Council as printed in Hansard of May 3, 1920:

Summary of conclusions.—In view of the above considerations,—

They have been speaking of the inflation of currency, the expansion of credit, etc.

In view of the above considerations, the Supreme Council, after a careful survey of this vitally urgent problem in all its aspects, agree upon the following recommendations with a view to the amelioration of the present economic difficulties of Europe:—

. . . . . .

That the states which have been created or enlarged—

And those states include France, Japan and other countries.

—as the result of the war should at once re-establish full and friendly co-operation, and arrange for the unrestricted interchange of commodities in order that the essential unity of European economic life may not be impaired by the creation of artificial economic barriers.

. . . . . .

The Powers at the Conference recognize the necessity for continued co-operation between the Allies and for removing obstacles to the easy interchange of essential commodities.—

And what are the obstacles, Sir, if not excessive customs duties?

Mr. McMASTER: Hear, hear.

Mr. TRAHAN: I continue to read:

—They will continue to consult together regarding the provision and distribution of necessary raw materials and foodstuffs with a view to the early restoration of normal conditions.

I may say that it is this question of commercial freedom which has been the main cause of the opposition of the Republican Senators to the ratification of the Peace Treaty by the United States. The American Protective Tariff League has entered protest after protest against the principle of commercial freedom which is embodied in the League of Nations. And what are we asking by the amendment, if not to solve the present difficulties by developing our commercial freedom, and so admitting of an easy interchange with other countries of foodstuffs and other commodities and of the instruments of production?

An additional reason for supporting the amendment lies in the fact that Europe owes Canada at least $420,000,000. Europe cannot pay that debt if a prohibitive tariff wall is maintained against its products, and as a result the outflow of goods from Canada will be checked. Yet if we increase our production, we must export our surplus to foreign markets. To produce, to save, and to export are the three chief means of bringing about our economic recuperation.

On the whole, Sir, I submit that the amendment before you, and the resolutions concerning the tariff adopted at the Liberal Convention of August, 1919, constitute a policy of moderate free trade, which I heartily endorse, because it serves well the best interests of all classes of the community and of this great Dominion.

At Six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. JAMES McISAAC (Kings, P.E.I.): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it goes without saying that a Budget Speech, unfolding as it does the financial condition of the country and disclosing to us our position as regards our fiscal policy, from year to year, is one of the most, if not the most, important utterances made in Parliament. If this be true, generally speaking, it was particularly true during the period of the war, and during the years following the war. Perhaps at no time during the period of the war, or before or since the war, has a Budget Speech been anticipated with so much interest and, possibly, in some quarters, even with some anxiety, as at this session. A combination of circumstances, which need not be enumerated in detail, flung around the Budget Speech of this session these peculiar conditions. Our great debt, incurred principally in consequence of the war, our large expenditures and the immense amount of money required to be raised to meet them, necessarily made the Budget Speech of this session of paramount importance. Under all the circumstances, I think the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) deserves congratulation and commendation in the highest degree for having evolved out of all these conditions a Budget so comprehensive, sane and reasonable as the one he has brought down to the House. It is true that the Budget will not please everybody, and I am sure the minister had no idea when he presented it that it would please all the members of this House or all the people of this country. Also, in the working out of some of the schedules having to do with different methods of taxation, some little confusion or dissatisfaction may arise here and there, and it is altogether possible that when these matters come to be considered and discussed in committee, the Minister of Finance, in his wisdom and judgment, after having weighed all the representations that may be brought to his notice in regard to them may be disposed to make some amendments here and there in the resolutions. That, however, is a matter of detail which does not come within the scope of the discussion on the Budget proper.

As the Minister of Finance, in the course of his presentation of our financial position, unfolded the various elements that enter into our fiscal system and the different activities and operations of a national character that go to make up our great system of finance and supply us with the funds to meet the necessary expenditures of the country, I, for one, was deeply interested in the situation he disclosed. In the first place the Minister of Finance gave us figures of the trade of the country by decades covering a considerable period of years, and I must say that I was absolutely amazed at the growth of our trade. From 1909 the total trade of the country increased from about half a billion dollars in that year to over two billion dollars in 1919. That struck me as marvellous advancement. In the twelve months from 1919 to 1920 our trade increased over the previous year by over $165,000,000, the unrevised figures for 1920 being $2,351,174,886. That was a marvellously good showing, I thought. We should keep those figures in mind as a basis in considering the amounts of proposed expenditure which are placed before us for the coming year.

The Minister of Finance also gave figures as to the products of the soil. The production of wheat, for instance, steadily increased from one ten year period to another. From 1910 to 1919 the increase was over 60,000,000 bushels. The last named date shows the total production was $193,000,000. Other agricultural productions, field crops and farm products also increased from 1917 to 1919 to the value of over $350,000,000, and in the last named year the total value of these productions was $1,975,841,000. These figures are gratifying in the very highest degree. They show that our country, with its various sources of production, is in a most healthy condition, and they give us confidence that if our people show energy and perseverance, and get rid of some of their extravagance, and make sacrifices in some degree proportionate to those they made when the tocsin of war sounded and they flew to arms to save the Empire, we shall be easily able to meet all our obligations.

Our manufacturing industries also show a healthy advance. The value of manufactured products in 1915 was shown to be $1,407,137,140 and in 1917 the value had increased to over $3,000,000,000, an increase of about $1,600,000,000. Bank deposits by the public in Canada increased from 1918 to 1919 by about $172,000,000, the last year showing a total of $1,841,478,895. Be it remembered that in addition to this money deposited in the banks by the people of Canada in these two years, the people of this country had deposited with the Government of Canada by the purchase of Victory bonds about $1,500,000,000. That shows how great are the resources of Canada, and what a firm and stable basis we have for greater progress and expansion, so that we may go on from year to year and from decade to decade advancing to the place among the galaxy of nations which Canada is destined to reach.

A very important part of the Budget Speech and of the Finance Minister's presentation of the financial condition of the country was the national debt. It is of the greatest importance that we should take into serious consideration the very great debt with which the people of this country are confronted. On the other hand, when we consider the almost boundless natural resources of our nation, and what has been done in the last forty years to develop those resources; when we take into account the financial position we are in to-day even facing this great load of debt; when we consider the enterprise and energy of our people, there is no room for doubt that we shall be able to meet all legitimate obligations, no matter how great they may be, that Canada may assume in the public interest. The debt is great, of course, but the larger part of it was incurred in consequence of the war, and no true patriot who loves his country will say that, when the need arose and we were called upon to put all our energies into the titanic struggle to bring it to a successful issue, we were not justified in incurring these obligations. In view of all the circumstances I think we have made a marvellous showing.

Our gross debt is $3,014,483,774.12. In this connection I wish to say that the Minister of Finance did a very frank and courageous thing in not considering as active and realizable some of those items which go to make up the difference of $1,078,537,461.27 between the gross debt and the net debt. To all intents and purposes these investments were assets, and under ordinary circumstances there would be a great temptation to a Finance Minister to show them as active assets. The minister did not desire to retain on the books of the Finance Department anything that was not essentially an asset. These assets to which I have referred were quiescent, and the minister wisely and courageously set them aside, placing them in suspense account. There they remain, and at some future time they may be resurrected and rejuvenated; and when that is brought about our financial condition will be improved, for any interest that may arise from them will be in the nature of treasure trove. I think that the Minister of Finance took an exceedingly wise position, and what he has done has been to ensure that no undergrowth or brushwood, so to speak, might clog our financial status. For these reasons the minister deserves the highest commendation which this House can tender him. The net debt is placed at $2,273,305,436, and starting from this point we must see what our actual position is. The minister has given us a statement of the revenue and expenditures for the year ending March 31, 1920, and we learn that during that year the revenue from ordinary sources was the greatest in our history, amounting to some $388,000,000. If we subtract from that sum the ordinary expenditures we find a surplus. Some people contend that an amount is not a surplus unless all revenues are greater than all expenditures in the statement of accounts, but in the language of our fiscal arrangements, and even by reference to the dictionary, it will be discovered that anything is a surplus that remains after ordinary expenditure has been provided for. Having paid $349,000,000 in ordinary expenditures, we therefore have a surplus of $39,000,000 to be applied to capital expenditure. Of course, there is always capital expenditure, investments, outlays, etc., and these amounted last year to $187,856,991, bringing the total expenditure, ordinary and capital, for the past year to over $536,000,000. That includes the total outlay of Canada for the year apart from what was spent for war purposes, which can by no possibility be regarded as ordinary expenditure. We trust that in a few years we shall have finished paying off this peculiar liability, which was incurred under such regrettable and memorable circumstances.

That disposes of the consideration of our finances up to the 31st of March, 1920. The next phase of the Budget deals with the revenues and expenditures for the year on which we have entered ending 31st March, 1921. At this stage, of course, as is the case with every Budget, no definite statements can be made as to what the revenues or expenditures of the year may be; we can only estimate them and we must be guided in our Estimates by the figures which we know in connection with past years and by the activities of our different departments and the various enterprises operating in the country. Consequently, the expenditure for this period can only be estimated. Let us now consider the expenditure that the Minister of Finance estimates for the year upon which we have entered. The total expenditure for the current year is estimated as follows:

Main Estimates and Supplementaries about	$574,000,000
Railways	25,000,000
Floating obligations	74,058,000
Total	$673,000,000

Against these estimated expenditures what amount of money have we, and where is it to come from? The sources of revenue are as follows:

Estimated revenue from ordinary sources	$381,000,000
Cash on hand and outstanding accounts	190,000,000
Total	$571,000,000

This will leave an adverse balance of somewhere in the vicinity of $100,000,000, which amount has to be provided for by means outside of the ordinary. At this point the Minister of Finance did another courageous thing, something for which he certainly deserved to be praised. He lopped off the extra war tax of 7½ per cent and at one stroke removed a tax which brought us $30,000,000 yearly. It was considered that as this tax had only been imposed for war purposes, the time had perhaps come when it might be removed in order that the tariff might not be considered unduly high. Just consider the sacrifice we are making by the lopping off of this $30,000,000 of revenue. Up to this stage the Minister of Finance has been removing sources of taxation and making the task of obtaining revenue a more difficult task for himself. Now, we come to the consideration of the question of how the revenue is to be raised to meet the balance between the expenditure and the ordinary, estimated revenue.

At this point the minister says: "We shall have no more loans." I wish to dwell for a moment on the question of loans.

Canada, in so far as her domestic loans are concerned, stands in an enviable position. When we were in the midst of the war, when we were confronted with extraordinary expenditures, when we were not able to obtain the necessary money by loans outside of Canada, the then Minister of Finance turned to our own people. Is not the record of Canada in so far as her Victory loans are concerned a most admirable and highly creditable one? The spontaneity, enthusiasm and generosity with which the people poured their funds into the coffers of the Government for the purpose of carrying on the public business is one of the elements that constitute Canada's greatness at the present day and one that has gone far to impress the other nations of the world with the fact that she is great in war, great in peace, and great in finance.

The Minister of Finance presents to us, in order to make up the balance between the ordinary estimated revenue and the expenditure, several different phases of taxation. I am sure it will be generally accepted that taxation is not an agreeable subject under any consideration. The people of this or any other country do not look forward with pleasure to tax bills piling in upon them one after another and in one form and another. But it is necessary for us, as it is necessary for every country, that there shall be a tax of one kind or another in order that the public business may be conducted in a proper and dignified way and in accordance with the requirements of the country. Apart from the revenues coming in from customs and excise, the Minister of Finance in the various forms of direct taxation that he intends to adopt, has kept well in view, in so far as that could reasonably be accomplished, the placing of the greatest burden on the shoulders of those best able to bear it. His intention was to relieve, as far as might be, those unable to pay very much in the way of taxation. He proposes, as a necessary means of raising revenue, an excise tax, a luxury tax, a business profits tax and an increase in the income tax. We have here surely a sufficient variety of taxation to meet all tastes, although it is quite possible that all will not be pleased; probably quite a number will not be pleased. There have been a number of people who have expressed dissatisfaction with the form of indirect taxation. They are paying taxes unknown to themselves, as it were, by means of customs duties and excise. They are not satisfied—or, at least some expressed dissatisfaction, and they have said that they would like to pay directly. They will have their opportunity; we have here both, we have an admixture of direct and indirect taxation. It is quite possible that there are some people who will not be satisfied with either. However, that remains to be seen. The main thing is that these taxes shall be so adjusted and so arranged that they will, in so far as that can be done, bear least heavily on those who are least able to pay them, while those who have the wealth and are able to pay shall be asked to pay and pay well. Direct taxation is not altogether new to us; for two or three years, at least, we have had quite a considerable amount and this year it is invoked to an even greater extent. But generally speaking for years past we have had indirect taxation, and therefore people are not so much accustomed to paying a direct tax. This year both kinds are brought into operation and when the tariff has been scientifically revised—after a thorough investigation into all the different phases of the question—we may look forward next year to witnessing the introduction of a tariff as nearly perfect as can be made and may as a result, confidently expect a great stimulus in our industrial and commercial life.

Figures are rather a dry subject and I am inclined to apologize for having dwelt so long on these phases of the question, but in considering a Budget Speech one cannot avoid quoting figures and in very great numbers. Having briefly and succinctly reviewed the administration of public affairs up to this point, having taken cognizance of our different resources and our trade and manufacturing and other activities, having dealt with the question of taxation and the position in which we now find ourselves in the present year, I shall refer briefly to some aspects of the fiscal question as presented by certain hon. gentlemen opposite. In particular, I wish to refer to the attitude taken by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). But before doing so let me say this: Like a great many of the members of this House I have a recollection of the hon. member, in common with a number of political associates, inveighing year after year against protection in any form whatever. Time after time they invoked the maledictions of high Heaven on the protective system. They declared that it was accursed of God and man and that at the very first opportunity it should be pulled up root and branch and totally destroyed—that such an accursed thing as protection should not be allowed to exist in this country. These declarations were not made when the Liberals were in office; they were made when they were in opposition, and were made with special emphasis when elections were close at hand. We now have it from the hon. gentleman himself that in effect those declarations were only intended to win elections and not to be given effect to. In the face of repeated declarations by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, who was Minister of Finance during the fifteen years the Liberals were in office, it was most remarkable the other night to hear that hon. gentleman express his ideas respecting free trade and protection. Let me quote from his speech delivered on May 18 as reported at page 2581 of unrevised Hansard:

> While it is true that at all times for many years all our tariff discussions have been more or less tinged with the question of free trade,—

Only "tinged," mind you. I am sure there are members of this House who were not then supporters of the Conservative party but supported the Liberals in the old days when, like the Liberals of the present, they were in opposition, who know how much "tinge" there was about my hon. friend's views. It was a good deal more than "tinge" I am sure. The hon. member goes on to say:

> —there has of late been a revival of what I may call the free trade movement, and the free trade question is now thrust to the front of our tariff discussions in a larger way than it has been in recent years. That, I take it for granted, is because our farmer friends attach so much importance to the matter and have pushed it into their platform.

Ah, my hon. friend was then coquetting with the party sitting angularly opposite to me to-night—the Farmers' party. I see only one of them present this evening, and he is the chief Levite himself.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): There is more than one of the Farmers' party present.

Mr. McISAAC: I accept my hon. friend's correction. I did not notice him because he is not sitting in his usual seat. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's went on to say:

> With all due respect to them, I take the view that free trade is not a practical question in our tariff discussions of to-day.

This is very strange talk from one who might without exaggeration have been described as the high priest or chief apostle of free trade when he was in opposition prior to 1896—in fact, since then almost down to the present time. The hon. member continuing, said:

There are some things that we should do well to remember. In the first place, it may be well simply to remember that there never has been in the Dominion of Canada such a thing as free trade.

Now, we have the truth. The hon. member here makes open confession that during all those years in which he and his associates preached free trade on every platform throughout the country they were simply deceiving the people. There is a word that has crept into our language lately that is applicable to the hon. gentleman's statements. I hesitate to use the expression because it is almost worked to death. The word in question is "camouflage," and I think the hon. member has given us a pretty good example of it. Proceeding, the hon. member said:

There is not anything of the kind now, and with all due respect to those who may be described as extreme free traders, I think it is no wild guess to assert that there will be no absolute free trade in Canada within the lifetime of any man who sits in this House to-day. It is not practicable, and that is not to say that free trade principles are not sound.

Free trade principles do not seem sound or practicable to the hon. member to-day? It is marvellous that he has become such a protectionist. He now advocates protection "whenever occasion requires it." He is quite prepared to grant protection in the form of bounties; to grant protection in the form of anti-dumping regulations; to give protection in half a dozen other ways—he is a thorough-going protectionist so to speak. Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that after this candid confession of the hon. member, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), who for over thirty years had heard my hon. friend denouncing protection, rubbed his eyes and expressed the greatest surprise.

He wondered whether or not the millennium had arrived. He felt that indeed he might well say, Nunc dimittis: Now dismiss thy servant in peace; because he had seen the conversion of my esteemed friend on the other side. But, Sir, while we may express surprise at this apparent conversion, when we sift the evidence there is nothing to be surprised at; he had always held that view.

To emphasize this point I cannot do better than quote from the speech of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Mowat), at one time a prominent member of the Liberal party whose leaders when in opposition expressed themselves so strongly in favour of free trade principles. That hon. gentleman does not now sit on the Opposition side of the House, for being an honourable man he felt that he could no longer belong to a party whose professions of free trade in opposition were not translated into practice when in office. But he refrained from telling tales out of school until he heard the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) express himself in the terms I have just quoted, when he spoke thus:

The political aspect of this question is interesting because it is so dramatic. The other night the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) stated his political creed on this matter, and I must say that to me it was surprising. For many years I was accustomed to follow that hon. gentleman, and to agree that what he did in the public interest was right; and during that time any changes in the tariff from the old national policy of our Conservative opponents did not seem to us to be very shocking. I was rather surprised at the confession that was made by my hon. friend. Perhaps because I was brought up in such a strict political school I thought it was very bad politics to admit anything which might be taken advantage of by one's opponents; but the confession having been made that the Liberal party of those days was really not a free trade party but a protectionist party, frees me from the secrecy that I would otherwise maintain, and permits me to say that I concur with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) who made this confession that the Liberals of those days did not, among themselves anyway, claim that they had materially reduced the protective policy of the country.

That is the confession of a gentleman who was within the inner circles of the Liberal party—a confession that they were a free trade party only for the purpose of deceiving the people in order to get into power.

What is the fiscal policy under which we are operating now, and how does it differ from the National Policy of 1879? Did the Liberals when they came into power, notwithstanding their free trade professions and their convention resolution in 1893, take any steps to reduce the tariff when they brought down their Budget in 1897? It has been shown by those who were in the inner circles of the Liberal party—and the statement has not been denied—that .74 per cent was the greatest reduction made on the National Policy tariff brought down by Sir John Macdonald, and that for the last forty years we have retained that identical fiscal policy with little change except a slight reduction here and a slight advance there. Why, then, should our esteemed friend opposite make a loud profession of becoming somewhat of a protectionist? But all his colleagues are not moderate protectionists. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) was in his seat a moment ago—

An hon. MEMBER: I can get him.

Mr. McISAAC: The genial member for Brome has a resounding voice, which is something to be thankful for—I wish I had such vocal equipment, then I would talk! But that hon. gentleman does not agree with the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who after having expressed himself as a protectionist moved an amendment which was extremely vague, and which I think was aptly described by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark), who, although he said he would vote for it, inveighed against it, in these words. I will quote his words:

> I should have hoped it would have contained more milk and less water under those circumstances, and would have been less of a shilly-shally temporizing and opportunist piece of print.

I think that describes the amendment in its true colours.

I would like to refer very briefly to the views expressed by my esteemed friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster). He proclaimed himself a Simon pure free trader, and in order to emphasize the difference between himself and the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), speaking probably in a figurative sense, said that he did not believe in purgatory.

An hon. MEMBER: What?

Mr. McISAAC: His words will be found in Hansard, "I do not believe in purgatory." Whether we consider that in a theological or in a fiscal sense, there is always this to be said to the hon. gentleman: You might go farther and fare worse.

Mr. DUFF: In which direction?

Mr. McISAAC: Now, Mr. Speaker, all will remember the declarations that were made here a year ago by the hon. gentleman when he moved an amendment to the Budget. Of course, this year he was deprived of that honour, another hon. gentleman having been installed as Chief Financial Critic for the Opposition. But all will remember when the hon. member, in a certain upper chamber, was discharging the duties of what I am disposed to describe as controller of the wardrobe when he was clothing a certain western settler, handing out to him one garment after another. I was struck at that time with the peculiar manner in which he proceeded to clothe that man; he got his boots on before his nether garments and the man had to go out in order to attend his stock, clothed in a way that would shock one's modesty, without his trousers on. That was a deplorable condition of things. But that is on a par with the argument that the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), brings to bear on this question when he discusses it in the House. I shall not say anything more in that regard; but if the hon. member had been in his seat, I would be disposed to have a little badinage with him.

I do not observe in his seat for the moment my esteemed friend the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie). The presentation of the financial position of the country is a question which I am sure most hon. members with few exceptions, perhaps with the sole exception of himself, indeed all men of common sense generally must necessarily regard as a most important, difficult and intricate question. But when my hon. friend was speaking on the Budget, he brushed it aside with a wave of the hand, saying: This is only a school-boy performance; any school boy could get up such figures as the Minister of Finance has presented to us today; it is not a difficult operation at all. Talking about schoolboys, I heard my hon. friend's speech and I read it afterwards and I am fully convinced that his was the speech of a schoolboy. He began to manipulate figures; he jumbled up the ordinary and the capital expenditures for the past year; then he took the ordinary revenue and subtracted something from it, added something else to it and, do you know, Sir, he produced a result showing a deficit for the year of $498,000,000. The Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) had shown plainly, as I have already stated, that on the year's transaction there was a surplus of $39,000,000, but of course a schoolboy can make figures show anything. Last session, I heard the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) describe certain figures presented to this House by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria) as arithmetical monstrosities and I think when he was discussing the Budget, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McKenzie), indulged in similar arithmetical monstrosities, as I have shown. I heard the hon. member say in this House that he had at one time been a school teacher, and he added that he was a good school teacher. I do not believe there is in Canada another person than himself who will say that he was a good school teacher. What would be the effect of the teaching of an hon. gentleman who will so juggle with figures in this House that they must be described as arithmetical monstrosities, on the youth of the country when the young mind is plastic and susceptible of impressions? What would be the effect of such wrong and misleading impressions made on them? All the rest of their lives they would be handicapped, and they would never be able to get over those wrong impressions. It also appears that the hon. member has been a member of the bar, for he has told us that he has practised at the bar and it is said that he has occupied a judicial position. That makes the matter much worse. What would be the fate of some unfortunate litigant who had lost his case before such a judge as this who is capable of making such monstrous arithmetical calculations, and this judge had to tax his costs? Why, he would be just as likely to say that the costs were $4, or $40, or $400; as long as there was a four in the total, he would be just as likely to put down one set of figures as another.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McISAAC: I am glad that my esteemed and hon. friends opposite are enjoying this so well.

After these digressions, let us return to a consideration of the tariff. The Minister of Finance has told us—and we feel sure he will fulfil his promise—that there will be a thorough and scientific investigation of the tariff and that it will be revised in all its phases and establishments on a firm basis when all the inconsistencies, if any are revealed, and rubbish and underbrush are swept away, and we feel sure that a proper and scientific revision will be presented to us if we are spared to be here at the next Parliament.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: We have heard that before.

Mr. McISAAC: My hon. friend has heard before a number of things that he did not profit by; he has heard before a number of things that he has forgotten; he has heard before a number of things that he should have forgotten and that he would be much better off if he had forgotten.

Some hon. members have attempted to make a point out of the fact that last year we were promised an investigation into the tariff and that nothing has been done. A serious promise was made last year and it was the intention to carry it out, but hon. members opposite surely must be well aware, as all hon. members on this side are, that last year, for one reason or another, no opportunity was afforded of carrying out that investigation. Therefore, the only thing is to have it effected this year, and we feel satisfied that this will be done. That is what we shall have; I quote the words of the Finance Minister as to what is intended to be effected by the new tariff:

> —(a) to assist in providing adequate revenues, (b) to stabilize legitimate industries and to encourage the establishment of new industries essential to the proper economic development of the nation—to the end that a proper and ever increasing field of useful and remunerative employment be available for the nation's workers, (c) to develop to the fullest extent our natural resources, (d) to specially promote and increase trade with the Mother Country, the sister dominions and colonies and Crown dependencies, (e) to prevent the abuse of the tariff for the exploitation of the consumer and, (f) to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people in the existing world struggle for commercial and industrial supremacy.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McISAAC: I am glad that this programme meets with the approval of hon. gentlemen opposite as well as of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. It is really encouraging for a comparatively new member like myself to receive commendation from both sides of the House. I am pleased beyond power of expression. Now what will be the essential features of this revised tariff? It will be founded on the bedrock of the national policy introduced by Sir John A. Macdonald, under which this country during the last forty years has made wonderful progress, stabilized its institutions, progressed marvellously in trade and developed her natural resources. It has contributed in bringing Canada to the proud position she occupies in the galaxy of nations of the Britannic Commonwealth. Had we a spark of patriotism—and I use that word only in its best sense. I interpret patriotism to mean a willingness to exert all our energies towards the advancement of our country, and to be prepared in peace as in war to make reasonable sacrifices in order that our country may prosper and grow great. If we will only put our shoulder to the wheel in earnest and manfully persevere, I am confident that Canada will at no distant day reach a still higher plane among the nations of the world.

Mr. EDMOND SAVARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to contribute anything new to the debate which has occupied the House for this last ten days, but realizing that I have the privilege of representing one of the most prosperous counties and one which from every standpoint offers the most brilliant prospects for the future, I think that I may be allowed to exercise the right that belongs to me in common with every member of this House, to state my views concerning the government still known as Union Government, when it strikes all except those who are blind or interested, that there never was a government more divided and at variance than the one that is carrying on the business of the country at the present moment.

Union may no doubt have existed at the outset, when it was necessary that every sacrifice should be made in behalf of the Empire, but, Mr. Speaker, it is no more so since the war is over. If we consider the changes effected in the different departments, the resignation of a certain number of ministers, the protracted absence of the leader of the Government, who was reported to be very sick but whom we were glad to see again apparently in good health, and if we consider also that the heads of certain departments hold no seat in this House even, how can we come to another conclusion than that which I have just expressed?

Whatever may be said or done, we all know what circumstances the Union Government was born. After a few years of a nefarious administration, nay, the most nefarious in our history, with the exception of the present one, numerous scandals were brought to light, popular indignation was at its height and the day of defeat was certain, when war was declared in Europe and in that great turmoil, the mistakes of the Government were unfortunately forgotten and nobody thought of anything but the war.

The Government was not the wiser for all that; the whirligig of scandals continued on a larger scale, peculation was supreme and more especially at that time did vampires of all size appear in such great numbers. We recollect the contracts granted to the friends of the administration; we particularly recollect the boots with paper soles, the perforated shovels (an invention of a well advised lady stenographer); we recollect the purchase of sick or lame horses, to quote a few instances. It was a real orgy which the Government concluded by the Canadian Northern scandal when the country paid millions for a bankrupt railroad of which it was the only creditor.

But there is a limit to everything, and the time had arrived when an appeal to the people was necessary. Parliament had lasted too long already and, in my humble opinion, the Liberal party never should have assented to its being prolonged. Therefore, it was necessary that elections should take place.

I say again, Mr. Speaker, that the people was exasperated, and realizing its unpopularity, the Government could, by no means, ask for a renewal of its mandate with the least chance of success. At that time, in spite of the most solemn promises made from his seat in the House, before all the representatives of the people, the Prime Minister submitted the question of conscription which divided the Liberal party, stirred up the English provinces against the province of Quebec, succeeded, after a most laborious gestation, in giving birth to the Union cabinet, and thanks to the War Time Election Act, which will remain as a monument of despotism and knavery, he retained power.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the House dealing with the details of the policy which this famous Union Government has followed ever since it was born, I shall only summarize the result of that policy.

In fact, this Government, composed of Conservatives and of Liberals, as many imperialists whose fixed desire was to sacrifice everything to the empire were it the last man or the last dollar—what aberration! Mr. Speaker—has superabundantly proven that the interest of the country was the only thing for which it had no regard.

Sixty-thousand of our young men practically the pick of Canada's boys—are now sleeping their last sleep in a foreign land, and the amount of the country's debt is ten times higher than it was at the beginning of the war.

That is what will characterize the reign of this Government, in the opinion of the future generations, and in our own, as well.

Now, like all those who have preceded me, I have to congratulate the honourable Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) upon the hard work he has accomplished by stating in black and white what is our position from an economic standpoint; but, surely, I cannot approve all the means he has resorted to in order to fill up the abyss dug out by the Government's bad administration. As was stated by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) in his masterly speech on the budget, the hon. Minister of Finance is not responsible for the colossal or pyramidal debt of the country, and I think that when the hon. member said he was not, he certainly voiced the public opinion. However, as the hon. minister has shown remarkable talent, exceptional judgment, I think he should have taken into consideration the idea expressed some time ago by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and should have advised his colleagues to demobilize at once, that the people might choose for itself men in whom it had confidence in order to face the most critical situation which can be imagined.

But, no doubt, he never thought of it and, being much of an optimist, he expected or rather he tried to prove that on account of the measures he advocates he might have balanced economic conditions in this country.

However, for the last ten days since the hon. Minister of Finance delivered his grand speech, from every quarter in Canada are coming statements made by knowing individuals. Conservatives as well as Liberals, friends or opponents of the Government, to the effect that the taxes levied are such as to increase still more the cost of living. It could not be otherwise, for when taxes are levied upon commodities which should be deemed necessaries of life, the cost of living must necessarily increase; that is as clear as two and two make four.

The inhabitants of this country have been wondering for quite a while how it is that the Government do not extend a helping hand to the people, and the latter have now the small comfort of knowing that the Government have created a board for that purpose. But, what have been the results, Mr. Speaker? When we noticed anxiously that the cost of living is ever increasing, are we not rather inclined to believe that this board was named in order to shield profiteers? For can we reasonably think that had the board so willed or been granted adequate powers by the administration, it could not have prevented the accumulation of all kinds of commodities which unscrupulous monopolists permitted to decay instead of lowering the prices?

As an hon. friend of mine observed a few days ago, is it possible to justify the prevailing high price of potatoes which were bought last fall for 90 cents a bag, when we are aware that the potato crop was plentiful? No, Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot be excused for neglecting to take measures so as to prevent the making of outrageous profits in that way. We know warehouses are filled up with foodstuffs bought at moderate prices and which are only marketed at virtually prohibitive prices.

In France, a bank director who traded in sugar and reaped fabulous profits was fined $12,000 and his profits amounting to $112,800 were confiscated. And I could give numerous similar instances in other countries.

Do not think, Mr. Speaker, that had the Government done their duty and been guided by other nations in siding with the consumers against those undlefactors of the worst kind, monopolists and profiteers who have accumulated fabulous riches, they would have prevented such an alarming increase in the cost of living? What was the use of that investigation held last year by Parliament, if the Government have not intended to deal vigorously with the culprits or to remedy the ills detected in the course of the investigation? For companies have been shown to have realized incredible profits to the tune of a hundred per cent. What have the Government done, Sir, following those disclosures? They created that notorious board of commerce about whose doings we are utterly in the dark. All we know about it is that its chairman resigned. And the cost of living is ever increasing.

Now, what shall I say of certain manufacturing concerns. I shall not refer to them all, because we have the privilege, so it appears, of having among us some manufactures who are satisfied with legitimate profits, and of course we are bound by the rules of this House to accept their statements. We know, on the other hand, that a great many corporations have seen their profits increase at an exorbitant, excessive rate since the beginning of the war. And yet we have to pay more than ever for the products of those concerns.

Now, in my humble opinion, the enormous indebtedness of this country has been the outcome of the follies of the Government who were nothing else than a factory for the turning out of Orders in Council and boards of all kinds, so as to force themselves of their responsibilities. Orders in Council and boards which were only used to cater to political friends. As I said a few minutes ago, the main causes of that indebtedness are the outrageous contracts awarded to a set of millionaires, the unnecessary conscription, the search for farmers' sons who were surrounded like wild beasts, the acquisition of numerous railways, the money loans to foreign nations. Sir, those are the causes which contributed to increase our indebtedness to an unreasonable extent and which placed the country in the critical situation described by the hon. Minister of Finance the other day.

Now I understand that we must find ways and means of meeting our liabilities, but the people do not trust this Government to find these means and to apply them. For my part, despite the taxes devised by the Finance Minister, I have the firm conviction that the Government is so inclined to spend money loosely that it will never succeed in balancing the finances of this country.

Last year the Ministry promised to appoint a Board for the revision of the tariff and this promise was instrumental in appeasing a great many, if not all, of the Government's friends. However, the Government, as usual, did not keep its word and, in this connection, we saw to what extremes the party spirit can carry a man when we heard an hon. member state, in this House the other day that he was glad the work had not been started. Still, such is not the opinion of all the hon. members on the other isde of the House. Already a few bolters have left the treasury benches and the Government should realize that there is a limit to everything, although the term "limit" seems unknown to these hon. gentlemen.

For the reasons which I have stated and for many others, I sincerely approve what my hon. friends have shown, that since the end of the war the majority of the people of this country have lost all faith in the Government; hence this latter should go before the people. We have heard it said that the Liberal Party was not serious in its demand for an election and that if such were held the present ministry would be returned to power. It requires unbelievable boldness, Mr. Speaker, to make such a statement before this House. It is as clear as day that if the Government really thought an election at this time would result in a victory for the Ministry it would have been first to call for an election or at least would have turned the tables on the Opposition by accepting the challenge; no sensible man, it seems to me, can possibly think otherwise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say a few words concerning certain instances of unfair treatment meted out, during the last few years, to the constituency which I have the honour of representing. The Government has thrown millions out of the doors and the windows—if I may use that expression—of its numerous buildings in Ottawa; but on the plea of economy the ministers have refused to grant the necessary help to the development of colonization and agriculture, still these last are our mightiest weapons to bring about the re-establishment on a normal base of financial and economic conditions in this country. Under pretense of economy the Government has refused to increase transportation facilities, to construct post offices, telegraph lines, wharves, dykes; has refused to enlarge the wharf at Chicoutimi, of which this district has the most urgent need on account of the remarkable progress of its people during the last few years. On the plea of economy subsidies that for years have been granted and recognized as absolutely indispensable to the well-being, and even to the safety of a certain class of the community, have been withdrawn.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, let me tell the country what has happened to the people living on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, between Tadoussac and Labrador. I took occasion last year to protest against the crying injustice committed towards the good people of this locality. I want every detail of this affair recorded in Hansard. Let me say first of all that up to within fifteen years ago this part of my riding was entirely shut off from the rest of the world once the season of navigation was closed. My predecessor, who had all the interest in the world to champion the cause of these poor people, interceded with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and the Government finally voted a subsidy for a steamer service between Tadoussac and St. Catherine; and since the district was no longer isolated during the long winter months its population made rapid gains, and its industry likewise. Then, in 1917, the present Government, supposedly for the sake of economy, withdrew this subsidy; you can imagine the resultant hardship among these poor people, bereft during the long winter months of all communication with the outer world. It is quite natural to believe that no pains were spared to obtain justice from the Government in this report.

Petitions have been addressed to me to be transmitted to whomsoever it might concern and I beg leave of the House to insert into Hansard a portion of the correspondence exchanged upon that subject. I shall first read a letter which I addressed to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce together with the aforesaid petitions:

CHICOUTIMI, October 7, 1918.

To the Right Hon. Sir G. E. FOSTER,
Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

Honourable Sir,—

I beg leave to forward you four petitions from the county of Saguenay, whose object is to ask for the subsidies required for the mail contract between St. Catherine and Tadoussac. I do not think I need insist in order to show the importance of these requests.

As you may be aware, Saguenay county is formed of six large parishes besides the northern shore, from Bersimis to Natashquan. At the present moment, this population is deprived of communications, as I have informed you by a telegram dated Saturday last, the 5th instant, the Canada Steamship Company having discontinued its service.

I connot believe, hon. sir, that you would refuse helping this population and I venture to expect that I shall receive a reply to the present as soon as possible.

I have the honour to be
Yours humbly,
EDM. SAVARD, M.P.

Now here is one of the petitions which were addressed to the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. I shall not read the four of them, all of them having been written in about the same style:

TADOUSSAC, September 3, 1918.

To the Right Hon. Sir GEO. FOSTER,
P.C., K.C., B.A., LL.D., D.C.L., Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

The undersigned do hereby humbly state:

That for several years past subsidies were granted by your department for the carrying of mail along Saguenay river, between St. Catherine and Tadoussac during the winter season (November 1 to May 1), with the further object of assisting the transportation and the revictualling of the northern shore.

That it is rumoured that that subsidy has been cut off for the year 1918-19.

That such a measure is liable to be greatly detrimental to the population of the North shore, so isolated during the winter months.

That the subsidy of the last year is no longer adequate to maintain this crossing, on account of the increased cost of materials, fuel and labour.

The petitioners do humbly pray the hon. minister to grant the required subsidy for maintaining that crossing, i.e. $5,000.

Moreover, weather permitting after the closing of navigation in the fall and before its reopening in the spring, the undersigned beg the hon. minister to grant an adequate supply to permit crossing the St. Lawrence from Rivière du Loup to Tadoussac, i.e. $100 per trip, once a week.

And the petitioners will keep on praying you.

Municipality of the village of Tadoussac.

J. BERGERON, priest.

The petitions which were addressed to the hon. minister bore the signature of the parish priest, of the mayor and of all the citizens of these municipalities.

A little later, I sent a message to the same department to the effect that it was urgent to come to the assistance of the people of Saguenay and I must admit that the department considered my request, as can be seen by the telegrams which I shall read presently. But, before doing so, I wish to read the following letter:

[Mr. Savard.]

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE,
OTTAWA, October 7th, 1918.

Dear Sir:—The minister has received a telegram from Dr. Savard, M.P., stating that the population of Saguenay are absolutely without communication. They cannot transport their products, animals, etc., and conditions there are excessively alarming.

I should think that if the trade warranted it that probably you could make some calls, unless it be up the Saguenay river. I am not yet fully advised by Dr. Savard as to the ports of call. He telegraphs from Chicoutimi East. I have wired him, however, as to what ports he desires communication, though probably you might look into the matter in the meantime.

Yours truly,
F. C. T. O'HARA,
Deputy Minister.

The Gulf of St. Lawrence Shipping & Trading Co., 147 Mountain Hill, Quebec, Que.

A similar letter was addressed to Mr. Gibson, president of that company.

A few days later, I came to Ottawa and I met the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce with whom I discussed the necessity of granting the required subsidy. Now, here is the telegram which I received from Mr. D'Auteuil, who was then the Conservative member in the Quebec Legislature:

Dr. E. SAVARD, M.P.,
Russell Hotel, Ottawa.

I admit services of a ferry-boat between Tadoussac and St. Catherine Bay in winter of prime necessity for Saguenay population ten thousand souls contributing to common wealth be developing forests, fisheries and other national industries. That population spend winter in dangerous isolation. Government should insure security. I would absolutely approve the granting of a Dominion subsidy for such a purpose.

P. D'AUTEUIL.

Realizing how urgent it was for that population to obtain the necessary relief, I employed every possible means.

I sought and obtained the support of the very lamented Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who handed me the following letter to be transmitted to Mr. O'Hara, Deputy Minister of Commerce:

335 LAURIER AVENUE EAST,
OTTAWA, Nov. 14th, 1918.

My Dear O'Hara: Dr. Savard, M.P. for Chicoutimi and Saguenay, informs me that he is here to obtain the continuation of a subsidy for a ferry crossing of the Saguenay river between St. Catherine's Bay and Tadoussac.

This subsidy was granted by the late Government some twelve years ago, and perhaps more. I understand that it is now proposed to drop it. This certainly would be most unfortunate. I am well acquainted with the locality, and the reason which I pressed upon Sir Richard, who was then Minister of Trade and Commerce, was that in winter the people on both sides of the Saguenay are absolutely shut off from civilization. This is particularly hard upon the people of Tadoussac, which is a place of some considerable importance. In winter they are without any kind of steam communication, either by rail or vessel, except by this ferry.

I do not know who is your minister in the absence of Sir George Foster. I would ask you to place these facts before him.

Yours sincerely,

WILFRID LAURIER.

F. C. T. O'Hara, Esq.

The hon. Minister of Commerce answered that he had dropped that subsidy as a matter of economy in the first place, and besides because it was for a ferry service which should be subsidized by the Quebec Government; and, he told me the Quebec Government whose financial position was so extraordinarily good, should help this population to obtain what they need. He advised me to see the Prime Minister of the province of Quebec on the subject, and to report later. I met Sir Lomer Gouin. He did not share the opinion of the right hon. Minister of Commerce to the effect that this ferry service should be subsidized by his Government. Sir Lomer Gouin added that he would go to Ottawa and would talk the matter over with the Minister of Commerce. Sir Lomer Gouin did come to Ottawa, but the right hon. Minister of Commerce had left for Europe the day before. Sir Lomer Gouin thought proper to write to the Minister ad interim the following letter:

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER,
Province of Quebec,
QUEBEC, Nov. 26th, 1918.

The HON. A. K. MACLEAN, K.C.,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Maclean:—

I understand that you have now charge of Sir George Foster's Department. Mr. Savard, the member for Chicoutimi, wrote you on the subject of a ferry between St. Catharine's Bay and Tadousac, for which you have till now granted a subsidy. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux are also interested in the matter. This ferry is absolutely necessary to the inhabitants of the North Shore, and would impress upon you the great necessity to continue the subsidy granted in the past.

Yours very truly,

LOMER GOUIN.

I have an acknowledgment of this letter from the Deputy Minister of Commerce. Notwithstanding all our work, we have not succeeded in obtaining from the Government the aid which we were seeking, and the people of the Saguenay were deprived of communication, were isolated from the rest of the country for a whole winter long in 1917-18. And yet, Mr. Speaker, in that part of the country, in each of the parishes which I have named and which sent petitions to the hon. Minister of Commerce, young men have sacrificed their lives for the cause of civilization and justice. Last year, thanks to the active co-operation of the excellent member for Charlevoix (Mr. Casgrain), it was decided to put the steamer Champlain on this service for three trips a week. This boat plied between Murray Bay and Tadoussac for a few weeks only. I can not say for what reasons the service was discontinued, but I have been told that there was ill will on the part of the crew. And to a question which I put to the Government at the beginning of this session, asking if measures would be taken to restore the interrupted service, I was given a negative answer. The population of this part of the country were again during the balance of the winter, practically deprived of all communication with the rest of the country. Last fall, while it had been decided that the Champlain would make three trips a week to Tadoussac, the inhabitants of the county of Saguenay thought that such a service would not be sufficient for their needs; steps were taken to obtain from the Post Office Department a small subsidy which would allow of a motor boat plying every day between Ste. Catherine and Tadoussac.

We had received a favourable answer from the Postmaster General; the matter had almost been decided upon, when Mr. Girard, the former member, who had been so greatly befriended by the inhabitants of that county, stepped in, and I would not mention it, had he not interfered to the detriment of my constituents, for in my opinion, Mr. Girard is as dead as a door nail, as he was snowed under at the last elections, by an overwhelming majority of over 10,000 votes, and crushed under public contempt; but he nevertheless occasionally comes down to Ottawa, and what for I am at a loss to know. He still has some pull apparently and enjoys some patronage, as I am going to try to show, successfully, I think. On the 7th April, I moved in this House for a copy of all correspondence, letters and telegrams in connection with the granting of an allowance by the Post Office Department for a regular ferry service by motor yacht between Ste. Catherine and Tadoussac.

That motion was made early in April; we are at the end of May and I regret to say that those papers have not yet been brought down, so that I cannot produce the original,

I cannot read a copy of the letter which Mr. Girard set to the department, on the 18th October, 1919, in which he stated that that little ferry service, as he called it was of no use whatever. And it was after Mr. Girard had sent that letter or report that the affair fell through.

Another injustice was perpetrated in my county, at Metabetchouan, in the parish of St. Jerome, one of the finest parishes to be found, not only in the Lake St. John district and in the province of Quebec, but in the whole country, in connection with the appointment of a postmaster. I believe I may prove that that policy announced by the Government, the abolition of patronage, is a farce, a mere camouflage and that patronage is still going on.

The postmaster of Metabetchouan had resigned. Two men had applied for the position. Mr. Girard made an application in favour of the son of one of his friends.

The following telegram was sent by Mr. Girard to the Post Office Department to inform it of the resignation of the former Postmaster.

ST. GÉDÉON, LAKE ST. JOHN, QUEBEC,
September 5, 1919.

Hon. P. E. BLONDIN,
Postmaster General, Ottawa, Ontario.

The postmaster of Metabetchouan has resigned and is leaving on Sunday. We recommend Georges Emile Perron, a returned soldier, qualified for the position and residing near the church. Please notify the Civil Service Commission to that effect. Application by letter.

JOS. GIRARD.

Another telegram was sent by Mr. Joseph Girard to the assistant deputy Postmaster General.

ST. GEDEON Co., LAKE ST. JOHN, QUEBEC.
Sept. 6, 1919.

H. B. VERRET,
Deputy Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Letter of the 3rd received I understand Minister on a holiday when will he be back please see my message to him of yesterday re appointment as Postmaster of Metabetchouan of George Emile Perron returned soldier actual Postmaster there leaving Monday must have resigned please insist on that I have wire accordingly to the President of the Civil Service Commission wire answer please.

JOS. GIRARD.

The following telegram was set to Mr. Girard, in reply to those telegrams:

OTTAWA, September 11, 1919.

Dear sir,—With reference to your telegrams of the 5th and 6th instant in which you state that the postmaster of Metabetchouan has resigned and is about to leave that locality, and recommending the appointement of Mr. George Emile Perron, a returned soldier, to that position, I may say that the resignation of the postmaster in question has not yet reached the department and that the Quebec inspector, with whom we have communicated has no information on the matter, but will investigate.

I may add, however, that, should that position become vacant, your recommendation in favour of Mr. Perron will be submitted to the Civil Service Commission for consideration, whenever the question of making a new appointment comes up.

Your obedient servant,

H. B. VERRET,
Assistant Deputy Postmaster General.

Mr. JOSEPH GIRARD,
St. Gédéon, P.Q.

The following petition was forwarded by Mr. Girard to the Civil Service Commission:

METABETCHOUAN, August 27, 1919.

As Mr. J. A. Garon, the present postmaster, is certainly going to resign, we, the undersigned, recommend that Mr. George Emile Perron be appointed postmaster in Mr. Garon's place.

MM. Adélard Plourde,
Wilfrid Ratté,
Louis Ratté,
Ludger Ratté,
Charles Cauchon,
Didyme Simard,
Ferdinand Villeneuve,
Charles Tremblay,
Ernest Hervey,
Jos. Leclerc,
Robert Lévesque,
Jos. Louis Tremblay,
Jos. Langevin,
Honoré Desbiens,
Armand Larouche,
P. Groreau,
Edgar Girard,
Jos. Boudreau,
Gaudias Potvin,
Georges Potvin,
David Villeneuve,
Johnny Bergeron,
Jos. Bergeron,
Michel Plourde,
Jos. Tremblay, fils,
Eugène Lapointe,
L. E. Perron,
René Plourde,
Arm. Perron,
David Desbiens,
Didyme Boudreau,
Conrad Tremblay,
Louis Ouellet,
Philippe Ouellet,
Amand Genest,
J.-B. Bergeron,
Emilien Genest,
Rosario Bouchard,
Maurice Fortin,
Laurent Breton,
Thomas Julien,
Jos.-Alph. Fortin,
Ferdinand Bilodeau,
Joséphine Côté,
François Côté,
Jos. Doré,
Henri McNicoll,
Pierre Drolet,
Edmond Lapointe,
Edouard Cauchon,
Geo. Cauchon,
Charles Harvey,

Arthur Tremblay,
Alphonse Aubin, fils,
David Tremblay,
Arthur Duchaine,
Xavier Doré,
Xavier Hervay,
Louis Tremblay,
Jos. Côté,
Paul Guérin,
William Desbiens,
J.-E. Perron,
Onésime Desbiens,
Armand Villeneuve,
René Potvin.

I must say that in the copy of the petition which I have tabled and that is now before me, I do not see the name of the parish priest of that locality; however, I noticed that the name of Father Boily appeared on a petition which I saw in the hands of the Civil Service Commission. As I had been notified that Father Boily had signed the petition, I wrote to the mayor of St. Jérome about it and here is his answer:

Metabetchouan.

I, the undersigned, Louis E. Boily, priest and curate of the parish of St. Jerome, do declare to have signed the petition of Mr. J. A. Plourde, of Metabetchouan, applying for the post office at St. Jerome (Metabetchouan). Later on somebody came and asked for my signature in behalf of another parishioner, Mr. Perron. I told him I had signed Mr. Plourde's application and I could not sign both. Moreover, I had promised Mr. Plourde to use all my influence, for whatever it was worth, and I want him to be assured of that.

If my name has been placed on the other petition, I withdraw it. The office is already at Mr. Plourde's and it is desired that it should remain there.

St. Jerome, October 24, 1919.

L. E. BOILY, priest,
Curé of St. Jerome.

Metabetchouan, Lake St. John.

Father Boily's name was forged on the first petition which was sent to the Civil Service Commission.

Finally the Civil Service Commission, in January, 1920, appointed Mr. J. A. Plourde, as postmaster at Metabetchouan.

Here is what occurred:

ST. GEDEON, QUE.

Hon. P. E. BLONDIN,

Postmaster General, Ottawa, Ont.

Re: postmaster Metabetchouan, defer everything until important papers by mail.

JOS. GIRARD.

Do not forget that, at that time, the appointment had been made by the Civil Service Commission. The papers mentioned in Mr. Girard's telegram were simply a letter from Mr. George Emile Perron which reads as follows:

Hon. P. E. BLONDIN,
Postmaster General, Ottawa.
Province of Quebec,
Roberval district,
County of Lake St. John.

In reply to a letter from Quebec dated December 27, 1919, and signed by Mr. Green, post office inspector at Quebec, who states he was instructed by the Civil Service Commission to ask me for information about assertions and complaints that are being forwarded to me, I beg to declare solemnly:

1. That when I wrote the letter of January 19, 1918, complaining about the postmaster of Metabetchouan, I acted in perfectly good faith, as I was authorized by my father to sign his own name to the correspondence, except on cheques, without consulting him.

At that time, a few friends and I were aware of numerous irregularities which occurred in the mail service and we were determined to secure an investigation. By using the name of my father which I was tacitly authorized to do, we thought we could secure more easily the necessary investigation which actually took place, and there was a great improvement in the service at the post office, although the inquiry was not as complete as it should have been.

We have done the people a service and I have retained the competence of my father who has faith in me and keeps me in his employ with the same powers as heretofore. I must add that my father does not look after the mail; my brother and I are doing that part of the work and therefore he ignores and has ignored a lot of irregularities which he could not notice because he had no time to follow the details.

2. I am the son of a merchant of Metabetchouan. I am not a rich man, I work in my father's store with my elder and younger brothers. During the year I spent in the army, my brothers kept the store with my father, and since my return from St. Lucia, I am always sick, very often unable to go to the store and my father gets my brother to take my place. The position of postmaster would be a good one for me, because it does not require very heavy work as in the store, and then I could have a regularly appointed assistant.

3. I am not a merchant, I am simply my father's employee, I assist my father in preparing our family's future, and my brother Edward leads a quiet life attending his own business together with my father.

4. As to that pretension that I did not go to the war and that I was one of the few privileged ones who were sent to the Antilles, etc., and that I have not been away a whole year, as I had left in the fall of 1918, my answer is written upon the files of the Militia Department. Thank God, I left voluntarily, upon my father's advice, on May 15, 1918, and I signed my full engagement on the 29th of that same month; the military authorities sent me to St. Lucia whence I returned in June 1919, being discharged at St. Johns, June 15, 1919, that is to say that I have been absent for more than one year.

It is therefore evident that the information sent to the department, who have in their possession my full military record from beginning to end, was maliciously inspired. And those who to-day pretend that I have been one of the few privileged ones did not say the same thing when I left, for then they were openly cursing me, as well as my father and my whole family, calling us cowards and traitors, these charges being made among the best known people of our locality and elsewhere; they preferred sending their sons to the woods rather than having them with me to do their duty; and in this whole story I can see but the meanest partisan spirit, because my father and all his family are friends of the present Government.

I do not know the names of the parties who signed the document mentioned in Mr. Green's letter, but, without seeing them, I might wager that all the out-and-out Liberals of the parish and, probably, of other parts, who would like to see the Government thrown down, are against me and want to prevent my appointment, because I am a friend of the Government and, especially so, because I enlisted in spite of themselves.

The site I suggested for the post office is more centrally located than the present one, as can be seen by the sketch here inclosed, and outside of a handful of the village folks, the rest of the inhabitants will be closer to my office than to the present one; and I inclose a statement from three of the principal mail carriers interested in the Metabetchouan service who declare that, as far as distances are concerned, it would not make any difference to them to come to my place instead of going to the present office, but that, considering access facilities to the office, they prefer the site I have chosen.

I might further inform you that, when I left for the war, I was only following the generous example of my sister, Mary Perron, who served as a nurse, in England and in France, for more than four years, from January, 1915, to April, 1918, and those who have contended that I did not go to the front have also taken care not to mention my sister's name.

Under such circumstances, belonging to an honourable family, proud of the military service which I have honourably discharged, honourable myself previously, honourable during that service and honourable since, qualified from every point of view, unless my standing as a friend of the Government and of a retruned soldier should disqualify me, I believe I may claim my appointment as postmaster of Metabetchouan, as a matter of justice towards merit, if, as it is generally said, the soldiers have above all and in the first place a right to public employment.

I have the honour to be

Your humble petitioner,

GEORGES EMILE PERRON.

I meant to have this letter inserted in full in Hansard, in order that his fellow citizens might see the extraordinary impudence of this young man, who claims to be honourable, after having forged the signature of his parish priest upon a petition applying for the position of postmaster, after it has been stated, in the course of an investigation, that he had forged and signed his own father's name. Is a forger an honourable man? He may have done some military service, but his life has never been in danger. The other candidate, Mr. Plourde, was backed by petitions signed by several hundred citizens, representing four-fifths of that parish's population, all the principal citizens included; he has been assistant postmaster for several years. Had he not been more qualified than Georges Emile Perron—a forger—I might understand that the latter, having performed some military service, though he never went to the front nor did he expose his own life, should have been preferred to the other, the aptitudes being even. Upon that point, I have asked, at this session, whether a soldier who had served at St. Lucia could be considered as a returned soldier from the front; I moreover asked whether the Civil Service Commission should be giving their preference to those young men. I was given the following answer:

1. A soldier who served with the Canadian Expeditionary Force in Bermuda is considered a "returned soldier". He holds the same position in that respect as a soldier who only saw service in England; and is entitled to a Class "C" Badge.

2. Where two candidates are considered to be at all points on a parity, if one is a civilian and the other has voluntarily enlisted and been drafted to Bermuda, the latter would be given the preference.

Being at all points on a parity, a soldier should be given the preference, but, in this case, the qualifications are absolutely inadequate. At the Civil Service Commission, I was informed that one had 100 points and the other 65; such is the difference between the two candidates as to efficiency, and that is why Mr. Plourde was appointed in the first place. It was then that Mr. Joseph Girard, ex-member, sent a telegram to the Postmaster General:

Re postmaster of Metabetchouan, suspend all, am sending important record by mail.

The important record is the one relative to George Emile Perron; and, after that, Plourde's appointment was set aside and George Emile Perron was appointed.

I really believe, Mr. Speaker, that it would be hard to find a case of more glaring injustice and a more convincing evidence of the fact that favouritism still exists as to appointments. I believe this case must be most uncommon, for here, the appointment was made by the Civil Service Commission. And I have in my hands the direct evidence that the appointment was made by the Civil Service Commission. (Reading):

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION, CANADA.

OTTAWA, December 17, 1919.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your requisition of the 22nd September, asking for the appointment of a Postmaster at Metabetchouan, P.Q., I am directed by the Commissioners to advise you that they have selected Mr. J. A. Plourde for this position.

The certificate for Mr. Plourde's permanent appointment will be issued as soon as the required information has been received in this office, and in this connection Mr. Plourde is being communicated with direct.

Yours very truly

WM. FORAN,
Secretary.

HECTOR B. VERRET, Esq.,
Ass's Deputy Postmaster General.
Ottawa.

I cannot understand and I believe it would be impossible for any one to explain how a man such as the late member for Chicoutimi, who has betrayed every political party, who, as I have stated a few moments ago, has been crushed by popular contempt in his own riding, could still have a certain influence in the department in Ottawa, and I mean to protest as strongly as I can against this injustice towards Mr. Plourde, who had made certain sacrifices and fully deserved his appointment as postmaster in that important parish.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I most sincerely admit my full repentance in having been so lengthly in my remarks, but I really feel that I have accomplished my duty and I will conclude by stating that the programme adopted by last August's Liberal Convention suits me absolutely. I believe that that Convention could not have been better organized: The premiers of every province in the Dominion, Ontario excepted, took part in it, the Liberal party's programme was gone through and discussed for several days, and, for my part, I am absolutely satisfied with the conclusions of that Convention's programme; that is the reason why I shall heartily vote in favour of the amendment of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding's) which is based upon the principles adopted by that Convention.

Mr. O. D. CASSELMAN (Dundas): It is with a great deal of hesitation and diffidence that I rise to take part in this debate, which hon. members on both sides of the House will agree has already been protracted to too great a length. But representing a county in Eastern Ontario, a part of Canada which, east of Frontenac at least, is not often heard from in this House, I feel it my duty, much as I dislike to discharge that duty, to place on Hansard what I conceive to be the views of my constituents in regard to matters affected by the Budget. I do not often intrude my views on the attention of the House, and I think that the House will absolve me of the charge of wasting its time to any great extent. I do make it a point, however, to sit in my seat fairly regularly throughout the session, and it has been a constant source of wonder to me to see the ingenuity and the ability displayed by hon. members in dressing up the same facts in so many different suits of verbal clothing. I have observed that the principal facts in every discussion are usually brought out early in the debate. I have admired the patience both of the House and of yourself, Mr. Speaker, and I have sympathized with the impatience of the people of the country in witnessing the flagrant waste of money, time and energy—the money of the people, the time of the House, and the energy of members. I say, I have sympathized with the impatience of the people in submitting to this waste by a constant repetition of the same facts. I cannot, Sir, see the wisdom of it. I cannot see how the interests of the country are promoted by it, nor can I see what benefit accrues to the political careers of hon. members in consequence. The country resents it. The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) yesterday objected to hurrying the proceedings of the House, but Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why this House should not already have been adjourned; and instead of spending our time here talking about the cost of living we might with infinitely better advantage be engaged at home actually helping to reduce the high cost of living by working in the fields.

We on this side of the House have been amused and sometimes, I admit, we have been slightly irritated by the taunts that come from the Opposition because the Government does not dissolve the House and appeal to the country in a general election. What good purpose would be served by such a course? What hope is there, based on any reasonable foundation, that as good a Government or a better one would follow? I do not know the minds of the cabinet ministers, they do not confide their private opinions to me; but I will venture to say that they hold the same broad general view with regard to the question of continuing in power as hon. members back of them hold. We private members are not over-burdened by affairs of state. We have some time on our hands to gossip, to exchange views, and to learn one another's opinions on matters generally, and I am convinced that the majority of hon. members on this side, like myself, would welcome a return to private life. From observation and conversation with members I am convinced that the majority of hon. gentlemen on this side would welcome the relief which a general election at this time might possibly give them. Why then do we support the Government in their decision to continue in power to the end of the parliamentary term? Sir, the party on this side of the House is peculiarly formed. A large number of the members on this side are not politicians; they have never been politicians and they do not want to become politicians. They accepted nomination and contested their elections because they were convinced that Canada needed a strong, non-partisan, non-political party to carry it safely through the conditions of the war. Are the conditions which have resulted from the war less difficult to-day than the conditions that existed when hon. members were elected? Can we not all see the dark cloud gathering, growing darker, the socialistic and Bolshevistic danger that threatens to disrupt civilization, to destroy the commercial life of the world, to set up mob rule and to overthrow the supremacy of law and order? And yet members of the Opposition, sworn to do their duty by the State, because they imagine that the Government is unpopular would plunge the country into the throes of a general election with a result that could be nothing but disorder and chaos. It may be that the Union Government is not altogether perfect; it may be that there is some one in Canada who does not so consider it. But is there any student of public affairs who is uninfluenced by political considerations, who is unbiased in politics, who will suggest where, at the present time, there is a prospect of obtaining a better, or will suggest how that prospect can be developed into a reality? If there was any prospect or hope that a general election would result in bringing into power a Government strong enough, conservative enough in principle, to carry on as the governments of Canada, of both shades of political opinion, have carried on, I am convinced, Sir, that the members of the Cabinet, and the members who are supporting this Government would welcome the relief that a general election, perhaps, would give them. But the burden that the war has laid upon the shoulders of the Government is a burden that they must still carry and which to lay down now, in view of the conditions that obtain in this country, would be an act of cowardice, a quitting in the face of trouble, which time and the good sense of our Canadian people will overcome—an act which this Government, which has so safely and capably carried us through the period of war, would not be guilty of.

The Opposition gets a good deal of pleasure from repeating, one after another, the statement made by one of its number, that this Government is unpopular and that if there were a general election it would be hopelessly defeated. Perhaps it would, but why is the Government alleged to be unpopular? Canada never had a better or stronger Government than the Union Government; it never had a Government which has been tried like this one. Canada, like every other country in the world, strained with the labours of the war, has suffered less than any one of them from the aftermath of trouble which always follow war. There has not been the slightest breath of slander or charge of graft made against the Union Government. Law and order reign supreme, there are no civil disorders. This Government has conducted the war; it has built up a great Canadian army; it has brought glory to Canada; it has brought the soldiers back from the war, demobilized them and re-established them in civil life with a minimum of trouble and of difficulty. Why then is the Union Government said to be unpopular?

Paradoxical as it may appear, any unpopularity which may have come to the Union Government has come to it because it has kept its pre-election promises. The Government promised to abolish patronage. From all over the country came the clamour that the patronage system was an evil. Undoubtedly evils did exist, as undoubtedly they exist under the present system. It would almost appear that the people resent the action of a Government which attempted to fulfil its promises. The people of the province of Ontario demanded by an overwhelming majority that the Government legislate in the strongest way to prohibit the liquor traffic. The Hearst Government gave them such legislation and immediately the people turned them out of power and put another in its place a Government which has not the courage to assume the responsibility for legislation necessary to make the Canada Temperance Act effective. The people of Canada demanded the abolition of the patronage system. The Union Government abolished that system and they have got themselves into a peck of trouble by so doing. But the Government has had the courage to attempt to place the Civil Service upon a business basis. Perhaps what it has done is a long step in that direction but it still has a long way to go before it can be said that it has been fully successful. What it has done is to take the patronage out of the hands of members who are responsible to the people, who have to answer to the people, whose public careers depend upon the efficiency with which the public service is carried on, and to place it in the hands of a small commission who are responsible to no one, who hold their positions practically for life and who are independent to all intents and purposes of the ministers in charge of the departments. The war record of the Government is a splendid one, the people admit it; posterity will acclaim it. The wisdom of the reconstruction work of the Government appeals to the people and as time goes on, as that work develops and as its results can be better seen, the people of Canada will appreciate it more and more. I wish I could say that the Government has been equally successful in its efforts to place the Civil Service of this country on a sound business basis. The people are not satisfied with the present system. The civil servants themselves are not satisfied with the present system; they are discontented, they are holding up the Government at every opportunity. It is said that the departments are woefully overmanned, and that for every vacancy there are dozens of applications. If this be the case, why not let the dissatisfied ones go? Why not replace them by others who are applying for the positions? They will suffer no hardships, there is plenty of work in Canada outside the Civil Service. Let the men go and work on the farms Let the women go and do other work; there is plenty of work for all to do.

There is one branch of the Civil Service, however, that is notoriously underpaid—I refer to the mail couriers. When we apply for consideration for them we are told that they are under contract—that they tendered for the service, and that they contracted to do the work on the salaries that are paid to them. Very true, but the other civil servants are practically also under contract; at least they knew the work they had to do and the salaries they were to get before they accepted their appointments. Why not make them fulfil their obligations just as the Post Office Department makes the mail couriers fulfil their contract? Mr. Speaker, if this Union Government can crown its work by placing the Civil Service of the country on a sound business basis they will earn the gratitude of the people of Canada, and there will not be the same necessity of multiplying the methods of taxation year after year.

It is also said that the Union Government is unpopular among the farmers. I would advise the members of the Opposition, and the members of the Agrarian party, not to base their hopes upon this statement. The great mass of the farmers—who think much and say little—are sound at heart, and are not to be led away by the visionary programme outlined by the new Agrarian party. There is a certain amount of dissatisfaction among the farmers, I admit. Why? Because conscription, one of the promises of the Union Government, was made broad enough, when the urgency of the war required, to include even those engaged in essential work of production. The United Farmers party of Ontario, as a political body, was born on the day when our gallant friend from North Ontario (Mr. Halbert) led his band of discontented ones down to Ottawa protesting against the Order in Council cancelling the exemption granted to the sons of farmers. Like a famous warrior of old he led his army up the hill and led it down again. Previous to tthat day there was no farmers' organization for political purposes in the province of Ontario; it was born on that day and delivered out of that occasion. It has been nurtured and fed by the Liberals in the hope that they might climb to power because of this movement and because of this discontent; but the Liberals in Ontario have found, and the Liberals of the Dominion too will find, that they have created a Frankenstein which they cannot control. It does not appear at all, Mr. Speaker, to the disinterested observer that this Government, or the governments of the past, have been neglectful of the interests of the farmer. On the contrary it would appear that they have been extremely solicitous that injury should not come to that industry. We cannot afford to have that industry injured. It has been built up at so much cost, so much expense and so much labour, and we—in Eastern Canada, at least—are so proud of its growth and the dimensions which it has reached, that we look with suspicion and distrust on any movement, or any action, that has even the appearance of disturbing it. I am one of those who believe that Canada's surest and safest road to greatness is through the development and promotion of the agricultural industry, that we have travelled far along that road and in that direction. Therefore, I would denounce with vigour anything that had even the appearance of disturbing that industry. Through the intelligence and efforts of our farmers, and the educational, experimental and demonstration work of this Government and the governments of the past, that industry has been raised from the plane of an occupation to the plane of a profession.

The best asset that Canada can have is a prosperous, contented and intelligent agrarian community. But it cannot have that unless the industrial life of the country keeps pace with the agricultural life, unless the growth of industry keeps pace with the growth of agriculture. The two must go together, must advance together, must proceed hand in hand; the life, the success and the prosperity of the one depend upon the other. It is therefore with extreme regret and apprehension that I view the efforts of irresponsible agitators to instil in the minds of our farmers the idea that Canada can rise to greatness on steps made out of the debris of other industries. I have noticed that lawyers who become politicians lose their clients; that doctors who become politicians lose their patients; and that merchants—as I know from personal experience—who attempt to become politicians lose their customers. That economic law must extend to the farmers as well, and those of them who become politicians, will eventually lose their farms.

I view with alarm, then, this new movement which seeks to build up one industry by tearing down others. The members of the Farmers' party disclaim any desire for class legislation, but they are so insistent in their disclaimer that we become suspicious of its sincerity, especially when they are so peculiarly solicitous of their own interests and so callously indifferent to the interests of others. I have under my hand their political creed as set out in this pamphlet, a copy of which, I believe, was mailed to every hon. member. The Farmers' party seem to be very proud of this document, but I do not know why, for as a literary effort it is a beautiful piece of plagiarism. As a platform it contains very little that is new, and what is new is vague, visionary, impracticable.

As the first plank in their platform they call for the formation of a League of Nations. Do they not know that that is already an accomplished fact? Do they not know that the members of this Government took a prominent and an active part in promoting that League? Every member of that party who has spoken has advised the formation of a League of Nations, and yet not one of them has commended this Government for the active part it took in the promotion and formation of the League that is now functioning. The second plank in this platform reads as follows:

> We believe that the further development of the British Empire should be sought along the lines of partnership between nations free and equal, under the present governmental system of British constitutional authority. We are strongly opposed to any attempt to centralize imperial control. Any attempt to set up an independent authority with power to bind the Dominions, whether this authority be termed parliament, council or cabinet would hamper the growth of responsible and informed democracy in the Dominion.

What do they mean, Sir, by that? From what old speeches, books, or pamphlets have they culled those beautiful sentiments? My recollection is, Sir, that I have been listening to similar sentiments for the last thirty or forty years. Where is the danger of "centralized imperial control"? Where is any effort being made "to set up an independent authority with power to bind the Dominions"? Why should this new Progressive party set up a very beautifully clothed figure of straw simply for the pleasure of knocking it down again?

The third item in this platform—this wonderful platform—is the tariff. Recriminations are useless, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to indulge in them, but I cannot resist the temptation of saying that every hon. member who sits in the seats allotted to this new party was a strong and ardent supporter of the tariff policy of the Liberal Government which held power between 1896 and 1911—a tariff higher than the present tariff which they are condemning and which they say they intend to vote against.

11 p.m.

What is their policy? They are demanding under clause (a):

> An immediate and substantial all-round reduction of the customs tariff.

That is vague to say the least. Why cannot they come out boldly and say definitely what their policy is? "A substantial and all-round reduction of the customs tariff." Do they mean by that that they want free trade? Or do they not? Let me tell them that in the country their lieutenants and henchmen are not talking about "a substantial all-round reduction of the customs tariff;" they are talking of absolute free trade, of nothing but free trade.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): No, Sir.

Mr. CASSELMAN: They did in my county.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. CASSELMAN: The Minister of Agriculture in the new Provincial Government of Ontario in his first speech in the Legislature spurned with scorn, it is true, the accusation that the Farmers' party should be called free traders, and yet in the election campaign which returned him and his party to power all tariffs were roundly condemned. The "iniquitous tariff" was the theme of every U.F.O. speech. The farmers were being oppressed by the tariff, it was said. "Give us free trade," demanded the members of the Farmers' party, "and a new era of prosperity will dawn on Canada." I know that not many hon. members profess free trade in this House, but I am in a position to state that at their meetings in the country school houses and at their clubs the lieutenants of the Farmers' party are not talking about a substantial reduction in the tariff, they are demanding absolute free trade; that is what they are preach- trade; that is what they are preaching to the farmers of Canada. In the country they talk free trade; in the House they talk any old thing. Why play fast and loose with this important matter? Why have one policy in the country and another policy in Parliament? This much can be said for the much-abused Union Government, that it has and always has had a definite tariff policy; that the Government believed in that policy; that it has the unanimous support of the members back of it, and that those members preach that policy in the House and out of it. The new Minister of Agriculture of Ontario, the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the new Agrarian party have too much intelligence not to know that free trade would ruin Canada's prosperity; that it would be a disaster and a calamity for Canada, a disaster which they have no intention of precipitating. So, while they try to cater to whatever free trade ideas, whatever discontent with the tariff, may exist in Canada in the hope of benefiting politically thereby, they are careful, when they come into positions of responsibility, to guard their utterances so that they shall not find themselves committed to practical foolishness. Our free trade friends on the other side of the House suggest wiping out our chief source of revenue, but they have not made a single suggestion as to what we should and must do to raise a revenue. We should all like to see such an ideal, Utopian condition of world affairs develop as to make free trade possible, so that there could, to the advantage and safety of all, be a free interchange of all commodities. But the world is not yet a Utopia; much water must pass over the wheels before it becomes such. We must have a revenue and a large one; will the Opposition suggest where, with free trade, that revenue will be found? Until they do that, it is most futile and foolish to speak of abolishing the customs duties. But we get from them not a single adequate, practical suggestion how that revenue, lost by free trade or by an all-round modification of the tariff, is to be secured. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) very candidly and honestly admitted in his speech the other night that free trade was designed only to get into power by; that it was not practical; that it was simply a trap to catch votes. I admired his courage and honesty, while I could not admire his consistency.

The Farmers, however, are a little more constructive; they suggest fields from which revenue may be drawn. I do not know who is the author of this pamphlet; but I have read and re-read it very carefully, and I cannot help coming to the conclusion that its author first read the history of Union Government, studied carefully what Union Government had done and what it was doing, and then with that history fresh in his mind, sat down and wrote this pamphlet. My hon. friends yonder suggest a tax on unimproved land. A tax on unimproved land has a fine sound; but it is not in accord with the wishes of the farmers of Eastern Ontario at least, because in Eastern Ontario the farmers themselves are the principal holders for speculative purposes of unimproved lands. If, unfortunately, the control of power in this Dominion falls into the hands of the aggregation yonder—I love my native country; I want to see Canada become a great and good country, and because I do so, I pray that that event will never occur, but if it does this promise will be kept in the same way that this U.F.O. promises to abolish patronage in Ontario was kept.

Union Government has carried out or is carrying out most of the demands made in this small pamphlet. If this document means anything, if it is a true expression of the wishes of the United Farmers of Canada, then at the next general election, the United Farmers of Canada should rally round the standard of Union Government and see that again Union Government is returned to power. If this document does not mean anything, then I say to this new party: Get a definite policy; formulate some new plan which promises continued and renewed prosperity to Canada.

Let me say, just in conclusion, that Union Government has the record of daring to keep its pre-election promises. It has dared to do unpopular things, because those things were necessary for the good of Canada. Let me apply to Union Government the historic saying of one of Ontario's greatest statesmen, the late Sir James Whitney:

> This Union Government has been brave enough to be bold and bold enough to be brave.

I believe the people of Canada, when this period of carping criticism passes, when this temporary brainstorm recedes, will do justice to this Government which has brought Canada safely, honourably and gloriously through the war and safely and prosperously through the period of reconstruction following the war.

Mr. THOMAS MacNUTT (Saltcoats): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the small group which has received so much attention lately and which has been christened and rechristened with so many names that we hardly know what to call ourselves, I wish to offer some observations on the Budget. I think our party was first of all called the Farmers' party, followed afterwards by the Agrarian, then the Progressive party, and I think to-day we were called the Levites. I am not certain but I think the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Nicholson) indirectly likened us yesterday to "the hydra-headed monster of class privilege and Bolshevism" which he would fight as long as he had breath in his body. Well, I daresay we shall be able to survive it all, for we believe we are standing for a very great principle, and judging by this debate I am afraid that we stand very much alone, but I think are fully justified in our attitude, which I will endeavour to point out.

The hon. member who has just sat down (Mr. Casselman) has stated that this little party with the many titles stands for immediate and absolute free trade. I do not think he is quite right. We recognize that protection has existed practically since Confederation, to a greater or lesser extent, and we do not wish to abolish it all at one fell swoop; but we believe that in connection with certain articles the time has come for abolishing it and that this should have been done a long time ago. I wish to read just three paragraphs from the Canadian Council of Agriculture platform, which we stand behind:

> (f) That all tariff concessions granted to other countries be immediately extended to Great Britain.
>
> (g) That all corporations engaged in the manufacture of products protected by the customs tariffs be obliged to publish annually comprehensive and accurate statements of their earnings.
>
> [Mr. Casselman.]
>
> (h) That every claim for tariff protection by any industry should be heard publicly before a special committee of Parliament.

That, I think, goes to show that we do not ask that the tariff be immediately abolished. If it can absolutely be shown that it is in the interest of the country that there should be some protection, probably that might be granted. The hon. member who has just sat down complained that none of this party had commended the Government for anything they have done. Well, then, I am going to be the first. I commend the Finance Minister for having at all events placed before the House and the country our actual financial condition, secondly, for not having left us in any uncertainty as to the methods by which the Government intends to raise the revenue to carry on the affairs of the country. I think I might also commend the Government for having recognized the importance and advantage of direct taxation, although I do not think they intend to apply it in the right direction. We know where we are, at all events. This Budget maintains the principle of protection to a very large extent, except that the super-war tax of 7½ per cent is going to be abolished. That tax was an increase to the tariff for certain purposes. It was supposed to be entirely for the collection of revenue, but at the time it was imposed, I remember very well, the Financial Post in commenting on the tax congratulated the Government and the manufacturers, as it would enable them to reap larger profits, and it hoped the tax would be maintained. I am glad to know that the Government in that respect are not carrying out the will of the Financial Post, which represents the manufacturers, but I do not know that they should take very much credit to themselves for abolishing this tax, because, after all, it was not a part of the normal tariff. With this exception, there is no change whatever in the tariff This was perhaps to be expected from a Government composed principally of protectionists, and supported principally by protectionists—men who have been avowed and consistent protectionists and who therefore cannot be blamed for supporting the Government's proposals. It is rather surprising, however, to find supporting the Budget, with its absence of tariff reductions hon. members on the other side of the House who were Liberals before the war, and who joined with their Conservative brethren in order to assist in winning the war. It was assumed that they would retain what we understood were Liberal principles in connection with the tariff. As evidence that some of these hon. members are supporting the Government's protective plan of taxation I shall quote from the speech made by the hon. member from Fraser Valley (Mr. Stacey) a few days ago. He said that he himself "in his earlier years breathed a political atmosphere that was charged, if not surcharged, with anti-protectionist gas," and that he was elected as a Liberal Unionist. He stated emphatically the other evening: "To-night I stand for the principle of protection." Not, be it observed, for a tariff for revenue with incidental protection, but for straight protection. He gave special reasons for his position and he appealed to the House to practise the old club spirit. But evidently the benefit to the British Columbia apple growing industry from protection is the main reason for his change of heart. In another part of his speech he maintains that the "four western provinces constitute the natural and legitimate market for British Columbia apples." If he had said "the natural and legitimate prey" he would have been nearer the mark. He believes in interprovincial trade, evidently when it pays. He said:

Our people, year by year, buy from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 worth of stuff, especially from the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. That may not be very much, but it is a big thing for us, especially under existing conditions.

You will observe that he does not say that it is a good thing for Alberta and Saskatchewan, but a "big thing for us," that is, British Columbia. That is not the club spirit. He does not ask that the farmer of the western provinces alluded to should receive protection, something which however they themselves do not ask. He appears to have another reason. In a somewhat paternal manner he spoke as follows:

What we object to, and what we have persistently objected to, is the unfair, unreasonable and unneighbourly policy of dumping third-rate stuff—

Meaning, from the United States:

—upon the poor prairie people and forcing the higher quality fruit off the market.

Meaning, the British Columbia fruit. I may inform the hon. member who takes this very kind attitude that the poor prairie people are not in the habit of purchasing third-rate stuff, apples or any other commodity, when they can obtain a higher quality. They are quite willing to pay the difference. We would be willing to pay at least a dollar a barrel more for British Columbia apples of first quality than for third-rate American apples, and consequently there is no necessity for a tariff of 90 cents a barrel. I can bear testimony to the fact that the British Columbia apple is fully equal to any other apple we can obtain, both in appearance and in quality. There need be no fear of third-quality apples being brought in and forced upon the "poor," unfortunate farmers of the West. The hon. member says that it costs them more to grow apples, but he rather gives it away when he refers to the higher cost of containers. These are the hon. member's words:

They had a better organization than we had and beat us at buying.

Well, there is only one thing which they can do, and that is to organize in such a way that they can buy their containers on equal terms with the Americans, and there is a good example set them by the grain growers of the provinces to which the hon. member refers. What is still more surprising is to find that notwithstanding the strong stand taken by the Liberal party on several occasions in opposing protection, especially at the August convention, with a few exceptions the speeches of hon. members of that party indicate that they are in favour to a considerable extent of a protectionist policy. There was an excellent opportunity for them to assert themselves, but the amendment moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) fell far short of their former professions; and the speeches so far made, with a few exceptions, are not even in line with the present amendment, being indefinite and disappointing, to some of us at any rate. Last August the delegates of the Liberal party from all parts of Canada met at Ottawa and framed a good low tariff policy which very largely minimized protection. It was a good second to the platform to the Canadian Council of Agriculture, and all the members of the Liberal party pledged themselves to abide by it. I will quote that part of the platform relating to the tariff. It is late, but I trust that the House will bear with me while I read the passage:

That the best interests of Canada demand that substantial reductions of the burdens of customs taxation be made with a view to the accomplishing of two purposes of the highest importance first, diminishing the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people; second: reducing the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the Dominion, the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress and prosperity of our country.

That, to these ends, wheat, wheat flour and all products of wheat; the principal articles of food; farm implements and machinery; farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery and repair parts thereof; rough and partly dressed lumber; gasoline, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils;—

I wonder how the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) would take that item. I can remember very well, that when we were canvassing some years ago for what was called the Oliver resolution, which was couched very much in these words, the hon. member for West Lambton was very much annoyed because we would not exclude the different oils, which I believe were manufactured in his constituency. If I recollect aright, he refused to vote for the resolution on that account, and I do not know what stand he would take in regard to that matter now if he had an opportunity of expressing himself definitely on it. The platform continues:

—nets, net-twines and fishermen's equipments; cements and fertilizers, should be free from customs duties, as well as the raw material entering into the same.

That a revision downwards of the tariff should be made whereby substantial reductions should be effected in the duties on wearing apparel and footwear, and on other articles of general consumption (other than luxuries), as well as on the raw material entering into the manufacture of the same.

That the British preference be increased to 50 per cent of the general tariff.

And the Liberal party hereby pledges itself to implement by legislation the provision of this resolution when returned to power.

They have not yet been returned to power and that may be the reason for the present amendment. At the session before last the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) moved an amendment, and it seems to me that that amendment was very much along the same lines as the platform I have just read. Probably the platform was based upon it. I will not take up the time of the House reading the amendment because it is rather lengthy; but it was an excellent resolution, containing very little protection. It was brought before the House at the wrong time, however, that is to say, on a motion to go into Supply. There are a large number of hon. members who approved of that resolution but they were reluctant to oppose the Government. They could not honourably oppose any of the Government's measures without cause, and the Government had had no opportunity of disclosing themselves with regard to their tariff policy—no government does until the Budget is brought down. The consequence was, that a great many sympathetic members opposed the resolution at that time. This had another bad effect, namely, that it precluded the introduction of the same principle at that session. When the Budget was brought down a very mild resolution with regard to a lower tariff was, very leniently allowed by the Speaker; because at that time, in my opinion, mild as it was, it was out of order, the principle involved having been already disposed of at that session. At all events, there was one clause that was definite and there were some twelve Liberal-Unionists who voted against the Budget on that account. Others, for some good reason, best known to themselves, did not do so. The definite clause to which I refer, which I may say induced me to favour the resolution, reads:

That to relieve the present situtation the tariff should be so framed as to free the food of the people and the machinery used in the development of the natural resources of Canada, together with the raw material entering into the manufacturing thereof.

There were good reasons why what is known as the first McMaster amendment could not have been moved at that time, but there is no reason why it or something similar to the August platform could not have been brought forward on this occasion. What is the amendment that we are called upon to vote for or reject? I will read a part of it:

That in view of the continued increase in the high cost of living, of the greatly increased burden of taxation, of the hardship which many of the people suffer from these causes, and the unrest naturally arising therefrom; and in view of the desirability of adopting measures to increase production and effect such relief to consumers and producers as may be within the power of Parliament, the House is of opinion that, pending a wider revision of the tariff, substantial reductions of the burdens of customs taxation should be made with a view to the accomplishing of two purposes of the highest importance; first, diminishing the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people; second, reducing (not freeing) the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the Dominion, the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress and prosperity of our country.

The amendment, it will be seen, is of a very general and indefinite nature. In speaking to his amendment, the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's plainly indicated his reasons for not taking advantage of the splendid opportunity to confirm the former anti-protection attitude of the Liberal party in a more definite manner. His speech might just as well have been delivered by one of the members on the other side, who claim to be supporters of moderate protection, which, like the word "substantial" so often used, may mean anything. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's made the following remarks:

I do not even think we can expect to get a sound and safe tariff policy by a too rigid adherence to every line and every letter of the Liberal tariff platform. I think myself that we will find that we are all prone in framing platforms to put things perhaps a little more strongly than is wise and we all find when we come to the responsibilities of office that we may have to modify our views.

The impression left by the hon. member's remarks can be indicated by quoting from the speech of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce who, during the course of his long public service, has always stood for high protection and who is now apparently satisfied that he has a colleague in the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's. Referring to that hon. gentleman he said:

Now my hon. friend went on to the tariff question, and there I sat in perfect amazement. I felt almost like saying, "Look over the thirty years that have passed and the controversies that have taken place between my hon. friend and myself, and between his party and the party on this side of the House." I felt almost like saying, when he had finished, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," and the question forces itself upon me "Has the millennium come?" The whole party behind my hon. friend never squeaked opposition to what he said; they could not; they dared not. They do not like to say what in their hearts they know to be the truth—that is repugnant to them; yet if they were all as honest as the ex-Minister of Finance they would get up and say the very same thing. Now, after these confessions—not of an opium eater, but of a virile, experienced public man—after this candid confession, let me say to hon. gentlemen opposite: "Do not let us hear anything more of the camouflaged debate from that side as to free trade being the doctrine which is dear to your hearts and embodied in your policies. You cannot put it into your policy now. I do not think you ever meant to put it into your policy to carry out as a reality if you ever got into power."

And further on he says:

We have the ex-Finance Minister standing for an anti-dumping clause—when circumstances require it; standing for a substantial aid to industries—when circumstances require it; standing for mergers—when circumstances require it; aye and even more, standing for the infant industry while it was an infant industry, until it had attained years of maturity; standing for all these—when the circumstances of the case seemed to require it. Where is the free trade doctrine, and where is the difference in principle between myself as a moderate protectionist and my hon. friend as a now avowed protectionist, the principle to be adapted and adopted—as circumstances require it? That was always the doctrine on this side of the House. We never worshipped protection as a fetish; can the same be said by hon. gentlemen opposite with reference to free trade? We have always believed that the circumstances of the time should dictate the financial and tariff policy of the time. And my hon. friend's confession to-night has amply justified the policy advocated during thirty years by Liberal-Conservatives in all parts of Canada.

The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce was so overcome by his emotion that he shortly afterwards concluded his speech abruptly—

Judging from further speeches made by members of the Liberal party, so far, with one or two notable exceptions, I think we are quite justified in taking the stand that the present Liberal party, as a whole, was not sincere in its former professions of free trade with regard to the implements of industry, the necessaries of life, and low tariff on other articles. I must, however, except the western Liberals, who, I believe, are honest in their desire for low tariff and I can hardly imagine the Hon. Frank Oliver delivering a speech such as I have quoted from, made by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's.

Now, what effect will the Budget proposals have in increasing the revenues and in reducing the cost of living?—the two most important matters with which the House must deal; apart from the care of our disabled soldiers and the widows and dependents of those who have fallen. That it will attain the first object is probable, although the proper means are not taken, in my opinion, for the taxes payable by the different classes of citizens, or rather whose occupations are different, will be disproportionate; and there is a certainty of an increase in the cost of living now almost unbearable. The part relating to the taxation of luxuries is, I consider, a proper direct tax. But we must be sure that the articles taxed are really luxuries, and it is very questionable whether this principle has been carried out. For instance, a pair of boots at $9 cannot now be considered a luxury, or a suit of clothes or a woman's dress at $45, or a $5 hat; neither can a bottle of pain killer or other patent medicine be considered a luxury, and there are many other articles that could be mentioned. I received several telegrams to-day and I will read one as a sample, leaving to other hon. members who have been receiving similar telegrams and letters, all relating to the same subject, to bring them to the attention of the committee. The telegram which I shall read is as follows:

Protest very strongly any tax increase on patent and proprietary medicine; whole district requests your best endeavours.

If the tariff of 25 to 35 per cent were abolished or reduced, to be followed by a lower cost to the consumer, many goods costing the prices mentioned might then be considered luxuries. Otherwise, as at present, they must be classified as necessaries. But I trust that this may at least be partially remedied in committee.

The one per cent wholesale tax paid by retailers on all but food products, and passed on to the consumer, will yield some revenue, but will most decidedly increase the cost of living; the reduction of the excess business profits tax will decrease the revenue and not affect the cost of living; the only change in the tariff, the abolition of the balance of the super-war tax of 7½ per cent, will decrease revenue, and it is the only item that will tend towards lowering the cost of living. Here is an example of how the abolition, or reduction, of tariff affects this cost. The Finance Minister states that it will mean over $30,000,000 less revenue, but it also means as much, and probably twice as much more, that will not be paid by the consumers to Canadian manufacturers, for which, I claim no adequate equivalent has heretofore been given. Having saved that much, probably $75,000,000 or $80,000,000, the public will be the gainers to that extent. The Government can acquire a large proportion of the money thus saved by direct taxation; the public will then be no worse off, and the revenue will have gained by that much. If this immense saving can be made by abolishing 7½ per cent, what would it mean if the duties of fifteen, twenty, thirty or thirty-five per cent on various articles were abolished or materially reduced? Although the revenue from customs duties would be reduced, the people would be far better able to make up that reduction in other ways and have millions to spare. The manufacturers, of course, would lose by such a policy, but is the public bound to continue bolstering them up everlastingly, especially when they claim that American goods are higher in price than the articles which they produce —an inconsistent stand because if the contention were true no protection at all would be required by them, Canadian goods would protect themselves by their cheapness, but there would be no revenue as articles would not be imported from a higher-priced market. The contention, however, that American goods are higher in price than Canadian is refuted by the large revenue obtained through the customs duties on imported goods which it is expected will reach $167,000,000 this year, but will represent fully $200,000,000 more which will be paid to the manufacturers by the consumers with very little to show for it.

With reference to the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) it is not even as specific as the amendment to the last Budget, and, as before remarked, it has been practically repudiated by many of the Liberals themselves who have spoken in the debate with at least one outstanding exception, the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), who has qualified for a seat at this end of the Chamber and might now very well sit with the hon. member for Assinboia (Mr. Gould) the views of both hon. gentlemen, after all, being very much alike on tariff matters.

The remarks I made during the debate on the Address have been fully justified. Eastern Liberals are not unanimous in their low-tariff professions if we are to take them at their own words. It is regrettable that a second amendment cannot be made to the Budget. The only one allowed has been monopolized by the Liberal party and with us it is therefore a case of Hobson's choice. My only recourse—by way of protest against what the Budget does not contain with respect to the tariff—is to vote for the amendment; I would do so with much greater enthusiasm had it been of the nature that I have indicated.

It has been claimed that direct taxation is not practicable, and that the payment of direct taxes is evaded. So far, experience to some extent probably justifies this statement. Mr. Breadner, Commissioner of Taxation, however, informed the members of this House a few days ago that he was getting his organization in such shape that before very long not a single man to whom the taxation applies would escape. Naturally it will take some time to apply a new principle, but there is no reason to doubt that if proper methods were used sufficient revenue would be obtained in this way and the people themselves would save money; they would know what they were paying and would naturally take more interest in observing how the expenditures were made.

With regard to a land value tax, the present municipal organizations could be utilized to a large extent for collection purposes. All the municipalities obtain their revenues by means of direct taxation and do not appear to experience any great difficulty in collecting them.

I intend to follow the example of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Stacey) in one respect, and to state where I stand on the tariff. That hon. member has declared himself for protection; I am for low tariff; and, in the case of the necessities of life, and the tools, implements and machininery required for production and the development of natural resources, I advocate that there should be no tariff at all. The revenue should be made up by a direct levy on land values, and where that is not possible recourse should be had to a tax on incomes, excess business profits or any other direct means considered advisable. The taxes should be proportionate to the financial standing of the citizens of the country—who are in duty bound to meet their share of the public requirements—and to their ability to meet the demand made upon them. In other words, I support the platform of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, which is not a farmer or class platform, notwithstanding what has been said about it. Although it has emanated from the farmers' organization it does not contain a single clause asking for special privileges for farmers, but is wholly national in its character.

Mr. H. A. FORTIER (Labelle) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, from the very inception of this debate, hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House have vied with each other in bestowing their congratulations on the hon. Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) in connection with his Budget speech, which was also his maiden speech in this House. I cordially join with my hon. friends on this side in paying my tribute of admiration and esteem to the hon. Minister of Finance, in doing homage to his great powers of exposition, and in complimenting him upon his rapid advance towards the highest summits of the administration. He had to plead before us a most difficult and thankless case; he had to win approval for the financial position of the country, which an extravagant and unpopular Government had created through nine years of improvident and reckless administration. He acquitted himself admirably, and if the arguments that he has put forward failed to force conviction on the minds of every one in this House or in the country, he has none the less succeeded, by dint of hard work and dogged pertinacity in discharging his duties in connection with the Budget in such an able manner as to cause his friends and admirers on the Government side spontaneously to say "that he had courage."

I may pass over in silence the obligations to which we are committed through our participation in the war and which must be lived up to by Canada. Our people have given an admirable example of sacrificial devotedness and heroism, both on the battle fields and in the many domains of war charities. Now, a most sacred duty is devolved on the Government of paying off the enormous debts that have been piled up within the last few years, and bridging over the yawning chasm of our obligations, so as to allow our young nation to steer its steady course towards future progress and prosperity. I shall make no comment on the extravagant and useless expenditures incurred through the enforcement of that unforgettable conscription policy over which such sharp contests have occurred. I know that we must accept accomplished facts, and it behooves us now to bend all our energies, our goodwill towards the supreme duty of the moment, the payment of the heavy war debt under which we are staggering.

The predecessor of the hon. Minister of Finance, the great finance minister of 1919, had taught us that in order to reach that goal, two things were required: production and thrift.

The people nobly responded to his call. A hurried glance taken at the speech of the Minister of Finance and at the inventory of our national wealth would convince us that great activity is being displayed in all our industries, agricultural, manufacturing, mining and others. The Canadian people might have dispensed with such advice, and their daily achievements in the field of labour, their intelligent efforts, their traditional qualities, energy, industry and thrift are examples which the Government might well have taken inspiration from. Instead of making eloquent speeches, instead of lecturing the people, the Unionist Government might have improved the efficacious examples of sound administration, and made their policy tally with those practical doctrines of production and wise economy.

In none of their departments did the Government practise economy. I charge the Government with having squandered public moneys in appropriating, since the armistice was signed, for the upkeep of an army in Canada, and in order to make a display of militarism a sum of $12,000,000. We were under the impression that the war, since it was brought to a triumphant conclusion by the Allied armies, would once for all rid the world of the plague of militarism.

Let us forever crush that combative and barbarous nation whose creed was that pernicious doctrine that "Might is Right," and, whatever be the extent of the sacrifice, let us emblazon throughout the Christian world those grand words of Christian civilization which shine in blazing letters upon the motherland's flag: " Dieu et mon Droit."

Hon. Mr. A. BELAND (Beauce): Hear, hear!

Mr. FORTIER (Translation): That is the ideal for which the sons of Canada crossed the seas and shed their blood on the plains of Flanders. A British statesman said recently: "Our rulers have failed to notice that the reason why our soldiers so gallantly fought was that they meant to kill war itself forever."

There can be no less justifiable an expenditure of public money than this enormous sum for a permanent army. If there be any expenditure censured by public opinion that is the one. Why, it is in a young country like ours, having scarcely 8,000,000 of people, covering an immense territory, in a country abounding in all kinds of ntaural resources, but remaining unproductive until the genius and labour of mankind do develop them, it is in this country that has almost ruined itself through its sacrifice of men and of money to crush the monster of militarism that we are to encumber the annual budget by the useless expenditure of $12,000,000, in order to keep up a standing army?

The finest movement made by our soldiers returned home from the battlefields was that of seeking their civil re-establishment, of laying aside the old uniform to put on the workingman's livery and to set themselves to those useful occupations which go to create the country's prosperity. I cannot really see a finer example given to the whole world of that loyalty to the great anti-militarist principles which fill the souls throughout the Allies' countries than the one given by the two highest generals of both Canada and the United States. Indeed recent history tells us that, when the commander-in-chief of the American army returned to his country, his brow crowned with glory, he immediately laid down his sword. The next day following his landing, he threw off his glorious insignia to resume among his fellow-citizens his usual share of labour and of activity and to beneficially serve his country in the walks of peace. Recently the Canadian press gave us the welcome information that the chief commanding officer of the Canadian Army, Sir Arthur Currie, had also laid aside his arms to endorse the honourable toga of Principal of McGill University. By such an admirable behaviour, these generals and privates who, once returned home, become the masters in useful and practical enterprises, these high servants of true prosperity, should win the approval of our statesmen. The Government should take its cue from General Currie, who declines the position of chief of the army in days of peace in order to accept that of being the principal of an university.

Moreover, this spectacle of our generals and of our privates recall a fact of ancient history. In the days when Rome was waging war against the Æqui, in the 5th century, B.C., fortune was adverse to the Roman armies; Consul Minucius' troops were surrounded in the mountains; their destruction was at hand. In her dismay, Rome thought of Cincinnatus. He was then retired upon his small not of some 4 acres, where he lived most frugally. Rome's envoys found the hero bent upon his spade. He put on his Roman toga to receive the Senate's orders; he was made dictator; he returned to the old city of Romulus; he organized a new army. He flied to the battlefield, crushed the Æqui, saved the consul and his army, exalted in power and in glory, Rome, his fatherland; then he returned to his plough.

Hon. Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. FORTIER: That was the action of a great soul. History admired it and has taken pleasure in relating it to the following centuries. Indeed it seems to me that the spirit of Cincinnatus still lives in the minds of our soldiers. After 4 years of bloody and freedom-giving warfare, they have melted their cannons into ploughshares and, after distinguishing themselves as liberators, they have set themselves to the task of producing the daily bread for their country.

Another expenditure, improvident, useless and contrary to the interests of this country, is that brought about by the nationalization of the railways. Such a policy is false in principle; it is, moreover, disastrous in its sequel. That which in our country contributes to render this nationalization impracticable, is the very same cause which has made of such a policy the greatest failure of our neighbours of the republic to the south of us. It has been demonstrated here, through an experience acquired at our own expense, that Government operation of a railroad system, such as the Canadian Northern for instance, among other lines operated by private companies, constitutes an almost unwieldy ineffective and most expensive public service.

Did not the Minister of Railways corroborate this theory recently by imparting to the House the surprising information that the first year's operation of the Government-owned railways leaves us with a deficit of $47,000,000.

Nowhere in the different departments has the Government practised the same doctrine of economy it has been preaching to the people. The Ministry has spent money lavishly for undertakings of a public nature for which no urgent necessity was shown, such as the shipbuilding programme and the regrettable adventure in state ownership of railways. The taxes levied by the new Budget, rendered necessary by the Government's extravagance, are odious to the entire people, who, with one voice, roundly condemn them. It is with the most heartfelt sincerity that I bring my support to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). I note with pleasure that this amendment expounds the same doctrine as that espoused by the Liberal party in the resolution adopted at the great convention of August, 1919.

The fiscal policy of the Liberal party, responsible for Canada's prosperity during the fifteen years of Laurier's administration, is alone capable of correcting the many evils with which we are beset—the high cost of living and the social unrest which has followed in the wake of the late war. This policy, adopted unanimously by the entire Liberal party at the most representative, the most imposing, the most enthusiastic convention that ever has been seen, that perhaps ever will be seen, in our political history, composed of delegates from every part of the country, is the policy that the voters of this country will shortly carry to triumph at the polls, since an election must be held in the near future.

I cannot keep expressing my deep conviction that this Government will very shortly be forced to go to the people. This is very likely the last session of the present Parliament. At all events, one thing is certain: the people want this session to be the last, and they want a general election this year. My opinion that an election is coming in the fall is not the result of any ministerial pronouncement; it is rather the effect of an official denial. In the course of the present debate the hon. Minister of Marine said:

"Speaking for the Government, it has been said before, but I will state it again now, there is no reason why we should go to the country until the full term of this Parliament has expired."

This statement reveals the ardent wishes of certain members of the Cabinet and of their faithful friends on the Government side; their attitude, however, is not justified by present conditions; they are flying in the face of public opinion. Moreover, the exact date of an election has always been guarded with the greatest secrecy by those in power, up to the very day of dissolution. Such is the custom followed in our political life, so there is nothing to be astonished at if the Government choose to make an official denial of its intentions in this respect the better to mislead the Opposition.

But the people have their rights. We have had no election, no domestic policy, since 1911. The 1917 election had only one object: carry on the war. The people were promised that Union Government would be instituted for that sole purpose and that once its special mission accomplished Parliament would be dissolved and a policy of reconstruction and peace-time administration submitted to the country.

The unionist idea was borrowed elsewhere. Did we get it from the United Kingdom? At any rate it was on his return from England that the Prime Minister announced his intention of forming a Union Government since he had failed in his attempt to bring about a coalition Ministry in this country.

Shortly after the armistice the British Government went to the polls. The war was over and Lloyd George did not wish to sit at the Peace Conference until he had redeemed his pledge to the British people.

Here in Canada, after November 11th, 1918, the Union Governement declared that it was in duty bound to carry on until after demobilisation, until the soldiers were returned to their homes. An election, said the Governement, should not be held until the soldiers were back from the trenches and were able to have their say on public questions. We arrived at this state of things some time ago and still the Governement despite its former promises and solemn pledges, insists on staying in office.

However, this stupid resistance to public opinion cannot last. The people have their rights and they will see to it that the Government is shamed into keeping its word. To-day the most important Cabinet offices have no incumbent; the Eastern Provinces are practically unrepresented at the Council table. Not one of the new ministers is willing to risk a bye-election.

During the numerous bye-elections which were held lately, people everywhere condemned the policy of the Union Government. The administration do not inspire confidence any more and is in duty bound to break up Parliament now and to appeal to the people.

Mr. DUFF: On behalf of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) I beg to move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Rt. Hon. Mr. Doherty the House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. (Saturday).

Monday, May 31, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

MUNITIONS RESOURCES COMMISSION.

FINAL REPORT PRESENTED—COMMISSION DISSOLVED.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): I beg to lay on the Table the final report, together with a number of interim reports, of the Munitions Resources Commission. I understand that there is a sufficient supply of these reports to enable each hon. member to obtain a copy. I also beg to lay on the Table copy of an Order in Council dissolving the commission, which has now completed its work.

COPY OF ORDER IN COUNCIL TABLED.

P.C. No. 1005, dated May 20, 1920, respecting engagement of seamen in the Royal Canadian Navy.

NORTHWEST GAME ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 151, to amend the Northwest Game Act.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The amendment is merely to change the seasons for the hunting of certain animals in the Northwest Territories, in one case to make them comply with the advancing sun, and in another case to make them the same as in British Columbia.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

[Mr. Fortier.]

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 152, to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The purpose of this amendment is to enlarge the opportunities of placer mining in the Yukon. The Yukon has been pretty well developed to its capacity, or rather, I should say, as that might be a dangerous statement, that it has been developed so far that now the prospect of the placer mining worker is not so alluring as it was. This Bill enlarges the area on new creeks and old creeks over which the miner may prospect and enlarges also the rights for which he may record.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SENATE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill No. 148 (from the Senate), for the relief of Lockhart Pierce Sutton.—Mr. Douglas (Strathcona).

THE WEST INDIES CONFERENCE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Maisonneuve): May I ask my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, what is the object of the present conference in Ottawa between the delegates of the West Indies and the Canadian Government? Is the object purely a commercial one, or is there something else?

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The object is briefly as follows: In 1912, a conference was held which resulted in the arrangement of a ten years' reciprocal trade agreement between Canada and the West Indies. That agreement has still two years to run. Transport and cable facilities were also arranged for at the same conference. It has been considered wise that we should meet together a little in advance of the time when the old arrangement would expire, to take into consideration exactly the same subjects, so what is being considered, and what will be considered, at the present conference is, first, the trade relations of the two sections of the Empire as regards preference and objects or lists of preference; second, the improvement of transport facilities, both as to passengers and freights, making them more uniform, and, if possible, more widely distributed, and more commodious; third, the improvement of cable facilities, which have been very poor during the past year or two, and which it is necessary to have improved in the interests of trade and communication. Those are the three matters, and those alone, which are under consideration.

Mr. LEMIEUX: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to be allowed to implement my question. I see by the press that there is quite a campaign in favour of the political annexation of the West Indies to Canada. Could my right hon. friend give the House any information he may have on the subject, or has he given us all the information?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I thought I met my hon. friend's question when I explained the three objects of the conference, and said that those, and those alone, were the objects of the conference. The Government is not responsible for individual or associated campaigns, real or fictitious, for annexation.

NEWSPRINT SUPPLY.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Russell): May I ask the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) whether he has received any communication from the United States Government relative to the appointment of a commission to inquire into the matter of newsprint, that is to say, into the pulp and paper question, and, if so, whether any action has been taken, and whether any papers which there may be in connection with the matter will be brought down?

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): I may inform my hon. friend that I have no information in the matter apart from what has been reported in the public press.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill No. 128 (from the Senate), for the relief of Francis Charles Dean.—Mr. Mowat.

Bill No. 129 (from the Senate), for the relief of John James Garrison.—Mr. Mowat.

Bill No. 130 (from the Senate), for the relief of Dora Lumsden MacLaurin.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 133 (from the Senate), for the relief of Edith Sarah Bell.—Mr. Douglas (Strathcona).

Bill No. 134 (from the Senate), for the relief of Albert Graham Elson.—Mr. Douglas (Strathcona).

Bill No. 132 (from the Senate), respecting the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada. —Mr. Blake.

SECOND READING.

Bill No. 136 (from the Senate), for the relief of James Lyon Lincoln Cobbin.—Mr. Douglas (Strathcona).

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. W. B. COLE.

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Is W. B. Cole employed in the Civil Service Commission or the Organization Branch of that Commission?
2. If so, who were his antecedents?
3. Was he previously engaged in any department in the Civil Service?
4. If so, what were his duties and what were the reasons for his leaving said department?
5. Through what medium did he become an employee of the Civil Service Commission?
6. What university or college, if any, has he graduated from, or what educational training has he received?
7. What duties does he perform in his present position, what special qualifications has he to fit him for the position he occupies, and what are his responsibilities?
8. What remuneration does he receive from the Civil Service Commission?
9. Has he anything to do with the classification of any department or departments?
10. If so, what departments or branches?

Rt. HON. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Yes.
2. English parentage.
3. Yes.
4. As leveller with the International Boundary Commission; map compilation in the Chief Geographers Office, and correspondence, auditing and progress charts in the Superintending Accountants Branch, Department of the Interior; loaned to the Civil Service Commission as a helper on classification work, and as ability to perform the required duties was demonstrated, the transfer of Mr. Cole to the staff of the Civil Service Commission was requested.
5. By temporary loan, trial and transfer.
6. Educational training has consisted of public school course, matriculation and a course in Civil Engineering with the International Correspondence Schools, followed by intensive reading and study on the ground in connection with organization classification and efficiency methods.
7. Under supervision, assisting in making investigations and surveys and preparing reports thereon. His special qualifications consist of twenty years' office, business and engineering experience, several years of which was spent with various departments of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and understudying the Industrial Engineers employed by the Civil Service Commission for the purpose of classifying the Canadian Civil Service. At present employed, under direction, in maintaining the work of the Organization Branch in connection with the departments assigned.

8. $1,600 per annum plus such cost of living bonus as may be paid according to law.

9. Yes.

10. Under direct supervision the classification of parts of:

(a) Board of Pension Commissioners.

(b) Department of Marine.

(c) Department of Naval Service.

COMMONS CHAMBER—CENTRAL FLOORING.

*Mr BROUILLARD:

1. Of what material is the flooring in the centre of the new Commons Chamber composed, and where did it originally come from?

2. What price was paid for the said flooring per unit of measure, or of weight?

3. What material was used to fill in the spaces between the boards in the said floor, and where did this filling originally come from?

4. What price was paid for the said filling per unit of measure, or of weight?

5. What was the total cost of the said floor laid in position, and before being covered by a carpet?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. Teak with small ebony strips; the teak is imported from India; the ebony cannot trace origin of this particular lot, the tree is found in India, Burmah, South Africa and West Indies. This floor was purchased in the regular manner from wholesale lumber dealers by the contractor who manufactured and laid it. It is impossible to state the exact origin of the materials.

2. $1.74 per superficial foot.

3. Ebony, as answered by answer to question number 1.

4. Average cost of ebony is 20 cents a pound or 4.2 cents per lineal foot which is included in unit cost of floor as given in answer to question number 2.

5. $2,955.

TOWER OF PARLIAMENT BUILDING.

*Mr. BROUILLARD:

1. Has the attention of the Government been drawn to a despatch from Ottawa which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on May 10 last, as follows:—

"Cylinder for Tower.

"Ottawa Masonic Event Given Historic Significance.

"Ottawa, May 8.—The visit of Zetland Lodge, A.F. and A.M., Toronto, to the Lodge of Fidelity here has taken historic craft significance. Following a visit to the Parliament Buildings yesterday morning, when the members of the two lodges were shown through the buildings by Mr. J. B. Hunter, Deputy Minister of Public Works, and Mr. John Pearson, the architect, it was arranged that a record of the visit should be placed in a cylinder and be deposited in the masonry of the tower of the building. This cylinder will contain the names of the officers of Zetland Lodge, of the visitors, and of the officers of Fidelity Lodge, whose guests they were while in the city."

2. With whom was the arrangement made to deposit Masonic records in the masonry of the tower of the new Parliament Building, and who authorized the making of such an arrangement?

3. Will other societies in Canada be accorded a like privilege?

4. If so, with whom should the necessary arrangements be made, and when should the records be ready for deposit in the masonry of the tower of the said Parliament Building?

5. If other societies will not be accorded the privilege mentioned, on what ground is discrimination made in favour of the Masonic Society?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. No.

2. No arrangement has been made and there was no such suggestion.

3, 4, and 5. Answered by answer to question No. 2.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS ON INDIAN RESERVES.

Mr. JOHNSTON:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to erect any new school buildings on Indian reserves this year?

2. If so, how many, on what reserves and in which federal constituency?

3. Are the new buildings to replace the old buildings?

4. If so, when were the old buildings erected?

5. Is it the intention of the Government to erect a new school building on Gordon's Indian Reserve, Saskatchewan, this year?

6. Is it a fact that an amount was placed in the Estimates in the year 1914 for the erection of a new school building on this reserve?

7. Is it a fact that the present school building is not large enough to accommodate nearly all the Indian children applying for admittance?

8. Is it a fact that the present building is unsanitary, without proper drainage, water supply, heating and ventilation?

9. Is it a fact that there were fifty-three cases of influenza amongst the pupils of this school during the winter of 1918-19, resulting in three deaths; that they have since had typhoid and other infectious diseases, and that there is not a spare room in the building for taking care of sick pupils?

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN:

1. Yes.

2. Two. Peguis Reserve, Selkirk, Man.; Walpole Island Reserve, Kent, Ont.

3. Perguis Center—a new school building. The other to replace an old building.

4. Walpole Island, 1882.

5. Final decision has not been made.

6. Yes.

7. A larger school building would be more serviceable.

8. The present building was erected in 1894. Modern methods of drainage, etc., would, undoubtedly be more satisfactory.

9. Only two deaths from influenza occurred during the winter of 1918-19, and two cases of typhoid were reported upon during November of last year.

BOARD OF PENSION COMMISSIONERS' EMPLOYEES.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. What is the nature of the employment, the respective salaries and war records of the following gentlemen who are employed by the Pensions Board; K. Archibald, J. J. Patton, W. O. Gliddon, W. H. Measures, F. C. Baker, R. Belanger, J. C. Germain, J. Brown, C. Hagan, J. Little, J. B. Lewis, F. C. Knowles, L. King, J. Sleeman, J. Williams, A. C. McAnulty, J. Miller, C. Belton?

2. Was the minister, during last session, asked as to whether the service of the said gentlemen could be dispensed with and their positions filled by returned soldiers?

3. If so, why has such procedure not been carried out?

4. How many female clerks are there in the said board who (a) receive a salary of less than $900, per annum, and (b) receive over $900 per annum?

5. Could not the services of said female clerks be dispensed with and these positions filled by returned soldiers?

Mr. HUGH CLARK:

1. K. Archibald, director and departmental solicitor, salary $4,800 per annum. No military service. Twice rejected, certified physically unfit by Standing Medical Board, Militia Headquarters, M.D. No. 4, Montreal, 25-10-16; J. A. W. Paton, assistant secretary, salary $2,900 per annum. No military service. Three times rejected; Dr. W. O. Gliddon, assistant medical adviser, salary $4,000 per annum. No military service. Neurological expert; W. H. Measures, principal clerk, salary $1,800 per annum. Service in Canada, C.O.T.C. 1-1-16 to 28-1-18. Seconded for duty in War Committee of the Cabinet, Ottawa, as chief clerk. Enlisted Toronto, 25-11-15. Rejected on account of congenital disease of the eyes. Joined Canadian Officers Training Co. (University of Toronto Contingent). Taken on subordinate staff M.D. No. 2, 1-1-16, employed as orderly room sergeant, School of Musketry, M.D. No. 2, and confidential clerk to Col. Vincent Massey. Employment will cease 31-7-20; F. C. Baker, head clerk, salary $2,200 per annum. Service with Permanent Force 7-10-10 to 30-4-18. Twelve years with Imperial Army, South African war, 1900-1902. Transfer to C.E.F., refused by Militia Headquarters. Seconded to B.P.C., 1-10-16; R. Belanger, senior clerk, salary $1,700 per annum. No military service; Capt. W. L. Germaine, head clerk, salary $2,900 per annum. Service in Canada, C.A.P.C. and C.A.S.C. 27-5-15 to 28-2-17, age 49, volunteered for service overseas but was retained in Canada for duty by the Military Authorities; H. J. Brown, accountant clerk, salary $1,100 per annum. Service in Canada, England and France 1-9-15 to 25-11-18. Awarded M.M. C. Hagan, senior clerk, salary $1,400 per annum. Service in Canada, Permanent Force 2-6-15 to 30-4-18. Physically unfit; J. Kittle, senior clerk, salary $1,800 per annum. Service in Canada. Permanent Force and 72nd Battery. C.E.F., 12-6-16 to 28-12-17. Physically unfit; A. Lewis, senior clerk, salary $1,400 per annum. Service Permanent Force, Canada, 6-12-15 to 17-11-17 and R.A.F. Canada, 18-11-17 to 11-1-19; F. C. Knowles, not employed in B.P.C.; Capt. E. King, head clerk, salary $2,900. Enlisted Permanent Force 14-9-14. Discharged 23-1-17. Gazetted Captain Active Militia 24-1-17. Seconded for duty to B.P.C. Age 43; G. A. Sleeman, senior statistical clerk, salary $1,700 per annum. No military service. Age 53. Transferred from Pensions and Claims Board to B.P.C. 1-10-16; P. Williams, clerk, salary $1,100 per annum. No military service. Physically unfit; C. A. McAnulty, senior clerk, salary $1,300 per annum. Under age but served in R.A.F. Canada 20-3-18 to 28-1-19; J. Miller, senior clerk, salary $1,300. Service Permanent Force, Canada, 22-4-16 to 1-4-18; Col. C. W. Belton, medical adviser, salary $5,000 per annum. Permanent Force, Canada, 17-6-17 to date.

2. A request was made to the Government in the course of debate in the House of Commons that a careful inquiry be made into the matter of staff of the Board of Pension Commissioners with a view to replacing with men of overseas service, and who are capable, those members of the staff who had no overseas service.

3. The services of several members of the staff who were not returned soldiers have been dispensed with since last session. It is the policy of the Board of Pension Commissioners ultimately to retain only returned soldiers in its employ, but the work in connection with demobilization required the retention of the men above mentioned who are thoroughly conversant with pension work. None but returned soldiers are now being engaged or have been engaged during the past year.

At present the male staff of the board over the age of 18 years numbers 305. Of this number 266 saw service overseas; 17 saw service only in Canada; 5 were medically unfit; 7 were in the Permanent Force; 5 were over military age; 1 was honourably exempted; 4 saw no service at all.

4. (a) Number of female clerks who receive a salary of less than $900 per annum, 542.

(b) Number of female clerks who receive a salary of over $900 per annum, 101.

5. Any female clerks whose services can be dispensed with and their places filled by returned soldiers at a similar salary will be dispensed with. As many of these female clerks are stenographers and filing clerks their services are in most cases indispensable.

NEW PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS.

*Mr. BROUILLARD:

1. What was the total cost of the new Government station and heating plant on Cliff and Vittoria streets, Ottawa?

2. What was the total cost of the tunnel and pipes leading from the said heating plant to the Parliament Buildings and to other Government buildings?

3. Does the total cost of the said heating station, plant, tunnel and pipes form part of the new Parliament Building?

4. What has been the cost of the latter building to date?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. $538,921.04.

2. Total cost of tunnel, $157,166.97; cost of pipes in tunnel unknown, as they form portion of the $386,000 contract for heating and ventilating the Parliament Buildings.

3. Yes.

4. $7,361,360.56.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Mr. LEGER:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents relating to the closing of the life-saving station at Richibuctoo Beach, in the county of Kent, N.B.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN.

Mr. ANDREWS:

1. What is the average cost per settler to the Government for which there will be no return from the settler in administering the Land Settlement Act to date?

[Mr. H. Clark.]

2. How does this cost compare with that of bringing Central Europeans to Canada during the Laurier Administration?

3. Is the Land Settlement Act regarded by the Government as a re-establishment scheme for returned soldiers or a colonization and agricultural scheme?

4. What amount of money has been paid by the board to the Provincial Government of Manitoba for land purchased under the Soldier Settlement Act?

5. What amount of money has been paid by the board as purchase price for land through the firm of Messrs. Kennedy, Kennedy & Kennedy, barristers, Winnipeg?

6. How many parcels of land submitted to the board by Messrs. Allan, Killam & McKay, agents, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, were purchased by the board, and how many rejected?

7. How do these figures compare with purchases through other agents at the time commission for purchases was allowed?

THE BUDGET.

DEBATE CONTINUED ON THE ANNUAL STATEMENT PRESENTED BY THE MINISTER OF FINANCE.

The House resumed, from Friday, May 28, the debate on the motion of Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make my contribution to the debate on the Budget, let me say at the outset that I hope to detain the House for no very great length of time. We have been debating the matter now for almost two weeks and naturally there remains little that can be added to the discussion that has already taken place. Before I come to discuss the proposals outlined in the speech delivered by the hon. the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), I wish to refer briefly to some of the criticisms directed against our Progressive group at this end of the Chamber by some hon. members on the other side of the House.

I have in mind particularly at the present time the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) who spoke for almost two hours in this Chamber and, during the greater part of his speech, endeavoured to describe, or to criticise, certain actions of the grain growers and the farmers, which certainly was not relevant to the subject of debate. The criticisms were, I might add, very far wide of the mark indeed.

My hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) seems to be very much exercised over the continuation of the Canada Wheat Board. He attributes the formation of that board, and the effort to maintain it, to the farmers of this country. I believe he even suggested that some of the members who sit behind me were desirous of seeing this board continued. Well in that regard, I am expressing my own personal opinion, and I think the opinion of those who sit around me, when I say that Government control in matters of this kind is not desirable as a permanent policy. My hon. friend, however, saw fit to take a different position. He apparently is quite desirous that this control shall cease at the earliest possible moment. I would suggest to him that he consult the Government as to what their policy for the future in the matter is. It does not lie with members on this side of the House, nor does it lie with the members particularly sitting around me, to say what the policy of the Government is to be in this respect. I would suggest to my hon. friend that if he is very anxious that this control should cease he might consult the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Commons who, I understand, is strongly in favour of the continuation of the board. I would also suggest that he keep his eye on the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) and the hon. Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder) because if he does he may learn that the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Immigration and Colonization are perhaps now harbouring the thought of maintaining this control as a permanent policy in order that they can appeal to the farmers of Canada with it as an offset to their tariff demands. I would suggest that consideration to my hon. friend.

My hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) also saw fit to refer to the profits that had been made by the farmers' organizations and particularly that one with which I am associated. I do not know that this is a subject that is of much interest in this debate to the members of the House. I desire to say, however, that I will be very glad indeed to give my hon. friend, at any time, all the information he desires on that point and I certainly hope it will lead him to a more correct understanding than that which he displayed in his criticism. His criticism, based upon the statement that a profit of 211 per cent was made by the terminal elevator operated by the United Grain Growers, is altogether wide of the mark. This elevator is leased from the Canadian Pacific railway and I wish to point out to my hon. friend if he wishes to be fair in the matter that back of that there is an investment of over $2,000,000 in country elevators for the purpose of gathering the grain that is sent to this terminal elevator. If my hon. friend wishes to be fair he must take that into account in any criticism he makes of it.

He also referred to the profits made by the Grain Growers Export Company of New York, a subject which also furnished a fruitful topic to the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards). It is true we have an export company in New York. It is organized under the New York state laws. It is true that with a capital of $100,000 the company earned $500,000 in 1915. But the explanation lies in this, that the company enjoyed exceptional privileges of credit. Our bank loans ran very high and the total amount of grain that was handled and which furnished the profit mentioned, was over 86,000,000 bushels. I ask my hon. friend if less than one-half of one per cent on the turn-over which was the fact in this case is an excessive profit. If my hon. friend wants to be fair I would suggest this other consideration, Mr. Speaker: I do not like at any time to parade before the public my patriotism or the patriotism of my friends but I think it may be interesting to my hon. friend to know that when the stress and trouble in connection with food supplies came upon us, when the Allies centralized their organization in Europe and extended their organization in America to handle grain, the Grain Growers Export Company, these profiteers whom my hon. friend described, turned over for absolutely nothing in return, their whole organization to the Wheat Export Company representing the British Government in New York, and for twenty-two months we served that organization with no return save salaries and expenses. We purchased and forwarded on ocean vessels for them over 197,000,000 bushels of oats and as I have said, we got not one cent out of it.

My hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) also had something to say the other night. He, at any rate, spoke with a certainty of knowledge that leaves no doubt of conviction in his own mind regardless of whether he is able to successfully convince other members in the House.

An hon. MEMBER: Not much.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend seems to think that I am the abettor and the backer, and the supporter of the One Big Union idea in Canada. He even charged me with being responsible for sending Mrs. Rose Henderson to Timiskaming in order to assist in the election of my hon. friend from that constituency (Mr. McDonald). I may say, Mr. Speaker, that it was practically the first time I ever heard of Mrs. Rose Henderson—I have not the privilege of the lady's acquaintance. My hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) states that she is a very estimable lady although he does not agree with her views. On the face of it I think I would be prepared to accept the judgment of that hon. member in preference to that of my hon. friend from Algoma. Be that as it may, it was rather a cheap, shall I say, rather a small effort on the part of my hon. friend from Algoma. If he knows anything of my record in the public life of this country he knows that I do not do the sort of thing he described. I will tell you the probable reason for my hon. friend's attitude. He went himself into the constituency of Timiskaming to aid the Minister of the Interior, and others of the cabinet ministers, in preaching the gospel of Union Government, and I rather think that when he was there he contracted, or rather developed, an attack of political delirium tremens, and since then he has been imagining things. Well, that is not a very profitable business for my hon. friend. Personally I think the members of the O.B.U. are entirely misguided—it is a misguided movement. But I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness: The O.B.U. movement in this country is largely the product of unjust conditions in the life of the country. If my hon. friend desires to see it removed from the sphere of influence in Canadian affairs, let him direct his attention to the removal of the causes that led to the movement rather than indulge in criticism of those who have nothing whatever to do with it.

Now I come to the Budget. I am free to say that the Finance Minister did a useful piece of work for Canada when he frankly disclosed to the House and the country what the actual financial position of the Dominion is. Bearing in mind the vast stretches of Canada, and the fact that our people have been unaccustomed in the past to closely study national affairs, it takes a little time for this outstanding fact to be driven home to us: that the net debt of this country is over two and a quarter billions of dollars. My hon. friend, I think, also displayed some courage, in fact a great deal of courage, in imposing new taxation —he displayed a great deal of courage because much of his taxation is bad instead of good. Nevertheless it was perhaps an honest effort to get the money necessary to carry on the business of the country. Now my hon. friend stated that the Estimates already submitted for the year—as indeed the House was aware from information already in its possession—called for an expenditure of $550,000,000, and the Supplementary Estimates have yet to be presented. Against that he proposes to raise this year $381,000,000 by taxation of various kinds. As hon. members can see at a glance that leaves a very coniderable difference, and my hon. friend, the Finance Minister, hopes to make this up in large degree by balances that are due from the Motherland. Well, this simply emphasizes, more strongly than anything else could, the rather serious financial condition that Canada is in at the present time. We will require to raise probably at least $350,000,000 a year, for several years to come, and the amount may easily reach $400,000,000.

Now, as my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) pointed out, there are two aspects of this question: You can have expenditure and you can devise ways and means of taxation to meet that expenditure; but you will accomplish the same purpose, Mr. Speaker, if you cut down your expenditure, and I claim that is what we should endeavour to do in this country. I say that absolutely the first essential for the Government of Canada to undertake is to bring our national expenditure within the limits of our national income. We cannot go on borrowing; and when you contemplate raising $400,000,000 a year from the Canadian people for federal purposes it certainly emphasizes the necessity of reducing our expenditure in every possible way. We find in the Estimates large items for public works, for harbours, and for the Militia. Many of these—some of them at any rate—are in excess of what the Estimates were in the pre-war period. If we are to get right on this matter, the Government must economize. We must drastically prune our expenditures down to the very last point; we must do simply what an individual has to do in similar circumstances.

My hon. friend, the Finance Minister, has imposed some new taxation, and I am bound to say that this taxation will press most heavily upon the people of this country who are least able to bear it. The Minister of the Interior rather endeavoured to convey the impression that this new taxation was altogether in the way of luxury taxes. It is not a luxury tax; it is as much, and even more, a tax upon the necessaries of life than it is on luxuries. A $45 suit of clothes a luxury! Why, with the increased cost of living that represents not more than $20 in value before the war, and even then it would require a very great stretch of imagination to conceive that a $20 suit was a luxury. But these taxes weigh heavily in other ways. In the case of a $45 suit a tax of ten per cent on the full value; in the case of a cap costing more than $2, ten per cent on the full value. Well, we have a cold climate in the West, and we require caps there for several months in the year, and I want to tell the Finance Minister that you cannot get a cap that will protect you from the rigours of a western winter for $2 or anything like that sum. Consequently every farmer who has a family, and every working man who has a family and struggling hard, it may be, to clothe and feed them when he goes out to purchase these necessary supplies for himself and his children has to pay this additional tax. Is that lessening the cost of living? Is it not rather imposing an additional heavy burden upon those who are already finding it extremely difficult to make both ends meet? But in these proposals we find that the same rate of taxation is imposed on velvets, silks and silk embroideries, cut glass and ivory handled knives as is imposed on such actual necessaries as woollens, cottons, and boots and shoes. That seems to me to be rather an unfair discrimination against the man of limited means.

Now, my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) has reduced the business profits tax. I think there is something to be said against the principle of such a tax as a peace measure; but there was absolutely nothing to be said against it as a war measure of taxation. The fact of the matter is, however, that we have collected since the outbreak of war not one-quarter, yes, not one-tenth the amount of business profit tax that should have been collected from those who had the opportunity to make excessive profits during the war.

In regard to the income tax, the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) takes considerable credit to himself for increasing it. What is the actual increase under the proposal he has brought down? The man with an income of $5,000 will pay $6 more tax that he does at present; the man with an income of $10,000 will pay $29.50 more; the man with an income of $20,000 is burdened with an additional tax of $99.50; the man with an income of $50,000 will pay $459.50 more than now, and the man with an income of $100,000 will have $1,559.50 more extracted from his pocket. Is that a substantial increase in the income tax? Let us compare our figures with the relative figures under the British income tax law. In Great Britain a man with a $5,000 income is taxed $750, as against $126 under our system; a man with an income of $10,000 is taxed $2,250 in Great Britain, while in Canada he is taxed $619.50; the man who is favoured with an income of $20,000 pays in Great Britain an income tax of $6,812.50, but in Canada he pays $2,089.50; and the man enjoying an income of $100,000 in Great Britain pays $47,187 by way of income tax, compared with our rate of $32,749.

My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) took a great deal of pleasure the other evening in presenting to this House the fact that on a $500,000 income we imposed a heavier tax than did the British authorities. But, Sir, we have very few people in this country whose incomes are $500,000 or over; while we have a great many whose incomes range from $10,000 to $100,000 a year. The new income tax proposal that the Government brings down places practically no additional burden on these people; the whole purpose and tenor of its Budget is to make the man least able to pay pay more, while the man best able to pay goes comparatively free. And then my hon. friends wonder at the unrest in this country!

Mr. COPP: Hear, hear.

Mr. CRERAR: Another very important announcement in the Budget was the Government's policy on the tariff question. For a long time there had been considerable doubt in the public mind as to where the Government were eventually going to land in the matter of a tariff policy; and there was a good deal of heart searching and anxiety on the part of a good many of my hon. friends opposite—the member for Simoce North (Mr. Currie) for instance, and several others. But whatever struggle may have gone on behind the scenes, the matter is now settled; at any rate, we must accept the declaration of policy made by the Minister of Finance. Undoubtedly there were two conflicting elements among the Government's supporters in regard to this question: There were those who believe in a low tariff policy; there were those who believe in a policy of adequate protection.

And I can well conceive the difficulties of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) and my hon. friend the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder) in reaching a decision upon the question, for during the period that has elapsed since last autumn, when a declaration of policy was looked for, considerable water has run under the bridge. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) has made some speeches throughout the country in an endeavour to feel out the public on this matter. Down in Quebec he told the shoe manufacturers: "We must have a policy of adequate protection for Canadian industries." In Kingston a little later he was speaking in favour of "moderate" protection.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman excuse me? I would ask him to quote what I said in Quebec. I did not use the word "adequate" at all. If he is ascribing to me certain statements, much the fairer way would be for him to quote exactly what, I said, particularly if he is endeavouring to distinguish between what I said in one place and what I said in another. As a matter of fact, there was no distinction whatever.

Mr. CRERAR: I was relying on press reports of what my hon. friend stated. But at Kingston I think he said that he was in favour of a system of moderate protection, while in Winnipeg apparently he was in favour of a tariff for revenue. I shall read to the House what my hon. friend said on that occasion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said a tariff for revenue and also for protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend when in Winnipeg is reported by the Winnipeg Telegram to have stated:

> I am not a high protectionist; I never was; and I do not believe it appropriate to this Dominion. The reason why I will give you in a minute. I am not a free trader, I never was, and I am perfectly convinced that it is not appropriate to this Dominion now. I believe in a moderate tariff. I believe in a moderate tariff for purposes of revenue, especially at this time.

That is the statement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Go on.

Mr. CRERAR: I will continue the quotation:

> I believe in it as well for the purpose of assuring the maintenance and expansion of industry.

But my hon. friend believes in a "moderate tariff" for the purposes of revenue. I would like to know where my hon. friend stands on this question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Exactly there.

Mr. CRERAR: Well, if my hon. friend stands "exactly there," he gave a most remarkable performance in this Chamber the other night when he decried the fiscal policy of Great Britain; and if anything was lacking to make clear the policy of the Government on this tariff question, it was furnished in the speech made by the hon. Minister of the Interior during this debate. But, I say, the Government have finally cleared the decks for action; they have come out for the old National Policy of protection.

An hon. MEMBER: Who?

Mr. CRERAR: The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) has declared himself—my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Henders) has not yet declared himself; I would not just at present ally him with that proposition. The Government's policy, I say, has finally emerged from the clouds of doubt and suspicion and mistrust that enveloped it, and it stands revealed before the country. What is it? It is the old National Policy of protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CRERAR: Nothing more. My hon. friends opposite applaud; they appreciate the fact that it is. I can well imagine the relief that comes to the minds of a good many of my hon. friends opposite because of this declaration of policy on the part of the Government; the matter is now clear. Well, Sir, I for one, welcome that declaration. The little group here which has the distinction of being called the Progressive group in this Parliament—there is no doubt where they stand on this tariff question. It is a question that we want to have discussed in Canada free from doubts and suspicions and mistrusts, and I welcome the emphatic declaration of the Government, made the other day, that they stand for the old National Policy, because now we know where we are at, and some of my friends on the opposite side who in the past have held low tariff views, also know, I take it, where they are at in this matter.

I now wish to deal at some length with the speech delivered by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) the other evening—one of the most remarkable performances, I am free to say, that has ever been made in this Parliament. My hon. friend set out to establish that free trade, so-called, in Great Britain had been a total failure. I think I am not incorrect in stating that summarized, his proposals practically fall under three headings. He sought to establish: first, that free trade had really retarded instead of helped British industry and British foreign trade and had made of Britain a nation of remittance men; second, that it had made the lot of the British workingman worse instead of better, and third, that it had seriously injured, in fact, had almost ruined, British agriculture. I do not think I am doing my hon. friend any injustice when I state that that was the position he took. Well, I certainly admire his courage in undertaking the job that he did. I have a great respect for the debating ability of my hon. friend; on a good many occasions in the history of the Canadian House of Commons he has had to defend doubtful cases and he has done it with much ability. But I really do not think, Mr. Speaker, that he ever tackled as hard a proposition as he tackled the other night.

The Minister of the Interior talked a great deal about the balance of trade. He argued that a country that had an adverse balance of trade was in a very bad way, and he cited the fact that British trade practically since 1850, when the change in their fiscal policy took place, had been on the wrong side; and this was evidence of the deterioration of Great Britain. He particularly stressed the point that at the present time Great Britain was importing seven billion dollars' worth of goods a year and selling only three billion dollars' worth and that the United States was exporting eight billion dollars' worth of goods and importing only three billion dollars' worth. Well, these abnormal trade figures are unquestionably largely due to the war and to the conditions arising out of the war. Trade all over the world, industry, business, have been paralyzed, have been disturbed to a greater extent than ever before in the world's history; consequently I submit that an argument based upon the trade figures for 1919, for instance, is not sound. It is true that the balance of trade has been against Great Britain for a number of years, but it has also been against Germany, against France, against Italy, against Russia — all protected countries. I do not wish to weary the House with the actual figures, but if my hon. friend will examine them he will find that such is the case. For instance, take the figures for 1895,—I have not the figures later than 1900, but it is well known that the same thing ruled in respect to Germany and the other countries right up to the beginning of the war. In 1895 the imports of the United Kingdom were £356,000,000 and the exports £226,000,000. But what was the condition of Germany, that highly protected country, held up by protectionists the world over as an example of the benefits of protection? Well, Germany imported in round numbers, £206,000,000 worth of goods in 1895, and exported £165,000,000 worth, and that continued all through the time of peace, right up to the outbreak of war, with every one of these countries except in the case of the United States.

4 p.m.

An hon. MEMBER: And Germany.

Mr. CRERAR: I have not the figures for the years immediately prior to the war, but I am informed that the imports of Germany exceeded her exports.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Practically even.

Mr. CRERAR: Practically even; I am quite willing to take my hon. friend's statement. But it is not the adverse balance of trade that counts in the prosperity of a nation. How has England prospered—because she has prospered, despite all that my hon. friend says—in the face of an advese balance of trade? We find the facts very clearly stated by a noted British economist, no less a person than the editor of the London Economist, which is regarded as the leading financial journal not only of Great Britain but of the world. He says that the balance has been made up in this way:

First: Shipping freights. Our ships carry goods to and from them all over the world.

If Britain had been following a protectionist policy for the last seventy years, would her ships be going into every harbour and port of the world? Without any question they would not.

Second: Interest coupons. The American securities held by English investors yield a constant income in interest, to meet which the United States has to send goods.

My hon. friend practically stated that the other night, but he made this other remarkable statement: that it was the accumulated wealth of Great Britain prior to 1850 that had enabled her to make these investments in foreign countries and thus to overcome the handicaps that free trade had brought to her. There is one other item that helps to make up the balance:

Third: Insurance facilities. The English insurance companies and firms do a large business in the United States and draw thence a regular income in premiums.

Another result of the free trade policy of Great Britain. Then, banking facilities. Why, it is a well known fact that London was the international clearing house for the business of the world; that there was not a bank or a broker in London who did not take toll in some form of the business of the world. The United States a protected country! If the United States wanted to pay for goods bought in China, she invariably did so by a draft on London; and it was the toll thus taken, the commissions and premiums earned on these transactions, that adjusted the balance of trade. I cannot for the life of me understand why my hon. friend bases his argument on the adverse balance of trade of Great Britain. We have a good example in Switzerland. I am told that Switzerland has nearly always had an adverse balance of trade, yet it is one of the most prosperous countries in Europe. Therefore, the argument that an adverse balance of trade is necesarily bad for a country does not hold water.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Switzerland has tourist traffic.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend also made the statement which I referred to a moment ago, that Great Britain was living on the accumulated wealth she had made prior to 1850, and his picture of the United Kingdom in a state of decay and senility was certainly the strangest caricature I have ever listened to at any time or in any place.

What are the facts in respect to the trade of Great Britain? The domestic exports of Great Britain for the five years ending 1805 were £39,000,000, and for the five years ending 1850 £61,000,000, or an increase of about £22,000,000 in fifty years. That was under the policy of protection which Great Britain had pursued up to that time. But what happened immediately a change took place in her fiscal policy? For the five years ending with 1900 the total domestic exports of Great Britain were £253,000,000, or an increase of no less than £192,000,000 in fifty years under free trade, as against an increase of £22,000,000 in the fifty years preceding under a policy of protection. This great increase of £192,000,000, I repeat, took place under free trade, after the change had been made in Great Britain's fiscal policy. Why, it is all nonsense to say that the change in the fiscal policy of Great Britain was not the one essential factor in her prosperity.

As far as investments abroad that Great Britain has made are concerned, those investments have been made for the most part in the last forty or fifty years, comparatively few being made prior to 1850. The fact of the matter is this: It is not the balance of trade that counts, but the total volume of trade. If we are buying more goods than we are selling, how can we pay for them? We cannot always ship gold, and if we sell more goods than we buy, how are we to be paid for them? My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) pointed out a very true fact when he said that Canada for many years to come will have to export about $200,000,000 more every year than she imports. What is that for? It is to pay the interest on the moneys we have borrowed abroad, but once that is cleared off, the position will be changed.

My hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) also spoke of the tinplate industry in the United Kingdom, and he lauded the example of the United States which imposed a high tariff in 1891 on tinplate coming from the United Kingdom. He argued, as I believe the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) argued, that that was a good thing for the United States, and they held it up as a good example for Canada. But was it a good thing for the United States? I do not think my hon. friend could have taken a worse example than tinplate to illustrate his argument. What happened? Prior to 1891, when the United States was importing tinplate practically free of duty, the canning industry in the United States had grown to large dimensions. They were canning fruits and vegetables and fish, and were selling them to all the markets of the world. But what took place immediately the United States Government imposed a heavy duty on tinplate from Britain? It is true that it gave employment to 15,000 people in the United States, but on the other hand it made it difficult for 2,000,000 people to carry on their business. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior smiles, but he will get the argument if he follows me closely, because his mind is pretty acute. The cost of tinplate by the duty, which the American Government imposed, was raised to the canning industries of the United States to the point where they could not profitably make their goods and ship them abroad, and immediately there arose an agitation in the United States for a reduction of the duty, and it was reduced. But that did not meet the case. Later on, the United States Government introduced the drawback principle in respect of tinplate imported into that country, and they said to the canning industries of the United States: "If you buy tinplate, pay a duty on it and re-export it in the shape of containers of canned goods, you will get a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty." What happened? The American canning industries bought Welsh tinplate, paid the duty on it, made it into cans, and canned their fruits and vegetables and shipped them back to London, England, and got the drawback of 99 per cent. The result was that the British consumer in London was able to buy canned goods made in the United States cheaper than the people of the United States were buying the same goods. If we study this example there is large room, very large room, for a difference of opinion as to protection being a sound method by which to build up industry. What has happened in the United States and what has happened in this country under protection, is that a small number of people employed in the industry protected have benefited, while the large mass of the people have suffered through the increased cost of living. That is the inevitable result of the system.

My hon. friend was in his happiest mood, I think, when he spoke of the poverty that existed in Great Britain. He quoted figures and statistics, and extracts from books, to show what a hapless and luckless position the poor workingman in Great Britain was in. He quoted from an authority, Gray and Turner, I think it was, and he stated that Mr. Gray was an economist of considerable note who had done investigational work in Canada and in the United States. As a matter of fact, Mr. Gray was a clergyman interested in social questions; he was not an economist any more, I was going to say, than my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior is an economist. He was a clergyman, and naturally he was interested in social questions. My hon. friend also quoted Sir William Booth. I do not know whether he was referring to General Booth, the leader of the Salvation Army or not, but I take it that he was. Then he quoted Mr. Rowntree. Who is Mr. Rowntree? Mr. Rowntree was a great temperance reformer in Great Britain, and the whole argument and purpose of the book upon which my hon. friend based his argument was this: It was designed to show that the evils of drink in Great Britain were leading the people of that country into hopeless poverty. Now it requires some skill and ingenuity to base an argument against free trade upon a book that was written to condemn the liquor traffic. My hon. friend appealed to my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. McDonald) and asked him to note what had happened in Great Britain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman refers to Sir William Booth. Is he aware that upon actual investigation Mr. Booth in his report asserted that 57 per cent of the poverty was due to unemployment?

Mr. CRERAR: There was a Sir Charles Booth, I know—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Sir Charles.

Mr. CRERAR: But my hon. friend referred to William Booth.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was wrong.

Mr. CRERAR: There was Sir Charles Booth who carried on some investigations of a private nature in that regard, but the fact nevertheless remains that the purpose of the book from which my hon. friend quoted was to disclose the bad social conditions that existed in Great Britain, which the writer attributed largely to the intemperance of the people; and on a work of that character my hon. friend based his argument against free trade and appealed to my hon. friend from Timiskaming. Now my hon. friend from Timiskaming is a Scotchman, and he is not an ordinary Scotchman, but a Glengarry Scotchman, and a Glengarry Scotchman, I am told, has always a very keen nose for facts. But fancy my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) proposing an argument to my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. McDonald), a Scotchman, that he should turn his eyes away from the evils of free trade because some one in the United Kingdom had written a book condemning Scotch whiskey! That was rather a peculiar argument for my hon. friend to make, and I cannot help thinking that the Minister of the Interior must have slept the night before with the President of the Privy Council (Hon. Mr. Rowell) and assimilated some of that hon. gentleman's theories. And I think that quite possibly my hon. friend the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder) was in the same bed. If he was, and the three hon. gentlemen had put their heads together, they could not have devised a more preposterous argument than that advanced by the Minister of the Interior. My hon. friend also speaks about the decline in agriculture in Great Britain, and he attributes that decline to the fact that Great Britain is a free-trade country. Now, I have talked to many farmers in Western Canada who have been engaged in agriculture in the Old Country, and in every instance in which I asked the reason why any man had left the Old Land to come here, the answer was that he had done so in order to escape the exactions of the landlord, who was taking in rent practically everything the farmer was making. If my hon. friend seeks a reason for the decline in British agriculture, if there has been a decline, he will find it in the land policy of the Old Country and not in the free trade policy that obtains there.

But, as a matter of fact, has there been a decline in agriculture in Great Britain? My hon. friend says that there are now only a million people engaged in agriculture in Great Britain. Well, the London Economist of a recent date, December 29, 1919, after a survey of the agricultural conditions of the United Kingdom, states that the total number of males engaged in agriculture was, in 1881, 2,362,000; in 1891, 2,249,000, and in 1901, 2,109,000. It is true in those decades there had been a decline, but that was the period when Western Canada was opening up and when we were carrying on the most active immigration propaganda possible in Great Britain, inviting the farmers of the Old Land and all agricultural labourers to come to Canada because there was cheap land available here. But in the next ten years the number had risen in Great Britain to 2,142,000. I take it that these statements are correct. I do not know from what source my hon. friend was quoting, but at all events this is my authority in regard to the total number of males engaged in agriculture to-day. The total exports of pure-bred breeding stock from Great Britain in the five-year period from 1871 to 1875 amounted to £287,000; and for the period from 1911 to 1915 inclusive it was £1,517,000, a very considerable increase. And if you study the statistics of Great Britain in regard to cereal crops, you will find that the average yield per acre has gone up steadily. Does this show any signs of a decline in agriculture in Great Britain? The tenant system of farming in the Old Land has undoubtedly made it difficult for the individual farmer, who rents land at high figures, to make much headway; but when my hon. friend says that agriculture is declining in Great Britain because a free trade policy has been in operation there for the last seventy years he is unquestionably very wide of the mark. There is another phase of the labour situation in Great Britain as compared with the United States. The stability of labour conditions in Great Britain is much greater to-day than is the case in the United States. What is the condition in regard to labour in the United States? I desire to quote an extract from the British Weekly in respect to the steel strike that took place a few months ago at Pittsburg. The British Weekly is a pretty reliable journal, which obtains its information from dependable sources, and it makes the statement that Judge Gary, at the time of the inquiry into that strike, said that there were over 69,000 employees in the United States Steel Corporation who were working twelve hours a day.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is Judge Gary?

Mr. CRERAR: He is head of the United States Steel Corporation. Now, what is the condition of labour in Great Britain? I venture to say that Great Britain has the finest factory laws in the world. She has the greatest system of co-operation in the world, and nowhere has labour achieved the distinction and the place in parliamentary government that it has in Great Britain. There is no comparison between the United States and Great Britain in that regard, and when my hon. friend argues that free trade has had the effect of bringing poverty and distress to the British labouring man he is altogether astray. My hon. friend also quoted land values and the decrease in the agricultural population of Great Britain as an evidence of decline in the industry over there. It is true, according to his statement —and I have no reason to doubt it—that when free trade was adopted in Great Britain 49.8 per cent of the population were agricultural, and in 1913 this was reduced to 21.3 per cent. That is a very considerable reduction, but it is worth while to note that in Canada in 1881, immediately after the adoption of the National Policy of Protection in this country, the percentage of rural population was 78.9 per cent, and in 1911, after thirty years of protection, it had declined, according to the statistics furnished by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, to 45.5 per cent.

Mr. SMITH: The farmers were starving in the early years.

Mr. CRERAR: The figures I am giving were furnished me by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I know that my hon. friend in his speech gave different figures. He said that the decline had been from 62 per cent to 54 per cent for the last ten-year period; but I repeat, the figures I have from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics state clearly that from 1881 to 1911 there was a decline from 78.9 per cent to 45.5 per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I obtained my figures from the same source, and I fancy that if my hon. friend inquires into the matter he will find that the difference in the figures is due to the fact that the towns and the villages are taken on a different basis.

Mr. CRERAR: I directed my inquiry personally to the Dominion Statistician, and he gave me the figures as I have cited them. Now, the hon. gentleman also speaks about the decline in the value of farm lands in the United Kingdom, and he compares that country with the United States and Canada during the last seventy years. Of course, there has been a tremendous increase in the total value of farm lands in the United States and Canada during the last fifty years. Why? The country was opening up and new lands were being brought under cultivation, with the result that the aggregate increase in wealth in this respect was very marked. But that is scarcely a fair basis of comparison to take for the United Kingdom. Canada and the United States are new countries and they are not finished countries. Although agriculture may not be very prosperous in Canada we have added to the sum total of the value of cultivated agricultural land because we have new people coming and opening up new land all the time.

My hon. friend also quoted the values of farm lands in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia. I do not know from what source his figures were secured but they did strike me as being rather high. He tells us that in British Columbia farm lands have advanced from $74 in 1910 to $174 per acre in 1919, and if I remember his statement aright, in Nova Scotia there has been a considerable increase in farm land values also. I am free to say to my hon. friend that there has been an increase in value in the farm lands of the Prairie Provinces and possibly of British Columbia and the Maritime Provinces as well, but one of the factors in producing that increase is that we have had opened up to us the United States market for Canadian farm products. The argument was advanced, and I think it was advanced with reason, that the reciprocity arrangement suggested in 1911 would add $5 an acre to the value of our farm lands in Western Canada that were producing grain. Well this is one of the reasons for the increase. If my hon. friend goes to the Maritime Provinces he will find that they have a free market in the United States for their potatoes, for their apples, for all classes of agricultural products, whereas, a few years ago, they had to climb over a high tariff wall to get into that country. The result has been to increase the prosperity of the farmers in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Is the hon. gentleman in favour of making apples free?

Mr. CRERAR: Certainly, I am in favour of making apples free. My hon. friend from Annapolis is badly mistaken if he thinks he is putting a poser to me in that regard. My hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) also quoted very largely from the reports of the special committees that were appointed by the Asquith Government to investigate trade conditions in the United Kingdom. It is true these committees were appointed in 1916 and that they were appointed by a Government of which Mr. Asquith was the head. But it was a coalition government; it was not the old Liberal Government in Great Britain. A coalition had been formed in 1915 and there were in that government quite a number of people who had held conflicting tariff views just as I fancy there has been in the Government of Canada in the making of the present Budget. But the fact that these committees brought in these reports, I submit, is no substantial evidence to support the contention of my hon. friend that free trade has been a failure in Great Britain. Take the committee on iron and steel that he referred to. The report of that committee was dissented from by Sir Hugh Bell, who is one of the greatest iron masters in northern England and who is at the head of one of the biggest iron and steel firms in the United Kingdom. If Sir Hugh Bell took the position that duties on iron and steel coming into the United Kingdom were not desirable, why did he do so? He is a manufacturer; only he could benefit. When that question was put to my hon. friend he said in effect, in reply, that Sir Hugh Bell was wedded to tradition, that he could not get over his old free trade ideas and that in order to stick to them he would rather sacrifice his own financial benefit. I have done business with business men in the United Kingdom and I have never met a harder headed lot of business men any where than I have found in Great Britain. When my hon. friend suggests that the greatest iron master and manufacturer in Great Britain refused to do a thing that would be beneficial to his business simply because he was wedded to tradition his argument rests upon a ridiculous basis. The fact is that Sir Hugh Bell knows that in the long run, duties on iron and steel coming into the United Kingdom would not be in the interest of the iron industry.

I am free to say there is one respect in which the United Kingdom has perhaps lagged behind. It has lagged behind in the matter of technical education. The superiority that Germany and the United States acquired in some fields of manufacture was due not to their fiscal policy but due very largely to the fact that they had provided in these countries the very finest technical schools that could be found anywhere. They applied chemistry and science to their manufactures in a way that the British manufacturer and business man did not do. But now the tale is changed; Great Britain, as a result of the war, certainly realizes the advantage of technical education and I venture to say will soon bring it within the reach of her people.

I submit again that these committees were appointed at a time of war fervour. The resolutions passed at the Paris conference, I think, in 1916, laid it down as a principle that the Allies would not renew trade with Germany when the war was over. But they have seen the futility of that position and it is not a fair or sound argument to take the reports of these committees that were appointed at that time as evidence of a need of protection in Great Britain. But what has happened to these reports? Where have they gone? These committees were appointed in 1916 and they brought in their reports in 1918. Since that time Mr. Austen Chamberlain, the son of the only British statesman who ever endeavoured to fasten protection in a limited form on the British people in the last seventy years, has brought in two Budgets. Has he made any reference to the reports of these committees? Has he suggested a duty on iron, steel or textiles? He certainly has not. I think we are well aware that in 1918 shortly after the last British election, an effort was made to introduce into the fiscal system of Great Britain anti-dumping duties. What response did it find? There was not a reputable statesman in Great Britain who would take it up and the result was that nothing has been heard of it and I venture to say nothing will be heard of it. I want to read to the House the concluding statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) in his disquisition on the fallacies of free trade as found in Great Britain. This, to my mind, is an amazing statement; I cannot characterize it in any other words. What does he say?

> We are at a stage now where we cannot mistake the teachings of experience. We have seen the result through seventy years in the Old Land. It is traced in the history of their trade returns that turned in 1850, the last decade year when they had a balance in their favour, and every decade year since a balance against them. Free trade has depopulated rural England; it has filled the emigrant ships with fugitives from her shores; it has scattered the manhood of Great Britain through the fields and workshops of the United States; it has starved and repressed and dwarfed the nascent industries of Ireland; it has reversed the supremacy that Britain held through centuries in the industrial life of the world, and caused her to concede the place to other great competing nations that adopted a different policy. Such is the history of free trade.

To my mind—and I say it in the best of good temper—the Minister of the Interior has never made a more amazing statement than the one I have just quoted. Why, Mr. Speaker, we have just come out of a war that has stressed and tried every country in the world, and what is the result? Where is protectionist Germany to-day? Where is protectionist France and where is protectionist Italy? Where are they—where are they financially? Where does their currency stand in the exchanges of the world? To say that Great Britain is decadent, in the face of the fact that she not only financed her own part in the war, which was teriffic, but loaned to her Allies over $8,000,000,000 during the war—why, Sir, the thing is beyond belief. If the war has proven anything it has proven the efficacy of the fiscal policy of Great Britain and her financial stability. My hon. friend talks about the depopulation of Great Britain, and the people fleeing from her shores to new pastures! Why, the population of Great Britain increased between 1850 and 1911 from twenty-seven millions to forty-five millions,

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Hear, hear.

Mr. CRERAR: —and at the same time she sent 12,000,000 of her sons in emigrant ships—

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Peopling the Empire.

Mr. CRERAR: —to Australia, Canada, South Africa and India, peopling the Empire, as my hon. friend from Red Deer states. During all that time when, as my hon. friend says, her industries were dying, when she was pursuing this decadent policy when she was relying on the remittances she was receiving from abroad to keep her going, her trade advanced by £193,000,000 as against £22,000,000 in the preceding fifty years; her population increased from twenty-seven millions to forty-six millions; and she had the greatest trade in the world when the war struck it. Then she financed her Allies to the tune of $8,000,000,000, and financed herself and—differing from the policy that my hon. friend, the Finance Minister follows in Canada—proposes to pay off and will pay off this year a billion dollars of her debt. I can call other witnesses. There is not a prominent British economist whose testimony cannot be brought. Take Adam Smith—some of my hon. friends opposite may scoff at this—take Ricardo, and take John Stuart Mill, the greatest economists which the Anglo-Saxon race has produced, whose text-books are in every university. What is their opinion on this very question? I commend these authorities to the study of my hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior. Take British statesmen from Peel down to the present time and what do we find?

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: Does my hon. friend say that John Stuart Mill did not favour a protective tariff if opposed by a protective tariff in other countries? If he denies it, I can give him the quotation in a few minutes.

Mr. CRERAR: Mill was in accord with the free trade policy of Great Britain, and I think my hon. friend would have great difficulty in establishing the contrary.

Mr. SMITH: Did he not go further?

Mr. CRERAR: I will quote other witnesses. Let us take the great statesmen of Great Britain—

Mr. SMITH: I ask the hon. gentleman did Mill not go further?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CRERAR: First I will take Gladstone. Was Gladstone a protectionist? Did he believe in protection? Did Campbell-Bannerman, Asquith and Lloyd George believe in protection? My hon. friends opposite may say, "These were Liberals and nothing else was to be expected of them." Well, we will take Conservative statesmen in Great Britain, and with the exception of Joseph Chamberlain, and even he made it clear, in his tariff reform propaganda in Great Britain about seventeen or eighteen years ago, that he had no use for protection as protection; his campaign and arguments were based altogether on creating Imperial preferences in order to hold the Empire together. I think he was mistaken in that, but nevertheless he is on record as saying that he did not believe in protection for protection's sake. What about Peel, the Duke of Devonshire, and Lord St. Aldwyn. The last named, as Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, was one of the great English chancellors. What about Lord Salisbury and Lord Robert Cecil and Lord Hugh Cecil? Were these men carried away by the glamour of protection? No, they were absolutely against it. What about the Right Honourable A. J. Balfour, perhaps the brightest intellect in the Conservative party in Great Britain? He refused to follow Chamberlain in his protectionist propaganda and policy. What about Disraeli, the creator of the modern Tory party in Great Britain? His judgment on protection was that so far as Great Britain was concerned it was not only dead but damned.

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. CRERAR: I hope I have not offended the tender susceptibilities of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MORPHY: The hon. gentleman has been quoting authorities in favour of free trade, but is he himself in favour of free trade for Canada?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Make an argument.

Mr. MORPHY: It is all very well for my hon. friend from Red Deer to say, "make an argument."

Mr. CRERAR: I will say this, that the fiscal policy for Great Britain, in my judgment, would be a very admirable one for Canada.

Mr. MORPHY: Will the hon. gentleman answer my question? I want an answer to the question, from my hon. friend, if he pleases.

Mr. CRERAR: The tariff policy of the Canadian Council of Agriculture does not call for absolute free trade, as some hon. gentlemen opposite have stated. As I have previously stated in the House its policy is that the tools and implements of production should be made free, and the cost of the necessaries of life should be reduced.

Mr. MORPHY: That is being done to-day under this very Budget.

Mr. CRERAR: In Great Britain, the Minister of the Interior tells us, they are raising a billion and a half dollars this year from customs taxation. I think he is mistaken in the figures, but at any rate they are raising a very large amount in customs taxes. We can still get a great deal of revenue from the tariff in Canada, and at the same time eliminate the principle of protection in industry, which is bad. That is the thing we should do. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have continued at much greater length than I intended, but I have yet a few further observations to make.

Mr. CALDWELL: Give them more of it.

Mr. CRERAR: I submit that the whole argument, as far as the fiscal policy of Great Britain is concerned, confirms absolutely, unequivocally, and beyond successful contradiction, that that policy has been in the interests of the United Kingdom, and I submit that a similar policy in Canada could do nothing but redound to the benefit of this Dominion. What have been the effects of protection in Canada? We have a perfect right to ask what benefit has it been to the country? Is it a sensible thing to develop artificial industries and make it difficult for the natural industries of the country to develop? We say we want to develop agriculture. Would my hon. friends opposite say that we should protect agriculture by way of giving a bounty to the wheat producers of Western Canada?

Mr. MORPHY: Yes, if it needs it.

Mr. CRERAR: I do not know where, in the end, my hon. friend would get the money. Agriculture is the basic industry of this country, and it is the part of wisdom to free the tools of production that are necessary for the development of this great industry, and the development of our forests, our mines, and our fisheries as well. I have never been able to see the sense of creating, for instance, a cotton industry in Canada—which I shall refer to in a moment—and which is entirely an artificial industry in this country We do not produce the raw material that enters into the manufacture of textiles in this country, but we have to import every ounce of that raw material. Is it not in every sense a better thing to produce the articles that we can best produce in this country, and that are natural to the country, and trade them off to others for things they can produce better than we can? That is the sensible policy to follow.

Now, what is the position of agriculture in this country? The farmers of Western Canada are producing two staple commodities, grain and livestock, and the basis of value upon which they sell their productions is fixed in the markets of the world. You will have to have protection in Canada for a long time before you can have a market capable of consuming all the wheat our farmers produce. But they are not afraid to sell their wheat against all comers; and the same holds good in regard to livestock.

Mr. MORPHY: Will the hon. gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. CRERAR: I am sorry, but I do not wish to be interrupted. You are putting a penalty on agriculture when you say to the farmers: "You must have the cost of your implements of production increased by the operation of this Customs tariff." You are making it more difficult for agriculture to succeed, and to that extent you are hampering and handicapping an industry that is natural to the country. We talk of Canada being an agricultural country. Of course it is. And eventually it will become a great manufacturing country; there is not any question about that. But if we develop agriculture, if we can put 2,000,000 farmers on the land, will not that be a good thing for our manufacturers? I can conceive of nothing better for creating a home market.

But the fact is that to-day agriculture is carried on under conditions of disadvantage. I will admit that during the last few years where farmers have secured good crops they have made money. But go out and speak to the farmers of Southern Alberta, who have had three successive crop failures; go out and speak to the farmers of Southern Saskatchewan, who have had the same misfortune; go out and speak to the farmers of Eastern Canada who have been handicapped by bad crops, and ask them what their opinion is of having the cost of the tools and implements of their industry added to by the operation of the Customs tariff; it will not take you long to get a reply.

During this debate we have heard some comment on our textile industry, and my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) placed upon Hansard some figures in connection with the development of that industry in this country. But he did not supply all the information on the subject at that time. The Dominion Textile Company, Limited, is our leading concern manufacturing cotton goods, and is a combination of four textile companies that were merged in 1905. At that time—and this is taken from the evidence given by the General Manager of the Dominion Textile Company, Limited before the Cost of Living Commission a year ago—his company issued $5,000,000 of common stock for which they paid $500,000, or $10 a share, thus four and a half millions of that common stock was pure water. What happened? Under the shelter of the tariff, enjoying protective duties ranging from 30 to 40 per cent, the Dominion Textile Company, Limited, was able to so extract profits from the people of this country that this stock last year was quoted as high as $125 a share. I ask my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen), who, I believe, stated at Quebec that the tariff should not be used as a place of shelter by industries that could stand on their own feet, what he thinks of that condition of affairs?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman want an answer? I understand that in that case the profits were made largely out of export trade as a result of the war.

Mr. CRERAR: Well, we can go back to 1914, before the war, and we shall find that this $5,000,000 of common stock, or rather $4,500,000, that in 1905 had no value whatever, in 1914 was selling as high as $86 a share. If my hon. friend will study the figures of our exports at that time he will find that very litle business was done in Canadian textiles. And yet that $4,500,000 of common stock, of pure unadulterated water, had attained a value of over $3,000,000! Is that building up useful industry in this country, or is it not enriching the few at the expense of the many? But by way of contrast, what are the wages paid to our textile workers in Canada? According to figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics 7,946 males and 7,654 females, or a total of 15,618, are engaged in the cotton textile industry in this country. Now I wish to direct the attention of the House to this illuminating fact, that the average yearly wage of those 15,000 employees is only $538.23. Is that what protection has done for the workers of our textile industry?

Mr. STEVENS: What is your authority for those figures?

Mr. CRERAR: A report of the Dominion Statistician published last month.

Mr. STEVENS: There must be a basis for that average.

Mr. CRERAR: It is based on returns supplied by companies covering all the textile industries in this country. Will any one argue that that is a reasonable condition of affairs? If my hon. friends want a moderate tariff for revenue only, and if the Government desire to wipe out special privilege in this direction, why did they not start on the tariff schedule in respect to cotton goods when arranging their Budget? On the contrary, these cotton duties are maintained. And the same condition applies not only to the textile industry, but to many other industries as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the tariff views of this little group are well known. As I have stated before, we stand broadly on this principle,—that the implements of production for the development of our agriculture, our forests, our mines, and our fisheries should be made free, and that there should be a substantial reduction in all other duties under the general tariff. That is a specific plank in the platform of the Council of Agriculture. I want to know what are the views of my hon. friend opposite on this question. I would like the Minister of the Interior in his next speech, or the Minister of Immigration and Colonization, to state his views as to what duties should prevail on, say, agricultural implements, on textiles, and on iron and coal.

We have read a good deal in the papers recently about the British Empire Steel merger. Mr. Grant Morden who is a member of the British House of Commons but Canadian born, I am told at a meeting in this city recently made the statement,—that this merger, when completed, would be in a position to compete with the world. Well, if that be the case, would it not be a good thing to remove the duty on coal and so help the manufacturers and other consumers in the province of Ontario who are using coal, and would it not be a good thing to take the duty off iron and steel as well? I cannot for the life of me, Sir, see the advantage of supporting a policy that develops mergers, such as the British Empire Steel merger, which is practically cornering all the coal and iron ore in sight in the Maritime Provinces and with the inevitable result of an effort being made with the assistance of the tariff to pay dividends on large amounts of watered stock.

I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that one of the most effective ways in which he can combat this growing tendency to combine various companies into huge combinations is by using the weapon of the tariff. The tariff has been used not only in the industries I have mentioned, but it has been used in many others that could be mentioned by company promoters simply for the purpose of taking additional profits out of the Canadian people. I make the statement in all seriousness that the protective tariff has been the greatest agency for exploiting our people that was ever devised.

I want to give the Minister of Finance further evidence. For instance, moulded rubber goods are used largely in this country. I gave this statement to the House on a previous occasion but I repeat it again because it is pertinent to the matter we are discussing. The following is taken from a prospectus issued by the K. & S. Canadian Tire and Rubber Company, Limited, of Toronto, circulated privately for the purpose of getting additional money to put into their business—and I am using this quotation because it is direct evidence, not hearsay; it is from a prospectus issued by these people themselves:

> At Weston, Ontario, we have the only plant in Canada for making moulded rubber goods exclusively. Our capacity amounts to 3,000 pieces per day. This class of goods in the past has been imported principally from the States. It would not be policy to state our margin of profit, but believe that we are able to manufacture at United States costs.

Now, note this:

> There is a protective tariff of at least 35 per cent (and up to 42½ per cent) in our favour. We are thus able to sell at a lower price than any foreign competitor and still have a good profit.
>
> The quality of our rubber sundries is admitted to be the equal of the best imported goods.

Will any of my hon. friends opposite argue for a moment that the K. & S. Canadian Tire and Rubber Company, who, on their own admission, can manufacture as cheaply in Canada as they do in the United States, are selling these goods at prices any lower than the prices of similar goods imported from the United States? I will tell you more. The Minister of Finance will probably find an effort being made one of these days to mergerize the rubber companies of this country who are manufacturing rubber goods; they will capitalize their earning power and issue a lot of common stock against it, which will represent no value, and in order to do it more effectively they will get under the shelter of the protective tariff. I would commend these considerations to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

Now, I have spoken somewhat longer than I had intended. Our views on the question of tariff are well known; I have already stated them. I want to say a word about the amendment that my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) has moved. I quite agree with the member from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) that the amendment has considerable milk and water. The plain fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker is, that the time has come when we should get away from all make-believe on this question of tariff. We are entitled to know where every one stands in this matter. I have every respect for the man who honestly holds the view that protection is necessary for this country. But we want a clear cut discussion of the question, and I hope that my hon. friends opposite, when the time comes that the tariff is discussed in the open forum, will debate the question on its merits and not seek to cloak and cover it up with various other appeals to racial and religious prejudices, as has so often been the case in the past. What we want is to get a clear, definite expression of opinion from the Canadian people upon the question. In this period of reconstruction, when we are confronted with gigantic problems, questions of tariff and of business administration certainly call for closer study than has ever been the case in the past. We can only overcome, I am convinced, the financial difficulties which confront us and lighten the financial burdens that the Canadian people have to carry, by an intelligent development of the resources of this country, and I again submit that of all these resources the one that lies most readily to hand is that of our agriculture. Let us, Mr. Speaker, direct our policy in the future to the development of these industries instead of seeking to create artificial industries that have to live under the sheltering wing of a high protective tariff. Let us seek to develop the industries that are natural to the country; if we do, the development of other industries will follow as surely as night follows day. By adopting a policy of this kind; by adopting a policy of special privileges to none—because I submit that the tariff is a special privilege to those who have the benefit of it—we shall lay firm and broad the foundations of a great and prosperous country.

5 p.m.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (Oxford South): Mr. Speaker, before attempting to follow the arguments of the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House (Mr. Crerar), I would like to say that the Budget presented to Parliament this year reminds us that although the war is ended, war conditions are to some extent still with us. A crisis in our history has been reached and safely passed. But we have still great obligations to meet, and I am sure that the people of Canada will prove themselves capable of dealing with those obligations. I listened with a great deal of interest to the first Budget Speech delivered by the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), and I must congratulate him upon the manner in which he delivered it, upon the conciseness with which he dealt with the various matters connected with it, and upon the frank and open manner in which he revealed to the people the exact financial situation as it is and as it has to be dealt with.

That Canada is a difficult country to govern I believe everybody realizes. Under ordinary conditions, in the absence of such problems as have to be dealt with at the present time, the Government of Canada, is most difficult. But the present situation is much less serious than it was two years ago. I am particularly pleased to know that we have with us again the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) who carried on during the whole period of the war; the man who, by his wonderful foresight, endeavoured to have Canada prepared as well as was possible when the terrible war broke loose upon the world. He carried on during the early years of the war and year after year as the war continued. We were, however, put to a crucial test in the fall of 1917, when the question arose whether the people of Canada would uphold the policy of the Prime Minister and his Government. Notwithstanding the fact that 400,000 Canadians had gone overseas; notwithstanding the fact that there was a casualty list of over 125,000, the mandate which he received and which the Government received on that occasion was to carry on. He carried on, and he saw the war brought to a successful conclusion. He has been subjected to considerable criticism, not only by hon. members opposite but from other sources outside of this House, because he was not day in and day out on the job here in Canada. We welcome him back to the forum of Parliament. We are pleased indeed to know, and the people of Canada rejoice in it, that Sir Robert Borden is again able to carry on, and likely to do so for many years.

We have listened for about an hour and a half to an hon. gentleman who was a member of the Cabinet when Sir Robert Borden and his Government received that mandate in the fall of 1917. A year ago we heard him address this House and endeavour to explain to the people why he had broken with the Government. There has been a good deal of speculation in regard to that matter, not only by hon. members here, but by the people throughout the country. Now he appears in the role of leader of a party in this House, and if under those conditions I have something to say that he may consider as rather unkind it is because of the fact that the situation is a very peculiar one and not from any personal motive, it is absolutely necessary and in the public interest that we should have a united people to deal with the task which lies before us as one whole people with a common ideal, and not in sections, not divided into classes and factions. We must unite the whole people of this country, and when we do that, we shall overcome the difficulties we have to contend with so quickly that in a few years from now I venture to state that the people will wonder how it was that there was any alarm felt in this Parliament or outside of it over the debt now confronting us.

I was somewhat startled to hear the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Trahan) in his speech in this House on the 28th instant, referring to the debt which we have on our shoulders, protest against the policy embodied in the slogan which was adopted in the last election that we were in the war "To the last man and the last dollar," till our efforts were crowned with victory. He went on to state that the policy adopted by the Government was to place British interests first and Canadian interests in a secondary position. Now I want to take strong exception to that statement. We are a part of the British Empire. We have not yet reached that stage, nor do we intend to reach it, when our connection with the Empire will be severed. It was well known that at that time the fate of the Empire was almost hanging in the balance, and it was realized we were a part of the Empire. The hon. member then went on to compare our debt with that of Japan, and he quoted figures to show that our obligations were much heavier than those of Japan. He even suggested that Japan had acquitted herself and rendered a service during the war equally as great as did Canada. I take exception to any statement of that kind. I am not one of those who believe in continually referring to what Canada did in the war. Canada's part in the war is a matter of history, and is well known. I believe that the consensus of opinion throughout the world is that Canada acquitted herself in a manner to which no one could take any exception, and the obligations which we have to face as a result of our effort in the war are no greater than could be expected.

I wish to refer briefly to some of the statements made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar). For about an hour he spoke on the tariff. He laboured long along that line, and practically advocated free trade until almost the concluding sentences of his address, when, questioned from this side of the House as to where he stood, he hesitated, and then referred to the platform of the United Grain Growers—

Mr. GOULD: No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: —to the platform of the Council of Agriculture. I was also surprised to see, immediately after the Minister of Finance had concluded his Budget speech, the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) spring to his feet as if he were afraid some one else would catch the Speaker's eye. In concluding the address he delivered, following that of the Minister of Finance, he moved an amendment which was evidently prepared before he had heard or knew anything about what the Budget speech contained. That was quite evident to every one who heard him, and it is little wonder that he has been taunted by some hon. gentlemen opposite as to the small quantity of milk his amendment really contains compared with the water. But the most remarkable feature of his address was that he advocated protection, advocated the dumping clause, and also favoured mergers. He cautioned the people of this country to take little stock in the platform of either the Liberal party or that of hon. gentlemen on the cross benches. He cautioned the people of this country not to be led away with any idea that the Liberal party were likely to put into effect the platform they had adopted. He said that the responsibility of office had a sobering effect, and consequently the people need not be frightened by what the Grain Growers are likely to do should they come into power, and as he spoke I could not help feeling that while there may not be any very good team work on this side of the House there is considerable between the two Oppositions we have represented in this House. My hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's, whose speech has been so severely criticized, judging from his past history, might well caution the people of Canada not to take those platforms too seriously but I say that this is a time when we should take politics, seriously in this country, I am very much mistaken indeed, and I am inclined to think that some of these hon. gentlemen, old and experienced in political life as they may be, will find they have made a great mistake if they think the people can be fooled along that line much longer. I do not want to do the hon. gentleman an injustice. This is what he said:

> I do not think myself, as things are going now, that we can look to that party—

That is the party led by the hon. member for Marquette.

> —for a sound tariff policy. What then? I do not even think we can expect to get a sound and safe tariff policy by a too rigid adherence to every line and every letter of the Liberal tariff platform. I think myself that we will find that we are all prone in framing platforms to put things perhaps a little more strongly than is wise and we all find when we come to the responsibilities of office that we may have to modify our views. If we are to get a sound and sane tariff policy where shall we look for it?

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) in his address in this House the other day quoted from a speech made by the leader of the Liberal party previous to the elections of 1896. He quoted Sir Wilfrid Laurier as saying:

> I submit to you that the ideal fiscal system is the British system of free trade.
>
> I come to expose to you the policy of the Liberal party. Let me tell you that the policy may be summed up in the good Saxon word "Freedom," in every sense of the term—freedom of speech, freedom of action, freedom of religious life and civil life, and last, not least, freedom in commercial life. I denounce to you the policy of protection as bondage.

Those were the statements made by the leader of the Opposition of that day, in giving his policy with regard to the tariff. A short time afterwards he got into power, he later on delivered a speech in the manufacturing industrial city of Toronto in 1906, in which he is reported by the Toronto Globe to have said:

> Everybody will agree with me, the business men of Toronto more than anybody—that in a fiscal policy such as we have, where we derive our revenue chiefly from customs duties, it is absolutely essential to the capitalist, to the workingman, to the businessman, to the industrialist, that he should know exactly the conditions under which he invests his capital; that he should know that it will be invested under a condition that will not be lightly altered.

These would appear to be the words of a man who was conscious of the responsibility of office which had been placed upon his shoulders. He then went on in his speech to deal with what he characterized as the tinkering with the tariff which had been done by the Conservative Government previous to 1896, when the Liberal party came into power. I could give the number of changes he referred to in that address, but I will not delay the House to do so. After having done that, he said:

> Well, sir, when there were so many changes the manufacturer dreaded the day of the Budget Speech. He was always anxious lest he find himself the following morning a ruined man. But I am proud to say that under our regime the manufacturers always sleep soundly and never fear interference with the tariff. We have made very few changes in the duty.

It goes on to bear out the statement that was made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) that we have and have had in this country, under both the Conservative party and the Liberal party, the old National Policy. There is no getting away from that. The National Policy was amended time and again before Sir Wilfrid Laurier came into power, but he admits in that speech delivered in Toronto that very few changes had been made in the tariff by his party. Changes are continually necessary, Mr. Speaker, because conditions change in a country as time goes on; and a tariff that might be suitable to the requirements of the country at this stage might not be suitable a few years hence. But I think that every one will agree that under the extraordinary war conditions such as we have experienced, what we required was stability and confidence on the part of every individual; and it will be conceded, I think, that we required also that the greatest possible effort should be put forth by all the people, and it was not by any such means as have been alluded to this afternoon by the hon. member for Marquette that the condition which we desired could be brought about.

Now, Sir, I am coming to the time when the hon. member for Marquette, who I regret is not in his seat, saw fit to break with the Government, and I shall deal briefly with the reasons which he gave for parting company with them on that occasion. I have here a copy of the letter which he sent to the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) in reference to the matter, in which he states:

OTTAWA, June 4th, 1919.

You will observe, before I proceed any further, Mr. Speaker, that the Budget Speech was delivered the following day. The hon. member remained in the Government until the moment when the Budget was to be introduced. Apparently, the matter had been settled. The hon. member wrote as follows:

My dear Sir Robert,—The Government in its consideration of the Budget to be placed before Parliament to-morrow has reached, I take it, definite and final conclusions as to the form it will take. As you are aware, I am not in accord with it and therefore cannot support it either in the House or in the country. Having reached this decision, there is only one course for me to follow, and I therefore tender you herewith my resignation as a member of the Government. The reason for my decision shall be given more fully when the subject is under discussion in the House.

It was the question of the tariff upon which the hon. member for Marquette broke with the Government. Let me remind the House that the tariff was not an issue in the election of 1917. So far as I am aware, there was no discussion in connection with tariff issues in any part of the country at that time. It was recognized that men of different views concerning the tariff had joined together and that we had established a union or coalition government to carry on during the war and throughout the reconstruction period afterwards. It is true that changes were made in the tariff in 1919. When the Budget was brought down it was found that in regard to the very things that have been advocated by the hon. member (Mr. Crerar) to-day as items that should be placed on the free list, a fairly generous concession had been made in that direction. The tariff had been reduced on a great many agricultural implements from 17½ per cent to 12½ per cent, and the surtax of 1915 of 7½ per cent had also been removed. Better rates for shipment of machinery over the railways of the country so far as Western Canada was concerned had also been obtained, and the Government had done the very thing which hon. gentleman had been advocating. Notwithstanding that there had been no reference to the tariff in the election of 1917, the Government conceded to hon. members from Western Canada something along the line which they have advocated. The Government met them more than half way, but the hon. member (Mr. Crerar) found even then that he had to devise some excuse to leave the Government. I do not think his explanation has satisfied the members of this House, nor do I think it has satisfied the people of the country. The hon. member is leader of a political party in this country to-day, and consequently we are justified in examining his actions and his words and also in endeavouring to arrive at some understanding as to what his motives are and the influence which controls him. The statement has been made by a member of the Government—and it has not been denied by any one—that the Government were agreed to go on as they were without any reductions in the tariff; but after having made these reductions the remarkable thing is that the hon. member for Marquette decided to get out of the Government in any event. The hon. member, while he was a member of the Government of Canada for, I think, about a year and a half, occupied another position in this country. He was also President of the United Grain Growers, Limited. He was in the pay of the United Grain Growers, Limited of Canada, from whom he was receiving a salary in excess of what he received as a member of the Government and a member of Parliament combined. The United Grain Growers, Limited, Mr. Speaker, has a system of recall embodied in their regulations; it is a part of their constitution. That is where the system of recall really originated in Canada. It is an American institution that has been brought over here, and it has been adopted in the regulations of the United Grain Growers, Limited. Let me point out this fact, Mr. Speaker, that we have the sworn evidence of the General Manager of the United Grain Growers, Limited that they endeavoured to put the recall into effect. Now, how did they put it into effect? How did they withdraw the president of their company from the Government? I will tell you how they did it. I do not say that what I am about to state was the sole object of the hon. gentleman in deserting the Government. I say "deserting," because he assuredly did desert them before the task for which he was elected had been accomplished. There is no question about that. In September, 1918, the directors of the United Grain Growers, Limited passed a resolution or by-law whereby they increased the salary of the president, a member of the Government, from $10,000 to $15,000 a year, to go into effect when he withdrew from the Government. Apparently it was a very effective way of putting the recall into operation. Hon. gentlemen on cross benches opposite are subject to the recall, they may advocate a different kind, but this one evidently was quite effective in its operations, for it accomplished the object at which it aimed. I want to make some further reference to the hon. gentleman. The amalgamation of the Alberta Elevator Company and the Manitoba Grain Growers' Company into the United Grain Growers' Limited took place on the first of September, 1917. The hon. gentleman, the president of this company, was sworn as a member of the Government on the 12th October, 1917. He resigned from the Government on the 4th June, 1919. The hon. gentleman claims to have a particular interest in the farmers and that interest was shown on a number of occasions during the short time that he was Minister of Agriculture. A matter came up which was not of special interest to the grain growers of Western Canada as they were more interested in grain growing than anything else, but which was of vital interest to the Dairymen of Eastern Canada as well as the West. An Order in Council was put through shortly after he became Minister of Agriculture permitting, strange to say, the great and wealthy corporations the packing houses on his license to gather up the dairy produce of the farmers of this country, mix it in their factories and sell it under another name. It lost its identity once it went into their factories and it came out as oleomargarine. I have referred to this matter in the past and I defy any one to say that I have ever objected to the importation or manufacture of oleomargarine. What I have objected to, what I do object to and I will continue to object to, is the great dairy industry being made a basis for the manufacture of this stuff and of secondary consideration to the big packing houses, and permitting them to gather up dairy produce and to treat it in such a way as to lose its identity the high standard which took so many years of industry to build up and to merge it with that of an inferior article. This was the first evidence that the hon. gentleman gave of his interest in agriculture.

But during all this time we had evidence that he was busy in another direction. In the province of Ontario the Provincial Government had been endeavouring to organize the farmers into clubs for co-operative purposes. There were also a few men who had been identified with farmers' movements in the years gone by. We have had many farmers' organizations in this country, political and co-operative, that it is not easy to recall them all. We have had unrestricted reciprocity, commercial union, the patrons of industry and Dominion grange and others. A number of the old patrons of industry which was destroyed or absorbed by the Liberal Party in Ontario got together and endeavoured to prostitute or pervert the farmers' clubs. We have evidence published in a farming magazine that the hon. member for Marquette was a frequent visitor at the offices of those who were furthering this movement in opposition to the farmers' co-operative clubs and the statement is also made that had it not been for the generous assistance in money and advice which this organization received from the grain growers of the West and the hon. member for Marquette they would not have succeeded in their efforts. That has been published throughout the country by one of the original organizers of what is known as the United Farmers of Ontario. I often wonder whether this much lauded Grain Growers Limited had some ulterior object in view in endeavouring to destroy the co-operative spirit which was being created in Ontario.

It is absolutely impossible to divide the people of this country, to get people to organize themselves along class lines politically in opposition to the interests of the people of Canada generally. You may get a few designing ambitious individuals who regard their own interests more that they do those of the class they claim to represent to take that stand, but I venture to state that inside of five years there will not be a vestige of that party left in this country. Why do I make such a statement as that? Because I believe I know the farmers of this country as well as does the hon. member for Marquette and I know that in so far as the province of Ontario is concerned the case has been misrepresented to them.

That hon. gentleman in some of his addresses suggests to the farmers that they have not had a fair deal in the past, that they have not the representation in Parliament particularly in the House of Commons to which they are entitled. He even says that their representation is less than ten per cent of the whole. The hon. gentleman is not always correct in the figures which he gives us. If you analyze the figures which the hon. gentleman put before the House a year ago when he endeavoured to justify his attitude, and if you inquire into many of the statements which he has made in public you will find that you can discount them generally by about fifty per cent. I make the statement that the farmers have received generous treatment at the hands not only of this Government but of other governments in the redistribution of constituencies; representation has been in the farmers' favour. City constituencies have two and three times the population of rural on the whole.

What is going to be the upshot of this movement that is on foot led by the hon. member for Marquette? Do you suppose that the people of the towns and cities are going to sit back and allow this condition to continue? The farmers of this country are organizing themselves into a political body and if that is the case and if they are going to separate themselves from other classes of the community there will only be one thing to do and we must have "representation according to population." This is the attitude that will be adopted. As far as the farmers of this country are concerned, they have had generous treatment at the hands of all governments with regard to parliamentary representation, I think that will be admitted by everybody. I know of counties which had three representatives in this House and other constituencies which have only one representative although they have more votes than the county with three representatives. Is that fair if we are to have class representation because it happens to apply largely to rural districts? I represent a constituency myself where the vote is pretty evenly divided. There are a few more farmers than there are townspeople but I do not believe the people of my constituency have ever made any discrimination in that respect. I have received generous support from the people in the towns and I regret exceedingly that these hon. gentlemen opposite are not fair and do not give these people credit for having so acted in the past. If the farmers have not the representation in this House which they claim they are entitled to, they have nobody to blame but themselves. It is absolutely their own fault. They have often refused to vote for a candidate because he happened to be a farmer.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: An hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." Yes, we will divide this country into classes in order to get the farmers to vote as a class but you are making the greatest mistake you ever made in your lives if you think the farmers are the narrow-minded, bigoted class you take them to be. The policy that you are advocating, class representation, may be adopted in some places but you will find that it will be spurned with indignation by the broad-minded farmers of this country. It was during the most critical period in the history of this country—at a time when our eyes were fixed on the western battlefront, which was being day by day bent back, when every Canadian was almost afraid to read the morning papers for fear news of the line breaking—there were persons endeavouring to organize the farmers of Canada into a political organization, and some of them came trooping down to Ottawa asking that the farmers should be exempt from military service, and by their actions cast odium on the farmers of Ontario. But the people of that province were not responsible for what occurred at that time in connection with the question of military service. Hon. gentlemen opposite know full well that the executive which met in the city of Toronto, before coming down to Ottawa, were not honest with the people whom they claimed to represent. They claimed that they were coming down here to endeavour to secure exemption from military service only in cases of extreme hardship, which would have been a very reasonable request and justifiable. Instead of that, however, they asked that total exemption should be granted to all farmers; and the man who is now sitting in this House as the representative for North Ontario, after having heard the Prime Minister state what the views of the Government were in regard to the matter, insisted upon coming before the Bar of the House of Commons in order to make a statement there. I will venture to state that under the circumstances no such proposition was ever dreamed of before. The men behind this request endeavoured to make it appear that a similar privilege had been granted to Mr. Gompers, the United States labour leader, and to Mr. Viviani, the ex-Prime Minister of France. But, Sir, on both those occasions the House had risen and was not actually in session when the distinguished men referred to addressed the members of Parliament. These are some of the things as to which the people of the province from which I come have been misled and misformed. These men went back from the city of Ottawa and raised the cry, "Oh, we were turned out"; but the significant thing is that the Minister of Agriculture in the neighbouring province of Quebec was one of the chief figures in that movement. In co-operation with some men who now have seats in this House the effort was made to make it appear that Ontario was responsible for the whole thing. Yes, there were a great many men from the western part of Ontario who were surprised when they got here at that time to find that there were so many delegates from other provinces.

Now, I must proceed to the consideration of other matters.

Mr. MACKIE (Edmonton): I would like to correct the impression that was given to the House that there was only one member from the West—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member would certainly not be in order in doing so, at the present time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am quite willing to be asked a question as to any matter arising out of my remarks.

I want briefly to refer to something that took place previous to the elections of 1917. There is in this country a publication known as the Canadian Annual Review, and I think every one will concede that it gives a very fair and impartial review of all matters of importance which transpire throughout Canada. This work, I believe, has now been conducted for about twenty years, and it certainly fills a want which was long felt before that time. I want to quote from the Canadian Annual Review of 1917, page 594. Reference is there made to the attitude of the then leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) during the negotiations which led up to the formation of the Union Government, which he did not see fit to join, and in conclusion the following statement is made:

> With it all the Liberal chieftain maintained his hopeful outlook, fought earnestly for his cherished convictions of a life-time, believed that he had a chance to win, and was convinced that if he did so the personal qualities and influence which had settled the Manitoba problem of 1896 could adjust those of 1917. If he did not win, his supporters, combined with the Liberals behind the Unionist Government, might be strong enough to revolutionize political conditions when the war was over.

Now, it may be possible that the right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had some idea that that would happen. I think the events of the last few days would go to bear out the fact that he did show a good deal of foresight in that respect. We have found member after member—elected in support of Union Government—going over to the Opposition, and the excuse they make is that it is by reason of the tariff. Well, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that if any member of the House would be justified in breaking with the Government on the Tariff issue it would be those who are in favour of the old protective policy—that policy which has been departed from by the Government in order to meet the demands or the requests of hon gentlemen on the cross benches. In order to carry on, and in order to insure that there should be harmony in this country, the Government have conceded a good deal along this line. I am not saying that they have gone too far. I am not an extreme protectionist, I believe that a policy of moderate protection is necessary in this country; but I think the Government were entitled to some consideration from those hon. gentlemen to whom I have referred when in response to their wishes they conceded what they did in the matter of a reduction in the tariff. For example, two hon. gentlemen spoke in this House last week, and they took the ground that they were changing their political allegiance because of the fact that the tariff policy was now established and they could not see any hope for a reduction. Now the Government have made no such intimation either to the House or to the country. The Finance Minister has intimated—just as his predecessor intimated a year ago—that inquiries would be made into industrial and other conditions after which the tariff would be readjusted to suit the conditions shown to exist. What more could be done than that? Of what use would it be to conduct an inquiry into Canadian conditions if you had settled upon your tariff policy before hand? The Government's tariff policy will depend upon the result of the inquiry which is to be made, and I am strongly of the opinion that if it had not been for the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite in the last Parliament, we would now have had a tariff commission that would have been able to place evidence before the Government, and this matter would have been dealt with ere this. However, that is the condition in which we find matters with respect to the tariff to-day. The tariff is the sole and absorbing topic of discussion by hon. gentlemen opposite. They are now endeavouring to justify the stand which they have taken. They are attempting to disorganize the Government of this country and make it impossible for the administration of public affairs to be carried on. The members of the so-called Agrarian party refer to the amendment of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) as a milk and water amendment, and they say that if he could have heard the Budget before he framed that amendment he never would have worded it in such a way. However, they were going to vote a want of confidence in the Government anyway, and so it did not matter much what the amendment contained. To those hon. gentlemen to whom I refer it does not matter what an amendment may contain so long as they can express a want of confidence in Sir Robert Borden and his Government. But that is not what the people are asking for; they are asking my hon. friends to be consistent. The hon. member for Marquette spoke for an hour and a half this afternoon, and the greater portion of his address was devoted to pointing out the ideal conditions hat exist in England, and then he suggested that agriculture should be looked after in this country. The hon. member has had the opportunity to acquire an intimate knowledge of Canadian agriculture, and if he takes the same interest in that industry which he claims he does he would have noticed that only within the last week efforts were being made in Great Britain to import into that country breeding stock from Canada, but the British regulations will not permit it. It was admitted in the discussion which took place that the regulations with regard to cattle, which ostensibly were adopted in order to prevent foot and mouth disease reaching the cattle of Great Britain, were really uncalled for because there had never been a single case of the disease in Canada; which went to show that the imposition of those regulations was mere camouflage, that in reality it was admitted a form of protection. But the farmers of Great Britain came to the conclusion that in special cases it would be advisable to permit the importation of cattle from Canada; they found from our dairy records that the butter fat production of some of our cows exceeded the best records of the cows of the Old Land by over 10,000 pounds per head.

Why don't they frankly admit that they have adopted protection so far as the farmers of Great Britain are concerned? The revenues collected there will indicate that in many instances they have protection. Look at the methods adopted to check the importation of American automobiles: in order to enable the British automobile industry to get on its feet again the Government of Great Britain imposed what amounted to practically a prohibition on the importation of American automobiles. Those things have taken place in a country which for many years had a protective tariff, until Great Britain obtained undisputed supremacy as a manufacturing country, and the people felt that they could remove the tariff and compete with the world. Their conditions were most favourable, for their manufacturing industries were well established and their commerce held undisputed sway on the high seas. But are conditions in Canada similar to those in Great Britain? When the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) says that we should have a fiscal policy identical with that which prevails in the Old Land, I would ask him if he would allow protection for some agricultural products, if necessary, such as has been adopted in Great Britain? I would point out, Sir, that people learn by experience, but the experience that costs something is the experience that is the most valuable to us.

Mr. GOULD: Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: For a number of years we had a reciprocity agreement with the United States, but it was suddenly abrogated without any apparent reason, and our channels of trade, which had been developed north and south, were abruptly severed, with the result that we had to develop other channels. And the people of Canada set about that development with a resolute spirit that commanded the admiration of the world. They built canals, harbours, elevators and railways, and in the process they laid the foundations of a great nation. They were determined that they would be no more at the beck and call of any other nation, and never again will they be placed in the position they were in in 1868. Undoubtedly the recollection of those days was a strong factor in deciding the election of 1911. And yet some hon. gentlemen to-day are prepared to permit such a highly protected country as the United States to compete with our manufacturers on an even footing. Why? Simply because some goods could be bought cheaper in the States than in Canada.

The duties on agricultural implements are held up as one of the oppressive handicaps that the agriculturist has to contend with. While the hon. member for Marquette was speaking I could not help thinking of some evidence given by the general manager of the United Grain Growers, Limited, a year ago to the effect that they had a great number of subsidiary companies. The hon. member for Marquette referred to one of those subsidiary companies this afternoon, which he stated on an investment of $100,000 had made profits in 1917 to the tune of $500,000. Surely a pretty good record. He endeavoured to remove the impression that that statement had made on the minds of a good many people by referring to the volume of business which the company transacted. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Reid) also referred to that company in his speech the other night, and stated that the United Grain Growers, Limited, the parent company—he used the words "parent company" when referring to these profits of $500,000—had returned those profits into the pockets of the farmers. I want to take issue with the hon. member on that point. The United Grain Growers, Limited, is an incorporated company on exactly the same footing as any other company, and it has not divided up its profits with the farmers. Nor is it doing so in connection with the profits of many of its subsidiary companies. The hon. member for Mackenzie may know, because he is a director of the United Grain Growers, Limited, and he doubtless had good reason for qualifying his statement when he asserted that the parent company paid those profits back to the shareholders in dividends and cheaper machinery and so forth. As a matter of fact the shares of the United Grain Growers, Limited, were quoted at $25 a share, and I think the number any one shareholder can hold is limited to ten shares.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman is not stating the facts correctly.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The statement made by the hon. gentleman does not refer to the hon. member for Mackenzie personally; therefore there is no question of privilege.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: During the war years the United Grain Growers, Limited, undoubtedly made enormous profits, ranging from 44 to 65 per cent, and in this particular instance 500 per cent. I do not know what some of their other subsidiary companies may have made. But I want to point out that the United Grain Growers, Limited, do not hand those profits back to the farmers, the farmer who has no shares in the company gets exactly the same treatment as the shareholder does, with the exception that the latter receives a dividend of 8½ per cent on his shares for which he paid $30, and his holding is limited, I believe, to ten shares. Many of the shareholders hold only one or two shares merely in order to have a vote. But there is this to be remembered, that the United Grain Growers, Limited, have reaped enormous profits from the fact that they are doing business with the farmers of Western Canada.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The tariff is the terrible bugbear of the farmers of the West we are told. Why did not the hon. member for Marquette and the hon. member for Mackenzie, the president and one of the prominent directors of the company, tell this House that the United Grain Growers, Limited, with their president a member of the Government, had purchased enormous quantities of American machinery a year ago and were holding them in bond expecting a reduction in the tariff at that time? Why was that statement not made to the House? A member of the Government president of the United Grain Growers, Limited, with inside information—his company profiting to that extent! I placed some questions on the Order Paper this year with a view to ascertaining what amount of machinery had been so held by these people without result. But the evidence of the general manager of the United Grain Growers, Limited, shows that the profits they made on the machinery which they imported into this country, I think it was in 1917, was 22.6 per cent. They do business with their customers on a spot cash basis. They have no agents. They have warehouses, and if a farmer wants a machine he can go there and get it, but he has to plank down the cash before he gets it,—and they simply charge him 22.6 per cent. He buys a binder for $250; the tariff at 12½ per cent would be $31.25,—because a considerable reduction has been made in the tariff in order to meet the demands of such unreasonable gentlemen as the member for Marquette. I consider him unreasonable in that the pressure which was brought to bear on the Government a year ago, when they conceded these things to him, should have been sufficient to cause him to carry on and not try to disrupt and disorganize the Government at that time. Well, it is well known that binders and other like implements will with reasonable care, last fifteen years, so that the amount of duty when spread over the life of the binder is not very much,—$31.25 on a binder costing $250. But the hon. member for Marquette did not point out that the United Grain Growers, Limited, want $52.87 profit on that binder from the farmer who is he claims benefited by the profits made by this company. Where do all these surplus profits go? And there are other subsidiary companies as well. I am afraid that I shall not be able to get through before six o'clock, but I want to assure you that other matters in connection with the administration of the Department of Agriculture while the president of the United Grain Growers, Limited, was in the pay of that company and a member of the Government will require some investigation before this Parliament prorogues—an investigation to which the people of Canada are entitled.

At Six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (resuming): When the House rose at six o'clock I was making some reference to the profits on agricultural machinery made by the United Grain Growers, Limited. Whereas the duty on agricultural machinery is 12½ per cent the company shows a profit on the agricultural machinery handled of 21.6 per cent. This is borne out by the evidence given by the General Manager before the Cost of Living Committee. I was also proceeding before the House rose to refer to another branch of the business carried on by this company. There has been a good deal of controversy between grain men and others, with regard to the manner in which the profits of the company have been disposed of. I think I have shown conclusively, and no evidence to the contrary has been submitted to the House, that the only advantage the shareholder receives is a dividend of 8% per cent on the stock that he purchases. That has been the average in recent years, and in no case has he received more than 10 per cent on the capital invested, which is limited to a few shares. I noticed in the Winnipeg papers of January 15, 1919, an article with reference to the profits from overages. I shall quote one paragraph of the article, which is signed by W. J. Christie.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): What paper is the hon. gentleman quoting from?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The Farmers' Telegram and Family Magazine. The article is as follows:

> In the above year—
>
> That is 1917,
>
> —the company made from overage, which was the rightful property of the farmer, much more than they paid the shareholders in dividends. From information received from one of the officers, the Grain Growers, Ltd., have from 30,000 to 40,000 stock subscribers, who are principally the farmers of the prairie provinces, and if properly operated on protected lines it could be of great benefit to the farmers of Canada. The average individual holding is about $50. The management and directors seem to use the 30,000 or 40,000 shareholders to sing their praises, for which they pay them a dividend of 10 per cent, or an average of about $5.00 per year each, and they actually took a greater amount from the farmers by way of excessive dockage on grain shipped through them, for which they give no value. This is certainly a cheap system of advertising their company, but expensive to the farmers.
>
> The farmers of Canada cannot expect much assistance from the United Grain Growers, Limited, either by legislation or in any other way, while they take from them the grain overage, which is the property of the farmer, sell it and apply the proceeds to their own use. If the president of the United Grain Growers' Limited, who is a cabinet minister at Ottawa, advocated any change in the tariff on agricultural implements, would not the question be asked him: "How can you conscientiously ask for any further protection to the farmer when the company of which you are president accepts the grain overage that is the rightful property of the farmer, and applies it to the use of your company?" It would be like the freckled-faced man selling a concoction to remove freckles. The United Grain Growers, Limited, have representatives on their board who are members of the Federal Parliament.

The article also points out that in that year the wheat overages of the United Grain Growers' elevator amounted to $66,744. Since a certain date, it has been legitimate for these companies to retain the overages, but I understand that regulations were passed to enable them to claim this overage legally. The article goes on further to state:

> Webster's definition of the word "stealing" is the act of taking the property of another without his knowledge or consent.

There is another matter I want to refer to, and that is the screenings from the grain at the terminal elevators. The quantity of screenings is something enormous, and strange to say, while the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) was a member of this Government the Department of Agriculture of which he was the head, entered into a contract whereby they undertook to purchase the whole of the re-cleaned screenings at the terminal elevators, and the price which they paid, was $35 per ton. After the farmers had had some experience with the stuff the Government found themselves unable to dispose of it, and before the hon. member for Marquette resigned from the Government this stuff was disposed of at a loss to the Government of something over $96,446.26. I endeavoured to ascertain from the General Manager of the company before the Cost of Living Committee the quantity that the Grain Growers' Grain Company had disposed of, and he agreed through counsel for the company to supply the committee with the quantity and how it had been disposed of. However, he did not do so, and consequently I am not in a position to give the amount that was purchased from this company by the Government while the hon. member for Marquette was Minister of Agriculture. I have already pointed out that the loss to the Department was $96,446.26. The General Manager intimated that he thought the Grand Trunk Elevator Company had purchased the screenings from the United Grain Growers, Limited. In answer to a question I put on the Order Paper this year I received information as to the elevators from whom this stuff was purchased and the price paid, and I find that from the Grand Trunk Pacific Elevator Company—I am not sure that that is the one the General Manager meant, but presumably it is—the Government purchased 2,514 tons at a cost of $87,990. The Government also purchased some from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and from the Saskatchewan Elevator Company, of which I believe the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Maharg) is the president, or at least a director, 1,616 tons at a cost of $46,560.

I have frequently directed the attention of the House to the business that was being conducted in screenings in this country. As far back as 1912 I brought the matter to the attention of the Government, and I have repeatedly endeavoured to have the Government realize the danger that was incurred in having this stuff sent broadcast throughout the country. Provision was made that this stuff might be ground at the elevators and sold to farmers in the ground state, but as a matter of fact it was nearly all shipped out unground. About 10 per cent of it was wild oats, and contained mustard seeds in abundance and other noxious weeds. The result is that those who were misled and foolish enough to purchase this stuff that was unloaded on the country by the president of the United Grain Growers, Limited, are now cursing the day they ever purchased a pound of the stuff and had it fed on their farms.

I want to refer to the price formerly paid for screenings. The General Manager says:

> The average price of screenings during the three years before the war was $4.91 per ton, and the average price for the last six years, including one in which they sold at higher than $20 a ton, has been $8.84 per ton.

The price was $4.91 before the war and $8.84 while the war was on, and this stuff that was purchased through that medium was sent broadcast all over this country with the result that a crop of noxious weeds has been scattered throughout the length and breadth of Canada, in order that this corporation might have big profits on their business. In connection with screenings and overages, I may say that when the grain is received at the elevator the farmer is entitled to anything in excess of 3 per cent dockage while anything amounting to 3 per cent or under the company that handles the grain retains for itself. The farmer also has to pay the freight on the shipment of this stuff to the head of the Lakes. I am unable to give the amount of profits received from this source, but it is certainly very great indeed. In this connection I might refer to something that was dealt with before six o'clock. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) made the statement that in connection with the New York Export Company the profits had been $500,000 on an actual investment of $100,000. As a matter of fact, the general manager states that the profits amounted to $530,000 on an investment of $100,000. Now, we have had charges thrown across the floor of the House that some hon. members on this side who have expressed their approval of the Budget proposals were profiteers, and that some of them had profited during the war to a very great extent. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Elkin) was charged by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. J. F. Reid), I believe, with being a profiteer who had made considerable money during the war. I do not like to make personal references to suspicions as to what people did during the war. Undoubtedly some people have made profits while others have not. But there is one thing that stands out prominently, and will stand out for all time to the credit and the glory of Canada, and that is the fact that we had over half a million men who were prepared to answer the call of duty and, if need be, to surrender their lives in the defence of their country; and the mere bagatelle which they received in the way of pay would not begin to pay their expenses under ordinary conditions. For $1.10 a day those men who did not fall in the struggle carried on day after day and year after year, winning a glorious name for Canada. We have in this House objecting to the present Budget two Oppositions, one, the recognized Liberal party, and the other what are termed the cross-benchers, or Agrarian party, the party led by the hon. member for Marquette, and I should like to know what the leaders of those two parties did during the whole period of the war, when the Prime Minister of this country (Sir Robert Borden), the leader of the Government, was devoting every ounce of energy he possessed, and all the time he could possibly place at the disposal of his country, to the end that Canada might play its part in the struggle, he himself eventually becoming a casualty of the war. What was the record of the two hon. gentlemen? I have already pointed out that the hon. member for Marquette, not satisfied with having the high and distinguished honour of being a member of the Government, retained his position as President of the United Grain Growers, Limited. In this connection, I may remark in passing that the other director of the United Grain Growers, Limited, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Reid), does not state that the subsidiary company, the New York Export Company, contributed to the profits of the parent company. He makes a distinction between the two, and I hope that if there is not such a distinction some one who follows me will so state, because I do not wish to have anything left at the doors of this company for which they are not responsible. Now, the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) on two different occasions, once last session and again during the present session, has taken up considerable time explaining to Parliament and to the country what he had been doing during the war. Well, it is a much different thing mining coal in Colorado from facing the bullets of the enemy on the western front, and other theatres of the war; and, I may add, it is also a much different thing to be carrying on as a soldier than to be filling the position of president of a strong corporation which makes profits in excess of 500 per cent in connection with what one branch of its business, a business that was rendered very profitable as a result of the war, at a salary of from ten to fifteen thousand dollars per year, in addition to being a member of the Government. We are asked to vote a want of confidence in the Prime Minister and his Government; that is what this amendment means. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) twits the mover of the amendment with having introduced such a milk-and-water resolution, which he describes as a shilly-shallying effort to meet the political exigencies of the situation. That is the situation which we have before us to-night and with which we have to deal.

Now, I want to touch upon another matter in connection with the operations of the company, as well as of the department of which my hon. friend (Mr. Crerar) was head. While the war was on it was deemed advisable by the Government to commandeer the butter that was being manufactured, and not that which was already manufactured, as they had done in the United States. They left in cold storage in this country something over 27,000,000 pounds of butter, and commandeered every pound that was being manufactured in the creameries throughout the country. They also placed an embargo on the exportation of milk and cream in excess of quantities that had been exported previous to that time. The amount in cold storage at that time was 27,091,254 pounds. The price at which it was commandeered was 46½ cents a pound for No. 1, 46 for No. 2, and 45 for No. 3.

What have been the results of these attacks that have been made on the dairy industry? The reports that were given out from month to month show that there has been an enormous falling off in dairy produce for the last two years. Ending February this year there was a decrease of 45,000,000 pounds in cheese, an increase in butter and in condensed milk, but in the aggregate a falling off of 24,075,779 pounds. That is the situation that this country is up against and in the face of all this we had the regulations that were enacted by the Board of Commerce that was turned loose on this country at the last session of Parliament. The facts are already in evidence, and they demand immediate attention on the part of the Government. It is the duty of the Government to see that something is done because I will venture to predict that during the present year you will see, month by month, evidences that the policy that was inaugurated under the hon. member for Marquette when the Minister of Agriculture supplemented by the Board of Commerce is going to prove a very serious one indeed.

The hon. member in endeavouring to justify his withdrawal from the Government went on to deal, as he has dealt this afternoon, with the tariff. The tariff was responsible for all the ills that this country was suffering from and it was necessary for him to get out of the Government although the Government had conceded a good deal to him along the line which he had been advocating. The ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Thomas White) whom I am glad to see in the House to-night, will have a fairly good knowledge of what took place in the Government in connection with that matter. The hon. member for Marquette availed himself of the opportunity of that time to refer to the province of Ontario to state how agriculture had become decadent and that it looked to him as though it might very soon be that agriculture would become a lost art in that province. He asserted that production was not as great as it was thirty years ago. That was a bold statement to make and a statement which can not be substantiated. It was a statement which was absolutely without any justification. He stated that:

> The Prime Minister invited me to join this Government, in a sense representing that body of organized public opinion to which I have referred.

Organized public opinion? The United Grain Growers, Limited is the organized public opinion which the hon. gentleman represented when he went into the Government. His subsequent conduct would lead you to believe that he had proved faithful to the company with which he was and is connected. He says:

> Furthermore—and the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) knows it—he can travel through Ontario as I have travelled through it, and he will find, not hundreds, but thousands, of abandoned farms in that province.

Poor old Ontario with her thousands of abandoned farms!

> Within the last two years I saw myself in a twelve-mile drive in the county of Huron, one of the best counties of Ontario, six vacant farms, and I have no reason to doubt the statements I have made.

I will venture to state that he cannot find an abandoned farm in the county of Huron. It is true many farms are much larger than they were and it is also true that the agricultural population is not as great as it was a few years ago. There are reasons for that. Western Canada was opened up durthat time, and the sons of the farmers of Ontario have gone west by tens of thousands, taken up homesteads and become citizens of the West. But there are opportunities in Ontario that there were not thirty years ago and I am proud of the fact that we have industrial concerns in Ontario where our young men can go and that there are opportunities for them to engage in business and the professions if they do not wish to carry on farming operations, whereas, before that, they had to go to the United States or some other country to do so. We have these opportunities in Canada to-day and that condition is much preferable than that our young men should have to go to some other country to find openings in commercial life. Agriculture has been dragging in Ontario for a number of years. Why? The young men on the farms in Ontario volunteered just as well as those in other walks of life considering the conditions surrounding them. I have in mind three farmers, neighbours of mine, with only two sons each. All these boys volunteered and went overseas. How could you expect their fathers to carry on as well under these conditions? Yet we have a party in this province that are endeavouring to libel the farmers and to cast odium upon them by saying that they were favourable to being exempted from military service during the war. That is not the case because during the war they carried on as well as they could although they were badly handicapped by reason of the fact that the men who had formerly sought employment on the farm had gone to the war. As a rule they were among the newcomers to this country, they were British born, they were the first to answer the call and they rushed to the colours but they are again coming back, they are coming into Ontario in large numbers and we will soon overcome the conditions we have had to face during the past few years.

It would be unfortunate at this time if it were instilled in the minds of the people that there is a possibility that we were going to upset the fiscal conditions of this country. That same old agitation was going on previous to 1896. There was a feeling of unrest and uncertainty previous to that time by reason of the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite but once they came into power the manufacturers, and those who had money to invest, realized they were going to adhere to the old, stable policy which had been in force in this country. The result was that capital obtained confidence, people put their money into industries and we had prosperity by reason of the fact that uncertainty had been removed from the minds of the people. It is up to the people of Canada to-day to put those who are endeavouring to stir up trouble and discontent where they properly belong. It is a remarkable thing, it is very significant, that it was only a few days after the hon. member for Marquette severed his connection with the Government that there broke out in his native province what you might call an insurrection. You all know what happened in connection with the strike in the city of Winnipeg and it is not necessary to refer to it here. You know how the eyes of the people were turned in that direction and it was well known that there was a determined effort being made to bring about a condition in this country similar to that which they have in Russia. The O. B. U. was in evidence at Winnipeg at that particular time. I do not refer to these things with any degree of pleasure but it is just as well to call a spade a spade and be done with it and get rid of some of this camouflage.

Yes, the province of Ontario, as the hon. member says, suffered during the war by reason of the scarcity of farm labour. The farmers in that province have had a good deal to contend with, but they are not the only people that have had to encounter difficulties in that respect. This movement that is on foot is not confined to Canada or the United States, it has been general throughout the world—the movement from the country to the cities and towns has been a world-wide movement. Two weeks ago I noticed in the Detroit Free Press an article referring to what was taking place in the state of Michigan, which is similar in many respects to the province of Ontario. This is what Mr. G. W. Dickinson, manager of the Michigan State Fair, had to say with reference to the Lansing official report which dealt with this matter:

"The public does not half realize the importance of that report," said Mr. Dickinson. "We have a tremendous housing shortage here in Detroit, but out in the state there are 30,300 vacant homes. In Detroit, they would take care of at least 150,000 people, and considering the ample size of most country homes and the congestion here, they probably would accommodate close to 250,000 persons.

"Information in this report is not altogether new to the Fair personnel. Our county agents have been sending in isolated reports showing the same tendency for several months.

"It is not poor land that is idle. Great portions of it is right at our doors in Oakland county—which is not only the most fertile of soil, but is also practically a backyard garden for the great manufacturing cities of Detroit and Pontiac. Next winter we may have our pockets full of money, but without food and coal."

That is the condition of affairs in the state of Michigan. Mr. Harry R. O'Brien, writing in the Canadian Farm and quoting in an article from the Saturday Evening Post, states:

One of the questions discussed by this writer is the housing problem in cities. He cites case after case of empty houses in the country, while the people in neighbouring towns are forced to crowd together two, three, four and more families in a single dwelling. In a country town in Kentucky of 6,000 souls there are but two houses that are not homes of at least two families, and in some cases in this town as high as six families are living in one house. On five of the main roads leading out from that town, within a radius of less than ten miles, there are, at least, twenty-seven vacant farm houses—standing idle with no one living in them. This is only one of the particular instances cited. They could be multiplied many times over in every State. Cities and towns are overcrowded, while thousands of farm houses all over the country are vacant.

That is the condition of affairs in the United States. Why, then, does the hon. member single out the province of Ontario and try to make things much worse than they really are. We have this good excuse for being short of farm labour in that province that the farm labourers and the farmers' sons were at the Front doing their duty. I say it ill becomes any man who had the distinguished honour of being chosen a member of the Government to break faith with the people who sent him here, because it is nothing else than that. If those hon. gentlemen who have crossed from this side to the cross benches find that it is necessary for them to vote against the Government on the tariff question which was not an issue at the last election there is only one consistent thing for them to do, and that is to go back to the electors who sent him here, and say, "I can no longer support the Government." Let them do that instead of endeavouring to form the nucleus of a party with the object of wrecking the Government. I am satisfied that I am right in my views as to what is contemplated because of the prediction made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier before the Union Government was formed, and which I have already given to the House. Hon. Gentlemen opposite are hoping to wreck the Government by bringing small detachments of members from this side over to their ranks—some of whom might be characterized as the hon. members on the cross benches have characterized the amendment of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding): If I cannot support the Government on a measure such as we are considering to-day, especially when an amendment has been moved which means a vote of want of confidence in Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues, there is a certain consistent course for me to pursue, and that is to hand my resignation to the people who sent me here. That and no other course should be followed by those who have any regard for the confidence which was placed in them by the people under the peculiar conditions which existed in the fall of 1917. I believe that breeding counts for something in the long run. We have on this side descendants of Blakes and Mowats, and I venture to say you will not find men with blood of that kind in their veins doing such a thing in the case of a Government elected as this Government was in 1917.

I have already spoken at greater length than I intended but there are a number of other matters to which I would like to refer. At this critical period, when public confidence is so necessary, no one should do anything to unduly agitate the public mind. Undoubtedly there is unrest in the country, and it is quite natural that there should be. Then, too, the cost of living is a very serious matter indeed. Hon. gentlemen opposite ask: Are these taxes that are levied going to benefit the consumer? Who are the consumers, let me ask? Is not every citizen of this country a consumer, and will he not find it necessary to deny himself of something in order to meet the demands that are being made upon him? The hon. member for Marquette complained that the income tax imposed in Canada was not as high as that levied in Great Britain. In his speech the hon. member could not get away from Great Britain. That is his ideal in regard to the tariff, and fiscal matters of every kind; but it must be remembered that Great Britain is an old country, with long established industries. Why did not the hon. gentleman refer to the income taxes that are being levied in the United States? Had he done so he would have found that the income taxes collected in Canada compare very favourably with those levied in the country to the south. The opinion of the people of the United States with regard to Canada is evidently a good deal better than that entertained by the hon. member for Marquette. In this connection let me quote a few paragraphs which appeared in the New York Tribune of December 19, 1917:

Canada "Carries On".

Last April on the shell scarred slopes of Vimy Ridge Canada at the front gave proof of her courage, her devotion, her strength. The "maple leaf" planted on one of the great bulwarks of German tyranny in France was a final evidence of the attitude of one-half of North America to the Boche threat to civilization.

Before Vimy the Canadians had borne their part nobly. It was soldiers of the Dominion who broke the first weight of the German thrust after the gas attack in the Second Battle of Ypres. The British Empire will long remember gratefully the sacrifices of the "Little Black Devils" and the "Princess Pats" on that blood soaked ground about Ypres where the veteran army of Britain—the "old contemptibles"—found their glory and their graves in October and November, 1914.

Of the Canadians at the front there was no question. They had seen the German thing as it was. Their comrades had been "gassed" and crucified. Their fellow Canadians had fought cleanly and bravely against a barbarism which expressed itself in methods and in tricks which were beneath the contempt of white men and below the level of savages. Canada at the front knew the German—but what of Canada behind the front, three thousand miles away—would that line hold, too?

Well, the world has its answer now. The politicians doubted. The weak, the weary, the conquered and the disloyal spread their forecasts and proclaimed the outcome. They are answered; so are doubting politicians and faint hearted patriots the world over. As the American democracy found itself by re-electing Lincoln in 1864, the Canadian democracy has justified democracy and itself in 1917 by re-enlisting for the war, by accepting the man and the methods which alone promise victory.

It is a stirring thing, this victory of democracy in Canada over all the forces which make for surrender and for worse than surrender. The voice of the first Allied electorate to be heard in many, many months is a sign for all Allied statesmen to observe and heed. Canada has sent 400,000 men to Europe; Canada has borne more than 125,000 casualties; but to the call of duty Canada's response is immediate and unmistakable. It is a response which will be heard the world over. It is a response which will be noted in Berlin as well as in London. Is it too much to suspect it may even be heard in Rome?

The United States will congratulate and pay just tribute to its neighbouring democracy for its decision. In a time of momentary pessimism Canada has cheered all of us. In an hour of depression and weakness Canada has shown the road of courage and victory illuminated by the spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion. She has been faithful to her dead; to those of her sons murdered as well as those slain in fair fight.

That was the opinion of the better element of the people of the United States with regard to our attitude during the war.

Canada will continue to carry on, and she is not going to be divided into classes. Any one who endeavours to set class against class in this country is doomed to failure, for our people have too much good sense to be led away by any such false cry, the folly of which is apparent to every right-thinking person. As the inheritors of a great country we have a duty that we must perform, and the eyes of the world are centred on us to-day largely by reason of the sacrifices and record made by our gallant soldiers at the front. The need of the hour is great, but if we do our duty by ourselves and by our country, if we remain true to ourselves, during the next few years we shall see an unparalleled and undreamt of development of our resources. United States capitalists are anxious to invest money and to establish new industries here in order to develop our resources; in our great western country, where as yet we have merely scratched a little of the surface, we have unlimited resources which, when developed, will be a reproach to those who now would advocate a departure at this critical stage of our history from the old established policy upon which has been laid the foundations of our national prosperity. Are we going to take chances again, as we did years ago when we were young and weak on a change of fiscal policy after having laid down a truly Canadian policy, in order that somebody, somewhere, may make a try out with some fantastic theory? And, Mr. Speaker, I may say that if no stronger arguments are advanced in support of that theory than we have heard this afternoon from the leader of the Agrarian party, I am inclined to think that that party has reached its meridian and is already on its decline.

In conclusion I want to again emphasize the fact, that over 80 per cent of our agricultural produce is now consumed at home, and I would again draw attention to the importance of the home market, which is the most valuable that our farmers can have, and I would warn them that if the policy now being advocated by the Agrarian group ever goes into effect agriculture will be the first to suffer, for it is not only our industrial interests that need a protective policy let us get full credit for the quality and standard of our products.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) says that protection is the greatest fallacy that was ever dreamt of. I can remember when the leader of the Government some years ago was endeavouring to put a vote through this House in order to strengthen and render more efficient the British Navy, my hon. friend from Red Deer contended that even although it would cost more money to build ships in Canada, the policy for us to adopt was to have the wheels of industry turning here, to have our workmen employed, and that better wages for Canadian workmen meant better living conditions for their families. So my hon. friend has not always been a consistent advocate of free trade. On that occasion, notwithstanding his great admiration for the Mother Land—which we all feel just as strongly as he does—he advocated Canadian ships built by Canadian workmen.

Undoubtedly, Mr. Speaker, we have a country which nature has endowed with everything that a man can desire, and which holds the promise of a mighty future. And, if we cannot make a country with such material it will be because we are not true to ourselves and if we are not true to ourselves be sure our sin will find us out.

Mr. JOSEPH ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, I hold no brief for the United Farmers' party, and I will not assume to-night the responsibility of answering the violent attacks made by my hon. friend from South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) on the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) and the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Halbert). Several hon. members of the United Farmers' party have yet to speak, and I am sure that when the opportunity is given to them they will fully answer the hon. member who has just taken his seat.

Before discussing the Budget, however, I think it is my duty to answer a statement made by the hon. member for South Oxford to the effect that when a delegation of the farmers of the various provinces came to Ottawa to try to force the Government to keep its promises to exempt their sons from military service, that movement originated with the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec. Sir, My hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland), who represents a farming constituency, and who probably would not be sitting in this House if that promise of exemption had not been made before the election, knows very well that his statement is not based on fact. It is true that some of the farmers of the province of Quebec joined the farmers of the other provinces in the delegation, but they did not expect any result from the interview with the Government. The farmers of Quebec did not resent the cancellation of the exemption as much as did their brothers in Ontario and the other English provinces, for those of Quebec knew very well that the promise made by the Government was purely an election promise, and in the light of that knowledge they took good care to vote unanimously against the Government.

Let us come now to the Budget Speech. Mark Twain, in one of his books, tells the story of a devout believer in Christianity who, on hearing that an appeal for funds was to be made on behalf of his church, provided himself with a fair amount of bank notes with the idea of giving generously in aid of the church. As he entered the house of God he took out of his pocket ten one dollar bills and put them to one side with the intention of giving them at collection time. The preacher started his sermon, and of course the subject of the sermon was an appeal for funds. Our generous friend listened to him very carefully. The preacher started to expose, first the liabilities of the church and the comparatively heavy debt, and as he went on giving details of expenditure the generous member thought that some of that expenditure was uncalled for and extravagant, and it had the effect of cooling a little his generosity. Stretching out his hand he took up one of the dollar bills and put it back in his pocket. The preacher went along and set forth what he thought should be a fair assessment of the members of the church, and the assessment proposed was so unjust and biassed, inasmuch as it put the heaviest burden of the taxation or the collection on the poorer members of the community and was very lenient towards the wealthier members, that one by one the bills found their way back into our well-disposed member's pocket; and at the end of the sermon, when the collection came on, he gave a dime. Sir, on the 18th of this month, having realized the dire financial condition of the country, I came to this House well-disposed towards the ever-smiling and jaunty Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), ready to assist him in his arduous task of fixing up the finances of the country, and absolutely open-minded as to the means to be adopted. I even joined the other members of the Opposition in applauding him when he rose. But, Sir, as he proceeded with his submission of long lists of figures of expenditures and other extravagances of the Government, my good intention began to dwindle; and, when the hon. minister began to make his new proposals of taxation putting the whole burden and hardship on the shoulders of the middle classes and the poorer classes and leaving entirely what I may call the war money undisturbed, the war wealth untouched, my good disposition received another shock. But when at the end of his speech I realized that his proposal meant a retention by the wealthy of huge sums that should have been diverted to the public treasury, when I noticed that he had nothing to say regarding the high cost of living, nothing to suggest with a view to allaying the unrest throughout the country, my desire to help received such a severe shock that I could not even bring to the rescue of my previous good intentions the old Latin proverb, venia necessitati datur—indulgence is granted to necessity.

I would like to retain your attention, Mr. Speaker, for a few moments first, on the omissions from the Budget; second, on the unfair proposals of the Budget; and third, on the alternatives which I believe would have been much fairer and more efficient. I have no time to review the financial situation of the country, as has been done by some other members. But, listening to the Minister of Finance the other day and hearing him say that the net debt of the country was over two billion dollars and had increased last year in the sum of $395,000,000. I took my pencil and made some figures. I found that last year our debt increased at the rate of $32,916,666 per month; $7,000,000 per week; $1,084,931 per day; $45,205 per hour. So, if the increase goes along this year as it did last year, the net debt will have increased from the time we entered this Chamber, Sir, at eight o'clock this evening until we adjourn probably at twelve o'clock, in the sum of $180,820. I surmise that after examining these striking figures it is not necessary to dwell on the gravity of the financial situation of the country.

But granting the extravagance and carelessness of the Government, permit me, Mr. Speaker, to refer to a most important statement which was made in the House a few days ago by the member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. J. H. Sinclair), commented upon by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) and discussed by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen). At page 2723 of unrevised Hansard, 21st May, the member for Antigonish and Guysborough referred first to twenty-five payments amounting to about $3,000, marked "Advances unaccounted for" in the Auditor General's Report. As no answer has been made by the Government with regard to this item, I will not discuss it. But on the same day my hon. friend made a much more important statement, reported on the same page of Hansard. He stated that there was an item of $119,546,597 in the Auditor General's Report of the 31st March, 1918, for which no vouchers had been received; that this year a similar item appeared, but increased to $121,640,016.12. He stated also that the late Auditor General, Mr. Fraser, urged the Militia Department to take action; that he demanded these vouchers in 1917, 1918 and 1919, and that they apparently have not been forthcoming as yet in 1920—the amount of $121,000,000 has disappeared and nobody knows where it has gone. The hon. member for Red Deer commented upon these facts and their importance the other day, and at last an answer came from the Government. It came from the lips of the Minister of the Interior when he was making a bid for the premiership of Canada. Let us examine this statement; let us see whether it is of the calibre that one would expect from a leader, or one who aspires to be a leader, of public opinion. We find it at page 2767 of unrevised Hansard of this year. The answer is divided into two parts. I shall read the first part first. Here is what the Minister of the Interior says, referring to the hon. member for Red Deer:

9 p.m.

> He made mention of certain items in the Auditor General's Report that were marked in that report "unaccounted for," and large items they were. They were referred to first by the hon. member for Guysborough and Antigonish (Mr. J. H. Sinclair). I was not in my place at that time; but I would presume that the items were British or foreign credits, the accounting for which had not yet reached the Auditor General, and that consequently they appeared in the report in that form.

Notice the answer: I presume, he says, the items were British or foreign credits. He does not know what they are. What matters to him the paltry sum of $121,000,000 belonging to the people of Canada? Let us see now if his presumption is correct. It might be a good standard by which in the future to weigh the many presumptions of the Minister of the Interior. I have here volume 4, 1918, part ZZ, of the Auditor General's Report, and on page 218 I find the following:

Expenditure by the Chief Paymaster on account of pay and other expenses of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, vouchers for which have not been received	$119,546,597 93
Less refunds deposited to the credit of the Receiver General by the Chief Paymaster	4,165,354 22
	$115,381,243 71

There are no British or foreign credits there. Let us see further. In the Auditor General's Report of 1919, part ZZ, at page 228, I find the following:

Expenditure by the Chief Paymaster on account of pay and other expenses of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, vouchers for which have not been received	$129,308,233 14
Less refunds deposited to the credit of the Receiver General by the Chief Paymaster..	7,668,216 52
	$121,640,016 62

I do not find any British or foreign credits there either. Is my hon. friend still satisfied that these are British or foreign credits? Let us look further into the matter. On Friday, the 18th of May, 1917, the late Auditor General, Mr, Fraser, appeared before the Special Committee on Returned Soldiers and gave evidence regarding some accounts of the Militia Department. His evidence, which will be found on page 1116 to 1124 of that report, contains a few lines which will show you how the people's money is being taken care of by this Government. On page 1119 of the report I read the following:

> By Mr. Bennett:
> Q. That is pretty well looked after now.

He was speaking of these amounts. The Auditor General, Mr. Fraser, at that time, replied:

> I will tell you what was done. When I was over there, and discussing these things, I said: "You ought to have some system of checking with Ottawa periodically." The result of that suggestion was that cards were taken from all the ledgers, giving the man's name, identity, and so forth, with the state of his account on the 30th November, and they have sent a staff out here who are engaged in checking off the accounts with the Militia Department books.

Q. And the statement has been made that the result has been very satisfactory?—A. I do not know whether it will be satisfactory to the Committee to hear that they have found there were hundreds of thousands of dollars gone, and only a comparatively small portion of it recovered.

Further on at page 1122 the Auditor General was questioned as follows:

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. In connection with the overpayments of which you spoke, I suppose that efforts are constantly being made to recover these amounts? —A. Yes, there is a staff, I do not know how many, engaged on that work.

Q. How do these efforts result, are the moneys returned, or refunded by the people who received cheques they should not have received? —A. Those would be sums paid at Ottawa here?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not know exactly what your committee here is appointed to inquire into.

Q. Everything in connection with this subject; is there anything in that connection upon which this committee might obtain further information?—A. I certainly think there should be some inquiry into this question; I understand there have been very serious leakages in connection with these refunds.

Q. How do you mean?—A. In conection with refunds that have been made and not accounted for.

Q. Refunds made to Ottawa?—A. Yes. I am only giving hearsay now, but I would not say it unless I thought it were true. This is so vast a subject, that I cannot audit it in the way I audit other accounts, unless I create a staff such as they have or duplicate the work and keep the accounts.

Q. How does this leakage occur to which you refer?—A. Sometimes cases where the person has had a separation allowance continued after the man was discharged and when it is found out after a while, the department asks the parties to make a refund. The refund comes back in cash, possibly, or money orders, or cheques, and I understand there is a lot of that money that has never gone to the credit of the Receiver General.

Q. Have there been any reports made to you on that subject?—A. No.

Q. Would there be any reports made to you in the ordinary course of events?—A. No, they do not usually tell me those things. It is just like the paymasters, there are defalcations of paymasters, quite a lot of them, some of them from overseas. I will give you one instance of a man who was, I think it was $3,500 behind. He was overseas, he was dealt with over there and sent back to Canada. He was discharged and sent back to Canada to be dealt with here. He was dealt with here, by putting him in command of a new regiment as colonel. He is now over in France, and he has never paid up this amount. I asked them to commence deducting this amount from his pay and they said: "Oh, we can't do that, the pay is to Colonel So and So; that was Paymaster So and So, we have no authority to deduct it from Colonel So and So's pay."

Q. Was it known at headquarters that he was a defaulter?—A. Yes, certainly, it is shown on the books there.

Sir, there can be no doubt in the minds of the representatives of the people as to the ultimate destination of this $121,000,000.

[Mr. Archambault.]

But the Minister of the Interior says something else in his reply:

But the hon. member for Guysborough or the hon. member for Red Deer, knows that if there is anything he does not understand in the Report of the Auditor General, there is a standing committee of this House for the purpose of investigating every item questioned, and although we have been in session three months, that committee has never been called. If there be any reason for calling it, hon. members have it in their power to have it called, and if there be anything dark it will be revealed.

First of all let me say, Sir, that this answer does not stand on its legs. It is true we have been here three months, but although we have repeatedly asked for the fourth volume of the Auditor General's Report it was only forthcoming about a week ago. But the minister's answer means something more. It has a much more important significance. He says that if the Opposition members believe that there is something wrong they have the power to call the Public Accounts Committee and if there is anything dark it will be revealed. But suppose we do not call that committee, what then? The position assumed by the Government is this: "Let the people be robbed if the Opposition is not clever enough to see it. It is not our business; what do we care?" Well, Sir, I submit that, whether sitting on your right or on your left, every member is in duty bound to look after the accounts and to see that the people's money is not improperly expended.

Now I come to the omissions of the Budget. First of all, I wish to call attention to a matter which I have brought up every time the income tax has been discussed in this House. I refer to the exemption of $200 for every child under seventeen years of age. I believe, Sir, that the amount is far too small and that it should be increased to $500. To any one who has been blessed with children it is only too well known that $200, nay, $500, is hardly sufficient for the expenses in connection with one child. I would even go further in my request of the Minister of Finance, who I am very sorry is not in his place. I would ask him to grant total exemption from income taxation to the father of ten children, and I trust he will take up my suggestion in committee. After all, it is the Canadian-born person who makes the best Canadian citizen, and if my hon. friend refuses to accede to my request I shall perforce come to the conclusion that, instead of following the precept of the Bible, "Crescite et multipli camini," he has the same idea as is entertained by a well known mayor in the province of Ontario, Mayor Booker, who is reported by the Ottawa Journal as follows:

> Hamilton, March 29: Mayor Booker announced himself an advocate of birth control and thinks the time will come when Canada will adopt the Holland system. "Some families are altogether too large," he said. "One or two children are enough for most homes."

I am sure, Sir, that this mayor of a large Ontario city must be a dog fancier, and I hope the Minister of Finance does not approve of the theories of this premier advocate of race suicide.

Regarding the income tax, I have another suggestion to make. In England they differentiate between incomes earned and incomes unearned. For instance, if a man has an income of, say, $6,000 which is derived from investments in stock, real estate, deposits in banks, he pays a larger tax than the man who derives his income from his daily labour. And that is only fair. If the man who has an income of $6,000 derives it from investments in stocks or deposits in banks or investments in real estate, when he dies or becomes an invalid his family is left with a capital of at least $100,000 and has practically the same income as when he was alive On the other hand, when a man who derives his income from his work dies or becomes an invalid his family is left penniless. I therefore submit that it is only just that such a man should be taxed to a less extent than the other, in order that he might be able either to take out insurance on his life or to put by a little money to provide for old age and the sustenance of his family when he is incapacitated.

But, Sir, the most glaring omission of the Budget Speech—evidently it is not an omission in the opinion of the minister, although it is, in mine and, I have no doubt, in that of the people of Canada—is the fact that he does not say a word about reducing the high cost of living. Nay, his proposals are rather apt to increase that cost. I should like to call your attention, Sir, to the fact that up to now not one member supporting the Government has said a word about the high cost of living; not one word has been said about the sufferings of the middle and poorer classes; not one plea has been made nor one suggestion offered to alleviate the burden which threatens to crush the taxpayer of modest means. Every member who has spoken supporting the Government has made an eloquent plea for protection, has brought forward figure after figure to prove that protection is necessary for manufacturing industries, and has stated this to be an indispensable fiscal policy. Those hon. members who spoke in this strain spoke strictly from the point of view of the privileged class, without making a single utterance regarding the consumer, ignoring him entirely in the problems we have to solve. Yet the middle and poorer classes form the great majority of the people. They are the ones who most feel the burdens of taxation and of the high cost of living. But it is characteristic of this Government that in framing their policies they take care of their wealthy friends and entirely ignore the needs of the common people. I am not surprised. I have been in this House for over two years and I have yet to see a measure brought down by the Government which carries with it an honest purpose to relieve the consumer. Am I exaggerating? Shall I be charged with making an assertion for a political purpose? Then I reply: Can any hon. member on the other side stand up and say that what I am saying is not correct? I repeat, Mr. Speaker, and I emphasize, that not only has no such measure been ever introduced, but the Government has encouraged profiteering with a fraternal care and allowed it to thrive and fatten. We had an inquiry into the high cost of living and startling facts were disclosed. The Government instituted the Board of Commerce which cost so much money to the people of the country, and which went around the country inquiring into the cost of ham sandwiches and false teeth. With what result? The chairman has resigned because he was tied down in his decisions. The Board has been in existence for over a year and though many instances of rank profiteering were brought before it, yet not one arrest was made.

Before starting the Board had enough evidence to jail some of the profiteers. The manager of the Paton Manufacturing Company of Sherbrooke stated before the High Cost of Living Committee that his company was making 72 per cent, or 176 per cent on the invested capital. He stated furthermore that his company was not made for the glory of God nor for the glory of the people, but that it was carried on for the benefit of the shareholders. He should have been arrested as they arrest that kind of people in the United States. It was also proved at the same inquiry that the Dominion Textile Company had made 31 per cent, but 310 per cent on the invested capital, as was stated by the hon. member for Marquette this afternoon. The amount put into the company originally is different from the amount which is represented to be the capital stock now because there was $5,000,000 of common stock issued which was all water.

Has the Government taken proceedings against this company. No, Sir. Instead of taking proceedings they have done better than that. I hold in my hand a return to an order of the House of Commons dated April 19, 1920, and it is a return asked for by myself. It is sessional paper No. 147. I find that the companies controlled by Sir Charles Gordon or the subsidiaries of the Dominion Textile Company, received from the Government of Canada $958,566.77 in the last six months. Let me explain. This report discloses the following facts. My first question was:

Amounts loaned or credits given by the Government of Canada:—
(a) To Greece;
(b) To Roumania.

The answer was this:

Amounts loaned or credits given by the Government of Canada:
To Greece, $25,000,000.
To Roumania, $25,000,000.

My second question was as follows:

2. The date these loans were granted or credits given.

The answer is:

(a) To Greece, April 15, 1919.
(b) To Roumania, April 2, 1919.
These loans were granted by Orders in Council.

3. The nature of merchandise purchased by the Government of Canada and the charges in each case.

We will see later on what kind of merchandise was purchased. Now comes question No. 4, a most important question:

4. The names of commercial firms or persons from whom such goods were so purchased, specifying (a) the nature of goods in each case; (b) the amounts paid by the Government to these firms or persons in each case and also the date of these payments.

As I said before, I have taken the amounts given to the Dominion Textile Company and the subsidiary companies. The subsidiary companies are the Montreal Cotton Company and Penman's Limited. If you add the amount paid to Canadian Converters, in which I am informed the president of the Dominion Textile Company has a large interest, $111,751.20, you will find that Sir Charles Gordon, whose company was shown before the High Cost of Living Committee to have made profiteering profits, not only was not prosecuted, not only was not molested, but was given by the Government orders to the amount of $1,069,317.97 during the past six months and paid for by the money of the Canadian people.

[Mr. Archambault.]

But this document is very interesting. We have it that the Government has paid these firms with good Canadian money and charged the total amount to Roumania and Greece. Will we ever get this money back? I have very grave doubts. Roumania is bankrupt, Greece is on the verge of bankruptcy, and I am informed—and I wish some of the ministers would answer my question—that two interest instalments on the bonds that we hold from Roumania have not been met lately.

Let us glance rapidly over the return. I notice that the Department of Militia have sold the following goods in the last six months:

Woollens	$435,449 66
Boots	170,600 00
Blankets	276,750 00
Sweaters	22,500 00
Total	$905,299 66

Or nearly $1,000,000 of goods sold in six months by the Government. I submit that is a very bad piece of business. These blankets, these woollen goods, these boots, these sweaters, for which the Government will probably never be paid, should first have been offered at auction to the Canadian people.

Mr. COPP: Were they military supplies?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: These are probably military supplies because they are sold by the Militia Department. In the United States very successful sales of army supplies were made by the Government to the people, and they helped to lower the cost of living. But as we go along this document becomes more and more interesting. I find on page 3 the following item:

Welland Vale Manufacturing Company, St. Catharines, June 19, 1920	$135,214 78

In looking at a very useful little book, the Parliamentary Guide, which was copiously used last year in respect to the figures of military enlistments in the different constituencies, I find that the president of the Welland Vale Manufacturing Company is a gentleman who was heard in this House for the first time this year, a gentleman who has never spoken here before, or very seldom that I can recall. The hon. gentleman in question made a very strong speech for protection last week, and an equally strong speech in favour of the Government. Who was that gentleman? No less a person than the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin).

On page 4 of the return, I find another item which is also very interesting:

Brantford Roofing Company, Brantford, $36,200.

Upon referring to the same little book I find that one of the directors of that company is that great apostle of protection, the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt).

But let me continue. Under the title of "Nails" I find:

The Maritime Nail Co., St. John, N.B.

Am I mistaken, Mr. Speaker, in stating that a few days ago we heard a speech from an hon. gentleman who confessed he had always been a free trader but that conditions had changed, and that he was now a protectionist and a supporter of the Government? Referring again to this book I "nailed" a director of the Maritime Nail Company—to be absolutely correct the president and managing director,—in the hon. member for St. John, N.B. (Mr. Elkin).

An hon. MEMBER: How much did he get?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: He got $69,168.73.

Mr. DUFF: Very expensive nails.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The hon. member is quite correct, they were very expensive nails.

Mr. COPP: Expensive protection, I should say.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: But let me go further. On page 5 I find another item:

The Monarch Knitting Company, Dunnville.

This company got a very small amount indeed—it only received the sum of $271,-844.48. Sir, I could not find the name of the president of this company in the Parliamentary Guide. The hon. gentleman was probably wiser and more experienced, than some other hon. members. But I have here a very recent edition of the Annual Financial Review, bearing date of June 19, 1919, and I find at page 285 of that publication that the president of the Monarch Knitting Company is the hon. member from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor). I have still another item:

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do not believe in protection.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The fifth item reads:

The Sherwin-Williams Paint Company, $31,-490.

I also find this item:

Canada Paint Company, $11,332.

Mr. DEVLIN: To whom does that apply?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: At pages 345 and 346 of the same Annual Financial Review I find that the Canada Paint Company is a subsidiary company of the Sherwin-Williams Paint Company. I also find that it has been absorbed and is controlled by that company, and that the vice-president —who is also a director—of that company is no less a luminary than the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne).

Mr. BALLANTYNE: If my hon. friend will make further search he will find that I am also a vice-president and director of a great many more companies than the one he has named.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I have no doubt that my hon. friend is interested in many large companies. Now, Sir, I have only rapidly glanced through this return, and there are many other items which it might be of interest to place on Hansard. There is one for instance with respect to Mr. Lloyd Harris, or rather the Canada Steel Company in which that gentleman is interested. Mr. Harris is a gentleman as to whom we are well informed. He was Canadian Trade Commissioner in London, and did not forget himself in obtaining these orders. I have no comment to make regarding the profits realized in these transactions—I do not know what they are. There is no doubt all these hon. gentlemen I have mentioned are within the law—that is, they are within the letter of the law. But are they within the spirit of the law? Let me read to the House Section 15 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, Revised Statutes, 1906:

If any member of the House of Commons accepts any office or commission, or is concerned or interested in any contract, agreement, service or work which, by this Act, renders a person incapable of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, or knowingly sells any goods, wares or merchandise to, or performs any service for the Government of Canada, or for any of the officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is paid or to be paid . . . . . the seat of such member shall thereby be vacated, and his election shall thenceforth be null and void.

Section 19 provides as follows:

This Act shall not extend to disqualify any person as a member of the House of Commons by reason of his being—(a) a shareholder in any incorporated company having a contract with the Government of Canada.

Well, "shareholder" does not necessarily mean "director," and the prohibition against a member of the House of Commons selling any goods to the Government does not apply to such a one. That is true and those concerned will answer that the Government has transacted business with a company in which they were interested. That is also true. It is likewise true that they have transacted business not for the Government, not for the people of Canada, but for other countries. If this loophole satisfies their conscience, well and good. I do not wish to be understood as casting the least reflection on the honesty of the deals, but, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains, first, that the Government will probably never be reimbursed the moneys paid; second, that the Government bought goods from companies in which some members of Parliament are personally interested; third, that transactions of this nature unavoidably cast a shadow on parliamentary independence, and that in making such purchases the Government has done a great deal to keep "the boys" in line and to get them to put "a little pep and ginger" in their speeches.

But let us come now to the proposals of the Minister of Finance, especially to what he terms his excise luxury tax. I read in an Ottawa paper a few days ago that a large and wealthy manufacturer on reading the Budget Speech said: "Never touched me." Sir, that is the gist of the proposals. The manufacturer will consider it his right to make the consumer pay the additional charges; and Mr. Breadner, the Commissioner of Taxation, admitted that fact at a meeting in this city. There can be no doubt about the truth of that manufacturer's boast, "Never touched me." In other words, the tax will be paid by the consumer. Moreover, if the manufacturer or the merchant has to pay for the services of an extra accountant to keep track of these taxes, that cost will be charged to overhead expenses, and the consumer will have the burden passed on to him.

I will not take up the time of the House in pointing out that a $45 suit is not a luxury, nor is a $9 pair of boots—unless made out of paper like the ones that this Government bought for the army at the beginning of the war. Similarly, all kinds of electroliers, gasoliers, patent medicines —the poor families' doctor—biscuits, preserves, jam, beer, ham, breakfast foods such as corn flakes and shredded wheat, coke—the fuel of the poor,—pickles, cheap curtains, are not luxuries but necessaries of life to our working people, and that the resolution strikes, not the wealthy, but the middle and the poorer classes.

And, Sir, may I remind you how uncouth and unfair are these proposals? If my hon. friend the Minister of Finance buys a $1,000 living-room suite, or a $1,000 mantel-piece; or if my hon. friend the Minister of Immigration and Colonization buys a $32 mahogany waste-paper basket, neither of them will pay any luxury tax. But if a workingman buys a $5 gas fixture or gasolier he will pay a dollar tax. If I buy an electric fan, which is a luxury, I pay no luxury tax; but if I buy an electric iron, which is a necessity in every household, I have to pay the tax. If I buy an umbrella at $4, which, as every one will admit, is very useful when it rains, I will have to pay a 10 per cent tax; but if I buy a $10 walking stick it is so useful in bad weather that I am not required to pay any luxury tax. A wealthy man can buy wallpaper at $5 a yard free of luxury tax, the most expensive china for pink teas without being mulcted for any luxury tax; but inexpensive cut glass is taxed. If I go to the Chateau Laurier I shall be getting away cheaply if I pay $5 for my meal, but I do not pay any luxury tax on that indulgence; but if I buy a box of shredded wheat or a box of corn-flakes at 10 or 15 cents I have to pay a luxury tax.

There is no doubt that the minister had to find some means of providing money to meet the financial needs of the country, every one admits that,—although the Government is solely responsible for the present state of affairs. But the Government should have derived this revenue from other sources, for instance, from the wealthy classes. Instead of that the Government reduces the excess profits tax, although in England the Government have increased it from 40 to 60 per cent. Then, too, the Government should have enacted legislation to get at the war wealth. I wish it to be well understood, however, that I do not blame the people who made money during the war helping the cause by supplying materials. But I venture to say that our soldiers having fought in the trenches at $1.10 a day, the burden of taxation should not be put on their shoulders on their return from the front, but rather that the men who made lots of money during the war should now be asked to contribute to the country's needs in a much greater degree. Why, the evidence of wealth in this country is amazing; never has there been so much money for investment; new mergers are being formed every day;—a merger was effected four or five weeks ago, and we hear to-day that another is being consummated—every one knows that our industries are flourishing, and that profits are climbing to a scale that was previously undreamt of in this country.

In England a committee of the House of Commons was appointed to consider the practicability of taxing war wealth whereby $2,750,000,000 could be collected from 75,000 war profiteers, and that committee has reported in favour of such a tax being imposed. It is true that that report has not been acted upon yet, but it is only a few weeks old, and besides, I have the proof here that it will be acted upon. Mr. Austen Chamberlain, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in making his Budget Speech previous to the report of the committee, is reported by the Montreal Gazette of April 21, to have stated:

> The Government apparently intends to levy a tax on war profits, to divert to the Treasury a part of the gains the war gave to many people. What form this taxation may take, and to what extent it will reach, is yet to be determined, the report of a committee now investigating the matter being awaited;

In France the Government is adopting the same policy, and the New York Herald of April 17 contains the following despatch from its Paris correspondent:

> France Plans to Share in Big War Fortunes.
> New Tax is to Force Profiteers to Disgorge Large Part of Their Wealth.
>
> Paris, April 17.—War profiteers and others who have amassed millions of francs will have to disgorge a large part of their wealth, and wild orgies of spending, which have characterized French life since the armistice, will have to cease if the radical taxation now being considered by the Government goes into effect.
>
> Despite the high prices, which cause constant grumbling in all classes, it seems that the great spending epidemic which the people here developed in the last year remains and is as strong as ever. Now, however, the Government has decided to get some of this money before it is too late.
>
> Tentative proposals by the Finance Commission of the Government for a revision of the nation's financial policy, it was learned, will include extraordinary provisions with regard to revenue and increases in fortunes due to war profits, in some cases these increases in wealth amounting to as much as 60 per cent since January, 1914.

If the same policy was adopted in this country, Sir, It would not be necessary for the Government to enact such a measure of taxation as is now proposed, reaching the least capable to pay and increasing the cost of living.

I said before that the Government were doing nothing regarding the reduction of the high cost of living. I pointed out last year what huge profits were being made by some of the milling and textile companies. I could show you that the same profiteering, and even worse, is going on to-day; yet the Government is still practising the same criminal indolence and with the aid of the banks is permitting the most criminal gambling in the necessaries of life. Why, Sir, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) will not tolerate crap shooting, race track bookmaking, or poker gambling, and will even blush at a picture of the Queen of Hearts; yet gambling in the most vital and essential articles and necessaries of life is permitted. John M. Baer, member of Congress for North Dakota, introduced a Bill to prevent gambling in the necessaries of life in the United States. His remarks in introducing the Bill may be summarized as follows:

The food gambler deals with what you have to eat and wear, on margin, he does not sell what he has, but is one of the causes of the price-raising, by apparently passing the food from hand to hand until it reaches you. We have laws against crime of every sort and against criminals of every character save the criminal who gambles in the necessaries of life. There is not a bank in the country that will loan money with which to bet on a horse race, millions upon millions of dollars, however, are borrowed from banks and wagered on the market in an effort to hold up the price of commodities. Look at the recent market quotations; you will observe that the brokers are now selling meat, lard, butter, wheat, cotton and corn for October, November and December delivery. No one knows what the wheat crop, the cotton yield or the meat production of this country will be for this year and none of the commodities dealt with are as yet in existence. Let us prohibit these transactions by gamblers who do not have any interest in them except that of speculation.

These are the gist of the remarks of Mr. Baer, member for North Dakota, and the Bill introduced provides that no person shall buy or sell any necessary of life unless it is the intention to effect actual delivery of such necessary together with transfer of legal title, and the term "necessary" is held to include all products or by-products which are or may be manufactured into food for human beings, domestic animals or poultry, and includes also fuel, wearing apparel, or other commodity necessary to life. Is it not worth while considering this kind of legislation? Does the Government not believe that such legislation would decrease the high cost of living? I do not say, Sir, that such a measure should be adopted, but I say very emphatically that legislation of this kind is worth studying and I hope that the Government will look into it.

This brings me to the subject of credits by the banks for speculation purposes and the extraordinary effect upon prices brought about by the concerted action of the banks in the United States in the curtailment of credit. It is not necessary for me to read an extract from the Montreal Gazette on this subject; all hon. members who read the papers observed the tremendous break in prices that has taken place in the United States and which began the moment the Federal Reserve Board concluded an arrangement with the banks under which credits should be curtailed to the manufacturers. This curtailing of credit was brought about by the American Government; I see no reason why the Government of Canada could not do the same and thus afford some relief to the consumers of our own country.

Now, just one word about the tariff. I was greatly amused the other day to hear the Finance Minister state that a tariff commission would commence an investigation after prorogation. Sir, since this Government has been in power—or, rather, since a Tory Government has been in power—we have had promises of commissions to investigate the tariff, but they have not been forthcoming. In order to show the House how long ago a Tory Government promised a tariff commission, I will read a few lines from Hansard of 1911. You are aware that the Tory Government came into power in September, 1911. Well, in Hansard of the 29th of November of the same year, page 530, I find the following question put by Mr. Neely:

1. Will the Government appoint a permanent Tariff Commission?

2. If so, will the labour and the farming interests be allowed to nominate a majority of the representatives on such a commission?

Here is the answer—and I am sorry that all the ministers are absent from their seats.

An hon. MEMBER: There is one.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) is here; I beg his pardon,—but he is the only one left. I read the answer to this question, as given by the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden):

Authority from Parliament will be necessary and a measure will be introduced accordingly.

That, Sir, was in November, 1911, and every year since the Government have promised commission after commission regarding the tariff, and they are making the same promise this year. Well, I can tell my hon. friends the members of the Farmers' party that if they depend upon the appointment of such a commission they will wait a long time. I can tell my hon. friends on the other side who are voting with the Government because they believe that such a commission will be appointed, that they will also have to wait a long time. As to my hon. friends on the right hand side of the House who do not desire the appointment of any such commission, they may sleep quietly; they will not be troubled with the nightmare of concurrent deflation of duties and depreciation of their bank accounts.

The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) spoke of the St. James by-election and asserted that the result of that election was a victory for protection. Sir, I took part in that election, and I am proud of it. I am proud of having contributed in bring to the House so talented a member as my hon. friend from St. James. There were two candidates in that election. The Government was not represented. Both candidates criticised the Government, and both promised that if elected they would work and vote against the Government. We talked about the tariff. I spoke on the tariff. I am not a free trader in practice; I am not a high protectionist either, but I am not in favour of the present tariff. I hate to see, for instance, the farmer paying the amount of duty he has to pay now on his agricultural implements. I hate to see the workingman and the men of the middle classes paying enormous duties on furniture and everything that is necessary for their households. That is my opinion of the tariff. I do not believe that we should take down all tariffs. Nobody who is aware of the conditions believes that, but I do say that the present tariff is too high. I stand by the platform of the Liberal party that was passed in August of last year in Ottawa.

Mr. LAPOINTE: So say we all.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That is what I stated in the St. James election, and that is what my hon. friend the member for St. James stated, and he was elected by a tremendous majority.

Now I wish to refer briefly to a question that has been brought to my attention regarding the pay of the soldier. Some time ago I put a question on the Order Paper, and the question and the answer will be found on page 2075 of Hansard:

1. Have the members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who received their pay in England or in France been paid the difference in exchange?

2. If not, who received said benefit?

Sir Henry Drayton:

1. All payments in sterling to personnel of the Overseas Military Forces of Canada during the years 1914-15-16-17 and '18 were converted to Canadian currency at the par rate of exchange, $4.86⅔ to the pound and debited to their pay accounts at that rate. Payments in continental currencies were converted from such currency to sterling at a flat monthly rate of exchange established by the War Office, based on commercial rates, which in the case of French currency varied from five francs equals four shillings in 1915, to three and five pence in 1919.

2. All payments to members of the C.E.F. Overseas were made out of moneys at the credit of the Dominion Government in the Bank of Montreal, London, which moneys were received from the Imperial Government by way of advances for war purposes, at par, so that no benefit accrued to the Dominion Government by reason of exchange.

To form an idea of the tremendous amount of money involved in this question, let us examine some very conservative figures, much below the actual facts. Suppose we take the average pay of all the men, including the high pay of the officers and the small pay of the soldiers, as $48.60 a month. According to the answer to my question a man would have received for his $48.60 ten pounds sterling. Now let us take also a most conservative figure for the average value of the pound sterling during the war. Let us take it at $4.76. It went below that, but let us take that figure. On a pay of $48.60, when the man received ten pounds he only received $47.60. If he took that ten pounds, put it in an envelope and sent it to Canada to his mother or his wife, and they went to the bank to get it exchanged they would receive only $47.60 instead of $48.60, if the rate of exchange at that time was $4.76. Therefore the soldier or his dependent was out $1 a month. Let us now take also a very conservative figure as to the number of men. Let us cut the number in less than half and say 200,000 men. This would mean that the men have been done out of at least $200,000 a month. Now what does this sum total over a period of four years, or forty-eight months? It amounts to $2,400,000 a year, or a total of $9,600 000 for the four years. These figures you will admit, Mr. Speaker, are very conservative. I should not be surprised if the amount was much in excess of the figures I have given.

The answer of the Minister of Finance is very evasive. If the Dominion Government did not make a profit—and I wish to state that I did not make any accusation—did the British Government make a profit on the exchange, or did the Bank of Montreal make it? If so what steps have this Government taken to recover the profit? What steps are the Government going to take to recover that profit and re-imburse the men of the Overseas Forces? This Government made a bona fide contract with the men to pay them $1.10 per day in Canadian currency, which amount the men did not receive. The Government acted as trustee for the men of the Overseas Military Forces of Canada, and they have betrayed that trust.

I said the answer of the Minister of Finance was evasive. It is true it is evasive in regard to the parties who benefited by the exchange, but it is not evasive or uncertain or doubtful as to one thing, that is, that the men through the carelessness or negligence or wilfulness of the Government have been done out of millions of dollars they were entitled to.

I must be thankful for the patience of the House but I have just one more question to deal with, before I resume my seat. It is the constitutional question of the right of the representatives of the people in Parliament to get information from the Government regarding public affairs. This right is unquestionable. Nevertheless, Sir, it has been denied by the Government to the members of the Opposition at this session on several occasions. Let me refer to just a few instances which have come to my attention. My hon. friend the member for Provencher (Mr. Molloy) on the 21st of March asked for the correspondence between the Government and Judge Robson regarding the resignation of the latter as chairman of the Board of Commerce. It seems to me the country is entitled to know whether or not Judge Robson resigned because the Government interfered in favour of its friends, in the administration of the board. Yet no return has been made, although on the 3rd of May the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated that he would bring some of the documents down, but not all. None have been brought down yet. Another instance of the denial of our rights was exemplified when the Minister of Finance refused point blank to some hon. members on this side to answer something like seventy-four questions regarding the administration of railways. Sir, the people of Canada are entitled to know whether huge deficits, such as the deficit of $47,000,000 this year, are due to bad administration of the railways. Yet the Government refuses all information. Concerning the same question, I might add that non-compliance by the Government with an order of the House passed at my request last session in regard to the production of a list of shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company strengthens the belief of the people of Canada that we would find in this list proof of the speculative aspect of the deed. At the beginning of October I moved for the production of that list, and I insisted again on the last day of the session, that it should be brought down; and when the present session opened I renewed my request, and it was promised me by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I believe. The first time the answer was promised me, the Minister of the Interior stood up and said that he would cable immediately and get the list. The Minister of the Interior is not a debutant in cablegrams, and I fail to see why this list is not forthcoming. The reason which the Government gives is that it would take too much time to prepare it. I asked for the list of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Company on the 10th of October, and its preparation would not be the work of an expert. A typist could copy the list inside of five hours, but it has not been produced yet and I do not believe it will be produced this session. I think, Mr. Speaker, that I was right last session when I said, in connection with this matter, that there was a nigger in the woodpile. The Government, in this same spirit, without consulting Parliament decided to appoint an ambassador at Washington, a novel departure for Canada; and although we were promised last year by the President of the Privy Council (Hon. Mr. Rowell) in answer to a question by myself, that legislation would be brought down before anything was decided, and that the Prime Minister would lay the whole matter before the House on his return, we are confronted this year by an announcement that the matter has been decided by Order in Council; and apart from being told that the ambassador will be named, we are refused information in regard to the duties which he will discharge.

Sir, this is the way in which this autocratic Administration who have been sticking like leeches to the treasury benches have been conducting the affairs of the country. Not content with having been elected under false pretences and through racial prejudice; not content with having burdened the taxpayers of this country with a debt that is appalling; not content with having placed that burden on the shoulders of the common people, the middle and poorer classes; not content with having done all these things; they are refusing now to the representatives of the people in this House the unquestionable right of inquiring into the affairs of the Administration, the right which was won after a bitter fight by Baldwin and Lafontaine, the men who won responsible government. I therefore can conceive no better phrase, no fitter word, no more apt sentence to apply to the conduct of the Government than the old Latin proverb: "Quos vult perdere Jupiter prius dementat."

Mr. F. B. McCURDY (Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of debating to-night the relative desirability of raising the country's necessary revenues by direct taxes or through the incidence of a customs tariff. Canada's need to-day challenges every one of every party to unite their services in a long strong pull to repay the massive liabilities that were incurred during the years of military conflict. It is quite apparent that there is needed in Canada to-day a fuller understanding and appreciation by the public of the difficulties of the national financial position.

No man dealing with his own financial troubles or embarrassments would encounter difficulty in understanding his position because he would be confronted with figures and totals with which he had long been familiar. The totals that are involved in the nation's balance sheet, however, are so unprecedented in this country that they are apt to be confusing and perplexing, if only because of their size.

The annual review of Canada's financial position as detailed by the minister in his Budget Speech will afford students of such matters a stack of information on national finance. It is doubtless wise that the Budget Speech of the minister be given the widest possible publicity in its present form, so that the contents may reach the maximum number of students of such matters. But, Mr. Speaker, do you think that such a publication is best calculated to reach the eyes and claim the attention of the public whose co-operation is so needed at present? Every one knows the fate of lengthy parliamentary documents and blue books. Probably not one out of a hundred receives attentive perusal. Would it not be well that the salient points be condensed into a statement written in popular language so clearly that he who runs may read, and in that form given out to the public? Such a statement should contain a clear and concise presentation of the national dilemma. It should indicate a distinct goal, say the extinguishment of the deadweight debt in the life of the present generation (a sinking fund of 3 per cent per year would accomplish that) and appeal for the co-operation of all in the efforts necessary to attain the indicated goal.

During the war Canada, as did other belligerents, exhibited a stamina and exerted a united effort that no one theretofore considered possible. This effort was rendered feasible because the whole population realized that the war was a life and death struggle and that the Allied Nations must either conquer or go under. So we saw an exhibition of team play on the part of all the people, spurred on to sacrifice to the uttermost in order that victory might be achieved.

The huge task encountered and successfully overcome in the war is a demonstration that present and future difficulties can by team work be met and surmounted. Great as are the impending problems they are not so difficult as those of the war period, which happily lie behind us. I am confident that, provided the same realization of present difficulties can be implanted in the public mind, we will be afforded the same co-operation in team play on the part of the public that was exhibited during the war. In the present struggle and in that which lies before us every one has his part to play. In the immediate future there is a call to public duty scarcely surpassed at any previous period in the country's history.

It has been my observation that at all times if the need can be placed before the public in a sufficiently lucid manner there will be no lack of response on the part of the people. I am sure I am not guilty of an overstatement when I say that the spontaneous response during the late war to appeals for recruits and money far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of even our most high-spirited and far-seeing public men.

Curiously enough, the country at large has been harbouring the delusion that the whole of Canada has enjoyed great national prosperity during the past six years. What is the cause of this delusion? The proximate cause is that, measured in terms of money, prices of commodities have constantly risen until (according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics) it now requires $216.38 to purchase at wholesale the goods that might have been bought in 1913 for $100. It necessarily follows that any person owning saleable goods worth $100 in money in 1913 could, if he held until to-day sell these goods for $216.38 in money. Such a man naturally feels that he is now more than twice as wealthy as he was then, whereas the fact of the matter is that on the average he is no better off at all because his $216.38 of to-day will not buy him any more of the things he needs than would his $100 of six years ago. The upward movement of prices and the illusion of prosperity that is induced is apt to continue until inflation is checked and deflation commences.

The Minister of Finance in his statement went into the reasons for to-day's high prices, recounting the well-known effect of the removal to fields of destruction of millions of former producers, to the interference of Governments, necessary during the war, with the normal course of supply and demand, the enormous dislocation of world industry in every direction, the destruction of wealth, and the inflation of credit and currency. All these causes have been influential in increasing prices; perhaps the last mentioned more than is generally appreciated.

What is the position of our currency to-day? On March 31, 1914, the total amount of bank notes in circulation in Canada issued by the Dominion Government was..	$122,612,175

Chartered Banks..	96,848,384
	$219,460,559

These notes circulated freely and were accepted by all Canadians and also by our foreign creditors at their face value for the reason that they were payable in practice in gold, the only medium recognized internationally as a standard of value. The Government and the banks were in practice able to pay in gold because against their outstanding note issue they held 66.9 per cent in specie, leaving the amount of note issue not covered by specie, $72,636,280.

Under the Finance Act of August, 1914, an expedient designed to meet the emergency of war, gold payments in Canada were suspended. Under an Order in Council passed by virtue of powers created in the "War Measures Act, 1914," the export of gold from Canada was prohibited and the embargo thus created has never been lifted. In this regard Canada is not, however, peculiar amongst the late belligerent nations. All of them, with the exception of the United States, prohibit the exportation of gold. I am not in a position to assert that it would be wise to lift the embargo at once, although we must steadily set our faces towards the day when we will be again on a gold basis. The fact remains, however, that Canadian debtors may not pay their foreign (and domestic) creditors in gold and the partial effect of that disability may be seen at any time in the rate of premium that we must pay to convert Canadian funds into New York exchange, the New York market being the nearest approximation that exists to a free gold one.

What changes in Canadian note issues have occurred since March 31, 1914? At that date, as I have said, our excess note issues over and above the amount of gold and specie held by the Treasury and the banks amounted to $72,636,280; in two years, viz., on March 31, 1916, it had grown to $98,893,206; in the next two years, viz., on March 31, 1918, it had leaped to $224,451,483; and at March 31, 1920, had further increased to $346,925,313.

So, it is clear that by the expedient of August, 1914, there has been manufactured in connection with our note issue an inflation of the difference between $72,636,280 and $346,925,313, or $274,289,033 payable on demand, but not payable in gold. The purchasing power of the country has been increased by this device, and unless the quantity of commodities available for purchase by this purchasing power has increased in the same ratio, why, you have created a buying force that was bound to inflate prices. And that is what has happened.

Now let us see how our gold reserves stand now. I have pointed out that on March 31, 1914, before the war the proportion of gold and specie held by the Treasury and the banks was 66.9 per cent of the outstanding notes. Reference to the Canada Gazette shows the note issues on March 31, 1920 to total.. .. .. .. $537,702,420 against which we have gold in the hands of the Receiver General	$100,286,281

Gold and specie in hands of banks..	$ 79,990,826
In central gold reserve (presumably gold) $108,200,000. But the Gazette shows that of this reserve $97,700,000 is not gold at all but is the promise to pay of the Dominion Government leaving in gold only..	$ 10,500,000 which in turn is only 35½ per cent of the outstanding note issues. So that in order to get back even to the relative soundness of the position that we occupied on March 31, 1914, we must arrange to reduce our note issue by $168,800,000. You can imagine, Mr. Speaker, what great distress a hurried contraction of this magnitude with its resultant disturbances would entail. It must inevitably, however, be faced at some time. Writers on economic subjects have likened financial inflation to an anæsthetic. They point out that the feeling of jubilation enjoyed by the patient when going under and while under is succeded by a very different state once the effect of the anæsthetic has spent itself. They allege that the effects of financial inflation will not be dissimilar from those of the physical anæsthetic when the time of inevitable deflation and reaction arrives.
	$190,777,107

In different lines of business in Canada to-day there exist unnatural conditions and prices created by direct Government action inaugurated during the emergency of war, the need for which interference, many authorities hold, has passed. The remedies for such situations will, of course, be found painful of application. Business men generally feel that it would be better, however, to courageously face the situation, take our medicine, endure its discomfort and get away from instability towards solid economic ground.

It is one thing to raise taxes from an unwilling people who do not understand the need for the extraordinary levies. It is quite another thing to raise money from a public that is well informed, understands the goal to be attained through their sacrifices, and is therefore willing to bend its neck under the yoke.

The minister has stated that the revenue for the current year, estimated on the basis of existing fiscal legislation and assuming that the values of importations for customs purposes remain practically the same as for last year, will amount of $381,000,000. He then proceeded to announce changes of a far reaching nature such as the abolition of the 7½ per cent customs war duty and a reduction in the rate of business profits taxes. How much of a dent will those two alterations make in his estimated revenue of $381,000,000? Who knows? The public does not know. It knows only that $30,000,000 was collected last year from the 7½ per cent customs war duty. We have no way of even estimating the loss in revenue from reduction in business profits tax. The press has guessed freely at the total probable receipts from luxury and sales taxes, but we have nothing official or definite to guide us. Shall we assume that the announced luxury taxes and sales taxes and increases in income tax will provide income sufficient to make up these certain losses? Or will they do more? Until an official estimate is forthcoming it is clear that discussion on the Budget can proceed only with a lack of intelligence and precision. Until we have that estimate we can only take the figures that the minister mentions, namely $381,000,000 as the disposable income for the current year.

Now let us turn to the other side of the account. The minister advises that ordinary consolidated fund expenditures for the current year will amount to $341,000,000. Now the Canadian National Railways is the property of the people of Canada, and while it operates at a loss, is not that loss as truly a charge against the national treasury as would be the loss in operation of the postal service, the Intercolonial railway or the public buildings? I am personally very hopeful of the future of the C.N.R. I expect that at any rate it will fulfil its most important function, that is, to provide useful and efficient transportation to the districts it serves. I am not losing sight of the fact that there is a large and influential section of the Canadian public that believes no good financial result will ever accrue to the national treasury from the operation of national railways. The National Railway system showed a deficit last year of $33,000,000 which had to be provided by the Finance Department. What will be the deficit this year? Would it be unfair to assume that it will be an equal amount? If that deficit will be repeated, in order to obtain a true perspective should we not add that total to the ordinary consolidated fund expenditures giving us a total expenditure for this year of $374,000,000 or within $7,000,000 of the only estimate that has been given us as the year's revenue. And then it should be remembered we have made no provision whatever for further expenditure on consolidated fund growing out of the Supplementary Estimates yet to be tabled. These Estimates can be expected to include a substantial total, when it is remembered that last year's Supplementary Estimates provided for an expenditure of $36,723,120.66.

The Budget Speech indicated that it was intended to retire treasury bills and floating obligations this year to the extent of $74,058,400 and already the impression has gone to the country that this is to be done from revenue. In the absence of further estimate of revenue I submit that such an impression is unwarranted.

During the six years of the war period 1914-20 Great Britain met 36.17 per cent of her total expenditure by current taxation against 20.80 per cent met by Canada.

The minister drew an analogy between conditions in Canada, Great Britain, and the United States. He indicated that the currency inflation in Canada was 108 per cent as against an increase during the war in Great Britain of 207 per cent and that the increased purchasing power as gauged by currency and bank deposits increased during the war in Canada 91 per cent as against 125 per cent in England. Canada's debt per head of population based on the Estimates of the Minister of Finance and his predecessor is $256 as compared with a deadweight debt in Great Britain of £7,835,000,000 or £170 per head. With their more inflated currency and credit situation and thrice fold greater debt what is Great Britain undertaking to do during the current year?

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain, in his Budget of April 19, gave an estimate of revenue and expenditures for the current year. He stated that the revenue estimated on the existing basis of taxation would amount to £1,314,000,000 thus meeting his estimated current year's expenditures which includes the upkeep of the forces still in the field in Mesopotamia and elsewhere and provide a surplus of £164,000,000 for the reduction of debt, which being over 2 per cent would redeem the total national debt in 26 years. He stated:

> Under ordinary circumstances this provision would be more than ample,—an extravagant sinking fund. But under the present circumstances in the opinion of the Government it is not sufficient.

So he proposed the imposition of additional taxes, whose estimated proceeds he gave in detail, to create a surplus of revenue over expenditure of £234,000,000 providing a sinking fund of 3 per cent. Mr. Chamberlain proceeded in explanation of his course:

> To attain such a position we are obliged to impose fresh taxation and to call for further sacrifices which may not bring popularity to the Government or to ministers: but I am proud to say that we have sought in our Budget to rise to the level of our great responsibilities so that when we render up the seals of office we may leave to our successors an ample revenue and to our country a national credit second to none. Twenty such Budgets would redeem the whole of our national situation.

In justifying what Mr. Chamberlain called "A terrific contribution" he stated that a bold attempt was being made to consolidate the national position by getting in a time of comparative prosperity the wherewithal to reduce the nightmare debt.

Canada's deadweight debt (Hansard, page 2556) amounts to $2,273,305,436.92. The national debt while it exists in such tremendous volume is bound to be a deterrent to immigration, industry and commerce. All who appreciate Canada's present financial position will, undoubtedly, not only support the Government's decision to raise additional revenue by taxation, but they would, I am sure, be prepared to go even further for they must realize that it is of the utmost importance that taxes be imposed at the present time of comparative prosperity when the pre-war dollar is only worth, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, 46 cents rather than carry it along to a time when the dollar will resume its real value of one dollar.

I have full confidence that if the public is clearly informed of the difficulty and need of the moment they will conclude that such a course is wise and statesmanlike and will gladly co-operate. But it would not be reasonable to expect their co-operation without an understanding of the full need and of the goal to which the country should strive to attain.

Now, admitting that the situation was once clear in the minds of the public, to what distinct goal should the national policy in finance be directed? Should it not obviously be to the provision of a sinking fund which will retire the national debt in so far as it is a deadweight debt within a stated period? If we attempt as courageous a course as that attempted by Great Britain, viz., the extinguishment of our deadweight debt in 20 years we should need to provide for the payment annually of $68,000,000 towards diminution of debt. A settled policy in this regard would afford tax-payers a prospect of reaching the end of their heavy exactions within the lifetime of the present generation and give a buoyancy and hope to business that would otherwise be lacking.

There is no sovereign remedy for our existing ills. They are the natural and inevitable consequence of the war. So far as our industry is affected by conditions in other countries, it can wait until they commence to recover. That recovery depends partly on the wisdom of the governments concerned, but far more on the energy and initiative, hard work and hard living of the people of each country. While, however, the troubles of other countries will bring us troubles too, these can be enormously diminished or aggravated by our own action. The Government's duty is clear. It must continue its courageous attempt to bring its expenditure within the limits of its revenue, cease borrowing except for redemption of short dated loans, and stop inflating credit and currency. That course will, I admit, require great courage. All sorts of schemes which ought for other reasons to be carried out must be abandoned and one criterion alone established, viz., "Can we afford it"? not "Is it an attractive and desirable scheme"? A man would often like to spend much more than he does for the benefit of his family but if he is not rich enough he cannot. So with a nation. A large part of the population believes still that the war either did, or at least ought to, bring great improvements in conditions. They look for some new thing, for a new Canada, where every one will be financially better off than before and they regard, very naturally, drastic state action as the main means to achieving this end. The State is to spend vast sums on housing, reforestation, public works, buildings, canals and other laudable objects. It is to find the means by raising great sums from the rich voluntarily if possible, or if not by compulsion. It is to secure to itself the lion's share of all profits of business or industry, or if necessary to confiscate a good part of existing wealth. Such a programme is not feasible. If a capital levy is resorted to the proceeds must be devoted to reducing existing indebtness, not to meet further expenditure. It is true there is urgent need for large expenditures in many directions but there is no benefit Government expenditure can give that would be at all commensurate with the evil of further inflation and further rise in prices.

We wish to secure an appreciation by the public of the factors of the national dilemma and the full co-operation of all in the efforts necessary to reach the desired goal. How shall we set about it? You have a peculiar situation. In the first place Canada having from the loftiest motives hazarded everything in the great war emerges from that war with a national debt of $256 per head or $1,280 per family of five, rich and poor, in the land, and is materially much poorer than in 1914. The war time inflation, extension of credit, debasement of the currency, or whatever you choose to call it, resulting in any case in a delusion of increased wealth has increased the extravagance of the population. Production does not increase. People on small fixed incomes are at their wits' end to make ends meet. A large section of the people, having during the war received larger wages with shorter working hours than ever before has decided to take life easy, with the result that production is being curtailed.

A clear statement exhibiting the country's present debt, estimates of annual unescapable expenditures and the necessary ways and means to meet them, would help to bring home to the people a realization of the comparative national impoverishment caused by the losses in the war, and the necessity of harder work and harder living by all to balance the national Budget.

The Government should at once undertake an extensive national campaign to urge upon the people in every rank of life the vital necessity of suppressing extravagance and reducing expenditures. The public must be informed fully and frankly of the state of the national finances in language and by means that are so plain that all can understand. During the war when recruits were needed, additional agricultural production desired and war loans had to be floated, campaigns of this character were willingly carried on by public co-operation and assistance. A similar bringing home of the post war necessities is absolutely necessary. But this campaign will not be successful until the Government in its own operation sets the example. Every member of Parliament who has been brought in contact with the conduct of public business knows that there are in the Civil Service many individuals of ideal capacity, hard working, conscientious and capable. But the operation of the service as a whole will offend his business sense. He will detect laxity and inefficiency in many places. He will learn of Government offices and staffs that exist only because they had previously existed. It is, I am sure, within the knowledge of members, ministers, deputy ministers and heads of departments that theoretical safeguards and devices, honest without doubt in their conception, have resulted in a lowering of efficiency, multiplication of staff and red tape and, consequently, in a waste of public funds. Instead of confining its energies to insuring beyond peradventure a life tenure to the civil servant, the Government would be well advised to devote a part of its attention to the interest of the public that pays. I am convinced it were well that the Government secure from Parliament a power to be freely exercised to retire officials where services are no longer of value, or whose positions have become superfluous. It is, I submit, a surprising condition that the public service, instead of reverting to normal now that the war pressure is well past, has actually increased its personnel during the year by over four thousand, indicating a prima facie waste in salaries alone of many millions, entirely apart from rentals of buildings to house superfluous staffs and provide them with stationery, sealing wax, and all the other paraphernalia that goes with official position. So long as the citizen knows that public appropriations are being spent without full value being given in return we cannot make an effective appeal to him for economy and co-operation in the national behalf.

Mr. R. H. HALBERT (Ontario North): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest, and, I must say, with some amusement, to many of the speeches that have been delivered upon the Budget. I shall not take up any of the time of the House in extending my appreciation to the minister; I will simply ask him to take mine as read. We have heard the lawyers, the doctors, the manufacturers, the ministers, and the politicians; they have all stated their views with regard to the Budget. With your permission, I would like to present the views of what are very often called the common people, especially the farmers. I believe that the views I shall now express are those not only of a great many of the farmers, but also of a great many people of other callings in Ontario.

If cutting words, cross looks and scathing remarks could have killed this group on the cross benches, Mr. Speaker, we would have all been in the cemetery long ago. But you will see that even though there are no by-elections, we are still growing. I did not intend to take up the time of the House in replying to criticisms, but with your permission I feel it my bounden duty to reply to at least a few. I shall speak for only fifteen or twenty minutes, and I will make as good use of that time as I possibly can.

The member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt)—page 2940 of unrevised Hansard—said that this little group was dangerous. I would like to know why? The farmers never went on strike. If we are dangerous, I wonder to whom? If he means that we are dangerous to the Union Government, perhaps what he said was right. The hon. gentleman objects to the farmers organizing without first calling in the labour men, the clergymen and the manufacturers, and consulting with them. Well, I do not think that when the Manufacturers' Association organized they sent for the farmers, or the clergymen either. I wondered when my hon. friend made that remark whether it was the One Big Union that he had in mind? Surely it was not that. I wondered, too, if it was Union Government that he meant when he was referring to the formation of a union. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have had a sample of that; enough said.

My hon. friend also said that the fruit growers did not belong to the farmers' organization. Well, I can say this with authority, because I have been down through the fruit-growing section of Ontario; we have the farmers' clubs among the fruit growers and we also have a prominent fruit grower from St. Catherines as director of our organization. I admit that there are a few fruit growers left of the same stamp as the hon. member for Fraser valley (Mr. Stacey) who still want to charge the poor people ninety cents a barrel on their apples.

The member for Brantford also referred to us as free traders—page 2942 of unrevised Hansard. No man has ever heard me say that I am in favour of absolute free trade. He said that in our platform we mentioned free trade with Great Britain, and he asserted that if we had free trade with Great Britain we would have free trade with the world. Now, if the Americans along the border can ship their goods to Liverpool, as he said they could, bring them back and lay them down in southern Saskatchewan and compete so dangerously with the Canadian manufacturers, then I say there is something absolutely wrong with the Canadian manufacturers; they should wake up and go to sleep right.

On page 2943 of unrevised Hansard the hon. member for Brantford found fault with the plank in our platform about raising revenue by a graduated inheritance tax on large estates of wealthy men. He objects to that; he says we are taxing the dead man's wealth. But the hon. member himself has always supported a tax not on the wealth of the rich man but on the widow of the poor man, a tax from which there is no escape; a tax upon his shroud, upon his coffin and upon the screw nails that fasten down his coffin lid. He is also willing to take from the widow of the poor man, if she has to earn her living by taking in washing, $13.05 by way of duty on her washing machine. If the widow happens to make her living by sewing he is satisfied to take $14.43 on her sewing machine. He is very anxious indeed to look after the poor. But that is not all. At page 2939 of Unrevised Hansard the hon. member drew a very pathetic picture. He told us a very heartrending story about the Scotchman and the steers. There was a small bunch of steers on good pasturage inside a barbed wire fence, while outside there was a large bunch of steers on very poor pasturage, and he was very much afraid that the fence would be let down. Now let us put our gas masks on and examine this. As we approach we perceive that the scene changes. He told us that on the inside of the fence there were shorthorns and moolies and they were very fat. When we get up close we find that inside the fence among the clover are some great manufacturers with a barbed wire fence of protection all round them. They have good pasturage, while outside the fence are the por common people, and no doubt they are on poor pasturage. He almost trembled for fear some ruthless man will take a few strands off the top of the fence so the poor people might pick an odd bunch of clover over there inside the fence.

Now we come to the income tax. On page 2944 we find the hon. member very wrathy, and he said "it was unfair and an unwarranted slander" because he had heard or read somewhere that some person had insinuated that there were defaulters in the payment of income tax in the Tory city of Toronto. He was very wrathy about that, and said that there were only 314 farmers who paid income tax. He insinuated that the farmers were shirking payment of their taxes. Mr. Speaker, there is no man on the face of the earth who would be more glad to pay an income tax if he had an income of $5,000 or $10,000 than the farmer. Give him the income and he will pay the tax. If the farmers have not paid the tax it is because they have not the income. The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Casselman)—page 2967 of Unrevised Hansard—said that he would welcome a return to private life. Well, Sir, just as soon as his Government gets ready to go to the country, he may get his wishes gratified. The hon. member at page 2970 — this is a personal matter and I do not like to refer to it—and the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) said that the day the Farmers' party came into existence was when the hon. member for North Ontario—myself—led his little band up the hill and led them down again here in Ottawa. Mr. Speaker, I did not come here to protest against my son being conscripted. I was not fortunate enough to have a boy. My boys happen to be all girls. I had not a relative to conscript either. All my relatives that could go had gone voluntarily before conscription was introduced, so I had no one to plead for in that respect. What brought me here was this. It was after I came here that I was elected chairman of the delegation, and I may say that not one out of ten of the men who came here belong to the United Farmers of Ontario. At the request of Premier Hurst of Ontario I had given my services gratis since the war began—my railway fare and expenses were paid, that was all—to the Organization of Resources Committee which sat in the city of Toronto. I also was asked to serve gratis, of course, on the Victory Loan Committee, with headquarters at Toronto. I had been closeted in the Parliament Buildings with a representative of the Canadian Food Board and of the American Food Board, and we had been told the food situation in terms that we were pledged not to divulge outside of the walls of the building. If you had a boy sick and got him the best doctors and the best nursing, but he happened to die after all, you would have a clear conscience because you had done your duty. I considered that it was my duty, and nothing has happened since to make me change my mind, to lay the situation as I saw it before Sir Robert Borden and his Cabinet. We did so, and the farmers behaved like gentlemen while they were here. I want to say further that the great majority of those who came here with that delegation did not need to take a back seat to any member of the Government as to knowledge of the conditions in the back concessions of this province, because they came from there and lived among those conditions.

11 p.m.

The hon. member for Dundas also made a remark which I cannot let pass unchallenged. At page 2971 of Unrevised Hansard he said that every member who sits in this little group had been a supporter of the Liberal party from 1896 to 1911. I want to contradict that statement most emphatically, for I, for one, did not support the Liberal Government. I did not support it in 1911. I was brought up a Conservative of the hottest kind; but a wise man changes his mind, a fool never. I have changed my mind. I was raised on the farm and have lived on the farm, and those of you who have lived on the farm know this: If you take a calf, when quite young, from its mother it does not make much noise, but let it run with its mother for some time and then take it away, and both calf and mother raise an awful row. It looks to me as if the manufacturers of this country had been helped so long and are so needed by the Government at election time, that both manufacturers and Government raise a terrible howl if you talk of letting down the tariff.

I shall not take up the time of the House to deal with any more of the questions raised in this debate, because I think a lot of time has been wasted already. The farmers are abused, but the fact remains that they are employed in the most important industry in the world. The farmers of this Dominion have as much at stake as any one else, the farmers and their wives are just as good citizens, just as patriotic and as loyal Canadians as are to be found in any other calling. The farmers are just as honest in their convictions, just as anxious and just as willing to do their full share in the re-establishment of this country and in paying the debt as are the people of any other calling. Some hon. members have displayed great anxiety for fear the common people might get hold of the helm of the ship of state. This thought seems to give them the nightmare, and they see all kinds of things happening. But there is one thing sure, Sir, these people would not make any worse mess of it than some others have done. I admit, Sir, that the farmers in the past have paid very little attention to national affairs. They left that to the politicians. But no result of the war argues as certainly for a bigger, better and stronger Canada than the demand of the agriculturist and labouring people for a place and a say in the guiding of the affairs of the nation. No longer will the farmer feed the world and produce the great bulk of the revenue, and have no voice in the conduct of its affairs. Representatives of the financial and protected interests would be well advised to take notice of this fact or like the Shunamite women of old they will go back to where they came from and among their own people. Any one who can still conscientiously advocate the old tariff policy should be given the Iron Cross, or perhaps it would be better to give him the Humane Society medal. The farmers and the farmers' organizations have during this session received considerable criticism and abuse. I prefer, Mr. Speaker, not to take up the time of the House replying to any more of those misrepresentations; I just consider where they came from and let them pass at that.

The farmers' movement constitutes the first real challenge to the party system, which has been in operation for over forty years, and that is why some hon. members are so uneasy. Having developed from adverse economic conditions that movement lays the emphasis on economic questions. Born in an age of democratic desire it is filled with the democratic spirit. The privilege holders of Canada to-day are maintaining a rigid vigilance to keep Canadian workers on the farm and in industries in economic enslavement by means of the protection tariff, although it is mostly done in ambush. It is very necessary, Mr. Speaker, at this critical period in our history, when there is so much unrest, when the whole civilized world is in a state of turmoil, when we as a young nation have tremendous issues to face and surmount, and surmount them we must if the ship of state is to be steered clear of the rocks and shoals that may be in its course. And in my judgment it is necessary for every citizen of this country, no matter what his colour, race or creed may be, and especially every representative of the people, to apply all his ability and energy, not to abusing one another, as I have witnessed here, but to the solutions of the problems with which this country is faced, in a manner that will bring the greatest benefit to Canada and the Canadian people as a whole. It is the duty of the Government to see to it that no obstacles are put in the way, that no artificial burdens put upon the back of the wealth-producing people of this country. The agriculturists of Canada not only supply the food for the people of Canada, but they also will have to very materially assist the Finance Minister in furnishing the wherewithal to finance the re-establishing of the returned soldier, the paying of the pensions, the care of the widows and orphans, and caring for the crippled and the maimed. Agriculture is the basic industry upon which the success of all other industries primarily depends. The agriculturists supply the food that stiffens the muscles, that stimulates the heart, that feeds the blood, that quickens the pulse, that nourishes the brains of the nation. Therefore, they are not going to be a football in the future as they have in the past, to be kicked, exploited and taxed by every little manufacturing concern that wants to start up. They have been the hewers of wood and drawers of water from time immemorial. For years, Mr. Speaker, the common people have been the human oxen, they have bowed their necks to the yoke, they have been driven in the furrow, they have borne the burden of the race, they have rooted in the rubbish barrels at the back doors of the legislative halls of this fair Dominion of ours and they have had to be satisfied with the dry crusts and the bare bones carelessly thrown away by the other fellows. But, Mr. Speaker, the day is not far distant when they will come in at the front door and demand their rights as those engaged in the basic industry of the Empire. It is our duty, Mr. Speaker, if we want to keep the producers on the land and encourage others to go on the land, to see to it that they are not penalized by a protective tariff for the benefit of a privileged class; that they get their implements of production and the clothes that they wear without being taxed anywhere from 12½ to 310 per cent to help the lords of finance and the idle rich.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Government will be well advised to consider these matters, for no nation can succeed indefinitely without a vigorous, prosperous and contented population identified with rural life. The rural home has been the source from which has come the main supply of strong manhood and womanhood to our seats of learning, afterward to fill important positions of trust and leadership in the councils of our nation. In all that makes for national stability, intellectual power and social and moral uplift, the home in the country stands pre-eminent; within it the very soul of Canada may be said to be contained. In view, then, of the great importance of rural population in the building of a nation, it is the duty of every loyal citizen of Canada, and, of the Government of Canada, to see to it that the tariff-fed plutocrat and profiteer is taken off his back, the shackles off his feet, the handcuffs off his hands, and the padlock that has been upon his mouth for years unlocked and the key thrown away. Mr. Speaker, the economic issues of Canada are very vital and must be kept steadily to the front. The issue to-day is whether Canada is to have its destinies controlled forever by a greedy plutocracy, or whether it is to be allowed to develop a real economic democracy without which political democracy is farcical. There must be a change, or our civilization will be hopelessly brutalized. It behooves Canada, which was foremost in the fight against Prussianism, not to be behind in the struggle for a new social order. It looks to me that a change can never come from this Government. The country does not hope for anything from this Government because figs do not grow on thistles, nor are silk purses made out of sow's ears. There may be setbacks in the struggle before Canadian democracy, but the result is none the less sure. The day is not far distant when we shall see embodied in active legislation the ideals and aspirations of the plain folk of Canada. Though the ship may sway with the tide, while the anchor holds firm we are safe. Democracy in every Anglo-Saxon country will rise and make an end of this existing tariff system which makes exploitation possible. I see by the Press, and the fact was mentioned by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. J. F. Reid), that the manufacturers, the high protectionists, were creating a press censorship by way of boycott of papers that advocate or favour lower tariff. Which goes to show how anxious they are that the public should not be informed on the workings of the tariff, and also how insidious the action of coloured or suppressed news has been upon the formation of public opinion. The public, in whose hands lies the ultimate power in a democracy, cannot form a proper opinion upon domestic or international questions if their sources of information are systematically poisoned to suit the interests of some particular political or economic propaganda.

Our present economic system is based upon the incentive of profits, but we must be prepared to let it function naturally and not foster it artificially by a protective tariff. It may take a certain amount of courage on the part of the Government to affront the pillars of society, the financial and manufacturing barons, whose word seems to be law in certain matters, but Canadians must be prepared, Mr. Speaker, to face and deal with these matters if they hope to become worthy citizens of a free country. It is often only a step from the sublime to the ridiculous, so sometimes it is not far from a form of patriotism to treason. It is not necessary that Canada should have great factories established artificially, but it is necessary that there should be a chance for a good comfortable living for everybody who is willing to work. Let us devote our efforts to what we can do best. with our immense resources and then exchange freely with other lands. This is the method which will mean the greatest profit to us. However fertile the soil of a country may be, and however frugal and industrious its people, it will remain poor and backward and the people will be lacking in the highest comforts of life if its trade laws and its fiscal policy are unsound. It is common belief that the protective tariff has fostered combines, trusts and "gentlemen's agreements" in almost every line of Canadian industrial enterprise, by means of which the people of Canada both urban and rural have been shamefully exploited through the elimination of competition, the ruination of many of our smaller industries, thereby giving to manufacturers the power to make Canadians buy made-in-Canada goods at made-in-Canada prices and pay penalty duties at rates dictated by those manufacturers, thereby taking from the pockets of every consumer a sum to be put, not in the public treasury, but in the pockets of the Canadian manufacturers. The result is that on the back of the Canadian commonwealth there rides an association of protected interests making the country contribute to their gains. The Government has no right to take, or allow any one else to take, from the earnings of any one anything except what is absolutely needed to carry on the business of the Government. The moment one cent is taken and that one cent does not go into the treasury, that is robbery. There was a time perhaps when the industries in this country were in their infancy, when tariff for protection was necessary; but when husky infants like the Dominion Textile Company can make 310 per cent profit, a protection does not seem to me to be necessary. The horn and hoof of the protected interests have been long enough upon the doorstep of Canadian homes and also of Canada's House of Government. The fight for freedom from its vulgar and oppressive domination has only begun in earnest and it will never let up until the common people, the wealth-producing people of Canada, are liberated from the thraldom of financial barons who own this country financially and control it politically, until we have equal rights to all and special privileges to none. To reduce the high cost of living it is necessary to lessen the cost of production and lessen the cost of distribution. The world is hungry and the indications are that it will be more hungry unless conditions are radically changed. In this naturally great agricultural country, Canada's food production is hampered by unjust fiscal laws, excessive distribution tolls, and the lure of short hours and high wages in the cities. The decrease in farm population which, according to the Bureau of Municipal Affairs of Ontario, averages about 16,000 annually, should give rise to thought and consideration on the part of the Government. We have been told that the tariff is for revenue; if so, why is the manufacturer refunded in drawbacks 99 per cent of the duty on their raw material which they charge up in this machinery when sold to the farmers?

It may be interesting if I should just quote for the information of the House a few items with regard to the drawback paid to the manufacturers.

I find that the following amounts were paid to Canadian manufacturers on account of drawback:

	1915.	1916.	1917.
International Harvester Co.	$101,613 12	$ 64,000 00	$ 29,000 00
Massey Harris Co.	279,256 40	32,000 00	97,000 00
Frost & Wood Co.	31,005 27	.....	.....
Cockshutt Plow Co.	14,442 34	6,323 46	10,163 84
Ford Motor Co.	389,435 07	127,000 00	71,000 00
Quaker Oats Co.	74,034 05	264,000 00	231,000 00

I cannot imagine, if the tariff is for revenue, why these Christmas boxes should go back to the manufacturers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time that th manufacturer was taken off the back of the producer and consumer and stood upon his own feet, which in my judgment, is absolutely necessary in this reconstruction period.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the final chapter. If, after carrying all this load through the years of farm life, the farmer who has gone bankrupt in the process, falls by the wayside when he hovers in the shadow of the Great Divide beyond which I trust there is no tariff tax before he can enter Heaven, I find that when he turns his mind to the purchase of the lumber with which to build the pine box in which his remains will be enclosed, his last days on earth are disturbed by the nightmare that before he is buried the few mourners must take up a collection in order to pay a tariff tax to the millionaire lumbermen like my hon. friend from East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson). The transactions of some of those firms with the people are now being investigated by a Farmer Government at Toronto, while his erstwhile honoured political provincial leader is said to have gone south for the benefit of his health. But, even after the tax is paid on the pine box, the grave is still to be dug, and before the aged sexton in the old churchyard on the concession line is permitted to delve into the last six feet of earth, the hereafter dream of the broken, unhonoured agriculturist is made hideous by the thought that there must be paid on the shovel which digs the grave a tariff tax in the interest of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) who, while so patriotic as to advise this House and us farmers to stand fast and protect everything Canadian, thinks so little of his own patriotic doctrine that he has told us he actually ships his hardware products away down to Mexico, up the American coast, and into the Canadian city of Victoria, B.C., right at the door of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) rather than pay an extra ten cents per hundred to that great, patriotic, loyal Canadian institution, the Canadian Pacific Railway. I may be disloyal when I buy a shovel from an American. I may go down to the last resting place of an unhonoured disloyalist when I want to patronize an American factory because I can save money, but the ultra-loyalist manufacturing member from Lincoln can hand his money over to the United States railways and ships at the beginning, contribute something to the Mexican Greasers who load and unload his goods, put these same goods aboard a United States freighter and take them up the American Pacific coast to a Canadian city, and when he tells this House about having been able to beat a great, loyal, patriotic Canadian railway corporation out of 10 cents his brother loyalists in the House applaud his statements. Weighing all these facts, looking them straight in the face, Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to ask if the time will not soon arrive when some modest capitalist or manufacturer or lumberman who supports this Budget and this tariff system will arise in his place in this House and ask that he be given some kind of a privilege that will enable him to charge some kind of a tax for the last prayers said over the grave of the farmer, some tariff tax before he can get into Heaven, and, if not bound in that direction himself, then some kind of a privilege from this Government that will give the modest gentleman some kind of a "corner" among his old high tariff supporters.

Mr. A. M. DECHENE (Montmagny): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, and to address the House in a language with which I am not as familiar as most of the members, I feel at a loss. I may not render full justice to this subject of national importance. I will endeavour to present my remarks to the best of my ability being sure that in your fairness you will not find fault with my many mistakes.

The present Budget debate has given us the pleasure of hearing many good speeches, and the occasion of studying the Government's policies. We know now what the gentlemen sitting on the treasury benches have in their minds: to help the Canadian people carry the burdens of war and return to peace activities. For these purposes they preach economy and increased production on the people's side, while they attend to their part of the scheme by taxing the same people and spending lavishly the money they can get hold of. By the proper operation of this scheme the Government's friends will get richer, and the people at large poorer. In their minds, that being so, everybody should be happy. "Quand le roi s'amuse, ... la France est heureuse . . . . ."

I believe that the hon. Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) has had very little trouble in applying the Tory system of taxation; he has well succeeded with the help of his colleagues. These taxes will be heavy on the whole of the people, the consumers, while the rich men, his friends the millionaires, the backers of the present administration, will go unharmed. These gentlemen will help to carry on. They will do the book-keeping for the Government, while the people will do the paying. Being Tories, we all know that they excel in the taxing business, and that they always fail, in so doing, to impose taxation with justice and equity. On one hand, the Minister of Finance expresses his deep desire to do his best to promote harmony, unity and welfare in Canada; on the other hand, with his colleagues, he is doing his best to perpetuate unrest, hate, and class movement among our people. His last taxes are only the latest acts in that direction. They are so unjust, and so tyrannical that we cannot condemn them too strongly. What pleasure it will be for me to vote against them with the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), and the rest of the gentlemen on this side of the House, and assert once more the true principles of pure Liberalism, and the Government of Canada for all Canadians and by all Canadians!

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us, for one moment, study another point of our national problem, and see what can be done in the interest of the majority of our people. The friends of all the industries of this country have voiced their sentiments and put before the Government what they thought best in the interest of their people. We have heard the manufacturers' viewpoint on our fiscal policies. We all know that they want protection for the $2,786,649,727 —as per statistics of 1917—invested in their industries. Their shops during the same year put on the market $3,015,577,940 worth of products for which they want a higher tariff and still more protection, and yet there were only 692,067 men working for the benefit of this huge amount of capital. Hardly one-tenth of the population is making a living out of this peculiar branch of our national life. The industries in which the manufacturers are engaged certainly deserve a good deal of attention on our part. Those manufacturers help in building up this country and in making our possibilities known the world over. We must not overlook the fact that in 1919 they exported $549,284,268 worth of their products, or about one-fifth of their total production. What is left from that exportation is for home consumption. But even with this magnificent statement from the manufacturers' side, we must not take for granted that they stand first in Canada as a class. They are only second; second as to capital invested in the business; second as to the number of people employed; second in importance. They stand first only with respect to the value of exports, and then only by a small margin over the farmers of Canada as a whole who really constitute the first class. Mr. Speaker, I have just stated that the farming community was the first in this country. I must add that to the farmer we must give the largest part of our attention. In 1919, according to the best available sources of information, there were in Canada 51,427,190 acres of land under field crops, which, valued at $50 an acre—taking the value given by the Minister of the Interior—represents a total value for land alone of $2,571,359,500. The value of stock was, in 1917, $1,102,261,000, making a grand total of $3,673,620,500, exclusive of farming implements and capital invested in the farming industry. The total value in 1919, of Canadian farm products, was $1,975,841,000, of which $467,625,311 were exported.

We must also bear in mind the number of people interested in agriculture. According to the best authorities, five-eighths of the total population of this country is rural, that is pretty nearly four millions of people. There is a great difference between the capital invested in farming and the value of farm products, compared with the industrial capital and its output. That is accounted for by the fact that the farm products sell at a lower price per article. We must also bear in mind that the capital invested in farms brings a less return. The average farm in the East does not pay 6 per cent on the investment.

We have heard of the western farmers also, through their most prominent leaders. We know their aims and what they are after. Their motto may be expressed in a few words: More railroad facilities; more elevators at home, at the head of the Great Lakes and at the shipping ports; free agricultural implements; and most of the expenses to be borne by the country at large. What of the eastern farmer and his needs, and relation to his western brother? First of all, he will be the one to pay the major portion of the heavy expenditures, of the millions in fact, needed for the West, while the western farmer will not put up a cent to help the eastern farmer. The two are as far apart in their interests as they are in the land. The western stockmen and farmers enjoy the full benefit of the Government grant and the money voted to buy seed grains, feed and stock. They enjoy the full working of the car lot policy and of its supplement, the free freight policy. The eastern farmer does not get money to buy his seed or feed. He benefits very little from the car lot policy, which is not applied to its full extent in the East. What the eastern farmer needs is encouragement in improved methods of production; real, practical teaching in agriculture and its by-products—butter, cheese, live stock, etc. I do not think I am misstating the facts when I say that the interests of the western farmer and those of the eastern farmer are far apart, and cannot be merged together with success to them and to the country.

Will the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) permit me to make one suggestion on the farming problem of the East, and how he can help to make farming pay? And here let me say that I am sorry the minister is not present—in fact there are few members of the Government in their seats at the present time.

The last years of strenuous work in the different classes of our people have changed many recognized standard ideas. Many new methods of production have been found and put into practice. Many new necessities have come to life and must be satisfied. To meet this situation the Government must change its old policies and put forward improved ways and means of increasing production and wealth in the various fields of human activity.

Among the different kinds of production, the art of producing food, that is to say, agriculture, stands first, and, as already stated, it is the main principle of prosperity in a country as big as ours. The farmer, either active in his fields or retired in his native village, is the best customer of our industrial world; in fact, he buys more than half of the total output of our manufactures. That, of itself, should be enough to draw attention to his activities. But he is more than that to the country; he is the feeder of its people, he is the framework of any national prosperity. Cut the farmer out and what will be left in Canada will not be worth while to look at. The actual situation of reconstruction depends a good deal on him. To reduce the high cost of living, everybody is looking to the farmer. If we want to help, let the Government do its share and devise new means of promoting greater production on the farm.

New ideas have appeared even in the agrarian world, and the experimental farm as the practical factor of assistance to the agriculturist is giving way to new methods. I regret to differ from my hon. friend, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture as to the best methods of encouraging agriculture, but our differences are very slight, our aims being the same: Progress. The hon. gentleman and this Government favour few big farms; I favour many small ones. He has many good reasons to support his contention. I believe with him that the experimental farms are a necessity. I also believe that the present and near future is actually well provided for.

Out of the $3,903,000 voted for the Department of Agriculture $1,200,000 goes for experimental farms; $520,000 for administration of the Meat and Canned Food Acts; $1,400,000 for the Live Stock Branch and indirectly for the Meat Packers' Trust. Very little is left for real agricultural purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the work of the experimental farm to be of any use to the farming community must be known by that community. The farmer must have belief that he can get on his land the results obtained on these farms. Everybody knows that such is not the case. The reason for this situation lies in the fact that the farmer knows that these farms are costing lots of money for their upkeep, and that he cannot spend big money on his farm to achieve the same results. So he is little interested in those farms. He may be wrong, but it is the fact.

Some may say that he should go to those farms and see for himself the work done there. That is partly true. We must not, on the other hand, forget that at the time when it is worth while to visit these farms the farmer has more to do on his own farm than he can properly attend to. Under these conditions, are we obtaining the results we are aiming at? Are we getting the full benefit of our experience? We are surely getting some benefit, but it is coming in slowly. We are too much in a hurry to wait for slow results. Let us change our methods and try to get immediate results. If the farmer will not come to the experimental farm, let us go to him with it. Go to the farmer's field and demonstrate there, by actual practice, what has been found profitable on the central farms. For this purpose, the Government should multiply its illustration farms, or, to achieve still better results, transfer its activities in that field to the provincial government, and help them financially to carry on this work. These special farms have found favour with some provincial governments, and their number is increasing every year. This increase is due to many causes, one of the first of which is organization. We have 256 demonstration farms in Quebec, the details of which are as follows: 37 fruit (trees); 65 small fruits; 3 kitchen gardening (not including school plots); 42 sugar beets; 45 pototato fields; 64 experimental stations for rotation crops, wheat, oats, corn, barley, clover. The local Government pays the cost of these with successful results. They have passed the stage of mere experiment; they have come to stay. Their value to the farmers has been demonstrated, the improvement they have effected in the agricultural field is making them more necessary every year. Their results are immediate and lasting. That is what we are looking after,—results, more results, and immediate results.

I claim results, but you may think, Mr. Speaker, that I have brought little proofs to support my statement. The value of crops and stock value is the most significant and conclusive proof that can be presented to the house. First, the area under cultivation in the province of Quebec in 1914 was 4,863,850 acres. In 1918 it was up to 13,292,798 acres, an increase of 8,428,948 acres.

The value of the crop in 1914 was $98,779,000; in 1918 it was up to $271,750,900; in 1919, $307,994,280. It has practically increased threefold. The value of stock on the farm increased from $122,208,000 in 1914 to $252,445,000 in 1918. These results surely are due to the system of helping agriculture and the methods behind them.

There is also a better reason for this pre-eminent position of the province of Quebec in agriculture. That is Liberalism. While Quebec was under the Tory rule, it was making slow progress. Ontario had then a Liberal regime and was progressing very fast. A change came. Quebec went Liberal and is fast gaining ground. Ontario made slow progress during these late years of her Toryism.

The Tories have made the millionaires richer. Liberalism made the farmers well-off. Let us see what Ontario was doing during the same years. The value of crops which in 1914 was $168,455,253 has since increased to $384,013,000, a little more than double. Is it surprising, in view of these facts, to see the farmers of the province take their interests in their own hands and go into politics? These facts are really more than was necessary to support my statement that proper methods of agriculture will bring astonishing results.

These illustration farms in Quebec usually consist of a small plot of land, just a few acres, cultivated according to new methods under the special supervision of a rural demonstrator, a Government official. The farmers see one of their neighbours cultivating four or five acres of his land with some kind of crop. They know him; they see the work he does on these acres; they know how much the work costs. They discuss with him the whole of the experiment and are still there when the crop is gathered and results known. They then feel that what their neighbour has done they all can do. They are convinced, and are ready to follow this lead. That brings results. The experimental farms, I am sorry to say, cannot boast of such immediate progress. To help the farmers carry on experiments on their own lands, and to help those in charge of the Provincial Government's illustration farms, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. J. E. Caron, has retained the services of special agricultural experts or demonstrators, most of them are young men. They are obliged to reside in rural districts; they visit the farmer in his fields; help him with advice and show him how to get results. They are the farmer's friends. I recently read in an agricultural magazine of this province a quotation from Hoard's Dairyman, published in the United States, saying that the county agent, who corresponds to our district agronomist, is gradually becoming the hub of the agricultural wheel around which are grouped all the individual or collective activities of the county. He is as much an adviser as a man at everybody's disposal. He is becoming more and more the farmers' business agent and friend.

The author of the above mentioned article added:

> The same might be said of our district agronomists. They strive to help each farmer with the means at their disposal; what they want is to make farming more remunerative and the farmer better liked and esteemed. Farmers who despised their agronomist despised their best friend, their most desinterested adviser and one of the most powerful factors for insuring the progress of a region. In ten years from now we will be able to recognize at once the regions under the happy influence of a good agronomist. They who still resist the agronomist's influence are the inveterate partisans of old routine or the great meddlers in people's affairs who find themselves hampered in their interested calculations, by a man of progress, a champion of the farmer's rights.

It is important to mention especially the proof of the appreciation of the district agronomists' work given by the counties which have an agricultural information bureau. This appreciation was manifested in the shape of bonuses varying from $200 to $600 voted the agronomists by the county councils. In the month of July, 1918, eighteen counties having the services of an agronomist had already voted bonuses. Since then, seventeen of the counties have done the same. One county only is needed to complete the list, but we hope it will not delay in following the example of others. Time and again these experts call the farmers of a particular locality into one field and give them practical demonstrations of what the new methods will do. Perhaps the House will permit a personal reference to illustrate my point. In one locality of my riding the rural demonstrator called a meeting of farmers in a potato field. That season there was much disease in those potato fields and the crop was endangered. The demonstrator had to fight the plague and show the farmers how to fight it. With their help he treated one field and a few days later he called the same farmers to the same spot to see the results of his teaching and compare the conditions with those in the neighbouring field. The results were immediate; every farmer started to work on his own land, using the new methods, and the crop was saved. That is practical teaching. That is immediate results. The illustration plot of land, coupled with the district rural demonstrator—that is the new idea in farm experiments; that is the new method. This new idea, these new methods, have superseded with the people the experimental farms. The cost to the local government of those illustration farms is very small; it averages around $200 in Ottawa, and a good deal less in our province. In Quebec the 64 illustration farms, on which wheat, oats, corn, barley, clover, were raised, cost to the province an average of $35 a piece. The 102 devoted to fruit trees and small fruit growing received no grant of money. Our financial contributions are limited to the purchase of seeds, plant sprayers, chemical fertilizers and farming implements. We also supplied seeds and fertilizer for quarter-acre fields for the 42 sugar beet demonstration plots. The same methods are applied to the 45 potato plots. This demonstrates very clearly that these illustration fields are not expensive when the proper organization is behind them. If the number of these farms was increased in a large measure; if we had thousands of them under the federal control instead of forty-two, the results would be wonderful and the country would reap big profits from these expenditures. The unrest among the farmers would soon disappear when these gentlemen would see that their interests were being well taken care of. They would be more interested in their work, and their sons would not be so anxious to leave for the industrial town. I would recommend that a few farmers in each municipality be given the advantage of such illustration farms. Do not take the whole of a farm, but only a few acres, on as many farms as possible. The farmer in charge of a small plot of this kind is bound to follow the move on the whole of his land. He will be obliged in order to avoid the criticism of his neighbours, to cultivate his farm up to the new standard and use the new and more modern methods. That is our experience in Quebec, and is, I am sure, the same in all other provinces, for the farmer is everywhere the same, a man of sound judgment. The report of the hon. Minister of Agriculture bears testimony to this. It says on page 62:

> During the past season, it was quite noticeable that crops grown on the illustration stations, and for several miles round, gave higher yields than those grown on farms more distant.

The Government should take notice of this new formula in agricultural improvement and do its utmost to get all over Canada the same results, and get at least some returns for the money spent. The Government should get in touch with the provincial Departments of Agriculture and co-operate with them in carrying out the best means of promoting the system of directly illustrating to the farmer what can be done. This principle has been accepted for cow testing with good results. Why not in illustration stations? During the third week of March many of the Provincial Deputy Ministers of Agriculture were in Ottawa; if I am well informed, these gentlemen have taken up this question of co-operation between their Departments and the Federal Government. They have specially advocated that the work on these illustration farms be left in their hands, the Central Government making special grants to help pay the expenses. This was not agreed to by Ottawa,—why, I do not know. If I am permitted I may guess the reason. "No money to help the farmer; what we have we hold, for the big interests." What these gentlemen from the provinces are after is not simply dollars and cents; they are after results; they want unity of operation in their respective provinces to get efficiency. They have the staff to carry on the work. They can do it much cheaper than this Government. The duplicating of salaries, travelling expenses, and overhead charges would be done away with. That will leave more money to promote the real interests of agriculture. I will with pleasure ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture to give the best of his time to the study of new ideas and new methods in the farming business. I feel sure that as a farmer himself he will understand the strength of my plea, and give it his whole support.

We are increasing subsidies in many branches of this Administration by the millions, while we are hardly spending three millions of dollars for agriculture and the betterment of the farming community. I hope the minister when he brings down his Supplementary Estimates will have another million for agricultural purposes to be spent along the lines of the new idea and more modern methods of farming. Let him take his money from the ruinous Department of Militia, the Mercantile Marine, and the other war marine projects under consideration. Cut down the expenses there and give the savings thus made to his countrymen at large.

I have mentioned the farmer's son and his willingness to stay on the farm. It is easier to keep him there than to take him back to the farm. Prove to him that he can make a clean living there, that there is money in the farming business, and you will have good results. Seeing his father a leader in this line of social activity will stimulate the son's desire to follow in his steps and make good. Let us not forget this aspect of a big problem. This young man has also felt the changing state of mind of the world. He has also learned many things and is full of energy to carry on his aspirations. He wants to learn more, and is looking for better and quicker results. Let us use his good will and give him the best chances of getting educated in things pertaining to the farm business. We need leaders in that field. Our schools of agriculture could make those leaders if they had the proper support and were not so few and so far apart. The farmers' sons of to-day will be the farmers of to-morrow. If they are made progressive, the next generation of farmers will be a blessing to this country.

The well-being of the farmer, his progress and enrichment is the safest asset of this country. In time of stress the farmer stays on his land and works. He does not invest his savings in American funds like the millionaires do. His money works on the farm, in this country of ours, for the benefit of all. Everywhere the farmers have done more for their country than the millionaires during the war. They are still there to play the highest part in reconstruction work. If the farmer is rich, the country is rich. Millionaires don't make a country rich; they live on a rich country.

So my last word will be: Get behind the new idea and the more modern methods of increasing farm production; make the farmer well off, and the country at large will be prosperous.

Mr. S. F. GLASS: As the hour is late, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. ROBB: This motion is not debatable, but I wish to say that we shall not be able to arrive at a vote to-morrow night unless the debate is proceeded with now.

Mr. A. L. DAVIDSON: The Whip for the Progressive party arranged with me that the adjournment should be moved for the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Under the circumstances, I take it, the hon. member desires to withdraw his motion. He will thus reserve his right to continue his speech. If the motion is put to the House and negatived, the hon. member will be debarred from taking any further part in this debate.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. OLIVER ROBERT GOULD (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, as I rise in my place to address the House I am reminded that I have waited not impatiently, nor with great expectation, for some 46 years to have the opportunity of expressing my views in the House of Commons upon matters pertaining to the welfare of Canada.

I would approach the hon. Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) and speak to him a few words partly in approbation, because I have tried to realize the great task that confronts him as Minister of Finance, inasmuch as it seems to me that the heritage handed to him and the task before him is greater than that assigned to any other Finance Minister in the whole history of Canada. It seems to me that the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) was absolutely correct when he stated that the ex-Finance Minister (Sir Thomas White) and his Government did not have a task, for the road was then a highway of enthusiasm. The people knew of the task in hand, that of winning the war, and anything, reasonable or unreasonable, that was asked of them at that time was forthcoming. All the people demanded was that the funds they so lavishly provided for the Government should be used with judgment and discretion, and the day has long since dawned when the people believe, as I believe, that the funds so lavishly given to the Government have not been disposed of in a fair or equitable manner. It further seems to me, Sir, that the ex-Minister of Finance, knowing of that enthusiasm, should not have taken the attitude that he did in the flotation of the war bonds when he advertised them to the people of Canada tax free. That, Sir, in my humble opinion, may be interpreted as either a bribe to the people or permission to the millionaire and the wealthy man to hide much of their wealth away from taxation, which wealth, he knew, must be increased materially as a result of our war efforts, and I am here to say, particularly for the West, that during that whole period, during the flotation of those bonds many of the people of the West used their credits at the banks to provide the necessary $50 or $100 to purchase a bond, thereby demonstrating their patriotism and their desire to do what they could. These people cried out loudly against the issuing of the war bonds tax free. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, the present Minister of Finance has my sympathy, and I may say to him that I believe, and wish to believe, that we might have received a Budget at this time much better than the one that has been brought down if no artificial difficulties had intervened.

I would now draw the attention of the House to the able address that was made in this debate by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark), and I wish to record the fact that I am pleased as a member of this group to have as an associate a man of his abilities, foresight and power of expression. Truly, his abilities are the envy of the House, and when the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) stands in his place and presumes to tell this House that he does not fear the task imposed upon him to reply to the hon. member for Red Deer, in my opinion that was only meant to be read in Hansard and after reading it to find out that the boast was not made good. I regret very much that the Minister of the Interior is not in his place, but he is not to blame for that, of course, because it is rather extraordinary to be talking at this time of night. There are a few things, however, that I would rather say in his presence than in his absence.

I would direct a few remarks across the Chamber to the Minister of the Interior, perhaps because he directly addressed us "angularly," as he put it, across the floor of the House. Twice did the hon. gentleman refer to the Progressives, or to us who sit behind the hon. member for Red Deer, as being out in the side lines in the townships. Twice did he advise us, or advise the member for Timiskaming, to do certain things. Twice it is also known that he himself visited the same townships, Carleton, Victoria, and Timiskaming, and twice it is recorded that he returned humiliated and defeated. And acknowledging his defeat he presumes to tell the Progressive party of this House what to do. Does the hon. gentleman think, after failing to persuade the people out in these electoral districts that he visited that anything he could say here would persuade us who represent these people, that he is on the right track? I think not, Mr. Speaker. May I inform the hon. gentleman that his story, so far as I am concerned, falls upon deaf ears—I have listened too long, and I fear I am an unbeliever of his doctrine. The arguments the hon. gentleman presented were based largely upon the findings of a commission that was appointed by the Asquith Government of Great Britain in the year 1916. The report was handed in to the Government in the year 1918. It purported to show, according to the interpretation of the hon. minister, that Great Britain was a decadent nation, and to show the dire state into which agriculture had fallen, and the inanimate status of the iron and steel industries. And the minister endeavoured to prove that a high protective policy for Great Britain would be her only salvation.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind it appears presumptuous on the part of the minister to think that he should criticize the Government of which right hon. Lloyd George is Premier, and the people of Great Britain who placed him in that position. Well do I remember, in the year of 1918, coincident with the report that was issued by the commission in question, how the high protectionist press of Canada heralded it all over the country that Great Britain would resort to high protective principles. To me, Mr. Speaker, the soft impeachment suggested by the hon. Minister of the Interior on a coalition between the official opposition and ourselves was to be expected, though in his later effort he failed to construct anything on his foundation of sand. Similarly, his charge was almost offensive that there was a proposal of a coalition designed to deceive the people. The idea of any proposal to deceive the people has never entered my mind, and I regret for his sake to believe that such thoughts could and did enter the mind of the minister. I wonder whether this is the first time that such a question has entered the mind of the hon. gentleman. We believe that many hon. members who have listened to his teachings and his doctrines are at present well-nigh persuaded to come out from among his party. It is our cry that they come out from among them. As I have listened to the debate upon this Budget I could not help feeling that this has been a discussion absolutely and entirely on the merits and demerits of the tariff, and that the debate is only a preliminary to that which will take place throughout the whole country. This being so, the time spent in debating the principles of the question has been well spent.

We do object to special privilege and we do argue for equitable distribution of taxation. During the address delivered by the Minister of the Interior he stated that our whole platform and our arguments were designed toward free trade. That statement I wish to repudiate, and I take as my authority the platform of the Canadian Council of Agriculture. If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer particularly to two cases, which we consider may be typical of many others in our Dominion of exorbitant protection given to industries. The first one I wish to refer to is the Dominion Textile Co., of whom we have heard the familiar phrase: "Their factory was not built for the glory of God but to make money for the shareholders." If I might be permitted to add my sentiments to that phrase I would say it was specially built for the financial exploitation of the people. Protection heralds the cry of increased wages for increased cost, and it is a recorded fact that woollen textiles advanced 80 per cent in price to the consumer. Was the increased cost paid in wages? We will see the schedule:

Groups of Earnings.	Male.	Female.
Under $5 per week	29	74
$5 to $11	292	1,104
$10 to $15	745	1,047
$15 to $20	738	234
$20 to $25	458	28
Over $25	268	2

Or, in other words, the average wage paid per week to their employees was $12, or $624 per year. Is that schedule any justification of an increase of 80 per cent in their selling price? If we were to deduct 80 per cent, or even 40 per cent of the selling price from the schedule of wages I have given does it not afford an illustrative picture? And this company's privilege is a 30 per cent or 35 per cent protective duty. As regards these gentlemen who built this factory, not for the glory of God but for their own profit, I will say that whatever may be their state of mind, they are undoubtedly dressed in sheep's clothing.

The cotton industry is even worse, where the annual wage paid to employees was $516 per year or $10 per week. What now of their boasted cry of high wages? If high wages were the determining factor along with the advertised fact that there had been greatly increased costs of production, there would have been an accompanying list of the wages paid that would be a proof of the sincerity of their arguments. But never have these companies seen fit to advise the people and to prove their assertions by such statements.

Allow me to inform the House that the determining factors as regards the salaries paid are: Firstly, the unionism of workers that endeavour to force a living wage from the employers; and, secondly, the supply and demand of those who wish to work and those who wish to employ them. These, Mr. Speaker, are in all countries in the world the determining factors of wages paid, and not the amount of the protection that the interests receive from gratuity-giving governments. In this mulcting of the people by the tariff and the greed permitted thereby, the Minister of Finance assists by further imposing a tax, a tax, Mr. Speaker, which rests primarily on the necessities of life. I would, Sir, give to the House a concrete illustration of the manner in which the necessity becomes a luxury by and through the combination of excessive tariff and the proposed excise tax now brought down by the Minister of Finance.

Let us imagine a pair of shoes made by a United States manufacturer in 1914 and regarded as an actual necessity because of their low cost. These shoes are purchased by the Canadian retailer in 1914 at, let us say, $3 per pair f.o.b. Chicago. The same pair of shoes—still a necessity—made by the same manufacturer in 1920, is purchased by the Canadian retailer, but because of increased production cost, labour, etc., it has increased in cost during the six years by one hundred per cent and is therefore sold to the Canadian retailer in 1920 at $6 per pair f.o.b. Chicago. Now, let us make a comparison between the cost of those shoes in 1914 and in 1920 and let us remember that in view of the price the shoes must still be considered a necessity and not a luxury. Adding to the 1914 Chicago price of $3 a 30 per cent customs tariff, amounting to 90 cents, freight and handling charges 10 cents, you get a cost laid down in Canada of $4. The Canadian retailer adds his profit of 40 per cent or $1.60 and the price to the purchaser in 1914 is $5.60. The price of the same shoes in 1920, f.o.b. Chicago, is $6 and the addition of the customs tariff, amounting to $1.80, freight and handling charges 20 cents, makes the cost laid down in Canad $8. The Canadian retailer adds his profit of 40 per cent, or $3.20 and the price to the purchaser, exclusive of the excise tax, is $11.20. Under our new excise tax ten per cent is added to the cost of what was originally a necessity but which through the customs tariff is placed in the class of luxuries. The $1.12 excise tax making the cost of this necesity to the purchaser in Canada now a luxury with an inflated value of $12.32.

I would now ask tolerance, to inform the House something about this Farmers' platform, particularly in view of the complaint made by the hon. Minister of the Interior during the course of his address. It is within the knowledge of many of the members of this House that during the central portion of the war period many public men and others throughout the Dominion foresaw the reconstruction period, and an institution known as the Canadian Reconstruction Association was formed with Sir John Willison as the head. That board was composed of members of the majority of the big industrial and financial interests of Canada, but mining, agriculture and labour generally were not represented. In their self-sufficiency they ignored the advice; in fact thy desired not the opinion or advice of the factors I have mentioned, and they proceed to educate the people of this country as to their duties during the reconstruction period. Now this titled gentleman, Sir John Willison, who is known to be an able platform man, toured the Dominion and addressed meetings in the most populous business centres, but it was not long until the people of Canada seemed to believe that the whole object of the Canadian Reconstruction Association, as outlined in the policies of its advocate was to do nothing more than propagate in the minds of the people the theories of high protection. Now when a manufacturer appears in the West and presumes to tell the people, those hard-working and sunburnt people of the West, the merits of his protective policy under the guise of the name of the Canadian Reconstruction Association, while they listen, they do not believe.

To-day it seems that the vision had been lost for under the name or guise of the Canadian Reconstruction Association they have for months been singularly quiet. While in session in 1916, the Canadian Council of Agriculture, seeing under the mask of this doughty knight, realizing what the objects of the association were and that the advocacy of its cause was not in the best interests of Canada, conceived the idea that they would endeavour to frame a platform suitable for all the people of Canada, having particular reference to reconstruction. I wish to inform the House, Mr. Speaker, that the platform was not designed for a political party purpose, but as a suggestion to the Government in power as to the best way of meeting the problems of reconstruction. That I am sure of.

I could go on much longer and tell this House of the earnestness displayed by the people of the western plains after their discussions in the local associations. I could make a long story of how they fought it out in their big conventions, how they argued and amended, but when they saw that those who sat in high places ignored all the advice that was tendered in that platform they began to conceive the idea that nothing but their own determination would give to Canada the benefit of this platform whose merit, Mr. Speaker, has been acknowledged by the ablest men and politicians in Canada.

In connection with this story, having particular reference to the silence of the former Canadian Reconstruction Association, I have been interested in an article appearing in the Montreal Gazette of 22nd May, describing a proposed organization to be called the Western Canada Colonization Association. I would not have it understood that I speak in a critical way regarding this, yet I would have it distinctly understood that I do speak in a very questioning manner. As I look over the photographs and I read the names of the gentlemen whose photographs appear on this page, I see: Charles R. Hosmer of The Canadian Cottons; Sir Joseph Flavelle, whose close connection with the Davies Meat Packing Co. we all remember; D. Lorne McGibbon, of the Atlantic Sugar Co.; Huntley R. Drummond, of the Canadian Sugar Co.; Brig. General F. S. Meighen, of the Lake of the Woods Milling Co.; Sir Edmund Osler, banker, and leading high protectionist; Sir Charles Gordon. In connection with this organization a note in the paper says:

> The organization will carefully select settlers, welcome them into the country, give them such information and advice as they require, and make of them good Canadians.

All very good if that is their platform, but I wondered why these gentlemen showed such an interest in this matter. It goes on further and says that the Government and the railways are cooperating with this organization in the great national undertaking. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when the plain people ask for something they are ever denied; but when "big business" comes to this House it is received with open arms. The denial that was given to the suggestion of the big steel merger that was brought up in this House some weeks ago is not much in evidence. Might I remark again that when the Bell Telephone Company wished to increase their capitalization by one hundred per cent they found their sponsors ready and willing to tell this House, or to tell the people of Canada, that no harm could result from it. My idea in connection with the steel merger is that it does not merely propose to capitalize the assets of the country in a certain manner, but it does propose to capitalize the taxpaying ability of the people; and in the spirit of prophecy I predict that should this merger really take effect the day is not far distant when—after selling to the people of Canada five, and ten-dollar shares of stock—they will return to the Government and say "Here is public opinion represented by these shareholders," and they will ask for a bounty or a subsidy. I wish to say to this House that the people are tired of bounties, subsidies, high protection—tired of broken promises, of profiteering, and graft.

We listened some weeks ago, during an exposition given by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) to the statement that millions of tons of iron ore were in close proximity to the city of Ottawa, and it was stated these ores assayed sixty per cent. A scientist in my office, in connection with the statement that was made by the hon. member, gave me authority to state that thirty-three per cent of iron is a workable basis, and by that I presume is meant that it can be handled at a profit. Well, the hon. gentleman spoke briefly of having a bounty given to some one to work these mines, but it has occurred to me that the difference between a thirty-three per cent assay which shows a profitable basis and the sixty per cent assay referred to should provide dividends enough for any company that wished to go to work diligently and make a profit in that direction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I might refer at length to the number of names that have been applied to this party since the House met on the 26th of February. However, I do not wish to dwell upon it. Neither do I wish to say that I am in anything but a good mood because I am prepared to believe —and if the House had as much evidence as I have concerning this matter it would also believe—that the abuse that has been heaped by hon. gentlemen opposite on this little aggressive party during the present session has been the greatest capital for our cause that we could ever have. Hon. gentlemen opposite have made charges and counter charges absolutely without knowledge of the facts, aiming at something and hoping to get a retort from this side that would give them a little capital. We have been called "Bolshevists", "One Big Union", "Agitators", "Reds", "Free Traders", and "Little Canadians". We have been styled "dangerous" not once but many times, and we have also been called "Levites". The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) pictured us as Levites. That hon. gentleman also drew a picture of "steers" that was referred to tonight. The picture of the steers reminded me—and I think it also reminded the hon. gentleman—of the cartoon that was published back in 1911 during the reciprocity campaign. I would advise the hon. gentleman, or anyone who speaks in that fashion, that they have altogether a wrong conception of the minds of the people. We are too big—and we were too big in 1911—to be persuaded along the way they wished us to go. When they produce a cartoon purporting to be educating to the people and wish to send it out West they should send something other than the picture referred to—something bigger. That is a piece of advice I wish to give to the hon. member for Brantford.

With reference to the assertion respecting "free trade with Great Britain" I shall not consider it at any length other than to say this. If my hon. friend's argument holds good, that free trade between Great Britain and Canada would result in free trade with the whole world, why does it not work out that way under the British preference? The hon. gentleman's argument is a bugaboo, something that he fears and is unable to prove. However, the thing that has occurred to me is this: We have been called "Little Canadians," and I have wondered what constitutes a big Canadian. I have wondered, Mr. Speaker, if some of the hon. gentlemen who have made these charges would be considered "Big Canadians"; and I have been to some pains to find out wherein I am lacking as a Canadian as compared with any individual who charges me, or any member of my group, with being a "Little Canadian".

Now, I was not in the House when the Budget was brought down, and I did not have the opportunity of hearing a number of the speeches both for and against the high protectionist Budget of the Government—a Government that promises tariff revision downwards in spite of the statements of men like the Minister of the Interior, who tells us that some other countries have been almost ruined by looking in the direction of lower tariffs. But I found much interest in reading in Hansard several of the speeches delivered in this debate, and among them I may say the deliverances of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Mowat), and of the hon. member for Fraser Valley, B.C. (Mr. Stacey), interested me immensely. It was not, perhaps, so much what these hon. members said as the fact that these three, this significant trinity of kindred spirits in Union Government, represent three distinct schools of thought in this House, and when we see the spectacle of this trio lying down together with the sheep and the goats and the lambs within the protected fold of the Union Government—over whose destinies the big interests of this country are watching with such zealous care and solicitude—it is time, I believe, that some private member of this House should draw attention to the peculiar combination that, in the minds of the people who know, must take on a three-faced external appearance, with but the one bleeding, patriotic heart beating beneath the bosoms of the three. On the one hand, we have the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, whose widespread far-reaching, diversified interests in the country are said to extend from the operation of newspapers, of dredging companies and Government dredging contracts, of lumber and canning mills and factories on the far Pacific ocean—

Mr. STEVENS: Does the hon. member suggest that I personally am interested in the businesses which he has mentioned?

Mr. GOULD: Oh, these are interests out there. You are not interested in farming in the fruit country; you come from a country where all these things—

Mr. STEVENS: I am asking the hon. gentleman a question, if he will permit me: Does he suggest that I am personally interested in these businesses?

Mr. GOULD: No, I do not say so—Now let me continue where I left off when interrupted—to the ownership of newspapers, of grain elevators, of stock food dispensaries along the broad prairies, to catch up again with terminal elevators, dredging companies, steamboats, etc., when the head of the Lakes is reached, speaking to this House as the pure and undefiled Tory of the old school of forty years ago. During all these forty years of the National Policy his confidence in it seems never to have wavered, and he tells the House to-day that he supports it as did his grandfather, perhaps, at the time of its inception.

The National Policy of this and other Governments, seemingly, has been good to the interests in the country with which is connected the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. Under it great lumber mills, large dredging companies, immense terminal elevators, and even Tory newspapers, have grown up and prospered through the benign influence of this policy, and in the days when the people of this country, after forty years of it, have come to the conclusion that the protective policy as a developer and a populator of Canada has failed to populate and has failed to develop, except in some remote cases of which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre might tell this House, my hon. friend, knowing as he must the sum total of what this protective system has done for Canada, has the temerity to rise here and sing the praises of a Government and a policy that, if we may judge by the census figures of Canada, its huge national debt, and the trade returns for a no later period than the month of April last, is little less than throttling the legitimate and natural growth of the whole Dominion. Truly we can put the first member of this strange trinity I have mentioned down as Faith. I am not going to even suggest that it is misplaced faith on his part, for who knows but himself the extent of the ramifications of the interests for which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre speaks in the province from whence he comes and so ably represents in this House.

Then we have the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Mowat). For this same forty years, up to quite recently, the hon. member for Parkdale, could find neither hope nor virtue in the protective tariff. His despair began, it seems, about the time of its inception, when a great man named Mowat was Prime Minister of the great province of Ontario, a man who at times was prone to dispute with the father of the protective system in Canada certain constitutional rights with respect to the province of which he was guardian for so many years, and who, because of his staunch loyalty to principle and right and justice, earned from the Tories like the hon. member for Vancouver Centre and from some other hon. members of this House who were always Tory, always will be, just about the same kind of criticism as we hear levelled to-day at the men of this little Progressive party and others who think as we do, and who to-day are carrying on the same fight against class and privilege and injustice to the common people as did the illustrious forbear of the hon. member for Parkdale some thirty or forty years ago.

This is a free country, of course, and men are privileged to change their minds. Some men change their minds from conviction, and some because in changing sometimes the way is better paved to get a seat in Parliament—the seat that could never had been secured unless there was a change of heart. But I am constrained to ask this House and this country, what would the late Sir Oliver Mowat say—the man who helped to lead Sir Wilfrid Laurier to victory under the motto "Laurier, Mowat and Victory"—if that sterling old Liberal were privileged to-day to look down upon the wayward namesake, the hon. member for Parkdale, who in his declining years of a rather chequered and unfortunate political career finds it necessary to swallow the Protectionist Budget. It seems to me I have heard a story of an occasion that in this particular, might interest the honourable member for Frontenac, (Mr. Edwards), I tell this story chiefly because one of the figures in it happened to be a certain Joseph Haycock, at one time leader of a Farmers' party in Ontario and a rival, I understand, of the hon. member for Frontenac when he was much younger than he is to-day. It seems to me that I have read somewhere among the political reminiscences of the county of Frontenac and of Joe Haycock that on a certain occasion, when he was chided by a certain speaker, then much younger than to-day, for having changed his political coat, remarked that "a man sometimes changes his mind, but a donkey never will." Perhaps the hon. member for Frontenac has heard that story before, perhaps indeed he may have been present on the occasion. At any rate, to give due credit to the hon. member for Parkdale for his eleventh-hour repentance, it cannot be charged against him that he has not changed his mind, no matter what the reason for the change. We do not have to go back very far for a record of the political affiliations of the hon. member for Parkdale. Even as late as 1911, he was, I understand, a supporter of free trade and lower tariff, and, if I mistake not, the good offices of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, with whom the elder Mowat served with such distinction, were at that same time put forth to secure for the hon. member for Parkdale a seat in this House from among the past protectionist province of Ontario that has sent to this House during these forty past years so many Tories that, to give credit where credit is due, might be placed in the category given by the late lamented Joseph Haycock to those who never change their minds. Not being fully conversant with the various events in the political history of the hon. member for Parkdale during all these long years in Ontario, of his struggles and hardships in the midst of the Ontario Tories who have seemingly taken him to their fold, not being acquainted with all the details of his election campaigns and his election campaign funds, perhaps I might leave further particulars in this connection to some Liberal who stood with Laurier when the elder Mowat did, and who may know more about Mowat political history in Ontario than I do. But, if I go back but nine years, I find the hon. member for Parkdale in 1911 supporting the reciprocity treaty of Mr. Fielding and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I find him a candidate I think in one of the Ontario Tory ridings, and I find him in the face of the Tory denunciations of that treaty and in the face of fear and shivering that free wheat for the country from which I come would drive us into annexation with the United States—I repeat I find the hon. member for Parkdale no later than in 1911, supporting that reciprocity and defending it against the aspersions of the Tories who, with the same density of vision as they display to-day, were peddling the bogey that free wheat would make this country an adjunct of the United States. These same Tories, whom the hon. member for Parkdale announces to this House he has joined after a chequered if not inglorious career as a Liberal, a reciprocity, and a lower tariff candidate, were in 1911 afraid to let us sell our wheat to the United States, but the noble patriots in 1918 and 1919 were not afraid to not only lift the embargo and sell our wheat to Americans, but were actually not afraid to permit the soldiers of Canada and the soldiers of the United States to fight the same battle for freedom on the continent of Europe, to mingle with one another, and to eat the same bread made out of the same wheat of America.

But the mind of the hon. member for Parkdale is still troubled. He did perhaps have some slight thought for the interests of the western farmers, the great body of producers of the West, when he supported the reciprocity pact in 1911. But he has been able to get a seat in Parliament since that time. He did not get that seat from Liberals, working men or farmers, apparently. It came from the protectionists, and perhaps from big implement companies like the Massey-Harris Company. Therefore, the hon. member for Parkdale proposes to run true to form so far as the protectionists and the implement companies are concerned. Though no Mowat before him ever accepted a seat in Parliament as an apostle of protection, the member for Parkdale after a few years contact, appears to have become inoculated and, despite his previous political record, he is now, safely in his seat, prepared to swallow the whole protectionist dose—hook, line and sinker. The only public reason for this remarkable right-about-face is that he has the Massey-Harris works located in his riding, and, though holding no business or legal brief for the company, he must sink any individual opinions of his own he may have had and subvert the whole interests of this country and its people to the interests of that company. I have heard one after the other of these protectionist members rise in their place and tell this House that they are not sectional in their vision, that they are not class in their composition, and that they stand for all of Canada all the time. And as if to demonstrate the breadth of their vision, their great faith in all of Canada all the time, here is one of them who pops up in this House and out of his own mouth tells us that the extent of the vision which he sees through far-seeing eyes gets no farther than the business of the Massey-Harris Company goes—about as far as Medicine Hat, I think I read. He and his colleagues talk about building a great country, yet the hon. member for Parkdale, who has been converted to some kind of a new-found hope, cannot see past the tall chimney out of which the smoke comes from the Massey-Harris Company. And yet I might tell him that, if it were not for the farmers of this country, there would be mighty little smoke coming out of the Massey-Harris chimney.

I listened the other day to the eloquent Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) tell about the groans and the cries and supplications of some certain faction in England who had sought some kind of death-bed repentance on tariff matters over there. I wonder if before this repentance of the hon. member for Parkdale, this getting himself together with the interests of those who build tall chimneys for which the farmers supply the coal and the smoke, there were any groans and cries and supplications. Perhaps not—not in the presence of that new Hope which is said to beat eternal in the human breast. Be that as it may, surely it would not be amiss to liken the hon. member for Parkdale, the second member of this strange trinity, in the face of the surrounding circumstances, to that virtue of Hope.

And surely Charity has never been better exemplified in the country or in this House than by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Stacey) the fruit farmer who coaxes his living out of the fertile soil of the magnificent valleys of British Columbia. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) I understand, includes in his business and political repertoire such things as daily newspapers, grain elevators, lumber mills, terminal elevators, dredging contracts, steamships, and the like. The hon. member for Parkdale must have big implement factories with tall, smoking chimneys to make him see the light. But the hon. member for Fraser River, honest, hard-working fruit farmer that he is, asks only thirty cents a box for his apples. The heathen of old and the unbeliever of the present may have erected idols of gold, and the hon. member for Fraser river has worshipped not. The filthy lucre has had no temptations for him; he walked on in the straight and narrow path so typical of the simple life of the trusty folks of the farm. But thirty cents a box on his apples and a market among us farmers on the prairies, where we have no apples of our own, and like Samson of old, he falls down and worships, not at the shrine of the prairie farmer who pays the additional price to enable the fruit farmer to live, but at the feet of the people who take those means that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior would call "constitutional," to compel the prairie farmer to pay this thirty cents per box whether he likes it or not. Viewing this procedure briefly in passing, I cannot help wondering if the hon. member for Fraser Valley, out of the goodness of his heart, would have raised his voice in such high praise of glorification of this tariff if, instead of virtually buying his support at the rate of thirty cents a box on apples, it had erected a tariff wall around British Columbia, where no wheat was produced, and order this same law-abiding, trusty, fruit man to pay the prairie farmer thirty cents a bushel more for his wheat than the same article might have been secured for in Montana or Washington or Oregon.

Mr. Speaker, all men, it is said, have their price; but in comparison with what it has required to keep the honourable member for Centre Vancouver seeing the light, and to force the same light on the honourable member for Parkdale, the price of the hon. member for Fraser River is too cheap. But by placing his own valuation upon his own independence, by sinking his principles and life-long convictions at the rate of thirty cents per box, the whole sum, thirty cents and all, to be paid by the prairie farmer whom the hon. member for Fraser River is to place in an exclusive market for himself, surely the honourable member has placed himself in that category that may aptly be described as Charity. Thus we have the earthly trinity—Faith, Hope and Charity.

Speaking as a western farmer, one of the peculiar things about this particular trinity is that, while absolutely opposed to conceding anything in the shape of trade privileges to the western prairie farmer, each one of them has something to sell to this particular farmer. And, what is more significant still is that each one of them, while desiring to sell their wares to the prairie farmer, stipulates that in selling, the prairie farmer shall buy upon the terms and under the restrictions laid down by these three honourable members and those who think like them in matters of trade. "Big Canadians," "no class"—Oh, no, perish the thought; only farmers are "class." If we on the prairies desire the lumber from the interests served by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, we pay the price demanded by those lumber interests, plus the tariff protection on the commodity they sell. If we desire to purchase a binder from the factory with the tall, smoking chimney in the protectionist constituency that has given political life to the hon. member for Parkdale, we go down in our pockets, and we pay the price demanded by the man who owns the tall chimney that excites so much admiration in the mind of the hopeful member of the trinity. Then, if we farmers yearn for a little fruit to relieve the monotony on the prairies where wheat is produced, we must before securing it purchase it at the price and at the terms, plus 30 cents tariff per box, demanded by the charitable third member of this trinity. Neither the faith, the hope, nor the charity of any one of these big three Canadians that do not believe in class legislation, however, points the way to the manner in which the prairie farmer is going to get the money to pay for the protection accorded to the diversified interests represented by this trinity, and when we have anything from the prairies to sell we find that we must sell it at the price dictated by Liverpool, after we, the farmers, have paid the freight across a continent and across an ocean. Then the Faith-Hope-and-Charity trinity, when they have anything to sell to us, demand that we pay the freight on their wares as well as paying it on our own. Thus we get it both going and coming, while this trinity chorus re-echoes a Te Deum to the tune played by the capitalists who own tall chimneys in protectionist Toronto and big lumber mills on the Pacific coast, while the hon. member for Fraser Valley and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) utter a sort of a benediction as we begin our journey down to Jericho and a prayer that no danger may meet us on the way, just so long as we can keep paying the prices demanded by the implement factories of Parkdale and the lumber mills of British Columbia and have enough left to shell out the 30 cents per box on apples that tends to keep the wolf from the door of the friends of the hon. member for Fraser river—no matter whether or not the same wolf howls about the door of every prairie farmer in Western Canada. No "class legislation" for these three. Surely Shylock, in all his avorice, would never have exemplified anything like that. Shylock did not boast of such big, broad Nationalism as is so frequently and loudly proclaimed here, while the action is denied.

We were advised that the hon. member for Fraser Valley had saved the prairie farmer from the clutches of the Nash fruit interests and had given the poor, downtrodden prairie farmer cheap fruit at about 45 cents a box for berries and something like $15 a barrel for No. 1 British Columbia apples. But a closing "Amen" from our high protectionist friends will give the proper color to the end of a little tragedy in which another erring brother has joined with the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Henders) and in the anxiety to swallow the Tory doctrine as graciously as possible, despite the groanings, the cries and the supplications the Minister of the Interior has told us about, has taken freely of the hook, line and sinker without making even an unpleasant face.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that each one of this trinity described before, represents a distinct and different commodity for which the western farmer is the chief customer, it might be of interest in this House to outline some of the conditions under which the farmer purchases the commodities involved in the transactions. Let me take them one by one.

Let me for a moment refer to the question of the agricultural implements turned out of the factory under the smoking tall chimneys in the riding of my hon. friend from Parkdale—chimneys that smoke only when the farmers buy, and whose temperatures, when the farmers don't buy, descend to a degree about in keeping with the political reception my hon. friend received at the hands of his admirers in the large number of ridings in which he was a candidate up to 1917. The hon. member for Parkdale in his speech the other day cited as one of his reasons why he should support this protectionist budget of his friends, that the Massey-Harris Co. shipped their machines as far west as Medicine Hat, presumably to sell to the farmer whose cause in this House finds no merit in the eyes of protectionist members, and that that company had given millions of dollars in credit to those same farmers. It is admitted, for the sake of argument, that the farmers did get a good deal of credit from the implement companies in the West. If the farmers had not, then, in the absence of any intelligent conception of successive Protectionist governments as to what the West really needed in order to populate it, the chances are that many a farmer would have been unable to start in the farming business. But I understand, too, that when the war broke out, the implement companies in Canada had out in Germany some seven millions of dollars in credit which had been given to the Germans; and, when we take into consideration the fact that the Germans were given credit and probably sold their implements cheaper than they were sold to the farmers of this country in which these same companies have enjoyed protection for over forty years, surely it is not expecting too much to ask that the Canadian farmers be given at least the same credit as was extended to the Germans.

But did any one in the West ever hear of an implement company giving a farmer any credit on his farm machinery unless that company was amply protected in the way of security? I do not think so. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, who, I understand, has had some little experience with newspapers at Vancouver, if not at Winnipeg, will probably understand that when a representative of a printing machinery company sells a machine to a newspaper, that machine is sold on a lien that affects only the machine in question, and that the accompanying notes carry an interest of somewhere from 6 to 8 per cent. But what about the machinery of the farmer? That's a different matter. When a farmer, on the other hand, in the past has wanted to buy a machine of some kind he has had to give a lien note of the same kind, but he has had to pay anywhere from 9 to 15 per cent interest on that note, and, besides holding a chattel mortage on the machine in question, it has not been the fault of the implement agent if he did not secure a mortage in addition on all the stock and other machinery on the farm, and, if the farmer was not keenly alert, a blanket mortage on the whole old homestead.

The heart of the hon. member for Parkdale need not bleed for the poor implement companies. They have usually been able to take care of their own interests, and when they cannot do it, then any individual member of this House is wasting his time when he ventures to fear for the future and safety of the factories with the tall smoking chimneys in the protectionist constituencies of Toronto. Those chimneys, let me say, will smoke just as long as there are farmers in this country to purchase implements and no longer, and, if my hon. friend would consider the real interests of his capitalistic friends, he might better employ his time in this House in devising ways and means to increase the number of farmers and to increase the prosperity of those already on the land, knowing as he must know that the greater the number of farmers and the greater their prosperity, the greater the volume of smoke that will be emitted from the tall chimneys in Parkdale. I do not desire at this time in any way to minimize the consideration given the farmers by some of the implement companies. That would be unjust, and it is not the method we have of doing business among the farmers. All we desire is a square deal, a fifty-fifty split, and I am satisfied that that kind of an arrangement will be of just as much benefit to the implement companies, many of whom neither need nor desire a continuance of protection. But, in case the members of this House do not know it, I want to tell them that the provincial governments of both Alberta and Saskatchewan a few years ago found it necessary to place upon the statute books of those provinces legislation which would prevent the implement companies from selling implements to the farmers under agreements that not only loaded the farmer with implements, but virtually gave these companies a blanket mortgage on everything the farmer owned. It might be of further interest to this House, particularly to the member for Parkdale, to know that the man who framed that legislation, first in Alberta and later in Saskatchewan, was none other than the late Hon. A. G. Mackay, a lifelong friend, I believe, of another public man called Mowat, who in his declining years was found steadfast in the faith that he had helped to inculcate in the late Mr. Mackay, and perhaps to some extent in his distinguished and hon. relative of the same name who occupies a seat in this House. It may be of further interest to this House to know that because he framed that legislation, Mr. Mackay in a subsequent by-election was the target for attack on the part of representatives of the implement companies who were having their credit extensions curtailed in the interests of the farmers, and that, despite their opposition, he was elected to the Alberta legislature. I would advise my hon. friend to desist shedding any crocodile tears for the oppressed, down-trodden, self-sacrificing implement companies. Rather might he keep them for the farmers who have to pay the price of the machine, plus the duty—an amount vastly increased during the past few years, despite the statements of the Minister of the Interior, who first spoke of having reduced the duty, then pleaded the cause of high protection, and thirdly and finally told us of the reduced pressure and benefit the cutting off of 7½ per cent would have. Some somersault and swallowing all in one address! And he might keep some of his tears, too, for the workingmen consumers in his own constituency who will pay much of the taxation of this Government, while the capitalists who own the factories with the tall chimneys will contribute but very little. And, if he has any tears left, let him keep them for himself and his colleagues for, unless all signs fail, there will be enough political funerals in the protectionist party at the next election, both in the rural districts and in the cities, to keep a multitude of mourners busy shedding tears for a considerable time. There does not seem to be much hope even for the member of the trinity who has been designated by the name of Hope. The position of my hon. friend from Fraser Valley is somewhat different, yet I can scarcely think that there is much hope, or that there should be much charity, for the man who will virtually place a price of 30 cents a box on his political convictions. As I have said, compared with his confreres, he appears to have sold out cheap, conducted a sort of bargain sale, as it were. However, as he has told this house that his market is to be among the prairie farmers, perhaps we on the prairie have some cause to raise our humble voices in supreme praise when he starts his protectionist dogma, and offer our devout thanks that his fruit growing friends in British Columbia did not insist on something like 47 per cent tariff on valuation, as are the textile and other interests supporting the protectionist Budget of this Government.

But, if my hon. friend imagines that he has the Western Canadian fruit market free to himself without interference from the Nash fruit interests, which he so greatly fears, then he has made a grave error. As a matter of fact, he must know, as most of us do on the prairies, that it is a combine that sets the price of fruit in Western Canada, that this combination would at times rather see the fruit destroyed than sell it cheap to the long-suffering public on the prairies that is denied fruit altogether except at exorbitant prices. And let me tell him this, that if the fruit farmers of his province ever hope to overcome the ramifications of that combine, if they ever hope to get for their fruit a price consistent with what the prairie public pays for that fruit, then he will have to join the movement of farmers, and he will have to provide for co-operation like his brother fruit farmers have found to be absolutely necessary in the marketing of their wheat, in order to protect themselves from those interests in respect to which perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver Centre could enlighten his neighbour from Fraser Valley. Rightly or wrongly, I might liken my friend in this House to Charity, but I want to tell him he will find very little charity in the marketing of his fruit until he places the marketing and selling of it in the hands of the men who grow it. And he will find that because he compels the prairie farmers, through a tariff, to pay an additional 30 cents a box for his products, he has not solved the problem so far as he and his neighbours are concerned. And I would like to tell him here and now that the best market for his British Columbia fruit will be found in the prairies, not because he tries to shove it down our throats with a thirty cent tariff tax, but because he can get it to us at the right price and in the right condition. After that, if he expects his prosperity out of the farmers on the prairies, I would suggect to him now that, if he will vote for the square deal for those farmers and relieve them from some of the economic bondage that the member for Red Deer outlined here the other day, then the population of that country will double and treble, and with it will come a doubling and trebling of the volume of British Columbia fruit consumed by its people.

The same thing may be said to the hon. member for Parkdale. If he wants the industries to grow, if he desires the smoke to continue from the tall chimneys, give the man who has to buy and use the implements manufactured a fair chance. The farmers of our country do not want it all; they do not want to destroy any Canadian industry. On the other hand, they desire to build up Canadian industries, to see them grow and expand, to see them pay good wages, employ large numbers of men, and supply the bulk of the consumers of Canada. But that cannot be done by a tariff that throttles the great basic industry of this country, upon which all others depend. It can only be done by increasing the farmers and their prosperity, and by putting them in the position where they are substantial customers for the products of the manufacturing plants of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, let me now refer briefly to another point that I find involved in connection with the numerous interlocking interests as represented by the speeches of the three members whom I have mentioned. Let me give a word to the member for Vancouver Centre and the interests which he represents in this House. I am told that they are newspaper, shipping, dredging, canning, lumbering, and elevator, terminal and otherwise. But it is to the lumbering industry that I desire to particularly refer, because we in the West just now have an outstanding illustration of just what tariff protection has done for the lumber business of British Columbia. Just as long as I can remember the British Columbia lumber men have claimed a tariff on lumber because they declared they need it in order to build up a Canadian industry and to prevent unfair competition from Washington and Oregon to the south. Sometimes they got what they wanted, and sometimes they did not. But for many long years there has been more or less duty on lumber, and every homesteader who has gone into the West to build his little shack, every workingman who has constructed his little cottage, and every business man who has ventured to build, has gone down in his pocket and has paid tribute more or less in the shape of tariff protection to the lumber mills of British Columbia, for which, I presume, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre speaks in this House. Not being in favour of protection, I did not favour it. And there were others of the same mind. But we all had to pay, and among those who did pay were thousands of men and women who believed in building up Canadian industry and thought they were assisting it when they kept on the tariff.

Mr. H. A. MACKIE: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. GOULD: Yes.

Mr. MACKIE: How much longer is your chimney going to smoke?

Mr. GOULD: Fifteen or twenty minutes longer. Why, do you not like it? Things went on, and the prairie supplied the only market these lumber mills had. The prairies virtually built up their industry. Yet what do we see to-day? We find that, in spite of the protection given by the people of Western Canada for these long years, the lumber kings do not give a snap of their fingers for the welfare of the people who gave them that protection. We find the mills, on the other hand, would rather sell their product to the Italians, to the Germans, to anybody outside of the prairies, provided the foreigners can pay a higher price than the prairie farmers and the workingmen of Western Canada can afford to pay. We find, indeed, that the Canadian price to-day is not only a hundred per cent higher than it was five or six years ago, because these protected mills are shipping abroad, but we in the West also find that the Canadian price is a price actually based on the value of Canadian money plus the American exchange. That is one sample of just how much one protected industry cares for the interests of the people who give it protection.

In Regina, Winnipeg, Calgary, Saskatoon, and every other city, thousands of men and women, hard-working Canadians, are clamouring for some place to live, but they can find none because the price of building material, lumber among the others, is out of all reason. The man who has fought overseas has in many cases returned to Canada, frequently with his bride and more frequently still having married a Canadian wife; and these young people find themselves virtually without a roof over their heads, with a cold wintet staring them in the face, and there is no relief in sight for thousands of people who will need accommodation when the first of next November comes. Does anybody hear of any suggestion of relief from the protected lumber interests. Not much! The trade with foreign countries goes merrily on, and these patriots who a few years ago needed the protection of the Canadian people to enable them to build up Canadian industry care no more for the protection of the Canadian people who were generous to them than if these Canadian people never existed and never had a right. To show the ideas that are entertained by men engaged in the lumbering industry, I have here a clipping which contains certain statements that are credited to Mr. A. E. Clarke, a prominent lumber man, who stated in Toronto recently that even if the cost of production were to decrease at once lumber prices would not begin to come down for another two years. A telegram from Prince Albert intimated that prices there had increased 85 per cent in the last twelve months, with nothing like a corresponding increase in the cost of production.

Mr. STEVENS: Prince Albert is not in British Columbia.

Mr. GOULD: No.

Mr. STEVENS: It is in Saskatchewan.

Mr. GOULD: Yes. But that is not all. If any member of this House has been following the proceedings of a certain inquiry concerning lumber operations in the province of Ontario, he will have learned that a number of these lumbermen did not even pay their honest dues to the Government that gave them privileges, thus touching the public, both going and coming. And, strange as it may appear, many of these ultra-loyalists, the Divine Righters,—I am not referring to the press gallery—who needed the protection of the Canadian people to enable them to build up Canadian industries, to keep the trade away from the Yankees, are turning out to be Americans and not Canadians at all. I do not think any one in this House will accuse the farmers of being Bolsheviki in their tendencies. I do not think any one will say that we believe in seizing governments by unconstitutional means, as was charged in connection with the Winnipeg strike. Personally, I harbour no such belief. But at the same time I want to tell this Government that if this wholesale plundering of the people is not stopped, if the working people are to be deprived of places to live, while millionaire lumbermen demand the protection of the Canadian people and at the same time sell to foreigners cheaper than to their own people, and on top of that virtually rob the state of a large portion of the dues they should pay for their lumber, then this Government has not enough police in Canada to quiet the riots that will surely follow. I noticed by a statement in this House some time ago that this Government spent no less than $154,000 in costs to prosecute the Winnipeg strikers. That is a large sum, but perhaps it may have been well spent if it has taught this Government a lesson that the producers of this country have come to the point where they are going to demand a square deal, that the burden be removed from the shoulders of the poor and placed where it properly belongs, and that the manufacturers of Canadian lumber, implements and other things, have to play fair with the people whom they serve. If that is not done, then all the eloquence of the hon. member for Parkdale, of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre and of the hon. member for Fraser River will not prevent the people of this country from taking matters into their own hands to see that there shall be equity and justice all round.

I am only a young member of this House, and my experience and acquaintance is therefore limited. But in the short time I have been here the most remarkable thing that has impressed itself upon my mind is the number of members who sit in this House on the Government side and virtually plead for the special interests and the special business in which they are engaged. It is, to my mind, no particular crime for a member of this House to place before it the importance of his business if he has a good one, and to try to remove from the conduct of that business, if it be legitimate, any handicaps that may be placed upon it by government legislation. That is fair politics and fair business, but when manufacturers and men representing special interests in the country labor day after day in this House to extract special privileges from the government of this country and place the cost of those privileges upon the shoulders of the people of Canada, particularly upon the farmers, I am constained as an agriculturist to voice my emphatic protest.

Let me show the members of this house just how it works out so far as the agriculturist is concerned. Let me show those who have no interest to serve in this house save the interests of the people just how it works out. Let me suppose that I am a farmer and I want to embark upon farming within the prairie provinces. If I desire to build a little shack to keep out the cold, before I can do so I must pay some kind of a tariff upon the lumber secured from the friends of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre on the Pacific coast. If I get the shack and venture to exist, when I want a little fruit for breakfast, as is the wont of the well-fed manufacturers of this country, I must contribute something in the shape of tariff to make up the thirty cents per box that has brought about the political conversion of the hon. member for Fraser Valley, (Mr. Stacey). If, after breakfast, I start out to break up the homestead, I must first hand over something in the shape of a tariff on plows to my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). If I manage, in spite of all these handicaps, and all the uncertain elements, such as drouth, hail frost, and grasshoppers, to get something on the farm to cut, before I can cut it I must make a little donation in the shape of tariff on a binder for the benefit of the tall chimneys of Parkdale so ably represented in this House by my hon. friend from that constituency. If it so happens that, after a hard day's work, I need something in the shape of canned fruit to add something in the shape of spice to my frugal meal before I can enjoy that fruit I must pass along a little handout to the canners combine of this country, whose peach cans I have thought contain as much water as the stock, of the company that finds such an able exponent in this House in the hon. Member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor). If I happen to be fortunate enough to secure all these things, and get a crop besides, and desire to start out to haul that crop to market in the fall, before I am ready for the road and the cold, I must have some underwear to withstand the frost, but before I can secure it I find I must make some little contribution to the interests which send to this House the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Stewart) and the hon. member for Haldimand, the latter of whom, representing the dual interests of canners and knitters, also carries on a sort of a dual woollen business on both sides of the international boundary, and insists that I shall pay him a tariff when I buy his Canadian woollens, presumably to enable his Canadian factory to compete with his woollen mill across the line in the United States.

Should I happen to get through all this, and get the hired man started on his journey with a load of wheat to the elevator, if the wagon breaks down and I need a common, ordinary nail. I find that before the conveyance can be repaired or the trousers of the hired man hooked up in lieu of a button, we must go down and dig up something in the shape of a tariff tax for the hon. member for St. John and Albert (Mr. Elkin), who also has announced his conversion to a policy that, if I mistake not, is designed to maintain the protection on common nails, which will enter into the construction cost of every house and shack on the prairies during, perhaps, the next forty years.

But, if after all these taxes and misfortunates and handouts, the hired man manages to get his wheat to the elevator, if it happens that a farmer's elevator is not at that point, I find that I must sell my product at the price dictated by Liverpool and under the local conditions laid down by the elevator friends of the hon. member for Vancouver centre. Admitting that I get my wheat sold and a car of it on the way, I find that when it reaches the head of the Lakes or the Pacific Coast, it must again enter the storage terminals of the friends of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre or of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Keefer), and be stored there and shipped out under the conditions imposed by the elevator interests represented by these two gentlemen. And, if my grain happens to have a considerable amount of screenings, etc., due perhaps to the fact of the high cost of implements with which to clean it, I find that the stock food friends of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre purchase my screenings at their own price and at their own terms, make out of it fodder for my stock and ship it back to me and sell to me my own product at their own prices and upon their own terms. Upon the big volume of my wheat product, if it is to go down the lakes, I find that the moment it is read for shipment, it is placed on board the steamships of the interests represented so ably, and so infrequently, in this house by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), whose company, according to a statement I heard here a few weeks ago, started out with five millions in capital eight years ago and now has a plant that is being put into the big merger at an approximate valuation of $45,500,000.

Going a little further with my deductions, carrying the process to that logical conclusion that, in spite of everything, will eventually find a large number of farmers, after paying all these numerous tributes to the interests, in the shadow of the poorhouse, out on the street, as it were, I find that, if without a railway pass on which so many representatives of the interests travel, the farmer who goes broke must go down in his empty pocket, before he takes to the ties, and pay something in the shape of a tariff tax on boots to the interests represented in this House by the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Scott), and so ably sponsored for so long in Parliament by that eminent capitalist, Sir Herbert Ames, who has been carrying the glories of protected Canada to the impoverished peoples of darkest Europe.

I might go on and enlighten the House still further about the ramifications, both in this House and this country, of the interests to which the farmers of this country must pay tribute in some shape or form. If carried to a conclusion, there is absolutely no limit in this respect. But I will go no farther than to say that if the farmer of the prairie ships his wheat to Port Arthur before it can reach the Atlantic it must pass through the harbours that are kept clear by the dredges of the capitalistic friends of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, and if he ships it to the Pacific coast, it must pass through the harbours kept clear by the capitalistic friends of that hon. member. And, if I protest, if I complain of this multitude of tariff and other taxes, and of the conditions imposed upon me, the capitalistic friends of the hon. friend for Vancouver Centre have a newspaper at Vancouver and another at Winnipeg to tell both the public and myself that I do not know what I am talking about, and that I should be happy and contented under the spreading and protective mantle which they have thrown about me. The conditions which I have just outlined I would like to impress upon the mind of the Hon. Minister of the Interior. He is a Western man, though I regret to say that many years ago he forfeited any right he ever had to speak on behalf of the western people who have helped to make himself and others of his colleagues from the West. But there is a story going the rounds today, the truth of which I am in no position to confirm or deny, that he is angling for the Conservative, the Unionist or the Tory leadership, and that the capitalistic friends of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre are prepared to back him in his aspirations. What the outcome will be no one knows, but let me, through you, Mr. Speaker, put to the Minister of the Interior, who was so profuse with his questions in this House the other day, the plain query, whether or not, in the event of his succeeding to the leadership of the Tory party and the premiership of this Canada of ours, is he going to represent in this House the plain people of Canada or the capitalistic friends of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre?

One thing more that has occurred to my mind because of the remarks in this House by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee). He told us the other day that while the cotton interest, the textile and other big protected interests, were not touched by the new taxation, while they contribute nothing new and little old, while the long-suffering consumer must pay the whole shot, these beneficent industries designed to build up a great country and an army of happy, contented Canadian people, were actually paying their thousands of employees who make the commodities that we have been buying at such exorbitant prices, the munificent wage of something like $550 per annum. Let me put the question to the Minister of the Interior, as a western man who has done some denouncing of men who went on strike, let me ask him: does he think any man or woman in this country, or in his own cold section of Canada can live on $550 per annum—can they live in Winnipeg, in Montreal or in Valleyfield on $550 per annum, and still be healthy and decent? Let me ask him is he in favour of further protection to textile industries that show surpluses on watered stock of millions of dollars annually, and pay their men and women the magnificent, princely wage of $550 per annum? Let me ask him, too, does he tnink all his pleadings, his hair-splitting and his legal briefs can prevent the spread of discontent among the men and women who receive such wages and see such profits if this system is to be protected? And let me say to my hon. friend from Fraser Valley (Mr. Stacey) —who I honestly and sincerely believe would extend the sympathetic hand,—let me ask him does he think any woman in these days can remain healthy and decent and sufficiently well-clothed to withstand the cold on a wage of $550 per annum?

Mr. MACKIE (Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has been reading the whole of his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the point of order is well taken. The rule is very clear, and the hon. gentleman has certainly violated it most flagrantly.

Mr. GOULD: I am not in the habit of reading my speeches, but I thought tonight I would change my procedure because it has been such a common practice of late in the House. However, I will endeavour to continue my remarks without reading the manuscript.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is at perfect liberty to refer to his notes. He will also recall the circumstance that the rule on the subject is very clear, and when the attention of the Chair is directed to a violation of it no other course is open than to decide in accord with the established practice of the House.

Mr. GOULD: I will abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I have brought my remarks very nearly to a close but I wish to make a reference to a subject I spoke on before—a matter of railway extension. It would seem that when anything is desired from the Government it is very difficult for one to obtain it. I have pleaded in committee. I have pleaded in the House and I have pleaded by letter, to have a short stretch of nine miles of railway built through my district to carry sixty million tons of coal that we in the western plains want, and want badly, and for the lack of which hundreds of people are suffering each winter. The coal is there, and we would like to have it released and carried to the homes where it is needed. The construction of nine miles of railway will permit that coal to come out, and yet it seems we are to be denied. I quote this only as another illustration of why there is unrest throughout the country. The people read of big interests and the influence which they exercise. These interests say, "We will form a $500,000,000 steel merger, and we will come and ask Parliament for a double capitalization on this, that and the other thing," and always some one rises to speak in their behalf. I speak for the people in my district, and it seems a hard thing to be denied this little matter. The release of the coal in question will bring revenue to our own lines of railway. The thing that we need more than anything else in this country, in view of the deficit upon our railway operations is revenue. I know of no other business that will produce such a revenue to our railway system in that part of the West as the release and the carriage to its destination of that coal will bring. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Cowan) has also made a plea with respect to this matter, and therefore it cannot be charged that it has become political in any sense at all. My hon. friend knows the circumstances as well as I do. He has already pleaded for the construction of the small stretch of railway necessary to bring this coal out, and I desire to supplement his plea. My people are very much in earnest regarding this matter, and I want to say that in our part of the country the Government could not do a more popular thing than to listen, once at least, to the pleadings of the plain people. I have come here to speak for them, and I think if the Government fully understood the conditions,

I would not have to make so many repeated requests to have this simple justice done for my people.

The man from Assiniboia has spoken.

Mr. STEIN: On behalf of the Opposition I beg to move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

On motion of Rt. Hon. Mr. Doherty, the House adjourned at 1.45 a.m. (Tuesday.)

Tuesday, June 1, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 142 (from the Senate), for the relief of Jennie Wright.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 143 (from the Senate), for the relief of Alfred Charles Edwin Westley.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 144 (from the Senate), for the relief of George Orville Scott.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 145 (from the Senate), for the relief of John William Wallace.—Mr. Wallace.

Bill No. 146 (from the Senate), for the relief of Harry Davis.—Mr. Wallace.

Bill No. 147 (from the Senate) for the relief of Elizabeth Conway Murray.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 149 (from the Senate), for the relief of Frank Fulsom.—Mr. Fraser.

Bill No. 150 (from the Senate), for the relief of James Proudfoot.—Mr. Hocken.

INCREASED INDEMNITY — ALLEGED ROUND ROBIN.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER DENYING NEWSPAPER REPORT.

On the Orders of the Day:

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, some hon. members of the House have directed my attention to certain statements in the press to the effect that they had signed a round robin for increased indemnity, and that the attendance of hon. members on this side of the House had been affected because of non-compliance by the Government with their desire. So far as I am aware, no such round robin exists.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: At all events, I have never seen it nor heard of it—

Mr. BELAND: Nor have I.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:—except through the press reports to which I have alluded. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I have no reason to suppose, nor do I believe, that the attendance of hon. members on this side of the House has been in any way affected by reason of the cause assigned.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The only action taken by members of which I have personal knowledge is the fact that a certain number of gentlemen had an interview with me upon this subject about a week or ten days ago, at which a very non-committal answer was received from me.

NEWSPRINT SHORTAGE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. R. WILSON (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the Government the fact that about an hour ago I received a number of telegrams from my city in reference to the paper shortage. It is stated that the newspapers in Saskatoon will have to cease publication unless some arrangement is made to secure a supply of paper. I should like to know whether the Government have taken any action in the matter, and what they intend to do to relieve the situation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (Minister of Finance): The newspaper publishers of Canada have had a committee looking after the newsprint question, and negotiations have been under way with a view to obtaining necessary supplies for the newspapers. An agreement was reached last October under which the mills and the newspapers arrived at certain prices, not on the basis of Governmental paper control, but as a matter of ordinary business arrangement between the mills and the newspapers. That agreement provided not only for the supply of newsprint at a fixed price which had been agreed upon up to the end of June, but also for a supply for the Canadian press from then on at the usual trade rates as fixed by the pulp and paper manufacturers as applicable to the export trade. I regret very much to have to inform the House that last Saturday the newspaper publishers interested came to Ottawa and reported that they had been unable to provide for proper newsprint supplies and that there was grave danger of a large number of Canadian papers—some 27 in all—having to suspend publication, not because they were not willing to pay the price but because the commodity was not available for them. Telegrams have been sent out to the different manufacturers of newsprint and the matter will be taken up to-morrow morning with those manufacturers. I hope to be able to give my hon. friend more definite information after that meeting.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL: Has the minister suggested to the newspaper proprietors the propriety of reducing the size of their newspapers?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is a matter that has been considered by the newspapers. What the newspapers say is that the amount of newsprint that they use is negligible compared with the total Canadian output. They point out that the whole additional quantity that they require to carry on only amounts to two per cent of the export of the Canadian mills. What I mean by that is this: Contracts have been made to a certain extent with the Canadian papers and all that is necessary to keep these 27 newspapers going is the insignificant amount of two per cent of the export of our mills.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: I would like to say in regard to the matter that while the organization of the newspapers—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. If the hon. member wishes to submit a question to the Government he will be quite in order in doing so, but a debate cannot be entered on at this stage.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: Then I will ask: How is it that this association of newspaper publishers have secured contracts for themselves when they had agreed, or had taken the position, that no agreement was to be made unless all the papers were provided for? Now we hear that certain papers have been provided for and apparently the energy of the association has weakened. I want to point out to the minister that all the papers should be taken care of in this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is going beyond the limits of a question.

SUPERANNUATION OF MR. De CELLES, LIBRARIAN OF PARLIAMENT.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Maisonneuve): I hope I will not be indiscreet if I ask my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) in perfect good faith if the rumour is correct that the present King's Printer is to be promoted to the position of Librarian of Parliament and if the present Librarian, Mr. DeCelles, is to be superannuated. I wish to state further that all the lovers of Canadian literature, because Mr. DeCelles writes with equal fluency in English and in French, would be very sad indeed if he were superannuated. He is full of health and vigour and can render most valuable service to the Canadian people by his writings.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. DeCelles has been superannuated after a long period of creditable service extending over forty years. I understand he has arrived at the age of 76 years. Mr. Taché has been appointed Librarian.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: Was Mr. DeCelles superannuated at his own request?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. DeCelles was superannuated with his full consent.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: "At his request," and "with his consent," are two different things.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: With his consent.

Mr. FIELDING: Not at his request?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I cannot say that.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL: Is a new King's Printer to be appointed or is the position to be abolished?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The department of Public Printing and Stationery has been partly reorganized. The reorganization is still being carried on with immense advantage, as I believe, to the public interest, and with a very great saving to the public exchequer. Further information will be given at a later date.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is not my right hon. friend afraid that too many Cooks will spoil the broth?

Mr. GAUVREAU: May I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if any good ground has been given for asking Mr. DeCelles to give his place to Mr. Tache?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I have given the fact to my hon. friend. If any further information is desired on the subject, I would respectfully suggest to hon. gentlemen that they should put their questions on the Order Paper.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Mr. H. A. MACKIE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. A. MACKIE (East Edmonton): On Friday last some members of the House were putting questions concerning my absence and I find on page 2946 of Hansard the following:

Mr. ARTHUR TRAHAN (Nicolet): Mr. Speaker, although a member coming from the province of Quebec it affords me great pleasure to stay here at the week end—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. TRAHAN: —to take part in this debate. I do not see the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Mackie) present.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. TRAHAN: Where is he?

Mr. BELAND: Do not forget that to-day is Friday.

Mr. TRAHAN: Has the hon. member gone for a week-end trip? I leave the answer to the members of this House. As my hon. friend from Beauce (Mr. Béland) reminds me to-day is Friday and it is also fish day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member for East Edmonton has gone home.

Mr. Speaker, I was out of the city on public business of great importance to my constituency and the province of Alberta.

THE BUDGET.

DEBATE CONTINUED ON THE ANNUAL STATEMENT PRESENTED BY THE MINISTER OF FINANCE.

The House resumed, from Monday, May 31, the debate on the motion of Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at this late stage of the debate it will hardly be expected that much can be added by way of argument either for or against the proposals which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) has given to the House in the resolutions which accompanied his speech, or indeed either for or against the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding).

In the remarks I am about to address to the House I shall endeavour, therefore, not to go into particulars to any great extent in regard to the resolutions, but rather seek to emphasize in bolder outline than has been possible in the course of the discussion which has taken place, the differences in attitude and point of view which seem to separate hon. gentlemen opposite who are supporting the Budget from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who are supporting the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding).

But, before directing attention to the differences which exist between us and which have been so manifest in this debate, may I say just one word, with many others who have spoken, in regard to an opinion which we all hold in common and that is a word of congratulation to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) on the manner in which he has presented the Budget to this Parliament, on the arrangement of the Budget itself, the information it contains, and the purpose which he has had at heart in presenting it to the House. I think we all realize that upon the shoulders of the Minister of Finance at this session of Parliament there has fallen a burden heavier indeed than that which has fallen on the shoulders of any previous Minister of Finance. He has not only had to take account of the vast expenditures which have been incurred in the ordinary course of the increasing obligations of this country, but he has also had to take into account all the extraordinary expenditures which have to be met in consequence of the war. As my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's mentioned, in presenting previous Budgets during the period of the war, the Minister of Finance of the day has been able to count upon the sentiment of patriotism and enthusiasm throughout the nation to back up any suggestions he might propose to this Parliament. But now the war is past, and instead of the urge of patriotic endeavour the present Minister of Finance has the aftermath of the war to contend with and he has to present to the House in their stern reality conditions consequent upon the enormous expenditures which have been incurred in the last few years, the liabilities which they have involved and the herculean efforts in the matter of sacrifice which will be necessary before these obligations can be met. I think that in presenting the Budget in the manner in which he did, going fearlessly and fully into the liabilities of the country, not seeking to conceal in any particular our obligations or to make them appear less than they are, but presenting to us the facts in their true light and significance he has enabled us to comprehend the situation with which we are now confronted. For that reason, as well as for the splendid manner in which he presented the Budget itself, we owe him our hearty congratulations.

I think, too, that the hon. the Minister of Finance is to be congratulated on having professed at least a desire to accomplish certain things. He has said that he hopes that it will be possible in future to raise the revenue that is required without resorting to any further loans. Every hon. member, and every citizen of this country, will believe that that is a right, a proper, a good and a necessary policy. We may have little consciousness of the full extent of our liabilities, but we all do know that with these liabilities what they are, unless it is going to be possible to meet obligations out of current revenue we are heading towards an abyss of bankruptcy in this country from which it will be impossible to recede. So it is wholly to the public interest, it is wholly to the good of the nation, that the Government have determined—and indeed they would be culpably negligent if they did not so determine—not to have further public loans for the purpose of meeting our obligations.

The Minister of Finance, I think, has also been wise in intimating that he hopes to raise the required revenue by taxation upon luxuries rather than upon the necessaries of life. Whether or not his proposals will accomplish that end I shall deal with in a moment, but in so far as he is endeavouring to place the burden of taxation upon the shoulders of those who are best able to bear it, he is following the sound and proper line of finance.

I think he has been wise also in urging that so far as possible taxation should be in a direct rather than in an indirect form. Though it is not so pleasant a form of taxation, in the long run it is going to result in greater good to the country. It is right that we should know exactly what we are paying out so that we may take the course that is wisest both from a personal and from a public point of view.

So that in these particulars—in giving us a true statement of the facts, in promising that there shall be no further loans, in seeking to make taxation direct rather than indirect, in promising to place a tax upon luxuries, and also in recognizing that taxation upon incomes is a form of taxation that is preferable to that of indirect taxation—the Finance Minister's professions have been in the right direction, and I believe his purpose has been in accord with his professions.

But, Sir, if he has failed to accomplish his purpose, and if he has failed to carry out his intentions it is because he has found himself a member of a government which has a particular policy of its own for the raising of taxation, and he has been prevented from going as far as he would have liked in the direction he has professed. The fault and the criticism which we on this side have to find are not with the good professions and the good intentions of my hon. friend, but rather, that at this time in the history of Canada, at this time in the history of the world, the Government has as respects the Budget, done some things which it ought not to have done, and has left undone other things which it ought to have done. Sir, let me speak for a moment about the things which it has left undone and which it ought to have done.

My hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) spoke at considerable length about the necessity of economy and retrenchment. Nothing could be more deserving of praise than profession of economy and retrenchment, unless it be the practice of those virtues. But when we turn from the professions of my hon. friend to examine the practices of the Government of which he is a member, we find that we are a long way from seeing an earnest of that economy and retrenchment which he would have us believe is the motive which the Government has at heart. I shall not attempt now to mention the particulars in which the Government has shown a great indifference—I might almost say a wanton indifference—to extravagance in public expenditures, because these matters have been admirably dealt with in the many speeches made by hon. gentlemen on this side. I refer in particular to the speeches of my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster), my hon. friend from Guysborough and Antigonish (Mr. J. H. Sinclair), and my hon. friend from Chambly-Vercheres (Mr. Archambault) who spoke last night. If I might I would suggest that hon. members read these speeches carefully, and see wherein the Government has been extravagant and indifferent, and then take note of what has been said in reply by hon. gentlemen opposite. Why, Sir, some very strong accusations have been made against the ministry from this side of the House, accusations so strong that one could hardly believe that they could pass unchallenged for a single moment. But unchallenged they have passed up to the present time. I shall mention two or three of these things in order to give my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister, who has not yet spoken in this debate, or some of his colleagues who may speak on his behalf, if he himself does not speak, an opportunity of making an explanation concerning them.

First of all, take the expenditures for last year. I shall not go into the expenditures during the war period because we are all prepared to admit that those expenditures —however vast they may have been, however carelessly and recklessly they may have been administered in many particulars—are part of the war period which has passed, and that nothing will be gained by going at too great length into them. But we have a right to consider what has been done since the war, and especially have we that right in view of the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite, after promising that they would hold office only for the purposes of the war are retaining office now for the sake of office. We have a right to ask therefore—

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Will my hon. friend state when that promise was made, and by whom?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend asks me when the promise was made that the Government would retain office only for the purposes of the war, and by whom. My right hon. friend knows that I have not at hand at the moment the different speeches made by himself and his colleagues—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and he knows therefore that I am not in a position at the moment to quote chapter and verse, but I will give him this answer: The people of the Dominion, when they were listening to the speeches of the Prime Minister and of those who sit around him as his colleagues to-day were clearly and definitely under the impression that by their utterances they meant that they were forming the present coalition Government solely for the purpose of carrying on, and helping to win the war, and that when that purpose was accomplished the elements of which the ministry was composed would revert back into the natural groups from which they had come—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and that the people of this country would be given an opportunity of returning to power a government which would be in a position to frame peace policies for the period of reconstruction. May I say to my right hon. friend and to his colleagues that if, in the remarks they addressed to the people of this country at the time they were appealing to them for their support, they meant anything different; if they had in their hearts and in their minds what the Minister of Marine intimated yesterday he had in his mind, a mental reservation—if anything of that kind is conceivable it discloses the extent of the deception which they were practising upon the people of Canada at that time. What are words after all? The devil can quote Scripture for his purposes. It is the intention, it is the impression that you seek to convey, that counts; and hon. gentlemen opposite—both those of Conservative persuasion and those who at the time professed to be of Liberal persuasion—led this country to believe that the two parties should unite for the purpose of winning the war, and that when that purpose was accomplished they would go to the country and give the people a chance to return a representative parliament.

I am happy to think that there were at least some members of the Government who from a sense of honour felt it incumbent upon them to leave the Administration. On what ground? On the ground that they entered the Government solely for the purpose of winning the war, and on the distinct understanding that when that was accomplished their contract was completed and they were at liberty to retire. Those hon. gentlemen at least had no intention of deceiving the country; they at least had no doubts in their own minds as to what the people understood at the time—they have lived up to the professions they made and the pledges they gave.

Well, Sir, inasmuch as we have had from the question of the Prime Minister a further evidence of the intention of the Government—openly professed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) recently to hang on to office regardless of the wishes of the people, may I give reasons to the House and to the country why such an intention should be frustrated if it is at all possible to prevent this Government continuing to administer our national affairs?

One reason why an appeal should be made to the country is because these hon. gentlemen have the war habit of mind, and so long as they remain in office they will persist in it. What do I mean by "the war habit of mind"? It is the habit of mind which believes that everything should be done by the autocratic will of the ministry, regardless altogether of the wishes of Parliament; it is the habit of mind which allows lavish expenditures to be accounted for by chance. And I say to hon. gentlemen opposite, and more particularly to the people of Canada, facing as we are the great questions of the day, that so long as this present Administration remains in office, so long will that war habit of mind continue to actuate the Government in their management of public affairs, especially as regards extravagance in public expenditures.

What evidence have we of that tendency? As I have said I do not purpose to speak of the actual period of the war, but to take the post-war period. As an example I refer to the expenditure for the last current year as given in the Auditor General's Report. And in that connection let me develop the thought which my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) brought out so clearly last week. He showed that the addition to the public debt during this year of peace was $395,000,000, or more than $1,000,000 a day. That is the practice of hon. gentlemen opposite as contrasted with their professions of a desire for economy. Notwithstanding all our public debt we are faced with an increase of over $1,000,000 a day on the ordinary expenditures of the country. Such is the record of the Administration since the Armistice, as reported in the last volume of the Public Accounts.

Then take the record of the Government in regard to appointments—which are another prolific source of expenditure. We would have expected that with the large number of appointments made during the war period, there would have been, after the Armistice, a rigorous cutting down of those large war staffs. But we find, in answer to a question asked in this House as to how many appointments had been made to the permanent and temporary staffs of the Civil Service since the Armistice, that at the date the answer was given, several weeks ago, there had been added 4,176 permanent appointees and 22,954 temporary appointees, or a total of 27,130 added to the Civil Service list by the commissioners of the Civil Service during this peace period. In other words, 50 civil servants a day have been added to the Civil Service since the Armistice, or as my hon. friend said in presenting the information,—27 regiments of 1,000 each had been appointed by the Civil Service Commission in this period of peace. There is an example of the practice of hon. gentlemen opposite in contrast with their professions of economy and of retrenchment.

Then we have the moneys that have been unaccounted for,—and here is a statement that has been made from this side time and time again. The Auditor General's Report, brought down only two or three days ago, repeats the story contained in the reports of the two previous years, that a sum of $121,000,000 of public money paid out during the war, has been unaccounted for up to the present time, and that the Auditor General himself has been unable to get any explanation regarding this huge sum, although he has made request in writing for an accounting of it. There is the practice of hon. gentlemen opposite as contrasted with their professions.

In addition to the failure to account for moneys which have been paid out in accordance with the votes of Parliament, we have also instances of moneys used for purposes other than those for which they were appropriated by this House. That is a violation of one of the fundamental principles of Government: the control of parliament over the public expenditures. When Parliament votes a sum of money for a particular purpose, it is supposed to be used for that purpose. But according to the statements given to us in the Public Accounts money that was voted for the demobilization of our forces, in other words, money voted for military purposes for the security of this country, has been used for publicity purposes to help establish a press bureau which would be of service to hon. gentlemen opposite. There again we have a contrast of the professions of hon. gentlemen opposite with their practice.

Further, we have the indifference of the Government in the matter of requiring tenders for contracts. As has been stated here on several occasions, our laws require, in order to protect the public in matters of public expenditure, that when the Government is about to award contracts it shall call for tenders so that the lowest tenders may be accepted. We had recently an exhibition of that indifference in regard to one item which I shall mention—although I might mention a great many—the expenditure for the mercantile marine which is being built by the Government. Contracts amounting altogether to $70,000,000 were awarded, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) in defending his Estimates admitted on the floor of this House that in not a single instance had the Government called for tenders or sought to award those contracts by public tender. And what is true in the case of those contracts is true also of thousands of other contracts which have been awarded by the different departments of the Government—awarded with absolute indifference to the laws which have been placed on the statute book for the protection of the Treasury.

Then, again, we have the indifference of the Government to the supervision of Parliament in the matter of expenditure. As an instance I may cite the case that came up in the House last week in regard to the appointment of a minister plenipotentiary to Washington. Was Parliament given any opportunity to pass upon the expenditures that will arise in connection with that appointment? All we were told was that the Prime Minister himself had read the correspondence, and had had some one else read it, and that no member of this House should see a line of it, although already a contract had been entered into which will involve large expenditures, which expenditures the Government will force through this House by virtue of the majority at its command.

Then let me refer to the moneys which have been loaned to foreign countries. Last night we had a pretty strong indictment of some hon. members and their friends in regard to contracts awarded out of the credits extended to foreign countries. Some $70,000,000 or more have been loaned to countries like Roumania and Greece for the purpose of enabling them to buy supplies of various kinds. Whether or not these credits are worth anything remains to be seen; but it was shown conclusively last night by the hon. member for Chambly-Vercheres (Mr. Archambault) that the Government had not hesitated to ask companies of which some hon. members on the other side are members or officers to supply goods to these countries, and had not hesitated to pay handsome sums from the public treasury for such goods sent abroad on the credit of the Dominion. That is a form of procedure which, possibly, can be defended by the letter of the law, but I ask my hon. friends opposite: in their efforts with regard to charity, where should charity begin in times such as these if not at home? We have need of economy; we have need of retrenchment in every particular. Instead of spending money lavishly and without the security that is necessary, the Government owes it to the people of this country to see that every dollar that goes out of the public treasury, spent for materials of any kind, is spent wholly and absolutely in the public interest.

Then, I might refer also to the Estimates of the present year, but it would take considerable time to go into the details. Members on this side have referred to item after item that we could well afford to cut down. Surely no member of this House would have found any fault with the Estimates of the Department of Militia and Defence had they been at a lower figure this year than they were a year ago. But what is the difference? We are called upon this year to vote $4,000,000 more for the Department of Militia and Defence than we were asked to vote last year. Is that going in the right direction? I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance: Is that retrenchment? Is that the economy of which he approves?

Mr. CURRIE: May I put a question to the hon. gentleman? How does the vote for Militia and Defence this year compare with the vote for the year immediately preceding the war?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has asked me for a comparison between this year and the year before the war. He knows that I have not the figures with me as to the period before the war, but if I had, that would not affect matters one way or the other. The figures that are important are those which indicate which way we are tending. Are we going in the direction of economy, or have we since the war been going in the direction of increased expenditure? The figures of the Auditor General's Report show that whereas last year we spent a sum which was fairly large on Militia and Defence, this year the Government are asking us to spend an additional $4,000,000 on that account. I say to my hon. friends opposite that if they had come down to the House with four millions struck off the amount of last year, they would have fulfilled to a better degree the wishes of the people of this country.

So Mr. Speaker, while we can compliment the minister on his fair professions and good intentions, we cannot do other than condemn the Government on its record in the matter of economy and retrenchment as having moved entirely in the wrong direction. Just to summarize what I have said: the Government has vastly increased the ordinary expenditure—increased it by over a million dollars a day according to the last statement brought down. It has vastly increased the appointments, both temporary and permanent, to the Civil Service—increased them at the rate of fifty civil servants a day. It has left unaccounted for $121,000,000 or more of public moneys which have been paid out. It has spent money for purposes for which it was not appropriated by Parliament. It has spent public money on contracts without calling for tenders in accordance with the law of the country. It has given money in loans and credits to foreign countries on very doubtful security and in a manner which will help its own friends rather than further the best interests of this country.

And, instead of decreasing the public expenditure for the current year, it has shown in many particulars a tendency to increase the expenditure and to be indifferent to the necessity of retrenchment. That is one count which we have against hon. gentlemen opposite.

But, Sir, looking further at the Budget; looking at the resolutions which my hon. friend has brought down, may I say perfectly frankly to him that what we most object to in his Budget is that it protects privilege and war profiteers instead of protecting the consumers of this country? We had expected, at this time of all times, a people's Budget; we have instead a profiteer's Budget; that is apparent when we come to analyse it. I say that for this reason: when we study the incidence of this taxation we find that in practically everything the minister has proposed there are increased burdens placed upon the consumers, not the upper classes, so-called, but the middle or poorer classes; and there is, on the other hand, a careful protecting and safeguarding of those who are in a position of privilege in this country.

We had a right to expect, having regard to the professed desire of hon. gentlemen opposite for economy, some statement from the Minister of Finance to the effect that the Government had devised machinery whereby the people throughout the country who had failed to pay their income tax in the last year or two would be obliged to make good their failures. We all know that the income tax has not been collected as fully and carefully as it should have been. Last summer, at the convention which the Liberal party held in this city of Ottawa, a resolution was passed, which was brought to the attention of the Government—a resolution condemning the Government for the non-enforcement of the income tax law. It was in these words:

> This Convention condemns the Government because it has not enforced the income tax law in such a manner as to make it produce the revenue which such a tax should produce if properly collected.

The Government, Mr. Speaker, had that resolution before it. The Minister of Finance knew that that criticism was being made, not by one political party only, but by people generally throughout the country. As I have said, we had therefore, reason to expect and hope that when the Minister of Finance came down with his Budget he would also come down with the announcement that as respects the men and possibly some women in this country who had not paid the income tax, the Government had devised machinery under which all arrears of taxation would be carefully and fully collected.

Not only have the Government safeguarded some of their friends in that particular; but in regard to war time wealth, the wealth which was accumulated during the period of the war, have they had one word to say in the Budget proposals? One would never know that a single man had made an extra dollar during the period of the war, from what has been said by the Finance Minister in his address or by what is indicated in his Budget. There are several reasons why the Government should have taken account of war time wealth—that is to say, wealth that was made in the period of the war, out of the war, as a consequence of the sacrifices and of the necessities of the people during that time. I say there is more than one reason why the Government should have taken note of that. The first reason is that the Government should have been taking account of it during the war; the Government while the war was going on should have been making some effort to secure from those who were profiting and profiteering during that period sums of money which would help to meet the expense of war. That was not done. Every day of delay means increased difficulty in reaching that particular source of wealth. By not introducing a resolution this session in regard to war time wealth, the Government make it increasingly difficult, if not almost impossible, to reach that source of wealth at any subsequent session or at any subsequent time. And my hon. friends tell us that they are going to stay in office for another couple of years—stay in office for another couple of years and further protect during that period those who have profited so largely during the war.

But, Sir, there is a third reason why the Government should have made some effort to collect from those who profited during the period of the war, and that is that such a course as that is only right and just. Think of it, Mr. Speaker; think of vast fortunes being amassed during the period of the war, when men were giving their lives and incurring sacrifices in the service of the country. Think of the Government allowing the heaviest burdens to rest on the shoulders of the people generally, on the shoulders of those who already have endured great sacrifices, and not seeking to lighten those burdens by making a levy on war fortunes. It would be better for every man who has made a fortune out of the war to give that fortune over to the State. It would be a thousand-fold better for him, for his children and for his children's children were he to do that, for I can see no good that will come to any home or family that gains a new status and builds up a new place in society out of fortunes that have been reaped through the blood of men and sacrifice of human lives.

I shall not trust to my own words to express the indignation which I believe the people will feel in regard to this indifference on the part of the Government. Let me read the words of a well-known Canadian woman, one who is greatly interested in social and industrial questions, a speaker of great ability, and one whose voice has been heard championing many causes of right, justice and popular liberty. I find in one of the May numbers of this year—I have not the exact date—of the Calgary Albertan, this article:

> Government which conscripted life has not proved strong enough to conscript the war wealth. Mrs. Nellie McClung—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: I hear some hon. gentlemen opposite laughing. Some day they will listen to Mrs. Nellie McClung, and to the voice of the women on whose behalf she is speaking:

> Mrs. Nellie McClung, the noted authoress, of Edmonton, was asked by The Albertan yesterday to give her opinion of the new taxes proposed in the Budget and last evening wired the following:
>
> The money has to be raised, of course, and, personally, I can do without silk stockings and georgette blouses, but I did hope that some of the war debt could be dug out of the war profiteers and the people who boldly proclaimed that they were not "running their business for the glory of God." The new taxes will not be any hardship for those. They will simply add it to the price of their products, and let the people pay, as usual. But it will bear heavily on the salaried and professional people, who are now burdened to the limit. To them it will mean a further lowering of the standards of living, and they will become more than ever the new poor. I would have liked to see the Government make drastic reduction in the tariff, and cease to protect wealthy manufacturers, sugar people and others and show a real strength in throttling the big interests. The present Budget does not aim to do this. I am disappointed. I thought a Government that felt strong enough to conscript life would be strong enough to do anything.

That is the view of a woman in regard to the attitude which the Government have taken in protecting those who have made vast fortunes out of the war and in throwing the burden of taxation upon the common people.

Let me give another voice, the voice of the men who served overseas, as stated by the president of the Great War Veterans' Association. Hon. members have doubtless noticed that within the last few days the Great War Veterans' Association have been considering the effects of this Budget; they have felt so exasperated at the attitude taken by the Government in intimating they intend to hold on to office irrespective altogether of the views of any class of people in this country, that the Great War Veterans' Association are now sending to the different branches of their organization communications indicative of the attitude of those who hold executive positions, and asking that resolutions be passed telling the Government that the time has come for them to get out of office.

But what do the Great War Veterans say in regard to these taxes? This is a quotation from a message sent by Mr. R. B. Maxwell, Dominion President of the Great War Veterans' Association of Canada, to all branches of his association urging them to call mass meetings for the purpose of demanding a general election. In this message he gives the reasons why the Great War Veterans think a general election is desirable. This is what he says in particular reference to the Budget that has been brought down:

> Parliament now requires that those who served in the war shall share in the payment of the major portion of the war debt despite the fact that war-accumulated wealth remains practically unmolested.

There, in one sentence, is the charge which they make against hon. gentlemen opposite. In this Budget which the Government have brought down, the Government have left war-accumulated wealth practically unmolested.

Lest it may seem that I am going a little far in suggesting that war-accumulated wealth should be held as a first charge for meeting expenditures which have arisen out of the war, may I give to the House a few extracts from a memorandum submitted, not by any special committee chosen for any special purpose, but by a department of the British Government to a committee of the British House of Commons in regard to this question of war wealth? I do this just to illustrate the nature of the sources from which it might be possible to draw in helping to meet the vast expenditures with which the country is confronted at the present time. The memorandum was submitted by the Board of Inland Revenue of the British Government to the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Increases of Wealth. It is published in printed form and is available for distribution. It is an expert official judgment by a government department of proved efficiency. I should like hon. members to notice this statement in regard to the particular subject with which I am dealing. What is spoken of in particular is not a levy on capital, but a levy only on that particular wealth which was derived in consequence of and out of the war. The British Government, through their Board of Inland Revenue, have facilities for ascertaining the total wealth of many of the people of England, and it is upon the statistics which have been gathered by the British Government that the following figures are given. This will indicate how private fortunes have increased during the war:

4 p.m.

> Before the war the aggregate amount of private fortunes in the United Kingdom was estimated at about eleven thousand million pounds. After the war Dr. J. C. Stamp, who is our leading statistical authority on these matters—

That is the English statistical authority:

> —estimated the aggregate net increase in current market values at five and a quarter thousand million pounds, or nearly 48 per cent. The Board of Inland Revenue, going more minutely into the data, under slightly different conditions, puts the aggregate net increase in value between June 30, 1914, and June 30, 1919, at no more than four thousand million pounds, or 36 per cent. Of this "war-time wealth," one-third is supposed to be in the hands of people whose increase in fortune is less than 5,000 pounds; and among these about 170,000 persons (including families, say 1 per cent of the community) are from 3,000 pounds to 5,000 pounds richer than they were.
>
> Two-thirds of the aggregate net increase, or nearly three thousand million pounds, is computed to be in the hands of 340,000 persons (including families, say 2 per cent of the community), whose total post-war wealth is put at 9,100 million pounds. No less than 6,000 million pounds of our present wealth, being two-fifths of the whole, is possessed by 73,500 individuals, each owning more than 25,000 pounds, who have secured among them over 2,000 million pounds of the increase, or half the total "war-time wealth." Thus is body given to the popular vision of "war profiteers"!
>
> The 280 among them who now own more than a million pounds apiece have managed to get no less than 200 millions of war-time increase, which has raised their aggregate possessions to close upon 600 million pounds sterling.
>
> Two out of every hundred families own two-fifths of all the private property of the nation; and to this two per cent has accrued two-thirds of the aggregate increase in wealth during the past five years. Those among them whom the Americans would call millionaires (viz. the 3,600 owning each at least a quarter of a million pounds) have taken no less than 700 million pounds of the increase.

Those figures show how individual fortunes increased in England during and in consequence of the war. The Inland Revenue Board of the British Government has sought to ascertain, if the Government were to make those who had made such large fortunes out of war profiteering give part of their fortunes to the State, how far it would be possible to meet the obligations of the war in that way. What do they find? On a scale averaging 25 per cent the Board of Inland Revenue sees its way to raise no less than £1,000,000,000, which would enable the Government to pay off more than one-eighth of the whole national debt, or, alternatively, to discharge its entire indebtedness to other countries. Now, my reason for quoting that statement is this: If in Great Britain during the period of the war enormous wealth has been amassed in the hands of a few people through profiteering is there not reason to believe that in this Dominion of Canada large fortunes have been amassed by a few individuals in much the same way? I ask, therefore, is it not a thoroughly sound and just and right and proper principle that if men, starting out with privilege in the first instance, have been able during the period of the war to amass great fortunes, at least a percentage of those fortunes should go into the public treasury at this time instead of having the consumers carry the extra burden? I would not say that the Government should confiscate all that wealth. They were ready enough to conscript human life; well, I do not ask them to be equally ready to conscript wealth, but I do say that where vast fortunes have been made by reason of the war, and men and women and children are suffering under the deplorable conditions that have resulted from that war, the Government owe it to the people of the country to see that something at least is contributed in a substantial way from this source which will help to reduce the public debt at this time. It is amazing, Mr. Speaker, when we come to consider the questions that affect human life and material wealth, how indifferent men are to the sacredness of life and how careful they can become in guarding and safeguarding material possessions, as though wealth were in any way comparable with life.

I repeat, Sir, that hon. gentlemen opposite owe it to the people of this country to see that further burdens are not placed on the shoulders of those who are struggling as hard as they possibly can for very existence. At least, the Government should not add to the burdens the people have had to bear until they have taken some part of the great fortunes that have been made as a result of profiteering during the period of the war. We know, Sir, that there was profiteering. A committee of this House has examined the fortunes that have been made by individual men, and we have the records of this Parliament to show to what extent those fortunes were increased as a consequence of profiteering. Are we going to build the future of Canada on any policy that will help to protect mainly those who have great wealth, and build up an aristocracy of wealth in Canada while the great mass of the people struggle on day after day, making their livelihoods as best they can? That really is the question which is fundamentally at issue in this Budget. Sir, it is a question of the people versus the profiteer, and my objection to the Budget as brought down is that it is a Budget which is designed to protect the profiteers and not the people of Canada.

There is one point I should much like to develop in regard to the justice of causing a portion of this vast wealth accumulated during the war to be turned over to the public treasury, and it is a consideration which I think is an all-important one in matters of political economy. We are inclined to attribute these vast fortunes to individual initiative, to the great skill of individual men, to the foresight and directing or managerial capacity of individuals. Now, I am prepared to give every credit to managerial ability; I am willing to concede due credit to the man who is able to bring into combination the forces that are needed for the successful furthering of production and into that relationship which will help to make them productive and beneficial to the maximum of their potentialities. But let me point out, Sir, that managerial ability of itself can accomplish nothing. You can have all the managerial ability in the world, but what can it do without labour to assist it? What can it do without the community and the part which the community plays? What can it do without capital—capital not always derived from special sources only, but very often from the savings of the masses of the people accumulated by banks and loaned out by the banks to different industrial concerns? All these factors are essential to the production of wealth. The various factors in the production of wealth are the natural resources of the country, capital, labour, managerial ability and, pre-eminently and above all else, the community in its different organized capacities. Sir, it is the community that controls the natural resources from which all wealth is ultimately derived. It is the community that carries on and maintains Government. It is the community that maintains law and order and promotes trade through its consular and diplomatic services. It is the community that fosters banks, railroads, and transportation enterprises. It is the community that aids invention. It is the community that carries on the work of education. It is the community that creates the demand for the commodities that are sold. It is the community that makes possible returns to capital and labour. Now, if the community does all these things as its contribution to the creation of wealth, has not the community, through its representative the Government, a right to some of the wealth which it helps to accumulate?

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my hon. friend will wait until I am through, when I shall be pleased to answer any questions he may ask. At present, I desire to continue this argument. I have said that the reason we take exception to the Budget which my hon. friend has brought down is the fact that it does not recognize these great public needs, these great public rights. It has lost sight altogether of what the profiteers owe to the community and to the State at this particular time, especially in view of the conditions that have been developing during the past few years.

Sir, I wish also to say that another reason for our exception to the Budget is that it reveals the outstanding fact that the Government has no policy for dealing with the high cost of living. Mr. Speaker, if there is any question which is paramount in Canada to-day, and which transcends all other considerations, it is the important question of the high cost of living. We could not expect hon. gentlemen opposite to solve that question. Certainly not; but we at least had a right to expect that they would take some step towards a solution of the problems which the high cost of living involves, and that they would have had some suggestion to offer which would, if adopted, have helped to relieve the burdens which men, women and children in this country are bearing to-day. But what have they done? Instead of alleviating the high cost of living as it affects the great mass of consumers they have added to it. They have increased the cost of living and made it more difficult for the people of Canada to live than it has been heretofore. To an invisible tariff they have added a visible tariff on a great multitude of commodities, thereby increasing the cost of living to the vast body of consumers. From one end of Canada to the other, in every home, there has been considerable difficulty in coping with the situation. Go where you will, you will find this the baffling problem that taxes the ingenuity of the great majority of the people. As I say, Mr. Speaker, instead of meeting the high cost of living as it was obviously the duty of the Government to have met it, by reducing the tariff on the necessaries of life, they have added this visible tariff in the nature of an excise to the invisible tariff which already exacts its toll from the people in regard to commodities in general use.

But they have done more than that. They have not been satisfied with merely adding one tax but they have heaped tax upon tax on many of the necessaries of life that enter into daily consumption.

So far as this Budget affects luxuries, we can heartily endorse all that the Government proposes. It is proper that luxuries should be taxed and taxed just as much as they will stand, but, as has been pointed out by one hon. member after another on this side of the House there are many articles, such as boots and shoes, clothing, the different articles required in the daily food of poor people, canned goods for example, which are taxed and over taxed. Consider this excise tax in relation to the cost of living. Take clothing for instance. The cloth say is brought from the Old Country, and on it a tariff tax is paid when it enters Canada, a tax which is based on the par rate of exchange, although the pound sterling has fallen in purchasing value. The result is that instead of the tax being paid on the actual value of the commodity, it is levied on the higher arbitrary rate, which results in additional protection being given to the Canadian manufacturer on this particular article. Then when that commodity gets into the hands of the wholesaler or of the manufacturer who passes it to the wholesaler, an excise tax is levied not merely on the value of the commodity itself but also on the extra taxes that have been put upon it. Upon passing from the wholesaler to the retailer another excise tax is placed upon it and then, from the retailer to the consumer, yet another tax is placed upon it. By the time this commodity, in the nature of a necessity, reaches the consumer, it is carrying not only its own value but tax upon tax upon tax and that is the way the Government is solving the problem of the high cost of living. We find that under this Budget the consumer not only has to pay the tariff on many necessaries of life, but his burden is added to by these different excise taxes.

There is another ill effect which the Budget is going to have on the poorer people in this country in that it is going to encourage the manufacture of shoddy goods. Quality is quite as important as quantity and there is probably no way in which you can hit a man harder than to give him poor value for his money. It will be recalled that Charles Kingsley in describing shoddy material, used the term "cheap and nasty." The poor man who has a hard enough struggle already to provide food and clothing for his children will feel that he cannot afford this extra tax and will be forced to buy this wretched shoddy material.

Instead of caring for and protecting the consumers the Government have left them to their fate. One thing I was surprised to see in regard to this matter was that while a tax is put upon the goods obtained by the consumer there is no tax upon the goods that are being sent out of the country. Why? Because in that instance it helps the manufacturer. He, not the consumer, is the chief consideration with the Government. Again, the more you export out of the country, the less there is for the consumer. Look it all over and you see all along the line the interests of the privileged classes carefully taken care of while the interests of the great bulk of the people have not been safeguarded.

But not only has the Government failed to make any contribution towards the solution of the high cost of living, it has shown its absolute incapacity to bring down any proposal, or to denote any policy in the Budget to assist in securing increased production. We have heard hon. gentlemen opposite get up in turn and say that the only salvation of the country is increased production; that it is only by increased production we can solve the high cost of living, and get the money to meet high taxation. Yet in the Budget proposals there is nothing to further that increased production which is needed most of all. To increase production you must take some of the duties off necessaries and thus lower the cost of living. Then you will make men happier, more ready to work, more ready to put their zeal into the particular lines of production in which they are engaged. But you must also take the duties off the instruments of production. The Government has not done this. It has not taken any duties off the necessaries of life; it has not taken any duties off the instruments of production. On the one hand, it has no policy to cope with the high cost of living and on the other it has no policy to bring about increased production, which through reduction of duties on the necessaries of life and on the instruments of production is demanded on every side. It is demanded by all classes of people in this country.

Go where you will in Canada to-day and you will find that people are not getting the necessaries of life such as food, clothing and shelter, in the quantities in which they should be able to secure them. Take a young man or woman making his or her own way in the world, starting out in life. Is it good public policy, is it in the interest of human well-being that struggles should be made more difficult than necessary for these young people? If in any way the Government can help to make possible an increase in the number of homes it will be contributing to the happiness, contentment and prosperity of the country. Take homes that are already established in the crowded cities, Montreal and Toronto, for instance, where you have one house close against another or one tenement above another; or in the lonely regions whether on the prairies or in the recesses of the mountains where you have isolated homes; or in those more favoured localities where there is neither overcrowding on the one hand nor isolation on the other; in almost every one of these homes, whether you find there only two persons living together, or a large family, or three generations, you will find the joys of home life diminished, and anxieties increased, by reason of the great advance in the cost of living. The one thing necessary is, for the Government to do what lies in its power to bring relief from that anxiety, to make possible a greater degree of happiness and comfort than now exists. This it can only do by making possible greater production in those basic industries which provide what is necessary in the way of food, clothing, and shelter.

Take the requirements of industry itself. What is all industry? Industry is nothing other than the transformation of natural resources, through a variety of processes, into commodities and services available for human use. It starts with the great basic industries of agriculture, fishing, lumbering, mining. These primary basic industries are those that have to be developed in the first instance. After their development, whatever of wealth is produced from that original source becomes converted by further processes of transformation—through the application of labour, and through the application of tools and machines, to assist in furthering production—into commodities and services of one kind and another available for human use. One result is: that unless you make possible the increase of production in the basic industries to the largest extent possible you are only handicapping all the subsequent processes and the ultimate development of wealth. So we say that in regard to the instruments of production applied to the natural resources of the country, there should be as little in the way of handicap as it is possible to have. The more readily available the instruments of production are, the greater will be the wealth produced from those primary industries; and as greater wealth is produced from the primary industries so will greater wealth be available for the secondary industries, and consequently available to the consumer of commodities. In that way the volume of trade will be increased and the volume of prosperity will also be increased. That is why it is so important that in an effort to increase production the Government should have brought forward some constructive policy.

I can imagine my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, saying when I suggest that some of the war-time wealth might be taxed, "It is poor policy to tax capital, because capital is the goose that lays the golden eggs." Well, I can appreciate his not wishing to tax capital, but I wonder if it has occurred to hon. gentlemen opposite that if there is one form of capital that is most essentially capital it is the instruments of production that are used for carrying on further production. Instruments of production for the basic industries are the real capital that is necessary along with labour, to create further wealth; and as long as customs duties are kept on the implements of production of the basic industries so long you are simply taxing the capital that is necessary to produce further wealth.

Now, not only is it in the interest of industry generally that there should be the utmost freedom of production in the primary industries but it is especially in the interest of the manufacturing industries. As I have said the wealth that is to be used or further transformed in manufacturing, has to come in the first instance from these primary industries. If it is not obtained there it cannot be obtained at all. As it is increased in volume there, so it will increase the volume of these other industries. There is also this further circumstance: Wages have been going up, salaries have been going up. They cannot go up indefinitely if our manufacturers are to hope to be able to compete with the manufacturers of other countries. There are real wages and there are nominal wages. Nominal wages are what a man gets in terms of money; real wages are what he can buy with his money. If real wages are not increased a man is no better off no matter how much he gets in the way of increase in nominal wages; and real wages will increase only as the necessities of life become more plentiful and it becomes possible to obtain, at lower cost, the food, the clothing and the warmth and shelter that is necessary. As these things become available in larger quantities so will a man's real wages increase. Now if manufacturers, if the owners of transportation systems, if those who employ men at wages and on salaries hope to be able to meet the world competition it will only be by so increasing the development of the natural resources of the country and the basic industries that wealth will be made more and more plentiful, and that thereby it will be made possible for the wage-earning and the salaried classes to obtain what is needful through the real wages which they receive.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the same increase is equally desirable in the interests of trade and commerce. It is not less in the interest of increased production and manufacturing than in the interest of trade and commerce, that there should be a large volume of trade. I think I am perfectly right when I say that in trading profits are made not on the price but on the volume of trade. It is the turn-over that counts—and the greater the number of transactions, the better it will be for the man who is fortunate enough to be carrying on a particular business. Now what is the effect of the taxation which the Government is proposing? It is for the most part in the nature of a restriction upon trade; it is making it more difficult for those who are engaged in trade and commerce to carry on their commerce in the volume to which they were formerly accustomed. The turn-over will not be what it hitherto has been. And if the turn-over is checked at one point it is going to check the man further down; and so instead of making for prosperity, the effect of any taxation that restricts development in trade is simply to turn back the hands of the clock, to hamper the production of the real sources of wealth from which all wealth is ultimately to come. I might go at some length into the requirements of trade and commerce in that regard, but I think the point as stated will be sufficient of itself.

Let me, however, develop this further thought—an all-important one at this time—that development of the basic industries of this country is absolutely necessary on the score of a wise, economic development of the future of industry and trade in Canada. The kind of wealth and the kind of production is just as important as the quantity of production, and in many respects more important. Statistics will show unmistakably that in Canada the trend has been relatively away from production in agriculture to the production of commodities along other particular lines. In other words, instead of fostering a natural development in industry in this country, the Governmental policies in Canada have been fostering a highly artificial trend in development. We have been building up cities and towns at the expense of rural life. That is something that cannot be denied; and I say that that is not only against the interests of rural life but is against the interests of the manufacturers, it is against the interest of all who live in cities and towns.

Let me give the House a few statistics in this regard as to the development of Canada in the last few years. We have not available any census statistics other than those taken in 1901 and 1911, but they show that in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick between those years the urban population had increased very considerably while in those provinces and Prince Edward Island the rural population decreased materially. In Quebec the urban population increased in that period by 314,383, while the rural population increased by only 39,951. In old Ontario the urban population increased by 392,511 in 10 years, or a total of 1,328,489, but the rural population actually decreased 52,184 in the same period, leaving a total of 1,194,785. This tendency for the urban population to increase at the expense of the rural has been greatly intensified in the province of Ontario during the period of the war owing to the artificial stimulus given to industries connected with the war.

In the western provinces, which are rural above everything else, in 1901, taking the provinces together, 75.39 per cent of the population was rural, and 24.61 was urban; while in 1916—there is a later census in the West—the figures are 64.31 per cent for the rural population and 35.69 per cent for the urban. This is an abnormal and unhealthy division of population where 15 per cent of the available agricultural land is not yet under cultivation.

The census of 1911 shows that the urban population of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta increased 92 per cent in ten years; but the rural population increased only 52 per cent. The census of 1916 shows that this tendency towards expansion of the cities has increased. In Saskatchewan the rural population decreased from 84.37 per cent to 72.79 per cent between 1911 and 1916.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the significance of those figures is very great indeed. What is needed at the present time above all else? During the war the cry that went out to the world was first, for more men; then the cry was, for more munitions; then for more ships; then for more food, and more food, and more food. And it is the cry for more food that the world is hearing to-day. It was the lack of food that ultimately brought the German and Austrian armies to their knees. It was starvation that ended the war as effectively as anything else. To-day the need of the world above all other things is for increased quantities of food, and the problem of the high cost of living will never be solved until there is that increase. Yet these statistics that I have read show that the trend in this country during the last couple of decades has been all in one direction: Increasing the demand for food in the urban centres, while reducing relatively the numbers of those who are capable of producing food in the rural districts. I cannot but believe that a development of that kind is certain to be inimical to any country in the long run, and that it is not a wise national policy which abnormally stimulates development in one direction, while retarding it in a direction which seems all-important from the national point of view.

The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) I think recognized that this would be one of the most difficult arguments for him to meet in the course of his campaign on behalf of the special interests, and he undertook to tell us the other day that it was no use trying to deal with this movement from the country into the towns, that civilization was tending that way, that it was inevitable. I think we get the crux of the situation in the attitude we take towards this problem if we really believe that it is in the interests of national development to be indifferent to this movement away from the land to the urban centres, that it is the urban centres that must at all costs be developed at the expense of the rural districts, why, certainly we are likely to advocate a policy that will further that end. But, on the other hand, if we believe that the interests of both the rural and the urban centres will be best served by keeping a maximum number of people on the land to produce the necessaries of life in as large quantities as possible, then our views towards the fiscal and other great problems of the country will be determined accordingly. Let me read what the Minister of the Interior said in regard to this development. His remarks will be found in the unrevised Hansard of May 25, at page 2774:

> But, this diminution which has come to Canada, to the United States and to every country in the world—and it is terribly aggravated in Great Britain by reason of their fiscal policy, undoubtedly,—this general diminution in rural population is inevitable; no change of policy can ever alter it. Why? Well, it seems to me that the reason is obvious. The farmer produces food; that is the great product to the turning out of which he applies his energy. As the world advances in population, people do not eat any more food individually; the need of food increases just as the population advances and no more. But as civilization advances the other needs and indulgences of mankind multiply an hundredfold. Transportation needs, clothing needs, entertainment needs, all these requirements advance by leaps and bounds, whereas food remains relatively stationary. Consequently a larger proportion of the world's people are engaged in making these other products and rendering these other services than are engaged in the growing of food. Do what we will, we would be foolish to try to beat back logic itself, and the whole trend and movement of the age.

That is a hopeless attitude to adopt, and I am surprised that one who is usually so careful in following out an argument to the last point should have slipped into some of the errors which my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) has made in that statement. He says that the people's demand for food has not increased, but that their demand for clothing has, and that that is something we need more and more of as we go along. Well, I would ask my hon. friend: Where is the wool and where is the cotton to come from which are so essential for clothing unless from the products of the farm?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman will see that I used the word "mainly." That, I said, was "mainly" the product of the farm. It is true that the raw wool is also, but it would be a stretch of the imagination to believe that cotton is a product of the farms of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend was not speaking of Canada alone, he was speaking also of the United States and of England. I would like to bring to the attention of my hon. friend that all the things essential to life—food, clothing, shelter, warmth—are derived from the basic industries—agriculture, mining, lumbering, fishing. These things are fundamental. When we follow out what my hon. friend has said, what does it come to? That the thousands of men going into the different callings of transportation, of mercantile life, and other city activities mean that so many more men have to be fed in the urban centres and that fewer men remain in the country to supply the needs of the augmented urban population. That is what it comes to, this artificial development; society is making less possible all the time the production of the necessary commodities in the required quantities. I can see nothing but misfortune for any nation or any country that permits a development of that kind to proceed. My hon. friend spoke about England and talked about the increase in the slums. He pointed out that there was a great deal of unemployment in these slum areas of the cities. Well, that is an inevitable effect of the turning of development from the land into urban centres, where the development is not natural and proper. Let me quote to my hon. friend words of great truth as well as of great beauty, which I take from Goldsmith's Deserted Village—they are familiar to him, I am sure. These words view in one stanza the situation that we are trying to view as a whole:

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay.
Princes and lords may flourish, or may fade,
A breath can make them as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

That, Sir, is a fundamental consideration of which we should take account at this time. We do not want to see in Canada an aristocracy of wealth grow up in our large cities, and men leaving the rural areas, a great plutocracy and aristocracy combined on the one side, and men decaying and villages and rural life deserted on the other. What we want is a bold peasantry; what we want is men who love the soil, who love contact with nature. We need them, as I have already said, if we are to maintain our human society in a proper degree of strength and vigour. It was with that consideration in view that at the Liberal Convention held last summer, in addition to a resolution with regard to the tariff, to which I shall refer in a moment, the following important resolution on encouragement to agriculture was laid down as one of the planks of the Liberal platform:

In the interest of agricultural production and development it is expedient to encourage co-operation and induce greater investment in farming; therefore, it is deemed expedient to utilize the national credit to assist co-operative agricultural credit associations to provide capital for agriculture at the lowest possible rates.

With the object of reducing the high cost of living by eliminating as far as possible the waste and expense in handling food products between the producer and consumer, it is expedient to extend the principle and system of Canadian Government elevators and to provide interior and terminal cold storage warehouses equipped for the assembling, assorting, preparing, storing and grading of food products in order that co-operative organizations and others may have available to them reliable, modern equipment, for the distribution of farm products in superior condition and at lessened cost either for domestic consumption or for export. And that cold storage transportation facilities should be provided, at the cost of operation, for the shipment of food products throughout Canada and for the carrying to the markets of the world the surplus farm products of this country and delivering them in such condition that will make Canadian foodstuffs a standard of quality for the world's market.

That, in the interests of agriculture, in aid of greater production on the land, and for the conservation of the soil in Canada, it is expedient for the Government to arrange for the distribution of fertilizers at the lowest possible cost.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party in its advocacy of measures that it believes to be in the interests of agriculture is not seeking in any way to care primarily for the interests of one class as against the interests of another. As I have said to-day, I firmly believe that the welfare of every city dweller is dependent absolutely upon the well-being and welfare of the people who dwell in the country, and only as we increase and improve agricultural development shall we make possible a happier lot for the masses of the people in the cities; shall we make possible a reduction in the cost of living; shall we make possible the obtaining of food supplies at a price which will enable us to get the labour that is necessary for the carrying on of the manufacturing industries.

There is another reason why I think we should encourage the people as far as we can to live in the country. The greatest of all assets to a nation is the health of its people. There is no denying that country life makes for the health of the human being, as life in the city does not begin to do. To the extent that the people are engaged in rural occupations; to the extent that they are in close contact with nature, —in fishing, in mining, in lumbering, in agriculture, in any of these great basic industries—to that extent will they be stronger and healthier. For that reason I should like to see an energetic policy of rural development instituted in this country which would help to make rural life as attractive as it possibly can be made. Let me illustrate what I mean by a simple example. The Government has had voted large sums of money which it is prepared to lend to municipalities for the purpose of putting up dwellings for working men in cities and towns. That may be good as far as it goes, but something much better would be the erection all over this country of cottages on farms where men and women could live with their families, working as farm labourers and farm helpers, if you like, having their own cottages, their own homes, and assisting the farmers in the production of necessities for the people in the cities and towns. Anything that will encourage the people to go on the land; anything that will help to make farm life enjoyable and prosperous, will help to develop a prosperous and vigorous people.

Having regard to the vast losses which we sustained during the war, to the numbers of men who were killed, and to the large numbers who suffered physical injury of one kind or another or impairment of health, it becomes most important that the Government should give as much attention as it possibly can to the conservation of human life. We talk a great deal about the conservation of natural resources, but, Sir, the conservation of human life is equally important. May I here refer to another most important plank in the platform of the Liberal party as laid down at the convention of last year? The following resolution on the conservation and improvement of physical standards of Canadians was moved, as I recall it, by one of the women delegates:

> Whereas the Great War and the greater epidemic have taken an appalling toll of Canadian life; and
>
> Whereas human life and physical efficiency are the nation's greatest assets; and
>
> Whereas the conservation and improvement thereof should be the country's first care;
>
> Therefore this gathering of Liberals in convention assembled pledges itself to a vigorous prosecution of the measures best calculated to conserve the life and improve the physical standard of our Canadian citizenship.

As I said a moment ago, human life is much more important than wealth; health is of greater concern and a more important capital than money. But what is being done at the present time along preventive lines? I know that hon. gentlemen opposite have established a Department of Health, and in that work they have had the co-operation of members on this side of the House. But thus far we have seen very little as a result of what is being done by that department. May I urge the department to consider this matter of the health of the people, not in any small way, but as part of a great national policy such as I have been endeavouring to indicate during the course of my remarks this afternoon, based upon the wisdom of bringing people into contact with nature; the desirability of enabling as many as possible to find their places of residence, their homes, where their health is likely to be benefited to the greatest degree?

Let me read a line or two from an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Star of May 13. The subject with which it deals is a very important one in connection with the production of wealth, which we are considering at the present time. I am putting it on the material ground, for the meantime, of increased production, because it is only as labour and capital are applied to the natural resources of the country that we have an increase of production. This article is headed: "More Deadly Than War," it says:

> Dr. C. D. Parfitt, of Muskoka, tells the special committee on pensions at Ottawa that Canada lost more lives from tuberculosis than in battle with Germans.

The editorial continues:

> The figures Dr. Parfitt gives are alarming. In five years 35,684 Canadian soldiers were killed in battle in Europe, and during the same period 42,920 Canadians died of tuberculosis in Canada. The incidence of tuberculosis was 120 per cent greater in the Canadian than in the British Expeditionary Force, suggesting that the people of this country are peculiarly susceptible to the ravages of the disease.
>
> The greatest war of all time has come and gone, with its tanks and poison gas, and many deadly weapons perfected by science, yet it has failed to equal in destruction of life the steady ravages of tuberculosis. Its sum of misery, with families broken up, lifework cut off, strong men bent under bereavement, and talent filched from the public service, makes a smaller heap than is the regular loot of the White Plague.

The contrast between the nation at war and the nation at peace is now being realized in Canada, and it means the lifting of a deadly weight off the minds and hearts of the people. But judged in terms of life and death, a more deadly weight crushes down upon the public. It places also a burden upon the conscience of all. Canada took effective action to bring her men home from the deadly trenches; what is Canada doing to save her women and children from tuberculosis?

That is not my question, but a question put by a paper which is friendly to the Government. What is Canada doing to save her women and chidren from tuberculosis? Five per cent or one twentieth of our population who earn a livelihood, regardless of their calling in life, are absolutely wholly and continuously, physically incapacitated from performing the duties pertaining to their profession, trade or labour, by disease which is and should be preventable. Place the total population of Canada at 8,000,000, and generally speaking, we estimate one half of this to be male. If it is further estimated that of the male population, at least two-fiths or 1,600,000 are wage-earners, and if you calculate that 5 per cent of this number, because of disease which is capable of prevention, are totally and continuously unable to earn, you can readily understand what a loss this means financially. In order to ascertain what this means, let us suppose the average earnings to be at the rate of $3 per head per day. Five per cent of 1,600,000 of a population represents 80,000, and this multiplied by $3 each would give $240,000 per day. First you have the loss to the families of the wage-earners, second, the profits lost to employers as a result of these 80,000 people being forced to remain idle, and third, loss of production to the nation at a time when conservation plays such an important part.

As regards the saving of life, approximately 200,000 babes are born every year in Canada, and an average of 120 out of every 1,000 of these die before they are one year old from conditions which may and should be, in large measure, prevented. This in itself deprives the nation of 24,000 potential native-born citizens a year. There are between 10,000 and 15,000 deaths annually in Canada from tuberculosis.

My reason for touching on these questions of health at this point is as I have indicated, that the Government have told us that what is needed at the present time above all is increased production. We can have increased production only as we have increased labour, increased willingness to produce and increased instruments of production wherewith to labour. It is going to be increasingly difficult to have the immigration we had in former years, because Europe cannot spare her people as she formerly did. Is it not then the part of a wise, sane and far-seeing policy to try to develop our national life in a manner which will best conserve our human life as well as best increase the production of the necessaries of life for the masses of the people?

I come now to some references which have been made to the National Policy. Hon. gentlemen opposite have sought to revive and stimulate throughout the country interest in the so-called National Policy of protection and to recount all it is alleged to have done for Canada. Without arguing the question one way or the other as to what the National Policy did or did not do, may I submit this consideration to the people of Canada as an all important one, in any consideration of a fiscal policy, namely, the condition of Canada as it was when the National Policy was introduced and as it is to-day in regard to possible future development. When the National Policy was introduced into Canada in 1878 or 1879, we had no export of manufacturers worthy of the name, and we had little in the way of a home market. When Sir John A. Macdonald appealed to the House of Commons to support his policy of protection of manufactures, he did so on the ground that what we needed was a home market for our manufactured goods; that we needed to stimulate individual industries; that we needed to give an infant industry an opportunity to grow and develop. The infant industry of the day of the inauguration of the National Policy has become the giant iron and steel merger of which we have heard mention in this House recently. Is the iron and steel merger, running up into millions, if not billions of dollars, an industry comparable with the kind of industry which Sir John A. Macdonald wished to stimulate? All that I am anxious to point out at the moment is that as times change, conditions come to the fore of which full account should be taken? From the moment the National Policy was introduced to the present time, efforts have been constant to improve conditions for a number of special industries in this country? Look at the vast expenditures that have been made on railways and on canals and shipping; look at the transportation within the country itself and across the seas; see what the Government are doing at the present time in the matter of stimulating the merchant marine; take the work of the Department of Trade and Commerce in having trade commissioners in different parts of the world; take the credits the Government are giving to foreign countries —all of these are ways of helping special interests to develop their particular industries. I am not saying that these are not good, but I am pointing out that they all help to give a larger market to the manufactures of this country, and to the extent that they do so, the consumers of this country are placed at a greater disadvantage than they would be if these great advantages were not given to particular interests. If we are going to consider one interest, let us consider all interests. That

5 p.m. is what we say is desirable in developing an industrial policy. No one would say that it was unwise to further internal and export trade; but if it be wise to help and stimulate one industry in its world development, it is equally wise to stimulate all the industries of the country. Let me read what Sir John A. Macdonald said when he introduced the National Policy. These are his words, respecting Canada in the seventies, as he uttered them in Parliament:

> a young and struggling country, just emerging from the first struggles with the forest. We have but little realized capital as yet. The manufacturers of the country, with a few small exceptions have scarcely taken root.

He quoted with approval John Stuart Mill. And here I might direct the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) to the question he asked the other day as to whether John Stuart Mill had or had not supported protection. This is what Sir John A. Macdonald quoted from John Stuart Mill:

> The only case in which, on mere principles of political economy, protecting duties can be defensible is when they are imposed temporarily (especially in a young and rising country) in hope of naturalizing a foreign industry in itself perfectly suitable to the circumstances of the country.

Those are not my words, but the words of Sir John A. Macdonald quoting John Stuart Mill. The point I make is: That any argument as to what was necessary and what was the best policy for Canada in 1879 must be considered to-day in the light of the changed conditions.

Sir John A. Macdonald in the statement I have just quoted refers to the fact that Canada was then a young country with practically no home market for her manufactures and certainly with no export market at all. Let me give my hon. friends the contents of a communication which I think will appeal to them as authoritative, and which will indicate the change that has taken place in Canada since the National Policy was first introduced. When my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and I had the pleasure of visiting the Maritime Provinces in the early part of this year, we were most generously received by the Commercial Club of St. John, of which, I think, the hon. member for St. John is president. He was away at the time, but the vice-president and other officers of the Commercial Club showed us great courtesy and asked us if we would accompany them to St. John harbour to see the nature of the shipping at that port. We spent the morning going over the harbour and looking at the different ships that were lying at anchor there. The point that these gentlemen wished to bring especially to our attention was that the facilities at St. John were wholly inadequate to meet the demand which was imposed upon them by the amount of shipping that was being done at that port. It was in the month of January, and at that time every wharf was lined with ships. Lying at anchor in the harbour were some thirteen or fourteen ocean liners that had to wait their turn to get accommodation. Those ships were there from every quarter of the globe. They were there to take Canadian goods, the natural and manufactured products of Canada, to the markets of the world. They were there to carry our products to Europe, Africa, Australia and South America. After we had had an interesting survey of the harbour I asked one of these gentlemen if he would kindly furnish me with a statement of the different ships we had seen and of the cargoes they were carrying. Let me read the letter I received. It throws light on the present development of trade in Canada and what our industries are doing in relation to foreign markets. The letter is dated St. John, N.B., January 17, 1920, and is as follows:

> Honourable W. L. MACKENZIE KING, > City.
>
> Dear Sir:—Agreeable to your request of this a.m., I have great pleasure in endeavouring to place before you full particulars of steamers lying in and about the port of Saint John, together with their import and export cargoes to be handled here.

Beginning with steamers you did not see, and which were lying outside the harbour, beyond Partridge island, obscured by the snowstorm, there are:

C.P.O.S. SS. Dunbridge, from London with inward general cargo; arrived January 9th to load grain, provisions, cereals and general cargo for Antwerp and London.

C.P.O.S. SS. Montezuma, from London with general cargo; arrived January 10th to load grain, provisions and general cargo for London.

C.P.O.S. SS. Batsford, from U.K. port, in ballast; arrived January 11th to load flour for U.K.

Canada Steamship Line SS. Georgic, from Havre with general cargo; arrived January 11th to load meats, provisions, farming implements and general cargo for Havre.

SS. Grof Kuen Hendervary (Italian), arrived January 12th in ballast to load grain for Italy.

SS. Monceniso Primo (Italian), arrived January 12th in ballast to load grain for Italy.

Vessels at anchor in the inner harbour:

Marine Navigation Co., SS. Alston, from St. Nazaire with general cargo and ballast; arrived January 12th to load automobiles, machinery and general cargo for St. Nazaire.

SS. Protea (Italian), arrived January 11th in ballast to load grain for Italy.

SS. Willpolo (American), arrived January 10th in ballast to load grain for Italy.

SS. Fedora (Italian), arrived January 7th to load grain for Italy.

SS. Drammensfjord (Norwegian), arrived January 14th to load general cargo for Scandinavian ports.

Vessels in berth:

SS. O. A. Knudsen (Norwegian), arrived January 6th; idle awaiting grain berth to load for Italy.

Furness Line SS. Glenspean, from Antwerp; arrived January 11th with ballast and general cargo; idle awaiting loading berth for grain, provisions and general cargo for Antwerp.

Manchester Line SS. Manchester Mariner, arrived January 9th from Manchester with general cargo; awaiting loading berth to load grain, provisions and general cargo for Manchester.

Dominion Coal Co., SS. Lingai discharging coal.

Canada Steamship Line SS. Lord Dufferin, from Havre; loading general cargo for Havre.

SS. Dailwen, loading deals for U.K.; sails to-day.

C.P.O.S. SS. Sardinian, loading grain, deals, and general cargo; sails for London to-day.

C.P.O.S. SS. Mottisfont, loading grain, deals and general cargo for London.

Houston Line SS. Hyanthes, with lumber, manufactured goods and general cargo for Brazil; sailing to-day.

C.P.O.S. SS. War Peridot, repairing propeller; will sail for Liverpool with grain, deals and general cargo.

C.P.O.S. SS. Holbrook, with general cargo from London; arrived January 7th. Only docked to-day to load grain and general cargo for Antwerp and London.

C.P.O.S. SS. Empress of France, from Liverpool with passengers, mails, and cargo, loading for Liverpool.

SS. Posillipo (Italian), loading grain for Italy.

SS. Bradavon, loading flour for Belfast.

SS. Cairnmona, loading flour for Greece.

SS. Orari, loading autos, machinery, and general cargo for New Zealand and Australia.

SS. New Georgia, loading autos, lumber and general cargo for Capetown, Port Elizabeth, East London, and Delagoa Bay.

I am sorry I am not able to get from the photographers scenes we had taken of the harbour and railway terminals, showing the congested and chaotic state existing a few days ago, but hope to have these on Monday, when I shall mail them to you at Ottawa.

Again thanking you for your great courtesy and interest in viewing the harbour situation at Saint John, I am,

Yours respectfully,

D. W. LEDINGHAM.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a picture of the development of trade and industry in this country as it is at the present time. This was the month of January. You will observe that the ships were to sail to practically every part of the world, to Africa, to Australia, to Brazil and to the northern and southern parts of Europe, and this was only from one of our ports. It all denotes trade that has been facilitated by the Government. It must be apparent that the great body of consumers in this country are entitled to at least some consideration when their taxes are going in very large measure to help to make possible this vast development of export trade. The photographs which were promised in the letter came in the course of a day or two, and when one looks at them one sees railroad terminals jammed with cars. Everything that can be done to increase and further develop this vast trade may be desirable, but as was pointed out by some hon. gentlemen who have spoken in this debate, and particularly by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark), it is impossible to have trade going in one direction and expect to continue doing business unless you have cargoes in the opposite direction as well. Many of these ships came to Canada in ballast, bringing nothing valuable to our shores; that is not a condition that can be maintained indefinitely. If we want to build upon a sound basis we must develop those industries which we are best qualified to develop, and to the greatest extent possible encourage exchange of products with other nations.

All I am arguing for is that in our national policies we shall not have a circumscribed or narrow vision; but that we shall look to the necessities and interests of all classes and groups and not to the particular interests of any group or class. As I listened to the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) who expounded the Government's policy, it seemed to me, that he had fallen into the common error of those who become advocates of protection of looking primarily to special interests as of vital concern. His mind seemed focussed on particular interests to the exclusion of industry as a whole. He spent a great deal of time citing from the reports of special committees which he said had been appointed by the Asquith Government to report upon the condition of particular industries in England. He sought to emphasize the findings of these committees because some members of them urged increased protection. But my hon. friend forgot to make a survey of British industry as a whole. It is perfectly true that certain industries in England have not the position they formerly had, but the question we must ask is: "What was England's position as a whole during the war; was she not able not only to finance herself and the different nations allied with her, but to carry the war through to a successful issue?" It is possible that the steel and iron industry of England is not at the moment what it once was. But what about England's shipping industry? Englishmen say that so long as England is an island she has to keep command of the seas through her merchant marine, and she has to protect it by her navy. As a result when the war came on England was supreme in that realm and it was her merchant marine together with her navy that saved her and helped save the rest of the world. England with her merchant marine could go to any quarter of the world to get the supplies she needed to feed her people, and to produce the needed armaments.

You can always get men to say that from the point of view of a particular industry it is desirable to protect it and you do not need to go to England for an example of that. If you focus your mind on any particular industry or profession or business you will find some who are interested in it favour the application to it of the protective principle. But when you leave a particular industry and cast your eye over all industries you will realize that while protection may be necessary in special cases,—its application generally is not equally beneficial. You prove nothing if you take one example and leave out all other considerations. There is a little book which was published in the Middle Ages in England known as Seldon's Table Talk in which a youth says to his father that he can prove by the kind of logic that his father has been using that he is perfectly entitled to marry his own grandmother. His father has been saying that a certain thing has been done in one case and therefore it ought to be done in another. When questioned by his father as to how he could argue as he did the son replied: "You married my mother; why should I not marry yours?" So it is in regard to the logic of my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) who says that because certain industries considered by themselves would be the better for protection, therefore other industries in other countries are in need of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What industries of importance are there that are not covered by the iron and steel industries such as the electrical trades, the engineering trades and the textile trades?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are a great many others but I have not the time at the moment to go into them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend smiles but he does not take into account the agricultural, the fishing, and the mining industries, which are surely of some importance in England. There is also the shipping industry and others which might be mentioned. Surely these are examples enough for my hon. friend. The whole carrying trade of England is involved. It is a matter of relativity having regard to possibilities and opportunities for future developments. I could give my hon. friend a parallel to much that he has given us. Last year in England I took occasion to examine somewhat carefully the workings of joint industrial councils and I was told that in practically all the industries in England where they have joint industrial councils their members were united in a demand for increased protection for their particular industry. Every day there were demands from bodies interested in particular trades such as the textile trade and others, saying: "We would like increased protection for this industry by itself." When I spoke to one of the English members of Parliament and asked what attitude the Government were likely to take in regard to the matter, his reply was: "That is all right as long as we are dealing with individual industries, but these matters are not settled by individual industries; they are settled in Parliament where all industries have a voice. When they look at their own particular industry they say that it is desirable to give that industry special consideration but when they are confronted in Parliament by men who are representing different industries it becomes a different question." When you get a vast body of opinion to view the question from its many different angles, you begin to see the necessity of give and take and the wisdom of not deciding what the policy of the nation shall be on the basis of one, two, or three particular industries because the question must be decided on the basis of what is the proper policy for all. That is the security which is found in our parliamentary institutions; that is why self-government stands for government of the people as a whole. While it is desirable that the interests of every industry should be safeguarded, Parliament must take into consideration the general interests of the community—it is the good of the whole body politic that has to be considered.

I was surprised to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) make the comparison he did between England and Germany at the commencement of the war. He spoke of the condition of preparedness that Germany was in by reason of her vast industries and wealth. If there is one thing more than another which the war has revealed it is that the aim of Germany was not merely political domination but industrial domination, and that what made possible the action of Germany was the combination of plutocracy, autocracy and militarism, the combination of the Ballins and Krupps and men of that kind who had built up vast industries to the exclusion of the rights of the great body of the common people and the autocratic aristocracy that controlled the State.

There would have been no war had Germany been cast in a different mould; but they developed in Germany that love of power, that worship of wealth which made men blind to every consideration of human well-being. So, when Germany took her ruthless step she did it for the purpose of achieving industrial and political conquest throughout the world. But she was beaten by those who took a different course. She was beaten by those nations that did not favour the special few—either in the matter of wealth or in the matter of privilege—but which had regard for the common weal and for common well-being. Sir, it was the autocratic Government in Germany, combined with the autocratic control of industry, that made the war possible. If the German Government had not been modelled on the basis of autocracy, if her industry had not been constructed on a basis of autocracy, the war would never have been possible—it was the combination of the two for an object that would further their joint ambition that made possible the step which Germany took.

What is wanted in the world to-day is not autocracy either in government or in industry. What is wanted in the world and in this country to-day is the democratization of government and the democratization of industry. I say that any government that will assume office as this Government did, and say that it intends to hold on to office—despite the demand of the people to the contrary—is an autocratic government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say that the Government, being an autocratic government, in seeking to maintain its friends in their positions of privilege, is trying to build up that combination of autocracy in government and autocracy in industry which must prove disastrous to the well-being of a state. In industry there are four factors which are entitled to consideration: Labour is entitled to consideration as well as capital; the community is entitled to consideration as well as managerial ability, and all four are necessary to the carrying on of industry. Give to the workingmen of the country a larger voice in the determining of policies which affect the conditions under which they have to work and earn their wages. Give to the community a larger say in regulating prices, in preventing profiteering, and in restricting combines, and our industrial future will be safe and secure.

But, Sir, in case I have not answered my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) sufficiently in regard to what he quoted from these special reports, let me give him an authority which I hope he will respect. It relates to what I said a moment ago about considering the well-being of all instead of the well-being of a privileged few. When my right hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) was Acting Prime Minister, he asked permission to place on Hansard—because of its great importance— a document of vast significance. It was the declaration of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference in regard to the economic conditions of the world. Let me read what my right hon. friend said in asking permission of the House to place this document on record. Here is my right hon. friend's statement as reported in Hansard of May 3, 1920:

I desire to call the attention of hon. members to a certain matter, and with the assent of the House, to make a motion thereon. The reason therefor is briefly this: I hold in my hand a declaration made by the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference on the economic conditions of the world. It is a recent compilation by an authority which is at the centre of things in Europe, and which has very wide sources of information, and being a pronouncement of that body on the present economic conditions in the world, it seems to me that it would be well to give it as great publicity and attention as possible. The motion I propose to make is that this declaration, which is not a very lengthy one, be recorded in Hansard so that it may come into possession of members of the House and be studied by them. I think it would have an even wider effect by being so published; it would be drawn to the attention of the press of the Dominion generally. It would be of the very greatest benefit to our people throughout the whole country if the statements contained in the declaration were brought to their attention and studied. They go to the very foundation of existing troubles and they end with a certain number of recommendations, or suggestions, and it would be a most excellent thing if we all took them into our consideration.

Now what does this declaration of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference say? I have not the time to read it all, but does it say—as my hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior, says—"Protect this particular industry and restrict trade so far as possible," or does it say, "Make trade as free as you can between different countries and industries thereby helping world development in freedom of exchange?" I shall quote from the document itself. Here are some pertinent passages:

In the sub-joined review of the position, the conference indicates the lines on which it considers that a solution of the problem can best be found. . . .

The first step to the reconstruction of Europe is to complete the process of demobilization in all countries, to resume the full employment in peaceful pursuits of the whole of the able-bodied population, and to encourage by every means the normal interchange of their products.

Then elsewhere it says:

—the output of factories and manufacturing industries throughout the world is below the standard which prevailed before the war, and far below the demands now made upon them. The net result of under-production arising from these various causes is an acute shortage of the essential supplies on which the economic life of Europe depends. . . .

This situation requires to be met with the same courage as was displayed on both sides during the war. The energy which was then thrown into the production of foodstuffs must be revived and redoubled in order to restore the situation. It must be made a point of honour with the tillers of the soil in every country to show that peace can extract from nature more than war. Europe must take measures to provide herself more largely with the food she requires in order that she may resume her full activities, and much can be effected if the necessary preparations are made without delay. . . .

In regard to industry generally, each Government must take steps to impress on its people that the limitation of production directly assists the upward movement of prices, and that it is by increasing production that they can best help to solve the problem. Every proposal which may assist in this direction deserves the closest attention. . . .

Governments must co-operate in the reconstruction of the common economic life of Europe, which is vitally interrelated, by facilitating the regular interchange of their products and by avoiding arbitrary obstruction of the natural flow of European trade. . . .

The demand not only for foodstuffs, but for clothing, boots and other manufactured articles, is in most countries far in excess of the supply, while luxuries of every kind command a readier sale than at almost any previous period. . . .

It is essential to the recovery of Europe that the manufacture of additional paper money and Government credits should be brought to an end, and this must be effected as soon as the war expenditure has been terminated.

Excessive profit making, commonly known as profiteering, has resulted from the scarcity of goods. Deflation and a check upon the continuous rise of prices will do much in itself to end the conditions that make profiteering possible. But it is essential, in order to obtain the co-operation of all classes in the increase of production, that each government should take such steps as are appropriate to the circumstances of its own people to assure and guarantee to the workers that the burdens that they are called upon by their efforts to remedy are not aggravated by those who would exploit the economic difficulties of Europe for their own personal ends. . . . .

That the states which have been created or enlarged as the result of the war should at once re-establish full and friendly co-operation, and arrange for the unrestricted interchange of commodities in order that the essential unity of European economic life may not be impaired by the creation of artificial economic barriers.

There is the report which my right hon. friend, when Acting Prime Minister, caused to be placed on Hansard. There is the report of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference which he says goes to the very foundations of existing troubles. And the whole tenor of that report is to make the natural flow, or interchange, as between different countries and different industries just as free as it can possibly be made.

Now, Sir, let me speak more particularly in reference to the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) which is before the House. Unless I have altogether failed in making apparent what I believe to be most necessary in this country at the present time, not only because of Canadian needs but also because of the world situation to-day, it will be evident that above all else we should have a policy which will help reduce the high cost of living and increase production. If we take the resolution of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), we shall immediately see that its whole aim and purpose is to call upon the Government to take immediate steps here and now to relieve the problem of the high cost of living by reducing the duties on the necessities of life, and to make possible increased production by reducing the duties on the instruments of production. That purpose is stated in general terms, but that is the real significance of the amendment.

Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to take considerable satisfaction in pointing out the differences in points of view to which expression has been given by hon. members on this side of the House when speaking on the fiscal question; and their party press has been deliberately trying to emphasize those differences. They seem to think it is remarkable that in a large body of men representative of every section of the country and engaged in different activities there should be differences in point of view in regard to what attitude should be taken by the Government toward one industry or another under certain circumstances, or regardless of circumstances altogether. Let me say to my hon. friends opposite that weakness does not lie in differences in point of view where there is an honest expression of opinion, it is not uniformity of opinion that marks the robust and vigorous mind. The weakness that is truly weakness is that type of mind which will not admit into the regions of its thought any views other than those which agree with its own, and which therefore cannot entertain any really honest differences of opinion. The only weakness which I can see in the expression of opinion whatever it may be, is where opinions are expressed that are not in the public interest, and which are dictated by personal considerations. But let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite that if it is united action they are looking for, they will not have very long to wait; as soon as this amendment is put to the vote they will find that every member on this side of the House without exception will vote in favour of it.

Why is that? Because the amendment expresses what is the view entertained generally by the people of this country. It is perfectly true that the amendment does not express all that every member on this side of the House would like it to express; it does not go the length of certain of my hon. friends on this side who incline towards an extreme of free trade, if you will, or towards an extreme of protection. I am perfectly free to admit to hon. gentlemen opposite that on this side of the House we have some men who hold quite extreme views on the fiscal question one way and the other. But this I would point out, that while individually they hold extreme views, they are men enough to give up those extremes and unite on ground which is common and which they feel to be in the public interest; and so long as they are prepared to do that, so long are they serving the public interest. It is out of differences of opinion—strong differences of opinion if you will, held by men of one particular attitude of mind and by men of another particular attitude of mind that in the last analysis we resolve what is best in the public interest. Nothing is ever gained in the long run by countenancing extremes, and sooner or later all men realize that the only road of progress is by taking the moderate course.

So while hon. members on this side of the House, as I have said, may not all agree in detail with everything that hon. friends opposite would like them to favour in regard to fiscal matters, nevertheless they are, I believe, agreed on this —that what is most needed is expressed in the amendment: an immediate reduction in customs duties in a manner which will help relieve the high cost of living, and also free the instruments of production, so as to make possible an increase of production in this country.

And, Sir, they had a right to expect that the Government would introduce something of this kind, for two reasons: In the first place, because at a previous session the Government had intimated that legislation to that end would be introduced. But what has the Government done to fulfil its promise? It has taken the promissory note of one minister and in exchange for it has given the promissory note of another minister. But of what use are the promissory notes of the Government? As my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) said in his resolution, they have failed to implement the promise which they made at a previous session that a general revision of the tariff would be made at the following session.

Let me read from the amendment these words which constitute its substantive part:

"That in view of the continued increase in the high cost of living, of the greatly increased burden of taxation, of the hardship which many of the people suffer from these causes, and the unrest naturally arising therefrom; and in view of the desirability of adopting measures to increase production and effect such relief to consumers and producers as may be within the power of Parliament, the House is of opinion that, pending a wider revision of the tariff, substantial reductions of the burdens of customs taxation should be made with a view to the accomplishing of two purposes of the highest importance; first, diminishing the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people; second, reducing the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the Dominion, the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress and prosperity of our country."

My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) asked: Why did the Opposition not bring in the tariff platform laid down by the Liberal party at its last convention? I will give my hon. friend the answer. In bringing in this amendment the Opposition were anxious to have the Government realize that they were placing before the Government that which could be done here and now, and that which should be done here and now. Had the Opposition brought in the platform of the Liberal party regarding the tariff as laid down at the convention, my hon. friend would have been the first to get on his feet and say to hon. gentlemen "the Opposition have brought in a platform which is intended as a party platform, and which they know very well that we on this side cannot be expected to carry out at a particular session." My hon. friend would have said that we had designedly brought before this House something which it was impossible to have immediately carried out, and that in that way we had been trying to play fast and loose with the Administration.

I tell my hon. friend that we are wholly sincere when we say that the people today are demanding an immediate reduction of the duties on these necessities of life, an immediate reduction of the duties on instruments of production These two things should be done here and now. They are a fundamental part of the Liberal platform as laid down at the Liberal convention. We say to the Government: Do not delay; act immediately in reference to this resolution.

Now, Sir, let me say again that the whole effort on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite—and it is an old trick and a common one—has been to point to the differences between the opinions expressed by individual members and to say nothing whatever about the ground which is held in common and for which all are prepared to fight. They have made a great deal of the differences of opinion expressed in this debate, but they have said very little about the unanimity of opinion that prevails in regard to this particular resolution. The same kind of tactics have been adopted with reference to what took place at the Liberal convention. Were there differences of opinion at the Liberal convention in regard to the tariff? Certainly there were. What would any hon. gentleman expect of a gathering composed of representatives from all parts of Canada representing all the different provinces, all the different industries and classes in the community; men and women from the Prairie Provinces; from the rural districts and urban centres of Ontario and Quebec; men and women from British Columbia and from the Maritime Provinces? There they were assembled for three days, discussing questions of interest to this country representing all the different interests and views of the people of the particular districts whence they came. They discussed the tariff issue; they came there for the purpose of discussing it amongst other things. It was known for months that the convention was to be called and that the drafting of a platform on the question of the tariff as well as on other questions would be one of its most important concerns. Was that gathering like a collection of Egyptian mummies? Was it of men whose minds were all cast in the same mould? Was it of men whose individualities and personalities shrivelled and shrank into nothing under the glance of a Prime Minister or the edict of a Government? No; they were free men, discussing freely their views, trying to arrive at a common basis of understanding in regard to what was most in the interests of the people as a whole. You had there exactly what you have here,—some taking extreme views in one direction, others taking extreme views in another direction. But, Sir, you had the splendid spectacle of that vast assemblage of men and women standing up as one and approving the platform of the Liberal party.

If my hon. friends opposite wish to know what was the resolution with regard to the tariff adopted at that convention and where I stand in reference to that resolution, let me read it to them at this point. Let me do so more particularly for this reason: The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) the other day read from a paper published in the Maritime Provinces, the name of which he did not give, an article in which it was said that in the Maritime Provinces I was advocating free trade. I have never advocated free trade anywhere. I told my hon. friend at the time that what I did in the Maritime Provinces was to read from the platform of the Liberal Party as laid down at that convention. But my hon. friend went on to say that I had said one thing in the Maritime Provinces, and he gathered that when I got up to speak here I would say something else and that possibly when I went out to the West I would say something different there,—in other words, that I would be "all things to all men." Well, it is perhaps natural for my hon. friend and some of his associates who call themselves Liberals but who sit as members of a Tory administration under the name of Unionists to think that they can be all things to all men. It would take a greater than St. Paul to play that role with satisfaction in the administration opposite. I have no desire to imitate any behaviour of that kind. Hon. gentlemen are only deceiving themselves if they think that they can be all things to all men; that they can remain Liberals and yet hold the views expressed by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) during the course of this debate and applauded so vigorously by so many hon. gentlemen opposite. I have only one message to give from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I would not be worthy of the trust reposed in me by members of the party with which it is my privilege to be associated in the position that at the moment I hold, were I to be one thing at one time and another thing at another time. Sir, I was chosen for the responsible duties that I am seeking to discharge at the Liberal convention at which the platform of the Liberal party was laid down, and by that platform I intend to stand or fall. The resolution on the tariff was as follows:

That the best interests of Canada demand that substantial reductions of the burdens of customs taxation be made with a view to the accomplishing of two purposes of the highest importance: First: diminishing the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people; Second: reducing the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the Dominion, the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress and prosperity of our country.

That, to these ends, wheat, wheat flour and all products of wheat; the principal articles of food: farm implements and machinery; farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery and repair parts thereof; rough and partly dressed lumber; gasoline, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils; nets, net-twines and fishermen's equipments; cements and fertilizers, should be free from customs duties, as well as the raw material entering into the same.

That a revision downwards of the tariff should be made whereby substantial reductions should be effected in the duties on wearing apparel and footwear, and on other articles of general consumption (other than luxuries), as well as on the raw material entering into the manufacture of the same.

That the British preference be increased to 50 per cent of the general tariff.

And the Liberal party hereby pledges itself to implement by legislation the provisions of this resolution when returned to power.

Supplementing that resolution is a resolution on reciprocity proclaiming the faith that the Liberal party had in that arrangement as it was introduced, expressing regret that opportunity was not afforded to this country to obtain the benefits of it, and expressing the hope that the time might yet come when some of the benefits that were hoped for by that measure might yet be gained for the people of Canada. Just in this connection may I direct the attention of the House to what my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) said the other evening. He asserted that most of the things that were asked for under that reciprocity agreement had been granted by the Government of the day. Well, if that is true, what will the Canadian people think of the utterances of hon. gentlemen when in the campaign of 1911 they defeated that agreement on the ground that it was against the interests of Canada? I tell him that their attempt to-day to mislead the people in regard to any of the features of this platform are just as misleading and just as unpatriotic as were their endeavours to mislead the public in regard to the results they allege would be brought about by the reciprocity agreement.

Let me further point out that there is not a line in the resolution adopted by the Liberal convention which has not appeared in resolutions proposed in Parliament from this side prior to the time that the convention was held. There is not a line in the resolution which was not approved and which had not the sanction of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, or which was not advocated by him prior to his death. Indeed, at the very time that he was taken from us he was preparing to give battle to hon. gentlemen opposite on the very issues that are laid down in that platform. The last public address by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, only two or three weeks before his death, was in the main one approving a resolution passed by Eastern Ontario Liberals in words almost identical with the resolution which was adopted at the Liberal convention. If anything were necessary by way of sustaining the wisdom of a policy such as that which is true to the traditions of Liberalism, it would be, as the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) has pointed out, the way in which the Liberal policy which was introduced in 1896 resulted in the prosperity of this country. When the Liberals of 1896 introduced their platform, criticisms were levelled against it much in the nature of the criticisms that have been made against the platform of the Liberal party as adopted at its recent convention. How did that policy work out? True, in some particulars things were not done which might have been done; but let me read to hon. gentlemen, not the words of any one on this side of the House, but the words of an authority whom they will not call in question in regard to what the Liberal party did while in office towards carrying out this policy, and let us see whether or not there is reason to fear that, in the future, should the guidance of affairs be entrusted to the hands of Liberals and those of progressive thought, the affairs of the country will not prosper thereby.

I have in my hand a volume written by Sir John Willison, entitled "Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal Party." Sir John Willison is, I think, at the present time president of the Canadian Reconstruction Association, and hon. gentlemen opposite know that association and understand its purposes. This is what Sir John Willison has to say in regard to the Liberal policy as it was introduced and as it was carried out. The quotation commences on page 288:

These then were the trade issues which entered into the contest of 1896, and this the position of the controversy when the Liberal party came into office in Canada. There was undoubtedly uneasiness among manufacturers and some fear among all classes who were concerned in industrial operations and interested in financial and banking institutions that revolutionary tariff legislation would be introduced, investments prejudiced or destroyed, the business of the country thrown into confusion, labour displaced, and commerce embarrassed and depressed. It is the work of a day to create a protectionist system. It is a delicate and difficult undertaking to scale down duties, and establish freer trade conditions without doing damage and injustice to industries which have been created by tariff legislation. The Liberal ministers were bound in unmistakable pledges to proceed with caution and with deliberation, and they thoroughly understood that violent and inconsiderate action would create commercial instability and panic, revive protectionist sentiment, and discredit the cause of tariff reform. They therefore instituted a tariff commission, which met the manufacturers, traders and producers at various centres throughout the country. The commissioners gave earnest and sympathetic consideration to all reasonable representations, and in the main, the protected interests presented their arguments in cordial, candid, and straightforward fashion. They took it for granted that while the ministers were most concerned to promote the welfare of the masses of the people, they would prefer to benefit rather than to injure established industries, and that enterprise would be recognized and investments protected in so far as the interests of capital and labour and the stability of the commercial fabric demanded. These tariff hearings did much to restore public confidence, and to prepare the country for a progressive but safe and moderate measure of tariff adjustment.

On April 25th, 1897, the new tariff was brought down in Parliament, and it is not exaggeration to say that no fiscal measure of more far-reaching significance was ever framed by a Canadian Ministry. It gave substantial relief to consumers and producers.

It gave what we are seeking to-day—a tariff in the interests of consumers and producers, a tariff that will bring relief to both consumers and producers.

It was a bold step in Imperial unity. It introduced the principle of minimum and maximum tariffs, and practically adopted the Davies resolution of 1892 in favour of preferential treatment of British products. In brief, the iron and steel duties were reduced from $1.50 to $1.00 a ton, and the bounty increased by $1.00 a ton. The taxes on barb wire and binder twine were abolished. Corn was placed on the free list. The flour duty was reduced. There was a reduction equal to 22 per cent of the duties on refined sugar. Duties on the raw material of many farm necessaries were reduced. The tax on uncleaned rice was increased, as were also the taxes on liquor and tobacco. There was a general substitution of ad valorem for specific duties, and this also involved substantial reduction of imposts. The classifications were reduced and simplified. Provision was made that the duties on goods produced under trusts and combinations could be summarily reduced or abolished. There was also, as the distinguishing feature of the measure, an immediate reduction of 12½ per cent on British goods, and provision for a further reduction to 25 per cent on July 1st, 1898. In a few cases, particularly in cottons, the duties were increased, but this seemed to be necessary in order to give fair scope for the reduction of 25 per cent on goods admitted under the special tariff. This special tariff was not, as then framed, a direct discrimination in favour of Great Britain. The German and Belgian treaties, which will be discussed later, disabled Canada from such direct discrimination in favour of the mother country. It was therefore provided that the minimum tariff should apply to any country which admitted the goods of Canada at rates as low or lower than were prescribed by the special schedules. This limited the application of the special tariff to Great Britain and New South Wales, and providing Canada could secure relief from British favoured nation treaties, accomplished the purpose of the Canadian Government. It is convenient to say now that in 1898 West India sugar was admitted into Canada at the lower rate of taxation, and that in 1900 the duties on British goods were further reduced from 25 per cent to 33⅓ per cent below the figures of the general tariff.

The country received the general provisions of the new tariff with marked favour and the British preference with positive enthusiasm. The Conservative attack was directed against the constitutional aspects of the measure rather than against its readjustments of the scale of taxation. It is true that at the moment it was denounced as a deadly blow at important Canadian industries. But when it was found that trade prospered, industries flourished, and new life was infused into all the channels of Canadian commerce, ground was shifted, and it was thought better to describe the new fiscal policy as a practical ratification of the old protectionist system. In fact, the measure has never been subjected to any consistent line of attack. It is sometimes denounced as unduly favourable to the United States, sometimes as calculated in its practical operation to crush out Canadian industries in order to facilitate British imports, sometimes as unmitigated protection. There is no doubt that the principle of protection still remains in the tariff, and that a measure of advantage is undoubtedly retained for Canadian manufacturers and producers. This is inevitable under any tariff designed to raise the revenues necessary to the financial needs of the country, and is perhaps essential to the growth and stability of commercial and manufacturing operations in Canada in face of the American method of slaughtering goods in outside markets and the lower freight rates enjoyed by many American exporters as against the charges exacted by the Canadian railways for the carriage of Canadian products. Great distances and a small population compel some of these inequalities, and twenty years of extreme protection necessarily brought into existence many industries which could not meet low tariff conditions, and could not be summarily subjected to the free and unobstructed competition of British and foreign manufacturers. Practical statesmen must deal in a practical way with existing conditions, and aside from considerations of prudence and equity, the leaders of the Liberal party were doubly pledged against rash and revolutionary legislation.

But it is vain to argue that the Fielding tariff was not a substantial measure of reform. The special tariff on British goods materially encouraged and cheapened importations from Britain, and many of the duties on farm supplies and household necessaries were lowered, to the advantage alike of the consumers and the revenue. In fact, if the British preference had not been introduced as the essential feature of the tariff, it would probably have been attacked as a relentless free trade measure, and have evoked the strenuous and enduring hostility of the protectionist classes.

It goes on to say something further in regard to the views which the English people had and ends with these words which are a quotation from an English economist:

> At the present moment it would be a step backward if taken by the mother country; it is a step forward when taken by Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. gentleman desire to conclude before six o'clock?

Mr. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: If hon. members are willing to wait, I shall endeavour to conclude in a few minutes.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Go on while you have steam up.

Mr. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: What was recognized in England as well as in Canada at that time was that the step was in the right direction, but it was not regarded as the last and only step. It was not so regarded by Sir Wilfrid himself. What were the outstanding features in the record of the Liberal party while in office? First, substantial reductions in duties in a number of directions and upon a number of occasions; then the introduction of the British preference and an increase in that preference; then a fight for freer trade on the reciprocity platform. While the Liberal party has not stood for free trade it has stood for freer trade; and while free trade is not possible, in view of conditions as they are in Canada at the present time, and is not being advocated, so far as I am aware, by any political party in this country, that is no reason why, as regards the necessities of life, we should not have cheaper food and cheaper clothing and cheaper shelter, if it is possible to have these things, and at the same time get what we need in the way of revenue through such a tariff as it may be expedient to impose.

What was the attitude of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in regard to what had been done under the Fielding tariff? I have here a copy of a speech delivered by Sir Wilfrid at Hamilton on the 27th November, 1913, nearly seven years ago. At that time the Liberal party was fighting for free food and freer trade, just as to-day it is fighting for the same things. What did Sir Wilfrid say at that time? And if his words had force seven years ago how much greater force have they to-day in view of the changed conditions which the war has occasioned? These are his words:

> I told you at the beginning that new problems are continually arising; there are latent forces which, unnoticed, silent and unforeseen, work out problems which were never dreamed of. This is one of them. In this city of Hamilton, which to-day, as I understand, prides itself on a population of over 100,000, go into the homes of the workingmen and mechanics, of the clerk in the drygoods store and the clerk in the warehouse, even the professional man and the clergyman, and the question which is discussed at this moment is not the price of dreadnoughts; it is the problem of making ends meet as between expenditure and income. "It is true I might say something about reciprocity," commented Sir Wilfrid, "but I have no recriminations to make. The problem is before us. Let us bury the past and look to the future. There our duty lies. The situation requires action, prompt, unhesitating action. The policy I give you at this moment, the policy I believe every patriot in Canada ought now to support, and the policy I believe it to be the duty of the Government to immediately inaugurate, is a policy of absolutely free food—food free from customs duty. It will be said to me," the Liberal leader continued, reasoning out his proposals: "If you advocate that policy do you not advocate a revision of the tariff to that extent? Certainly I do. But somebody will tell me that the tariff which is in force to-day is the Fielding tariff of 1897. So it is, but the Fielding tariff was made for the needs of that time, not for all eternity. It has been the policy of the Liberal party at all times to stand so far as possible for stability in tariff, but when the needs of the people call for action, action must be taken."

Now, Sir, that was the view which Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressed when leading the Liberal party, namely, that while there was reason to be proud of the golden era of prosperity, which marked the fifteen years the Liberals were in office there was yet need for action. New occasions bring new duties. Changes have come about within the last few years such as the world has never witnessed heretofore, and the need for relieving the high cost of living and for increasing production is greater than ever in the past. And while we as Liberals are proud of the record of Liberalism, going down to defeat fighting for free food and freer trade, we are determined as Liberals to keep up this fight on behalf of the people and to take up the flag where the Old Chief left it, and see that it is not furled until victory is won.

Let me say just a few words in conclusion. Hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to make capital out of the differences of view that have been expressed in reference to details by Liberals here in this House, and at the Liberal convention, but they have overlooked the important fact that there is common ground on which all of us stand. Hon. gentlemen are trying to do the same thing to-day in reference to the platforms of different political parties in this country. I have a copy of the platform of the Farmers' party and a copy of the platform of the Independent Labour party. Hon. gentlemen opposite have drawn attention to differences between the Liberals and the Farmers and the Labour men. Well, Sir, there are differences to which hon. gentlemen can point, but I can tell my hon. friends opposite this, which is a fact of far greater significance, that there is common ground on which the members of those parties can unitedly stand. You will find in the Farmers' platform, in the Labour platform, and in the Liberal platform, the common demand for a reduction of the duties on the necessaries of life. You will find in all three platforms a demand that the duties should be taken off the instruments of production so that greater production may be possible. These demands, Mr. Speaker, represent the outstanding needs of the country to-day, and on these great fundamental needs we are united.

Let me address a word to my hon. friends in the Farmers' party and to my hon. friends of the workingmen's party, and let me address the same word to the people of this country: Take note of the things that you have in common and observe the tactics of the enemy you have also in common. These tactics are wholly apparent. We have seen privilege protected in almost every speech that has been made from the other side in the course of this debate. We have seen hon. gentlemen opposite seek to point to some differences that exist between men of common thought and common feeling in other respects. What do these tactics signify? They are an endeavour to keep the host in opposition divided. Hon. gentlemen opposite are saying to themselves: "We can hold all the positions of privilege so long as men who are united in thought and feeling on certain common ground can be kept apart from one another and prevented from uniting in a common effort to gain a common end." These are the barbed wire entanglements by which the party of privilege would seek to keep separated men of liberal thought and feeling in this country, and to keep them from uniting on the ground which they have in common. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) said that the purpose of the amendment was to unite these different groups. Let me tell my hon. friend that if that was its purpose, there could not have been a worthier one than to seek to give expression, in one voice, to the sentiments of three great elements. What is the object of hon. gentlemen opposite? It is to keep the progressive hosts who oppose them disunited. Word has gone out from their headquarters urging the necessity of this action and also the need of filling the war chest with gold. There are announcements already of a fund for propaganda purposes that is to run up into millions of dollars. Mention has been made in the press of such a fund for such purposes and the Government in power purposes to hold on for a couple of years and by so doing give this insidious propaganda ample opportunity to do its work. I would urge all men who think and feel alike on the great questions which affect the well-being of the Canadian people, and who deplore conditions for which the Government are responsible, to take note of the tactics of the common enemy. No matter by what name they may call themselves, whether it be Liberal, Grit, Reformer, Liberal-Unionist, Farmer or Labour, if they think and feel alike, as men who are interested in the welfare of the great mass of men and women in this country, they should stand together where it is possible for them so to do, and fight to a successful finish the great issues that face them.

My hon. friend (Mr. Meighen—I refer to him again because he has been the chief exponent of the views of the Government in this debate—has given his interpretation of the attitude of gentlemen on this side of the House. In Hansard of May 25, 1920, will be seen his characterization of the Opposition.

> We are opposed by two wings of wholly opposite views on the tariff, two wings, however, that gather around the motion of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), two wings that hope to go before the people of this country fighting under two flags and under two leaders, to make the pretence all the better, but who hope afterwards to coalesce and entwine the two flags into one in an infamous unity, who hope after taking one camp of public opinion behind them and the opposite camp as well, to the utmost of their power to end up by deceiving both, by betraying both, because they must either deceive the one or double deceive the other.

May I say to my hon. friend that there is no deception as to the attitude of hon. gentlemen on this side. We of the Liberal party have our programme, we have right with us and we are prepared to work with the men and women who feel and think as we do. But we are prepared to carry on our work and we will carry it on regardless of the attitude of any others because we are of a party which has a tradition of 100 years to maintain, a tradition of 100 years of advance and progress to greater liberty and freedom. We will strive and seek to make our policies prevail. But may I say to my hon. friend in all kindness: Be careful, "judge not that ye be not judged." Let me repeat my hon. friend's characterization with its bearing upon the Government of which he is a member as respects the action of the government prior to the last election when he and his party came together with their two flags.

Mr. MEIGHEN: One flag.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the Prairie Provinces my hon. friend and the Hon. Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder) were out, he the one leader, and the Hon. Minister of Immigration and Colonization the other; in Ontario the Hon. the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) was leading one host and the right Hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) leading the other; in the province of Quebec the Hon. the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) was the one leader and the Hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Blondin) the other; in the Maritime Provinces there were those who led the men and women of one party and those who led the men and women of the other. What was the motive? I will leave the country to judge. Let me read to my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) his own words as they apply to the Government at the present time:

> We are opposed by two wings of wholly opposite views on the tariff—

It was not the motion of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's then; it was the winning of the war.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite right, quite right; but let us see what follows:

> —two wings that hope to go before the people of this country fighting under two flags and under two leaders, to make the pretence all the better, but who hope afterwards to coalesce and entwine the two flags into one in an infamous unity, who hope after taking one camp of public opinion behind them and the opposite camp as well, to the utmost of their power to end up by deceiving both, by betraying both, because they must either deceive the one or double deceive the other.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I can let this matter rest here. My hon. friend is quite ready to impute motives to others. Perhaps he spoke a little too much out of his own consciousness when he so imputed motives to us.

All I shall say in conclusion is this. If in 1917 the people entrusted two different wings with power, which they did for the purpose of winning the war, they find them to-day united into one solid body unwilling longer to listen to the voice of the people. They will not listen to the verdict of the people as expressed in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, all the different centres in which there have been by-elections. We have a ministry which is unwilling to have the cabinet representative of Labour or of the returned soldiers in this House or to give representation in the cabinet to the Eastern Provinces of the Dominion, we have a ministry which has taken from the start a most autocratic stand in dealing with public questions. Surely we have come to the moment when in the great work of reconstruction a ministry that ignores the people and has no policy to propose should be compelled to give to the people opportunity to say whether or not they wish to have the affairs of this country any longer conducted by men who have lost the public confidence, or conducted by those who seek to express in legislation the wishes of the people in regard to the needs of the hour and the problems of the day.

At Six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Hon. NEWTON W. ROWELL (President of the Privy Council: As I listened this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, with increasing admiration to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) who reviewed the whole course of this debate during the past two weeks; took an intimate survey of our political history from 1893 up to the present time; looked forward into the future and discussed social and economic questions, and entered into a discussion of the relative merits of protection and free trade, or rather the real merits of moderation, I was forcibly reminded of a passage of Scripture which I should like to commend to the attention of the hon. leader of the Opposition. In that hon. gentleman's absence, and as this passage is from the Old Testament, I shall ask my hon. friend the member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) to bring it to his leader's notice. The passage I refer to will be found in Leviticus, 19:9:10:

> And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest.
>
> And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and for the stranger:—

If I do not follow the example of my hon. friend in endeavouring to glean the whole harvest of the land and to gather every grape of the vineyard, it is out of consideration for the feelings of hon. members who desire to reach a decision on this question some time to-night or early to-morrow morning. I mention this because if I fail to touch all the points of attack or criticism of the Government made by the leader of the Opposition, it is not because I should not be glad to meet them and answer them on any occasion, but it is because I do not feel justified in taking up the necessary time to deal with those points in detail. I may, however, Mr. Speaker, I think appropriately touch on a few of his criticisms, and I shall deal with them rather as samples of the whole and as indicating the position and attitude of the Government in reference to them.

The hon. leader of the Opposition in paying a well-deserved tribute to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) on the preparation and presentation of his Budget Speech quite properly pointed out that conditions to-day differ very materially from war conditions;—that in the efforts of the Government to secure the necessary financial support during the period of the war they had the earnest and whole-hearted support of the people, but now we were getting back to peace conditions, and we have in Canada as in all the countries engaged in the war, that unrest, dissatisfaction and irritation which spring to some extent at least from exhausted nervous vitality and which make the problems of government even more difficult than during the war.

But, while that is true, I think neither my hon friend the leader of the Opposition, nor the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) in discussing a similar point when moving his amendment, did justice to my hon. friend the former Minister of Finance (Sir Thomas White) in regard to his administration of the finances of the country during the war. Now that the war is over and victory has been achieved it is very easy to find fault; it was a different thing in the days of stress and struggle when the country was in need of funds and it was essential that money should be forthcoming if the men at the Front were to be sustained and Canada was to prosecute the war to a successful issue, —I say it was a different matter then to secure the needed funds; and I think we should all be very glad to pay our tribute of admiration to the former Minister of Finance for the manner in which he handled the financial situation of that time. As I have said, I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition that it is more difficult to deal with the question of imposing increased burdens of taxation now than it was during the war period. As he has said, we then had the enthusiasm of the people behind us; now there is a degree of unrest, and if Canada is to discharge her obligations it is necessary that the people should be asked to assume additional burdens of taxation. It is therefore of the utmost importance that the minds of the people should not be poisoned with mis-information in reference to our financial position and the manner in which the Government has expended the nation's money. And my contention is this, Mr. Speaker, that in imposing these new burdens upon the people in order that Canada may do her duty the Government, instead of having the support and co-operation of hon. gentleman opposite is met with carping criticism of the manner in which the finances of the country have been handled, and has been charged, if not with mis-application of public funds, at least with grossly reckless and wasteful mis-management.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWELL: My hon. friends say "hear, hear." I want to deal with some of those points to-night. The hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), held a brief for the Opposition in criticising the Government's expenditures of the past year. While we have had general criticism from the opposite side of the House, the member for Antigonish and Guysborough has ventured to go into details and to set out certain specific charges upon which the Opposition wished to stand in its attack upon our financial administration. And the hon. leader of the Opposition this afternoon gave his benediction to the hon. member, and stated that he had set forth the Opposition's criticism of the Government, and commended that criticism to the attention of the House and the country and virtually made it his own. I want to deal briefly with that criticism to-night.

First, the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough spoke of the increased public debt. They said that the public debt had been increased during the past year at the rate of over $1,000,000 a day, and they described that as wasteful and reckless extravagance. They were quite prepared to allow an increase of the public debt during the war, but they asked: Why increase the public debt after the war? Does not every hon. member know, Mr. Speaker, that last year this House voted $350,000,000 for completing the war services, for demobilization and bringing our men back from overseas and returning them to their homes? The increased public debt last year was the further instalment paid by our people for the defence of their country and the work of demobilization. The whole increase of the public debt was for expenditures under the demobilization vote and certain investments the Government made in connection with credits to foreign countries, as I am advised by the Minister of Finance. There was no increase in the public debt in connection with the ordinary expenditure of the country; nay, more—the revenues exceeded the ordinary expenditure by nearly $39,000,000.

Then, the hon. member's second charge was that the Government had increased the expenditure during the fiscal year just ended by more than $100,000,000 over that of the previous year—"yet they talk of economy," he says. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen opposite whether the amounts that go to make up that $100,000,000 increase are expenditures to which they are opposed? If so, they are justified in criticising the expenditure, but if not, then I ask is it fair and just to the people of Canada to make any such statement or offer any such criticism, to say nothing of the Government and members on this side of the House? What are the items that make up that $100,000,000? The first is: Increased interest on the public debt because of the war expenditure of Canada, $31,000,000. Do my hon. friends say that that debt should not have been incurred to enable Canada to do her share in the war? Do they say that Canada should not pay the interest on that debt? Do they say that that is not a proper increase in the charges on the country, and that it is not proper to provide increased revenues to meet it?

Let me take the next item: Increase in pensions, $7,717,000. Do hon. members opposite put themselves on record as opposed to that increase in pensions? If they are not opposed to it, then why have they not the manliness to get up and retract the criticisms they have made? My hon. friend opposite laughs, but the women and children who get the benefit of these pensions do not laugh. The next item is $49,000,000, Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. That amount is not wholly an increase; in the previous year the expenditure for Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment formed part of the war vote and did not enter into the general current expenditures of the country. Do hon. gentlemen opposite wish to go on record as opposing this item? The next item is Soldiers Land Settlement $2,692,000. Do hon. members opposite say that the Government should not be making these advances and carrying on this work to enable the soldiers to settle on the land? I will give you only one more: Civil Service bonus, $9,497,000—to the civil servants in all sections of Canada to meet the increased cost of living. Mr. Speaker, the five items I have mentioned make up approximately $100,000,000, the increased public expenditure of which my hon. friends have complained. I say to my hon. friends on the other side: Are you opposed to that increase in the public expenditure last year? If you are, then you are perfectly justified in criticising.

Mr. McKENZIE: Order.

Mr. ROWELL: I say it through you, Mr. Speaker, to my hon. friends opposite. If they are opposed to that increase in the public expenditure, made up as I have stated, then they are perfectly justified in criticising; but if they are not opposed to these items of public expenditure, is it fair to send the charge throughout the country that the Government has been reckless in its expenditure of public money and in increasing the expenditure last year by $100,000,000?

The next item my hon. friend takes exception to is a much smaller one—but sometimes (you know) you can awaken more interest in the public mind in a small item than in a large one. I am, therefore, going to take up one or two small items, particularly as some reference was made to them this afternoon by the leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough referred to an item of $200,000 as being the expenditure of the Department of Public Information. He stated that this department was organized for political purposes and for no other purpose, and that:

> Whatever value it may have had as a political agency to assist the Union Government, he would be a bold man who would say that it was worth two hundred cents to the people of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWELL: My hon. friends say "hear, hear." I say, Mr. Speaker, that the statement that the department was organized for political purposes is absolutely devoid of a shadow of truth. So far as I am aware there was no country at war the Government of which did not have some kind of an organization or department for the purpose of keeping the people of the country informed as to the war efforts of that Government and of that country, in order to sustain the courage and patriotism of the people and assist in the prosecution of the war.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWELL: Well, perhaps my hon. friends did not need anything to sustain their courage in the war.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWELL: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to analyse a little bit—

Mr. CAHILL: Say it again. Try it again.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROWELL: I am afraid that even if I tried it again it would not penetrate the mind of my hon. friend. I want to deal with the items covered by that $200,000. The first, and one of the most important, was an amount to provide for the cabling to England of news to be published in the Daily Record for our troops overseas. One-eighth of the total expenditure of that department was covered by cable tolls in sending news overseas, in order that the boys at the front might have some knowledge of what was going on at home and some tidings concerning their friends in the home-land.

Mr. CAHILL: Especially during the election.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I must ask any hon. member who has anything to say, or a question to put, to do the House the courtesy of rising and addressing the Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LALOR: Do it like a man.

Mr. ROWELL: I have here a large number of testimonials from the soldiers overseas of the value of this Daily Record to the men at the Front and I purpose putting on record, in view of the manner in which this question has been raised, a letter from the commander of the Forces, Lieutenant-General Sir Arthur Currie, written on the day that this publication ceased, in July, 1919. He said:

> As this is to be the last issue of your most interesting periodical, please grant me a small space to extend to you the heartfelt thanks of all Canadina soldiers who have served in France and Belgium for, The Daily Record.
>
> Brimful of selected items of interest from every part of Canada, delivered, as it was, free to us each day in the trenches, it brought a breath of home into our daily lives.
>
> All connected with its conception, its compilation, its issue, and its distribution, are entitled to every credit, and theirs is the consciousness of having done a real service to our soldiers, a service greatly appreciated, and one not likely to be soon forgotten.

The chief credit for this publication belongs to the men overseas, but the Department of Information did supply the news that was sent over, from about January, 1918, until its publication ceased, and paid the expense of cabling the news.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Is my hon. friend not aware that that same thing was carried out from the first year of the war, the information being furnished by the Department of Militia?

Mr. ROWELL: My hon. friend (Sir Sam Hughes) is quite correct. In the early days of the war, he, when Minister of Militia, had news cabled over to the troops at the front. Originally the news was distributed by typewritten bulletins which were posted through the camps. At a later date the Official Record was established and printed, and this printed paper was distributed through the camps. When my hon. friends opposite say that that expenditure was not worth two hundred cents to the people of Canada, I ask them—are they opposed to the expenditure made for the maintenance of the Daily Record for our troops?

Let me take another item that has been the subject of a good deal of comment on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, and that is the expenditure in connection with the Canadian Official Record which involves one-quarter of the total expense. That was published in order that the people at home might be kept fully informed as to the war activities of the country, as to the Orders in Council, passed by the Government and as to the proceedings taken by the Government in prosecuting the war and the work of demobilization. My hon. friends say—"published to puff the Government or some of its ministers." I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that if you take the Canadian Official Record, you will find a fair and impartial chronicle of the period of the war giving the people of this country the information they needed. In this connection I wish to put on record one letter, not from a friend or supporter of the Government, not from a man who does not know or understand what fairness is in carrying on a journal, but from a man who was a supporter of my hon. friends opposite, a journalist whose ability, whose devotion to their cause no hon. member will question. I refer to the late John T. Hawke, editor of the Moncton Transcript. When Mr. Hawke received from the Department of Public Information notice that the Official Record was being discontinued, he wrote this letter:

November 11,1919.

Replying to yours of the 8th inst. signed by Geo. M. Ker, permit me to say that notwithstanding the fact that many newspapers criticised the Canadian Official Record, yet, personally I regret very much its discontinuance. It was well edited, and presented in a concise form much public information of real value to an editor, the call upon whose time, prevented his digging out the information for himself. As one inclined to support the principles which guided the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, throughout his useful public life, I feel it would be unjust, not to pay a tribute to not merely the Canadian Official Record itself, but as a rule to the editorial judgment and taste, which controlled its selections. Steady improvement marked it to the last issue.

I could continue quoting statements from all parts of Canada, by men of the press, by men connected with public and official bodies, by men at the head of labour organizations, who wrote unsolicited testimony to the department saying that what they wanted was more information; what they needed was fuller knowledge, and the Official Record gave it to them, and therefore, they were strongly in favour of its publication.

Let me mention one other aspect of the work of the department, and then I will pass from this item. In addition to the foregoing, the department issued and published pamphlets relating to the war, among which I shall mention only two—"Canada's War Effort," and "Canada's Part in the War." These pamphlets gave a concise account of what Canada had done in the war in every branch of the service. They were demanded by public school superintendents of the province for distribution to the teachers in the schools in order that those teachers might inform their scholars. The whole work was a campaign of education, so that the young and old alike might be fully posted as to Canada's war effort. Do hon. members say that that money was not well spent? This war was being waged, not merely by the Government, but by the whole people of Canada; every citizen was entitled to know what the Government was doing, and this department was aiding in informing the public in reference to the matter.

The hon. member made a reference to Colonel Cooper, who is head of the Dominion Bureau of Information in New York under the Department of External Affairs. I exceedingly regret that the hon. member for Guysborough and Antigonish (Mr. J. H. Sinclair) is not in the House to-night. He, in effect, suggested that Colonel Cooper had been a deputy returning officer in England in the elections of 1917; that the ballot box under his charge had been stuffed; and that the Government must find him a position and therefore appointed him to that post. The statement is absolutely false; the whole thing is concocted out of whole cloth, and I want to say a word or two in reference to it. Colonel Cooper had been in the Militia of Canada from his early manhood. He served in one of the Toronto regiments. In the fall of 1916 or early in 1917 the hon. member for Victoria (Sir Sam Hughes), then Minister of Militia, commissioned Col. Cooper to raise a battalion. He raised one of the finest battalions ever raised in Ontario; indeed, no finer battalion ever left the city of Toronto or this province or the shores of Canada than the one Col. Cooper raised. When the Fifth Division was broken up, this battalion had to be disbanded and the soldiers went to other regiments, and Col. Cooper reverted to the rank of major in order to get over to France and take part in the struggle there. He went over and he has a fine record in the war. The hon. member (Mr. J. H. Sinclair) quoted the Order in Council under which Col. Cooper was appointed, and that Order in Council referred back to the Order in Council authorizing the opening of the office. The latter Order in Council shows that in the month of February, 1919, it was decided that an office should be opened. For four months we were trying to get a man thoroughly qualified for the post, a newspaper man with military experience. After consultation with a number of the principal newspaper men in Canada Col. Cooper was sought out because of his qualifications for the service. A cable was sent overseas to ascertain if he was willing to accept, because we thought he was the best man, having had overseas service, to fill the position.

Mr. PROULX: Why the necessity for military experience?

Mr. ROWELL: It is the settled policy of this Government to give returned soldiers the preference in all important positions. When an appointment of this kind was to be made, we felt, if there was a soldier who had served overseas qualified for the post, he should have it, and it was our duty to search him out and find him. Moreover, we believed that, being a soldier with a military record, he could render more efficient service and would have a position and standing in the United States which a mere civilian who had not served in the war would not have, and it would be in the interest of Canada to have him there.

The hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough referring to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment said that a large number of payments had been made to officials which appeared in the Auditor General's Report, as unaccounted for and he cited some twenty or more names with certain amounts set down opposite them and some such words as "unaccounted for," and he sought to convey to the House and to the country the impression that a large number of officials of this department of the Government had received moneys for which they had given no account, and that the Government had not endeavoured to secure an accounting from them. What are the facts? These officials, I think, with scarcely an exception, were military officers or officials of the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Department. They were travelling, many of them coming from the Old Country to Canada, others travelling in Canada. They received their travelling expenses before the end of the fiscal year; they had not returned so as to render their account when the financial year closed, and, therefore, the money was unaccounted for. But since then, just as in all cases, the department has taken the matter up and has had the accounts adjusted. My hon. friend would have received the information if he had gone to the department and asked for it, or to the Auditor General and made inquiry to find out with reference to these items.

But without any such inquiry he gives this story to the House.

But the big complaint is the $121,000,000 which it is said has disappeared in some unaccountable way. I want to deal with that because it has formed a subject of discussion and debate in this House. Three hon. members of the Opposition, the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), the hon. member for Chambly and Verchères (Mr. Archambault) and the leader of the Opposition himself (Mr. Mackenzie King), have all put themselves back of the statement that the sum of $121,000,000 has disappeared and is not accounted for. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) mentioned this also, but I think it only fair to him to say that he expressly gave the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough as his authority for the statement. Let me quote what the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough said in reference to this matter:

> The amount that has disappeared without any account having been given is, roughly speaking, $121,000,000, and the question is, what has become of this $121,000,000? The minister does not know; the deputy does not know; the department does not know; the Auditor General does not know; and Parliament does not know. There is apparently not a scrap of paper in the possession of the Government to show what has become of that $121,000,000.

The hon. member prefaced that statement by reading a certain letter from the Auditor General written in September, 1917, which had no relation whatever to the item under consideration, having reference to a wholly different transaction—the overseas payments of a previous year. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a deliberate charge that $121,000,000 of this country's money has disappeared and that there is no record of it, that no one knows what has become of it—that it is utterly unaccounted for. You will be surprised, however, to find that this statement that the money has disappeared is not at all borne out by the Auditor General's Report. I will quote the exact words, because it is important that hon. members should see precisely what the item is. It is to be found on ZZ-228. It is headed:

Overseas Department of Militia and Defence.

It is the only item under that head.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the report?

Mr. ROWELL: The report is for the year ended 31st March, 1919. The item is as follows:

Expenditure by the Chief Paymaster on account of pay and other expenses of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, vouchers for which have not been received.

Observe, Mr. Speaker, that the item does not say "unaccounted for." The words are: "vouchers for which have not been received." Why have they not been received? For three reasons which I shall state. An arrangement was made, for reasons which I shall give, that they should not be sent to Canada. Two ships carrying vouchers had been sunk by German submarines and it was deemed in the public interest that these vouchers should be kept in England until the war was over. Further, by an arrangement to which the Auditor General himself was a party, it was agreed that, instead of sending the vouchers over and attempting to audit the accounts in Canada, building up a special audit staff here to handle these particular accounts, the matter should be dealt with overseas by having there, under the minister, an audit branch which would carry out the audit in England. Who was the Paymaster General? Brigadier-General J. G. Ross of Montreal, the head of the accounting firm of P. S. Ross and Son. I appeal through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux), who will tell you that there is no more honourable or efficient accountant or auditor in the city of Montreal or in the province of Quebec than Brigadier-General Ross. He was in charge of the pay office and had under him chartered accountants who checked every item in order to see that not a dollar was paid that was not due, thus protecting the public interest. Furthermore, an audit branch was established overseas under Colonel Dowie, a skilled chartered accountant and auditor, who reported direct to the Deputy Minister. And every night when the pay staff left the office, having concluded their work, the audit staff went in and every account was audited. The day's work was audited every night before the staff returned the next day.

Mr. ROBB: May I ask the minister if the auditors, Brigadier-General Ross and Colonel Dowie, were there as official representatives of the Auditor General of Canada?

Mr. ROWELL: No, they were not. Brigadier-General Ross was paymaster of the Canadian forces overseas, and in the performance of his duty was responsible for every dollar expended. My hon. friend knows Brigadier-General Ross. Will he question that gentleman's ability, or his honesty, or his capacity for the performance of those responsible duties? There is no answer. There can, of course, be none, because Brigadier-General Ross stands at the head of his profession, and the Government could not have chosen a better man for the duties which were discharged by him. I shall explain how the work was done, and every commonsense man will realize that the Government took every precaution which a Government could take to prevent the loss of a dollar of the people's money and to see that every dollar reached its proper destination and that not a dollar was wasted. In addition to the audit staff under Colonel Dowie, on the recommendation of the Auditor General, Mr. Sutherland—who has since become Auditor General of Canada—was appointed Assistant Auditor General for the express purpose of visiting the Old Country and examining conditions on the ground with a view to seeing that everything was carried out satisfactorily. Mr. Sutherland spent the greater part of the year 1917 in England, and he visited the Old Country again in 1919, doing that very work. He is not an official of the Government, he is an officer of the Parliament of Canada; he is the Auditor General of Canada and is not removable except by an Order of the Senate and the House of Commons. He is therefore absolutely independent of the Government and hon. gentlemen opposite can go to him and ask him how the work was carried out in England under Brigadier-General Ross and Colonel Dowie, and he will tell them that every precaution was taken to protect the public interest and to see that not a dollar of the people's money was misspent.

Mr. VIEN: Were they not obliged to make a detailed report somewhat similar to that which is submitted by the Auditor General of Canada?

Mr. ROWELL: They could not make a detailed audit without sending the vouchers. They did make a monthly report of the disbursements and I am going to inform the House in a few moments what those disbursements were. They made a monthly report to the Auditor General in order that he could keep track of the whole business from month to month, but without sending the vouchers there could be no means of checking the details. Let me say, further, that there is another reason why the vouchers could not be sent. Soldiers returning from the front on furlough or in case of disability or discharge desired to settle their accounts in England. How could they settle those accounts if the vouchers were over here? The soldiers often had doubts about payments of which they had forgotten the details, and the only records the department had were those signed by the soldiers, and they had to be kept for purposes of administration as well as for the other reasons I have mentioned. What the Auditor General's Report means is exactly what it says, that he has not received these vouchers. Any hon. gentleman can get from the Auditor General a full statement in reference to the matter. The vouchers are now here; they have come over since the war and there are a thousand boxes filled with vouchers. There are over 5,000,000 of these vouchers to be gone through if hon. gentlemen wish to go through them. The Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) told me the other day that in his department they had been checking through these vouchers, that they had spent weeks of time and $20,000 in payment of staff and that in the whole time they had only discovered an error of $300. I am going to read a letter from the Auditor General dealing with the matter.

Mr. JACOBS: Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that a very large number of these vouchers had been lost at sea—that they had been torpedoed?

Mr. ROWELL: No, I did not say so. I said that two vessels carrying vouchers had been lost at sea.

Mr. JACOBS: Do I understand that these are duplicate vouchers that are now being received?

Mr. ROWELL: These particular vouchers that have now come over were not lost, of course. The vouchers contained in these thousand boxes were not lost.

Mr. JACOBS: Can we be provided with duplicates of these vouchers as well as the vouchers that were lost at sea?

Mr. ROWELL: I cannot say that, but if my hon. friend will ask the Auditor General he will inform him; I cannot do so. I want to read this letter from the Auditor General dated May 26, 1920, and written to the Minister of Finance in reference to this item:

SIR,—Expenditure by Chief Paymaster, O.M.F.C. in London, $121,640,016.62 shown in Auditor General's Report, 1919—page ZZ 228. The bulk of this is composed of pay and allowances of our troops and separation allowances by dependents amounting to over $102,000,000.

The late Mr. Fraser, Auditor General, visited London at the close of 1916 to look into the matter of accounting and audit. On his return he wrote to Sir Thomas White as follows:

"As instructed in the Order in Council of the 16th September, 1916, I made an examination into the affairs of the Overseas Pay Office, in order to ascertain whether it was advisable to establish a branch of the Auditor General's office in London for a more complete and speedy audit of the war accounts.

After a thorough examination of the system in vogue and consultations with the Chief Paymaster, the General Auditor and members of the staff as well as with the Minister of War for Overseas, I came to the conclusion that certain changes were necessary to safeguard as far as possible, the expenditure of the public funds. One plan was to have certain changes made in the keeping of the accounts and the checking of the same by the existing pay and audit staff and the other, the organization of a large staff at Ottawa for audit purposes. The first plan seemed to me to be the better one, on the ground that it is better to prevent losses before they are made than to discover them afterwards. I want to feel that the work is done in such a manner that I can accept the same with a certain amount of confidence that the losses are reduced to a minimum. A certain amount of loss is inevitable. I found that the Imperial Government with all its experience and a well organized staff of experts are unable to prevent these losses.

A staff sufficient to make a thorough audit would cost at least $300,000 per annum while the recoveries might not be $5,000. It is useless to find out after a man is dead that he has been overpaid.

The changes that I suggested and that have been agreed upon with the Chief Paymaster and General Auditor are such that if faithfully carried out, ought to produce satisfactory results and I propose sending over a representative of this office to see that every reasonable means is taken to secure correctness and to render such assistance as he can to settle such questions as arise from time to time without awaiting for the slow process of submitting them to Ottawa and awaiting replies."

That is what the Auditor General himself says. There are two courses open—to accept the work of the pay and audit staffs over there, subject to certain changes which he said he would direct, or to establish a staff which would cost $300,000. The Auditor General himself recommended that the first course should be pursued because he thought it would save the money of the country.

An hon. MEMBER: Who was the Auditor General then?

Mr. ROWELL: That was Mr. Fraser. This is Mr. Sutherland's letter:

> I was sent to London and spent the greater part of 1917 there, and again in 1919 for some months.
>
> The Pay Office and Audit Office were under the direction of two thoroughly experienced men, viz.: Brigadier General J. G. Ross, (P. Ross & Sons, Montreal) and Col. L. A. Dowie, chartered accountant, Canada and London, with a large staff attached to each office.
>
> An individual ledger account was kept for every man on the overseas forces so that it can readily be seen how impossible it would have been to carry on an audit here.

You see the present Auditor General says it would have been impossible to carry on the audit here.

> It had to be done on the spot and kept up to date. This office was furnished month by month by the Paymaster General with a statement showing the expenditure under various heads, but owing to the risk of loss of vouchers during ocean transport, it was considered advisable to discontinue sending them to Ottawa.

It is not my statement but the Auditor General's statement is that owing to losses through ocean transportation it was considered desirable to discontinue shipping the vouchers. My hon. friend asks: "Why were the Auditor General's requests in the letters of 1917 not complied with"? Because, in view of this German submarine warfare the vouchers upon which the accuracy and certification of the accounts of the Government of Canada in relation to the overseas forces depended were too precious to be at the disposal of German submarines on the Atlantic. Therefore, they were not sent to Ottawa. Then he adds:

> Two shipments were lost in transit. I understand that all Overseas Military Forces of Canada vouchers and records are now in Canada.

I have just one or two further comments to make. The letter which the hon. gentleman referred to as being written in 1917 asking for the vouchers was written while Mr. Sutherland was in England. Mr. Sutherland cannot explain why it was written because he was there at the time as the representative of the Auditor General for the purpose of checking these accounts. He was appointed specially as Assistant Auditor General for the purpose of auditing these accounts. I have given to the House the facts in connection with the whole transaction. I have pointed out that the $102,000,000 was pay and allowances of the men. These payments extend from the first of April, 1918, to the 31st March, 1919. The transaction did not need an explanation. My hon. friends have only to turn up the Auditor General's report. They will find no item in that report for the pay of the men overseas except this item. Did my hon. friend from Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) think that our gallant men went from 1918 to 1919 without pay? There is no other item but this to be found covering the pay of our men overseas. Then I say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough, the hon. member for Chambly-Vercheres, and now the leader of the Opposition, having put themselves behind the statement that the sum of $121,000,000 has disappeared and is unaccounted for—

Mr. DEVLIN: That is right.

Mr. ROWELL: My hon. friend says, "That is right." Does he consider it right that these hon. gentlemen should put themselves behind that false statement?

Mr. DEVLIN: No. I say that is right because the minister has been arguing that the submarine went to the bottom of the sea.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DEVLIN: That is that the vouchers went to the bottom.

Mr. ROWELL: I repeat having put themselves behind a false statement prejudicial to the interests of Canada they should now withdraw it. I have in my hand a statement furnished by the Auditor General of the details of this item, compiled from the returns received by him here in Ottawa, from month to month, during the year, and I will read it, giving only the round numbers so that it may be placed upon Hansard. The statement is as follows:

Department O.M.F.C., page ZZ-228 Auditor General's Report, 1918-19.

Expenditure by Paymaster General—Gross..	$129,308,233 14
Less refunds..	7,668,216 52
	$121,640,016 62

Details of this amount are.—
Pay and allowances	93,019,592	86
Separation allowances	9,497,120	83
Maintenance of Canadians in non-Canadian hospitals	1,388,597	35
Civilian pay	730,716	25
Food and subsistence	8,267,428	19
Rent, water, light and fuel	862,930	94
Transport and travelling	2,149,085	08
Veterinary equipment, stores and expenses	473,872	44
Ordnance stores and supplies	3,002,124	39
Purchase of remounts	1,159	84
Guns and ammunition	2,770,670	23
Engineer services and works	535,832	75
Clothing and necessaries	929,316	42
Boots	256,638	19
Outfit allowance	1,789,396	70
Drugs and surgical instruments	288,278	26
Printing and stationery	39,930	93
Cables, telegrams, telephones and postage	199,623	39
Conservancy and contingencies	87,853	97
War service gratuities	85,374	39
	$126,375,543	40
Maintenance Canadian troops in France
Maintenance Canadian troops in England
Subject to recovery from Imperial Government	705,040	18
	$127,080,583	58
Sundry credits	30,944	71
Carried forward—net expenditure	$127,049,638	87
Paymasters' and Disbursing Officers' cash balances on hand 31st March, 1919, refunded to credit of Receiver General and credited in accounts of 1919-20	2,258,594	27
	$129,308,233	14
Less received from sales and other sources, deposited to credit of Receiver General during 1918-19	7,668,216	52
	$121,640,016	62

Mr. EDWARDS: Another bubble burst.

An hon. MEMBER: Worse than a bubble.

Mr. ROWELL: Now that is the position with reference to that item. I make this appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite. At a time such as this, when the country must impose new obligations, when there must be new burdens of taxation, when my hon. friends find they have made a wholly false charge and false statement, they owe it to themselves, to this House, and to the country to publicly retract and withdraw that statement. It reflects on the credit and honour of our overseas military forces, on the whole of the paymasters' branch; it reflects on the credit and honour of the Auditor General who himself made the arrangement; it reflects of course on the administration of the Government of the day, but that is not so important.

More important by far is the fact that it reflects upon the Dominion of Canada. For if $121,000,000 of the country's money has disappeared without any account for it, it suggests gross incompetence, or maladministration, or graft in handling public funds by your overseas military forces. Therefore I say to my hon. friends opposite that they owe it to the House and to the country to make a public retraction and withdrawal of that statement.

An hon. MEMBER: They do not retract.

Mr. ROWELL: The hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough made one more statement to which I desire to draw attention. He took an answer that was given to a question in reference to appointments to the Civil Service since the Armistice was signed, and he says that the answer shows that 27,130 were appointed, and he assumes that of this number 25,000 are still in the public service. The hon. gentleman estimates that these appointees would get an average of $2,000 apiece and in that case, he says, the addition to our public expenditure on that account for the year would be $50,000,000. He asks, "Is it any wonder that the country is going into debt at the rate of a million a day?" Mr. Speaker, the House and the country will be surprised to learn that the total salaries of the entire Civil Service of Canada, permanent and temporary—I am not now dealing with seasonal employments, that is, men who are employed on ships or otherwise merely for the season, nor am I dealing with the country postmasters paid under different conditions—the total salary bill will not exceed, apart from bonus, $50,000,000. Let me point out the situation: Dealing with the classes that I have mentioned the approximate number of employees, permanent and temporary, at the date of the signing of the Armistice was 43,000. The approximate number of employees, permanent and temporary, of the same classes, on March 20 of the present year, was 48,000, an increase of 5,000. Now let me tell you how that increase arises. There has been an increase of 657 in the Department of Finance caused by the imposition of new forms of taxation. It was absolutely essential that the necessary staff should be appointed in order to administer those laws. There has been an increase of 1,257 in the Soldiers' Settlement Board, and it was absolutely essential that that board should be manned to carry on its important work. Does anybody question that? Then there were 6,296 appointed in the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, which is so essential for the re-establishment of our soldiers in civil life; and 275 on the staff of the Board of Pensions Commissioners. Thus there was an aggregate increase in those four departments of 8,485. Those were necessary increases; they were for purposes that arose after the war, not during the war—purposes growing out of the war, for which the staffs had to be created. But the Government has set itself to the task of reducing the staffs that were built up during the war, and let me give you some facts in that connection. Since the Armistice, the Department of Customs has released 160 employees; the Department of Militia and Defence has released 2,627; the Department of Naval Service has released 103; the Post Office Department, 248; and the Printing Bureau—including 40 that went out yesterday—356, or a total of 3,494.

It is much easier to get in new employees than to get them out. But the Government has set itself resolutely to the task of decreasing the staffs in the various branches of the Civil Service to the minimum required for efficiency. One branch in which the Government has acted is the Printing Bureau, and I want to give to the House one or two facts to show what has been accomplished there. We have, as I mentioned, released 356 employees from the Printing Bureau. In October, 1919, the payroll was approximately $115,000 a month; in March of this year it had been reduced to $90,000; by June it will be down to $73,000—a total reduction of $42,000 per month. In other words, we will have the payroll on a basis per month that will show a yearly saving of not less than $500,000 for this one branch of the service alone. The re-organization which has been brought about, placing the Printing Bureau on a sound business basis, will enable us to reduce the annual expenditure by $200,000 more, and we estimate that when these savings have all gone into effect the total annual saving in this particular branch of the service will be not less than $700,000. And with what result? To-day we are turning out more printing and better printing, with a smaller staff after effecting that great saving in public expenditure. That is but an illustration of what this Government is doing to put the administrative organization of the country on a sound business basis and to save money for the people.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, when the Government is engaged in this difficult task of protecting the public interest, what does it meet with from hon. members opposite but captious criticism and false statements as to the facts?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANNON: Order. I ask the hon. minister to withdraw that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. CANNON: I will not sit down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I understand that the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) has risen to a point of order, and is asking that the hon. minister withdraw the words "false statements"?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Unless the hon. minister attributes a false statement to an hon. member, adding that it was made deliberately, knowingly or maliciously, I cannot rule that the expression must be withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister said—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I am sorry if the hon. member did not sufficiently explain his point of order before the ruling was given. Under the rules, it cannot now be discussed.

Mr. CANNON: I think it would be better if we were allowed to discuss it.

Mr. ROWELL: It is true the war is over, but the use of poison gas does not appear to have ceased.

Mr. PARENT: Is that a false statement?

Mr. DEVLIN: It is one of those mean insinuations that the minister makes. Oh, it is mean. Take it back. That is too mean.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ROWELL: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will cease his murmuring and grumbling under his breath—

Some hon. MEMBERS: It is getting under their skin.

Mr. ROWELL:—I will say again that if hon. members make statements without due inquiry or without taking the trouble to ascertain the facts—

Mr. WHITE (Victoria): That is not what you said.

Mr. ROWELL: I make the statement—

Mr. CANNON: Order.

Mr. McMASTER: I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McMASTER: I ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is in order for a hon. minister or an hon. member—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McMASTER:—to accuse other members of making false statements.

Some hon. MEMBERS: He did not.

Mr. McMASTER: When he does that, in my humble opinion not only is his language unmannerly, but it is unparliamentary—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McMASTER:—and the hon. minister is out of order.

Mr DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have already decided what is practically the same point. The ruling of the Chair is that an hon. minister who is in possession of facts which an hon. member may possibly not have, can state in this House that a statement is false, or untrue, provided he does not add the words, "knowingly," "willingly" or "maliciously" or other words having the same effect and meaning.

Mr. ROWELL: So much for the charges that have been made with reference to public expenditure, Mr. Speaker, I have given you a sample of the character of the criticism that is being launched against the Government, and I think I have satisfied both sides of the House that there is no basis for such criticism. I now return to a more congenial task, for I confess I would rather explain some matter not so controversial as is an exposure of the inconsistencies and inaccuracies of my hon. friends.

Now, I want to refer to the current Estimates and to put on record one or two facts in connection with a matter which I conceive to be of importance in view of the suggestion made, particularly by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar), that the Government is not yet paying its way. I think my hon. friend misunderstood the financial statement made by the Minister of Finance, because I am sure he would not knowingly misstate the situation.

The total Estimates brought down to the House so far, including the Supplementary Estimates for Civil Service bonus, amount to $549,000,000. The Minister of Finance pointed out that we had maturing obligations this year amounting to $74,000,000, making a total of $623,000,000 which the Government must provide for, in addition to such sums as may be included in the further Supplementary Estimates. Now, how is that money to be provided? Let me point out that included in the $623,000,000 are what may certainly be termed productive investments. Hon. members may differ as to some of these, but I think it is a fair description of them. First come loans to the provinces for housing, $13,300,000. Then there is the actual expenditure on the building of ships to be owned and operated by the Government, amounting to $20,000,000. There is an item for advances to the Soldiers' Settlement Board in carrying on its work, amounting to $50,000,000; I believe the returned soldier will make good and repay this money. For the construction and betterment of railways there is an amount of $6,000,000; and for railway equipment $17,000,000. These items make a total of $106,000,000. I would describe those as "productive investments." Then there is $74,000,000 of obligations maturing which must be met, giving us a total of $180,000,000. The Minister of Finance has estimated that he has from cash on hand and accounts outstanding, including balances due from Great Britain, assets from which he expects to realize not less than $190,000,000. It is money coming in, and it is capital payment. It is simply a conversion of our assets from one form into another. We have accounts payable to Canada which we propose to collect and invest the proceeds as I have mentioned, and this we believe to be in the public interest. We have other accounts coming in which we propose to use to discharge this obligation of $74,000,000 maturing; it is simply the discharge of an obligation and the conversion of one asset into another; we have the money in hand, or coming in, for the purpose.

Now, let us look at the balance. We have an estimated income of $381,000,000, less the reduction in the tariff tax by reason of the dropping of the 7½ per cent, estimated at $31,000,000. We shall not lose the whole of that $31,000,000 this year, because the tax has been on for a month and a half. But assuming that we lose the whole of it and deducting the $31,000,000, it leaves us, on the basis estimated by the Finance Minister an income of $351,000,000 entirely apart from all the new forms of taxation imposed. The Minister of Finance has not given the House an estimate of the amount he will receive from these new forms of taxation, because of the extreme difficulty of forming an accurate estimate. How much we will get from the luxury tax, the sales tax and the other taxes it is difficult to say, but I am quite sure that the Minister of Finance does not expect to get less than a clear $100,000,000 from these new forms of taxation. I believe he expects more. I am going to put another $100,000,000, therefore, under the heading of income; and that gives us $451,000,000 to meet the balance of the Estimates amounting to $443,000,000. In other words, the Minister of Finance has brought down a Budget by means of which he undertakes to provide through current taxation a sum more than sufficient to discharge all the expenditures he has proposed to the House, apart from this conversion of assets and payment of the maturing liabilities to which I have referred.

Now, let me point out the character of the expenditures included in that $443,000,000. In providing from taxation $443,000,000, what is the hon. minister achieving? He is covering not only all the ordinary expenditure; he is providing the whole cost of completing demobilization, $38,000,000, which in past years was the subject of a special vote; was added to our capital expenditure, and formed part of our war debt. This year the Minister of Finance proposes to meet that out of current taxation. He provides in the Estimates for loans to the Canadian National Railway, $48,600,000, and other capital expenditure, $15,189,000. So, I repeat, the statement submitted to the House shows an honest and courageous effort on the part of the Minister of Finance to secure revenues not only to meet all ordinary expenditures but to meet these other very large expenditures which in the past we have considered as capital expenditures.

One word further Mr. Speaker, about our position at the present time. We have, as you are aware, not only accomplished this, but our public debt to-day—by way of comparison—is substantially less than the public debt of Great Britain, France, Australia, New Zealand, every country which was engaged in the war except the United States, and she was only a year and a half in the war. When conditions were unsettled in the early part of last year the Government adopted the courageous policy of asking the people to carry on, and under conditions which looked as if there might be a cessation of industry, made provision for credits to enable the country to carry on. And what has been the result? Our foreign trade last year was $166,000,000 ahead of our foreign trade of the year before. Our total foreign trade reached the enormous sum of $2,351,000,000; in addition, of course, there was the enormous home trade. The Minister of Finance has pointed out that in the five years, ending 31st March, 1915, our excess of imports over exports was $825,000,000. That is to say, the balance of trade was adverse during those five years to the extent of $825,000,000. In the five years ended 31st March, 1920, we wiped out that adverse balance of trade and have to our credit for the five years a favourable balance of $1,803,000,000. If you compare the two periods, taking the five years before the war, with an adverse balance of $825,000,000, and the five years since, with a favourable balance of $1,803,000,000, you will see that the balance of trade changed during that period a total of $2,628,000,000, or over $500,000,000 a year.

Something has been said about inflation. There has been inflation of credit in all countries engaged in this war. But we have maintained our gold reserve, as the Minister of Finance pointed out, in our banks and the Government at 43 per cent, as compared with Great Britain's 26 per cent, and the United States' 55 per cent. The Federal Reserve Bank requirement in the United States is 40 per cent, and we have maintained ours during the war at 3 per cent above that requirement. Our bank deposits, as the Minister of Finance intimated, have almost doubled in the last five years. During that period we have added to the bank deposits of Canada a sum almost equal to all the accumulated bank deposits from Confederation up to the beginning of that period. Our debt is funded, after the liabilities that I have mentioned are disposed of, over a twenty-year period.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) painted a picture the other evening in speaking on this matter. Referring to the statement of the former Minister of Finance (Sir Thomas White) as to conditions in 1912, he made this statement:

> That, Sir, is the story of fifteen years of Liberal fiscal policy as described by my hon. friend: fifteen years of peace and plenty, fifteen years of blessed peace, fifteen years of joyous plenty, fifteen years of splendid progress, fifteen years of wonderful prosperity! Let us frame and glaze this statement; let us post it on the walls of the country; let us frame and glaze it and put it into every household, and office and factory, so that men may look upon it and say, "Ah, yes, that is the story of the good old days. Pray Heaven that it may come back again."

I am not disposed to criticise that statement of the hon. member. That was a great period of peace and progress in Canada's history. But I want to ask my hon. friend, the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), and I am sorry he is not in his seat, what he would have said if, instead of being a member of the Government during a period of peaceful progress and uninterrupted development and expansion in Canada, he had been a member of a Government which at a time of grave national stress carried forward to a victorious conclusion the greatest war in history; which completed the raising, training, equipping, sending overseas, and finally demobilizing of 600,000 men; which ended the war with our national debt funded over a twenty-year period, with our war securities practically at par, as against the United States substantially below par, and with our national debt much smaller by comparison than that of Great Britain, France, Australia, New Zealand or any other country at war, with the exception of the United States, which had been only a year and a half in the war; which so administered the business and financial affairs of Canada and stimulated the productivity of our people that for the five-year period ending 31st March, 1920, our foreign trade showed a favourable balance of over $1,800,000 as against an adverse balance of over $800,000,000 in the preceding five years; which practically doubled our bank deposits and brought our borrowing largely within our own borders, so that the Canadian people hold practically 75 per cent of our Government securities.

If the hon. member had been a member of the Government that had accomplished this, would he say: "Let us frame it and glaze it and hang it up? If my hon. friend had been a member of a government during those years of stress and had accomplished that result, he would have said: "Nay, blaze it upon the skies so that all men may see." He would pray not that old times might come again, but thank God that in the hour of the nation's need, in the struggle that Canada faced and in the throes through which she was passing, she had a Government with vision, courage and practical ability—vision to see the need, courage to apply the measures necessary to meet the need, and ability to execute those measures, so that to-day both at home and abroad Canada stands in a higher position than at any previous time in her history.

I had expected to conclude my remarks by this time; but I should like to say a word or two in connection with our financial proposals and particularly in reference to the address of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). The hon. member explained to the House in great detail why the Opposition had not submitted the tariff platform adopted last August. He said: " Why, if we had submitted the platform adopted in August, we could not have expected you to accept it." In effect he said "we submitted a proposal which we thought you might accept." The hon. member is not such an amateur in Parliamentary and constitutional practice as not to know that the Government cannot accept any amendment to the Budget, but he gave another reason, it was the real reason—it was the only thing they could all agree upon. I have before me the speech of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), in which you will remember he practically said that he was in search of a sound and safe tariff policy. He used the words "sound and safe." He said that he could not expect such a policy from the Conservatives. He said that he could not expect it from the farmers; that their policy was neither sound nor safe. This is what he said as reported on page 2584 of Unrevised Hansard:

> Where, then, are you going to get it?

That is referring to the "sound and safe" tariff policy.

> Shall we get it from the platform of our farmer friends? Sir, I do not think their platform if carried out would give us the sound policy which I desire, and I hope to be able to show them—at all events I hope they will find that it is wise to modify some of their views.

The hon. member in moving his amendment was repudiating the Farmers' platform, was moving a vote of want of confidence in the policy of my hon. friends. He said that they did not provide a sound and safe policy. Then my hon. friend came to the platform adopted by the so called Liberal convention of August last, and he said, referring to the Liberal policy:

> I do not even think we can expect to get a sound and safe tariff policy by a too rigid adherence to every line and every letter of the Liberal tariff platform.

This amendment is a vote of want of confidence in the platform adopted by the Liberals last August. It is submitted in the present form because it is all they can agree upon. My surprise is that my hon. friends of the Agrarian Opposition are supporting an amendment the mover of which says, in effect, that it is a vote of want of confidence in their platform. I am even more surprised that my hon. friends in the Liberal Opposition are supporting an amendment the mover of which says that it is a vote of want of confidence in the platform adopted by them last August, because that platform does not provide a sound and safe tariff policy. The hon. member (Mr. Fielding) provides what he considers a sound and safe tariff policy, and in some respects there is no very great objection to it, if we were now revising the whole tariff schedules. The hon. member, when in power, made certain revisions of the tariff with which I will deal in a moment, revisions which I approved and supported, which I still approve and support. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark), in speaking on this amendment, said that the reference in the amendment criticising the Government for failure to revise the tariff this session was not fair nor just to the Government. I do not recall his exact words, but that was the substance of them. He said that under the conditions which existed, it was not reasonable to expect that the Government could bring down a revision of the tariff at this time. The reason he gave for supporting the Opposition amendment was that it spoke of a revision downwards, whereas the Government had promised a revision but did not say that it was downwards.

I want to look just for a moment at the tariff situation. My hon. friends on the other side are professing to be the sole representatives of those who are concerned for the welfare of the masses of the people. The leader of the Opposition, dealing with this matter at great length, said that the Government had not lightened at all the burden upon the consumer; that they had not in any way relieved the people of this country from the burden of taxation, nor done anything to diminish the high cost of living. My hon. friend gave as his method to accomplish those particular purposes a reduction in the tariff. I am not going to enter into a discussion to-night as to how far the one affects the other.

I desire to submit to the House certain facts in connection with the matter. When the tariff was revised in 1897 the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), then Minister of Finance, in his Budget Speech estimated that the total reduction in revenue due to the tariff revision would be $706,000. In 1907 he estimated it at $300,000, but he stated that he was putting on another tax on sugar equal to $300,000 so that the one would offset the other. I am taking the $300,000 however as a reduction. In other words there was a reduction of $1,000,000 in those two revisions of the tariff in 1897 and 1907. In 1911 the hon. member submitted to this House an agreement which, if adopted, would have reduced the tariff taxation by $1,412,000. Now, I am quite prepared to give my hon. friend credit not only for the actual reductions he brought about but for the reductions he proposed and endeavoured to bring about, and the two added together would give us, in the fifteen years of office of the Liberals, $2,412,000 of reduction in the tariff burden, either accomplished or attempted.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has described the members on this side of the House by various names. We are composed on this side of two groups, Liberal-Unionists and Conservative-Unionists, who are supporting the present Administration. What have the Liberal-Unionists, in co-operation with their Conservative colleagues, done in two years? They reduced the tariff burden of taxation last year $17,000,000 and this year $31,000,000, whereas the whole Liberal party, of which I was a member, working together, effected or proposed a reduction of $2,412,000 in fifteen years. In view of this fact, Mr. Speaker, are not the Liberals on this side of the House and the Conservatives doing pretty well? Do they not deserve some credit for the fact that in two years they have brought about a reduction of $48,000,000, twenty times as much as the Liberal party did in fifteen years?

Mr. LEGER: Wonderful.

Mr. ROWELL: It is wonderful, but my hon. friend does not realize it.

Mr. CANNON: The country does.

Mr. ROWELL: We have done this without imperilling any industry in the country and, I believe, to the substantial relief of the consumer.

I turn now to the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the year 1918 and I find in connection with the imports entered for consumption the average rates of duty collected. In that report I see the average rate of duty on all goods entered for consumption from 1867 down to 1918 and upon inquiry from the Finance Department I find that the average rate of duty last year was 17.61 per cent on all goods entered for consumption. The reduction in duty made this year by the repeal of the 7½ per cent on the basis of the imports of last year will bring the average rate of duty down to 14.67 per cent, the lowest rate of duty in Canada since the year 1878 when it was a little over 14 per cent. I submit, therefore, that hon. members on this side of the House who believe in a reduction of duties have very strong and sound reasons for supporting the Government and voting against the amendment. I say with every confidence that men can well support a government that has done in two and a half years what I have stated, as opposed to my hon. friend's opposite who in fifteen years accomplished one-twentieth of our achievement. In addition, I believe that the tariff does need a thorough revision that the duties on many articles should be substantially reduced. The Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) has promised a thorough revision of the tariff, and while hon. members have discussed protection and free trade, the thing which really affects the people of Canada in the last analysis is the tariff schedule. I am not going to enter to-night into a discussion of the relative merits of protection and free trade. Hon. members will see the tariff schedules when the tariff is revised and brought down, and they will see what the policy of the Government is in this matter. If at that time hon. members find that the tariff has not been so revised as to meet the situation existing in Canada as they believe it should be met, then they will be justified in voting against the Government. But not until then will the tariff schedules be fairly before the members of the House.

One word in conclusion. The hon. member referred to the organization of this Government and stated that its mandate had expired. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the statement issued by the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden), with the full support and approval of all his colleagues, at the time the Union Government was formed. That statement sets out quite clearly the objects for which the Government was formed and the task to which it committed itself. I am not going to read the statement to the House to-night, but I may point out that the first plank, and the first plank only, dealt with the vigorous prosecution of the war, every other plank of the platform deals with problems either growing out of the war or relating to peace, showing that it was the clear intention at the time the Government was formed that while its main and chief duty was to prosecute the war, the other tasks resting upon the Government should not be shirked or ignored, and that the Government must face them and undertake to perform them. Let me say to my hon. friends that the Liberals and the Conservatives on this side of the House will not refer to hon. members opposite, who sought to prevent this Government from being formed and from securing the mandate necessary to prosecute the war, the question of when that mandate should expire.

Mr. ROBB: Are we to infer that the ex-Minister of Public Works stated the position when he resigned from the Government?

Mr. ROWELL: Every hon. member of the Government is entitled to take whatever position he considers to be right, and if he desires to withdraw from the Government he is entitled to do so.

Mr. PARENT: A happy family.

Mr. ROWELL: Let me say this to my hon. friends. The hon. gentleman knows that the Prime Minister promised that the War-time Elections Act should be for the period of the war only and that a new election law would be passed for times of peace; and this Government could not have been dissolved and a general election held at any time since the Armistice was signed up to this hour, because there is not yet a franchise law on the statute book under which an election could be conducted.

Mr. DEVLIN: Whose fault?

Mr. ROWELL: The fault this session has not been due to the members on this side of the House.

Mr. CANNON: What about last year?

Mr. ROWELL: There was an understanding last year between the leaders that the Franchise Bill would be introduced at this session and that there should be no election until the Bill was passed. The time has not yet arrived when the Government could have resolved into its original elements or dissolved and gone to the country because there has been no election machinery available under which an election could be held. The members on this side of the House recognize their duty to the country and they will discharge it. My hon. friend said that the Government should be defeated because it had a war mind. I do not think anybody will charge my hon. friends opposite with having a war mind. Certainly when the war was on it was a good thing for Canada that we had a war mind but in the days of peace and reconstruction we have a mind for peace and reconstruction.

We submitted progressive masures to this House last session and asked the House to adopt them in the interests of the country. Who has opposed those progressive measures in this House? We introduced the Women's Franchise Bill which has doubled the electorate of this country and given the women the franchise on the same basis as the men. The only opposition came from hon. gentlemen opposite. We introduced a Bill permitting women to sit in this House and the only criticism came from hon. gentlemen opposite. We have put through a great measure of Civil Service reform. We have introduced many measures dealing with social reconstruction. The hon. leader of the Opposition referred to the resolution of the Liberal convention relating to care for the public health. Were the delegates gathered in that assembly not aware of the fact that upon the initiation of this Government a Department of Public Health was created at the first session of this Parliament last year and that it is doing magnificent work? This Government has introduced measures providing for technical education, for housing, for temperance and for other advances in the realm of social reconstruction. The only opposition has come from hon. gentlemen opposite. Practically speaking, the progressive forces of this country have been on this side of the House. In addition to these measures of social reconstruction, the Government has dealt courageously with the railway situation, they have put an end to private railway exploitation at the public expense. They are giving Canada a truly national system of railways. Where do hon. gentlemen opposite stand on that question? Real liberalism, the real progressive forces, have been on this side of the House. The reactionary forces have been on the other side of the House. The opposition to the measures that I have mentioned has come from the other side. I exempt the hon. gentlemen who sit at the other end of the Chamber, the Agrarian group. I do not believe that they represent the reactionary elements. I think that in some respects they are a little too radical perhaps, in some not so radical, but they at least are moving ahead along certain progressive lines which they think are in the public interest or in the interest of the farmers' group.

I do not think we can settle the tariff in this country just according to the likes of the farmers on the one hand or the manufacturing interests on the other. I do not believe a tariff policy prepared and promoted by the manufacturing interests would be in the public interests of Canada any more than the policy prepared and promoted by the farmers in the interests of a class. I believe it is vastly more important that there should be a good understanding between the people of the East and the West than that there should be any particular rate of tariff. It should be the bounden duty of the Government of this country to so frame the tariff that it will meet the views of reasonable men both East and West in order that we may present a united front as Canadian people in carrying on our industrial development in competition with the great nation to the south and in the extension of our trade with the other nations of the world. I should like to discuss the other taxation proposals on the Budget but time will not permit. We must if we are to sustain the financial load that rests upon our shoulders accept the burdens of increased taxation. It may be that there should be some slight amendments to the Budget resolutions but people must be prepared to pay the cost of the war. Some of them have felt the burden very little up to this time and I have not a great deal of sympathy for or patience with any class of men who are able to pay and who object to taxation at the present time. If anybody can devise a better or more equitable basis for raising revenues than the Government has proposed, I would like him to submit it to the House and personally I am sure that many on this side would support it.

10 p.m.

What we want is a policy fair to all, with special privileges to none; a policy that seeks to unite the Canadian people as a whole, not in sections or in classes, that Canada may achieve in the future a destiny worthy of the glorious traditions of the past and of the honourable name our troops have won for her in that momentous struggle now so happily ended.

Mr. G. W. ANDREWS (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, the subject on which I desire at once to speak is indemnities for members. Seven dollars a day is not enough to pay the expense of a poor man at the present time. While it is quite true, Mr. Speaker, that the House is not in session every day, it is equally true that a member's work, like a woman's, is never done; and if he happens to be a married man and is compelled to support two homes on $209 a month, it is quite impossible. I am well aware that war widows and many of their dependents have to do with a great deal less; but two blacks never made a white yet, and it is my experience that men who are willing to work for less than a living wage are mighty poor providers for war widows or anybody else.

The Budget makes no provision for increased indemnities either for members or ministers, and that, in my opinion, is a very frank admission of incompetence on the part of members of this House. I had hoped that the right hon. the leader of the Government (Sir Robert Borden), the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Crerar) would have got together and discussed this question in a non-political way.

The second subject on which I wish to speak is this: Apparently money is more highly valued and more sacred in the eyes of this Government than human life. I have recently placed in the hands of the Chairman of the Pensions Commissioners specific cases where the whole family of sons have been killed, have been sacrificed in this war. The whole family of sons; sons upon whom had been lavished the savings of a lifetime. The poor mother of those boys applies for a pension, but before she can get one she has to prove that she is a pauper. Even after the pension of $40 a month is granted, some kind friend gives her work to eke out that pension, and along comes the Government Supervisor and takes the pension away, as by law he is compelled to do. How does this, Mr. Speaker, and hon. gentlemen, compare with a man who loaned the Government a thousand dollars? Is he compelled to prove pauperism before he draws his interest? Is it necessary before he draws interest for him to prove that he is not making more than $40 a month? We have been told by the Minister of Finance, and with him I am glad to agree, that it is time we tackled our present problems with the same spirit with which our men tackled the war. At least twice this session I have heard hon. members decry the war spirit, but I am glad to agree with the Minister of Finance that the sooner we get a little of the war spirit into this country and into this House the sooner we will progress. When the Government ran short of fighting men, what did it do? It passed a Military Service Act calling to the colours all able-bodied men between certain ages—whether they wanted to come or not. What recompense does the Government give to the parents of those sons who are lying in France? It places a tax on luxurious living—luxurious living made possible by the lack of taxation by the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance. It is not necessary for me to labour this point. It is apparent to all that just as in war some men get a lot out of it, others have got it in the neck. What attempt has been made by this Budget to adjust the burden between the two? Apparently none. The man who fought the war at great personal loss comes here to find that he is not even exempt from the special burdens of war taxes. Now to illustrate that—it seems to be very hard to get over—I will tell you a little western story: A bunch of traders were coming down from the North with a very rich pack of furs, when they were beset by Indians and surrounded. Out of their number two young men volunteered to try to break the cordon and bring relief. They were successful in getting through to a cavalry post, and they returned and drove off the Indians. But in doing so one of the men who had volunteered lost his life, and both their horses were killed. The rich traders were very delighted to think that their pack had been saved; they gave the returning man a small gratuity—and charged him up for both horses. The rich traders of this country are charging up the men who fought with their uniforms—the ones who had the luck to get back—whilst the men who enriched themselves during the war are largely allowed to hang on to their wealth.

With the permission of the House I will read a letter received from a friend of mine on this subject. I may say that I have collected all kinds of evidence of the large fortunes that have been made during the war, but I think sufficient evidence is already before the House without bothering you with any more of it. While an attempt has been made through the business profits tax, and other taxes, to get after this great wealth it is perfectly well-known to the members of this House and the people of this country that some men have made great fortunes. The letter in question sets forth:

> The impression is gaining ground that a number of corporations and companies are planning to escape their business profits tax through the agency of mergers and by increasing their capitalization, largely through the process of common stock. It is also generally believed that many of them have not paid, and are not paying, as much as they should, for the reason that they are charging up excessive amounts to overhead, depreciation, expenditure, etc. This is defeating the purpose of the tax, and should not be tolerated.
>
> A company paying dividends of 7 per cent now 10 per cent must pay 25 per cent in business profits tax, and when the profits exceed 15 per cent the tax is increased to 50 per cent.

I need not go into the details of that, they are well known to all the members, but I will take the next clause in the letter:

This means that companies paying big profits on actual capitalization must pay large sums to the Government. This was the purpose of the legislation, and Parliament had this in mind when it passed the Act. A number of big companies, apparently in order to escape these high rates, are issuing bonuses in the form of new stock to shareholders—doubling trebling, quadrupling, and in same cases increasing their capitalization by at least five times. The purpose is to give the shareholders as big a return on their money as they receive through a high rate of profit on the smaller capitalization. It is being arranged so that dividends do not range much higher than 7 per cent on the face of things, and on that basis, the Business Profits Tax is practically escaped, while in reality the dividends are in some cases four and five times the modest earning of seven per cent. In the case of the . . . . . Paper Company, the process of reorganization and re-capitalization, means that each shareholder is being given five shares under the new capitalization for each one previously held by him, the effect being to raise the actual capitalization from about $5,000,000 to approximately $25,000,000. Under the previous capitalization the business profits tax on earnings over 20 per cent would have netted the Government a very substantial sum. Under the new capitalization 20 per cent earnings will be spread over five times the capitalization, with the result that, while there is actually no more capital invested than previously the Government will get next to nothing through its Business Profits Tax.

The Business Profits Tax paid by the companies going into the British Empire Steel Corporation Merger should be thoroughly gone into. It looks as though one of the purposes of this merger is to enable the companies entering it to dodge the tax. The big ones such as the Dominion Steel, Nova Scotia Steel and Iron, Canada Steamships, Canada Foundry and Forgings, and others, will exchange their shares for 7 per cent preferred, plus a nice bonus in the way of common stock. This new stock will, at the beginning, amount to over $200,000,000, and will be further increased to $500,000,000, with a further prospect of a capitalization, of $1,000,000,000 by keeping dividends down to 7 per cent and lower, the business profits tax will be dodged. It will be a very serious matter for the country if a number af the largest companies in Canada are allowed to escape in this way. Canada Steamships, Limited, which is supposed to have paid $1,215,000 in taxes on its 1918 business, would thus practically escape altogether. The same thing applies to others. It would be nothing less than a national crime if this were to be allowed. The little fellows are paying their taxes; the big fellows should be made to pay theirs. The searchlight of publicity should be thrown on the whole subject, for Parliament and the country have a right to know the facts.

It looks to me as though the big fellows had made a rich haul and they are now salting it down.

On page 1866 of Hansard of the second session of 1919, volume 2, I find the following words spoken by the then acting leader of the Government (Sir George Foster):

No nation in the world has ever undertaken, and I do not suppose that any nation in the world ever will or ever can undertake, to make compensation for the losses incurred in war; it would be an impossible task.

In reply to those words, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the man or the members of a government who tackle a job with the words "can't" and "impossible" in their hearts are licked before they start. The people who sent me from Winnipeg to represent them here on the floor of the House understood quite well that it meant "the last man and the last dollar", if necessary, to clean up this job right; and they are still of the same opinion. I believe that is true of the spirit of our people to-day, and any government that fails to interpret that spirit of "the last man and the last dollar if need be", fails to represent this nation.

It is true that the business war profits tax is retained and with other taxes now imposed will meet our current expenditures. To this extent, at least, I desire to congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, for it is infinitely better than the system of borrowing which we had before. There is an old saying, that he who goes aborrowing goes asorrowing, and I am pretty well satisfied that our people for many years to come will not forget the borrowings of my hon. friend's predecessor.

But the Budget makes no real attempt to readjust the burdens of the war on a fair and equitable basis. The Government says that it cannot be done, that it is impossible to make such a readjustment. Take, for instance, the business profits tax. It is no secret that the Government has had trouble in collecting it. Quite naturally the men who have made money dislike to see their profits go into, let us say, railway ventures that, to say the least, have not been paying dividends for many years, but which the Government have paid for at one hundred cents on the dollar. I think if I made any money I would hate to hand it over to people who expended it in that way. (In fact, I go further and say that if some of my free-trading English friends did not sell to the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) a "pup" when they sold them the Grand Trunk, I do not know what a "pup" is.) There has been trouble in collecting these taxes, for the reason that the people who are paying them are not satisfied that their money is being used to the best advantage. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I would abolish the war profits tax altogether, and in its stead I would introduce forthwith a Financial Service Act along the lines of the old Military Service Act; in other words, I would conscript millionaires. I would put men who had made $1,000,000 in class A; those who had made $500,000 in class B; those who had made $100,000 in class C. But I would not call these men to the colours as criminals,—far from it; I would mobilize them as the strong, cunning men of the race, men that we can depend on in the country's time of financial need. I would pay them $1.10 a day, with their board and lodgings, and I would keep them on for the continuation of the debt and six months' afterward. I do not want their money so much as their brains, their ability. I am frank to admit, Mr. Speaker, that they would be a pretty tough army to handle, but I am satisfied that from amongst their own numbers you would find some one who could handle them, and after they had once caught the spirit of the thing I have not the slightest doubt that they would make good just as their sons and the other young fellows made good overseas.

But you may well ask me: What kind of work would you turn them to when you got them? Roughly, my plan would be to direct them to develop the resources of this country for the nation instead of for themselves. But I do not think it is necessary to go into details at this time; I will wait until after the election. My idea is this: I would call these strong men to the colours and I would say to their leaders: The debt is $2,000,000,000; you have Canada and her resources at your back: Go to it. And I have not the slightest doubt that they would make good.

Now, Sir, it was my purpose to speak at some length on the words uttered by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) in this debate, but my physician has ordered me off this line. I am frank to admit that when those words were uttered they made me angry—righteously angry, I believe, but apparently that is just as dangerous as any other kind of anger. However, I would say in passing that I hope the hon. member has learned that protectionists can blunder as well as free traders. I must point out to him that many blunders were made in the war. But it is an axiom amongst soldiers that the army that makes the fewest blunders wins the war. Germany made blunders, and even in our own army our poor boys lost their lives through blunders of those in control—but I am not going to make the mistake of pointing out these blunders to bolster up an argument on free trade. I would point out to the hon. minister that economists and thinking men are of the opinion that the supreme blunder of all was the blunder of starting the war,—and that blunder was committed, not by free trade England but by protectionist Germany.

Mr. BURNHAM: May I ask what country it was that started the war?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BURNHAM: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ANDREWS: Some of the arguments used sounded so painfully like the German propaganda that one heard before the war that I could not help feeling angry, and I felt it my absolute duty to speak to-night. It was a disappointment to me in many ways. Naturally we who come from the West would like to have seen as the next Prime Minister of Canada a man coming from the West. Now I can only pray God that that hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) will never occupy that position. Can you imagine a great leader of men like Sir John A. Macdonald running down British soldiers to bolster up his National Policy? Can you imagine that great leader, the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, or the present right hon. leader of this Government (Sir Robert Borden), doing such a thing? I think not. I will let it go at that, and go on to the amendment.

It has been said, Mr. Speaker, that he who tries to do right will soon act wisely but he who merely tries to act wisely will never do right. It is in the second category that I place the amendment; they are trying to act wisely. Well, I suppose I must vote for it as a protest against the Budget which the present Government has brought down. I do ask my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), if he is given an opportunity, like this again, to follow the lead of my hon. friend the Leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Crerar); to pull his flag up to the top, nail it there and trust the people of Canada wholly.

Mr. R. C. HENDERS (Macdonald): Mr. Speaker, it is with some diffidence that I rise to speak at this hour of the evening and at this stage in the debate on the very important Budget that has been brought down. I wish to congratulate the former Minister of Finance (Sir Thomas White) on the magnificent work he did in connection with carrying this country through the crisis of war, providing the necessary finances in order that our soldiers might be properly taken care of and that the needs of the country might be properly served.

I congratulate the present Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) on the Budget which he has brought down. It must have required a great deal of courage, a great deal of nerve, on the part of the hon. gentleman to take hold of the duties and responsibilities of the office of Finance Minister and to deal with conditions as they obtain at present. For years war had done its work and had had its effect upon the finances of the country, and to come in as a new man, assume the responsibility of administering the finances of the country, and lay down plans by which we might be able to go forward, was a very important and a very trying piece of work to undertake. I congratulate him upon the degree of success that has attended his efforts in the bringing down of his Budget. I notice that a certain amount of criticism is levelled at the Government at this time. But it is always the case that a government which has big responsibilities resting upon it, a government which is breaking new ground and launching out into new enterprises, meets with much and varied opposition. Naturally there will be opposition from some people, particularly if measures deemed to be necessary call for self-denial on their part.

There are some items in connection with the Budget to which I wish to call attention. First, I should like to express my recognition of the fact that in his Budget the minister has adopted a method that has been before the people as a proper method for raising money for administering the affairs of the country. I refer to the introduction of the principle of direct taxation. I believe that direct taxation is the proper way to raise revenues for the conduct of the business of the country. There was a time when money was raised by indirect taxation; when a large part of the finances of the country was secured in this way,—secured by methods which placed the burden of responsibility as indirectly as possible on the people. But the time came in the history of this country when it was necessary that the people should be taken into the fullest confidence of the Government in connection with the administration of its affairs. This was brought about particularly by the increased financial responsibilities and obligations resting upon us in connection with the war. As I say, I have always believed that direct taxation is the proper way to raise revenue.

I wish to express my approval of some of the methods that are laid down in the Budget for the securing of money by direct taxation. First I would direct attention to the luxury tax. I have heard criticism of that tax. Some hon. members have expressed the view that the minimum amount taxable on luxuries was too low; that the taxation should be on higher priced articles. I am not of that opinion. I believe that a sufficient number of useful and essential articles are free from taxation; that the burden of taxation will not touch the people until they have reached the point where they are able to bear it. The responsibility increases as the resources of the people increase and they are able to bear responsibility. I have no criticism to offer with regard to the levying of that tax, and I believe it will prove a splendid source of securing revenue. If I were to offer a suggestion or criticism at all, it would be with regard to the method adopted in raising that money. Some incline to the belief that, instead of taxing, say, a pair of boots costing over nine dollars on the full value of the article, it would have been better if the tax had been levied upon the excess of the purchase price over nine dollars, and that the tax instead of being 10 per cent should be 20 per cent. I am not quite so sure but, perhaps there is some merit in that suggestion. It would not allow the tax to fall quite so heavily on the one who would have to pay it, and as the article was considered to be a greater luxury and the price increased, the increase of taxation would be so much heavier and, therefore, the burden would fall on those who were better able to bear it. The same criticism would apply to all similar lines of taxation, namely that the tax, instead of being on the full value, should be on the excess beyond a certain amount fixed as the minimum where the taxation should begin.

I am in perfect accord with the stamp tax. No one will suffer seriously from it, and a certain amount of revenue will be readily collected.

The sales tax is another direct method of taxation with which I find myself in perfect agreement, and I believe that good will come from the securing of money to the fullest possible extent from that line. It could better be operated as a straight, turnover tax payable by each class of the business community and not to be passed on from the manufacturer to the wholesaler and then to the retailer.

I come to the income tax which I consider the most important and most reasonable method of taxation, in the form of a direct tax of any found in connection with the Budget. I believe the income tax is a reasonable and fair way of raising revenue; that it is a method that we should use to the fullest possible extent. As regards the amount of money to be raised by the income tax, I am inclined to think that the tax might well be increased at a greater rate after you reach an income of $10,000, and that the ratio of increase should be greater all the way up to $500,000. A man who has an income of $10,000 could reasonably pay 10 per cent; a man who has an income of $15,000 might reasonably pay a little more than 10 per cent, and he would not suffer seriously from that increased taxation. We could continue along that line, increasing the ratio of taxation between incomes of $10,000 and $500,000. In that way a large amount of money would be secured, and the people who would be making that contribution would not suffer seriously as regards enjoying the comforts and necessaries of life.

I should like to call attention to another feature of the Budget proposals which commends itself to my judgment. I refer to the removal of the 7½ per cent war tax. It has been charged against the Government that they have made this a rich man's Budget; that the rich are having the best of it and that the poor man is being burdened. I do not think so; I believe in the removal of the 7½ per cent war tax, because by the removal of that tax, $7.50 is taken off every $100 worth of goods a man buys, so that rich and poor alike receive benefit thereby. I wish also to call attention to the fact that it has been charged against the Government that, by removing that 7½ per cent war tax, they are simply bringing us back to conditions as they were before the war and, therefore, the Government deserves no great credit for removing that tax. That is a very unfair and unjust criticism. It was found necessary, during the stress of the war, to levy a 7½ per cent war tax in order to carry on the Government of the country and meet the conditions through which we were passing. An expenditure amounting to $1,000,000 a day has to be provided for. It could therefore be argued that this tax should on that account be retained. The Government has decided otherwise. This is now taken off the people, which means a reduction in the prices of the necessaries of life of over $30,000,000, a direct contribution to the people in connection with their living expenses.

I wish now to refer to the promise made by the former Minister of Finance (Sir Thomas White) that there would be a revision of the tariff last year. With the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) I find myself in perfect agreement on that point. If I remember rightly, that hon. gentleman's comment was that conditions were such in connection with the former Minister of Finance that he found it necessary through illness to abandon his post, to leave the Government and to go into other lines of business. This change made it necessary for the Government to secure another man to take the position. It was further felt that of conditions in connection with raising the war loan, it was necessary for the time being to abandon the promise made by the former Minister of Finance. There is no one in this House who is more sorry than I am that that condition of affairs has come about. I had staked a good deal on the promise of the former Minister of Finance, and I had taken the position with the people out in our western country that that pledge given by the former Minister of Finance at that time was part of the contract which led me to accept the Budget. That promise was an important factor in leading me so to decide. It was, therefore, a disappointment to me that that arrangement was not carried out. But the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) comes to us this year with a pledge that the arrangement which was made last year will be carried out this year. I am not among those who are prepared to receive no explanation for a miscarriage of any promise that is made; I am not among those who are prepared to say that, because it was found necessary last year on account of the circumstances to which I have referred, to abandon the promise, therefore, I will not accept in good faith the promise that is made again. I believe the promise of the Minister of Finance is made in good faith; I am going to receive it in good faith; I am going to act on it in good faith; I am going to tell the people all the facts that have transpired, just as I told them last year; I am going to tell them that this pledge will be carried out; that there will be a revision of the tariff and that before that revision takes place—conferences will be held throughout the country and the people will be invited to appear, and present the facts of the case as they see them before the men engaged in the work of gathering the evidence, before the revision in connection with the tariff takes place.

I believe it is necessary on the people's account that this opportunity be given to study the tariff. We do not understand the tariff, and I believe that many of us here do not understand it as thoroughly as we should. We do not understand the conditions in connection with it, and I have no doubt that these conferences that will be held in different places throughout the country will bring out evidence of incalculable value in regard to the merits or otherwise of the claims of the different parties who are demanding consideration, and will show clearly the grounds on which they base their claims for that consideration. This information will be valuable, and it will also be a great source of education, which is what we need. What do we find in connection with this promise of a revision of the tariff? Do we find opposition to it? Yes, Mr. Speaker. We find opposition from two sources, and I want to call particular attention to that fact because it has been said by hon. members opposite time and again that this is the Government of the predatory interests, the Government of the privileged classes. So far as that allegation is concerned, may I ask if the reduction of 7½ per cent of the duty was an example of protection for the privileged classes? Now, who are the people that are opposing the proposal to have conferences to study this question? Where is the opposition coming from? I find that the manufacturers' associations have passed resolutions condemning the action of the Government in proposing a revision of the tariff and condemning the calling of conferences to study the subject. They say they want a revision of the tariff, but whom do they want to revise it? They want to have a board of men appointed to which they can be sure that only certain classes of people will be eligible for appointment, people who perhaps are standing close to their own interests and who will see things from their own point of view. My view, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government of the country is responsible to the people for the administration of public affairs, and on its shoulders must rest the responsibility for providing arrangements to take care of the business of the country. I say, therefore, that you cannot take from the Government and put upon the shoulders of any separate board the responsibility which properly belongs to the Government. The Government must undertake the work that lies before it. They must see that an opportunity is given for collecting all necessary information, and with that information before them the responsibility will then rest upon them to bring down their tariff policy, the wisdom or unwisdom of which the people may judge of at the proper time. I am strongly in favour of a revision, and I trust that there will be as little delay as possible on the part of the Minister of Finance in completing the arrangement he has already started for the carrying out of this part of his programme. I make an appeal now, as I did a year ago, to the people in the West, that whenever these conferences are held those who are studying the question be met in good faith. Last summer, Mr. Speaker, I encountered opposition to this proposal for a revision of the tariff, and that opposition came from sources which I had not expected. It came from those who I thought would fully endorse it. They said: "We do not want a tariff investigation for the study of this question; we have all the information we need. We know all about the matter; we understand it thoroughly. What we want is that the Government shall act and act as we want them to act." Mr. Speaker, I have no use for that kind of argument. None of us know too much about the tariff; none of us know too much about the fiscal policy of the country; and none of us can afford to ignore any opportunity that is offered us for better informing ourselves along these lines. I shall make the appeal, when I go to the West, that this tariff commission, when it appears there, shall be met by the representatives of all classes and that all the facts that are available and that can throw any light on the subject be placed before the commission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find it necessary to state my position to-night on the tariff question. It has been suggested by some that I have changed the views which I have hitherto held on this question and which I expressed on former occasions. Allow me to say that this is not correct, the statement is entirely beside the mark; my views on the tariff have not changed except perhaps on two points, in regard to which they have undergone some modification. A fuller study of the question places me, I think, beside the leader of the Farmers' party (Mr. Crerar) in one respect. A more detailed study of the whole subject has led me to the belief that we are not in a position at the present time to enjoy the privileges of free trade. If we were establishing a new civilization and we had one simple community, I could very well understand that we could introduce the principles of free trade. But we are not introducing a new civilization. We are living in a civilization which is hoary with years, and we are surrounded by methods of taxation that introduce a principle that is the opposite of free trade; and while we have these conditions to contend with we must govern ourselves accordingly. We must make circumstances the best that can possibly obtain for all the people in the country. We must have a tariff of some kind. Some people say that we have a tariff for protection purposes, while others assert that we have a tariff for revenue. I can make no distinction between the two. If you have a tariff up to five per cent you may call it a tariff for revenue, but the fact remains that it is, up to five per cent, a protection also. If it is a tariff for revenue, it is also protection against the people who desire to come from other countries into this country to trade, and it is ten per cent of protection to the interests of the manufacturer in this country. No matter how high or how low you make it, call it by what name you will, a tariff means protection. If it is only one per cent it is so much, if it is forty per cent it is so much more, but it is protection in either case.

Mr. CURRIE: Do you call it protection in the case of tea?

Mr. HENDERS: I am speaking of industries that are indigenous to this country and are supported by it, I am not referring to articles that are not manufactured or do not grow in this country; that is an entirely different thing. We tax them directly for the purpose of raising revenue. Where shall we draw the line? I find a person who says: "I do not believe in a tariff for protection, but I do believe in a tariff for revenue." I have tried to discover where the line of demarcation is drawn between these two points.

In looking over the Budgets of the past I found one instance in the course of the last few years where a distinction was made and where one had the courage to state what was a tariff for revenue and what was a tariff for protection. The future fiscal policy of the country was under discussion in 1906 and 1907. There was a certain arrangement made for gathering information as the basis upon which the tariff policy should be framed. When the Budget was before Parliament for discussion opposition was directed against the policy of the Government that was then in power. They had reduced the tariff on agricultural implements to 17½ per cent. A resolution was introduced by those who were in opposition at that time demanding that the Government bring down the tariff on agricultural implements to ten per cent. The advocates of a tariff for revenue only said: We believe that a tariff of 17½ per cent is only a tariff for revenue and not a tariff for protection. If it be true that 17½ per cent was at that time considerd a tariff for revenue then our present tariff is below a tariff for revenue. What argument then can be offered by the Opposition in support of the amendment offered by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's?

In regard to my attitude in supporting the proposals of the Budget I will state my position in a few words. I have watched the discussion with a great deal of interest and I have paid close attention to the amendment introduced by my hon. friend the member for Shelburne and Queen's. After going carefully through that amendment I found that it was beset with a great deal that was vague and indefinite. It did not appear to me to be clear cut and specific. It appealed to me very much along the line of the speech we listened to this afternoon from the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) who gloried in the fact that they had not a clear-cut specific policy. It was a policy that embraced everybody and it reminded me of the man who would be all things to all men, if by any means he might "gain some." Studying this amendment in the light of past history I find that the man who moved the amendment, and those who surrounded him at the time that he and his friends were in power, made strong protestations, before they had achieved power as to what would be their policy if they were returned. They went up and down the country declaring substantially for a definite policy. There was no mistaking their position at that time. Everybody understood what they meant. But when they came to practise what they had been preaching there was a wonderful disparity between their preaching and their practice. I find also that the 11 p.m.

Government which was in power before these hon. gentlemen assumed office was a Government that was accused of being a Government of special interests and special privileges, just as these hon. gentlemen opposite are talking about the Government of the present day being a Government of special interests and special privileges. Who are the men who are coming to this city day after day beseeching members of this Government in regard to the tariff under discussion? Men who are going away disappointed with conditions as they find them in connection with this Budget. Men who are looked upon by the Opposition as being the foster parents of this Government are the men who are in this position. The men who are writing bitter things against this Government are the men who were looked upon as the sponsors for it.

When the Government of the late Sir John Macdonald went into power they went in with a clear-cut protective policy. Influence was brought to bear along certain lines with the object of securing changes in that policy and we find that certain changes were made. I followed the history of that Government down through the years and I found that in the year before they went out of power they made radical changes in their policy. They reduced very materially the protective tariff which was then in operation. Then, another party came into power on a free trade policy practically, and we find on reading over the record that the Finance Minister of that Government announces "No radical change this year in the fiscal policy." Year after year this is the announcement. Finally there are some little changes made and then it goes on again from year to year the same old story of no change. How about the Union Government? In the first year that the Union Government was in power a change in the tariff policy in the form of a reduction off $17,000,000, and that after the second year they come down again with a reduction of $30,000,000.

I was reminded—as I studied this over in my own mind—of a passage in the Scriptures, where a certain man called his two sons. He said to one son, "Go, work to-day in my vineyard"; and the son replied, "I go, Sir", but went not. And he said to the second son, likewise, and the son said, "I will not go", but afterwards repented and went. The question was asked which of these did the will of his father, and the answer was in favour of the latter. I am in the position of making a similar choice, and I am inclined to give my approval to the man who at first refused but finally went and did as he was requested. I find myself in this position to-night: after weighing all the evidence that is before me I am going to trust the man who has prepared the fiscal policy that has given to us a reduction of over $30,000,000, and who says: I am going to study the question and come down with a fiscal policy that will be the fiscal policy of this Government when it makes its appeals to the people. I am going to give that man and that Government a fair chance, and will reach my conclusions as to my future course after they have declared themselves.

Mr. L. T. PACAUD (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, the Budget delivered recently by the Minister of Finance has given rise to a debate which, though it little resembles in tone and in substance the debates of previous years on this vital question, will nevertheless in my opinion arouse far more deeply than in the past the interest of the people of Canada. We cannot, close our eyes to the fact that if within the walls of this Parliament there seems to be, in some quarters at least, a tendency to approach this question with the set opinion of pre-war days, there is outside of this House a public opinion more critical, more alert, more resolute, and more determined than ever to see to it that the abuses which have crept in to our fiscal system shall no longer be tolerated in this country. Little can we wonder, Sir, at this change of attitude, at this new spirit—which can so easily be detected and still more easily be explained —which has permeated, gradually but surely, throughout the country, with greater force since the advent of peace. As I was listening to the Minister of Finance unfolding to us what we already too well knew—the ghastly story of our financial situation; as I read on the one hand the appalling figure of the national debt of two and a half billions of dollars; and as I saw on the other hand notwithstanding that tremendous burden which we have to carry and to bear—a burden partly but not wholly due to the war—the unmistakable evidence of waste and extravagance in the expenditure of our public money, I came, Sir, to realize more fully that whatever may be the other causes, the real explanation for the grievances and the discontent of the people at the present day, can be traced directly to the Government and to their lack of foresight and of courage in not leading the way, or even entering into the new stage of social growth. To me it appears of far greater importance in this debate that we should note and study the feelings of unrest so prevalent amongst our people, and try to remedy a situation truly alarming in the present juncture, than that we should indulge ourselves, for party purposes, in the luxury of discussing the historical merits or demerits of free trade or protection. For my part, Sir,—as between the extreme views of those who belong to the one school of thought and of those who belong to the other, I stand by the policy of the party to which I belong, a policy which has for its immediate object, as I understand it, to maintain our custom duties for revenue purposes only and not for giving to any class of our population an unjust preference, privilege or protection detrimental to the great mass of our people. In a word, Sir the aim of Liberalism to-day is what it has always been in the past; not to destroy, but to reconstruct and to develop. I know full well, Mr. Speaker, that this fiscal policy of the Liberal policy has been persistently assailed in the past by the Tory high protectionists in this country. Did we not hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce, (Sir George Foster) quite recently in this debate—by a change of tactics as sudden as it was surprising,—pretend to see no difference between its scope and object and that of the policy to which he seems to still adhere with the same confidence and with the same enthusiasm with which he so often in the past gave testimony in this House? But, Sir, whatever the opinions of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on this point may be, we who belong to the Liberal party, looking back to the fifteen years of its administration, can find remarkable grounds for gratification at the thought of its splendid record and achievements. By whatever name you may call the fiscal system that was in vogue between 1896 and 1911, what we do know is that never before were Canadians so prosperous, so happy and so contented as during that brief but all too short period of Liberal administration. Such, Sir, was the success of that administration that when in its last year of office—forging ahead wisely but resolutely in the path it had traced for itself—it introduced and announced its policy of reciprocity, those who are sitting to your right could find no other weapon with which to attack their opponents than to shout on every housetop what was in fact a tribute to their opponents, "Let well enough alone". Brave indeed would be the public man who would to-day step on a public platform, and, facing a Canadian audience representative of all classes in the community, calmly repeat as a remedy for our present day troubles this old worn-out doctrine. "Let well enough alone". Were a Cabinet Minister to try this ordeal, when we are witnessing at the present time such an unnatural and unprecedented ferment spreading throughout the country, he would soon realize what he now feigns to ignore, the full sense and full feeling of indignation and alarm throughout the country provoked and accentuated by the folly, the ignorance, the lack of policy and the sad mismanagement of this Government.

Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing a remarkable change in this country. Canadians have come to learn, to better compare and to digest what passes before their eyes. They know, Sir, what they want. No mere promises will again satisfy them, or divert them from their course. Let us look, Sir, at the case of the farmer. He still remembers his unsuccessful pilgrimage to Ottawa He is still resentful of the cold reception that was then given him by the members of this Government. Can we restore his confidence, so badly shattered by the unfortunate events to which I have just alluded?

Let us look at some features of his programme. The farmer comes forward once more with a just and reasonable plea that if there is any sincerity in the appeal of this Administration for "production and still more production" as a cure for many of our present day troubles, the Government should immediately facilitate the work of our farming population by removing the duties on farm implements, thus cheapening the cost of the instruments of production and eliminating the chief obstacle to the successful achievement of their labour. Sir, that is a request which amounts to a sane policy, and which should be adopted by this House—a policy which is embodied in the amendment of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), and which, I may venture to say, is endorsed by the unanimous voice of Liberalism in this country.

But what does the Government do? Their attitude in this respect resembles their conduct on other questions of public policy. They hesitate, they linger, and finally they drift into the easier course of evading a decision and doing nothing. In 1911 they promised a tariff commission—nothing came of it; in 1919 there was to be an investigation preliminary to a tariff revision; this year a new Minister of Finance comes forward and promises to redeem the broken pledge of his predecessor. Strange would be this attitude were we not familiar with its true underlying causes. The weak protest of a small group whose interests seem to be merged with the fate of this Government, clinging desperately to a privilege which they feel is slipping from their nngers, is sufficient to paralyze the efforts of this Government and to prevent justice being done to the great bulk of our population. It is said, Sir, that great men do not always know their well-wishes. Better for our Cabinet ministers would it be could we but rescue them from their friends!

Sir, there is another phase of this situation closely and intimately connected with the question raised by this amendment. We believe that substantial reductions in the tariff along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's would contribute to solve, without ham or injury to any legitimate business in this country, the two most pressing economic problems of the hour: In the first place, diminish the high cost of living; in the second place, encourage the vigorous development of our national resources,—essential not only to procure us revenue, but essential also for the progress and prosperity of this country. Needless for us sitting here as representatives of the people to idly lament over the people's sufferings. A greater effort is expected from us than a casual glance at some newspaper which will inform us, day in and day out, that the high cost of living is still persisting in its ascending course. We may not please the present rulers of Canada, but we would surely be rendering a service to the cause of government could we but suggest a probable method of removing the cause of the present troubles and discontent amongst our people, which no honest and sane man would care to dispute or to deny. It is in this spirit that I have approached the perusal of this amendment; it is in this spirit that I intend to give it my hearty support.

I summarize my views, Mr. Speaker in one phrase: Greater production would mean more prosperity for the producer, greater relief to the consumer, and by tending to raise the purchasing power of the dollar proportionately to the reduction of the prices of commodities would eliminate the dangerous necessity of indefinitely increasing the wages without corresponding benefits to the wage earner. But, as usual, we are doomed to disappointment. The Government, after having taken the initiative in this campaign of production, fails to support it in the only practical way in which it could be supported. Instead of a policy founded on common sense, they prefer to lavish the people's money on commissions;—commissions for the regulation of prices which do no regulating—commissions for stimulating of production which fail to do any stimulating.

Not only does this Government fail to do its duty, not only does it fail to relieve the consumer by reducing the high cost of living, but it has the temerity to introduce a Budget which by the form of taxation proposed will leave unmolested the war profiteer to better crush the man whose only crime is to have preferred to remain honest rather than to become rich. This Budget is a direct challenge to the public opinion of Canada. But what cares this Government? It does not rest on public opinion; it knows and feels that it stands on private humour, that the foundation of its administration is on a quicksand.

What a pitiful position for a Government to be in! We heard the other day the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) make a vain attempt to save the sinking ship, to restore order in his own household, to desperately appeal to his supporters to remain steadfast as the members of a rapidly vanishing crew. Sir, I would pay this tribute to my hon. friend, that usually when he enters into a debate he is well armed with every sort of argument that would tend to strengthen his case. But there is a limitation to the resources of man, and when the hon. minister suddenly realized that his mission was to defend the record of this Government, and that he held in his hand but the slim material upon which to build his case—the promise of a tariff revision at some future date—he quickly sidestepped before such an arduous task, to enter into the easier course of finding fault with those who in this House disagreed with him. He attacked the Farmers' party; he did not spare the Liberal party. The former he reproached for their free trade principles; the latter he chastised because he seems to have found in the speeches of some of their leaders a tendency towards moderate protection. But free trade—moderate protection, will never satisfy the hon. Minister of the Interior. It was the voice of a staunch Tory, somewhat indignant at the thought that there may be some men in this country who fail to see the wisdom of maintaining intact the high protectionist policy of his party.

Mr. BURNHAM: Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PACAUD: There lies the line of demarcation between the Government and those who oppose them. We see more clearly the true position of parties in this country. May it help to bind more closely the forces which by the very nature of their programmes should be united and not divided. This Government, Mr. Speaker, is growing weaker and weaker. The popular torrent is gaining upon it every hour. Its fate is definitely sealed. From every nook and corner of the land is heard the wide clamour for a general election. To this chorus is added quite recently a new voice by no less a body than the Great War Veterans of Canada.

We are witnessing, Sir, a strenuous tug-of-war between those who, representing the last vestige of autocratic rule in this country, blind to the popular will, will not disgorge until they are dislodged, and those who, still mindful of a successful war for freedom, demand the restoration of the fight to a free election, indispensable to the renewal of our work of peace.

To make this country safe for democracy, Mr. Speaker, we can do no better than to turn towards Liberalism, to find in the glorious pages of its history the principles of sane and sound government. They have never failed in the past; they will not fail in the present instance to restore to the people their freedom, so badly shattered during recent years.

Mr. F. L. DAVIS (Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, any member who rises at this hour, after two weeks of debate of the tariff question, surely has assurance. But I feel that the occasion must not be allowed to pass without my saying at least a few words, and I shall endeavour to be brief.

The first Budget of our new Finance Minister is certainly breaking new ground, not only in Canada but perhaps in the world of finance. The method adopted has been discussed in recent times, but I know no case in which similar taxes have been imposed, save, perhaps, in France, where they are now considering a Budget which proposes a tax of one per cent on turnover and ten per cent upon luxuries. Possibly one of the things we have now to consider is whether a sales tax or tax on turnover is the better. Possibly the Finance Minister is not wedded to this particular method; he is willing to consider, I imagine, the adoption of that method which will get the money with the least expense to trade and the least expense to the Government.

At the bottom of any consideration of taxation proposals lies, of course, the present outlook in business. That is far from satisfactory, in spite of the figures which have been quoted again and again in this debate. An examination of the amounts or quantities of goods or commodities that we produced during the past year indicates a disappointing result, although the money values have increased. That certainly is small ground for satisfaction. Again, our money is at a discount in the greatest market which we have—that is, where our greatest buying is done—and that also is unsatisfactory. Another cause for dissatisfaction at he present time is the fact that the market in which we do most of our selling is not readily reached by our buyers. Our importations from England have not balanced with our exports to that country, and, in consequence, have muddied the situation.

On the other hand, there are certain grounds for satisfaction, or at least for hope that we will deal with the situation to our satisfaction. There was throughout the war an immense use of credit, mainly by the Government. As one English author says, perhaps as a result of that use of credit, we are inoculated against a panic or crisis at this time. Indeed, looking back over the history of other wars we see that usually from two to eight years elapsed before the crisis came. Probably the shortest period was the crisis of 1857, following the Crimean War. I believe that in about six years the crisis followed the Napoleonic wars, and after the Civil War in the United States the panic did not arrive until 1872 or 1873. From that, perhaps, it would be a reasonable deduction that we have before us a few years in which to readjust our finances.

Now, that these finances are not satisfactory we all admit. We have even, this year, not balanced our expenditures with our taxation, and it is questionable whether we shall do so next year. More taxation was needed during the war. The great cause of our troubles to-day is that inadequate taxation was then imposed. This was not peculiar to Canada; it was the case throughout the world, because I think we were all optimists; we were always hoping that the war would end within six months or a year. It was hard to adapt our taxation and our expenditures to a continuing state of war. That consideration stands, and the man who to-day comes forwards to criticise the financing of the five years of war must remember that he is looking at it with the wisdom of hindsight and that the man who was actually dealing with it had only human foresight to guide him. Nevertheless, there were men who during the war dwelt upon the necessity for greater taxation than we had, and I do believe that the Government which preceded this Union Government was slack in not adopting other methods of taxation before they did.

At present we need, first of all, to balance our expenditure with our taxation. This Budget promises a prospect of so doing. Next, however, we need a surplus. I have not been in the House during the whole of the debate, but I have heard no one yet mention the necessity for providing a sinking fund in the very near future. I had hoped, indeed, that the Finance Minister would be able to tell us how soon he expects to have any considerable surplus and how he proposes to use that surplus. It is plain that if a change in values takes place we have a very considerable inflation of currency and that that surplus may be needed first of all to remove that inflation; next we must undoubtedly establish sinking funds for the redemption of our debt. How soon will that be reached? Will we reach that before we run into the storms which certainly will follow the vast waste of five years of world war? It is necessary that we should; otherwise we shall run into difficulties thereafter.

Something has been said about the necessity for reduction of expenditures, and upon that I wanted to speak this evening; I doubt whether I would have risen at all but for that. I wish especially to deal with the project which has been recommended to the British Government by the Select Committee on National Expenditure of 1917 with regard to a Committee on Estimates. That great man, Gladstone, said that it was very difficult for a minister to control the expenditure of his department at any time. I know that our Finance Minister has found it very difficult to get the reductions in Estimates that he has got this year. There are four points at which financial control may apply. Two of these are departmental with us, the officer having the expenditure in hand and the departmental auditor. Then the matter comes to the Minister of Finance and finally it must come to Parliament. I take it that in the Cabinet the ministers stand more upon an equality than ministers do under the English system, where the Treasury has a predominant voice in all these matters. That being so, our Minister of Finance cannot have full control, and he needs some means beyond what our present system gives him. No man has sat in this House through four sessions—and most of those around me have been here at least as long as that—without being impressed with the futility of the proceeding of passing Estimates. If an hon. member were a company director and authorising the expenditure of sums in connection with his company with no more knowledge of the requirements of the service than he has when passing Estimates, he should be committed to a penitentiary and probably he would be. The real reason why that is the case is that at the present time Parliament lacks the machinery for getting that information, and the proposition of a committee on estimates would provide Parliament with that machinery by which it could be informed. When the estimates were once submitted to and passed that committee and came before the House, the House could vote upon them with some measure of knowledge and assurance. It does not so vote now. The British House endeavoured to apply the idea of a committee of estimates in the year 1912. This was just a House committee without any machinery, and they found it would take them about thirty or forty years to get around the departments, and therefore, at the beginning of the war it was laid aside. But when the matter was examined by the Hon. Herbert Samuel's committee, a machinery was devised consisting of an Examiner of Estimates, having an office of practically equal rank with the Auditor General and a staff which could go into the various departments under the direction of the committee in the recess and gather the information which the committee would require to act upon. At this time our lack of such machinery is a defect in our system, and if we had such machinery, it would get us the reduction in expenditure we all know is necessary. For instance, a few weeks ago a statement was issued that there were 70,000 names on Canada's list of employees, and when you look over it you find 6,000 employees or thereabouts still in the Militia Department and thousands in the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. These departments have not been greatly cut down since the war, and it is very difficult for the minister or for the permanent officials to make the necessary reduction; but I take it that if that duty were laid upon Parliament, it would be done.

I wish to make a remark or two more directly in connection with the Budget, and I shall have finished. The present reduction in prices is rather coincident with this new taxation than an effect of it. The reduction had begun before the taxation was imposed, and possibly it would have proceeded without our taxation. There is no doubt that a fall in prices to-day is the most desirable thing that could happen to allay unrest. If prices go down, wages will not follow them for some time, and this will do more than any other thing could to bring us out into more peaceful times.

Let me depart for a moment from my line of thought and refer to this matter lest I should later forget it. It seems to me that the Government at present should watch with a very jealous eye the many mergers and new issues of capital which are now occupying the financial world. After five years of war, disturbed business conditions such as we have had and enormous profits, it seems to me that an attempt is being made to capitalize the situation which attempt it is the duty of the Government to prevent big finance from putting across. These companies have been paying large dividends; the change in the value of money has greatly increased the apparent value of the properties, and it is undoubtedly a tempting time for the launching of such enterprises. If we cannot deal with this matter, we are going to leave one of the greatest causes of unrest not dealt with. There is no doubt that the ordinary man is quite willing to see capital get a fair return in the shape of dividends, but what is continually disturbing the workingman, the farmer, the community generally, is to see unearned amounts, hidden assets, converted into visible and real assets, and melons cut. A company is after all a creation of the legislature and it can be dealt with. There is no doubt whatever of our power to take hold of the question, and it is one of the great things that is now facing us. The limited liability company has a history in England—(and there it had its origin)—of only about 95 years. It was in 1825 that the Bubble Act was repealed in Great Britain and the incorporation of a limited liability company—there were chartered companies before—then first became possible. We have not learned how to control the device and we must learn how to control it if we are going to have any degree of satisfaction in our handling of big finance.

Last year I found it necessary to vote against the Government on its Budget because no new taxation had been imposed, no new areas of taxation had been opened, and regard was not had to the demands of the West in the reductions that were made. This year, because the Government has entered upon a course of opening up new areas of taxation in which we need experience and organization, out of which we learn something with every application, and because a real effort has been made—when we are increasing our taxation by 25 per cent in one year, I think that is a very real effort—it seems wise to me to support the Government. I have said that at this point because I have one or two other things to say in regard to much of the debate to which I have listened during the past two weeks. It has been comparatively easy to accept the Budget; it has been relatively difficult to accept the arguments in support of the Budget. The fact of the matter is that when we argue this question of protection and free trade, surely the stalest and most unprofitable question which this House ever deals with, never is even one instance exhausted; it is largely a case of "after this" and "therefore on account of this" when protection is alleged to have been the cause of prosperity. Let us examine for just a moment what occurred in Germany which, perhaps, is the great and classic example of what is claimed to be the great success of protection in our time. In 1834, the German Zollverein was formed; free trade was introduced into an area which before had been cut up by conflicting tariffs. In 1879, the Germans adopted a protection policy. But Germany's industrial success had begun before the adoption of her protective policy. Something which I have never heard referred to in this debate, and which I am sure had a very large share in the shifting of trade from England to Germany, is concerned with the currency. When England adopted free trade in 1846 she was the only country in the world that had a gold currency. Germany adopted a gold currency basing it upon the indemnity which she received from France in 1874. England had been for many years a manufacturing country and was a large buyer of raw materials and foodstuffs, and down to 1874, and even a little later—the Latin union was not dissolved until 1876—the best use the seller of these commodities could make of his money was to spend it in the English market. England was already a wealthy country. She had plenty of money and where money is plentiful goods are dear. Money was scarce in Germany and goods and services were cheap, and when the money was freely transmutable from English into German currency the seller of these goods took his money to Germany and bought cheaper goods. The result was that Germany's increase in trade began before her protection came into force. More than that, it was just about 1870 that the iron ores of Germany were made accessible to the iron trade. Her iron ores are largely phosphorous, and it was not until the Gilchrist-Thomas process of smelting was adopted that she was able to use her ores and build up her iron trade. I do not propose to follow the matter through all the ramifications of finance and science. Germany had just won three great wars, and in such circumstances it is impossible to hold a people down. Psychology, science, finance and political economy came to her aid at that time and her industrial prosperity began. So far as England is concerned, it certainly seems to me that when we survey Europe, with every protective country on its last legs trembling even yet on the verge of bankruptcy as a result of the war, and find England their support and the hope of civilized Europe, England being a free trade country, there is some reason to doubt whether protection has all the virtues that have been ascribed to it by some members on this side. Nevertheless, I must say this, that when our forefathers founded this Dominion of Canada, which otherwise might have been four separate communities, there was probably, in the then state of political and economic knowledge, some excuse for the application of protection to build up the consciousness of mutual interest. It at least was an obvious way and it would probably have taken longer under free trade to do the same thing. But even if that were so, it is no justification for the continuation of the process, after the lines have been laid down upon which we now have trade east and west and have a community who have fought through this war in such a manner as to consolidate the country to a greater extent than had been possible by reason of the economic efforts of the last fifty years.

Mr. CURRIE: What about the United States?

Mr. DAVIS: In what respect?

Mr. CURRIE: As an example of protection.

Mr. DAVIS: The hour is getting rather late and I would rather discuss that question with the hon. member in private, I do not wish to impose on the patience of the House. Let me say, however, that it was impossible that England should for all time have dominated the market, for there must have come a time when her mines would be exhausted, when there would be greater expense in working mines, and when other countries, with vast stores of raw materials, would begin to open up. It was upon her iron trade that the United States afterwards built her commercial success; and incidents connected therewith which could not be foreseen when she adopted protection, were essentials to the upbuilding of that industry.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that in my opinion the present taxation may prove to be a makeshift—we may find that it will be necessary to make changes if we are to get any great result from it. I think that our income tax needs revision and that a super-tax should be applied to replace our war profits taxes. Further than that, I am inclined to think that as our farmers pay only $5,000 our of each $1,000,000 of income tax it will be necessary to modify that tax say by a tax on rentals as in England so that we may get a proper proportion from them. I am sure that that expresses the feeling of the West, and I will leave others to speak for the East. The great leader on the other side who has passed away said on one occasion that the twentieth century would be Canada's and we have every reason to hope that it will be. A country cannot have gone through the experience which has been Canada's lot during the past few years without gaining a very great impetus. Old prejudices have been and will be examined by the new and vigorous generation which has borne no small part in the effort which resulted in the winning of this great war. Henceforth, I think, we shall find in this country a class of men who will resent the suggestion that we cannot compete with the United States or any other country, a class of men who will go into the markets of the world to take what is rightfully Canada's, a class of men who will develop the industries of Canada and make a success of them; and we trust that the future of Canada may be a great and successful one.

Mr. JACOBS: Mr. SPEAKER—

Mr. McDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I am sure I have listened during the last two weeks—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order; Mr. Jacobs has the floor.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier): Mr. Speaker, a story is told of the late Duke Devonshire when as Marquis of Harington——

Mr. LEVI THOMSON: This is not in accordance with the arrangement that was made. I do not know whether it means anything.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Mr. Jacobs has the floor.

Mr. JACOBS: I was about to relate an incident in the life of the late Duke of Devonshire when as Marquis of Harington he was a member of the House of Commons. On one occasion during an address that he was delivering before the House he put his hand to his mouth and tried to suppress a yawn. He was actually yawning at his own speech. I am very much, to-night, in the position of the late Duke of Devonshire, and feeling as I do myself, I can very well imagine what hon. members of the House must feel when they are obliged to listen to my remarks at midnight.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. JACOBS: An hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." I feel exactly the same when he speaks. Representing as I do, Mr. Speaker, numerically one of the largest urban divisions in the Dominion of Canada I feel I owe it to my electors on this occasion to make a public profession of faith and to declare that I intend to vote for the amendment proposed by my hon. friend for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). It is surprising how opinions differ in large cities. I am a next-door neighbour to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne). He was elected by a very large majority and he sits on the other side of the House, while I, whose constituency is about fifteen or twenty feet away from his, was elected by a majority three times as large to oppose his views in this House. These are some of the curious features in the psychology of the people who reside in urban districts.

I had intended, if I had been able to obtain a hearing earlier in this debate, to speak about the tax proposals and other matters which have been brought up by the resolutions proposed by the hon. the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton). But these have been discussed in the past few weeks and threshing old straw would be of no service. On an occasion of this kind, however, knowing that any member of the House is permitted to talk on almost anything on the Budget debate we have the privilege in the words of the English nonsense rhyme, of talking about "ships and shoes, and sealing wax,, of cabbages and kings." Perhaps I may be permitted to start with ships. The Minister of Marine is here and I will take the opportunity of telling him that I am unalterably opposed to his policy in obtaining from this Government already something like $70,000,000 for the purpose of starting, his merchant marine enterprise.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is $75,000,000.

Mr. JACOBS: Well, $75,000,000—$5,000,000 is neither here nor there in these days; it was hardly worth the interruption. When every person is supposed to exercise thrift and economy, when we are told that we must save, when all kinds of luxury taxes are imposed upon the people, not so much for the purpose of obtaining revenue for the Government as for the purpose of preventing people from buying commodities, this embarkation upon an entirely new policy of sailing into uncharted seas with these vessels cannot appeal to men who have the interests of the country at heart. We are obliged to pay six per cent for our money and yet the Minister of Marine is able to obtain an appropriation of $75,000,000 for an enterprise of this kind the result of which is, to say the least, doubtfull. Last year the Government obtained credits for something like $100,000,000 for the Balkan States. We were going to foster trade with the Balkan States.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Only $25,000,000 for the Balkans.

Mr. JACOBS: There was $25,000,000 for the Roumanian loan, $25,000,000 for Greece, and other States were also to be looked after. I understand that $25,000,000 was passed for the Roumanian loan of which $17,000,000 has already been paid out for this purpose. We were shown yesterday by the hon. member for Chambly and Verchères (Mr. Archambault) that a very large portion of this money went into the hands of supporters of this Government many of whom are members on the other side of the House. What is the view to-day of the former Minister of Finance (Sir Thomas White), the immediate predecessor of the present Minister of Finance, as to the wisdom of that loan, that he advocated so vigorously when it was presented to the House. Does he still think it is good business? Is Roumania in a position to carry out its obligations? Is he aware that that country is practically in the hands of the Bolsheviki? Have we forgotten that last year the Minister went on with this policy regardless of the advice which we proferred him on that occasion? There has been a practical waste of this money. We are obliged to tax the people in order to obtain these large sums? The policy of the present Minister of Finance, the policy of the former Minister of Finance, the Canadian National railways policy, the Grand Trunk policy—these are the reasons why we are obliged to impose taxes upon the people of this country. Last year, when the Grand Trunk proposal was before the House, we opposed it as vigorously as we could. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) was strongly in favour of the policy of the Government in taking over the line and in paying the British stockholders a substantial sum for their interest in the railway rather than that the company should be expropriated in order to pay the debt that was due to the Dominion of Canada by reason of the obligation contracted by them for the Grand Trunk Pacific.

12 p.m.

In this connection I would like to read a passage from the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer. I was not in the House when he made his speech. This is the first opportunity I have had to call the attention of the House to it. At page 1495 of Hansard, second session 1919, I find these remarks by the hon. member for Red Deer:

> If I am right in that conclusion, the bald fact is that, debating in the Parliament of a country which we all belive to be great and which we hope to see much greater, we should surely not approach this question as the worst type of a Jew Would, but we should try to approach it with some element of statesmanship.

The first question I have to ask the hon. member for Red Deer is: "What is the worst type of a Jew?" Perhaps I could enlighten him. A bad Jew is a man who fails to observe the tenets of his religion, a bad Jew is a Jew who fails to observe the law of Moses and the teaching of the Rabbis. Is that the type of Jew the hon. member had in his mind? If so, then Benjamin Disraeli, Lord Burnham and Alfred Mond, the latter a great apostle of free trade, come in the category of bad Jews because they fell away from the teachings of Judaism. A little later he went on to say:

> Are we going to increase the good opinion of the Old Country people; are we going to increase our standing in the eyes of the world and of the Empire if we drive what I venture to call a Jewish bargain instead of trying to look at this with the eyes of statesmen?

A little later my good friend, the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) —for whose amendment I am going to vote; I have got some of the elements of christian charity in me, and I am going to return good for evil—made use of this statement, which is to be found at page 1496 of Hansard of the second session of 1919:

> Mr. Fielding: With nearly everything my hon. friend has said I can cordially agree. . . . The stock, I venture to say, in the past six months, has fallen largely into the hands of some of those Jews in London, whom my hon. friend would not have us take as models to follow in bargaining.

While it is true, Mr. Speaker, that the Grand Trunk Railway stock was watered to the point of saturation, does my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's think that because it was thus watered to the point of saturation it should be entirely in the hands of Baptists? Mr. Speaker, I cannot but deprecate leading members of Parliament making statements of that kind in the House. I can understand that sort of language being made use of by cheap politicians outside of Parliament during the stress and turmoil of an election, but in the House of Commons I would expect something different from these gentlemen, and I hope that so long as I am member of Parliament I shall not have occasion to again rise again and rebuke them for what I think was an act unworthy of their own dignity or of the dignity of the House.

I, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the attack which was made this evening by the President of the Privy Council upon our good friend, the member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), the former stated that the language used by the latter was false, and he did not qualify it in any way. The Deputy Speaker, who was in the Chair at the time, held that inasmuch as the Minister did not say that the language was false and malicious it would have to go and we have to accept it at that. I wish to point out, however, that the President of the Privy Council did not take heed or pay any attention whatever to, the letters from the late John Fraser, Auditor General, which were read into Hansard with reference to these very items. What the member for Antigonish and Guysborough did say was that he had been attempting since 1917 to obtain some information with regard to these vouchers. He interviewed the late Auditor General on a number of occasions and in his address placed on Hansard letters written by him which will be found at page 2724 of the unrevised edition. For instance the first letter is as follows:

> AUDITOR GENERAL'S OFFICE.
>
> September 15, 1917.
>
> Sir,—With reference to vouchers for expenditures in England, I have received no vouchers for 1917-18. It is necessary that these vouchers should be forwarded regularly to enable this office to properly check the accounts. Kindly let me know when I may receive vouchers covering expenditure for as late a date as possible.

I am sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. FRASER, A.G.
Deputy Minister, for Militia and Defence.

On September 24th, 1917, a letter in reply to the foregoing was written by an official of the Department of Militia and also appears in Hansard.

Mr. ROWELL: My hon. friend said that I made no reference to the letters. He is in error. I did make reference to them, but I said they related to accounts other than the $121,000,000—that they had no relation to that item.

Mr. JACOBS: I was not in the House at the time, and therefore I accept the explanation of the President of the Privy Council, but I have this to say of the whole transaction: We heard for the first time, to-night, that the reason these vouchers had not been produced and filed in the office of the Auditor General is that the ship which carried them had been torpedoed. If I am not correct, I wish to have it stated.

Mr. ROWELL: I am sorry that my hon. friend was not in the House at the time, but I stated there were two or three reasons why the vouchers were not sent over. One was that two ships upon which there were vouchers were torpedoed, and it was therefore considered undesirable to run the risk of sending any more vouchers over during the war. There were two other reasons if my hon. friend wishes me to give them.

Mr. JACOBS: All I have to say is that we heard for the first time, to-night, of the torpedoing of vessels carrying vouchers —we knew nothing of it before. My hon. friend (Mr. J. H. Sinclair) spends a great deal of his time digging into matters which are of interest to the House and to the people, and he had been attempting since 1917 to ascertain what had become of these vouchers. He saw from time to time in the Auditor General's Report memos that no vouchers had been received for this vast sum of $121,000,000, and he was justified in bringing the matter before the House as he did. Up to the present moment we have not yet had the vouchers for the immense sum referred to, notwithstanding the long speech which was made to-night by the President of the Privy Council. I hope, however, that the debate which has arisen on this matter will have the necessary result, and that in due time the vouchers will be on file so that everyone may take communication of them.

I was going to say a word or two with reference to the Canadian Northern Railway.

Mr. ROWELL: Will my hon. friend permit me? Before passing to that, to prevent any misunderstanding, I may say that I communicated with the Liberal Whip and intimated that I was going to deal with Mr. Sinclair's statement with a view to having the hon. gentleman in the House to-night when it was dealt with.

Mr. JACOBS: So long as my hon. friend was not able to produce the vouchers that the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough required, I do not know that any mere statement that the President of the Privy Council was going to deal with the matter would really satisfy the hon. member.

I want to say a word or two with reference to the Canadian Northern Railway, which we now own, and to point out to the House something with regard to the extravagance —wasteful, wanton, wilful extravagance— shown by that company before the line was turned over to the Government of Canada. We are responsible for that extravagance. We permitted the Canadian Northern Company to go on in their mad way until they reached a position where we were obliged to take over the line. These people came to Parliament year after year for the purpose of obtaining money. We handed this money over to them and seemed to be entirely unregardful as to what they did with it. Before the Canadian Northern was merged into the Canadian National Railway System the Company obtained a charter from Parliament to build a tunnel through Mount Royal, and I understand the cost of that was $11,000,000. We permitted that to be done, Mr. Speaker, we gave the company this power, and we allowed them to pierce this mountain, costing the people of Canada $11,000,000, when that work could have been obviated by forcing the Canadian Pacific, or the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to allow the Canadian Northern to negotiate the mountain by going about a mile or a mile and a half outside of their present line. Now in order to pierce the mountain the company were obliged to undermine valuable property in the city of Montreal, and as a result of the construction of this tunnel the buildings along the streets—shops, houses and so forth—fell into ruins, and the company were obliged at the cost of very large sums of money to settle with the owners. At the present time the Dominion owns on McGill College Avenue, which is the street I refer to, a number of stores and houses and in addition a Jewish Synagogue. I suggest that my good friend from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) might utilize that Synagogue for the purpose of converting bad Jews into good Jews so that the Government might in that way obtain some use for this Synagogue. But the point I want to make particularly is that we allowed this company to do what they liked with the money we gave them. We had no supervision over it, we allowed them to build a station for their Transcontinental railway on Lagauchetière street about a hundred yards from the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk stations. We now own two of those stations, and I say it was criminal on the part of the Government to have allowed the money to be expended on that new station and finally to have it unloaded on the country. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company should have been forced to allow running rights to the other two lines so as to give them access into the city of Montreal, which would have obviated the enormous expense of building these stations and tunnels which have had to be taken over by the Government. I say that the Government—not particularly the present Government, but the Government of yesterday, and perhaps, the Government of the day before—will be held to account by the people for the manner in which they allowed the Canadian Northern Railway Company and Mackenzie and Mann to deal with these railways that we have been obliged to take over.

The immigration problem is of great importance to this country at the present moment. Without a proper immigration policy this country is bound to go into bankruptcy, for we must have immigrants if we are to live financially. At the present time we have a population of about 8,000,000 and a national debt of $2,000,000,000 and our annual expense is something like $400,000,000. It does not require much of a mathematician to discover that if 8,000,000 people bear that debt, 16,000 would have to bear only one-half, and if we had a population of 32,000,000 people they would have to bear only one-quarter of that debt. We must have a proper immigration policy, and I submit that the present Government is not adopting a policy calculated to attract proper immigrants. We have placed all kinds of stumbling blocks in the way of prospective immigrants. Whatever may be said of Sir Clifford Sifton—and I am not here to be his protagonist—I want to say that the immigration policy he adopted was the policy for this country, and since his time we have had no Minister of Immigration who came near to him in the wide vision he had in regard to a national policy in that regard. At present we raise every kind of objection to immigrants; we encourage only a certain class; they must come from a certain district; they must be farmers and domestics. That is not the right policy. To-day a man may be an agriculturist; to-morrow he may be a shop-keeper. To-day a woman is a domestic servant; to-morrow she may become the wife of a profiteer. There is no guarantee that the people we bring in are going to remain in the same avocation, for this is a land of opportunity and those who come to this country naturally expect to improve their lot, otherwise they would not leave their native land.

The unfortunate part of the whole thing is that we are aping the United States in the matter of an immigration policy. But the conditions in the two countries are not comparable. They have 110,000,000 people and can pick and choose their immigrants; but we are not in that position, and yet we blindly follow the regulations of the United States in respect to immigrants. If to-day the United States pass an immigration law, to-morrow it is put on our statute books. They take the snuff to-day, and we do the sneezing to-morrow. So long as we follow that policy, just so long will we be a land without people.

When immigrants arrive on our shores what do we offer them? At this late hour I am not going into the question of our naturalization law. But suppose a man comes from that hated tyrannical country, Germany; he wants to forget the life he led there. He has read about this great land of opportunity. What does he find? On his arrival he has to wait ten years from the date of the signing of the Peace Treaty in 1919 before he can become a fully enfranchised Canadian citizen. And before that is possible he must obtain from Germany the consent of that Government that he may shed his allegiance to the Fatherland and become a British citizen; if he does not obtain that consent he remains for all time an alien in this country and can never aspire to the rights of British citizenship. Why does he come here? He can go to the United States where no questions are asked, and where after five years, if he has been a good citizen, he can become a fully naturalized American citizen and hold his naturalization against the world. In the United States they put no obstacle in his way, certainly nothing like we have here under the proposed Franchise Act. We have that Act, we have the Naturalization Act, and we have the Immigration Act—all tending to keep the new citizen an alien as long as possible. So long as that alien can go across the border and obtain all the rights and privileges of citizenship it is not likely that we shall ever increase our population by immigration.

I would like to say a word or two with regard to the new imposts, but perhaps these can very well stand until the resolutions go into committee. I would, however, point out one peculiar anomaly with regard to the excess profits tax which I think ought to be brought to the attention of the Government now. Under the present taxation law a man with a million dollars, we will say, goes into business, and in a year he makes a profit of half a million dollars —which is a large profit, every one will admit, but we will say that he is a friend of the Government and is supplying goods to Roumania and the other Balkan States —what has he to pay the Government under the new Act? He has to pay $120,000. We will take another case of a man who goes into business with $500,000 of his own, but he is unable to continue with that amount of capital, and having good credit at the bank he borrows another $500,000, and with this $1,000,000 he goes ahead, and, we will say, he also obtains some of the credits extended to the Balkan States and makes $500,000. How much, think you, do the Government get from him? They get $250,000. I was going to say that that is a clear proof of the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer, although probably that statement would not be accepted as it perhaps should be, inasmuch as even in these days a man with $500,000 cannot be declared to be a poor man. But there is the anomaly in the law—that a man who has half a million dollars and makes half a million pays fifty per cent of it to the Government, whereas the man who has a million dollars and makes half a million pays only $120,000. That is something which can be discussed in committee and corrected at that stage of the procedure.

This afternoon when the leader of the Opposition was talking about the coalition of 1917 he said that the promise was given by certain members of the Government that this union or coalition was only to be for the period of the war, and for no longer. The Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) challenged the leader of the Opposition to state when that promise was given and by whom. The leader of the Opposition was not in public life at the time and the incidents in connection with the speeches made at the time of the election must have escaped him. I have, however, a memo of the promises made by members of the Government that this union was to be only for the duration of the war and for not a day longer. Hon. Mr. Carvell, then Minister of Public Works in this Government, speaking at Sarnia in the fall of 1917—immediately after he was sworn in he went there to give a hand to the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Pardee) who now sits on this side of the House—made the statement, with all the responsibility attaching to his position as Minister of the Crown, that so far as he knew this Government was going to last until the war was over and not a day longer. He has carried out his promise; he is no longer a member of the Government. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) on various occasions made the statement in public that he was going to retire from the Government immediately the war was over. Has he kept his promise? He has.

Mr. BUTTS: For the benefit of the Government.

Mr. JACOBS: For the benefit of the Government—"he left his country for his country's good."

Mr. BUTTS: Exactly.

Mr. JACOBS: Well, that may be the view of my good friend from Cape Breton, but I scarcely think it is the view of the front benches, judging by the attention which the President of the Council (Mr. Rowell) paid to the member for Marquette in his remarks this evening. I speak now subject to correction, but I believe that the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder) made a statement of that kind or said something which could be construed into a statement of that kind on various occasions, and if the matter is of sufficient importance his remarks may be found on reference to Hansard. But I qualify my remarks with regard to the Minister of Immigration because I am not so certain that the statement he made could not be construed into something else.

The member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. MacLean) who occupied the position of property man or maid-of-all-work in this Government, is also no longer here. I understand that pending the taking of this vote he has taken to the tall woods of Newfoundland where he is hunting or fishing or doing something of that kind. The hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mewburn) who was Minister of Militia and Defence,—where is he now? He is certainly not a member of the Government. So that I can say in the words of the famous poet, Mrs. Hemans:

They grew in beauty side by side,
Where are those dreamers now?

In connection with one of the taxes proposed I wish to make a reference which may perhaps be considered by my hon. friends as a little picayune, and that is, the beer tax. We still have beer in Quebec of a certain consistency.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Don't say anything about it.

Mr. JACOBS: I suppose it makes my right hon. friend (Sir George Foster) thirsty when I mention it. But if he will come down with me to the province of Quebec I will send him back to Ottawa and say nothing about it. This tax, Mr. Speaker, is certainly directed against the poor man. The poor man and his beer have been, I was going to say, synonymous terms for years. In England you can scarcely mention beer without thinking of the poor man or the poor man without thinking of his beer; they are almost inseparable. If any attempt were made to impose a similar tax on beer in England just now it would probably produce a revolution. The Minister of Finance is a very kindly man, and I am sure it was not this suggestion that caused this tax to be placed on beer. The tax under the new proposals is 30 cents a gallon. I have made inquiries from saloon-keepers and I am told that about twelve glasses form one gallon, which would mean that 2½ cents is the tax upon beer per glass. Formerly the price of beer was five cents per glass.

Mr. KEEFER: Could the hon. member telle me how much per schooner?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Ask the Minister of Marine.

Mr. JACOBS: The Minister of Marine could possibly give my hon. friend the information. But we are dealing with glasses at the moment. Two and a half cents is the present tax on beer per glass. As I say, the former price of beer was five cents per glass, 2½ cents was paid to the brewer, the profit to the saloon-keeper was 2½ cents, and the beer was sold at 5 cents. Now, with the 2½ cent tax the beer costs the saloon-keeper 5 cents, and instead of making 2½ cents profit as he did before, he has raised the price to 10 cents, so that when the Government takes 2½ cents the saloon-keeper waits for his opportunity and jumps his price another 2½ cents, and there we have a 100 per cent advance charged to the workingman for his beer. Does the Minister of Finance ever expect to go before the electorate of this country? If he does, how does he expect to show them that 10 cents per glass is a reasonable price to pay when the price before this tax was imposed was only 5 cents per glass? I think that he will have some difficulty in convincing them of the justice and righteousness of his cause. I should not mind being pitted against him in any division in Canada where beer is drunk, he with his advocacy of 10 cents per glass and I with my advocacy of 5 cents per glass.

I would like to refer for a moment to the election in East Elgin. The House will remember that last year a Bill was passed declaring that by-elections must take place within six months after the seat is declared vacant. When I introduced my original Bill I had it at sixty days, but when the Bill went into Committee it was urged by the Solicitor General, the present Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) that in the Hudson Bay region and in other remote districts it would be almost impossible to have an election within sixty days, for various geopraphical reasons, particularly in winter. The member for Port Arthur and Kenora (Mr. Keefer) pointed out clearly that in his division, if, God forbid, there should be a by-election, it would be absolutely impossible to get the writs out and have everything done within sixty days, so we finally reluctantly agreed to fix the period at six months. Well, the Government are taking every day of that six months in connection with the East Elgin by-election. Is that the spirit in which the matter was discussed at the time? I say that the Government is acting in bad faith in not bringing on that election within a reasonable time. During this entire session there will be no representative from East Elgin, and that division is to be left unrepresented purely to satisfy the whim or caprice of something ulterior of the Government. These are matters which I leave to the Government to think about, and I feel confident that, when the gravity of the situation with regard to the election is brought before the Government, particularly when it was promised that that election would be brought on within a reasonable time, they will act at once.

I feel that I have taken up too much of the time of the House. I did not rise to make any set speech; any views that I had at the time the Budget was brought down were so thoroughly discussed previously by hon. members on this side of the House and by Government members, that when I came to speak I was in the position of my good friend the President of the Council (Mr. Rowell), who said that there was nothing left to glean. But my hon. friend found that his gleaning was pretty effective as he spent two hours in discussing matters which he found were of interest. If the President of the Council had to do some gleaning when he rose to speak, what shall be said of me when I have to speak after the President of the Council has spoken? He has covered the ground thoroughly from his point of view, and I must congratulate him on the speech he made. It was a vigorous fighting speech, and I must say this for the President of the Council, that he evidently forgot that the war was over; this was a speech which he evidently had in stock, and he wanted to get rid of it before the taxation proposals went into effect, fearing that if he had to pay a 10 per cent tax on that speech, he might have to carry it in stock and not be able to dispose of it before it became shelf-worn.

Mr. WILLIAM S. LOGGIE (Northumberland, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, before I enter upon a discussion of the matter before the House, might I be permitted to extend a word of welcome to the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) who has returned to this House, I hope, so thoroughly restored to health that he may be able to continue in the good work in which he is engaged? May I also express a word of congratulation to the Speaker of the House and to the Deputy Speaker of the House, that they are the first two gentlemen to occupy the Chair in this wonderful chamber of this magnificent building.

Mr. Speaker, as I wander through these spacious halls—marble halls, may I say?—I am reminded of the conflagration that took place so short a time ago and of the wonderful deliverance some members had on that occasion. It is fitting that I should congratulate the people of Canada for giving the lawmakers of this country, not only the present lawmakers but the lawmakers for generations to come, such a beautiful chamber to occupy.

May I have this opportunity of congratulating the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) on the Budget that he has presented to the House? It is the first Budget that he has delivered as a member of the House of Commons, and it certainly is one of the best that I have ever heard.

Let me refer for just a moment or two to a statement he made. He told us that for the past year he has a surplus of $39,000,000, and in that regard he has done very well. But he told us also that he will require altogether about $541,000,000 for the coming year. That, of course, takes up some treasury bills to the extent of $74,000,000, which, I think, mature during the present year. We find from his statement that he expects to receive from the customs $167,000,000 for the current year. But last year, that is the fiscal year ended March 31, 1920, he received from the customs no less a sum than $187,520,613. Those figures clearly show that, over and above any amount that is added to the customs tax, he is reducing the customs tax during the coming year by an amount of upward of 20 million. And yet the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) told us this afternoon that the Government had not taken any duties off the necessaries of life. He also said that the Government have taken no steps to make it possible to relieve the cost of living, and further, that the Government were protecting the profiteers instead of the consuming public. If I were to use unparliamentary language, I could, perhaps, say something that I ought not to say, but I will say in the meantime that those statements are inaccurate. If we have taken off $20,000,000 more than we are putting on through the customs, then surely we have reduced the duties. I may be asked, what we are reducing them on. We are certainly reducing them on the necessaries of life. Let me point to one item of the necessaries of life. For a number of years we have had a war tax of 7½ per cent on raw cotton, and I am sure that every hon. gentleman present will admit that cotton textiles are a necessary of life. Do hon. members know how much duty the consuming public paid into the treasury during the past fiscal year on raw cotton? Nearly $3,000,000. Yet, as was pointed out by the President of the Council (Mr. Rowell), during the fifteen years of the Liberal regime a reduction of only about $2,400,000 was made in the way of tariff. taxes. A reduction of some $125,866 has been made in the duty on nails, which are a necessary of life. If you go right through the schedule, you will find that we have reduced the duties on the necessaries of life and, to that extent, have reduced the cost of living. If that be true, is it statesmanlike for the leader of the Opposition to say that this Government have not taken any duties off the necessaries of life?

Then he goes onto say that we have protected the profiteers and ignored the consuming public, but he gives no proof in substantiation of that statement. It is a mere allegation, and so far as I can see it is not in accordance with the facts. The hon. member further says that we tax the middle and poorer classes. Well, of course, it is a matter of dispute as to who are the middle and poorer classes who will pay this tax, but I venture to say that all the people in Canada will share in the benefit that will be derived from the net reduction of $20,000,000. Then the leader of the Opposition says that we are safeguarding the rich and their friends. I do not know what ground he had for that statement, but I can see not the slightest shadow of actual fact in it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me point out what a constructive tariff policy is. The Minister of Finance tells the people of Canada that he intends to have a thorough revision of the tariff; and, more than that, he tells them on what basis that revision and investigation will be made. It is to that point that I wish to direct attention particularly, because if the Minister of Finance carries out his proposal on the basis which he has stated, then I say that the effect will not be such as has been suggested by the leader of the Opposition. I say that the policy of the Minister will tend to reduce the duty on the necessaries of life and will be a step in the direction of relieving the cost of living. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it will not protect the profiteers instead of the consumers, nor will it unduly tax the middle and poorer classes any more than those who are better able to bear taxation. Indeed, Sir, there is every indication that those best able to bear taxation will be asked to shoulder the brunt of it. Now, the first plank in the minister's platform—and this will surely bear out my statements—is an undertaking to prevent the abuse of the tariff for the exploitation of the consumer. I would ask the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) whether he does not approve of that plank. That hon. gentleman would protect infant industries, but I am sure he will agree that it is an eminently wise provision of this plank that the consuming public are not to be exploited. The first plank of the minister's platform therefore announces the fact that the consumer will be taken care of. The second plank is to stabilize legitimate industries and encourage the establishment of new industries essential to the proper economic development of the nation. Perhaps some hon. gentleman will contend that these cannot go together. My view is different; I think they can and ought to go together. As to details of the way in which the matter is to be carried out I shall have a word or two to say later on.

The next plank is to develop to the fullest extent our natural resources. I am sure there is not much opposition to that on either side of the House. On the question of developing our natural resources I think we are all at one. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), in order to do that, wants to have the duty taken off agricultural implements. He asks us to take the duty off the instruments of production, but he says not a word about taking the duty off farm products. I cannot see the consistency in this.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: May I tell my hon. friend that the first plank in the platform of the Dominion Council of Agriculture is absolute freedom of all food?

Mr. LOGGIE: I am very glad to take this opportunity to state that I cannot entertain any such proposal for one moment, and I will give my reasons. There are very many manufactured food products in this country, and if you let goods of that kind in free you will destroy those industries. I challenged the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) last year to go to Montreal and tell the Clark Company there that he would let Kansas City and Chicago send in canned goods here free. I contend, Sir, that you connot let these goods in free without destroying the industries.

An hon. MEMBER: What about fish?

Mr. LOGGIE: Fish can come free. There is no reason in the world why there should be a duty on fish, so far as I can see. There is no duty on fish going into the United States and that is the greatest boom that has come to the fishing industry in the last decade.

There is another plank that I want to give my concurrence to; it is to assist in providing adequate revenue. I am glad that the minister has put that forward. It would be silly to put it in any other way; it would be silly to say that we can have a tariff for revenue these days. There was a day when a tariff for revenue might possibly have met the case. In 1897 our total customs receipts were under $20,000,000—to-day we have reduced the customs revenue by that sum. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about tariff for revenue, but when you consider that we have to raise no less than approximately $500,000,000 for some years to come and that $140,000,000 of that is for interest you will surely not say that we can raise it from the customs. If you destroyed all your industries and let all the goods we consume come in under a reasonable duty, I suppose you could get a very large sum, but I do not think you could get anything like $500,000,000. The minister was wise when he laid emphasis on the fact that the customs taxes were to assist in providing adequate revenue.

Then, the next step he takes is to specially promote and increase trade with the Mother Country, sister dominions, colonies and Crown dependencies. I have not heard any opposition to that; therefore I presume this is a plank that hon. gentlemen would not object to vote for.

The next is to secure the interests of the Canadian people in the existing world struggle for commercial and industrial supremacy. In this young nation with the natural resources that we have, it does seem to me that if we are to grow, if we are to become a great nation, we surely ought to manufacture the most of the goods that we consume. We should do more than that. We should endeavour to export goods as well. Let me here illustrate as to the cost of goods. To-day hon. gentlemen claim that the consumers pay the manufacturers the duty in their price; that is to say that the manufacturers charge a rate for the goods that includes the cost of a like commodity plus the duty. If that were so years ago I can tell hon. gentlemen that is not so to-day.

Prints and cottons are practically as cheap to-day in Canada as they are in the United States or the United Kingdom. There is a good reason for it. If the United States attempted to send their cottons over here, the buyer would lose about 11 per cent because of depreciated currency. The United Kingdom cannot get the raw cotton of the United States to advantage because it takes £1 to buy $3.80 worth of cotton, where a few years ago £1 would buy $4.80 worth of cotton. The manufacturer in England is at a disadvantage and in so far as I know there is not a dollar's worth of English or American prints in the large warehouses of the great cities of Canada. If the proposal of the amendment were carried out and there was an immediate reduction in the rate of duty on cotton textiles, these good,s in my judgment, would not be any cheaper to the consuming public. The proposal of the Minister of Finance will be fair to consumers, will protect the great industries and will foster and conserve those that are young and infantile. They will enable our manufacturers to get their raw material free and they will make all citizens pay some share. I think that is a very desirable point in the platform—that all citizens pay some share of the expenditures of the country. They pay into the revenues to some extent and it is only fair that they should pay some portion but the greatest burdens are on those best able to bear them.

I have already explained how the proposals reduce the tariff to the extent of $30,000,000 based on the imports and values of last year. While they reduce it $30,000,000 they add $10,000,000 by way of customs super or sur taxes. Inasmuch as this money did go into the treasury it will be a real reduction. I give the Minister of Finance credit for the courage that he displayed in reducing customs taxes of this kind. Remember that the total customs taxes in 1897 were under $20,000,000. I am quite sure that the consumers not only paid the duty on raw cotton when they bought their textiles but they also paid the difference in currency which, hon. gentlemen will recall, was as high as 17 per cent.

1 a.m. They paid 7½ per cent and also the amount of the depreciated currency. Placing raw cotton at forty cents per pound, taking 7½ per cent of that sum, then the adverse exchange and then the profit, by the time the article gets to the retailer, you have a reduction in the cost, because the duty is taken off the raw material, equal to about 5 per cent on the finished product.

True, the most of it went into the Treasury, and many of us will say, "Well if it goes into the Treasury I do not mind." The objection raised by some hon. gentlemen is that the Treasury does not get the benefit, but that millionaires profit. I am not so sure that is the case at the present time. The conditions at the present time are abnormal. Labour in the United Kingdom is as high as it is in Canada, and the same condition prevails in the United States. If we could get our raw material in free of duty I do not see why we cannot produce the goods very nearly as cheaply, at any rate, as they can on the other side of the line. We are doing it at the present time. What may transpire later if business becomes normal I cannot say; but at present conditions are abnormal, and the prices of textiles in the United States and in the United Kingdom are practically as high as they are here.

Let me illustrate that in another way. I was in Winnipeg a few days ago and I went into a knitting factory there, and I was surprised to see them packing up knitted goods to go to New Zealand, goods that were sold at the same price as they were sold to Canadian consumers, or to the Canadian trade. Now, if it be true that that knitting company sold those goods to go to New Zealand, did they not sell them at the world's market value? At any rate they sold them on the basis of the price they could get them for in England, and surely that demonstrates the fact for which I have been contending. Whether they sold them cheaper I do not know—all I know is that the buyers, as business men, were purchasing them to the best advantage, and the goods were going from Winnipeg to New Zealand.

Now this proposal of the Minister of Finance—and it is to my mind the most important fact—stabilizes the general tariff and places businesses on a firm foundation. In that policy you have the interest of the consumer, and the industrial life of the country looked after. If you can frame a tariff based on these two principles then I think you can have a stable tariff. You will not get the revenue that is necessary from a stable tariff, but the minister has very wisely proposed a new plan for that purpose; let me tell you, I think it is a very important plan. Before I make any observations as to that let me read what I said last year in that regard, and the extract shall only be a very brief one. My words on the occasion referred to were as follows:

> If we frame a tariff and reduce the cost of living and we are short $50,000,000, how are we to get the money? If you refer to the imports in 1918 you will find that we imported into Canada about $860,000,000 worth of goods, and if we framed an adequate tariff on the basis I have indicated,—and by adequate I mean in the interests of manufacturers and consumers alike—

Mr. Speaker, you will admit, I am sure, that I have not changed my mind this year in regard to the matter; I am arguing to-night exactly the principle I argued last year—

> I would add a surtax of, say, 2 per cent on the $800,000,000, and would get $16,000,000 thereby. But I would still be short $34,000,000, and to raise that balance I would do this. I find by the Canada Year Book of 1918 that we manufactured $1,381,547,225 worth of products. I would put an excise duty of 2 per cent on $1,700,000,000 of Canadian manufactures and obtain $34,000,000, and that together with the $16,000,000,000, would give me my $50,000,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have very much pleasure in congratulating the Government upon having adopted a policy that will enable them to get the money they need without interfering unduly with the industrial life of the country. That is to say, they get a portion of the money from the manufacturers and the importer of like commodities must pay that additional tax. It is a fair and businesslike proposition. If our values fall and if our imports decline our tariff may remain stable and you can change the surtax and the excise tax to meet the circumstances in which you find yourself. If you have too much money you can decrease these taxes, and if you have not enough you can increase them without interfering with, and upsetting, the business of the country. I think the minister was wise in not putting any tax on food products. You wil remember, Mr. Speaker, that in the new taxes that we are imposing—the excise tax and the surtax—food products are not included, and yet the leader of the Opposition contends that the Government is taking no steps to make it possible to relieve the cost of living. Why, we are raising $90,000,000 of extra revenue, and we are not getting a dollar of it out of the food products. I must say, therefore, that the leader of the Opposition was not at all accurate in his statement. The hon. member did not say upon what his statement was based; he merely made the allegation, and allegations without proof are, of course, not very reliable and do not carry very much weight.

Some hon. gentlemen thought taxation should be applied to exports. Would it be fair to the manufacturer of this country to pay an export tax when he had to compete with the manufacturer in another country? I think the minister was cautious and wise, and acted the part of a statesman, in not making exports subjects to taxation. I did not suggest these additional exceptions last year, which I think are an improvement—at any rate for the present. The Minister of Finance is imposing a straight tax of one per cent on imports, and proposes to collect an additional one per cent from wholesalers. Personally I would have preferred that a rate of two per cent be levied upon imports, and leave the wholesaler alone; but the minister has thought it wise to do as stated, and after all there will not be very much difference. Then again the minister is collecting one per cent from domestic makers, plus one per cent again from the wholesalers. Personally I would have preferred collecting two per cent from the manufacturers. However, I understand there were difficulties in the way, and I can conceive that such is the case. Let me illustrate what I mean; it will only take me a moment. This is my objection to placing the 2 per cent on the manufacturer: Supposing I manufacture automobiles, of course I do not make all the component parts that enter into the complete machine and I have to purchase from my friend here rubber tires, and from another manufacturer wheels; those wheels and tires are subject to the excise tax, and when I build them into my automobile the Government will collect another 2 per cent on the finished product. However, I think this anomaly might be rectified in the revision of the tariff, and I am sure the Minister of Finance will consider the matter. I would suggest as a means of overcoming my objection that the manufacturer of the wheels should get his tax receipt from the Inland Revenue people, and the manufacturer of the tires should do the same, and when the automobile was completed the tax so paid on the parts could be deducted from the excise on the assembled machine. Possibly other commodities would be affected in the same manner. But these are only suggestions, and it gives me a good deal of pleasure to support the proposals made by the Minister of Finance in such a business-like manner. And I venture the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that when the people understand the financial condition of the country, they will welcome a stable customs tariff on business principles, and will be perfectly willing to bear the burden of these special post-war taxes. Again I say I most heartily approve of the tariff proposals; in my opinion none better could be devised.

Now a word or two on the amendment. I submit that to carry out the proposals it contained would be to precipitate this country into chaos. For the present we do not know what commodities we are to reduce the taxation on. If we reduce the duties on grey cotton, white cotton or any other cotton, I do not think the people of this country will be able to buy those commodities any cheaper than they can be purchased under present conditions. If the amendment suggested our taking ten cents off the tea duty, I would say that would be a step towards reducing the cost of living; but nothing of the kind is suggested. The amendment asks for relief to the consumers and producers, without giving to the people anything tangible whereby that result will be brought about.

Then the amendment proposes to make substantial reductions on the burdens of customs taxation. The Government is doing that. I have already explained that a net reduction of $20,000,000 has been made. In effect the amendment asks us to take a leap in the dark,—to take so much off prints, so much off woollen goods, so much off knitted goods—goods, as I mentioned a few moments ago, that we are producing in Canada about as cheap as they are produced in England.

The amendment also proposes to reduce the cost of the instruments of production. Yes, it will reduce the cost of those instruments, I presume, that are used on the farms. But what about the instruments of production for making prints, cottons, knitted goods? The amendment ignores those instruments; they are to be left under the same duty as they bear at present.

I see my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) right opposite, who spoke the other night in this debate, but this amendment does not contain any of his ideas regarding free trade, so he must be running counter to what the amendment proposes; and the same with respect to my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster), and my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark). If the latter were here I would draw his attention to the fact that last year he told hon. gentlemen opposite:

> I would as soon look to this side of the House—that is to your right, Sir.

> —for a reduction in tariff as to your left, Mr. Speaker.

I am really sorry that my hon. friend, whom I esteem very much, should go back on that declaration, because under the Government's proposals he will get a real reduction on the necessaries of life,—the very thing he is asking for we are giving to him. What he is voting for is a leap in the dark. I am disappointed,—that is all I can say in regard to my hon. friend's attitude to-day.

Then again the amendment does not contain a word of how the loss of revenue is to be made up if the proposed reductions in duties are put into effect. In a word, the amendment lacks any practical basis on which the suggested reductions can be made,—it lacks the earmarks of the declared policy of the Liberal party. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) made that so clear to-night that I do not think I need enlarge upon it. This amendment, it seems to me, would tend to the destruction of Canadian industry, in that it asks for an immediate reduction under present abnormal conditions without any investigation to determine the practicability of such reduction, so it would be a leap into the unknown future.

To-day the cost of living is not very different here from what it is in the United Kingdom or in the United States, and with textiles in Canada practically as cheap as in those two countries, any reduction in duty would not lower the cost of living. If that be so, then what duties are we to lower in order to reduce the cost of living?

I want to say just a word about the tariff plank in the platform of the Liberal party. The preamble is apparently the same as that set out in the platform of United Farmers. But to me the funny part of it is that a great party should itemize certain articles and ask that they be put on the free list when they are already on the free list. Mr. Speaker, listen: I want to tell you a secret. The Liberal party have asked that nets and net twines be put on the free list, whereas they have been on the free list ever since Confederation. Why do they ask that goods which have been on the free list for a long time be put on the free list? Do you not think Mr. Speaker, that such a course would have a tendency to deceive the reading public? Would the people not conclude that nets and net twines are now on the dutiable list? Would they not conclude that lumber, rough and planed on one side, is also on the dutiable list; that gasolene is now dutiable? Whereas all the items I have mentioned are on the free list? Yet that is part of a plank in the Liberal platform.

Now, the next thing they ask is that the principal articles of food be made free. Evidently the member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) has been educated since this time last year, because in his amendment of last year he asked that all food products be made free; now the demand is that the principal food products be made free.

Mr. McMASTER: We wanted to protect the public from lobsters.

Mr. LOGGIE: Allow me to say to the hon. member that that will not be a very easy matter. If you get a lobster after you you have to look out. In my judgment it is not practicable in Canada to make all the principal food products free. Of course I am referring not to the food products that are now free, but simply to those that are on the dutiable list. I say that it is not practicable to make them all free, because if you did you would destroy a domestic industry.

Now, they ask also that mining, flour and saw-mill machinery and agricultural implements be made free. On what basis are they to be made free? Why do you ask that saw-mill machinery be made free while other machinery shall be dutiable? No basis is submitted, so far as I can see. No provision is made for the continued output of domestic-made machinery; no provision for loss of revenue incurred through abolishing duties; no suggestion for the imposition of duties on the basis of revenue. Perhaps hon. gentlemen are quite right in that, because a tariff for revenue is not practicable at the present time, although hon. gentlemen have argued in favour of it. This platform does not recognize the gigantic annual revenue that is required, nor does it suggest how we should overtake it if it were reduced as is set forth in this platform.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just a word about our friends on the other side at the end of the Chamber. They ask for free agricultural implements; they do not ask that natural products be made free. I have been in conversation with hon. gentlemen from the West who are farmers and they have indicated to me that they do not care whether or not the duty is taken off farm products. But strange to say I have never heard them argue in the House that it would be all right to put all natural products of the farm on the free list. The consuming public of Canada paid into the treasury during the past year on meat products alone duties amounting to $716,271.11; yet hon. gentlemen in their discussions would certainly lead me to believe that farm products were free. I know that wheat and wheat flour are free, but because these products are free and they must look to the world for a market, they think that everything else should be free and that they should buy wherever they can buy the cheapest. If we are to succeed in this country—and I am sure that it is our destiny to be a great country—first of all we ought to manufacture most of the goods that we consume. No country situated as we are adjacent to the United States can be a great country unless it manufactures most of the commodities which it consumes. The member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), speaking the other day, said that he saw no great advantage in our people manufacturing cotton textiles; that we should rather devote our efforts to the production of farm products. I do not want to minimize the importance of farm production, but we cannot all be farmers. If we are to be a successful country, we must pay due attention to our industrial life as well as to our agricultural life. In our legislation respecting the farming interests we must not run counter to the interests of our industries. To my mind the Minister of Finance has set out to take care of these two interests, the consumer, and our industrial life. I cannot see how a saner, a wiser or more courageous proposal could be put before Canada to-day, when we have to obtain a revenue of $500,000,000 annually. We cannot get it through the customs; we must stabilize the tariff and then raise what we are short by an excise and super tax.

Mr. ANGUS McDONALD (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I endeavoured previously to catch your eye in accordance with arrangements formerly made by the Whip, and I regret exceedingly that this House seems a little inclined to be inhospitable to the only representative that Labour has sent to this House.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not catch very distinctly the remarks of the hon. gentleman; but if he is calling in question the fact that the Chair recognised the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) in preference to himself, I must say that it is an old established practice of this House that where two hon. members rise, preference is always given by the Chair to the hon. member who has sat in the House the longer period, and the Chair knows absolutely no distinction either as between parties or as between representatives who may be on the floor.

Mr. McDONALD. I wish to thank you, Sir, for your kind explanation. I am the latest acquisition to the House and what the Western man would term a "tenderfoot" to the rules of Parliamentary procedure. I am like everyone else, human and prone to the mistakes of human nature.

For the last ten days I have listened as attentively as I could to speeches on both sides of the House on the Budget. Some of those speeches I have listened to with a good deal of interest, more of them I have listened to with less interest; but I wish to state right here and now that I listened wih particular interest to one speech, namely, that delivered by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Nicholson). I wish to deal with a few statements made by my hon. friend, and the first one is to be found in Hansard of May 27, at page 2894—unrevised edition. This is what he said:

> Well, let me say that when my hon. friend's leader, the member for Marquette, entrusted the campaign in Timiskaming to Mrs. Rose Henderson, of Montreal he took good care to see that even his apparent desire to stir up class prejffudice in this country would not be frustrated.

I wish to say candidly and honestly that this is the first intimation that I, as a candidate and as member for Timiskaming, have ever had that the hon. member for Marquette had anything whatever to do with sending Mrs. Henderson into that Riding.

Mr. CALDWELL: Take it back.

Mr. McDONALD: I wish also to state that I do not believe that the hon. member for Algoma East would have made use of such statements had he been in possession with the facts in connection therewith. The hon. member made this statement:

> I say that hon. gentlemen entrusted the conduct of the campaign in Timiskaming to Mistress Rose Henderson, of Montreau. Now, who is Mistress Rose Henderson?

If the hon. member were asking me that question I would tell him that all I know about Mrs. Rose Henderson, was that she was an estimable lady, well spoken of by those who, I have reason to believe, know her best. Far be it from me to cast any aspersion or reflections on anybody who wears the same kind of garments that my mother wore. If there be anything wrong in Mrs. Henderson's career, I know nothing of it, and I would state most emphatically that Mrs. Henderson was in my Riding and worked in my behalf. She was brought in there by the Independent Labour party, not by the hon. member for Marquette.

Another statement made by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. G. B. Nicholson) to which I should like to draw attention is this:

> That is my opinion with regard to the hon. member. But I say that the One Big Union was the organization behind the campaign that elected him to this House, and that the ideals of that Union were preached in every mining camp in that constituency.

On a previous occasion, I made my position very clear in regard to the One Big Union, and it is not necessary for me to reiterate the statement that I made on that occasion. I am quite well aware of the fact that we have One Big Union men in that riding, but I wish to state most emphatically that that is an erroneous statement, that it is giving a wrong impression of what was extant in that riding at that time and what is extant in that riding at this time. The One Big Union did not send one delegate to the nominating convention that nominated me, and we never used the One Big Union hall as a campaign committee room, nor as a meeting place, nor in any other manner during that campaign or since. I wish to challenge the hon. member for Algoma East to have a committee appointed by this House to look into this matter, if he so desires, and to prove to the entire satisfaction of the people of the Dominion of Canada whether I am uttering falsehoods in this House or whether I am telling the absolute truth. If there be a One Big Union in Cobalt and in the riding of Timiskaming to-day, that is due largely to the dereliction of former governments in this country to do anything for the workingman, and possibly a share of the responsibility in that regard must be assumed by this Government. The hon. member for Algoma East made this further statement:

> I will go one step further, because I want to make my position absolutely clear. I assert that the One Big Union, whose principles I have just read, was the organization behind the election of the hon. member for Timiskaming, who sits behind the hon. member for Marquette, and who is one of the latter's loyal supporters in this House.

In that connection I wish to say that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen), the Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie), the Postmaster General and others, including the hon. member for Algoma East, went into that riding, bidding for that vote. I want to have it remembered that I have no quarrel with any of those hon. gentlemen who went into that riding to solicit votes. That is a privilege that belongs absolutely to them, and I would never be desirous of taking it away from them. It is their prerogative to go into that or any other constituency in this Dominion and solicit votes of Canadian and British subjects. But I am also aware of the fact that had the same vote that is being decried in this statement which was made last Thursday been cast in favour of my friend, Major Pullen, the hon. member for Algoma East would have steered absolutely clear of any reference to the matter in any way, shape or form. A little jealousy may enter into this matter. The hon. member for Algoma East was in that riding; he made on platforms in that riding, assertions and statements that the citizens in that constituency would not stand for. In his speech last Thursday he made this further statement:

> As I say, the headquarters of the Independent Labour Party associated with the United Farmers of Ontario, are in the One Big Union hall.

That is another statement that cannot be borne out by the facts nor proved by any court or investigating committee in this land. The One Big Union hall in Cobalt was never used by the Independent Labour party or the Farmers, and I as the member for that riding never made use of the One Big Union hall. The hon. member in his speech goes on to say:

> At the present time a suit is pending in the Ontario courts for possession of that particular property. The parties to that suit are, on the one hand, H. J. Everett, an officer of the Independent Labour party, and, on the other hand, an executive officer of the International Union of see the awful futility of all that sacrifice,

It is true that the president of the local branch of the Independent Labour party in Cobalt is a party to that suit, but is it because he is a One Big Union man? I desire to ask the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Nicholson) if he has anything to show that H. J. Everett ever belonged to the One Big Union. I am free to state the reason why he is a party to that suit. It is because he was a trustee of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, and he devoted his time and energy to a purpose the very contrary of that which my hon. friend from Algoma would wish to lead the House to believe he did.

The hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Nicholson), in the course of his speech, used this language:

> If all the sacrifice of that awful war is for no other purpose than to bring about the condition suggested, then I say that it is in the Providence of God that those boys were taken to their rest before they were forced to live to see the awful futility of all that sacrifice.

I wish to state most emphatically, Mr. Speaker, that I am one of those Canadian and British subjects that revere the memory of the men who now sleep amidst the weeds and poppies of France and Flanders, and so long as reason remains on her throne I will do all I can for the man who went Over There and who was told by the flag-flappers and the so-called patriots of the country that nothing would be too good for them when they returned. I honestly assert that I revere the memory of my hon. friend's son, and I will go further and say that perhaps it is a blessing, so far as that young man is concerned, who sacrificed his life in the cause of democracy, that he died Over There rather than see his illustrious father trying to saddle an autocracy on this country.

So far as the Budget is concerned, Mr. Speaker, there is no course left me by the rules of the House other than to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. C. R. HARRISON (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to speak on the Budget, and I can assure you that I will not detain the House at any great length. First I would like to add my congratulations to those that have been already expressed to the Minister of Finance for the very able Budget he has presented and the clear manner in which he has presented it. I cannot say that I agree with all the details as they have been worked out, but the principles are right, and I have no doubt but that we shall be able during the committee stage to have concessions granted on different articles which we do not consider as luxuries. We have an enormous war debt that has to be paid, and we might just as well make up our minds to get down to business and start to pay the same as we did in the time of war. At that time we where ready to give everything, as thousands did who had most to give in the way of splendid youth and brilliant promise.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould), speaking last night, said that the people were tired of bounties. I cannot agree with this. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that every encouragement should be given to the development of our natural resources. I might say that the territory east and west of Fort William, extending east as far as Temagami, is the great undeveloped section of Canada, rich in forests and minerals and agricultural resources, and a section which great iron and steel development would convert into one of the richest in Canada. Canada imports annually over 120 million dollars worth of iron and steel products, and our Canadian iron ore resources are lying in an almost complete state of unproductiveness. The ore charged to Canadian blast furnaces in 1917 was 2,176,206 tons, of which 92,065 tons were of domestic origin and 2,084,251 tons were imported. The ore through the section of the country that I have spoken of is of a low grade, and nothing would contribute more readily to induce activity than the granting by the Government of a bounty of at least 75 cents per ton on iron ore. Some regard the iron ore bounty as only of benefit to the mine operator. The reason the bounty is proposed as payable to the mine operator is because it is the only logical place to stimulate the industry at the source of the raw material. We have a growing and thriving iron and steel manufacturing industry using 95 per cent of imported ores with our own deposits unexploited. This is the situation that the bounty will remedy, by giving assistance to the actual producer and beneficiator of our ores.

Some are under the impression that a bounty is only urged in the interests of concerns that are already treating these ores. Nothing could be farther from the facts. These concerns deserve great credit for their perseverance in experimenting with Canadian ores at a loss and demonstrating that beneficiation is feasible; there are large deposits that are not in the ownership of operating concerns and these properties will benefit equally with those that have withstood ten years of experiments. The low grade ore deposits are owned generally, only small percentages of the tonnage being controlled by big interests. The benefits of a bounty to promote this development would have a nation wide application, from Nova Scotia to Vancouver Island, and many and varied sections of the Dominion are expressing the desirability and urgency of the measure as essential in a constructive reconstruction policy.

Our railways tap all the known iron ore deposits of the great undeveloped Canadian iron ranges, located principally in the section between the East and the West, where traffic originating locally is insufficient to pay operating expenses. The tonnage of ore from the mines and the reverse tonnage of supplies and material and the resultant general development of the different sections would make our railways in Canada self supporting in those vast stretches of territory.

We have in our section, Mr. Speaker, an ever increasing demand for electric power. The fact is that the Sudbury area has reached the maximum of power available from the smaller streams, and the Dominion Government holds in its control the only economic power available in that vicinity, and this could be developed in conjunction with the French River waterway; but up to the present they have failed to respond to the urgent need, when the revenue from power alone will meet the interest at 5 per cent on the total cost of the waterway, and at the same time make available 35,394 electrical horse power. This we can dispose of at over $30 per horse power. The making navigable of this river is a most important factor in the upbuilding and development of Northern Ontario. I might say that this section tributary to the French River waterway, consisting of some 30,000 square miles of territory, is being seriously retarded in its development for lack of cheap and direct outlet for its immense resources and inlet for its imports, which the improvement of this natural artery of commerce would provide. I might also say that this section to be served by the said waterway has increased in population 170 per cent in ten years, creating a purchasing power estimated at $45,000,000 per annum, which enures solely to the benefit of the manufactures of Eastern Canada who supply the market.

I might also say that this section of the country has given to Canada in that time 220 million dollars in gold and silver, 250 million dollars in nickel and is now providing 91 per cent of the total silver of Canada, 61 per cent of the gold of Canada and 81 per cent of the total nickel of the world. I would therefore urge upon the Government the importance of taking into their careful consideration the development of the French River, and the granting of a bounty on iron ore.

It was not my intention to have anything to say in connection with the criticism of the Opposition or the Farmer party, but on account of what has been said by the hon. member of Timiskaming (Mr. McDonald), I would just like to note a statement made by Mr. Nelson Parliment, U.F.O. Speaker of the Ontario legislature. Speaking before the Canadian club in New York, he stated that:

> The contest now being waged by the U.F.O. began 41 years ago, when through the operation of a protective tarriff Canada began to build up large industrial and manufacturing institutions which institutions by their nature was in a position to pay higher wages and offer better working conditions than the average on the farm, until a situation had been created that compelled farmers to make the fight now being waged in self defence.

Now what does that mean for the working man? I would commend this to my hon. friend from Timiskaming and those who preach an aliance between workingmen and the class organization being built up by the hon. member from Marquete (Mr. Crerar). It means, if it means anything, that the fight being waged is for the purpose of destroying Canadian industry in order that by reducing the opportunity for employment, cheap labor may result.

But Mr. Speaker, will it have this result? Yes, insofar as Canadian industries are concerned and insofar as reducing the opportunities for employment are concerned, but the final result will be to start once again the stream of Canadian workingmen into the factories and workshops of the United States, thus repeating what took place in Canada prior to 1879.

Canadian working men recall the conditions prevailing at that time, and they know that to go back to these conditions is to take from them the opportunity for profitable employment, that working men have enjoyed in a degree equal at least to that in any other country in the world.

This is not in accord with the teachings of labour organizations as I know them and I have been associated with labour organizations for the past thirty years. Labour stood behind this country during the war and so long as labour is treated fairly, they will stand behind this country during the period of reconstruction.

As I see it, the employer who is not square with his employees or the employee who is not square with his employer, is going to be out of step with the times. There may be a following of illogical radicals who advocate injustice as a means of gaining justice and some may selfishly oppose the progress which destiny has decreed as humanity's reward for the sacrifices which have been made; but in the end there will prevail a just and honest basis for the relations between capital and labour, and my opinion is, Mr. Speaker, that this new relationship cannot be legislated into existence. It will spring from the conscience and patriotism of the people. The time is coming when the unjust employer and the disloyal employee will share equal odium in the esteem of society at large.

But this is not to be brought about by class warfare. If Canada is to go forward she can only do so by the development of unity amongst here people. If there are wrongs or inequalities in our social or economic system, we can remedy these wrongs by approaching them with a desire to do what is in the interests of all the people and not what may alone serve to improve the condition of one class at the expense of the whole. The worst enemy this country has is the type of man who, reckless of the consequences of his words, goes up and down the country making statements that can have no effect but to create suspicion and prejudice. The body of organized labour to which I belong knows what this means. Those in this country who outwardly express their desire to break down our organizations in order that having them out of the way, they can bring about revolution in this country feed the fires of prejudice and build their case on statements such as those to which I have referred. I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying again that we cannot build up a united country by that method.

I was indeed sorry to hear the reference which the hon. member for Timiskaming made to the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson). I want that hon. member to understand that my hon. friend (Mr. Nicholson) has, to my knowledge, been a member of a labour organization for the past thirty-two years. I worked side by side with him as a railroad man, and no one in the whole northern country has done as much for organized labour as the hon. member for East Algoma or has to a greater extent guided them through their troubles. My hon. friend from Timiskaming can learn many lessons in connection with organized labour if he would only sit down and talk with the hon. member for East Algoma.

Mr. JEAN J. DENIS (Joliette) Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) began his remarks last evening by stating that he had been waiting forty-six years to have the opportunity of expressing his views in the House of Commons upon matters pertaining to the welfare of Canada. By those words I understood that the hon. member meant an indefinite time. If that is the inference which should be drawn from his remarks, I have to say that it is an indefinite time for us also to wait here until it pleases the Government to dispose of the matter now under discussion. I may be wrong, and I have no doubt that the majority of hon. members, especially hon. members opposite, think that I am wrong, but I have never been able to realize that we are doing good work when we sit up all night discussing a matter of such importance as the Budget. I have expressed my regret to some hon. members, and the answer given to me was that a considerable number of them wanted to go home. Well, Sir, I think I will not be offending anybody if I say that hon. members opposite should not be so anxious to go home because once they do they will remain there a mighty long time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DENIS: If my hon. friends opposite are so anxious to go home all they have to do is to call a general election to-morrow and they will stay home for a good while. I was not anxious to bring this matter up but it is altogether unjust on the Government's part to use their strength, their power and their weight to force this House to sit all night in order to dispose of the Budget debate. I say that it is unjust, and if the people of this country knew what is going on here they would certainly give no credit to the Government for what they are doing.

I do not think I would be fulfilling my duty if I did not join with hon. members who have already offered their congratulations to the Minister of Finance. I disagree with many statements he made, but for several things that he did he is deserving of congratulation, and I take this opportunity of thanking him publicly for the way in which he has treated me in connection with a certain matter which I had at heart and which I was afraid might be brought into the Budget—I mean the tobacco question. It has been rumoured for the past few months that there was to be a change in the duties imposed on raw leaf tobacco, and although the Minister of Finance could not commit himself, although he could not tell me as to whether he would or would not make any change in those duties, on the divers occasions on which I had the privilege of meeting him he always received me with an open mind, and with a great deal of good-will and sincerity, and allowed me to take up a considerable part of his time in the discussion of this question. For that reason I consider he merits my public congratulations, and these I am glad to tender him.

While on this subject let me say that I hope that the duties on tobacco will not be disturbed for some years to come, because this industry is one of the most flourishing we have in Canada. Last year we produced in the neighbourhood of twenty-five million pounds of tobacco which, selling in the neighbourhood of thirty or thirty-five cents, has produced for the people of this country $8,000,000. On the other hand, we are importing a like amount of tobacco from the United States; in other words we are only producing about one-half of what we consume. Under these circumstances, if we take into consideration the fact that it is essential for this country to import as little as possible from the United States—especially at this juncture when our dollar is only worth from eighty-five to ninety cents in the adjoining republic—I think the Government should seize every possible opportunity to aid our people in producing all that they can of articles that are being imported from the United States, in order to reduce importations from that country.

Coming more directly to the subject under discussion, namely the Budget, I read with a great deal of care and attention the speech which was delivered lately by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in England, and this is the way in which he opened his remarks:

> It is recognized on all hands that the present financial year is one of capital importance in the history of Europe, and not alone for those nations which emerged victorious from the late world-wide struggle. Eighteen months have elapsed since the preliminaries of peace were signed with Germany, and though peace follows with limping footsteps the time has come when each of us should set his house in order and, not content merely with facing our immediate necessities, should lay broad and deep the foundations of future credit and prosperity.

Sir, such were the words that were uttered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in England, and I think they constitute a guiding principle not only for the United Kingdom but for Canada as well. These words of the great English statesman are worthy of our solemn attention. Let us now see how they apply to Canada. The Chancellor of the Exchequer says that the time has come when each of us should set his house in order.

Does this Budget provide for that emergency? Certainly to set our house in order when the national debt is over $2,250,000,000, our expenditures, to say the least, should be met by our revenue. Has this been accomplished? I must say that from my point of view it unfortunately has not. Reading the Budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance one would be inclined to think that we were meeting our expenditures by our revenues. This is how the minister expresses it:

> With the total revenue of $388,000,000, and an ordinary expenditure of $349,000,000, it will be seen that during the fiscal year 1919-1920, the Government, after meeting all ordinary expenditure, including an increased amount for interest account and pensions over the previous year totalling nearly $39,000,000 has a surplus of approximately $39,000,000 over ordinary expenditure to apply to capital expenditure.

As I have said, on the face of it it would seem as though, leaving aside for the moment the enormous debt created by the war, and taking ordinary expenditures only, this country's finances were in a prosperous condition; but I am sorry to say that the facts are in direct opposition to the statement made by the hon. minister. Before going further, I wish to say, in order to avoid any misunderstanding, that I do not for a moment question the truthfulness of the statement made by him in so far as that statement is derived from the books of his department. But those books do not tell the whole truth. Technically they do; practically they do not, as I will demonstrate in a moment. The Minister of Finance says that we have a surplus of $39,000,000 over ordinary expenditures. On the contrary, I contend that we have an enormous deficit on both ordinary and extraordinary expenditure. I say further that the financial statement this year is the most discouraging that has ever been submitted either during or before the war.

A few days ago the hon. member for Cape Breton North (Mr. McKenzie) brought out the fact which, so far, to my knowledge, has not been controverted by the Government, that our revenue is composed of two parts, and that if we take the whole of our revenue we should compare it with the whole of our expenditure. In other words, we have our ordinary revenue, and we have our extraordinary revenue, or the revenue which is derived from the war taxes. The extraordinary revenue in this case, according to the figures given by the hon. member, was $118,000,000 for last year. Consequently if we subtract this amount, our ordinary revenue, instead of being $388,000,000, becomes $270,000,000, so that instead of having a surplus of $39,000,000 we have a deficit of $79,000,000.

I will now make a comparison between the expenditure and revenue for this year and the expenditure and revenue for past years. I have prepared a statement which is based upon the Budget speeches made during the last five years. It would have been more accurate, doubtless, if I had taken my figures from the Public Accounts, but as these figures which I am about to quote have been given in the Budget speeches each year, I thought it was preferable to use them:

Year.	Revenue.	Expenditure ordinary account.	Surplus Rev. over ordinary expenses.
1916 ..	$170,000,000	$ 93,500,000	$76,500,000
1917 ..	232,000,000	145,000,000	87,000,000
1918 ..	258,000,000	173,000,000	85,000,000
1919 ..	310,000,000	240,000,000	70,000,000
1920 ..	388,000,000	349,000,000	39,000,000

So that this year our surplus—if surplus there be—is very much smaller than the surplus which we find for each of the preceding four years.

Now, taking the figures again from the Budget speech delivered each year, I find that for 1916 the revenue over ordinary and capital expenditure was $46,000,000; in 1917 $60,000,000; in 1918 $55,000,000; in 1919 $48,000,000 but in 1920 we have a deficit of $31,730,912.

Those items, Sir, tend to prove that not only are we not meeting our expenditures, but that we have this year at least a deficit; and if we take the accounts as submitted by the Minister of Finance we might find that we have had a deficit in each of the past years. For instance, he has told us that $337,000,000 was lost by the fact that the country could not get anything from the items composing that sum. These items in past years served to demonstrate that we had a surplus; but now that they are stricken off they serve to demonstrate that instead of having a surplus each year we had a deficit.

It had been my intention, Sir, to speak at greater length, but at this time of the night I do not think it would be reasonable for me to proceed further. The Government should by all means try to meet the country's expenditure by its revenue, and in order to do that its first duty, in my estimation, would be to see that no public service be subsidized. I mean that no public service should have its deficit made good from the Treasury. In England, where there was a deficit in the operation of the postal service, the postal rates have been increased. In Canada the postal service has also shown a deficit, but the service in connection with which there has been the greatest deficit is the railways, and I submit that in order to make good this deficit the Government should increase the rates. Each public service should pay its own expenses, and until we make up our minds that this shall be done I do not think that we can achieve any practical results.

Upon Mr. Currie and Mr. Campbell rising in their places at the same time:

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Mr. Campbell has the floor.

Mr. CURRIE: Well, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Mr. Campbell's name is next on the list supplied by the Whips.

Mr. CURRIE: I may say that there was a ruling by Mr. Speaker when he was in the Chair a short time ago to the effect that the senior member takes the floor first. A complaint was made and he settled the difficulty in that way.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I was not in the House at the time and have no knowledge of the ruling given by Mr. Speaker. The only name on the list before me at the present time is that of Mr. Campbell. That is why I recognized the hon. member for Prince Albert and gave him the floor.

Mr. CURRIE: I am quite willing that Mr. Campbell should proceed. I may say, however, that I have waited all through this week for an opportunity to speak but could not do so because I had a bad throat. Now I have to be put last on the list.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I will see the hon. member (Mr. Currie) next on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. J. A. CAMPBELL (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, I may say in that connection that I was told that I came on next; I have had the place for some little time. I certainly do not want to interfere with anybody else. I was about to remark that it was not my intention and it is certainly not my intention now, to discuss the Budget in detail, the time being two-thirty in the morning. But I have a few observations to make in connection with two of the main features of the Budget.

In connection with the direct taxes that have been imposed by the Finance Minister (Sir Henry Drayton) I may say that I have no quarrel with the Government in regard to the principle of direct taxation; I think that the idea is all right. Taxation along this line should have been imposed long before this. It is not with the general policy in this matter, however, that the chief difficulties may arise; any criticism in connection with these taxes would rather be in respect to the carrying out of the idea and the collection of the tax in a satisfactory manner. These taxes have been named "luxury taxes." It seems to me that that is a wrong name. Either changes will have to be made in the taxes, or some other name will have to be applied to them. The question of boots and clothing has been discussed; I am, in the main, in conformity with those who have criticized the minimum taxable on these goods. But I would like to add another to this list; there is a matter of furs. Out in the West particularly, and perhaps in the northern part of the West, the wearing of furs is not a luxury; it is the next thing to a necessity. I think I am correct in saying that the minimum amount upon which the tax is collected in connection with fur garments is $100. It is absolutely impossible to get any kind of fur garment that is wearable for that sum or even considerably more. I assume that this matter will be discussed in detail when we get into committee; doubtless the minister will see his way clear to make some variations in connection with some of these matters.

It has also been drawn to my attention that this tax bears very heavily on some particular lines and will have the effect of putting out of business some people who are engaged in perfectly legitimate businesses. I shall not go into the details at this time.

There are also in connection with this taxation onerous conditions. I would refer the Government to the case of canoes which are required by prospectors, miners, trappers, traders and so on. As I recall it, the tax must be paid when the canoe is purchased, and on proper representations being made that this article is to be used for trading or other purposes of a similar nature, the tax may be refunded. I would simply point out to the Finance Minister that when a trapper or prospector gets a canoe he usually wishes to take it a long way from the place of purchase. It is notorious that questions of refund are slow in being dealt with, and if a man purchases a canoe in this way it is not likely that he will be able to get a refund of the tax until perhaps a number of months afterwards. This works upon the purchaser an unnecessary hardship and I suggest that arrangements be made by which the purchaser may hand in to the merchant at the time of purchase the declaration referred to, in order that he may take the canoe away and have the whole transaction closed.

But I take it that the chief difficulty in connection with a tax of this kind is in its collection. As in the case of the income tax I am afraid that the collection of this tax will be unduly expensive. A telegram from the Retail Merchants Association of Canada has been handed to me since I sat down here this evening. It is despatched from Vancouver, and reads in part as follows:

> Proposed luxury taxes meeting with intense antagonism from public and will result in many proposed taxes not being collected unless Government employ host of inspectors and collectors entirely out of proportion to amount collectable. Retail trade unanimously of opinion only logical way to collect such tax is through manufacturer or importer.

Without entering upon any further discussion of this matter, I would be inclined to agree with the terms of that telegram. I sincerely hope that when the matter is taken up in committee some variation will be made to meet the difficulty. I may say that I personally know that these taxes are not in all cases being collected. Not very long ago I had a conversation in the city of Winnipeg with a merchant whom I know well,—he does not live there. He told me —by the way, this was some days after the proposals of the Finance Minister had been brought down—that he had paid no attention up to that time to the directions contained in the Budget, had collected no taxes, and did not know when he was going to start. I am afraid that this situation is altogether too common throughout the country and that there is going to be great difficulty in collecting these taxes under the plan as proposed. I trust that some more efficient scheme will be worked out under which they can be looked after with the least possible trouble and expense.

The main feature, however, of the Budget proposals so far as I am concerned is the question of the tariff. Unfortunately I was absent from the House at the time of the delivery of the Budget Speech. I was on business in the West, public business, as a matter of fact,—and did not hear the speech delivered, nor did I have an opportunity of listening to a number of others which were delivered shortly after. But I have read some of these, and from what I have read and from what I have heard since my return I have come to the conclusion that the one outstanding feature in connection with these tariff proposals is that the Government is committed to a policy of protection. It may be called by various names, but it would appear to be what has hitherto been known as the National Policy. I gather this more, perhaps, from statements made by members on this side and from press comments than from any statement made in the Budget Speech itself. The speeches of hon. members on this side would appear to convey conclusively to my mind that that is the stand which the Government takes and which members on this side wish them to take. As to newspaper comments, I simply refer you to the following which appeared in the Ottawa Journal shortly after the Budget Speech was delivered: It said that the Unionist tariff policy as shown in the Budget > —is the old N.P. brought up to date and camouflaged a little to break the news gently in certain quarters.

The disguise is not very apparent to me, the policy sems to have been quite openly stated. I wish to state frankly and fairly to the House that I am not in favour of this policy; I have opposed it on numerous occasions hitherto, and I see no good reason for changing my attitude at this particular time.

On the other hand, I am not a supporter of a strictly free-trade policy. I do not think there is any issue at the present time between extreme protection and absolute free trade. Some time ago, in a debate on the railway question, I had the temerity to state that I did not think the matter of public ownership was an issue at all, notwithstanding the fact that very learned speeches were being delivered pro and con. A similar situation exists now. We speak of protection and of free trade; but the issue at the present time is between those who believe in what may be called adequate protection or reasonably high protection and those who believe in a tariff mainly for revenue. I differ from the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Henders) in his designation of what protection really means. There is a vast difference between a tariff for revenue with incidental protection and a protective policy which is mainly intended for protective purposes and which may or may not result in revenue for the country. I do not think there are in this House any hon. members who are in favour of the kind of protection which has been described as being as high as Haman's gallows, or if there are any, there are very few; nor have I heard anybody come out and out absolutely in favour of a free-trade policy. Therefore, I take it that when hon. gentlemen refer to free trade, they are referring to that term in its popular meaning or usage which covers a tariff for revenue purposes with, perhaps, occasional incidental protection. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Davis), the issues in connection with matters of this kind have been somewhat mixed. I have listened carefully to some speeches, and I find the effect of tariff, prohibition, slow work, lack of proper machinery and various other things have all been confused. The hon. member for Neepawa traced out the situation as regards Germany and pointed out just wherein protection affected the situation and wherein the situation was affected by other things. I had intended to discuss that question, but I will not do so as it has already been dealt with effectively by that hon. member.

One hon. member, in speaking the other day, pointed out that England had a policy which was bringing about her decadence, and from which serious results were likely to follow, and he said that the last thing that Canada should do would be emulate that policy. Before concluding his speech, if I recollect correctly, he produced a list of about four pages of articles in which he showed that Great Britain had imposed a considerable tariff, and then intimated that that country was not such a free-trade country as we had been led to believe.

Another matter in which some confusion existed was with regard to the situation in England in connection with steel. An hon. member, in discussing the question of production of steel in Great Britain, the falling off that has taken place there and the question of whether Great Britain would ever again be able to compete with the United States and other countries, stated to me that one of the reasons why steel production in Great Britain was not on the same plane it had been formerly was on account of what is generally known as "slow work;" that the workmen did not produce as well nowadays as they did in previous times, and in that connection he referred to an incident regarding a certain piano firm which did business in London and which was compelled to quit because it was not able to manufacture at a profit. He intimated that this firm had stated, in an announcement which was made when they decided to go out of business, that whereas before the war started it used to take five men a certain length of time to manufacture one piano, it now took twenty-three men to do in the same time the same quantity of work; or in other words, it cost more now to polish a piano than it did to manufacture a whole piano several years ago. Some people in relating that incident would give us to understand that this piano firm went out of business and that the steel situation was bad, simply because of the trade policy of the country—which would be most erroneous.

I might discuss the question of mergers, balance of trade and so on; but at this time I shall refrain from doing so. What stares us in the face at the present time is the question—what is to be the trade policy of Canada from now on? This is a period of reconstruction; we are at present confronted with new conditions, and the question that we must face is, as I said, whether we are to continue the old policy under these new conditions, or find a new policy which will be more appropriate to present conditions. Whatever may be said in favour of policies that existed in times past, what we need at the present time is a policy of development along natural lines where the maximum revenue will result with the minimum of burden on the shoulders of the poorer classes. In this connection we, of course, must take into consideration the experience of other countries. It is in order for us to adopt those schemes which we think have been beneficial to other countries and have worked out well and to avoid the mistakes that other countries have committed. To adopt the policy of the United States holus-bolus, because the United States appears to have prospered, or on the other hand to adopt the policy of Great Britain, because a certain amount of prosperity has resulted therefrom, or to refuse to adopt the policy of Great Britain because some hon. gentlemen have said that conditions in that country are not as good as they were some time ago, is not reasonable. The fact that Great Britain has a free trade policy may or may not mean anything in particular to us. The fact of the matter is that conditions in Canada are so entirely different from conditions in England that, while Great Britain might prosper under one policy, Canada might be more prosperous under another policy. At the present time the main industry in Great Britain—how that came about I shall not discuss—is that of manufacturing, whereas in Canada the basic industry is undoubtedly that of agriculture. The situations are entirely different. In the United States great industries have been built up. It may be that the protective policy of the United States has had a good deal to do with the building up of those industries, although I am not so sure about that. It is quite possible that those or even greater industries might have resulted had the policy been different. At any rate it is unquestioned that in connection with the greatest industry in the United States, namely, that of steel, during a considerable period of time, owing to the protective policy, consumers of steel had to pay almost twice as much they otherwise would have had to do. This was the period of in the system in the United States. so that the railways cost a great deal more than they otherwise would have done, and it may be that we now see a reflection of this in recent developments railway construction in the United States,

It is a very complex situation and I only wish to reiterate that we cannot credit the progress that the United States has made to their tariff. There are various other considerations to be taken into account. I have not the paper with me, but I read in the Saturday Evening Post of a few weeks ago an editorial in which the writer expressed the opinion that it was questionable whether the policy pursued by the United States in the past had been in the best interests of that country. He raised the question concerning the situation of the agricultural class and the opinion was expressed that the farming community had undoubtedly suffered as a result of the tariff policy in that country. The policy for Canada is to make the most of the natural advantages which we have. A father raising a family does not now do what I am told was done in days gone by. He does not allocate one member of the family to the ministry, another to law and another to the military profession and train them up for these vocations irrespective of their particular adaptability to the work which they will have to perform. The responsible father who has a family to look after now uses his utmost endeavours to ascertain for what particular occupation each child is peculiarly adapted, and he trains his children along the lines in which they give evidence of adaptability. If this policy is pursued there will be experts in the country, and that is what we desire; and the same kind of policy that is adopted by an intelligent father with reference to the education of his children should be followed in the development of the country. Agriculture being the basic industry of the country, the industry which we are in the best position to prosecute, the industry in connection with which we are in advance of every other country, or at any rate, of most other countries, qualitatively and in extent; the western plains of Canada being the future granary of the world if a proper policy is pursued; it would seem to me that the line of action this House should take would be to do everything possible to take the utmost advantage of that and allied industries in connection with the development of the natural resources of the country. The farmer asks no help in this connection, but it is only fair and reasonable that no handicap should be placed in his way to hamper his operations. He does not ask for protection, but on the other hand it is unfair that other industries should be protected to his disadvantage. I fail to see the logic of the situation. Items of food, the necessities of life. should be on the free list, or be so dealt with as to have a minimum of tariff against them. In this respect I desire to draw the attention of the House to some of our natural resources, especially minerals. Next perhaps to the farming industry, mining is the most important of the natural industries of the country. A short time ago I had on the Order Paper a resolution to which I intended to speak, but I did not get the opportunity to do so and I withdrew it, and that is one of the chief reasons why I am taking up some time to-night. That resolution was as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, it is in the interests of Canada in connection with the development of its natural resources that all machinery required to mine, recover and market the mineral resources of Canada (including oil and gas) shall be placed on the Free List in the Customs Tariff.

I am of the opinion that it would be the part of wisdom for the House to pass a resolution of that kind and for the tariff to be modelled along those lines. At the present time a great many instruments used in mining are on the free list; but, in the first place, some of the instruments in the tariff schedules are not free, and secondly, I would point out that there have been developments within recent times evolving new implements which are not provided for by these tariff items. I do not propose to go into the details; I will simply say that one imporant mineral that does not seem to have been properly taken into account in these tariff schedules is oil. It is questionable whether machinery that is indispensable to the discovery and development of oil can be brought in under the schedules as they at present stand, and an amendment in this connection should undoubtedly be made. That, however, is a matter that can be taken up in committee.

Something has been said in regard to the political aspect of the situation in connection with the tariff. Now, when I say that I am opposed to the policy that has been put forward by the Government, which means that I shall perforce vote for the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queens (Mr. Fielding), I must state that I shall take this step simply on the merits of the case, and because I think that the amendment is along the correct lines which Canada should follow at the present time. As to whether it will be put into operation by one party or the other is a matter that does not concern me now. The fact that a certain party was in power for a member of years and did not carry out all its tariff pledges is not a sufficient reason why I should vote against principles which I have held for some time, and support a tariff policy entirely at variance with my ideas. I am free to confess that I was not satisfiied with what had been done under the Laurier regime in regard to relieving the tariff burden, and I might state that had it not been for the reciprocity policy introduced in 1911 I am satisfied that I would not have supported that Government at that time. I might discuss this question at further length, but time forbids.

There is, however, a question which I desire to take up and which is indirectly connected with the Budget, and that is the question of the development of our natural resources; and I wish particularly to refer the transfer to the Prairie Provinces of their natural resources. I had intended to discuss this matter in another way but I have not hitherto had an opportunity to do so, nor is it likely that I shall otherwise have that opportunity. There can hardly be too much stress placed upon the importance of developing the natural resources of the country. The results of such development are numerous. One of them is the creation of wealth. We have heard a great deal about the illimitable resources of Canada and of what use they will be in paying off our national debt. But if they are left in their present state they will be of no advantage to us. Only by full development can they be of advantage to the country directly or indirectly. I am thoroughly convinced that we have great and almost boundless resources, although as a matter of fact they have never been carefully surveyed. That is my impression, and I regret that time does not allow me to give an account of some of these to the House. But the point remains that unless a policy is adopted which will result in the development of these resources we might as well not have them at all. In the second place this development will provide raw materials as the basis for industry. Such development will help to adjust exchanges and if these resources which exist in the western provinces are developed and industries spring up as a result thereof, we will have a situation in the west similar to that which exists in the east.

My point in connection with this is that the Government does not appear to have any policy regarding the development of these important resources. The hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) introduced a resolution in which he called upon the Government to formulate a definite policy in regard to these resources.

A necessary prerequisite, in my opinion, to the formulation of a sound policy of development is the settlement of the ultimate control of the natural resources of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. An anomalous situation exists at the present time with reference to these resources. The situation is such that development is being retarded. The question is up in the air. The provinces will not do very much in connection with these resources because they do not control them and the Dominion does not take such steps as we think advisable because it is in the realm of probability that the resources will ultimately be transferred to the provinces.

I have been endeavouring to find out where the Government stands in this connection. Before the election of 1911 the present right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) made the promise that these resources should be transferred to the provinces. I did not hear the promise made myself but I take the word of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Cowan) who stated in the House a few weeks ago that such a promise had been made. The transfer of the resources to these provinces was definitely promised in the manifesto issued by the party of which the present Prime Minister was then the head. In the House some time ago I asked some questions in regard to this matter and these are the questions and answers:

Mr. Campbell:

1. Was any definite promise ever made by the Government or any member thereof to transfer the natural resources of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to these provinces?

2. If so, was any condition attached to such promise which would affect other provinces by way of re-adjustment of subsidies or otherwise?

3. Is the Government of the opinion that the other provinces have any interest or equity in the resources of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba?

4. If such promise was made is it the intention of the Government to carry out the terms thereof? If so, when?

5. If not, does the Government not think that it would be in the public interest to make a definite statement to this effect and thus put an end to the uncertainty which at present exists?

6. Is the proper development of the natural resources of these provinces not being seriously handicapped and retarded by delay and uncertainty in this connection?

Sir George Foster:

1. The policy announced by the Prime Minister was and is to transfer the natural resources of the provinces on such fair terms as can be arranged. The necessity of fair terms and the interests of other provinces arises from the fact that when the provinces in question were created in 1905 a special subsidy in lieu of those resources was granted them.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Yes, as soon as possible.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. The Government is not aware of such retardation.

Referring to the last question I can hardly understand the Government making an answer of that kind as it seems to be palpable to any man studying the question that the situation must result in the retardation of the development of these resources. The difficulties in the way created by this situation have prevented development in certain important instances.

This question was discussed thoroughly at several meetings of western members on this side of the House and a committee was named to draft a report. That report, which was submitted to these Western members and adopted, unanimously, has been placed before the Government. It is as follows:

OTTAWA, April 30, 1920.

Report of Special Committee on Natural Resources.

In the opinion of your Committee the question of the development of Canada's natural resources is one of the most important before the country at the present time. The financial condition of Canada makes a definite policy in this respect of immediate concern.

A necessary prerequisite to any satisfactory national policy herein is the definite settlement of the question of the ultimate control of the natural resources of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

The Government has recently announced that it is, and has been, its policy since the Government was formed to transfer to these Prairie Provinces their natural resources, on such terms as will be equitable to the other Provinces, and is apparently deferring action in this connection until such time as representatives of all the Provinces shall meet together and agree on a scheme or basis of transfer.

Such agreement is no nearer being reached than it was eight years ago, nor does there appear to be any likelihood of a settlement of the question being arrived at in this way in the future, near or remote.

The question is solely one between the Western Provinces and the Dominion. The Dominion Government is possessed of all the data in connection therewith and is in the position, and is the proper party to work out and present to the Western Provinces for acceptance an equitable scheme or proposal for the transfer to these Provinces of natural resources of said Provinces according to the promise made to them by the Prime Minister.

Therefore, your Committee recommend that representations be made to the Government that it is imperative in the interests of the country as a whole, and particularly with reference to the development of its natural resources, that the question of the ultimate control of the natural resources of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba be settled immediately, and that the Government take the necessary steps forthwith to have this done.

Respectfully submitted.

As I said before there is no string to the promise of the Prime Minister as far as I can learn or to the pledge contained in the platform of the party of which he is the leader. If there were any conditions attached it is up to the Prime Minister to state definitely what they were. If conditions have arisen since that promise was made which prevent him from carrying out the promise, or if conditions have arisen which make it advisable that these resources should not be transferred, it is in order for the Prime Minister to make a statement and then we will know what the situation is and shall be governed accordingly.

The question cannot be settled until it is settled right. It may be a debatable question as to whether these resources should be handed over to the provinces or not but certainly there is no question as to the desirability of having the matter settled definitely and having it settled
3 a.m. right away. There has undoubtedly been serious loss caused by the delay. Whether they shall be handed over to the provinces or not now, the transfer must ultimately take place in order to put these provinces on the same basis as the other provinces of the Dominion. Therefore, if eventually, why not now?

It has been argued that there is a legal reason why these resources must be handed over. It is that the British North America Act did not contemplate such a thing as a landless province. It is contemplated by the British North America Act that all the provinces shall be on an equal footing. Such is not the case in this respect. There is a national reason why these resources should be handed over because it is in the interest of Canada as a whole that this matter should be removed from further discussion. The question has certainly been complicated by bringing the other provinces into the discussion. My contention is that the other provinces have no right to a say in reference to the disposal of these resources than the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba have to a say in the disposal of the resources owned and controlled by any other province. A mistake was made by calling the other provinces in for consultation in the first instance. The Government should take the matter in hand forthwith and submit a proposal to the western provinces which the Government itself believes to be a satisfactory and reasonable one and in accord with promises made.

If it is not accepted it means that the resources will stay where they are and this Government can then formulate a policy in regard to their development. I had contemplated dealing with one or two other questions of interest to the Western country at this particular time, particularly the Hudson Bay railway, but as I may have an opportunity to do so again, and as the hour is very late, I shall defer any further discussion until another time.

Mr. ANDREW KNOX (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention at this hour of the morning to occupy very much time, but I feel that I would not be doing my duty to my constituents or to myself if I did not put myself on record in connection with the Budget.

In the first place I wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance upon at least making an effort by direct taxation for the purpose of paying our way, instead of going on increasing our enormous national debt. The Minister of Finance being a man for whom I have a great regard, I am sorry he was not been better advised as to how he should have placed that direct taxation. Had he followed the platform of the National Progressive party he would have adopted measures which would have secured a further considerable sum, and at the same time would have given relief to the great masses of the people, both urban and rural, at present oppressed by the high cost of living. For there is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that if the tariff were reduced to a much lower level than it is to-day on many articles it would not only reduce the cost of living, but would bring in a great deal more revenue—that is revenue to the Government and not to the manufacturers.

A few minutes ago the member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) spoke of some protection which the farmers were being benefited by. I am not sure of the figures which he quoted, but as far as I could gather the hon. member meant to say that some $700,000 of revenue had been received in connection with this article produced by the farmers. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not protection for the farmer in any shape or form. It is protection for the packer. In proof of that I may say that the farmer sells his meat on the open market, and if this money is collected from cured meats shipped into Canada it goes to prove—knowing as I do that our cattle and hogs in the West are very often shipped to the American markets—that the American packer is buying the Canadian product, curing it, and shipping it back into Canada again which, after paying the duty, appears to me, is not very creditable to our Canadian packers. However, I will let it go at that. The member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) said that the present Budget is the greatest combination of free trade and protection that he has ever known. The protection is there all right, but up to the present I have been unable to discover just where the free trade part of it comes in. In so far as I can see the protected interests are not interfered with in any way by the Budget.

I feel that the best thanks of the Progressive party are due to hon. gentlemen on the Government as well as on the Opposition benches for the attention given to our group, as the attacks in which they have indulged, unwarranted as they are, will have the effect of focusing public thought on the policy and platform of the Progressive party on which the broad light of day is always welcome. I particularly wish to thank the hon. member from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) for the new name, "Levites" which he has applied to us. The Levites, Mr. Speaker, as no doubt you are aware, were the spiritual advisers and leaders of the children of Israel when they were going through their period of re-establishment and reconstruction—in other words they were the "little leaven which leaveneth the whole lump," and I congratulate the hon. member upon his keen foresight in recognizing the same distinctions, comparisons and functions for this small but growing group. But, Mr. Speaker, I would rather, very much rather, be a Levite than a parasite, for the name parasite is the most fitting I can think of for those who draw their profits from the consuming public of this country under the shelter of a protective tariff.

I do not consider it wise to go into the different phases of the Budget, as they have been dealt with from almost every angle, but I would say that during a recent trip West I found continual adverse criticism with respect to it and I have received a large number of letters and telegrams along the same line.

I deplore the attacks made on the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), notably those made by the member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), the member for St. John (Mr. Elkin), the member for Algoma East (Mr. Nicholson), and the member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland). Apropos of that I wish to read a short editorial from the Winnipeg Tribune of May 29, and in passing let me point out that this paper is owned and operated by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Richardson) whom I congratulate upon the fairness of the article, and I cannot help but think that this expresses the feeling of many -in fact a large majority—of those sitting on the Government side. The article in question is headed, "Unfair Talk," and reads as follows:

> Charging that Hon. T. A. Crerar, leader of the Farmers' Party, is "associated with the Bolshevik party"—as a press heading puts it—or characterizing the farmers as a dangerous class, politically, is just common, ordinary rot.
>
> Tom Crerar has been able to hold his head up among the people of Western Canada for many years. And there is no sign that he is other than a good Canadian, and worthy of the highest respect. Mr. Crerar takes his stand, out in the open, on certain fair political ground. He invites attack, and he may be open to attack, but away with the petty, personal stuff. It is cheap and unworthy in a discussion of the great principles which should enter into the government of the nation. Let us have fair play and the elimination of all pettiness of spirit.

This goes to show, Mr. Speaker, that the people who really know the hon. member for Marquette, and are honest about it, will not stand for the tactics adopted by the members whom I have mentioned, to say nothing of the cheap, petty spirit which they have displayed, and to which, Mr. Speaker, only the rules of the House prevent me from giving its proper name.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to diverge a little from this much-hashed subject, and to say that in some measure I agree with the Hon. Minister of Finance, and I admire the spirit of optimism which he displayed when he said that he does not believe that the job ahead of this country is a bigger job than Canada can look after. I certainly agree with him in that, but I believe we will have to change our method of procedure, and instead of developing our unnatural resources—as we have been trying to do for the last forty years—we should give a little attention to our natural resources. Mr. Speaker, it is now a few days more than thirty years since I landed in Canada. At that time Canada had, roughly speaking, a population of five millions of people. I was an optimistic young man in those days, Mr. Speaker, and had great visions of Canada's future. In thirty years' time the natural increase should have brought ou rpopulation to at least eight millions. During that time we had three millions added by immigration.

Yet, Sir, we find to-day that our population is still in the neighbourhood of eight millions. Surely this is proof positive that something is radically wrong. And my theory is that when a wrong is proven to exist, we are not doing our duty if we do not try to set it right.

In the Northwest—and I have particularly in mind that part of Saskatchewan which I have the honour to represent, and which I might say in passing is one of the largest constituencies in the Dominion, and in which during my 30 years farming there I have not seen one crop failure—there is room for millions—in the northern portion of my riding, there are vast stretches of unoccupied lands, almost unexplored lands, which await the railway and the settler—I put the railway first, because we have already extended settlement from the present railways as far as it is possible to operate. Many farmers are hauling their wheat 30 and 40 miles from north of Prince Albert, and the same may be said with regard to Melfort and Tisdale; in fact, wheat is coming to Tisdale from a distance of 50 miles. Another thing that the people of my constituency ask for is the completion of the Hudson Bay Railway.

It is well known that there are great stretches of land fit for grazing and there is plenty of hay for stock extending for 150 miles north of Prince Albert. I am so confident of the possibilities of this northern country that I have persuaded the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) to attach a fully qualified man to the Indian Treaty party which is going north from Prince Albert in a few days, so that he may report on the agricultural and other natural resources now lying dormant there.

In conjunction with this, I believe we should institute a sound immigration policy, making a speciality of the immigrant who is willing to settle on the land, knowing that the development of the mines, forests and fisheries will naturally follow. And I may say that we have all of these natural resources in the territory which I have described. But to enable these natural industries to prosper, it is essential that if they cannot be given encouragement, they at least should not be penalized by having a heavy customs tariff on their instruments of production. That is where the platform of the National Progressive party would come in with advantage, and I have no hesitation in recommending it to the attention of this House as something which much better suits the needs of Canada to-day than either the present budget or the amendment. However, Mr. Speaker, as the rules of the House prevent a further amendment, which this party would gladly have offered along the lines I have mentioned, I find myself in the position of having to choose between two evils, and as I believe that the sentiment of the people, both urban and rural, whom I represent coincide with my own views I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe): It is my misfortune, Mr. Speaker, owing to a sore throat and other disabilities, that I have been unable to take any part in this debate until this late hour, and therefore I do not wish to unduly delay the House as I know hon. members are all anxious to vote and get home. But the fact remains that this is the most important Budget that has been brought to the attention of this House since 1879, and as we have reversed all our previous ideas and preconceived notions of how taxes are to be imposed, I do not think that a little further discussion on this question will be lost to the House or to the country.

It is extremely fortunate that ever since Confederation one of our great parties has been opposed to the policy of developing our natural resources, and has been inclined to favour free trade, and on almost every occasion on which it has appealed to the country it has done so in a spirit of antagonism to our manufacturing interests. But the question now before the House is not a question of protection versus free trade, because the Government of the day has virtually conceded every tax that would be necessary if we had free trade in this country and I have not noticed very much objection taken to them by either of the two parties on the opposite side of the House, while on this side I have heard speeches tending towards the view that after we have had an investigation of our tariff by a commission of necessity the tariff must be reduced.

The hon. minister (Mr. Rowell) who spoke this afternoon informed the House that the tariff had been reduced to 14 per cent. In that connection I want to remind hon. members that when a merchant imports goods into this country he is allowed to deduct 5 per cent from the value of his invoice, and that advantage reduces the protection of our manufacturers generally to something like 9 per cent, which is lower than the protection in force in any other country.

Now, while that may seem very nice to some people, a very large body of public opinion in Canada do not look favourably upon any such proposition. There is a remnant of one of our great historic parties, which to my mind constitutes fully sixty or seventy per cent of our voters, composed of National Policy men. And the National Policy is just as different from the policy that has been advanced by this Budget as day is from night. As a Liberal-Conservative who has sat at the feet of Liberal-Conservative leaders from Sir John downwards, I can only say that I was very much surprised that the views of that party have not been put before the House, and that is the reason I desire to-night to re-state the tariff principles of the Liberal-Conservative party. That question will certainly be fought out at the polls,—the Liberal-Conservative party will be united, and before another year will be prepared to meet all comers and to reaffirm its old policy, which I now wish to read to the House.

The National Policy is not a policy of high protection; nor is it a policy of free trade. It is a policy which is directed towards collecting by means of a tariff, the revenue needed to meet the national obligations and utilizing that tariff to foster native industries. Let me read the resolution that Sir John A. Macdonald in 1876 moved in this House:

> That this House regrets that the financial policy submitted by the Government increases the burden of taxation on the people without any compensating advantages to Canadian industries; and further, that the House is of the opinion that the deficiency in the revenue should be met by a diminution of expenditure, aided by such adjustment of the tariff as will benefit and foster the agricultural, mining and manufacturing interests of the Dominion.

If I were moving a resolution in opposition to the Budget now before the House I could not better express the sentiments of the Liberal-Conservatives. The fact of the matter is that the Government did not bring its proposals to make such a drastic change in the fiscal policy of this country before its supporters in caucus or otherwise. It brought those proposals before the House, and I for one was not consulted in the matter whatever. It is true that a certain element in the community seems to have risen in its wrath and said, "Let us tax somebody." We have been running to programmes and to crusades against this body and that; first the liquor sellers, then the race-horse men, and now the manufacturers are the unfortunates at whom everybody is aiming a blow. I regret that very much, because this country can never become great unless our industries are balanced and we have more team play. Our last trade statement will show that our manufactured exports ran over $500,000,000 as compared with about $250,000,000 of agricultural products. Agriculture although important is not everything.

It has been said in order to pay for this war we must produce. Suppose we all started to produce agricultural products, where would we sell them? Europe is getting back on its feet again. France is not going to take very many of our agricultural products this year. Great Britain has increased her agricultural production to such an extent that she now produces over fifty per cent of what she requires for her own use, whereas before the war the figure was only something like thirteen per cent. The United States has also increased her production—and the farmers of our West are clamoring for greater markets. To my mind the only way that we can get greater markets is by fostering our manufacturing industries so that we will consume in our own country what we ourselves grow. We must look forward to a greater population, a greater manufacturing population. Most unfortunate for us has it been that one of the great parties has constantly opposed the manufacuring interests. Some hon. members may deny that, but the fact is that a threat made by one of the parties has been hanging over the manufacturing interests of this country since Confederation and has prevented millions of people from coming into Canada and helping to build up our industries. The time will come soon, in a few months, when this question will be settled, I hope finally, at the polls. They had that same row in the United States. The question was fought out finally there in 1897 and nobody of any standing in the United States will now preach the policy of free trade, even with Canada.

I have heard a lot of free trade talk in this House. A number of members are in favour of free trade. I said to myself why do hon. members not go and preach free trade in the United States? The fact is that the United States has not shown any evidence that she desires free trade with us. It is a question of wasting your sweetness on the desert air. If you do not get free trade in everything with the United States, then what do you have? You have what Sir John A. Macdonald characterized as "Jug-handled" free trade; they have your markets free, and you cannot get into their markets. Why, hon. gentlemen opposite of the agrarian group know very well that we granted free wheat and flour to the United States in order to receive reciprocal advantages only a few years ago, and the moment our grain started to flow into the United States, what happened? They placed an embargo on our wheat, and I should not be surprised if they did the same thing again this year. What is the use of talking folly and nonsense. The great economist, Mill, states that in a case of that kind there must be countervailing duties. He says:

"The only mode in which a country can save itself from being a loser by the revenue duties imposed by other countries on its commodities is to impose corresponding revenue on theirs."

That, Sir, is the National Policy. Sir, I am a stout enough Canadian to say I am not going to pay for police protection, light and sidewalks to give a free market to the Americans of over $800,000 a year.

Mr. W. H. WHITE (Victoria): May I ask my hon. friend where we would sell our Western cattle if it were not for the American market?

Mr. CURRIE: My hon. friend may think that he must sell his Western cattle in their market, but his greatest danger to-day is from the market of the Argentine Republic, and so with the Americans. If my hon. friend goes to any grocer in Ottawa he will find that grocer's windows filled with pressed beef from the Argentine Republic, sold in opposition to his beef.

Mr. WHITE (Victoria): Will my hon. friend answer the question?

Mr. CURRIE: You should be able to sell your beef to good Canadian working men; that is what you should do. That is the proper policy and the one that should prevail in this country.

Now, I want to say a word about cotton. Hon. gentlemen do not know that when the American States seceded from Great Britain such a thing as cotton growing was unknown in the United States. At the time of the Federal settlement when Hamilton and Washington were discussing things, the chief products for export of the United States were indigo and rice. From Wilmington and other places in the United States petitions came to the first Congress setting forth that the people could not sell indigo or rice in the markets of the world owing to the competition of India. The cotton goods that were used in the United States were then made from cotton grown in India—and that threat still hangs over the United States. Well, what happened? The United States Government, under Hamilton, placed a duty of two cents a pound on raw cotton, and from that day to this there has been a duty on cotton entering the United States. They do not even now go around asking that the duty be taken off. And what happened then? The Government provided the people of the United States with seed for cotton and to-day the bulk of the cotton of the world is grown in the United States. That is how they fostered agriculture. There are men to-day in this House who know very well that prior to 1878 the principal exports of this country were potash and wood products, lumber, etc. There was no such thing as export of grain,—nothing to speak of, at any rate. The farmers were not growing grain because the Americans were exploiting the lumber in the province of Ontario. American companies were operating here. They brought in their own horses, harness, sleighs, oats, flour,—everything that they consumed in their camps. They brought them in from Michigan and other adjoining states, and the Canadian who was trying to grow wheat or oats or hay on his farm in Ontario could not sell a pound of it to the Americans. They were exploiting this country just as they would exploit it to-morrow, if you give free trade. But it is not the American with whom you will have to compete in our factories here in the near future; it is the Japanese. I believe that to-morrow fifty per cent of the jobbing houses in Canada will have a Japanese salesman in their office trying to sell them goods which ought to be manufactured here. And with Japanese labour at 20 to 30 cents a day, how are we going to manufacture in that case?

But, reverting back to the question of the tariff, the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald put a duty on wheat, and immediately there was established in this country the wheat industry, which runs parallel to the cotton industry in the United States and is our principal industry. Hon. gentlemen who arrived in this country only a few years ago did not know that; did not look into the history of things and consequently their views on this question are distorted. I say without hesitation that if you throw open the market for wheat, in a few years your market for wheat will be taken away from you just as your market for cattle would be. Millions of dollars' worth of meat products are brought into this country—

Mr. WHITE (Victoria): Is the hon. member ready to answer the question that I put to him? Where would we sell our cattle if it were not for the United States market?

Mr. CURRIE: The market for the surplus meat of Canada is Great Britain.

Mr. WHITE (Victoria): For cattle?

Mr. CURRIE: Everybody knows that the United States produce enough cattle and meat for themselves. The statistics show that. All that the hon. gentleman and his friends get so far as market is concerned is what we call a "slush" market. They "slush" into the American West a certain amount of grain and cattle and the United States automatically slushes that same amount into the markets of Europe from the East. There is no real demand in the United States for these products. They just milk the Canadian. There is not a pound of meat produced in this country that could not be sold abroad, given the proper conditions and markets. Why is it that we buy so many millions of dollars' worth of hog products in the States? Why is it that last year we purchased over a million dollars' worth of oats in the States? They grow lots of oats in the West. These are facts that you can verify by reading the blue books. Nearly a million dollars' worth of plums were bought by Canadians in the United States last year—and the Lord knows that Ontario and British Columbia are good plum-producing countries. Why, our markets are wide open to these people, and our greatest danger to-day is not our war debt, but the debt we are running up with the United States, which now amounts to a billion dollars, on our trade balance. Some hon. members speak about wishing to go to work and pay off the war debt immediately. In Great Britain, the Napoleonic war debt is not paid off yet, and it will not be paid off for four hundred years. If the Government would not pay attention to people who are giving them wrong advice, the proper policy for them to pursue would be to fund the war debt and to set about reducing taxation instead of increasing it.

The National Policy is so different from this Budget policy that I cannot understand how any man who has made any study of political economy could get the two mixed. The National Policy was a policy of "indirect" taxation. If a man in Canada ten years or twenty years ago offered to put direct taxation on the people of this country, he would be taken out and hanged, or else he would be sent to an asylum and his wife would be given a divorce. No political party would dare to go to the country with a policy of direct taxation.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: They are getting braver now.

[Mr. White,].

Mr. CURRIE: I do not know about that. My opinion is that when hon. gentlemen go to the country and hear what the people have to say about the taxation proposals and all the free-trade discussion that is carried on in this House, there will be one grand scramble; they will be "going to the country," like the lobster about which we heard this afternoon, going to war backwards.

Mr. DUFF: Dissolve Parliament to-morrow and let us have an opportunity.

Mr. CURRIE: If Parliament were dissolved to-morrow, hon. gentlemen on that side of the House would not have ten followers, because they have not taken a stand against taxation and the country is getting tired of this yelling for taxation and the slogan: "Tax my neighbour, tax everybody."

Mr. W. H. WHITE: What about the Progressives?

Mr. CURRIE: I should be glad if the hon. gentleman would let me alone for a moment. I think I have answered him very satisfactorily. The farmers do not bother me and I represent a riding that has more farmers in it than the hon. member has in his riding. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not dare to oppose taxation, why? Because their policy is free trade, and if they give free trade, they must put on just such direct taxes as are proposed in this Budget. I am giving the old-time Conservative answers to all those proposals. I do not believe in direct taxation—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRIE: I believe in lower indirect taxation; I do not believe in direct taxation. This country will rise in its wrath, and it will smite in a few months everybody who proposes to impose direct taxation, and for this reason. Direct taxation is not at all necessary. The Government assume that there is going to be a demand for a big amount of money yet on war account, and, therefore, we must of necessity have heavy taxation. A luxury tax may be all right, because nearly every nation has to-day a luxury tax, but I think we were very ill-advised in putting a luxury tax on what I might call a key industry. One of our key industries is fur; millions of dollars worth of fur are produced in Canada, and we should not tax furs out of business. The country never was as prosperous as it has been for the last few months, and who has been making it prosperous? The manufacturers by their work and the industrial workers in the factories. Everybody is getting down to a position where he wants to do what everybody wants us to do, namely, "produce." If we are going to succeed, we must produce and sell more than we buy. Hon. gentlemen opposite want us to throw our barriers down and buy everything from the United States; Japan or Germany; but to-day we are nearly $1,000,000,000 in debt to the United States, and that is the reason why the exchange is so bad. How are you going to remedy the situation? If an hon. gentleman from the West wants to buy a cook stove, and, in particular, an American cook stove, he may get it a few cents cheaper, but the people of this country will be paying for that cook stove for years to come on bonds and things we sell to the United States. That is not a fair deal for Canada, and I do not see why I should be asked to open the markets of my country and hand them all over to the United States free of duty while we are taxed to death in this country. That, however, is what hon. gentlemen opposite wish to do. The Americans are not so gracious to us; and if hon. gentlemen opposite want to give open markets to the United States, let them preach that doctrine in the United States and they will get a very warm welcome; they will be chased out of that country, because the United States have not one man of standing who will rise in his place in one of their representative bodies and propose free trade with Canada. The great danger of all this agitation for free trade is that it is sectional. Anybody who studies the history of the United States knows that the question of free trade and tariff was fought out there in the Civil War. This was due to the agitations of the planters in the South who all wanted free trade, whereas the northern manufacturers took the other side; they wanted tariffs. The ultimate result of the whole business was this, that the country landed in civil war because both sides of Mason and Dixon's line were stirred up over every political issue that could be stirred up, until finally they flew at each others' throats. If you look over the West you will find that on the issue of free trade versus protection the next time possibly Saskatchewan may bring back a majortiy here of free traders, but none of the other western provinces will do so. An hon. gentleman who spoke to-night said that Winnipeg was manufacturing for New Zealand, and so might every city in the West do if we had a proper system of protection. Why, this country has not begun to protect her industries as it should. We have not given any protection to the glass industry in connection with which we might have thousands of workers in this country. We have ample natural gas in Saskatchewan, and we have good sand there to make plate glass and window glass. The West imports millions of dollars' worth of window glass, although all the elements necessary to make the glass are to be found in that part of the country. As regards crockery and chinaware, kaolin, feldspar and all the other elements requisite for making crockery, just as the crockery is made in the United States, are to be found in the West; but instead of making that crockery in the West, we have been importing it from Japan and China to the tune of millions of dollars a year. Every year there come through British Columbia trainload after trainload of Japanese and Indian silk, going where to be spun? Not in Canada, but in the United States. That is an industry which we might foster, because we have ample power for the looms in this country. We could have thousands of silk spinners in Canada if we chose, because our power is cheaper than it will ever be in the United States, and the great secret of developing industries in the future is cheap power. We could put electrical power on the spindles at the price of one dollar a ton for coal, and how can the United States or any other country compete with us as regards power?

The question of tin plate has been discussed in this House. At one time, away back in the early nineties, the United States manufactured only a few tons of tin plate; but McKinley put a tariff on tin plate and since then nearly 75 per cent of the tin plate of the world is manufactured in the United States. If you look up the statistics, you will find that inside of three years after the United States protected tin plate and went largely into its manufacture the Welsh price of $4 a hundred pounds was cut to $2 in the American markets. A few days ago I quoted from the Iron Age, and I pointed out that the United States Steel Corporation and other companies were selling goods there cheaper than in England or they sell them abroad. Is that a sign that protection is a failure or increased prices?

We have passed through this war, and I give all hon. gentlemen opposite and hon. gentlemen on this side credit for desiring in their heart of hearts to see this country succeed. I am not one of those people who ascribe wrong motives to anybody in that regard; I never offered a word of criticism to hon. gentlemen as to their motives, and I do not desire to do so. But we are going into the future, and there are two roads for us to follow. One road is to smash and ruin and to be, as we were before the war, lame ducks in the face of the world. There is another line of policy for us to pursue, and that is a line that is going to build this country up with population and to make it the seat of the great Anglo-Saxon people of the future of whom we form part, because this must be the cradle of the future expansion of Great Britain. We are the premier colony, and for those reasons we must try to do our best.

Now, what are the elements that make for success in a country? First of all, a country to be great must have resources, and there is in the world no other country that has greater resources than we have. The only thing Canada requires to round this country out is tropical fruits and foods that are necessary to round out our ration, as it were. Many people have the idea that the United States contains all those tropical fruits and things. They say, look at sugar. Why, the United States has only a few townships down in Louisiana that grow sugar that will crystallize. All the tropical fruits that come here, the oranges and bananas, the oils and the cocoanuts, come from the British West Indies, with very few exceptions by way of the United States. We are this week in conference with representatives of the British West Indies, and in this connection I may point out a remarkable fact. In 1910 the United States made a treaty of reciprocity with Porto Rico, and at that date, if my memory does not fail me—and it seldom does— the foreign trade of Porto Rico was $7,000,000 a year. Last year—Porto Rico now being a part of United States territory—its foreign trade was over $75,000,000. If we entered into some reciprocal arrangement with the British West Indies I have no doubt that this country and the West Indies would benefit to the tune of at least $200,000,000 a year. Jamaica is far richer than Porto Rico and so is British Guiana, and we could carry on a mutually beneficial trade with those colonies direct. The tropical resources are all that we need so far as material things are concerned.

Our next need is an intelligent population and I am satisfied that we have such a population. We may quarrel somewhat over our political views, but after all is said and done, I think we are all desirous of seeing the country succeed, no matter what our political or economic views may be. There is no doubt that we have an intelligent population, for the war has proved that fact beyond the slightest doubt. When it came to doing anything of importance in the war the Canadians, either mechanically or from the point of view of courage and endurance, were the equal of any other race in the world. No one will deny that. Now, having these elements, the next thing we need in order to develop a great country is to have a wise and paternal government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CURRIE: Hon. members may see something humourous in that statement, but let me say that you cannot have a government run by Bolshevists and Internationalists in any country. Do you want to be Internationalists?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CURRIE: Then accept my view. When I say paternal I mean national. It must be paternal, because the hand of the Government must assist every interest that stands in need of assistance. Hon. gentlemen forget that when the Western farmers were in trouble this Government went freely to their assistance with seed. It also rendered aid to the inhabitants of the chief city of Nova Scotia in its hour of trial. The Government, I say, must be national and must do everything in its power to build up all the industries of the country and see that everything is kept on an even keel and given fair play. If time allowed me I could tell the House what I consider that the Government should do. In the first place, I think the Government should impose a tariff such as would encourage industry. All this row for free trade has prevented any new industries from being established in this country for the last fifteen years. You cannot point to one single industry established here even by reason of the war. Why, the industry established for the making of shells, owing to the political agitation for free trade that was carried on in this country, was compelled to take its machinery out of Canada; and it would be a brave man indeed who would start a new industry here. Furthermore, I want to tell hon. gentlemen that there is not a large industrial concern in Canada to-day that has made any money within the last ten years that is not building factories in the United States. Take Hamilton, and you will find that one of the largest concerns there, that made millions out of the manufacture of shells, when it wanted to start up a new factory, did not build it in Hamilton but put up a great plant at Albany, under protection, in order to carry on a business that should be conducted in Canada. Then there is the manufacture of motor tractors.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: Those are luxuries.

Mr. CURRIE: Does the hon. gentleman say that traction engines are luxuries? They may be luxuries around the North Pole and in the Peace River country, but I can inform the hon. gentleman that traction engines are highly essential industrial machines. However, what I have stated is a fact and instead of these industries being solidified in Canada, and instead of a dozen new industries being started here to keep Canadian people working in the factories, those who would undertake to establish industries are driven out of the country. Members supporting the Government have been charged with taking Government contracts. Well, Mr. Speaker, members of the House have a perfect right to take Government contracts for the companies they represent if they desire to do so, and if you go back over the history of the Liberal party you will find out where such contracts used to go. I could take the hon. member for Victoria to Rosedale in Toronto and show him a fine lot of beautiful homes in one of the loveliest places in the whole of Canada or, for that matter, in America. There are beautiful homes there, and the hon. gentleman will find that sixty per cent of the owners are Liberal manufacturers. They knew very well that under the hon. gentleman who was leading the Liberal party they could get into any line of business they wanted to develop and even start new industries and they would get ample protection. They were sure of the Liberal-Conservative protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CURRIE: I could name a dozen industries which the Liberal party started in this country and which are flourishing.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CURRIE: There is no use in protesting against that statement. I have been in politics too long not to know what has happened. Now, the policy hon. gentlemen are taking now is to oppose the manufacturers, and I am glad that they are showing their colours. We have never failed to meet them on that issue and they have never failed to go down to defeat; and when they come along at the next election with their anti-manufacturer policy we shall leave them in a worse position than they were in in 1911. I was criticising the Government, Mr. Speaker, and it does a government good once in a while to be criticised a little.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRIE: I must say, however, that I never heard hon. gentlemen on the other side criticise their party. There were just three solitary bolters on the reciprocity pact and that is all the sentiment they could show. Now, I disapprove of these taxes because they are in opposition to the old National Policy. In the first place, the luxury tax tends to make a class distinction. It divides the country into two groups. It distinguishes the man who can afford to wear a $50 suit from the man who can wear only a $35 suit.

Mr. CANNON: Or none at all.

Mr. CURRIE: I am afraid that the hon. gentleman, politically speaking, will not have any suit at all after the next election. It also divides the ladies into two classes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CURRIE: It divides them into the class that can wear silk stockings and the class that can not.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CURRIE: But hon members opposite have cried for this tax. Their newspapers from one end of the country to the other clamoured for the luxury tax, and it seemed that every one wanted to tax every one else and every one else's wife and relations.

Oh yes! they want a tax on every one else; they want to tax their wives' relations and everybody but themselves. They have declared themselves to be the great party of taxateers. They want to conscript wealth. They want to take a certain amount of the money that everybody in this country has. They are an aggregation—I would not like to say—of socialists but their press is largely dominated by socialistic editors.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CURRIE: Yes, I know what I am talking about. We had the leader of the Opposition talking about the depopulation of the country. If the honorable gentleman will go to the Library he can look up the literature of the Fabian Society of Great Britain. That is a socialistic society. And he will find pamplet after pamphlet about rural depopulation. That is one of the things that the socialists are preaching in order to subvert the loyalty of the farmers of Great Britain. They are preaching depopulation. They are doing the same here. The other is reforestation. You will get socialistic pamphlets edited by Bernard Shaw and Sidney Webb on reforestation and rural depopulation. These are the topics they spring upon the farmers of Great Britain, and their followers are preaching the same doctrine to our own farmers. What is the result? The result is that some of the farmers are seeing red.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CURRIE: Yes, that is quite right. They are preaching subversive doctrines of that kind, and there is no answer from the other point of view the public will respond. They will respond to the socialistic preaching. It was the preaching of subversive doctrines that brought about the French Revolution.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, no.

Mr. CURRIE: Yes. I am quite willing that hon. gentlemen opposite shall be taxateers but I want them to remember one thing and that is that in so far as people of the Anglo Saxon breed are concerned they do not take kindly to taxes and they have not done so from the days of John Hampden. Charles the First found that they did not like taxes. There was a tea party at Boston because they did not like taxes. Yet, if you are going to have free trade, you must have these taxes. I have listened patiently to find out from the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), who is the boss free trader here——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRIE: ——I have been listening patiently to hear how he was going to make up the revenue. An hon. gentleman who rises in his seat to criticise anything should be prepared to criticise constructively and to say what we are going to do. But, he has not shown yet how we are going to raise the revenue. And we do need revenue. Another idea that seems to have come from these hon. gentlemen and which they have been preaching from one end of the country to the other is that of a tax on sales. I am sorry to see that some of my hon. friends from the west are going in for the sales tax. I believe in Adam Smith the same as do hon. gentlemen who are free traders. Adam Smith never was a free trader. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMaster) never believed in his Adam Smith or he never would have brought this question up before the House. It shows his ignorance. I am going to ask the hon. member for Brome to tell us if Adam Smith has ever favoured a tax on sales. I will wait for his answer.

[Mr. Currie.]

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Brome has already spoken.

Mr. CURRIE: The hon. member for Brome is so fond of bluffing and talking about free trade I want to show that he does not know anything about it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. CURRIE: Now I will read Adam Smith on this very tax on sales question. I think it will show that I am right in the position I have taken: Adam Smith in The Wealth of Nations, says:

> In consequence of the notion that duties upon consumable goods were taxed upon the profits of merchants, those duties have, in some countries, been repeated upon every successive sale of the goods. If the profits of the merchant importer or merchant manufacturer were taxed, equality seemed to require that those of all the middle buyers who intervened between either of them and the consumer should likewise be taxed.

That is what we are doing.

> The famous alcavala of Spain seems to have been established upon this principle. It was at first a tax of ten per cent, afterwards of fourteen per cent, and is at present of only six per cent upon the sale of every sort of property, whether movable or immovable, and it is repeated every time the property is sold.

Surely that is the tax we have here.

> The levying of this tax requires a multitude of revenue officers sufficient to guard the transportation of goods, not only from one province to another, but from one shop to another. It subjects not only the dealers in some sorts of goods, but those in all sorts, every farmer, every manufacturer, every merchant and shopkeeper, to the continual visits and examination of the tax-gatherers. Through the greater part of a country in which a tax of this kind is established nothing can be produced for distant sale.

What is going to happen to the farmers in the West?

> The produce of every part of the country must be proportioned to the consumption of the neighbourhood. It is to the alcavala, accordingly, that Ustaritz imputes the ruin of the manufactures of Spain. He might have imputed to it likewise the declension of agriculture, it being imposed not only upon manufactures, but upon the rude produce of the land.

Now, if hon. gentlemen who are such great students of economy have read their Adam Smith as some perhaps have—the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) who is not in the House is a great authority on Adam Smith—they would have seen this reference. I think that possibly Adam Smith is right there. I believe this form of taxation is wrong. There is no other country that has adopted this method of taxation. It remains for us to stand out prominently as the country that has adopted it.

The one great thing we need if we are going to reduce our per capita debt is population. The easiest way to reduce our per capita debt is to double our population which will produce for us. If we are going to get population we must make this a cheap country to live in and call a halt on direct taxation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRIE: "Hear, hear," hon. gentlemen say, but I have not heard one single word during the course of this debate to show that it was not the people of this country who paid the duties on commodities brought in but the other fellow who brought the commodities in here. For that statement we have the authority of the best economists in the world from Bismarck to Mill. They all say that if a man wants to get into a foreign country where there is a duty, he must pay the duty. The manager of the Barrow Steel Company a few years ago said that it cost him £160,000 to get his steel rails into the United States. The Agrarian party out west, a few years ago, were filling the air with their lamentations because they said in order to sell their wheat at Minneapolis they had to pay the United States duty.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRIE: Exactly, that is true. Well, then, who pays the duty? It is not pleasant to have to pay a duty to get in here, and that is what will happen if you impose a countervailing tariff. How are you going to develop or build up this country if you adopt free trade? Are you going to open your markets and let the American farmer walk over and exploit you whenever he wants to? I am a good Canadian, and I believe in a national policy, and for that reason I do not approve of anything of the kind.

Now, I have to offer some criticism to the Government. I pointed out to them the difficulties with regard to this new tariff. This is a new imposition of taxes of which I do not approve. I do not wish to object to it now, however, for this reason: I think it will do this country good to have a few months of this free trade tariff. I think, then, that from one end of the country to the other they will be so sick of trying to collect this taxation, of trying to finance this country directly out of their pockets, that they will be quite willing to take sides with the good, old Liberal-Conservative party, and wipe out all the people who want free trade and who want to turn us over to the Americans. The hon. member for Victoria, Alberta, will get a run for his money up in his riding—do not forget that.

Mr. WHITE: I always did.

Mr. CURRIE: Yes, and you came through the last time, did you not?

Mr. WHITE: Yes, I did.

Mr. CURRIE: Because the hon. member is such a good fellow. I never heard him open his mouth before in this House to interrupt.

Mr. PEDLOW: I would like to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. CURRIE: Another county heard from.

Mr. PEDLOW: We are hoping to hear from the county of Simcoe. The hon. member says he has no faith in the new tariff. Will he vote against the Budget?

Mr. CURRIE: I said that I had no faith in a free trade budget, and that this is a free trade budget—I have no hesitation in saying that. The Government have stolen the clothes of hon. gentlemen opposite—that is the trouble. That is why they were stunned for two or three days after the Budget came down. They were so stunned that they did not know which way to turn. What will happen will be this: These taxes will go to the country and the question that will confront hon. gentlemen will be to put up an argument to show how the money can be raised under free trade except in this way. The country will be so sick and tired of all this taxation that they will be glad to vote into power the party that goes in for low indirect taxes, the party of the National Policy.

Mr. DUFF: Why do you not go to the country?

Mr. CURRIE: Go to the country! If we went to the country the hon. gentleman would never see the inside of this House again. He knows that he got into Parliament at the last election by subterfuge, and we will see that he does not get in by subterfuge again.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CURRIE: That is true, he stole the riding.

Mr. DUFF: I did not do any such thing.

Mr. CURRIE: Any man that comes into this House on an anti-British cry is not fit to be answered.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Ran like a hare.

Mr. CURRIE: Yes, he ran like a hare, and hunted with the hounds.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Somebody else did that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. It is quite in order for hon. members to ask questions with the permission of the hon. member who has the floor, but I must ask those who desire to do so to do the House the courtesy of rising and addressing the Chair.

Mr. CURRIE: There is no necessity to intervene, Mr. Speaker. As far as answering hon. gentlemen opposite is concerned, I am quite capable of doing that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He is the man.

Mr. CURRIE: My hon. friend (Mr. Pedlow) desires an answer. He has asked me if I would not oppose the Budget.

Mr. DUFF: Will you go to the country?

Mr. CURRIE: With respect to the hon. member who is interrupting, I know what is wrong with him. I do not need to tell him.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If I understand the hon. member for Simcoe correctly, he is proceeding to answer a question which has been asked by the hon. member for South Renfrew.

Mr. PEDLOW: After that I am sure he will allow the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) to put his question.

Mr. CURRIE: I have already said the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg is not quite himself, and consequently the best thing for him is not to ask any more questions.

Mr. DUFF: I will ask the hon. gentleman if he is willing to go to the country and prove whether I am right or whether he is right.

Mr. CURRIE: Go to the country?

Mr. DUFF: Yes.

Mr. CURRIE: Wild horses could not drag the hon gentleman to the country. This is the best job he ever had. We are accustomed to that kind of talk. The hon. member is new to this House, but I have been here a few years, and while I have often heard clamours to go to the country I never yet saw an Opposition or a Government that wanted to do so very gladly. Now, returning to my hon. friend from South Renfrew, I said I would answer his question. Yes, I will support the Budget most gladly; I want the hon. gentleman and his friends to have a taste of a free trade Budget of their own medicine.

[Mr. Archambault.]

Mr. PEDLOW: Yet you have no faith in it.

Mr. CURRIE: I have no faith in it? I have faith that it will act like medicine—similia similibus curantur. That is the reason I intend to vote against the amendment of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queens (Mr. Fielding). It is very nicely drawn in order to try to put a little salt on the tail of the agrarian bird. My hon. friend drafted it before he had heard the Budget and then—old parliamentarian that he is—he was very intent on his speech. I watched him memorizing his speech almost, instead of listening to the Budget. Had he listened closely to the Budget I do not think he would have spoken as he did. He could have put up a much better criticism had he done so. As far as his proposals are concerned they are nothing but camouflage. It is a great platform which they produced last year. I remember sitting in the chamber when the late hon. member for Brant, Mr. Paterson, in 1911, got up to speak on the reciprocity question. He put his hand down into the tail of a long, black coat, and produced a document, and said solemnly: "I have here before me the platform of the Liberal party of 1895. I was in Toronto this week and went into a store and found this platform that the Liberal party had in 1895." That was it, 1894 or 1895. Somebody asked him, "Did you find it in a pawn shop?", and the House roared. Evidently the platform that the Liberal party promulgated last summer has been relegated to the pawn shop and a new platform has been produced now. It is not quite so drastic as the free trade platform of last year. That would not be acceptable, especially in Quebec which my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) knows very well. You could not get him to adopt free trade as they have it in England, even if you tried. Now I said that I intended to vote against the amendment because I think that it is pure camouflage, it does not strike at the questions or the issue straight. It has made no objection to these taxes which to my mind are obnoxious. As a red hot Liberal-Conservative they are obnoxious to me. Of course the country must have its dose—it is getting it and will get it—and for that reason I am going to vote against the amendment and vote for the Government's Budget. I think every Liberal-Conservative here will do the same thing, and we will try it out. We will try it out on the dog, and see what the people think of this direct tax free trade tax policy. I am satisfied that in the next session of Parliament, when it meets next fall, there will be some new light on all these questions, and there will be a new alignment. Hon. members, whether they follow the Liberal-Conservative party or not, because of its political leanings towards protection, will have some new light. I have followed this National Policy question. I have heard it discussed by Sir John Macdonald, by Tilley, by Edward Blake, and by Sir Richard Cartwright, who was perhaps the ablest critic of that policy my hon. friends opposite ever had, and I was never otherwise than convinced that the National Policy was the proper policy for Canada. To-night I proclaim that same old policy—not the "National Policy made up to date," but the old National Policy that I read to the House to-night which discloses the best way in which we can carry on the business of this country. If you want the people of a country to be happy and contented, you must not grind their noses off with taxes. I had a call from several soldiers the other day in the city of Toronto. They called me up by phone and they said, " Colonel——

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Colonel!

Mr. CURRIE: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. They called me up on the 'phone and said: " They are charging us 35 cents luxury tax on a string of ribbons on which we hang the medals that we won in the war." That is a fact, and that is one of the things we will have to remedy. There must be some adjustments made when these resolutions are discussed in committee. The proposals so far are too drastic, and we must modify them. But if I had my way and were playing politics, I would say: " Make it a little bit stronger, and let the Grits and Free Traders have a taste of their own medicine." Then you would see everyone of them squirm. I know many of them are good men, engaged in manufacturing and other interests, and yet some of them will speak on the platform in favour of free trade and practice protection to beat the band. And I am sorry to say that some of our Conservative friends will advocate protection to " beat the band," and then practice free trade when they want to get something into the country a little cheaper. The only effective way is to face this thing squarely. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not pledge myself to follow this policy further than the next session of this House, for the simple reason that I am opposed to it in principle. And the only reason that I shall vote for it now is that I want to see hon. gentlemen opposite get a dose of their own medicine.

Mr. P. R. DuTREMBLAY (Laurier-Outremont): Mr. Speaker, at this late hour of the night—

Some hon. MEMBERS: It is morning.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: —well, at this early hour of the morning I do not propose to make any lengthy address on the Budget and the amendment before the House, but there have been many manifestations of objections on the part of the people of the city of Montreal whom I have the honour to represent, and therefore I feel that at this juncture it is my duty to offer certain criticisms and objections to the proposals of the Government.

The eloquent speeches delivered by hon. members on this side of the House has proven beyond doubt, I believe, that the proposed taxes will not decrease the high cost of living. On the contrary, I believe that they will increase that already high cost, and at the same time will act as a deterrent on our trade and commerce. One of the principal reasons for the high cost of living to-day is that we have less production than formerly. There is an old English saying that if you put more taxation on dogs there will be fewer dogs. And if you put more taxation on industry, there will be less industry, and consequently, less production. That, I believe, will be the effect of this one per cent Sales Tax and the ten per cent Luxury Tax—they will be detrimental to the consumer and will discourage production, and it seems to me that the Government should have devised some other means of taxation to fill the gap between expenditure and revenue.

Recently the manufacturers and retailers of Montreal met and expressed their dissatisfaction with the taxes proposed by the resolutions of the Finance Minister. A report of that meeting which I have before me states:—

> Much criticism was expressed of the new Budget proposals at a meeting of representative members of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the one per cent sales tax being particularly objected to as likely to repeat itself until it became a burden to the consumer.

This one per cent tax is only apparent, and in practice it will undoubtedly work a hardship on the consumer. In my opinion the Government should make the manufacturer pay this tax. In many cases the manufacturer sells his goods to a jobber or a wholesaler, who in turn sells them to retailers, with the result that the one per cent will be paid two or three times on the same goods, and of course eventually the consumer will have to bear the burden, which in some cases will be aggravated by the luxury tax of ten per cent.

To-day there is a general clamour throughout the country against the minimum values above which this luxury tax becomes operative. At a meeting of those interested in the clothing trade held in this city on the 25th of May a resolution was passed urging that the minimums be raised, and I presume the hon. Minister of Finance has received a copy of the resolution. In the United States most of these articles that we consider as necessaries of life are exempted from such taxation. I have in my hand a list published by the Toronto Star Weekly, I believe most hon. members have received a copy enumerating a large number of articles which in the United States are exempted from any luxury tax.

I hope that when these proposals are taken up in Committee the Government will see that these minimum amounts are raised so as to protect the public. I may point out that in the United States the tax on luxuries is paid not on the whole amount of the purchase but only on the amount in excess of the minimum. But under the present proposals of the Finance Minister if you buy a pair of shoes at $16 you have to pay the tax not merely on the amount in excess of $9, but on the whole purchase price of the shoes, that is, $1.60. Surely that does not meet the purpose of the taxation as stated by the Minister of Finance, who states that it is a tax on luxury only. I say again that I hope this matter will be adjusted in Committee so that the middle classes and the poorer classes in this country may be protected.

I should like to say a word with regard to the income tax. I know that members on both sides have advocated still further increases in the income tax. At the last session the Government saw fit to bring in further income tax legislation putting our system on the same level as that of the United States. Our income tax law was already a very drastic measure, for this country has not the means, as has the United States, to recover the money in all cases. The raising of the rate on certain amounts to five per cent may bring in a few million dollars more, but the effect on the country will be detrimental, because there will be a tendency on the part of investors not to put their capital into enterprises in this country. It is true that we need capital for the develpoment of our industries and our different enterprises, and this increased income tax will have an influence upon their decision to invest their money here. I warn the Government that they should stop moving in that direction, if they desire not to interfere with future investment of capital in this country.

It has been shown that we must economize in order to meet our expenditures. The argument of hon. members on the other side in support of the imposition of these taxes is that revenue is needed. I have no doubt that their principal aim and intention was to get revenue and not to increase the already high cost of living, but this legislation, while not decreasing the cost of living, may injure trade and commerce and decrease production. It may be said that it was necessary to impose these taxes in order to get the $70,000,000 that was needed to meet our expenditure. But it would have been easy for the Government to cut down expenditures in the different departments by at least $25,000,000. I am confident that if all the ministers got together they could cut down expenditures to that extent and save that amount to the ratepayers of the country. Then, there is the Department of Railways, where there is a deficit of $48,000,000, and the Post Office Department, where there is also a deficit. It seems to me that these departments should be so administered as to pay for their own operation. Why charge to the ratepayers of the country the cost of operation and the amount of deficits resulting from the operation of the National Railways? Why not charge such rates on these railways as will make them pay their own way? Why not have those who use the railway pay for the service which they get? The same applies to the Post Office. In this way the Government could get another $50,000.000, and this, with the $25,000,000 that I have mentioned, would make up the $75,000,000 that is required for this year.

The speech of the Minister of Finance, as I said a moment ago, was more a general taxation of all persons and things in the country than a statement of fiscal policy. Actually, business men in Canada do not know what kind of a tariff will come into effect next year, and that condition of affairs is harmful for trade and commerce and it is harmful for manufacturers in this country to be in such a position. It is all very well for the Government to say: We will appoint a commission; but this commission should have been appointed immediately after the war. Two years ago I believe the Government were asked by the Opposition to appoint such a commission; but this year I hope this commission will be appointed; that it will be independent of party politics; that it will be permanent, and that it will be composed of business men of different classes of our community and representing different provinces of the Dominion. I hope they will go throughout the country, studying the needs of every manufacturer and making comparisons with similar industries in the United States and in England. There is no doubt that to-day certain Canadian industries have too much protection while others do not have enough. I hope all these matters will be adjusted, and at the same time the needs of the other classes of the community will be taken into consideration.

After the war the people of this country expected that the Government would put into effect some kind of programme of reconstruction, and the fact is that the Government said that they were remaining in power for the purpose of reconstructing this country. So far I have not seen any reconstruction programme, but I hope in this reconstruction they will not forget the important industry of shipbuilding that was started during the war. You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that in this country we have a new industry of shipbuilding comprising different shipyards that employ more than 25,000 men, with an additional 25,000 or more other men who are employed in manufacturing articles that are essential in shipbuilding. We are to-day in a position in Canada to obtain from France and Spain many contracts for building ships at a good profit, and people from these countries are coming to this country asking the owners of shipyards to accept contracts for ships. As a matter of fact, the world is short of ships at the present time; the shipyards of England have contracts for building ships sufficient to keep them busiy for more than five years, and the same condition exists in the United States. During the war the Government, under the present Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne), took some steps toward creating this industry, and to-day we have a large number of skilled men able to create a permanent shipbuilding industry. A few days ago I had occasion to meet some gentlemen who are building ships, and they see in the near future the possibility of employing in this industry on a permanent basis more than 60,000 workmen and if you consider that there is an average of five persons in a family, that means about 300,000 people. There is a new industry that we must not let go. The programme of the Government is nearly completed; and if the Government do not protect this new industry and see that it develops, the result will be that in the end it will disappear. A large amount of capital is invested in this enterprise, and I wish to draw particular attention to this industry of shipbuilding which is of national importance to Canada

The last question that I wish to bring before the House at this early hour of the morning is one that is near my heart, namely the German indemnity. It has been hard, I must say, for the last couple of years, to find out from the Government much information regarding this important question. In Canada we have made very important financial sacrifices in order to help England in this war, and according to the memorandum sent by the Government to Sir George Perley, the representative of Canada in England, the amount claimed by Canada is about $1,800,000,000. But according to the understanding between the Allies and Germany, the only indemnity to which the Allies would be entitled would be for damages which have been incurred on account of the violations of the laws of war. If we examine the memorandum prepared by the Government and sent to our representative in England, we find that Germany would be entitled to pays us only about $31,000,000. If that be true, such an amount would be a joke. According to the understanding arrived at between the Allies, France is to receive 55 per cent of the indemnity that they will be able to get from Germany; England is to receive 25 per cent, and the balance will be divided between the other nations that took part on the side of the Allies in this war. The aid that we gave in this war was given especially and solely to England, and that was the understanding on which this country went into the war. The principle that was put forward was that when England was at war Canada was at war. This principle, which was enunciated by my late chief Sir Wilfrid Laurier, was accepted by the right honourable the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden), and we went into the war to assist Great Britain, making sacrifices that brought us very nearly to the verge of bankruptcy. It is not necessary, Mr. Speaker, that I should state the immense, the appalling liabilities which this country has incurred by reason of its participtation in the war. The interest on our debt and pension amounts to about $160,000,000, which is about half of the entire debt which we had before the war, and this tremendous burden will have to be borne not only by ourselves but by our children and our children's children. We spent these vast sums of money and contributed our best manhood for the purpose of assisting Great Britain. But Mr. Speaker, it is not of the sacrifice of life that I am now speaking. That phase of the subject I shall not touch upon now. Let me say, however, that the monetary aid which we contributed to Great Britain was given on an understanding from the Prime Minister that Germany would pay this country an indemnity that would cover every cent we expended and on that assurance Canada was prepared to spend its last dollar. Now, is England in a position to pay this country this sum of one billion and three quarters? A conversation is reported in the press in which Mr. C. W. Hingham, a member of the Imperial Government, is credited with the statement that England is not much worse off now than she was before the war and that her trade is very prosperous, the people in that country being able to go back to work in the factories. He goes on to state that an era of prosperity has now dawned in that country such as has never before been known in its history, and that the London market will once more be the gold market of the world. I believe that statement, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad that England has been able to recoup her losses and that her commercial possibilities are now so promising. By the treaty signed at Versailles Great Britain has received many advantages. Everyone is aware of the enormous sums which have been spent by the English treasury to maintain the British fleet so that it might compete not only with Germany but with all the other nations of the world, but these vast sums which she has had to pay in the past will be offset in the future to a great extent by the advantages which will accrue to Great Britain as a result of the settlement. To-day England, through her ships, is still Mistress of the Seas and is in a better position, from the maritime standpoint, than any other nation of the world, as this member of the Imperial Government stated a few days ago.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that this statement is applauded so hartily by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, for it shows the loyalty which everyone of us feels towards Great Britain. Now, Sir, shall we not under these circumstances turn to Great Britain and ask her to pay to this country, if the German indemnity is not forthcoming, the sum of one and three quarter billion dollars which we spent during the war? If the hon. Minister really had this matter at heart and, as he should do, gave to it his best consideration morning and night, we would probably obtain a great part of this sum from the British Government. But so far as we have been able to judge of the enterprise of this Government, they do not seem to give the question any consideration at all. It would be a matter of great importance to Canada, Mr. Speaker, if this amount were paid by Great Britain. We would wipe out our immense indebtedness and be in the position in which we were before the war; and it is but due to this country that something should be done to bring about this condition.

The amendment that has been moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) is clear and precise, and I shall be pleased to support it when the time comes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: Some hon. members are applauding that statement. Well, I hope they will see their way clear to vote with us on the amendment. In so doing they would, I can assure them, receive the heartfelt gratitude of the people. Hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. Speaker, know very well that there is a general demand throughout the country that the high cost of living should be decreased, and they are well aware that the Budget as introduced by the Minister of Finance has nothing in the way of relief to offer the suffering consumers.

The Budget has been brought down by the Finance Minister, but we know very well that he is not responsible for the present financial position. I wish to join with other hon. members in congratulating the Minister of Finance upon the manner in which he presented the Budget. He must be given credit for performing a hard task in bringing this Budget before the House. No doubt he had considerable difficulty in bringing the different elements of the Council to an agreement upon this question. But it must be remembered that this Budget does not in any way lighten the burden of the high cost of living. Hon. members on the other side of the House know that there is a clamour from ocean to ocean against the high cost of living. We are here as the representatives of the people and we have to face the responsibility of dealing with the demand that the people have put before this Parliament. We must, by some kind of legislation, act or deed, do something to diminish the high cost of living. The amendment of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queens (Mr. Fielding) meets the demand of the people of this country. I am glad that it comes from the Liberal party, which, with its splendid traditions, can be depended upon, when it again comes into power, to render justice to all the people of this country. When that time comes we will have a return of that prosperity which the country enjoyed when the Liberal party was in power.

Mr. J. W. KENNEDY (Glengarry and Stormont): Mr. Speaker, in following this debate as it has proceeded day after day, I have been very much struck by the fact that there exists in this House such a great variety of opinion on such an important and oft-debated subject as "The Tariff."

One would naturally expect that on a question such as this, one that has been to the fore almost constantly during the last forty years, there would be laid down certain distinct lines or principles, and that hon. members would have by this time made up their minds where they stand on those principles. Such does not seem to be the case, however, and there seems to be as much variety of opinion as there are members who speak on this subject.

First, we have the spectacle of the hon. member for Queens and Shelburne (Mr. Fielding), an avowed free trader, making a protectionist speech and submitting an amendment, which demands a lowering of the tariff. Then we hear the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) making a protectionist speech, insisting that his opponents have always been and are now inconsistent. He declares that he is and always was a protectionist, but insistently declares that he is a moderate protectionist. He places much stress on that word "moderate," and would have the country believe that at this time he is particularly moderate. He, however, is unfortunate in qualifying the word "moderate" by saying that by moderate protection he means "such as we have had in this country since 1867, which ranges anywhere from 15 per cent to 45 per cent (page 2618). "Moderate protection with favour to none and justice to all" (page 2607)—is another rather paradoxical way in which he sets forth his position on this very important subject.

Again, we hear the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen), who has always been an ardent protectionist, laying particular stress on the "moderateness" of his views. He argues valiantly for protection, mercilessly denounces free trade, and then points with pride and words of commendation to the action of the present Administration in reducing the tariff on many goods to the point where protection is almost eliminated and placing many other articles on the free list. (Pages 2780, 2781.)

It was surely a noteworthy acrobatic feat to extol the merits of protection in one breath and praise the free trade tendencies —little though they are—of the present Administration in the next; it was a feat for which his mental acumen is particularly well fitted. It was with a great deal of satisfaction that I noted the applause from the Government benches, which greeted every point he made in respect to reductions in the tariff. When he pointed out that the Administration which had killed reciprocity in 1911 and imposed an additional 7½ per cent tariff during the war, in spite of the oft-repeated assertion that the tariff was too sacred to touch during war time; when he pointed out that this same Administration had reduced the tariff on certain articles to as low as 12 per cent, and placed many more on the free list; when he showed that the present Administration had gone even further than reciprocity, the enthusiasm of his followers and the satisfaction which they showed would almost lead one to believe that at this particular time they would like to have the country believe that they are the free trade party after all.

Then we have the venerable Right Hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), whose whole political life has been devoted to the support of a protective policy, asserting that after all the indirect method of taxation is not the best for the country, but that there should be along with it certain forms of direct taxation. I have no doubt that the right hon. minister was speaking what he had learned in his own long experience, and that out of the richness of that long experience he is gradually approaching the position which we hold and the policy which we advocate of a greater measure of direct taxation substituted in part for our present indirect system.

There are those who believe in a high protective tariff and who have no hesitation in saying so. They would surround the country with a tariff wall as high as Haman's gallows; keep out foreign goods and smother our trade; their idea is that Canada should be a self-contained country, independent of other nations and developing her activities within her own borders.

To all those, I would simply say that nations, like individuals, must live and grow and develop by producing and trading, and to throttle a nation's trade is to strangle her life at its most vital spot. They are the extreme high protectionists, and although they are at present being kept in the background, I feel that we have too many of them yet in this country. It is quite obvious that the high protectionist is being kept in the background, but it is equally obvious that he is with us yet, and that his hand still guides the fiscal policy of the present Administration, as it has guided the policies of every Administration for the last forty years.

Much is being made of the fact that the 7½ per cent duties imposed in 1915 are now being taken off. Much is also being made of the fact that all the benefits of the reciprocity agreement of 1911 have been granted, but nothing is said of duties which still remain at 30 per cent and 35 per cent, and which bear heavily upon many of the necessaries of life. Nothing is said of those duties except another of the annual promises of tariff revision, and although we are given to understand that the revision will be along the line of moderate protection, there is nothing to indicate that the coming revision—if it ever does come—will be downward.

Now, what are we to understand by moderate protection? That expression has been oft repeated by members of the Government and their supporters. It is a very indefinite term, I have no doubt purposely indefinite, intended to assuage the fears of the consumer that further burdens may be added to the things he must buy; he is given the cold comfort that those burdens, whatever they may be, will be moderate and on the other hand, it is intended to inform the protected interests that their welfare will be looked after and moderate protection granted them; moderate protection which means "such as we have had since 1867", which runs all the way from 15 per cent to 50 per cent.

Time was, and not so very long ago, when the tariff as it exists in this country was called a high tariff or high protection. That was when our industries were in their swaddling clothes; when they were infant industries. In this connection, it is well to note that an industry which has been in the infant class for forty years and has not yet learned to stand on its own feet, should be given some more heroic treatment than to be fed on pap. Those industries considered the protection afforded them years ago as high protection. Politicians refer to it as high protection; the people regard it as high protection. Now that they have grown great and prosperous, it is only a moderate dose and we are given plainly to understand that the same policy of protection is to be adopted by this Administration in the future as they have followed in the past.

Now, it is well to have the issue plainly before us. This House has a right to know, and the country should be told in plain language, the issue that is before us and the issue that must be decided upon by the country at no distant date. It is the question of continuing the policy of protection, call it "Moderate" or "High", as against the policy of reducing our tariff taxation until the point is reached where the protective principle may be said to be eliminated and the tariff designed for the production of revenue.

The Minister of Marine says that the question is quite clear. Moderate protection versus free trade; if by free trade he means the entire elimination of all tariffs so that no revenue will be collected in that way, then he is quite wrong in his statement of the case. The question of the future will be a tariff designed to produce revenue and not hamper trade, as against a tariff designed to protect our giant infant industries and enable them to continue to fatten and prosper at the expense of the Canadian people. Protection is to be the policy of the present Administration and you may call it moderate which means all the protection you can get away with and impose on a patient and long-suffering people.

This, as I understand it, is the issue before the Canadian people at this time. It is not, as hon. gentlemen opposite would have us believe a moderate tariff versus no tariff at all. I am somewhat amazed to find how very moderate indeed hon. gentlemen have become in respect to their profession of belief in the tariff. They have no doubt been keeping their ear to the ground and have discovered a strong definite public feeling in the country demanding lower tariff duties. That may explain why they fairly tumble over one another in their haste to explain all that they stand for now, or ever did stand for, or ever will stand for, is a moderate tariff. They would appear to be very moderate indeed in everything except their language of denunciation of the farmers and labourers of this country.

It has always been the policy of those who wanted to secure tariff favours to obscure and camouflage the issue if possible. This policy has been consistently followed in the past and in this debate we see the beginning of another campaign of the same kind, but if we are ever to arrive at any definite solution of this question, there is nothing to be gained by evading the real issue. We must face it squarely and decide it in the light of conditions that obtain in this country at the present time.

Many hon. members have wandered all over the continent of Europe and America for facts and figures and conditions that would substantiate their contention. That, of course, may all be very instructive and interesting, and it is quite true that there may be much to learn from the experience of other nations and yet it is quite obvious that deductions drawn from those statistics and conditions that obtain elsewhere may be very misleading. In fact several different and opposing deductions may sometimes be drawn from the same figures. To illustrate what I mean, let me refer to the speech made in this debate by the hon. member for Fort William. He was quoting figures to show the wonderful development of the United States during the last forty years. He told us how production had increased enormously along certain lines. He was quoting the figures of the development of certain industries in the United States in an endeavour to show how the fiscal policy of that country had developed production in United States industries and agriculture. The remarks to which I particularly want to refer will be found on page 2632 of unrevised Hansard. I will not make a long quotation, but will simply direct the attention of the House to these figures—the increase in the production of certain articles in the United States from 1880 to 1917:

—increase of lead, from 100,000 tons to 600,000 tons; of copper, from 27,000 tons to 840,000 tons; of cement, from 2,000,000 barrels to 91,000,000 barrels. The production of corn increased from 1,700,000,000 bushels in 1880 to 3,000,000,000 bushels in 1917; of cotton, from 6,000,000 bales to 11,000,000 bales; cotton manufactures, from $192,000,000 in 1880 to $701,000,000 in 1914; production of phosphate rock, from 200,000 tons to 2,500,000 tons; of zinc, from 23,000 tons to 584,000 tons. The export of manufactured cotton amounted from $10,000,000 in 1880 to $136,000,000 in 1917. The production of wheat nearly doubled in the same period.

Now, that, I take it, is a fair indication of the development which would be produced by a protective tariff policy, and the conclusion the hon. member wished to draw from these figures was that that policy was a good thing for the United States because it produced that kind of development. I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the increase in the production of manufactured articles, such as cement, cotton goods exported, and so forth, was anywhere from ten times to—in the case of cement—forty times what it was in 1880, whereas the increase in corn and wheat was not quite double. Now that is just exactly the kind of development that would be produced by a protective tariff. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman. But I would just like to draw this other conclusion from his own figures, that that is not an all-round well balanced development of the various activities on the other side of the line; and I submit that that one-sided development is a main reason for the present very high price of commodities—in other words, the high cost of living.

And the same condition obtains in this country. Canada is of such vast extent and possesses such immense agricultural possibilities that we have as yet hardly touched the fringe of those possibilities; and in addition we have incalculable natural resources in our mines, forests and fisheries. Looking at the statement made by the Minister of Finance in his Budget speech, we find certain figures of the values of our manufactured articles and of the products of our farms, forests, fisheries and mines. In that connection I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that those figures demonstrate that the products of our manufactories exceed the combined products of our farms, mines, forests and fisheries. That, I submit, is the kind of development that has been encouraged by the protective tariff principle, and in my opinion it is not a well balanced development of our national activities. To be building up large enterprises in a country like this at the expense largely of the consuming public and to the discouragement to a large extent of our basic industry, agriculture, is not conducive to our national welfare.

Now, my opinion is not a mere theory, it is borne out by the facts. The idea of a protective tariff is not to produce revenue but to protect industry and to build up large industrial establishments; and that is just exactly what it has been doing. It has made certain industries profitable largely at the expense of certain other industries, with the result that both labour and capital have been drawn away from those industries which cannot be protected by tariff and have been attracted to those industries which are protected and are thereby profited. Our census figures bear this out and show that for the last forty years, particularly in the greater part of Eastern Canada, there has been a steady flow of our rural population into the large urban centres. The reason is that the farmers cannot compete with those engaged in other industries for the labour that they require, and they cannot use capital to the same advantage.

In order to further bear out that assertion I would like to place before this House a few figures in relation to the dairy farming business in Ontario to show the rewards offered to the dairy farmers of this province during the last few years of high prices. I have here the report of a survey made in the county of Oxford by the Ontario Department of Agriculture under the superintendence of Professor Leitch, Professor of Farm Management of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph. For the year beginning March 1, 1917, and ending February 28, 1918, a survey was made of 437 farms in the county of Oxford, the object being to cover the whole financial operations for the year:

(1) To determine the true financial condition of the dairy farming business.

(2) To determine the cost of production of milk.

(3) To discover the features of the business that have the greatest effect in raising or lowering farm profits.

(4) To give suggestions for the most profitable organization of the dairy farming business, based on the conditions found on the farms which showed the greatest financial returns.

These are some of the findings:

The cost of producing milk in the county of Oxford during that year—

And let me remind the House that this county is perhaps the banner dairy county of the province.

The cost of producing milk is a subject over which there is a lot of different opinions even amongst producers. As a matter of fact there has never been until the present any organized effort to find the exact cost of the product on a variety of farms. The information collected from the farmers in this survey gave the looked-for opportunity for an investigation into the cost of milk produced during each month of the year. These farms were devoted to the production of milk as their main business, therefore, each farm was treated as a manufacturing unit for producing milk. The cost of production, therefore, was made up on each farm of the following items: current expenses (labour, repairs, seed, feed bought, taxes, etc.), depreciation on buildings and machinery, interest on investment at seven per cent and $500 for the labour of each farmer himself.

That was the labour income allowed to each farmer in counting up the cost of producing his milk during that year.

[Mr. Kennedy.]

From this total was deducted the amount received for crops, hogs, poultry and other miscellaneous sales. The difference was the cost of producing the milk sold. Of course, in many instances there were considerable profits from the sales of hogs, etc., but the effect was to reduce the cost of milk produced.

This is what they found:—

The farms which were not strictly dairy farms had slightly smaller labour incomes than the dairy farms. Therefore their milk cost them a little more to produce. We are safe in assuming therefore that the cost of producing milk in Oxford county during the year ending February 28, 1918, was $2.20 per hundred pounds. This just equalled the selling price which averaged $2.19½ per quintal.

During 1917-1918, a year of high prices for dairy products, the farmers in the banner dairy county of Ontario were producing milk practically at cost, only being allowed in figuring that cost a labour income of $500 a year.

A little later on a similar survey was carried on at the other end of the province, in the county of Dundas, another excellent dairying county. I would like to ask the House to notice the rewards that were being offered to the dairy farmers that year on 278 farms. The average labour income for the whole year for the farmer himself and his wife and young children was $903, and out of that reward for his labour he had to live and to finance any improvements necessary to his farming operations. The cost of producing milk during that year on 194 farms was $2.30 per hundred pounds, and the farmers who sent their milk to the cheese factories received $1.85 per hundred pounds. The farmers, however, who sold their milk to the condensers or shipped it to Montreal received $2.44 for the milk, and it cost them in the neighbourhood of $2.30 per hundred pounds to produce it. In this case $500 was the labour income allowed each farmer for his own labour and that of his wife and young children. I might remind hon. members that those farmers did not work six or eight hours a day but closer to twelve and fourteen hours a day. And their wives also play a very important part in carrying on the work of these dairy farms.

A later survey was made in the county of Oxford in the year ending February 28, 1919. I will just read a couple of the conclusions reached by Professor Leitch:—

Despite the increased prices of farm products during the last few years, six per cent of the farms in the surveyed area of Oxford county had labour incomes of less than nothing for the year ending February 28, 1919.

Another of his conclusions was " that the average cost of production of milk on 139

Oxford county farms during the year ending February 28, 1919, was $2.64 per hundredweight, and that during the same period and on the same farms the average selling price was $2.36 per hundredweight," 28 cents less than the cost of production. These are the financial rewards offered in these times of high prices to the dairy farmers of the province of Ontario. We are urged to increase production, the production of our farms particularly; yet we are discouraged by the fact that we cannot go into the labour market and compete with other enterprises in this country which can offer to labour a far higher wage than we can pay or obtain for ourselves.

I have simply placed these figures before the House in order that hon. gentlemen who are not well acquainted with farming conditions in this country—and I am speaking now only of Ontario; I am not speaking of farming conditions in the West—may have an opportunity to compare the financial rewards being offered at this time of high prices to the dairy farmers of Ontario as compared with those offered to other enterprises and other industries in this country. I ask hon. members to decide whether a policy which encourages industry largely at the expense of agriculture and which produces this one-sided, ill-balanced development is a proper policy to be longer continued in this country.

Many figures have been given to the House to show the magnitude of our agricultural products. These figures are given in values and are liable to be deceptive. I should like to refer particularly to the cheese industry during the last few years. The amount of cheese exported in 1916 was, in round numbers, 168,000,000 pounds. In 1917 it had increased to 180,000,000 pounds. In 1918 it dropped off to 169,000,000 pounds, and in 1919 it dropped down further to 152,000,000 pounds, a decrease in these last three years of 28,000,000 pounds, or 16 per cent. Now, the cheese industry in this country is a very important industry so far as Ontario is concerned, yet during the last few years it has been declining very rapidly and I think that the figures which I have just quoted show why that condition has existed. I may say that this decrease coincides largely with the period of price fixing in respect to cheese.

I have noticed that officials of this Government have gone over the country claiming that the price of last year for cheese, 25 cents, was a profitable price for the producers and that the producers knew it. Well, the producers knew perfectly well that it was not a profitable price. They know what they are making and they know fairly well when they are making a profit and when they are not. The figures of the survey in the county of Dundas, where the farmers were selling their milk at $1.85 per hundred pounds, when it cost them $2.30 to produce it, are a very effective answer to that contention. That is one of the things which is producing unrest and discontent in this country. Moreover, it is producing a feeling of discouragement among the farmers of Ontario, who feel that they are not being treated fairly. It has been said that this particular group in this House are agitators and have been agitating—this was applied particularly to the United Farmers of Ontario—and stirring up discontent and unrest throughout the country. I would like to remind hon. gentlemen that this discontent and unrest existed long before our organization was brought into existence. Our farmers' organizations were not formed primarily for political purposes; but the people, being discontented, used this organization to show their discontent and we are here largely as a result of that discontent and not as its cause.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) also mentioned the fact that in the agricultural estimates $5,000,000 was being granted to agriculture and he said that this was a direct aid to the farmers of this country. He likened it to the bounties which have been paid on iron and steel. I would not have thought so much of his statement that this $5,000,000 was direct aid to the farmers if he had not likened it to the bounties on iron and steel. In that comparison he is absolutely unfair and absolutely wrong, because this $5,000,000 is not paid to the farmers. We are not paid a bounty on our wheat, on our milk, on our butter or on our cheese. This $5,000,000 is not paid to the farmers; it is expended in educational and investigational work. Although the farmers do appreciate it and do receive some benefit from it, let me remind hon. gentlemen that we cannot be altogether selfish in the matter of the benefits which we reap from it because we cannot use all the wheat, all the butter, all the cheese and all the milk that we produce. If there is an added production on the farms of this country as a result of the expenditure of that $5,000,000, that added production adds to the wealth of every other class in the country.

Now in respect to the Budget speech of the hon. Minister of Finance, I wish to say that it embodies in itself a very serious criticism of the course followed by the present Administrator during the last few years. It calls upon the country to exercise thrift and economy and yet it indicates clearly that the Government has not been practising thrift and economy.

When war broke out in 1914, it should not have required any very far-sighted statesman to foresee that the cost of the war would be enormous and that it must eventually be met by the people through taxation. It would have been the part of wisdom to have immediately made some provision for paying part of the cost of the war out of the revenues of the country. When the people were keyed up by their patriotic fervour, they would have welcomed taxes which they will find burdensome in times of peace and which may be very burdensome if times of depression come. Moreover, unprecedented amounts of money were flowing into the country and boosting industry and business in every direction. This would have been a proper time for the Government to increase the revenues with a view to applying part of them to defraying part of the cost of the war. This course was not followed, however. The cost of the war was met by borrowing, and notwithstanding the fact that our revenues have increased enormously, the fact remains that until now, over one and one-half years after the armistice was signed, no serious attempt has been made to defray the cost of the war by means of taxation.

There are some features of the Budget which I desire to commend. First, there is the frankness and lucidity with which the minister has placed the actual financial condition of this country before the people. It is a good thing to trust the people. In a democratic country, it is a good thing for the Government to take the people into their confidence, and I can assure the minister that the people of Canada will appreciate and respond to his frankness.

Then there is the increase in direct taxation. This is something which the people can understand. They know that there is an immense debt to be paid, and if the charges on that account are levied equitably, the people are willing to pay. I would like to commend the minister for thus extending the principle of direct taxation. The tax on luxuries is a good thing, in so far as it is a tax on real luxuries. In this respect, I feel that the proposals embodied in the Budget are open to a good deal of criticism and revision, both in their incidence and operation, but that can be done in committee.

I would also criticise that feature of the Budget which makes it evident that the future policy of this Administration is to be the same old principle of protection which has been embodied in their fiscal policy of the past. I have already spent some time on the subject and will not refer to it again beyond saying that the fiscal policy of the past forty years has not encouraged a well-balanced, all-round development in the various enterprises in which our people are engaged. It has encouraged industry at the expense of agriculture, and it is not a policy which should be followed longer in a country which has vast undeveloped natural resources and whose agriculture possibilities are still to a large extent waiting to be developed.

Mr. HERMAS DESLAURIERS (St. Mary's) (translation): Mr. Speaker, replying to the insinuations made by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Nicholson) and which were quite out of place, my honourable friend from Timiskaming (Mr. McDonald) charged the Government with having done positively nothing in behalf of the workingmen. I concur in that opinion entirely. One need not be possessed, at this time, of a very great talent for analysis to find in the Budget brought down by the hon. Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) the exact continuation of the class policy adopted by the Government.

This Budget is unfair and vaxatious, even, to that portion of the community who have undergone, alone I might say, all the sacrifices imposed by the present Administration, and if public rumour is to be taken heed of, that moderate tariff and protection policy as applied by the Government is a dish which has lost all zest for the people.

To advocate intense protection in behalf of trade and commerce by overloading the workingmen with taxes and letting them fall victims to the ravenous appetites of the profiteers will not make for stabilization of labour. To claim that it will is to make a mistake which seems to me deliberate; it is nothing but a false apprehension on the part of the hon. Minister of Finance; it is a sure way of increasing the latent and real misery which already exists in the ranks of the public. Is it just that the millionaire born of speculations connected with the recent war and who keeps on replenishing his purse thanks to the protection policy of the Government; is it just that the members of the present ministry should pay for their breakfast the same tax as he who is paid only $15 or $20 a week, or as the soldier who was disabled on the battlefields? Is it just that the childless moneyed man should be taxed once only when the workingman with twelve children is taxed twelvefold? Is it just that the people should pay more, merely for clothing, than the Government gets, in the form of a tax out of the large revenues, when the textile industries admit publicly that they realize profits of 200 per cent and when they have but a ridiculously low tax to pay?

The Government may take the 7½ per cent war tax off the implements of husbandry, they may promise to have the tariff revised by such commissions as they usually appoint and this may mean an electoral boon and promote a greater agricultural production which will enable profiteers in this industry to operate on a larger scale and, in fine, to multiply their profits, but this will not hinder the workingmen in the cities from continuing to pay for the necessaries of life a higher and higher price.

One was justified in believing that, during the reconstruction period, as the Government is pleased to call it, the classes of the community who had been aggrieved by the scourge of war, such as the workingmen in the cities and the soldiers to whose lot the sacrifices fell and who were almost completely disorganized, would be benefited by the Governments "win the war" policy, instead of the profiteers and the speculators who had nothing to suffer but the multiplication of their dollars. On the contrary, the poor is taxed for ever. If, tired out by hard work during the great summer heat, he wishes to drink a glass of beer on his way back from the factory, his thirst is taxed; if, when at home, at night, he wishes to mitigate the drudgery of his daily task and to rest from his daily toil by means of a little mechanical music for want of money to secure something better, "let the workman be the goat," he is heavily taxed. He cannot even take a little smoke without paying a tax on his matches; if he wishes to sleep he must pay the taxes intended for the protection of the textile industries; in a word, he is affected from top to toe and from all sides by all the taxes as he would have been under the salt-tax system in France at the time of the French revolution when a tax was imposed even on the salt of the consumer who could be put in jail if caught in possession of a pinch of salt unauthorized by Parliament.

We had reason to think that the Minister of Labour, seeing that his electors were being treated unjustly, would assume concerning the guidance of this country the important and vital rank assigned to him by the present circumstances.

Fallacy! in the person of the hon. Minister of Labour we have but a distinguished lecturer using magic-lantern slides, who is not responsible nor accountable to the people and whose part is restricted to the hoaxing of workingmen by the means of labour congresses at which nothing is acted upon, of industrial conferences over which he presides and whose only use is to put a heavy drain on the Treasury to generously reward so-called knights and leaders of industry and labour called together that they might puff his showy exhibitions.

The present Government despatched Mr. Draper to Versailles that he might try or make a pretence of trying to do something official for the ever-enduring shorn one. The Government will undoubtedly endeavour to glory in their having countenanced clause 427, paragraph 4, of the Peace Treaty of 1919, concerning the eight hour day or the forty-eight hour week. However, they were not the initiators of that polciy, for as early as 1578, under the reign of Philip II of Spain, it was applied to miners. Later on, in 1797, the physician of the king of Prussia, Hulefant, suggested that the working laws in industries should be divided into three parts so as to enable workers to take wholesome food, to have sanitary homes and to wear proper raiments.

In France, in 1832, in the United States, in 1884, in New Zealand and everywhere since then, even in Canada, such a reform has been advocated and brought about through the perfecting of industrial machinery, and it will become more pressing as machinery is further improved.

However, we must realize that a labour policy should not be confined to words, but should also take the form of deeds.

Not even the shadow of a thought for the welfare of workingmen is to be found in the Budget; nothing was suggested by the Minister of Labour to help them and to facilitate the enforcement of an eight-hour day which means but ruin for Canada, if the department do not set up a general organization of workers based upon physiological, psychological, technical, administrative, local, national or international researches, not individual, but co-ordinate. Why should we not establish as soon as possible, as was done for the investigating of other problems, an international institute of labour where such matters would be considered and scientists, manufacturers and workingmen could work together? Nothing is done because there is not a true desire of promoting the welfare of every class of the community.

Canada has paid dearly for listening to the unionist verbiage, but to-day she knows that, according to that verbiage, the convening of labour congresses, of industrial conferences is as meaningless as the establishment of boards of food or trade commissioners as far as the lowering of the cost of living is concerned. It is nothing but a mystification and a camouflage in order to shield friends. How long will the people still put up with deception? That I do not know, but I am sure that though they may be deceived once, they cannot be humbugged all the time.

The present social upheaval and the public disparagement of the authorities show that the outside policy of the Government is being well understood, and that should the Government, as guardians of the destiny of the people, still persist in causing instead of preventing distress, the time is not far away when another class already conspicuous, which the hon. member from Algoma East warmly commended, and which is unwilling to consider the interests of the whole community, will think of taking a stand to serve its own cause.

Had the Minister of Labour been equal to the circumstances, would we have witnessed so many people without a shelter, having no homes, while the Government was keeping in the loom a housing scheme for the workers, authorizing an expenditure of twenty millions, but upon conditions which prevented anything being done. As the result of such incompetency or unconcern, we have seen this year a great number of families crowding themselves in tenements which recall the slums of London where there are no morals, chastity is derided, children are robbed of their virginity before becoming of marriageable age to fall later on a prey for houses of ill-fame. Such a disorder is most serious and the responsibility rests upon the shoulders of those who are the guardians of the destinies of the nation and who by a fallacious policy devised to bring up such a result permit the degradation of the home and the disintegration of families.

The Government are in a large measure responsible for these conditions and knowing their existence, they have no right to ignore these evils which, for the sake of the race and community, should not be tolerated. Social conscience cries loudly to them that they have no right to enact class legislation and thus pile up riches while the evils resulting from the dislocation of industry go unmolested.

In consequence of the Government's war policy how many invalids, how many aged people, how many widows and orphans have well-nigh been reduced to poverty; how many have in fact tasted the very dregs of hardship and suffering? Still the Budget makes no provision for such as these. Instead the ministry is itself opening the way to this economic hell; and every day we see all these poor people falling further and further into the depths and, in an effort to stay their doom, hanging on to insufficient salaries.

The chief cause of the suffering in our cities is imputable solely to the Department of Labour, which refuses to enact the legislation necessary to prevent our present-day disorders through fear of displeasing the high protectionists. I am speaking of forced idleness.

This idleness is caused by irregular work, mainly due to lack of organization, to business depression or to seasonal fluctuations. If we had a competent Department of Labour these problems could easily be solved by following the example of other countries. Couldn't we set up a well organized central labour exchange in our principal cities and enact a law forbidding the employer from hiring workmen at the factory gate and obliging them to apply to the labour exchange? There the worker would have to give his name and his trade; work would be found for each in turn and the wages paid would conform to the scale established by the labour unions. In this way we would be rid of the sight of hundreds and hundreds of workers anxiously waiting every morning at the factory gate for employment which never comes; these poor men waste weeks and weeks in these vain attempts to find work, while their families are suffering the direst poverty.

An equitable distribution of Government contract, during periods of stagnation, would also help to overcome this problem of idleness. Old people and children below eighteen years of age should have to work only during a limited number of hours. Every year the Budget should contain an appropriation for widows so as to oblige them to bring up their children properly and relieve them of the necessity of spending long hours in the workshop to earn a pitiful salary. In this way all our labour would be absorbed and economic distress forestalled. But the Department of Labour asks for none of these measures. We still have in our cities numerous cases of "sweating"—and I could give details—where grown people receive $6 and $7 a week for working ten hours a day. Such a state of things should never be allowed to exist under a democratic Government. The State should establish a fixed minimum wage and visit severe punishment on all employers who disobeyed the law in this respect.

Another method of overcoming this problem of forced idleness would be insurance such as they have in several cities of Germany where it is coupled with medical attention in return for a reasonable contribution which the employer deducts from the workers' pay envelope. In several countries, especially in Belgium, Norway, Denmark and Holland, the Gand system is followed and seems to give satisfaction; under this system the public authorities, on the recommendation of the Department of Labour, vote certain subsidies to the labour unions as a reward for services rendered the State; this ensures comfort for the workers and prevents just so much hardship.

In a great many industries no thought is given to the workers' health; the sanitary conditions are frightful; the workers are exposed to all sorts of poisons and infections; another fruitful cause of idleness and of hardship. Employers should be obliged to insure their employees against disease contracted in the workshop just as they insure them against accidents. I understand that it is difficult for the hon. Minister of Labour, a Senator for life, and possessed of independent means, to realize what great evils result from economic insecurity; hence his indifference and his grandstand play of improving the lot of the workingman; but he is unfaithful to his moral duty when he fails to obtain from the Government preventive and curative measures for the alleviation of economic distress; conscience, in the name of humanity and of our social welfare, commands him to do so.

Were it not for that, parents could not possibly be called upon to discharge their duties towards their children, from the viewpoint of education, and hygiene, which are essential factors in the upbuilding of a nation sound in body and mind "mens sana in corpore sano."

Mr. Speaker, it is truly regrettable to see the Government steering their course towards a revival, under new appellations, of differences—that ought to be forever obliterated and which responsible government, be it said to its eternal credit, had demolished. Do they mean to resuscitate the old state of things under a new shape? What purpose do they pretend to serve in so doing? I say most emphatically that those who are trying to revive the conflicts of the past, and to create antagonism between capital and labour, or vice versa, are egregiously mistaken or seek to deceive their fellow countrymen.

It may be a fruitful theme for barren and sometimes criminal appeals to prejudices, but it behooves us to defeat such movements through a fair policy towards every group of the community. In these times of stress, while Europe is setting such sad examples, we ought to close our ranks from the highest to the lowest steps of the scale of society. There should be only Canadians—good Canadians—elder brothers, younger brothers in the great family which is called the fatherland.

Were I allowed to put on record my views in this connection, and to suggest a motto to my fellow countrymen, in the name of the country, I would say: Cultivate your mind, improve yourselves, stick together, carry on together.

Mr. P. A. SEGUIN (L'Assomption-Montcalm) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, let me, at the very outset, tell you that I shall not trespass upon the patience of the House at this late hour. However, I wish before the closing of the debate, to say a few words about the Budget we are now dealing with.

From their very coming into power the Government seems to have had no other concern but squandering in risky undertakings, millions upon millions, and, with a view to making up deficits, they are straining every nerve in levying taxes upon the people.

Under cover of a win-the-war policy and its imperative exigencies the Government has been indulging in the most extravagant and unwarranted expenditures, from the standpoint of administration. Having acquired the deeply-seated habit of throwing away broadcast the public moneys, under the plea of their win-the-war policy, they have in the long run lost the sense of their responsibilities and probably in order to gratify the cravings of their favourites, they have launched into scandalous undertakings, such as the taking over of the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk railways, and as a consequence of their reckless policy, this country is now facing a gigantic debt of three billion dollars.

And how could the enormous character of that debt be explained, otherwise than by the reckless financing of the Government, not only from the very inception of the war, but from their coming into power in 1911.

It is too late now to recall the scandalous character of the expenditures which was so conspicuous in the pre-war times, it would carry us too far back; but from 1914 and even 1917, the country has witnessed an orgy of expenditures, and the carousal is not yet seemingly at an end. When the war was on, did not friends and followers of the Government, as General Smart and Colonel Pratt, alarmed over this reckless administration, declare to us that favouritism and injustice, with their headquarters at Argyle House in England, were presiding over the direction of our army? And in this country, how much money has been squandered, and how many millions scattered broadcast among Government favourites and profiteers of their ilk.

It may be acknowledged that the hon. Minister of Finance is a man of high intellectual culture and of broad learning, but one could not, forsooth, deliver him a certificate as a first-class economist and friend of the people; because the method resorted to by him in order to restore public confidence and bring about the welfare of the country is doomed to dismal failure when, without any concern for the well-being of the country in general, he is bending all his efforts towards levying imposts on the people, and sinking the money thus raised into a bottomless pit.

I quite realize that the Minister of Finance of a country, the public exchequer of which has been plundered for many years is performing a thankless task; but that cannot warrant his levying taxes on such necessaries of life, as are to be found in the resolution now before us.

Does the hon. minister mean that he is taxing luxuries in imposing a 10 per cent duty on a pair of shoes worth nine dollars or on a five dollar hat?

For my part I consider this tax upon articles of first necessity and which could not be had any more cheaply. And how many other articles altogether essential have there not been wantonly taxed? Is not the tax on patent medicines itself a most onerous burden upon a class of people who should in justice call for more protection at the hands of the rulers?

But how carefully the big profiteer of late has been guarded from disgorging. He was even allowed to shelter a part of his millions from the income tax by subscribing to the tax-free national loans.

I fully realize that, in order to face the critical situation in which the finances of country are, a remedy had to be found; but I regret that the hon. the Minister of Finance, instead of tackling the great capitalists, especially those who made of the war an opportunity for amassing colossal fortunes, should put the burden of taxation upon the consumer and the mass of the people.

Instead of squeezing the small purses as he does in this Budget, why has the Minister of Finance not put under contribution those who have made such a boon of the dire events of the last years? Instead of bleeding the poor people white, why has he not sought to balance his finances by resolutely adopting a regime of economy, by judiciously doing away with a lot of useless expenditure in the different branches of the administration?

Is it not, for instance, an immorality, if I may use the term, to find in the Estimates for this year, a sum of $12,498,506 to be voted for militia, when $3,903,000 only are provided for agricultural purposes, and when it is found every day that the requests made in favour of the agricultural class are treated with the utmost neglect by the Government in spite of the good will of the Minister of Agriculture.

Why should we be asked to vote such a fabulous sum for military purposes after having made the unheard of sacrifices which the Government imposed upon us, for the very purpose of destroying militarism and securing to the world a lasting peace?

I want to put upon record my most earnest protest against the guilty neglect with which the Government meets the interests of agriculture all over the country and more particularly in the province of Quebec, and this in order to waste countless sums of public money upon military matters.

I protest with all the energy that is in me against the project of developing in this country an imperial navy, by accepting from England the gift of war vessels. Were it not for fear of scandalizing certain wild Imperialists, I would add that this gift of war vessels does in no way allure me—"Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes."

After our having offered our last dollar and our last man as our contribution to the war, why is our Government so indifferent in asking for our share of the indemnity to be paid by Germany?

I do not want to prolong this debate, and I hasten to conclude by saying that if the Government be truly concerned as to the economic and national future of Canada, they must henceforth take the means of giving the people all facilities for co-operating in the resumption of our normal life; and with that purpose in view, they must lighten the people's burden and give the farmers the possibility of procuring as cheaply as possible the tools with which to increase production, an advantage which can be afforded by lowering the tariff.

And when production increases, the cost of living will come down, greatly to the benefit of the consumer. The lowering of the tariff upon the implements of production in the industries born of the natural resources of the country, will bring better days for Canada and make life easier for the people.

And may we return to our national traditions of concord and harmony, by putting an end to appeals to race and creed hatred, which a sect without shame and patriotism takes pleasure in fomenting in our country with the assent of this Government.

Under such conditions only, shall our dear Canada become happy and prosperous, as in the time when its destinies were governed by the illustrious man and the ardent patriot the memory of whom is ever alive, Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

As long as nothing is done for the people, the people will do nothing for the Government. They have been too often deceived to have any faith to-day in the words of those who govern. Henceforth acts only will count; acts, not words, are now in order. And the action must be helpful and constructive because our people have already suffered too much. It is useless to forestall what that imaginary commission on the tariff, which the Government promised more than a year ago, can do. People must have their turn and they will get it, if the amendment submitted by the hon. members for Shelburne and Queen's is adopted. For my part I give it all my support.

The House divided on the proposed amendment of Mr. Fielding which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS.

Messrs.

Andrews,
Archambault,
Baldwin,
Béland,
Boivin,
Bourassa,
Boyer,
Brouillard,
Bureau,
Cahill,
Caldwell,
Campbell,
Cannon,
Cardin,
Casgrain,
Chisholm,
Clark (Red Deer),
Copp,
Crerar,
d'Anjou,
Déchêne,
Deilsle,
Demers,
Desaulniers,
Deslauriers,
Devlin,
Duff,
DuTremblay,
Ethier,
Euler,
Fafard,
Fielding,
Fontaine,
Fortier,
Fournier,
Gauthier,
Gauvreau,
Gervais,
Gladu,
Gould,
Halbert,
Hunt,
Jacobs,
Johnston,
Kay,
Kennedy (Essex, N.),
Kennedy (Glengarry and Stormont),
King,
Knox,
Lafortune,
Lanctôt,
Lapointe,
Lavigueur,
Leduc,
Leger,
Lemieux,
Lesage,
Mackie (Edmonton),
MacNutt,
McCoig,
McCrea,
McGibbon (Argenteuil),
McDonald,
McKenzie,
McMaster,
Marcil (Bonaventure),
Marcile (Bagot),
Mayrand,
Michaud,
Molloy,
Pacaud,
Papineau,
Pardee,
Parent,
Pelletier,
Power,
Prevost,
Proulx,
Reid (Mackenzie),
Rinfret,
Robb,
Ross,
Savard,
Seguin,
Stein,
Thomson (Qu'Appelle),
Tobin,
Trahan,
Truax,
Turgeon,
Verville,
Vien,
White (Victoria),
Wright.—94.

NAYS.

Messrs.

Allan,
Anderson,
Argue,
Armstrong (York),
Armstrong (Lambton),
Arthurs,
Ballantyne,
Ball,
Best,
Blair,
Blake,
Bolton,
Bonnell,
Borden (Sir Robert),
Bowman,
Boyce,
Boys,
Brien,
Bristol,
Burnham,
Burrell,
Butts,
Calder,
Casselman,
Chaplin,
Charlton,
Charters,
Clark (Bruce),
Clarke (Wellington),
Clements,
Cockshutt,
Cooper,
Cowan,
Crothers,
Crowe,
Cruise,
Currie,
Davidson,
Davis,
Doherty,
Douglas (Strathcona),
Douglas (Cape Breton S. and Richmond),
Drayton (Sir Henry),
Elkin,
Finley,
Foster (Sir George),
Foster (York),
Fraser,
Fripp,
Fulton,
Glass,
Green,
Griesbach,

Guthrie,	Paul,
Halladay,	Peck,
Harold,	Porter,
Harrison,	Redman,
Hartt,	Reid (Grenville),
Hay,	Richardson,
Henders,	Rowell,
Hughes (Sir Sam),	Scott,
Keefer,	Sexsmith,
Lalor,	Shaw,
Lang,	Sheard,
Loggie,	Sifton,
Long,	Simpson,
Mackie (Renfrew),	Smith,
Maclean (York),	Spinney,
McCurdy,	Stacey,
McGibbon (Muskoka),	Steele,
McGregor,	Stevens,
McIntosh,	Stewart (Hamilton),
McIsaac,	Stewart (Lanark),
McLeod,	Sutherland,
McQuarrie,	Thompson (Weyburn),
Martin,	Thompson (Hastings,)
Meighen,	Thomson (Yukon),
Merner,	Tolmie,
Mewburn,	Tremain,
Middlebro,	Tudhope,
Morphy,	Tweedie,
Mowat,	Whidden,
Munson,	White (Sir Thomas),
Myers,	Wigmore,
Nicholson, (Queens, P.E.I.),	Wilson (Wentworth),
Nicholson (Algoma),	Wilson (Sask.).—120.

Mr. BUCHANAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards.) Had I voted I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. PEDLOW: I was paired with the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken.) Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. H. A. MACKIE: Mr. Speaker, under a misapprehension in regard to the order in which the vote was taken I voted for the amendment. Had it not been for that wrong impression I would have voted with the Government.

PAIRS:

(The list of pairs is furnished by the Chief Whips.)

Messrs.

McLean, H. H.,	Murphy,
Maclean, A. K.,	Sinclair (P.E.I.),
Hocken,	Pedlow,
Manion,	Sinclair (Antigonish),
Cronyn,	Denis,
Edwards,	Buchanan,
Wallace.	Maharg.

Main motion (Sir Henry Drayton) agreed to and the House went into Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Rt. Hon. SIR ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while it might seem somewhat a work of supererogation at this stage to adjourn, nevertheless the House would probably support a motion that the Committee rise and report progress. I therefore make that motion.

Motion agreed to and progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READING.

Bill No. 148 (from the Senate) for the relief of Lockhart Pierce Sutton—Mr. Douglas (Strathcona).

On motion of Sir Robert Borden the House adjourned at 6.32 a.m.

INDEX

FOURTH SESSION — THIRTEENTH PARLIAMENT, 1920.

Abbreviations.—1r., 2r., 3r.=first, second, or third reading. Admn.=Administration; Amdt.=Amendment. Com.=Committee. Div.=Division. Dept.=Department. Govt.=Government. M.=Motion. Ques.=Question. Ref.=Reference. Rep.=Report. Res.=Resolution. Sec.=Section.

Abey, Mr. H. R. ques. 1000

Acadia Refining Company, 3226

Acton Vale post office, ques. 1899

Adams, Mr. Thomas, ques. 1002, 3551

Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 11, 47, 87, 114, 161, 181, 231.

Adjournment. See House of Commons

Admiralty. See Naval Service

Admiralty Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 2842; 2r., 3086; com., 3086; 3r., 3086

Adulteration of Food. See Food and Drugs Bill

Aerial Navigation. See also British North America Act
Air Service, 4553
Material, purchase of for, ques. 1359
Tax, suggested, 3592

Age of Consent. See Criminal Code

Agricultural Gazette, 1085

Agricultural Machinery Bill (Standardization of Parts), 1r., 2079

Agriculture. See debates under Canadian Wheat Board; Commercial Feeding Stuffs
Co-operation with the provinces, 603
Dairying industry. See that title
Department, Estimates, 2382
Experimental farms. See that title
Farm labour, ques. 800, 1011, 1220, 1227
Government, and, 610
Improvement in, 677
International Institute of, 2411
Potatoes, exportation, ques. 1360
Statement and review by Minister, 2366

Agriculture and Colonization, Com., 306, 540

Alberta Penitentiary, ques. 2777, 3855

Alcohol. See also Inland Revenue; Opium and Drugs; Proprietary; Prohibition; Special War Revenue
Industrial, 70, 324

Aliens, 150, 155, 229. See also Dominion Franchise; Education; Immigration; Naturalization
Detention camps, in, ques. 314
Enemy, naturalization, ques. 992
Immigrants and Canadian Citizenship, M (Mr. Steele), 812

Allan, Mr. G. W. (South Winnipeg)
Returns to House, 1295

Allies. See also League of Nations
Peace Conference at Ostend, 2476, 2574

Alpine Club, 3288

Alves, Mr., death of, ques. 1463

Amery, Colonel, and Speaker's Chair, 3224

Ames, Sir Herbert B. (St. Antoine)
League of Nations—review and summary, 3961. League of Nations a reality—partisanship in international relationships deprecated—history and description of League—meetings—specific tasks and achievements—permanent institutions designed and prepared for—transit—armaments—mandates and minorities—registration of treaties—emergent measures—duties as financial director—first assembly, November, 1920—the Secretariat an international civil service—Canada's opportunity. Questions answered; for details see League of Nations
Return of to House, 3623

Anderson, Mr. R. K. (Halton)
Brant Military Hospital, ques. 2519
Federal Bureau of Education, 1370
Income tax, errors in returns, 3302
Opium and Drug Bill, 1636-7, 1644-5, 1746
Parliamentary Restaurant—messengers, 3098
Sugar, price of, 1896

Andrews, Mr. George W. (Centre Winnipeg)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 171. Free trade, 171; returned soldiers; true party discipline, 173; going over to cross benches, 174
Budget, 3012. Members' indemnity, 3012; pensions for soldiers and their dependents—war profits, 3013; conscription of financial and managerial ability; Mr. Meighen on Britain and British policy—trust the people, 3015
Canadian Wheat Board, ques. 2182
Canteen profits, ques. 800
Hudson Bay Company lands, ques. 1897
League of Nations and United States, ques. 1118
Oleomargarine, 1869
Pensions, 433, 511
Returned soldiers, provision for, M. for special com. 511
Soldier Settlement, 2135-6
Universal military training, 945

Animal Contagious Diseases Act Amdt. Bill. 1r., 1622-3; 2r., com., 1839; 3r., 1840

Animals, Feeding of. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Annuities. See Government Annuities

Anticosti, North Point light, ques. 1361

Antigonish and North Sydney, Public works, ques. 543, ques. 1004

Appeals. See Supreme Court Act

Apple Barrels. See Inspection and Sale

Appropriation Acts
1. Bill No. 36 (for 1920-1, for $62,900,-986.09), 1r., 2r., com., 3r., 756
2. Bill No. 67 (for 1920-21, for $2,083,-333.33). Res., 1r., 2r., com., 3r., 1289
3. Bill No. 166 (for 1919-20, for $3,175,-199.81; and for 1920-1, for $64,984,-319.42 interim). Res., 3215, 3217; 1r., 2r., com., 3r., 3218
4. Bill No. 221 (for 1919-20, for $15,875,-999.03; and for 1920-21, for $321,980,-760.61). Res., 1r., 2r., com., 3r., 4587

"Arabic," SS. Loss of Govt. vouchers in, ques., 3489

Archambault, Mr. Joseph (Chambly and Verchères)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 292. Address seconded in English, not in French—proposed general election; reply to Mr. Meighen, 292; reply to Mr. Hocken, 293; dissolution of Parliament, historical review, 294
Auditor General's report, 4276
Bankruptcy Bill, 4263
Budget, 2925. Farmers' delegation on conscription, 2925; increase of public debt, 2926; "advances unaccounted for," 2927; income tax, exemption on account of children, 2928; cost of living—Board of Commerce—profiteers, 2929; Dominion Textile Company—purchases in connection with advances to Greece and Roumania, members of Parliament interested, 2930; new taxes, proposed taxation of war wealth, 2932; food gamblers, 2933; banks and credits for speculation; tariff commission and revision, personal position, 2934; exchange rate and soldiers' pay—withholding of information on public affairs by Gov., 2936
Canteen profits, 709
Chambly fort, 3769
Daylight saving, 1574
Desjardins, "Ti-Noir," ques. 315
Dominion Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2216, 2221, 2243
Liquor on polling day, 1108
Polling divisions, 1517
Proclamation—language of publication, 1834, 2292
Explosive works at Beloeil, 2247-48
Freight car situation, ques. 319; ques. 997
French wine imports, ques, 1627
Gambling, 3428
Grand Trunk shareholders, 3426-27
Greece and Roumania, ques. 415; ques. 2414
Habeas Corpus, 3296
House of Commons
Debates—translation of French speeches, 697, 4587
Income tax
Exemptions on account of children, 2928, 3297-8
Forms in French, 1084, 1573
Inquiry for returns, 618, 4258
International Labour Conference, ques. 803

Archambault, Mr. Joseph—Con.
Kingston harbour works, 458
Kinmel Camp riots, 709
Judges' salaries, 3227
Letter of French Canadian at war front, 284
Militia, 3660-3
Naturalization, Alsace-Lorraine, 3921
Navy League of Canada, ques. 802
Opium and Drug Bill, 1749, 1759
Peace Treaty, Bulgaria, 489
Printing Bureau, Sunday work, 4020
Purchasing Commission—Public Accounts Com., 1474, 4580-3
Racial and religious rights, 489
Roumania, ques. 2413, ques. 3488
Russia, trade with, 4322
St. Johns election, 2239
St. Lawrence channel, 230, 856
Shipbuilding, 640
Contracts, ques. 314, 917
Steel plates for, ques. 706
Soldiers
Cash gratuities, 1084
Payments to in sterling, ques. 2008
Steel and shipping merger, 1953
United States railways and Canadian freight, 1789
Victory loans, ques. 803
Commissions, ques. 320
Committee, ques. 2008
Vimy battlefield, ques. 1358
Washington, Canadian Minister at, 2474

Archibald, Col. Grassie, ques. 2007

Argue, Mr. Ira E. (Swift Current)
Eight-hour day, 449
Experimental Farms, 2389, 3159

Armenians,
League of Nations and, 855, 1465, 3979

Armstrong, Mr. John A. M. (North York)
Franchise Bill, 1067

Armstrong, Mr. Joseph E. (East Lambton)
Budget Speech, copies of, 2626
Car shortage, 884
Daylight saving, 1084
Ethyl alcohol, 3497
Franchise Bill
Advance and proxy voting, 1164
Voters' lists, 2419-20
Grand Trunk strike and pensions, 1129
Illustration farms, 2384
International Parliamentary Conference, ques. 2721

Armstrong, Mr. Joseph E.—Con.
Mines Department, 3803
National defence, 4305
Naval Service, additional appropriation, 4305-10
Newspaper postage, 3349, 3755-8
Oil—Hudson Bay—Great Slave Lake, 3811-2
Royal Commission on Natural Resources, ques. 4502
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill, 3476
Collection, progress of, 3480-1, 3600
Furniture—auctions, 3575
Jewellery, 3579
Musical instruments, 3595
Proprietary medicines, 3600-4
Steel and Shipping merger, 1956
British Empire Steel Corporation, ques. 2777
Vessel Rates
Board of Railway Commissioners, control by, ques. 2414, 2777
Inland and coastwise (Railway Act Amdt. Bill), 160, 1707-27, ques. 2772
Ocean; res., 2013

Armstrong, Mr., Director of Coal Operations. See under Coal Operations

Army. See also Soldiers
Court martial procedure, ques. 1359
Surplus stores, ques. 1229
War Boots and Shoes, ques. 506

Arsenals. See Dominion arsenals; Militia

Arthabaska-Victoriaville, branch line, ques. 4502

Arthur Young Company, 3742. See also Civil Service; Griffenhagen
Wolff, Mr. L. R., ques. 1624

Arthurs, Mr. James (Parry Sound)
Alves, Mr., death of, ques. 1463.
Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2231-56
Peace and good order, 1106-8
Voters' list, 2421, 3892
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3936-40
Point of order—militia—relevancy, 3663
War trophies, 4557

Asbestos, 4513. See
Asbestos postmaster, ques. 320

Asiatics in Canada. See Chinese; Japanese; Naturalization; Orientals; Franchise Bill

Assiniboia
By-election. 56, 126, 137, 168, 3473. See also Recall
Expenses of Candidates, 1172, 1174-84
Grasshopper plague, 128
Sessional indemnities for unrepresented years, 129

Atlantic Sugar Refinery Company, 3226

Auditor General's Report, 458, 4276
Fourth volume, 2179, 2390
Publication in French, ques. 1627

Austrian and German Imports, ques. 2416, ques., 3359

Automobiles, 119, 2823, 2815. See also Special War Revenue Act
Imports and excise, ques. 591
Manufacturing plants in Canada, ques. 1201
Smuggled, ques. 807; ques. 1001
Taxes on, 2487

Autonomy of Canada. See Canada's National Status; Bulgarian Treaty; League of Nations; Peace Treaty

Bacon Industry. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Badges, Naval Service, 437. See also Naval Service

Bagot County
Electoral list, ques. 2011
Postal inspection, ques. 2721

Baie de Chaleur Harbours, 2185

Baker, Late Lieut. Col. G. H., M.P.,
Memorial to, 181, 2776, 3557,

Baldwin, Mr. Willis K. (Stanstead)
Budget, 2539. Luxury taxes, 2539; parties and reciprocity, 2540; Liberal party's tariff policy, 2540; immigration and national development, 2541; railways; West Indies, and Confederation, 2543
Food and Drugs Bill, 1262
Opium and Drug Bill, 1755
Scientific Research, 2174
Special War Revenue Bill, 3463
Retailer, effect upon, 3474
Sale (1 per cent) tax, 3467
Stamp taxes, collection of, 1262, 1755

Ball, Mr. Robert J. (Southeast Grey)
Burbidge-Messines, ques. 2721

Ballantyne, Hon. C. C. (Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Minister of the Naval Service)
Budget, 2533. Business profits war tax—tariff and cost of living, 2534; Liberal party tariff policy, 2535; free trade and the farmers, 2539
Buoy Service, 2116
Canada Shipping Act Amdt (Masters and Mates) 406-7, 563, 573-4, 980-3, 1610-2
Canada Shipping Act Amdt (Pilotage) 1839, 1967
Canada Shipping Act Amdt (Steamboat Inspection) 1050-2, 1762, 1776, 2125
Canadian Government Merchant Marine. See also under this title Shipbuilding
Business statement, 950
Operation, 641, 645
Information concerning withheld-policy justified, 1650, 1659-61, 1667, 1681
Steamers
"Canadian Inventor," delay in sailing, 3226, 3360
"Canadian Recruit" wreck of, 649
"Canadian Sealer," 649
"Canadian Spinner," 649
Canadian National Railway, ships and, 904
Cape Race, 2117
Export trade, larger desired, 621
Fish inspection, 1052-4, 4585-6
Fisheries, 3521-3
Overseers and guardians, 3523
Protection and patrol, 3524
Treaty with United States, 1290
Government policy, expected announcement, 583
Government steamers
Buying for, 1610
Wages, 1598, 1600, 1609-11
Halifax marine agency, 2110
Icebreakers, 1598-1612, 2103-7
"J. D. Hazen," 1599, 1602
"Montcalm," 1606-7
St. Lawrence, new vessel for, 1620-1
Uniforms of men, 1603-4
Fair wage contracts, 1608-9
Jellicoe, Admiral, report of, 344.
Australia and New Zealand, 1160
India, 1290
Printing, 386
Lighthouse Service
British Columbia patrol boats, 1616
Grand Etang, 2114
Lighthouse Board, 2117-8
Salaries, 2110-4
Liquor Shipments, Ontario-Michigan border, 2108

Ballantyne, Hon. C. C.—Con.
Little Sands, 4580
Live stock shipments inspection, 1615
Lunenburg—registrar, 2108-10
Magdalen Islands, 649, 651, 1601
Relief ships to, 1742
Marine Dept. and members of Parliament, 2121
Marine Dept., services restored to, 3507
Naval College graduates, 4562
Naval Defence of the Empire
Statement on motion for Supply, 3498 Dominion Ministers' memorandum—Lord Jellicoe, 3499. Government's official statement on naval affairs—acceptance of Admiralty's offer of ships—Naval Service Act, 1910, 3500; "Niobe" and "Rainbow"—war, recruiting and casualties—Naval college—distinguished officers, 3502; reorganization—details of ships from Admiralty—Naval estimates, 3503; efficiency of Service—fisheries protection—Navy Leagues, 3504; submarines to be sold—other Overseas Dominions and Great Britain, expenditures, 3505; service on pre-war lines, 3507. See also under this title Naval Service
Naval Service. See also, under this title, Naval Defence
Additional appropriation, $1,700,000—4291-4302, 4314, 4398-4402, 4408-9
Civil Service insurance and, 1779
Correspondence and negotiations, 4408, 4413
Ministerial statement, 707-8
Pre-war lines, 4391
Naval Service Badge, 439-45
Naval Service Dept.
Estimates—agreement as to debate on, 441-2
Salaries, 4409-11
Navigation
Aid and protection, 2115
Schools of, 1612-3
Pardee, Mr. and taxation—Montreal address, 2742
Pictou Harbour Bill, 2184-90; 3491-94
Pilots. See also under this head, Canada Shipping Act
Pensions, 4579-80
St. John, 2119-22
Quebec grain elevators, 657
Race tracks, influence of, 3428
Registration of shipping, 1614
St. John harbour, 2119, 3492-3
St. Lawrence channel, ice conditions, 230, 856-8

Ballantyne, Hon. C. C.—Con.
St. Lawrence dredging, 1616-20
Shipbuilding, 618, 641, 651, 662-9
Canadian-built ships, quality of, 625
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 622, 659
Cattle shippers, and, 911
Contracts, 662-9, 892, 907-910, 916
Georgian Bay Canal, and, 915
Government ownership, 903, 908
Government programme finished, 905-7
Prices, 895, 900-2. See also under this title, Contracts
Profiteering, denied, 901
Profits—financial statement, 902-3
Ship plates, 623
Ships at Quebec, 916
Supply—vote of $20,000,000, 618, 892
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3994, 4001, 4013-14, 4145-51, 4157-68
Unforeseen expenses, 1616
Wharves, 2122
Winter fishing, 1609
Wrecks—investigation, 1612

Bank Act Amdt. Bill (Interest rate), 1r., 992

Banking and Commerce, Com., 306

Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bills.
1. 1r., 920 (Mr. Jacobs)
2. 1r., 2246; 2r., com., 3255; 3r., 3265
Senate amdt. 4263
Trustees, ques. 2414

Banks, Chartered, ques., 591. See also Special War Revenue; Finance
Interest allowed to Government by, ques. 673
Moneys received from, 1001
Shipbuilding and, 4008
Wheat crop and, 4351

Barley. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Barron, Capt. John A., 857

Batiscan Bridge, ques. 317, ques. 1230

Battlefields Memorials
Com. on, 1460, 1738, 2078, 2177
Quebec, fortifications of, 421

Baugh, E. L. and Tapley, W. H., 2015

Bawdy Houses. See Criminal Code

Begin, Cardinal, insult to, 1574

Béland, Hon. Henri S. (Beauce)
Air Service, 4555-6
Ames, Sir Herbert and League of Nations, 3623
Budget, date of, 2247
Butter and cheese, grading, 603
Canada and the Empire, 503
Canada Year Book, 1879
Canadian National Railways
Operation and withholding of information, 1656, 3086
Canadian Trade, extension of, 1883-5
Car shortage, 885
Civil Service
Classification, 4172. See also, under this title, House of Commons
Holidays, 4061, 4261
Retirement, 2179, 4464-5
Conservation Commission, 3286
Demobilization, 4552
Federal Bureau of Education, 1372
Franchise Bill
Proclamation—language of publication, 1834-6, 2272
Voters' lists, posting of, 3910
Franking privilege, 3763-7
Grosse Isle, 3555
House of Commons
Members, attendance of, 445-9
Staff, classification, 949, 1037-9, 4504, 4563-7
Imperial ex-Service men immigration of, 387
Income tax
Canadian Pacific Railway and, 3306
Dividends, when liable, 3305
Indemnity of members, 3242-3
Indemnity of Members and salaries of Ministers; votes of Messrs. Lanctot and Proulx, 4455
Indians, tuberculosis amongst, 3276
Inquiries for returns, 4258
International Financial Conference, 1465
International Labour Conference, 3359
League of Nations
Belgium, Spain, Greece, Brazil, 3978
Canada's status and relations, 352-3, 481-3
Canadian representative in Assembly, 567, 1046
Commercial treaties, 3973
Next assembly of League, 3977
Saar Basin, 3974
United States, 3977
Mint, the, 616
Moving Pictures of Canada, 1882-3
National parks—big game, 3285

Béland, Hon. Henri S.—Con
Naval Service
Estimates, agreement as to, debate on, 4411
Estimates and expenditure, 3508-10
Opium and Drug Bill, 1630-6, 1646-8, 1706, 1752-3
Parliament Buildings, 7
Parliamentary restaurant, 3094-5
Peace Treaty
Belgium, 481
Ratification, 477
Pensions and Re-establishment, 615
Com. on
Recommendations, legislation concerning, 4504
Report not printed in French, 2016
Resignation of Mr. Peck, 2082
Prime Minister, health of, 114
Proprietary medicines, 3603
Purchasing Board, 1468, 1471
Rural mail carriers, 4524
St. Lawrence dredging, 1617-8
Serbia, reported credit to, 567
Soldier Settlement, 2130
Special War Revenue Bill, 3327-8, 3343
Spirits and medicated wines, 3793
Sporting goods, 3571
Universal military training, 945
Washington, Canadian representative at, 1742, 2473-4

Belgium, advances to, ques. 318. See also League of Nations; Peace Treaty

Bell Telephone Company, rates appeal, ques. 2009

Beloeil, explosive works at, 2247, 2314

Bersimis and Rimouski service, ques. 1463

Best, Mr. John (Dufferin)
Civil Service
Classification, salary increases in advance of, 551
Senate staff, 4060
Superannuation, 4266-7
Eight-hour day, 374
Franchise Bill
Assiniboia expenses, 1174, 1183
Deposit, 1095
Recall, the, 2028-9
Returning officers, 1525, 1527-8
Voting on certificate, 1099
Indians, education of, 3280
Judges' salaries and pensions, 4417-22
Oleomargarine, 1852-56
Purchasing Board, 1468, 1471
Rural mail, 4529
Special War Revenue Bill, 3330, 3335-6

Biggar, Lieut. Col Oliver Mowat, K.C. 588, ques. 1462, 4264-9, 4516. See also Dominion Franchise, Chief Electoral Officer.

Bills, Divorce, remission of charges in, 4321, 4413

Biological Board, ques. 2572

Bird, Mr. Eustace G. ques. 1625

Blair, Mr. W. J. (Battle River)
Screenings, ques. 704

Blake, Mr. Matthew R. (North Winnipeg)
Coal operations director, 3179
Indemnity of Members, 4082
Opium and Drug Bill, 1638-9
Purchasing Commission, 1473-4
Universal military training, 940

Blondin, Hon. P. E., 57, 79, 82, 138, 209
Trip to Europe, ques. 541. See also Postmaster General

Board of Commerce, 198, 229, ques. 408, ques. 592, ques. 1740, 1947
Canners, inquiry concerning, 1045
Chairman, Judge Robson, resignation of, 11, 73, 114, 120, 3769, 3863
Correspondence tabled, 85, 4258, 4502-03
M. for papers, 1900
Civil Service Commission, and, 3426
Dairy and pork industry and, 605, 611, 1009, 1017, 1844
Farmers and, 3401
McNichol, Mr. J. L., 994
M. (Mr. Deslauriers) for abolition, 1139
M. for papers, 2015
Murdock, Mr., resignation of, 4170-71, 4466
Letter, text of, 4481
O'Connor, Mr. W. F., K.C., resignation of, 1684, 3685
Prosecutions, ques. 996
Report, ques. 2012
Inquiry as to, 3227, 3426, 3427
Presented, 3358
Resignation of members, 4258-59
Robson, Judge. See title under this, Chairman
Validity of Act constituting, 3685
Wholesale grocers, dismissal of Mr. Arthur S. Porter, 568

Board of Railway Commissioners. See Railway Commission.

Board of Translators. See Criminal Code Amdt. (French Version)

Boards of Trade Act Amdt Bill. 1r., 2r., 4414; com., 3r., 4460

Boivin, Mr. George Henry (Shefford). See Deputy Speaker

Bolshevism, 1495, 3649. See also Criminal Code; Immigration; Industrial Unrest.

Bonaventure
Experimental Farms, ques. 414
Pensioners, ques. 993
Postmasters, ques. 507
Public Works engineer, ques. 411
Wharves, ques. 411

Bonaventure and Gaspe
Dairy products and fish, ques. 587

Bonds. See also Finance; Loans; Victory Loans
Canadian Government, since beginning of war, ques. 2008

Bonus. See Civil Service

Book-making. See Criminal Code

Books
Banned, Regina library, 396
Customs duties, 3110
German and Austrian imports, ques. 806

Boots. See also Special War Revenue
And shoes, army, ques. 506, ques. 1229
And shoes, prices, 3329-30

Borden, Right Hon. Sir Robert (Prime Minister)
Allies conference at Ostend, 2476, 2574
Bankruptcy Bill, 4097
Bill disposed of—question not to be raised during same session, 3426
Board of Commerce
Correspondence, 3426
Murdock, Mr., resignation of, 4171
O'Connor, Mr. W. F., resignation of, 3685
Report, 3227
Resignation of members, 4258-9
Robson, Judge, Chairman
Correspondence, 3769, 4258, 4502-3,
Budget debate, not limited by amdt., 2518
Budget Speech, inquiry for copies, 2626
Canadian Wheat Board, 3561
Civil Service
Grievances—appeal, 3141-2
Holidays, 4061-2, 4259-62
Senate amdts to Bill, 4259
Coal Operations Director Bill, jurisdiction, 3692
Orders in Council, ratification of, 3362-5

Borden, Right hon. Sir Robert—Con.
Coal problem. M. for supply to discuss, 3685-8, 3692
Customs Act (Export regulations) 3620-2, 3690, 3768
Customs and Post Office Departments
Rumoured investigation, 3623, 3941
DeCelles, Mr. A. D., 2968
Departments of Government, reductions of, 4456
Electricity and gas, taxation of, 3106
Fisheries treaties with United States, 3161
French treaty, 4505
Fuel Supply—Special powers for Railway Commission, 4506, 4324-31
United States, attitude of, 4329
See also under this title, Coal
Gauthier, Mr.—complaint of treatment by civil servant, 4097
Grand Trunk Railway Acquisition—Arbitrators, 3490, 3860-1
Health of, absence from Parliament, 9, 18, 31, 38, 49, 51, 114, 199
House of Commons. See also under this title, Indemnity
Adjournments
Empire day, 2574-5, 2625-6
King's Birthday, 3080
Business of the House, 3106, 3957
Honour of—statement by Rev. Dr. Speer, 3490, 3558
Members, attendance of, 4457-9
Saturday and morning sittings, preparedness of Government's legislation, attendance of Ministers, 2778-84, 3684
Two o'clock sittings, 3080
Immigration Act, Amdt of, 3426
Indemnity of Members, 3228, 4076
Illness, 4458
Increase proposed, 4379-80
Round robin, alleged, 2967
Indemnity of Members and Salaries of Ministers
General statement on moving 2r. of Bill, 4427-31
In reply, 4454-6
In Com. on Bill, 4456-9
Inquiries for returns, 3226, 3769, 4258
International Joint Commission, 3986
International Labour Conference, 3359
Judges' Salaries and Pensions, 4425-6
Lachine Canal, 3424
League of Nations—Ames, Sir Herbert, return of, 3623
Militia Pension Bill, 3959
Munitions Resources Commission, 2892
Naval Service
Additional appropriation $1,700,000, 4385
Correspondence with Imperial Gov,. 4503

Borden, Right hon. Sir Robert—Con.
News Service, 4532-3
Newsprint, 2893, 3227
Parliament, two sessions in one year, 4457
Pecuniary Claims Convention, 3857
Pensions Bill, 3959
Widowed mother, dependent parent, 4050-3
Pensions and Re-establishment
Com. recommendations, special facilities for legislation provided, 3957
M. (Mr. Cronyn) to adopt Com. report, 3954
Fisheries and returned men amdt. (Mr. Peck) 3955
Further legislation, 4504
Post Office and Customs Department
Rumoured investigation by United States firm, 3623, 3491
Prime Minister and portfolio, 4456
Printing Com. report, 4503
Private Bills, special facilities, 3957
Race track betting, 3433
Return of to the House, 2315-16
Salaries Act and House of Commons Act Amdt. (Indemnity and Salaries) 4380
Ships from British Admiralty, correspondence, 4413
Speaker's Chair, 3224-5
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. 3321-2
Speer, Rev. Dr., statement by, 3090, 3558
State Insurance for returned soldiers, 3958
Supplementary Estimates, inquiry as to, 3769
Theriault and St. Quentin, N.B.. 3080
War Memorial, 3228
Washington, Canadian representative at, 2451-4, 4538-43
Correspondence, 3081
West Indies Conference, 3161

Border Chamber of Commerce
Vessel rates—resolution, 1733

Boucher, Mr. Philippe, ques. 2413

Boundary Waters, pollution of, 3552

Bounties Act Administration, 1877

Bourassa, Mr. Joseph B. (Lévis)
Boucher, Mr. Philippe, ques. 2413
Chaudière station, ques. 508
Lévis drill hall caretaker, ques. 1360
Printing Bureau employees, ques. 2005
Quebec harbour steam dredge, ques. 999
St. Romuald postmaster, ques. 2005

Boyce, Mr. George (Carleton)
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3405
Eight-hour day, 376

Boyce, Mr. George—Con
Franchise Bill
Debate on, 1837-8
Proclamation, language of publication, 2303-4
Oleomargarine, 608, 1870-1
Rural mail, 4525

Boyer, Mr. Gustave (Vaudreuil-Soulanges)
Lighthouse keepers, ques. 1897
Ste. Anne bridge, 3774-5
Ste. Anne de Bellevue hospital, ques. 1115
Soulanges canal road, ques. 999

Boys, Mr. William A. (South Simcoe)
Food and Drugs Bill, 972-8
Grand Trunk strike and pensions, 1130-6
Icebreakers, 2107
Indian Act Amdt. Bill—enfranchisement, 4029-35, 4176

Bran. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Brant Military Hospital, ques. 2519

Bridges, provincial and Dominion authorities, and, 3769

Brien, Mr. John Wesley (South Essex)
Opium and Drug Bill, 1643

Bristol, Mr. Edmund (Toronto Centre)
Shipbuilding, 628
Steel and shiping merger, 1948
Vessel rates, proposed regulation, 1718

British Columbia
Lighthouse service, 1616
Railways. See Railway Act Amdt.
Water Powers, ques. 1118

British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 1r. 386; 2r., com., 787, 950, 3r., 1047, 1152

British Empire Steel Corporation, ques. 2777, 4010. See also Steel Industry

British North America Act Amdt. 4379
Aerial navigation, 4169
Motion for papers, 811
Power to amend, 464, 479

British Parliament and Speaker's Chair, 3224

British Preference, ques. 811

Brouillard, Mr. Joseph O. (Drummond and Arthabaska)
Burke, Rev. A. E., ques. 2079
Civil Service Classification, ques. 2181
Parliament Buildings
Commons Chamber floor, ques. 2894

Brouillard, Mr. Joseph O.—Con.
Parliament Buildings—Con.
Cost of heating plant, ques. 2896
Scaffolding, ques. 3079
Tower, ques. 2894
Roy, Mr. Gustave, ques. 1899
Victoriaville-Arthabaska branch line, ques. 4502

Buchanan, Mr. William A. (Lethbridge)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 121. Proposed general election and western representation, 121; personal attitude and Union Government—public unrest, freedom the cure, 122; profiteering—tariff—income tax, 123; national railways—Peace Treaty, 124
Budget, 2762. Tributes to Mr. Rinfret and Minister of Finance—paying war expenses by taxation, 2763; economy—tariff and cost of living, 2765; tariff and development of resources—favours tariff reduction—trade with trans-pacific countries, 2765
Coal Operations Director Bill, 3373-5
Farm labour for spring work, ques. 800
Flour mills, small, ques. 799
Franchise Bill, 1588
Income and business profits taxes, ques. 806
Industrial disputes, 1979
Industrial Survey by Mr. Ponton, ques. 341
Irrigation, 3695-9
Natural resources development, 1032
Newspaper postage rate, 3353
One Big Union, ques. 409
Pensions and Re-establishment, 536
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 395
Rural mail route, 506
Seed Grain advances, ques. 321, ques. 674
Soldiers' settlement, 3223

Buckwheat. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Budget. See also Ways and Means
Debate on, 2495, 2520, 2575, 2626, 2670, 2723, 2786, 2843, 2896, 2969
Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) neg., resolution agreed to, 3077-8
Arrangements for, and announcement, 2247, 2318, 2576, 2840, 3026, 3045
Date of, inquiry, 1047, 2126, 2247, 2778
Speech, 2476
Announcement as to date of, 2247
Inquiry for copies, 2626

Budget Resolutions, 2492. See also Ways and Means

Buffalo, Wainwright herd, 3283

Bulgaria. See also Peace Treaty; Peace Treaty Bill
Peace Treaty, 9, ques. 316, 463
Resolution and statement by Minister, 346; concurrence of Senate in, 1054

Buoys. See Marine

Burbidge-Messines, ques. 2721

Bureau, Mr. Jacques (Three Rivers and St. Maurice)
Admiralty Act Amdt. 3086
Apple barrels—Nova Scotia, 2018
Bankruptcy Bill, reprinting, 3265
Bills—Com.—reading of section by Chairman, 584
British Columbia Indians, 788-95
Business Profits Tax, public utilities, 3232-5
Cabinet changes, 447
Canadian National Railways
Construction and organization, ques. 510
Damage claims, delays, 886-7
Deficit, 886
Operation, suggested improvements, 888
Canadian Northern Railway
Port Arthur terminals, ques. 2012
Capital punishment, 308
Civil Service
Classification—Arthur Young Co. 549
Holidays, 4262
Insurance, 1779
Naturalized British subjects, 510
Retirement, 3826-9, 4460
Coal Operations Director Bill, 3371
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3163
Criminal Code Amdt. (French version) 3082-5
Dominion arsenals, 3717, 3721-2
Eight-hour day, 452-8
Electricity and gas competition and taxation, 3106, 3110, 3113-7
Enterprise Foundry Company, ques. 2415
Export regulations, 3621
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 2000-1, 3874
Aliens, certificate, 2078, 2082, 2217
Canada Temperance Act 3865-6
Debate arrangements for, 1838, 2001
Disqualification of voters
Charitable aid, those receiving, 1814-9
"Election papers," 2023
Indians, 2055-6
Interpretation, 1986-8, 1989-91, 1994
Notices, 777
Oaths, administration of, 779
Proclamation, language of publication, 1829-31, 2273-7, 2281-2, 2291, 2305-6, 2308

Bureau, Mr. Jacques—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Returning officers, 1577-84, 1591-3
Public officials, 1790
Voters' lists,
Copies, procuring of, 2320
Provincial, adoption of, 2347, 2357-66, 3895
Franking privilege, 3763
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1491-3, 1505
Habeas Corpus. See under this title, Labrie
Honey adulteration, 2315
House of Commons. See also under this title, Indemnity
King's Birthday adjournment, 3080
Lobbies, admission of strangers to, 1629
Saturday and morning sittings, 2783
Serjeant-at-arms department, 3094
Staff, classification, 4504, 4563-4
Two o'clock sittings, 3080
Housing expenditure, 3545-8
Icebreakers, 1598
Ile Verte, 2111
Income tax
Absentees, 3303
Indemnity of members, 3242-3
Part payment with return, 3253
Residence or investment outside Canada, 3250
Indemnity of members, 3096, 3853, 4073, 4450
Income tax and, 3242-3
Indian Affairs Dept., 3266-7
Indians
Destitute, relief for, 3275-6
Education of, 3278
Inspection and Sale Act Amdt.—Fruit, 2018
Penalties, 2019-21
Sections repealed, 2016
Judges' salaries, 3851-3
Labrie Brothers, case of, 3296, 3847-50, 3560
League of Nations, 349
Loan Companies Act Amdt., 1776-8
Maple products, 796
Naval Service Dept.
Estimates—agreement as to debate—misunderstanding — compromise suggested, 4412
Opium and Drug Bill, 1621-2, 1630-3, 1636-8, 1703
Parliament Buildings construction, 1419-33
Parliamentary restaurant, 3095-6
Official list, 2842-3
Parliamentary translators, 3093
Petroleum and Naphtha Act Amdt. 1762

Bureau, Mr. Jacques—Con.
Pictou harbour, 2188-9, 3491
Purchasing Commission, 1478, 4583
Questions, inquiry as to, 2126
Questions passed as orders for returns, 1743
Race track betting, 3431-2
Railway Act Amdt. (Jurisdiction), 2413
Registered postal rate, 3732-3
Ross Rifle factory, ques. 1898; ques. 2721, 3722
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3204, 4575
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3989, 4003
Soldier Settlement, 1685, 1702
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. 3337-8
Acetylene gas, 3796
Automobiles, 3597-9, 3793
Bank overdrafts, 3624, 3797-9
"Consumer" how defined, 3794
Debate on Bill, arrangements for, 3455
Refunds, 3629-31
Sales taxes, 3616
Sporting goods, 3571-2
Stamp taxes, 3627
Speer, Rev. Dr., statement by, 3491, 3558
Steamboat Inspection, 1762-3
Stigma on members—personal denial, 547
Supply, interim vote, 754-5
Supreme Court Act Amdt. 2004
Technical education, 1761
Toronto letter carriers, 3424-25
Trust and Loan Company of Canada, 585
Yukon Placer Mining Act, 3106-8

Bureau of Statistics, See Statistics

Burke, Rev. A. E., ques., 2079

Burlington, Military Hospital, ques. 2519

Burnham, Mr. John Hampden (West Peterborough)
Adress in reply to Governor General's Speech, 66. Quebec and its "hour"—feeling developed by the war, 67; treatment of returned soldiers—cost of living, 68; farmers and class movement—exchange rate and trade—industrial alcohol, the new motive power, 70; individual liberty—prohibition—drop race and party cries, 71
Agriculture, problems of, 2400
Alien immigrants, 826
Budget, 2611. War policy and peace policy—Liberal party and Farmers' party, 2611; land taxation and security of employment—unrest and how to be quieted, 2612; group government—soldiers and their dependents—the profit system of trade, 2613; the People's party, 2614

Burnham, Mr. John Hampden—Con.
Business profits tax—public utilities, 3235
Campaign Funds, 1182,
Res. prohibiting, 1216, 1224; withdrawn 1228;
Civil Service
Classification, 546
Reduction of pay, 3135-8
Retirement, 3830
Superannuation, ques. 920
Coal operations director, 3178, 3372
Currie, General Sir Arthur, 3652
Demonstration farms, 2391
Eight-hour day, 334-7 454-8
Contractual rights, 373-81
Farm labour, 1220
Farmers' organization, 1219
Farmers' Party and the Dept. of Agriculture estimates, 2399-2400
Federal Bureau of Education, 1389-90
Franchise Bill
Advance and proxy voting, 1162
Aliens, 733, 2211
Contributions, 1182
Disqualification of candidates, 1089
Enumerators, 3900
Notices, 778
Proceeding by information, 776
Proclamation—language of publication, 2286-7
Provincial lists, 3888, 3897
Recall, the, 2040
Fuel situation, 3178
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1487
Strike of 1910, 1540, 1565
Honour of members—point of order, 1186
Income tax
Charities, 3245-6
Exemptions on account of children, 3300
Indemnity of members, 4069-81
Indians—enfranchisement, 4033
Industrial disputes, 2250
Labour—life not arithmetic, basis of reward, 389
League of Nations
Canada's status, 349, 353
Enforcement of decisions, 3975
Militia—cadet service, 3705
Naval service, 3516
Badges, 446
Old-age pensions, 3830
Oleomargarine, 608
Parliament Buildings, 1420
Peterborough, Gov employees in, ques. 542
Postmaster, ques. 342
Prices of fuel and other necessaries; res. to fix time for full discussion, 321, 333
Prohibition, 1218, 1228

Burnham, Mr. John Hampden—Con.
Race track betting, 3427
Returned soldiers, provision for; m. for special Com., 514
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 389
Shipbuilding, 639
Special War Revenue Act Amdt Bill, 3326
Proprietary medicines, 3794
Trent Canal wharves, ques. 586
Wheat, new variety, 1013
Y. M. C. A., 1219

Burns, P. Company, 582

Burrell, Hon. Martin (Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue)
Address in Reply to Governor General's Speech, 273. Parliament Building—congratulations to mover and seconder, 273; Addresses of Mr. Mackenzie King and Mr. Murphy, 274; absence of Ministers from the House; Mr. Mackenzie King's record—Soldiers' Settlement, 275; Farmers' party—proposed general election, 276; protection and wheat growers, 277; tariff free list, 278; England and tariff, 279; representation of the West, 281
Civil Service, reorganization, 3738-9
Conner, James, dismissal of, 418, 421
Customs Act Amdt Bill (Firearms) 617, 1048
Customs and Excise
Collections, 3859
Estimates, 3858-9
Entomology branch, 2402
French treaty, 4505
Hewitt, the late Dr. Gordon, 2402
Inland Revenue Act Amdt. 3494-8, 3815-21, 4263
Acetic acid, 3497
Alcohol tax, 3496
Methylated spirits, 3497
Resolutions, 3494
Spirits, 3815-8
Evaporation, 3815
Illicit distillation, 3817
Illicit sales, 3498
Malt used to make vinegar, 3818
Warehoused two years, 3816
Wood alcohol, 3820
Tobacco, 3498, 3815, 3818-9
Mines Department—explosives, 3804
Peat, 3807-8
Petroleum and Naphtha Act Amdt. 1762, 1916
Post Office Act Amdt. 3347-58, 4263
Franking, 3356-8
Free matter, 3761-8

Burrell, Hon. Martin—Con.
Post Office Act Amdt.—Con.
Newspaper postage, 3347-56, 3753, 3757-61
Zone system, 3351
Postage stamps for inland revenue, 3737
Registration fee, 3347, 3732-44
Express companies and, 3744
Statutes, proposed revision, 3821

Business Profits Tax 2489. See also Budget; Revenue Bills; Taxation

Business Profits War Tax Act amdt Bill, res., 3111; 1r., 3117; 2r., com., 3229; 3r., 3237

Butter.. See Dairy; Oleomargarine
Cold storage, in, ques. 543, ques. 807
Oleomargarine and, food values, ques. 2720

Buttons, Soldiers', unauthorized wearing of, 4020

Butts, Mr. Robert H. (Cape Breton South and Richmond)
Franchise Bill
Contributions, 1197
Conveyances, 787
Provincial voters' lists, 2326-31
Hudson Bay Railway, 4243
Indemnity of members, 4089
Inverness coal, 4241
Masters and mates, 575
Newfoundland, 4242
Trade, and the Sydneys, 876
Prohibition, 102
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3198-9
Shipbuilding, 646
Iron industry and, 900

By-Elections.. See House of Commons

Cabana, Mr., K.C., 3227

Cabinet Organization and Representation, 32, 40-1, 138
Blondin, Hon, Mr., 57. See also that title.
Changes, 447
New Brunswick, 110

Cadet Corps. See Militia

Cahill, Mr. Frank S. (Pontiac)
Appeal from ruling of Chair, 1071; withdrawn, 1072
Auditor General's report, 2179
Bonds, tax exempt, 3338-9
British Columbia Indians, 950-4
Canada Grain Act, 3823
Canadian National Railways; deficit and rates — construction — colonization — townsites — Mackenzie and Mann — contracts for management—equipment —finance—insurance of property, 4181-94

Cahill, Mr. Frank S.—Con.
Canadian National Railways—Con.
Coal purchases, 2380, 4251
Deficit, maintenance, 890-1
Estimates, discussion of, 4249, 4257
Extensions, 3380-1
Information, withholding of objected to, 1655, 1669
Insurance, 4257
Ties, 4250-1
Car shortage, 883, 886
Transcontinental, ques. 999
Civil Service, 3140, 3146-7
Bonus, slide masters, 1279.
Holidays, 4061
Colonization, 2399, 4182
Dredging, 1619
Excise tax (10 per cent) 3467
Filing cases, 3155
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1935-43
Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, 1071-2
Election expenses, 1932-3
Qualification of electors, 2243
Government annuities, 462-3
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition Bill, 1308, 1486, 1503
Arbitrators, 1047
Branch lines, 1314-7
Hanna, Mr. D. B., suit for libel, 2379
Housing, 3545-52
Soldiers, and, 3545-6
Indians
Enfranchisement, 4038-9
Lands, 3274
Kapuskasing and Spirit Lake, 2398-2401
Militia, 3974-80
Oleomargarine, 959
Ottawa River conservation, 3779
Peat, ques. 671
Penitentiaries, purchasing agent, 3840
Post Office Department, 3740-1
Question—complaint of unsatisfactory answer, 1047
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3203
Royal Military College, 3153
Scottish Canadian Insurance Corporation, 584
Shipbuilding, 645, 3992, 4004, 4010-16
Special War Revenue Act Amdt.
Changes, when effective, 3338
Clothes, made to order, 4290
Statistical department, 3296
Steel and shipping merger, 1956-7, 4010
Timiskaming Lake, wharves, 2187-8, 3493
Trust and Loan Company of Canada, 585
Yukon Placer Mining, 3109

Calder, Hon. James A. (Minister of Immigration and Colonization)
Canadian National Railways and Canadian Government Merchant Marine—withholding of information justified, 1671-4, 1683
Civil Service Retirement, 2178-9, 3824-40, 4062-8, 4460-6
Grievances and appeal, 4460
Conner, Mr. James, 419
Distressed Canadians abroad, 4559
Exhibition Commissioner, 4558-9
Franchise Bill
Advance Polls, 1938-40
Ballot boxes, expense of returning, 1927
Provincial lists, 3889
Voters' lists, 2423, 2434-7
Voting notwithstanding disqualification, 1825
Immigrants, landing of at Montreal and Quebec, 3226-8
Immigration and Colonization Department, 4556-9
Imperial ex-Service men coming to Canada, 387
Income tax—charities, 3248
Mennonites, 2179, 2248
Militia, permanent force, 3210
Pensions Bill
Approved by Com. 4041
Canadian in French forces as reservist, 4048
Pensioner resident outside of Canada, 4045-6
Returned soldiers' insurance, 4054-6
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4012
Soldiers' dependents in Britain, 4556

Caldwell, Mr. Thomas W. (Victoria and Carleton, N.B.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 118. Union Government, 118; Production and Protection, 119; Farmers and Customs tariff—Board of Commerce, 120; Victoria and Carleton by-election, 121;
Budget, 2823. Ford car prices, 2823; Mr. Meighen on the tariff—the farmers' tariff policy, 2826; Mr. Fielding's amendment, 2827; the new taxes—export duty on newsprint, 2827; United States' manufacturers and Canadian prices, 2828; agricultural implements, prices, 2829; direct taxation, 2830; Victory bonds, 2831; St. John and Quebec Railway, 2832; new party, its name and policy, 2834; potato growing, 2835; farmers and prices, 2837

Caldwell, Mr. Thomas W.—Con
Campaign funds, 1222
Canadian National Railways
Damage claims, 4230
Demurrage—"bunched" cars, 4229-30
Maine Central connection, 3376
Rates, 1445
Westfield Beach, ques, 508, 4230
Canadian Pacific Railway, taxation, ques. 1360
Carleton and Victoria election, 121, 1223
Farm labour, 1220
Ford car, 119, 2823
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1933-5
Ballot and counterfoil, 1105
Election expenses, 1931
Election papers, 1928
Indians, 2055
Hours to be open, 1920-3
Residence, 1159
Voters' lists—delay, 3903
Grand Trunk Acquisition Bill, 1305, 1445, Stock, ques. 590, 753, ques. 1362
House of Commons, discussions, difficulty in hearing, 4055
Pensions and Re-establishment, 434, 3942, 4049
Potatoes exported, ques. 1360
Returned soldiers, 515
Pensions, 516
University students, 519
St. John and Quebec Railway, ques. 1036
Soldier settlement, 516, 2136-7, 2150, 3218
Special War Revenue—boots, 3563-5, 3585

Campaign Funds. See also Dominion Franchise Bill, contributions
Res. (Mr. Burnham) to prohibit, 1182

Campbell, Mr. J. A. (Nelson)
Budget, 3045. Direct taxes approved—luxury taxes, fees, 3045; canoes—difficulty of collecting tax—tariff, 3046; tariff situation in England—trade policy for Canada, 3047; farming not to be handicapped, 3048; mining machinery should be free of duty—Prairie provinces and their natural resources, 3049
Canadian motor car plants, ques. 1201
Canadian National Railways
Townsites—equipment, 4191
Western branch lines, 4232
Canoes, tax on, 3588
Economic Development Commission, ques. 1896
Franchise Bill—telegraph, communications by, 1068

Campbell, Mr. J. A.—Con.
Hudson Bay Railway, ques. 806, 4231-3
Completion, Res. in favour of, 2014
Natural resources prairie provinces, ques. 995, 1047, ques. 1461
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3195-6
Special War Revenue—furs, 3792
Trent Canal, ques. 1359
Welland canal, ques. 1358

Campbellton-Cross Point, ques. 411, ques. 1789, ques. 2415
Bridge and ferry, ques. 342, ques. 3490
Steamer service, ques. 588

Canada and United States. See that title under League of Nations; Washington, Canadian representative,

Canada Gazette, ques. 2179

Canada Grain Act Amdt Bill, Res. 3684, 3822; 1r., 3824; 2r., com., 3r., 4459

Canada Highways Act, ques. 1119
Ontario, 1046
Operation of, ques. 802
Payments under, ques. 806

Canada Shipping Act Amdt. Bills:
1. Masters and Mates. Res., 406; 562; 569; 1r., 576; 2r., com., 979; 3r., 1047
2. Pilotage. Res. 1405, 1839; 1r., 1839; 2r., com., 1967; 3r., 1968
3. Sick and Distressed Mariners. Res., 1628, 2251; 2260; 1r., 2267; 2r., 3099; com., 3103; 3r., 3105, Sen. amdts. 4056
4. Steamboat Inspection. Res. 855, 1050; 1r., 1052; 2r., com., 1762; 3r., 1776

Canada Steamships, Limited. See Debate on Railway Act Amdt
Hanna, Mr. D. B. and, 1742, 1789

Canada Temperance Act, ques. 807. See also that title under Dominion Franchise
Expenses under, 4559

Canada Year Book, 1879

Canada's National Status, 91, 156, 465. See also League of Nations; Peace; Washington, Canadian Representative at Empire, and, 359

Canadian Council of Agriculture. See also Farmers.
Platform, 125, 2954
Recall, 2052
Tariff, 2907
Vessel rates, resolution, 1717

Canadian Expeditionary Force. See Soldiers; War

Canadian Explosives Company, 2247-8

Canadian Forestry Association, 3285

Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 622, ques. 921, ques. 921, ques. 996. See also Canadian National Railways; Shipbuilding; Vessels.
- Annual report, 2311
- Answers to questions, 1649
- Business statement 903, ques. 921, 950, 1650, 1677, 1681
- Captains, ques. 1624
- Civil Service Insurance—Naval Service, and, 1779-80
- Coal, ques. 1115, ques. 1623
- Crews, 641
- Earnings, ques., 1359. See, under this title, Business
- Freight rates, ques. 2009
- Inland navigation and, ques., 2572
- Insurance on vessels, ques. 1511, ques. 2011
- Loading and unloading, ques. 1623
- Operation, 641-5
  - Freights, 646
- Shareholders, directors, investment, ques. 2011
- Vessels
  - "Canadian Inventor," 3226, 3359
  - "Canadian Recruit," 648, ques. 1199
  - "Canadian Sealer," 649
- Withholding of information debated, 1649

Canadian Government Railways. See Canadian National Railways

Canadian Manufacturers' Association
- Appeal to Supreme Court, M. (Mr. Devlin) for papers, 321
- Vessel rates, communication on, 1728

Canadian Mission in London, ques. 410

Canadian National Railways. See also Grand Trunk; Canadian Northern
- Brudenheim branch, 4250
- Canadian currency and United States lines, ques. 341
- Canadian Government Merchant Marine. See that title.
- "Canadian Government Railways," defined, 4219
- Canadian National Railway Company, 345
- Car haulage cost, ques. 2313, ques. 2413
- Car shortage—Transcontinental—ques. 999
- Cars, 4184
- Chaudiere station, ques. 508
- Coal purchases, 2380
  - Contracts—details, 4251-6

Canadian National Railways—Con.
- Colonization, 4182, 4197
- Community centres, 4198
- Construction betterments, 4181-2
- Construction and organization, ques. 510
- Damage claims, delays, 887
- Deficits, 4181, 4201, 4203
- Demurrage, "bunched" cars, 4229
- Duplication, 4196
- Earnings, 4185
- Eastern branch lines, 4247. See also that title under Reid, Hon. J. D.
- Electric systems, ques. 1510
- Engine repairs, ques. 3079
- Equipment, 4185, 4191
  - District east of Edmonton, 4250
- Express companies and, ques. 801
- Finance, 4186
- Fire insurance, ques. 1623
- Grand Trunk Railway, 11, 37, 92, 866, 4579,
  - Montreal, improved entrance, ques. 413
- Hudson Bay Railway, 4231. See also that title.
- Incorporation, ques. 2012
- Information, withholding of, debated, 1649, 4195
- Insurance, 4257
- Intercolonial Railway
  - Moncton office, 4206, 4220, 4248
  - Pensions, ques. 313, ques. 509, ques. 589
  - Rivière Ouelle service, ques. 997-8
- Inverness Railway, 4236-49
- Mackenzie, Sir William and, ques. 1628
- Mackenzie and Mann, 4184, 4191
- Management and directorate, 4183, 4189, 4190, 4194
- Ministerial statement by Hon. J. D. Reid 859. Passengers and freight, 860; operating costs, 861; labour conditions, 861; betterments, 861; construction programme, 1920, 863; rolling stock, 863; rates, 864; Grand Trunk, 866; Hudson Bay Railway, 867; Operating costs—details, 867-9
- National Transcontinental, 4199
  - Car shortage, ques. 999
  - Champlain market site, motion, 2015
  - Rentals, ques. 1461
- Official and private cars, ques. 409, 4220, 4247
- Operation—goods imported from United States, ques. 998
- Orangedale-Cheticamp, 4263
- Political patronage, 4194, 4221
- Prince Edward Island Railway, 891, 4210, 4245

Canadian National Railways—Con.
Quebec, Oriental and Atlantic, consideration of acquirement of, ques. 507
Rates, 4181, 4187, 4203, 4207
Riviere du Loup workshops, ques. 315
Roadbed, 124
Service, 100
Standard time, ques. 588
Steamships and, 897, 904, 915
Claimed to be necessary, 653, 658. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Ties—list of contracts, 4250-1
Toronto Eastern, ques. 1004
Townsites and subsidiaries, 4183, 4191. See also Cahill, Mr. F. S.; Hanna, Mr. D. B.
Victoria—Arthabaska, ques. 4502
Western branch lines, 4231. See also that title under Reid, Hon. J. D., Canadian National
List of, 4232
Westfield Beach, ques. 508, 4230
Westmount-St. Henri gatekeepers, ques. 998

Canadian National Railways Bill. 1r. 2842; 2r., 3085; com. 3375-9; 3r., 3395

Canadian News Service at Washington or New York, ques. 414

Canadian Northern Railway Company
Bonds guaranteed by province of Alberta, ques. 2180
Liabilities, ques. 2011
Neuville station, ques. 2721
North Bay, right of way through, ques. 3619
Port Arthur terminals, ques. 2012
Private cars
Mackenzie, Sir William, ques. 2572
Mann, Sir Donald, ques. 2183
Quebec lands, ques. 1626, ques. 2008
Report, 2311
Securities, ques. 2006
Toronto Eastern; Toronto Suburban, ques. 2080

Canadian Northern Town Properties Company, 2379

Canadian Pacific Railway Company
Burbidge-Messines station, ques. 2721
Freight tariffs, ques. 2010
Taxation
Business profits, ques. 1360
Special taxes, ques. 1360

Canadian Press Limited, 4532

Canadian Railway War Board, ques. 508

Canadian Reconstruction Association, 178, 677

Canadian Representative at Washington. See Washington

Canadian Wheat Board, 156, ques. 799, ques. 801, ques. 2182, 3402. See also Commercial Feeding Stuffs, Winnipeg Grain Exchange; Wheat; Canada Grain Act.
Continuation of, ques. 3294
Protest against reappointment of, 3561
Young, Mr. F., ques. 2313

Canadian Wheat Board Bill. Res. 3863, 4098, 4323; 1r., 4136; 2r., 4341; com., 4343; 3r., 4358
Cars, 4357
Imports and exports, control of, 4352
Losses, possible, 4325
Mill feeds, 4343, 4353. See also Commercial Feeding
Oats and barley, 4357
Personnel of Board, 4343

Canadianizing Foreigners. See Alien Immigrants.

Canadians in Imperial Service, 857

Canals
Lachine, 3423, 3561
Highway, 3778
Trent, ques. 1359
Welland
Highway, ques. 1200
Work on, ques. 1358

Canners. See Board of Commerce

Cannon, Mr. Lucien (Dorchester)
Appeal from ruling of the Chair, 3664
Canadian Aviation Corps, ques. 1359
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, ques. 921; ques. 921
Loading and unloading, ques. 1623
Civil Service
Bonus, 1284,
Holidays, 4057-8
House of Commons staff, 1042
Retirement, 4063-5
Senate staff, 4058
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. (U.S. Soldiers) 1233
Education, two languages, 287
Food and Drugs Bill, 1257-9, 1266-8
Franchise Bill, 773
Aliens—certificate, 2070, 2083-90, 2232-4
Bribery, etc., 1156-7
Canada Temperance Act, 2053
Contributions, 781-2

Cannon, Mr. Lucien—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Disqualification
Charitable aid, those receiving, 1816-7
Criminals, 1820
Election officers, 1075-8
False statement, made to affect election, 1067
Indians, 2055-6, 2087-8
Misfeasance, etc.—penalty, 1074-5
Non-electors and non-residents, 784
Point of order—school system, 2283
Proclamation, language of publication, 2287-9, 2306
Returning officers, disqualification of, 1073-4
Public officials, 1795-8, 1804-6
Telegraph, communications by, 1068
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1238, 1244-5, 1250-3, 1493-1500, 1505
Strike of 1910, 1549
Hurons of Lorette, 1152, 2014
Indemnity of members, 4080
Indian Reserves, ques. 802
Industrial Disputes Bill—objection to 3r., 2200
Intercolonial, Rivière Ouelle Service, ques. 597
International boundary surveys, 3294
Levis drill hall, 3727
Maple products—"sucre de fresne," 1255
Militia
Active militia, allowances, 3663-7
Annual drill, 3678-82
Natural resources of western provinces, 3293
Parliament Buildings—French reporters' room, 1425-9
Peace treaties and League of Nations, 347-66
Pictou harbour, 2186
Points of order
Franchise Bill, 2283
Militia estimates, 3667
Relevancy, Cockshutt, Mr., remarks of, 3672
Portland, shipments by, 653-5
Post Office Department, 3740
Purchasing Commission, 1474-5, 1484-5
Rural mail carriers, 1283-4
St. John river water-powers, 3291
San Remo Conference, 1465
Shipbuilding, 642
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4016-7
Supply, interim vote, understanding concerning, 754-6
War equipment—guns, 3662-4
Wharves, 2123

Canso, Marine Hospital proposed, 2255

Canteen. See War

Cape Race, 2117

Capilano Bridge, 3778

Capital and Labour. See also Popular Unrest; Labour.
Readjustment of relations, 373

Capital Punishment. See Criminal Code

Caraquet and Gulf Shore Railway, 4217

Cardin, Mr. P. J. A. (Richelieu)
SS. "Three Rivers," ques. 1897
Sorel Government shipyard, ques. 2180

Carleton-Victoria
Election, 1223
Visit of Ministers to, ques. 409

Car Shortage. See Railways

Carvell, Hon. F. B.
Letter from—loading out of Fort William elevators, 565

Carvill, Mr. George, ques. 586, 4219, 4224

Casgrain, Mr. Pierre F. (Charlevoix-Montmorency)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 71. Economy—anti-democratic policies, 72; prices, cost of living. Board of Commerce—production, 73; tariff—resignations from the Government, 74; proposed general election, 75; peace and work—the Liberal party, 76
Aliens in detention camps, ques. 314
Bankruptcy Bill, trustees, ques. 2414
Biggar, Mr. O. M., K.C., ques. 1462
Bilingual stamps, ques. 314
Board of Commerce, ques. 592, ques. 1740
Canners, 1045
Motion for papers, 2013-5
Price Brothers, 1789
Report, date of, ques. 2012
Budget, 2808. Grain Growers and Canadian manufacturers, 2809; the Government and Socialism—Liberal party's fiscal policy—new taxes, 2809; income tax—financial conditions, 2810; business profits tax—moving pictures—tariff, 2811; Board of Commerce, 2812; war profits—national unity, 2813
Business profits war tax, ques. 314, ques. 2012
Canadian National Railways, 877
Car haulage cost, ques. 2313
Canadian Northern, ques. 2413

Casgrain, Mr. Pierre F.—Con.
Canadian National Railways—Con.
Incorporation, ques. 2012
Withholding of information, 1675
Canadian Northern Railway
Car haulage cost, ques. 2313, ques. 2413
Canadian Wheat Board, 4129
Carleton-Victoria, visit of ministers to, ques. 409
"Champlain," the, ques. 314, ques. 672, ques. 921, ques. 1121
Charlevoix-Montmorency
Bridges and highways, 3778
Customs officers, ques. 415, ques. 588
Lighthouse keepers, ques. 319
Pensioners, ques. 994, ques. 1358
Postmasters and mail carriers, ques. 320
Public works, ques. 590, ques. 592
Railway facilities and projects, 878
Wharf repairs, ques. 589
Criminal trials, correspondence, 2014
Franchise Bill, returning officers, 1591
French language, publications in, ques. 541
House of Commons calendar, 2005
French letters, replies in English to, 1045
French origin, Canadian of, ques. 1357
French speeches in House, translation of, 702
General election, cost of, ques. 587
Grand Trunk Railway Company, ques. 996
Lack of information complained of, 1450
Hydro-Electric, Ontario, 4172
Income tax
Earned and unearned incomes, 3309-10
Indemnity of members, 3310
Jellicoe, Lord, visit of, ques. 314
Labrie brothers, case of; also Mantezono, 3560
Lotbinière and Megantic Railway, ques. 590
Mackenzie, Sir William and Canadian National, ques. 1628, 2572
McNichol, Mr. J. L., ques. 994
Mann, Sir Donald, ques. 2183
Members' stenographers, salary of, ques. 2311
Montmorency public works, ques. 592
Naval Service, 4402
Ballantyne, Hon. Mr., reference to leader of Opposition, 4411
Newspapers, payments to, ques. 1114
Newsprint, ques. 994, ques. 588, ques. 589, ques. 2720
Export, ques. 1358, ques. 1114
Parliament Buildings, 1428-32
Parliamentary Secretaries, ques. 1036
Paroled prisoners, ques. 2005
Quebec and Saguenay Railway, ques. 506, ques. 672, ques. 1120

Casgrain, Mr. Pierre F.—Con.
Quebec and Saguenay Railway—Con.
Freight rates, ques. 589
St. Irenée, 3423
Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix, ques. 673
Rivière du Gouffre, ques. 1121
Russia, military expedition to, ques. 995
St. James by-election, 707
St. Joachim postmaster, ques. 1121
Ste. Anne de Beaupre wharf, ques. 506
Shipbuilding, 651
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill 3334
Tapley, W. H., and Baugh, E. L., 2015

Casselman, Mr. Orren D. (Dundas)
Budget, 2879. Repetitions in debate condemned—proposed general election, 2879; Government keeps its pre-election promises, 2880; Civil Service reform—mail carriers—Union Government and the farmers, 2881; Farmers' party platform, 2882; Opposition fiscal policy—tax on unimproved land—Union Government's successful policy and administration, 2883
Experimental farms, motion to adjourn debate, 1017

Cattle Embargo, ques. 340

Cattle Shippers and Government Vessels, 911

Caughnawaga, 3266

Censorship, 4556
Press, ques. 541
Regina library searched for banned books, 396

Census, the last, ques. 2009

Census and Election, 122

Cent Coin, ques. 2007

Central Vermont Railway, ques. 1035. See also Grand Trunk

Certificates of Service. See Canada Shipping Act (Masters and Mates)

Chabot, Mr. J. L. (Ottawa)
Mackenzie Avenue, Ottawa, ques. 999

Chair, Speaker's 3224-5

Chairman of Committees. See Deputy Speaker

Chambly Fort, 3769

Champlain Market Site, 2015

Champlain, Steamer. See that title under Vessels

Chaplin, Mr. James D. (Lincoln)
Budget, 2814. Messrs. W. C. Kennedy, McCoig and Pardee, and Canadian industries, 2814; Ford car prices, 2815; Farmers' platform, 2816; manufacturers and duties on animals, grain, coal, etc., 2817; boot and shoe industry—canning industry—"no trusts in free-trade England," 2818; present condition of British trade, 2819; iron and steel industry of Great Britain, 2820; United States and tinplate—"who pays the duty"? 2821; local conditions in Lincoln, 2822; freight rates as a form of protection, 2823
Food and Drugs Bill, 963
Income tax
Absentees, 3303
Shares of no par value, 3239
Newspaper postage, 3751-5
Welland canal employees, 3138-9

Charlevoix-Montmorency
Customs collections, ques. 588
Customs officers, ques. 415
Lighthouse keepers, ques. 319
Pensioners, ques. 994, ques. 1358
Postmasters and mail carriers, ques. 320
Public works, ques. 590, ques. 592
Wharf repairs, ques. 589

Chartered Banks. See Banks

Charters, Mr. Samuel (Peel)
Alien immigrants, 818
Departmental printing plants, ques. 1738

Cheese. See Dairy

Cheese Factories. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Cheques and Promissory Notes, taxes on, 2487

Cheticamp, life saving station, 2115

Chicoutimi, defaulters, ques. 409.

Child Labour, 368

Children and Income Tax, 2928, 3297

Chinese in Canada, ques. 805.

Chisholm, Mr. Alexander W. (Inverness)
Buoy service, 2116
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Captains, ques. 1624
Withholding of information, 1653
Canadian National Railways, 4236
Orangedale-Cheticamp line, 4239
Canadian Wheat Board, ques. 801

Chisholm, Mr. Alexander W.—Con.
Federal Emergency fund, ques. 998, ques. 1199
Grand Etang, 2114, 3779-80
Icebreakers, 1610
Illustration farms, 2390
Inverness railway, ques. 319, 4236
Lighthouses
Lighthouse Board, 2117-8
Lightkeepers' salaries, 2114
Margaree island, telephones, 2124
Marine department, 2121
Marine hospitals, 3554
Militia, headquarters staff, ques., 1511
Port Hood, 3159
Registration of shipping, 1614
Soldier Settlement, aid to fishermen, 1691
Wrecks, investigation, 1612

Chisholm, Col. H. A., ques. 3359

Chopped Feeds. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Choquette, Ex-Senator P. A., ques. 2572

Cimon, Mr., and Military Service Act, ques. 1461, ques. 1462

Cinematographic Films, tax on, ques. 3489. See also Moving pictures.

Civil Service. See also Civil Service Act Amdts. For departments see their titles
Additions to, 2642, 2675, 2941, 3005, 3145, 3408
Analysts and inspectors under Food and Drugs Act, 964
Appointments—soldiers serving in Bermuda, ques. 1461
Bonus, 1269, 3228
Cheques, preparation of, 1280, 1285
Lightkeepers, 2110
Regulations, 1274
Salaries and, ques. 2079, ques. 2311
Telegraph operators, 2182
Classification, ques. 84, ques. 505, 675, ques. 997, 1292, ques. 1624, 3769. For classification of the several depts. see their titles
Arthur Young Co. 592, ques. 1511
Effective from 1st April, 1919, 345, ques. 674
Experts and, ques. 2413
Inside service, 4019, 4172
Motions for papers:
Ethier, Mr., 592
Fripp, Mr., 544,
Secretary to executive, ques. 2181
Vote to pay increased salaries, 4546
Commission, ques. 997, 4563-7. For classification of the departments, see their Civil Service—Con.

Commission—Con.
titles. See also debates under Board of Commerce
Appointments by, ques. 311, ques. 320
Board of Commerce, and, 3426
Board of hearing, 3424
Cole, Mr. W. B., ques. 2898
Dominion land surveyors, ques. 1115, ques. 2006
Health Department and, 3543
House of Commons officials and, 4504
Positions, manner of filling, ques. 2006-7
Promotions and, ques. 2007
Putman, Mr., ques. 2414
Returned soldiers, ques. 2006-7
Returning officers—suggested appointment of by, 1803, 1808-9
Staff, ques. 1121, ques. 2414
Unrest due to, 4060
Dismissals and appointments, ques. 320
Appeals in case of proposed. See debates under Civil Service Retirement.
Efficiency through reduction of, 2662
Grievances, 3141
Griffenhagen and associates, investigation by, 3861, ques. 4521
Holidays, 4056, 4259
Inside service, ques. 510
Insurance. See Civil Service Insurance Bill
Members of, with war record, 3129
Reform, 42
Reorganization, 3735, 3738-43, ques. 3861. See also under this title, Classification.
Retirement fund, rate of interest, 459
Returned soldiers and, 19
Suggested disqualification as election officers, 1075
Superannuation, 391-4, ques. 920, 4266. See debates under Civil Service Retirement; Judges' Act
Pensions, and, 391
Peterborough employees, ques. 542
Taxation of income. See debates on Ottawa Agreement Bill
Technical officers, how to retain, 692
Temporary employees, ques. 415

Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 1r., 1112; 2r., com., 3128; 3r., 3161. Senate amendments, 4056, 4259, 4416.

Civil Service Insurance Act Amdt. Bill. Res., 949; 1054; 1r., 1229; 2r., com., 1779; 3r., 1781

Civil Service Retirement. Bill. 1r., 2178-9; 2r., 3824; com. 3840; 4062; 4460; 3r., 4466
Appeal, 4460

Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act Amdt. Bill (Rate of interest); Res. 459; 1r., 460; 2r., com., 3r., 581

Clark, Mr. Hugh (Parliamentary Secretary for the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment)
Franchise Bill, advance polls, 3876
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3939

Clark, Mr. Michael (Red Deer)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 161. League of Nations—economy and prices, 161; the Farmers' party, 162; classes and politics, 163; debate on the Address and debate on the Budget, 164; protection, profiteering and wages—rate of exchange and trade, 165; inflation and extravagance, 166; direct taxation, 167; Assiniboia by-election, 168; proposed general election—census of 1920 and redistribution, 169; unrest and disquiet, 170; what did men fight for? 171
Bureaucracy, 405
Budget, 2670. Return to the House of Sir Robert Borden, 2670; Mr. Fielding's amdt., tariff revision and stability of tariff, 2671, 2681-2; export trade and exports of agricultural products, 2673; Great Britain and free trade 2673; increasing income or lower expenditure—advances unaccounted for 2674; numerous Civil Service appointments—shipping subsidies—the new taxes. 2675, "a new species in the fiscal zoological garden," 2677; limits to teaching practice of individual economy, 2678; new taxes increase cost of living—income tax 2679; New Zealand and income tax, 2681; Progressive party and free trade, 2682; "army of emancipation" 2683; luxury taxes, 2684-5
Coal Operations Director Bill, 3372-4
Daylight saving, 3449
Export trade, means to promote, 626
Federal Bureau of Education, 1393
Fiscal policy of the Government, 583
Franchise Bill, 748
Aliens—certificate, 2208, 2223
Recall, the, 2033-4, 2045, 2052
Returning officers, 1800-1, 1806
Government annuities, 405
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1437-43, 1448, 1453

Clark, Mr. Michael—Con.
House of Commons—acoustics and audibility of debates, 345, 1417, 2317, 2081-2, 3952
Housing programme, ques. 707
Income tax, 3120, 3124
Charities, 3312
Exemptions on account of children, 3300
Incomes over $100,000, ques. 3490
Indemnity of members and salaries of Ministers, 4435
Judges' salaries and pensions, 4425-6
McKenzie, Mr., and Liberal leadership, 898
Militia—active militia, allowances, 3666-7
Naval service, 4395-9
Additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4381, 4389-90
Oleomargarine, 1785-6, 1848-53, 1855
Parliament Buildings, 1417, 1422-4, 1433
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3952
Committee—resignation of Mr. Peck, 2081-2
Public finance, economy in, 628
Point of order—Franchise Bill, 2223
Political prisoners, 1790
Race track betting, 3428-9
Saturday and morning sittings, 2783
Shipbuilding, 625, 647
Government programme ended, 905
Government vs. private ownership, 905
Profiteering, 898, 901
Subsidies, 899
Soldier Settlement, 2138
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Amendment, "Sales taxes," 3318, 3321-4
Changes proposed by Finance Minister, 3434, 3438, 3443
Collection, machinery for, 3325-7
Methods of—refunds, 3334, 3434-51
Progress of—retailers not collecting, 3479-80
Debate of Bill, arrangements for, 3454-5
Drayton, Sir Henry, reply to, 3448
Edwards, Mr., reply to, 3438
New taxes not "excise," 3316-8, 3321-4
Permanency of taxes, 3479
Returned soldier, exemption of—amdt (Mr. Lemieux) 3448
Steel and Shipping merger, 1948-54

Clements, Mr. H. S. (Comox-Alberni)
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 3876
Recall, the, 2042
Skeena and Comox-Alberni, 3868
Voters' lists, 2434
Fraudulent naturalization papers, ques. 4096
Opium and Drug Bill, 1755

Clements Mr. H. S.—Con.
Soldier Settlement, aid to fishermen, 1692
Vessel rates—shortage of ships, 1717-8

Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. See that title under Dominion Franchise Bill

Coal. See also Director of Coal Operations. See also Industrial Disputes
Edmonton Board of Trade resolution, 322
Inverness railway and, 4236, 4241
Prices, 321
Purchases by Government Merchant Marine, ques. 1115, ques. 1623
Supply of—M. (Mr. Lemieux) to adjourn House to discuss, 3685
See also Railways, Car shortage

Coal Operations, Director of
Orders-in-Council, ratification of, 3360
Orders of laid on table, 3225

Coal Operations Director Bill; 1r., 3106; 2r., 3175; com., 3185; com., 3360; 3r., 3690

Coasting Vessels. See Railway Commission; Railway Act Amdt

Cocagne, N. B. 3159

Cockshutt, Mr. W. F. (Brantford)
Address in reply to Governor General's speech, 96. Parliament Buildings—Peace Treaty and League of Nations, 96; Christian Church and the Forward movement, 98; popular unrest; record of Union Government, 99; trade, Canadian National railways, 100; labour situation; farmers' movement, 101 prohibition, 102; Quebec and the trade question—general election, 100, 104
Budget, 2840. Congratulations to Minister of Finance, 2843; the new taxes, 2843; income tax—deficit on National Railways—West Indies, 2844; Mr. Devlin and outrages on negroes in United States, 2845; trade conditions, 2846; Canadian surplus, British deficit; Britian's national balance sheet; Canadian Merchant Marine—Mr. Fielding's policy when Minister of Finance, 2848; comments on other speeches, 2849; tariff—parable of the farmers—United Farmers' platform, 2851; protection for farm products, 2852; "implement of production," 2853, income tax defaulters, 2854; farmer candidates in Brant—the labour man, 2855; Canada and United States, competition in manufacturing, 2857

Cockshutt Mr. W. F.—Con.
Canadian National Railways, Rates, 1453
Currency, coinage, 400
Eight-hour day, 377
Firearms, licenses, 3413
Franchise Bill
"Ecclesiastics," 1076-7
Polls—pencil, 1102
Franking privilege, 3765
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1451-4
House of Commons staff, 4547
Income tax
Accounting period, 3308
Charities, 3311
Dividends, when liable, 3304-6
Indemnity of members, 3311
Indians, Six Nations, 3278
League of Nations
Ames, Sir Herbert, statement by, 3979
Canada and the Empire, 491
Militia—Active militia—allowances, 3672-3
Newspaper postage, 3759
Oleomargarine, 1782, 1787
Opium and Drug Bill, 1750
Parliament Buildings, 1430
Peace treaty—Bulgaria, 490
Pensions, 429-35
Purchasing Board, 1479-82
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill, 3323, 3342-4
Automobiles, 3598
Boats, canoes, etc., 3591
Candy—maple products, 3593
Collection—method of, 3469
Food, 3617
Licenses, 3606-7
Manufacturers' agents, 3609
Overdrafts, 3798
Sales tax, 3794
Goods contracted for, not delivered, 3614
Stock transfers, 3800
War trophies, 4557

Coinage. See Currency.

Cold Storage, 2407-09
Butter in, ques. 543, ques. 807

Cole, Mr. W. B., ques. 2893

Collingwood, Marine hospital, 2255-56

Commerce, International Parliamentary conference on, ques. 2721

Commercial Feeding Stuffs Bills:
1. 1r., 617; withdrawn, 1290-1
2. Res. 2184; 3161; 1r., 3174; 2r., 3395; 3405; com., 3405; 3r., 3409

Commission of Conservation, 3286
Consulting Engineer, ques. 1002
Deputy Chairman, ques. 2573
Town Planning Adviser, ques. 1002

Compulsory Voting, 1062-4

Concurrence in supply, 3217, 4586

Connaught Rifle Range, 3728

Conner, James, dismissal of, 415

Conscription, 59. See also Military Service

Cooper, Col. John A., ques. 308, ques. 414

Cooper, Mr. Richard C. (Vancouver South)
Pensioner resident outside of Canada, 4052
Returned soldiers, provision for—motion for special com., 513
Soldier's buttons, unauthorized wearing of, 4020

Co-operation, 109

Copp, Mr. Arthur B. (Westmorland)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 195. Sir Thomas White as champion of the Government—proposed general election, 195; the farmers' movement — lower tariff — public revenue and private profits, 197; Franchise Act—Board of Commerce, 198; Union Government—illness and absence of Prime Minister, 199
Bankruptcy Bill, 3256-60
Board of Commerce, Murdock, Mr., letter of, 4479
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, information withheld, 1661
Canadian National Railways, 4195-6
Goods for use of, imported from United States, ques. 998
Extensions, 3390-2
Information wanted, 3392
Intercolonial—equipment deteriorated—scenery and opportunities for viewing it—train connections—need for local headquarters — political influence — superannuation allowances—Mr. George Carvill, former ticket agent, 4219-4228
Carvill, Mr. George, ques. 586, 4219
Cereal shipments, ques. 1626
Civil Service
Bonus, 1280
Putman, Mr., ques. 2414
Customs, rentals paid, 3858-9
Drill halls, 3148
Experimental farms—buildings, 3157-8, 3160
Flour, Canadian Shipments, ques. 1788

Copp, Mr. Arthur B.—Con.
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1937-9
Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, 1514-5
Candidate's consent, 1095
"Ecclesiastics," 1077
Oath by elector, 1102
Personation, etc., 1159
Polls, hours to be open, 1921-3
Provincial lists, 3893
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to 3r., 4366
Returning officers, 1576-81
Voting, manner of, 1104
Government steamers, wages, 1599-1600
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1506
Icebreakers, 2105-7
Maple products, 1255
Parliament Buildings, ques. 705
Furniture, 1421, 1427-8, 1434
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3956
Pensioners resident outside of Canada, 4048-9
Widowed mothers, 429
Post Office buildings, 3160
Re-establishment
Fishermen and loans, 4048
Students, 4048
Sackville public building, 3150, 3158
St. John district pension office, 1742
St. John harbour—pilots, 2119-21
St. John river wharves, 2122-3
Scammel, Mr. J. K., 3784-5
Shipbuilding, 643, 660
Material, importation, ques. 1114
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4013
Special War Revenue Bill, 3329-30
Bank overdrafts, 3799
Sales tax, 3615
Tender and contract, 3160
West Indies, trade with, 1884

Copper, 4513

Copyright Bill, 1r., 751-2

Corn. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Cost of Living. See High Cost. See also debates under Address; Budget: Board of Commerce

Coughlan Shipbuilding Company, 3360, ques. 3620

Courts, appeals from. See Supreme Court Act

Courts Martial, ques. 1359

Cowan, Mr. Walter D. (Regina)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 224. Union Government an honest government—democracy and democratic measures, 225; tariff, balance of trade, 226; tariff and prices—income tax, 227; tax on unimproved lands—war-time elections Act, 228; naturalization of aliens—Board of Commerce, 229
Canadian Northern Railway
Willow Bunch, Wood Mountain—western extensions, 3379-82
Coal operations, director, 3178, 3191
Experimental farms, 2390
Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2085
Voters' lists, 2433
Provincial, adoption of, 2337-8, 2340-1
Indemnity of members, 4094
Last Mountain river dam, 3788-9
Natural resources development, 1021
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 390, 394, 3198
Scientific research, 2167
Superannuation of public employees, 394

Crerar, Hon. T. A. (Marquette)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 143. New Parliament building, 143; parliamentary government — League of Nations and Canada's status, 144; monetary exchange and trade, 145; natural resources and production — tariff — wheat production, 147; pulpwood—the "Agrarian" movement—by-elections, 148; luxury and income taxes, 149; immigration, 150; franchise and citizenship, 151; proposed general election, 152
Agriculture—federal and provincial control, avoidance of duplication, 2386-7
Bridges and the provinces, 3777-9
Budget, date of, 2126
Budget, 2896. Criticisms of Progressive group, 2896; government control in wheat not desirable—operations of farmers' business organizations—Timiskaming by-election and One Big Union, 2897; expenditure should be reduced—new taxes, 2898; business profits and income taxes—the tariff, 2899; the Government and protective tariff, 2900—Great Britain's fiscal policy—Britain and Germany, 2901; British trade and foreign investments—tinplate industry, 2902; British industrial and social conditions, 2903; Crerar, Hon. T. A.—Con.

Budget—Con.
agriculture in Canada and Great Britain—inquiries into industries, 2905; result of the war, Britain and other countries compared, 2906; Canadian Council of Agriculture tariff policy, 2907; British tariff policy would apply advantageously in Canada—agriculture under disadvantages—textile industry, 2908; business combines and the tariff, 2909; Mr. Fielding's amendment, 2910
Canadian Wheat Board, 4119, 4348-54
Cold storage, 2407-9
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3166, 3400
Dairy industry, 2405
Dominion arsenals, 3719
Fox farming, 2410
Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2217, 2223
House of Commons
Audibility of debates, 2126, 2314
Two o'clock suggested as hour for meeting, 2781
Income tax—errors in returns, 3315-6
Indemnity of members and salaries of Ministers, 4434
Judges' salaries, 3853
League of Nations, 4319-20
Militia—active militia—allowances, 3660, 3671-2
Mineral deposits
Leases, etc., 3808-13
Tax on unused, 3810
Naval Service, additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4319
Retirement of members of public service, 3834
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3206-7
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3995
Special War Revenue Act Amdt., 3332-3
Bank overdrafts, 3799-3800
Collection, method of, 3483
Amdt.—taxes to be collected at source, 3484-7

Cressé, Mr. L. G. A., K.C., ques. 4502

Criminal Cases, appeals in. See Criminal Code

Criminal Code Amendment Bills:
1. Capital punishment. 1r., 308
2. French version. 1r., 2571; 2r., com., 3081; ref. to Spl. Com. 3106; 3r., 3488
3. Firearms; Use of Documents not sworn to; sexual offences; gambling; attempted rape; unlawful use of uniform; differences on appeal; Quebec

Criminal Code—Con.
change of venue; 1r., 2840; 2r., com., 3410; 3r., 3427; Sen. amdts., 4414
For details of debate see Doherty, Rt. Hon. C. J.

Criminals, alleged, removal from one province to another.
See Criminal Code

Cronyn, Mr. Hume (London)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech (Mover) 11. Parliament Buildings—Union Government—League of Nations, 12; thrift—public finance, 13; tariff commission — immigration — scientific research, 14; representation and government — re-establishment, 15; capital and labour—after-war condition, 16; race and religion—Canada, 17; Earl Grey's farewell message, 18
Income tax
Charities, 3311-4
Patriotic funds, 3244
Pensions Bill, 4043, 4050
Drafting in accordance with decisions of Com., 4041
Pensioner resident outside of Canada, 4044
Widowed mother, dependent parent, 4043
Pensions and Re-establishment Com.
Peck, Mr., resignation of, 2081
Report; M. to adopt, 3922. History of pensions increase, 3923; changes and present state, 3927; insurance, 3928; war service gratuities—Re-establishment, 3930; work of Com. 3931; in reply—unanswered letter, explanation, 3957
Printing additional copies, 4321
Pensions, widowed mothers, M. (Mr. Power), 428
Returned soldiers' insurance, 4054
Scientific Research—Com., Special, report of, 2154
Trust and Loan Company of Canada, 585

Crothers, Hon. T. W. (West Elgin)
Civil Service
Retirement of members, 4063-6
Superannuation, 391-2, 4268
Coal Operations Director Bill, 3368, 3375
Food and Drugs Bill, 959-60
Franchise Bill
Chief Electoral Officer—Biggar, Mr. O. M., appointment of, 4268-70
Returning officers, 1535, 1577-86
Voting notwithstanding disqualification, 1824-5

Crothers, Hon. T. W.—Con.
Grand Trunk strike of 1910 and pensions, 1126, 1349-51, 1541
Income tax
Charities, 3247-8
Suggestions, 3122, 3126
Industrial disputes, 2192-6
Judges' salaries and pensions, 4334-8, 4420-3
Opium and Drug Bill, 1641, 1646-8
Postmasters' salaries, 4526
Race track betting, 3427
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 391, 394

Crowe, Mr. S. J. (Burrard)
German and Austrian books, ques. 806
Shipping—sick and distressed mariners, 3104

Currency. See also Finance
Canadian, in United States, ques. 341
Copper—new one cent coins, 402, ques. 2067
Dominion notes and gold, ques. 588
Inflation, 107
Token money, 401
United States silver coins, 402

Currency Act Amdt. Bill (Coinage). Res. 399;1r., 402; 2r., com., 460; 3r., 462

Currie, General Sir Arthur, 3641, 3648, 3652-6, 3706, 3708

Currie, Mr. John A. (North Simcoe)
Balance of trade, 4329
Budget, 3053. Reduced tariff protection, 3053; Liberal-Conservatives and the Budget—how to secure greater markets—"jug-handled" free trade, 3054; home market for beef—effect of cotton duty in United States—Canadian conditions before protection—3055; danger of increasing purchases from United States—indirect and direct taxation—luxury tax and key industries, 3056; free trade agitation sectional—protection needed for glass, chinaware, silk spinning—tinplate—Canada's opportunity and how to meet it, 3057; resources, population, wise and paternal government—injurious effect of free trade agitation, 3058; Liberals and manufacturers—luxury tax opposed—socialists influence, 3059; free trade and public revenues—Adam Smith on sales tax, 3060—"Who pays the duty?"—a free trade Budget. 3061; "going to the country"—Mr. Fielding's amdt. 3062; national policy approved—not pledged Currie, Mr. John A.—Con.

Budget—Con.
to support present policy further than next session, 3063
Canadian National Railways
Canadian Pacific Railway, and, 3384
Deficit—rates, 3382-3
Extensions, 3383
Political patronage, 4222-3
Coal operations, director, 3175-6
Franchise Bill
Chief Electoral Officer, 1071-3
Disqualification of candidates, 1086
Naturalization—amdt. (Mr. Euler) to 3r., 4368-72
Polling divisions, 1520
Returning officers, 1530
Voters' lists, provincial, 2355-63
Franking privilege, 3356-8, 3762-7
Fuel Supply
Demurrage charges, 4328
Special powers for Railway Commission, 4327
Grain transportation charges, 2634
Grand Trunk strike and pensions, 1122, 1131, 1138, 4511
M. to restore pension status, 1122
House of Commons Staff, classification, 1041-4
Income tax
Deficits and losses, 3241
Patriotic and charitable funds, 3245-8
Stock dividends, 3238
Surplus revenues, 3252
Inland revenue, spirits, 3816
Luxury taxes—United States, in, 2528
National defence, 4303-5
Newspaper postage rate, 3351
Catalogues and parcels, 3356
Newspapers and propaganda, 4378
Parliament Buildings, 1420
Pensions Committee
Report, printing, 4321
Resignation of member of, 1085
Printing, Joint Com. on, 4257-8, 4321-2, 4503-6
Quebec's ancient fortifications, 425-6
Sick and distressed mariners, 2256
Soldier settlement—fishermen, 3220
Steel and shipping merger, 1960
Toronto
Letter carriers, 345
Militia property, 3728-31
Wealth, taxation of, 2527
Workmen's compensation Act and seamen, 2263

Customs. See also Customs Tariff
Automobiles, smuggled, ques. 807

Customs—Con.
Brokers, 3716
Department
Employees, ques. 317
Rumoured investigation by U.S. firm, 3491, 3623
Salaries, 3858
Duties, basis of estimates, ques. 1788
Entries and exchange rates, 109
Franco-Canadian tariff Convention, ques. 3684
French Treaty. See that title
Imports for 1919, ques. 2182
Textile imports, duties on, ques. 1899
War duty, removal of, 2489, 3110

Customs Act Amendment Bills
1. Importation of Firearms. Res. 616; 1r., 617; 2r., com., 3r., 1048
2. Export Regulations. Res. 3620; 1r., 3623; 2r., Ref. to Special Com. 3690; Report of Com. that Bill be not further proceeded with, 4504

Customs Tariff Act, 1907. Amdt. Bill. Res. 3110; 1r., 3111; 2r., com. 3174, 3r., 3229

Dager, Herman J., ques. 2182

Dairying Industry, 2403. See also Board of Commerce; Commercial Feeding Stuffs; Oleomargarine
Butter, prices, ques. 807
Feed, 605
Grading Export Butter and Cheese
Res. (Mr. Edwards) moved, 592; withdrawn, 614
Production records of cows, 1014
Products, quality of, improvement in, 599-607
United States market, advertising in, 601

Daly Building, Ottawa, ques. 1200

d'Anjou, Mr. Joseph E. S. E. (Rimouski)
Active militia—allowances, 3659
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 81. Tariff, duty on Government to formulate a policy, 81; Quebec representation in the Cabinet—Hon. Br. Blondin—French language—Quebec province and the Government, 82; Franchise, 83; popular unrest—Printing Bureau dismissals and Civil Service classification, 84; proposed general election, 85;
Board of Commerce, prices, 1151
Budget, 2568. Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) approved—defence of the farmers, 2568; public debt, 2569; economy and encouragement of agriculture, 2569; production and consumption — railway policy, 2570; Union Government and election, 2571;
Experimental farms, 1016, 2384
Franchise Bill—Proclamation, language of publication, 2309
French speeches, translation of, 699
Militia headquarters officers and service at the front, ques. 506
Naval Service, additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4400
Universal military training, 942

d'Anjou, Mr. Joseph E. S. E.—Con.
Budget—Con.

Daughters of Canada, 244, 396

Davidson, Mr. A. L. (Digby and Annapolis)
Dominion Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1936
Returning officers, 1523-4, 1580, 1588
Voters' lists, provincial, 2327-38
Naval Service Dept. estimates—agreement as to debate, 4409, 4412

Davis, Mr. Fred Langdon (Neepawa)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 106. New Parliament Building—taxation, increased, needed, 106; Civil Service and returned soldiers—inflation of currency—public revenues and expenditure, 107; Parliamentary control and its methods, 108; customs duties and exchange rates—profits, prices and co-operation, 109
Budget, 3023. New taxes and the business outlook—public finances, 3023; reduction of expenditure—Committee on estimates, 3024; Government should watch mergers—Budget supported—controversy on protection or free trade, Germany and Great Britain as examples—taxes probably to be revised, 3026
Coins, Canadian and American, 461-2
Franchise Bill
Ballot boxes, expenses of returning, 1927
Contributions, 1186
Misfeasance—penalty, 1075
Non-electors and non-residents, 786
Oath, administration of, 779
Polls, hours to be open, 1926
Proclamation, language of publication, 1834
Recall, the, 2035
Soldier land settlement, 2148
Special War Revenue Act Amdt Bill
Collection, method of, 3477
Ethyl alcohol, 3603-4

Daylight Saving, 1084, 1574

Debates. See House of Commons

Debt, National, ques. 309, 2478

DeCelles, Mr., 114, 210
Superannuation, 2968, ques. 3489

Déchène, Mr. Aimé Miville (Montgomery)
Budget, 2946. The new taxes, 2946; manufacturers and their products, 2947; rural population and its problems—new ideas in farming—votes for experimental farms and for Department of Agriculture generally, 2948; demonstration farms and local demonstrators in Quebec—well-being of the farmer the country's safest asset, 2951
Butter and cheese grading, 599
Canadian National Railways
Electric systems, ques. 1510
Express companies and, ques. 801
Civil Service
Bonus, 7191
Classification, ques. 1624
Quarantine station operators, 1281
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3169-70
Food and Drugs Bill, 1258, 1262
Franchise Bill, fees—statement to be in box, 1927
French speeches in House, translation of, 703
Government employees at Sorel, ques. 1199
Government steamers, 1604-6
Grosse Isle, public works, ques. 343, ques. 344
Maple products, 1255, 1258
Naval Service, 4406
Public loan, ques. 810
St. Lawrence dredge, 1616-20
St. Regis Indians, ques. 799
Toronto Eastern Railway, Toronto Suburban Railway, ques. 1004, ques. 2080

Defaulters. See Military Service

Delinquents. See Juvenile Delinquents

Delisle, Mr. Michel Siméon (Portneuf)
Icebreakers, St. Lawrence channel, ques. 317

Demers, Mr. M. J. (St. Johns and Iberville)
Bank interest, 992
Blue books, language in which published, ques. 992, ques. 1004
Budget, 2708. Balance of trade, 2708; cost of living—economy, 2709; protection and its effects, 2710; development of natural industries, 2711

Demers, Mr. M. J.—Con.
Bulgarian Peace treaty, ques. 316
Canadian Expeditionary Force, numbers, ques. 315
Commission of Conservation
Engineer, ques. 1002
Town Planning Adviser, ques. 1002
Farmers' Account book, French edition, ques. 315
Franchise Bill
Polling divisions, 1517, 1520
Polls, hours to be open, 1920
Registrars, 720
League of Nations, Canada's contribution, ques. 316
Mines department, ques. 672
Naval Service, 4401-2
Newsprint Controller, ques. 315
Ottawa new public building, ques. 1002
Quebec city mail deliveries, ques. 591
Rural mail carriers, ques. 591
Smith, Mr. J. E., ques. 2722
Vancouver dry dock, ques. 316

Demobilization, 19, 53, 4550, 4556, 4585. See also War Bonds; Reconstruction; Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment

Demobilization Appropriation Bill. Res. 4137. (See War Bonds, Over-subscriptions.)

Demobilization Vote—Housing and, 3545

Denis, Mr. Jean J. (Joliette)
Budget, 3043. Late sittings of the House—congratulations to Minister of Finance—tobacco duties, 3043; national emergency and the Budget—revenue and expenditure, 3044
Business of the House, state of, 3216
Canadian National Railways—stations, 891
Criminal Code Amdt. (French version) 3083-4
Dairy industry, 2403
Exhibition Commissioner, 4558-9
Fertilizer, freight rates on, 2407
Food and Drugs Bill, 960
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1940-3, 3875
Ballots and ballot boxes, 1097, 1104
Deposit, 1093-5
Disqualification
Candidates, of, 1088-9
Electors of—charitable support, those receiving, 1812-7, 1997
1812-7, 1997
Interpretation, 1987
"Candidate," 1985
"During an election," 1985-6

Denis, Mr. John J.—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Nomination,
Place of, 1092-3
Postponement of, 1096
Polling divisions, 1516-9
Reading of clauses in Com., 1919
Returning officers, 1528-30, 1574-5, 1585-8
Public officials, 1802-4, 1809
Votes for informal candidate, 1096
Voting on certificate, 1099-1100
Women voters, 2418-9
Married, names how listed, 1827, 3869
General election, deposits lost, ques. 922
Grand Trunk Railway Acquisition Bill, 1303, 1317, 1357, 1435, 1442-3, 1449-50
Strike of 1910 and pensions, 1553
Gold shipment to New York, 181
Icebreakers, 1602
Income tax
Additional information, demand for, 3302
Checking returns, 3128
Multiplicity of laws, 3315
Overpayment, 3254
Those who did not make reports, 3118-21
Interim Supply Bill, 3216
Judges' salaries, 3851
Moving pictures, 3627
National defence, 4302
Naval Service, 4300-5
One-cent coin, ques. 2007
Parliament buildings, 1423, 1427
Railways—public ownership rates, 1442, 1449
Royal Military College, 3152-3
Scientific Research, 2162
Session of Parliament, time of, 3217
Shipbuilding, contracts, 894
Statutes, suggested revision, 3821
Supply, undue haste complained of, 4562
Supreme Court Act, 2389
Tobacco growing, 2383, 3819-20
West Indies Conference, 3860
Yukon, 3281-2

Departments of Government, reduction of, 4456

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees (Mr. George H. Boivin)
Rulings and Statements of
Adjournment—order to be maintained, 1838
Amdts., one at a time, 1819
Appeal from ruling as Chairman, put by him as Speaker, 3664
Appeal from ruling—statement of appeal questioned, 1327, 3664
Arrangements to facilitate business—Franchise Bill, 3903

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Bills
Amdts. to, order of, 2224-5
Involving charge on public revenue, 1513. See also, under this title, Motions
Com.
Clause cannot be re-opened after adoption, 1256
Com. and 3r. at same sitting, 1061
Discussion, subsection by subsection, 1935, 1943
Explanation of Bill only by unanimous consent, 396, 1685
Reading of section by Chairman, 584, 1254, 1919
Section adopted, amendable only on reconsideration, 2365
Sub-clause amended, clause not passed—further discussion, procedure in, 1744
Consolidation of two, 1234
Preamble, proposal to insert, 4155
Special Com., ref. to by House, not by Com. of the Whole, 1639, 2022
Title, discussion of details without motion irrelevant, 4466
3r.,
Immediately after amdt. in, Com. only by consent, 1256
Chair to be addressed, 2030, 2231, 3308, 3550
Debate closed, 1044
Debates—publication of matter not spoken, 447, 4251
Decorum—conversation, 2317-8
Denials, 1184
Documents re-read at same session, 2294
Explanation—section amended, 3391
Granby public building, 3149-50
House of Commons officials, 949
Interim supply vote, explanation—rule 17c, 755
Interruptions, 353, 1131, 1179, 2033, 2528, 2916, 3062, 3500, 4118, 4150
Cahill, Mr.—Sir Henry Drayton, 3339
Member may rise to ask permission to ask question, 2047
Member requested to give way, 3454
Questions, 286-7
Asked by permission, not in question form, 1719
Limited, 2562
May exhaust right to speak, 2568
Language
"Delusional insanity," 2732
"False statements," 3006

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Language—Con.
"Knows that the statement he has made is untrue" 3549
"You are trying to fool someone," 3550
Matters sub-judice—Labrie brothers, 3849
Members
Honour of—insinuation, 1186
How to be referred to, 2831
—"the hon delegate" 2032
Interrupted, but address not completed, holds the floor, 3520
Recognition of by the Chair, 2756
Whips' list of names, 3045
Resume seat when Chairman rises, 2042
Right to speak exhausted, 871, 1718, 3086
Motion to adjourn debate negatived, 2951
Speaking, may not interrogate others, 2042
Statement of, to be accepted, 1224, 2291-2, 2334
To keep the floor, must speak, 2242
Motions
Involving charge upon public revenue, 1513, 3587, 4052
Non-debatable—Com. rise, etc., 1044, 1082, 1585, 3617
Seconder not needed, 3587
To be in writing, 1263
Mover to close debate, 333, 419, 553, 1225, 3837, 3403
Indemnity of members—Sir Robert Borden, 4454
Negative motion, 1264, 1915
Nothing before the Chair, 1597
Notice of motion passed over, afterwards called, 703
Point of order
May be discussed, 2032
Right of member to raise, 1183
Previous debate, 1397, 1677-8
Privilege—question not to be raised, 2918
Quorum, count of members, 964
Relevancy, 394, 645, 648, 656-7, 864, 915, 985, 1060, 1313, 1317-8, 1692, 3140, 3401, 3474, 3491, 3545, 3627, 3663, 3667, 3849, 3996
Appeal (Mr. McMaster) from ruling, 1327
Budget resolutions, 3338
Canadian National Railways Bill, 3384-5
Car shortage, 1317
Doherty, Mr., and Irish question, 1496
"Excise" taxes, 3318
Explanation and request for instructions—Special War Revenue Act

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Relevancy—Con.
Amdt. Bill, 3455
Franchise Bill, 1064, 1071-3, 1176, 1196, 1197-8, 1932, 1935, 2223-31, 2294, 2327, 2334
Amdt suggested, not moved, 2337-8
Canada Temperance Act, 2053
Documents re-read, 2294
Personalities, 2048-50
Reconsideration of clause, 1997
St. Johns election, 2239
Schedule, discussion of, 1999
School system, 2283
Sermon, 1077
Gould, Mr., election of, 2038
Grand Trunk Railway Acquisition Bill
Section and schedule considered together, 1435
Strike of, 1910, 4511
Judges' salaries and indemnity of members, 3853
Militia estimates, 3656
Appeal (Mr. Cannon), not sustained, 3663-5
Militia—
Cockshutt, Mr., remarks of, 3673
Peck, Mr., remarks of, 3669
Tweedie, Mr., remarks of, 3667-9
Opium and Drug bill, 1746
Post Office, 3742-4, 4531
Reference allowed as for comparison, otherwise out of order, 3492 Unanimous consent to disregard rule, 2105
Ways and means, 915
Repetitions, 2286
Resolution, error in, 3628
Saturday night—time of adjournment, 4320
Six o'clock interrupts debate—procedure, 1034
Special War Revenue—questions, opportunity for, 3631
Suggestions to facilitate debate, Special War Revenue, 3564
Supply—motion for, limits of debate on, 872
Supply—reverting to previous item, 4565
Taxation—request for statement by Minister, 3597
Unanimous consent, 796, 1692, 1999, 2023, 2389, 3315, 3565
Latitude in debate, 2105
Reverting to former clause of bill, 1061
Stacey, Mr., on Indian Act Amdt., 4021
3r., of Bill immediately after amdt. in Com. 1256

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Vote called, debate closed, 2242
Vote in Com., rule as to counting, 3673
Desaulniers, Mr. Arthur L. (Champlain)
Batiscan bridge, ques. 317
Budget, 2623. Protest against existing government, 2623; reconstruction and economy—navy deficits—general election needed, 2624; popular discontent, 2625
Hennick, Daniel D. patents of, ques. 1510
Loans to foreign countries, ques. 318
Mail carriers, ques. 343
Quebec arsenal. ques. 3862
Desjardins, "Ti-Noir," ques. 315
Deslauriers, Mr. Hermas (St. Mary)
Batiscan river, ques. 1230
Board of Commerce, M. for abolition, 1139
Budget, 3072. Workingmen and taxes, 3072; Minister of Labour and labour policy, 3073; present social upheaval—central labour exchange—distribution of Government contracts, 3074; employment insurance and health protection—stick together, 3075
Enemy aliens, naturalization, ques. 992
Montreal wharves, ques, 674
Proportional representation, ques. 803
Destroyers. See Naval Service
Detention Camps, ques. 314
Detroit River
Liquor patrol, 2107, 2118
Devlin, Mr. Emmanuel B. (Wright)
Civil Service
Bonus, 1270-3
Classification, 1272
Coal Operations Director, 3177
Food and Drugs Bill, 959, 1259, 1268
Franchise Bill
Corrupt practices, 1161
Disqualification of candidates, 1085-6
Non-electors and non-residents, canvassing, 772, 785
Public officials, 1802
French speeches in House, translation of, 700
Georgian Bay Canal, 914, 3177
German war payments, ques. 310
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1300-1
Honey adulteration, 798
House of Commons staff organization, 567, 753, 1040
Indemnity of members, 4091
Indian lands, 790-1
Inquiry concerning questions, 2416
Devlin, Mr. Emmanuel B.—Con.
Jellicoe, Admiral Viscount, visit of, ques. 310
Manufacturers, aid to in appeals, 321
Natural resources,—Wright county, 3813
Naval Service, 707-9
Orders in Council, Government by, 2020
Peace treaty, 1060-1
Railway cars—Canada and the United States, 881-2
Returned soldiers, 538
Shipbuilding, 914
Expenditure, how to be met, 917
Special War Revenue
Liquor cabinets, smokers' cabinets and tea wagons, 3793
Tooth washes, 3793-4
West Indies—outrages on blacks in the United States, 2845-6
Director of Coal Operations. See Coal Operations
Distressed Canadians, relief of, 4559
Distressed Seamen. See Canada Shipping Act
Distribution Office, 1037
Divisions. See House of Commons
Divorce, 134
Divorce in Ontario and Prince Edward Island Bill, 1r., 1573
Divorce Cases
Remission of fees, 4321, 4413
Documents, not sworn to. See Criminal Code
Doherty, Rt. Hon. C. J. (Minister of Justice)
Administration of Justice, 3840-51
Labrie Brothers, case of, 3227, 3295, 3558-60
M. (Mr. Casgrain) for papers, 2014
Admiralty Act Amdt., 2842, 3086
Board of Commerce
Constitutional questions, 3685
Murdock, Mr., letter of, 4476
British North America Act, 4168-70, 4379
Motion for papers, 811-2
Campaign funds, 1227
Canada's national status, 474
Criminal Code Amdt (French Version) 2571-2, 3081-5
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 2840, 3410-3
Affidavit, pretended, 3414-5,
Marriage licenses, 3415
Age of consent, 3415
"Appeal Court" defined, 3410
Arrest on summoning of person outside province, 3417-8

Doherty, Right Hon. C. J.—Con.
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill—Con.
Courts of appeal—Supreme Court, appeal to, 3422-3
Firearms—weapons, 3410-15
Gambling, 3415-6, 3427
Petty thefts and jury trial, 3421
Quebec, change of venue, 3420-1
Race-track betting, 3427
Re-election by prisoner, 3419-20
Saskatchewan and Alberta, appeals in summary convictions, 3418-9
Senate amendments, 4414—collectors of fares, 4415
Sexual offences, 3416
Uniforms, etc., unlawfully worn, 3417-8
Criminal trials
Motion for papers re, 2015
Eight-hour day, 454
Exchequer Court Act Amdt., 2003, 2201-4
Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2064-73, 2233-4
Canada Temperance Act, 2053
"Ecclesiastics," 1076
"Hours of the day," "standard time," 1994
Misfeasance—penalty, 1074-5
Pollbooks to returning officer, 1078-80
Franking privilege, 3762-8
Grand Trunk Railway Acquisition Bill, 1298, 1316-21
Loans—amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 1536
Ratification of agreement, 1323-4
Strike of 1910, 1134, 1542, 1545, 1547-53
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) 1351
Habeas Corpus. See under this title Administration of Justice
Internment cases, 4517-8
Irish question, 1496
Judges' salaries, pensions, 3228, 3851, 4331-41, 4417-23
Juvenile Delinquents Act, 2842
League of Nations
Canada and the Empire, 484
Lennox, Mr. Justice, 1232
Military Service Branch, 4516-8
Naturalization
Alien enemy origin, 3920-1
Alsace-Lorraine, 3921
Certificate not issued, 3919
Oaths, administration of, 3919
Naturalization Act Amdt. Bill, 3682, 3915-21, 4416
Revocation of certificate, 3915-9
Newspaper postage rate, 3351
Pecuniary Claims Commission, 3858
Penitentiaries, 3409-10, 3858
Alberta, 3855-7

Doherty, Right Hon. C. J.—Con.
Penitentiaries—Con.
Dorchester, 3855
Portsmouth, appointments pending, 568
Purchasing agent, 3840, 3854-5
Penitentiary Act Amdt., 2848, 3409-10
Pension as ex-judge, 298-9
Personal position in relation to pension, 4423
Purchasing Commission, 4582-3
Quebec riots of 1918, 1211
St. James by-election, 707, 787
St. Peter river, floods, 859
Shipbuilding, contracts and tenders, 664-6
Stoneham, the late Finlay, 568
Supreme Court Act Amdt., 2003-4, 2315-8, 2389
Supreme Court reports, 3855
Washington, Canadian minister at, 2469-73

Dominion Alliance, 807

Dominion Arsenals, Quebec, 3717, ques. 3862

Dominion Canners, ques. 415. See also Board of Commerce

Dominion Franchise Bill, 1r., 338, 2r., 710; 756-775; com., 775, 1061; 1085; 1103, 1152, 1160, 1165, 1175, 1512, 1574, 1790, 1916, 1985, 2023, 2082, 2204, 2267, 2269, 2318, 2417, 3864, 4264; 3r., 4379
Amdts.—recorded divisions;
1. By-elections; 2. Provincial lists;
3. Naturalization; 4. Propaganda;
5. Publicity of contribution, 4360-79
Debate of Bill, arrangements for, 1072, 1166, 1198, 1837, 1944-5, 2417, 2430-2, 3901
Com. on forms, 2001
Non-contentious clauses, 776
Printing, copies of Bill, 704
Statement as to additions, 582
Translation into French, 1061
Sections and subjects discussed:
Accidents and errors—provisions in case of, 1110
Advance polls, 1162, 1933, 1998, 3864, 3873, 4271
List of, 3875
Agents and officers to vote, 1918
Aliens, 340. See also that title
Certificate, 2057, 2082, 2204
Amdt. (Mr. Euler) neg. 2224
Amdt. (Mr. Pardee) moved 2225-6, neg. 2242
Amdt. to 3r. (Mr. Euler) 4369; neg. 4373
Armed strangers, 1108
Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, 1513, 4269-70

Dominion Franchise Bill—Con.
Sections and subjects discussed—Con.
Ballots, 1097
Counterfoil and, 1103, 1104
Counting before opening of poll, 1101
Forgery or destruction of, 1098
Form of, black border, 1168
Not to be displayed, 1103
Ballot boxes, 1097
Custody of, 1928
Returning, 1927
"Blocking the poll," 1827
Bribery, treating, undue influence, personation, 1156
By-election, simultaneous, 1090-1
Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 4359-60 to 3r.
Campaign funds. See under this title Contribution
Canada Temperance Act, 1166, 1943, 2052, 3864
Candidates,
Consent, 1095
Withdrawal of, 1096
Canvassing by outsiders, 772, 786
Chief Electoral Officer, 339, 1070, 1075, 4264
Remuneration of—res. 4136
Report as to working of law, 1110
Salary, 1512, 4516
To retain papers, 1111, 1928
Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, 1069, 1198
Compulsory voting, 1062-4
Contributions, 781, 1169, 1930
Publicity of, amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King), 4272; amdt. (Mr. McMaster), 1171; neg. 1198; amdt. (Mr. Maharg) to 3r., neg., 4373
Conveyance of electors to polls, 786, 1061
Corrupt practices—disqualification, 1160
Counting and reporting vote, 1109
Definitions, 775
Deposit, 1091, 1095
Deputy returning officers, 1074
Disfranchisement, 731, 735, 738, 746, 748, 750, 757, 763, 765, 768
Disqualification—See also under this head, corrupt
Candidate, of, 1085, 4271
Electors of, 1996
Charitable aid, those receiving, 1812
Criminals, 1820
Returned soldiers exempted from, 1811, 1820
Voting notwithstanding, 1824
"Ecclesiastics," 1070, 1076
Election clerk, 1073, 1515-6
Election expenses, 1152, 1929. See also under this title Contributions

Dominion Franchise Bill—Con.
Sections and subjects discussed—Con.
Election expenses—Con.
Advertising, 1930
Proposal that Dominion treasury pay, 1197
Publicity of, 747
Return of by agent, 1155
Election officers, 1918
Fees and expenses, 3867, 4270
Taxation of, 1111, 1152
Persons disqualified for, 1075
"Election papers, 1928, 2023
Election return, 1110, 1928
Executory contracts void, 781
Expenses
Accounts, taxation of, 1929
Former general elections, 728
Or wages of voter, payment of forbidden, 1064
Personal, 1991
False, oath—penalty, 781
False statements—made to effect election, 1065
Fees, statement to be placed in box, 1926-7
Forms, 1166, 3868
Hindus who were soldiers, 1812, 1821
Interpretation, 1943
"Advance Poll," 1943
"Candidate," 1943, 1985
"During an election," 1985
"Election officer," 1987
"Elector," 1988
"Hours of the day"—"standard time," 1988, 1994
"List of voters," 1989
"Member," 1989
"Official agent," 1991
"Rural Polling Division," 1991-2
"Urban polling division," 1991
"Voter," 1993
Judges and elections, 721
Jurisdiction, 712, 725, 761
Married women's names—how listed, 1827, 3869, 4272
Misfeasance—penalty, 1074
Names not on list, 1926, 3877
Nomination of Candidates, 1090
"Electors" how defined, 1916
Place of, 1092
Postponement, 1096
Non-electors and non-residents, canvassing, 784-6
Notices, 777, 1169
Oaths, 779-81, 1102
Ontario, election laws amdt act, effect of, 3880-98
Ontario provincial voters' lists, 3880

Dominion Franchise Bill—Con.
Sections and subjects discussed—Con.
Orders in Council, repeal of, 776
Orientals, 1811, 1820
Paid propaganda—amdt. (Mr. McMaster) to 3r., 4374
Peace and good order, 1105
Liquor, 1108
Penalties, 1160
Personal registration of voters, rules for, 3901, 3907
Rules, 4272
"Plugging," 2350
Political contributions. See under this title Contributions.
Poll books to returning officer, 1078
Polls
Hours to be open, 1919
Pencil provided, 1102
When to be held, 1101
Polling divisions, 1516, 1811, 1995
Polling place—parties present, 1098, 1102
Additional, 1826
Population and status of place, 2320
Present laws, insufficiency of, 710, 724
Printers' name, 779
Proclamation—language of publication, 1918, 2267, 2277, 1828, (Amdt) Mr. Turgeon, 1834
Mailed to postmaster, 1080
Notices, etc., 2319
Provincial lists
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to 3r., 4363; neg. 4366
Jurisdiction, 339, 3889
Qualification of electors, 1811, 4271. See also under this title Aliens
Indians, 2055
Recall, the, 2023-5
Amdt. (Mr. Tweedie) 2023-5, neg. 2052
Recount by Judge, 1110
If judge fails to act, 1110
Registrar and enumerator, 1096
Registrars, 720, 728, 3899
Public officers, choice of, as, 722
Registration of voters
Interrogatories, 1167
Removing notices, 779
"Residence," 1159
Returning officer, 720, 759
Civil Service Commission, proposed appointment by, 1809
Duty on receipt of writ, 1516
Further duty of, 1096
Oath of, 1166
Rules for personal registration amdts. 3901
Rural municipalities, 339
Schedules, 1166

Dominion Franchise Bill—Con.
Sections and subjects discussed—Con.
Secrecy during poll, 1103
Staff and temporary assistance, 1073
Swearing in of names. See under this title Voters' list.
Swearing in voters, 721
Telegraph communications by, 1068, 1198
Time element, the, 728
Voters' lists, 2319
Corrections in, 1103
Married woman's name, 1827
New lists, 1825, 1997
Not necessary, 1826, 4272
Preparation of, 3878, 4271
Provincial, use of, 2417. See also under this title Provincial Voting
By mail, 1163
By proxy, 1162
Manner of, 1103
On certificate, 1098
War-time Elections Act, effect of, 711, 725, 734, 765
Women voters, 2418
Writs, 1073, 1166
Nomination—election—delay, 1092
To be addressed to returning officers, 1515

Dominion Land Surveyors. See Land Surveyors

Dominion Lands, acreage unsold in West, ques. 1118

Dominion Lands and Parks, 3283

Dominion Lands Act Amendment Bills
1. Alien Homesteaders. 1r., 704; 2r., 1048, 1233; com., 1233; Consolidated with Bill following
2. Soldiers of Associated Powers. 1r., 1113; 2r., com., 1233; 3r., 1235

Dominion Police. See Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Dominion Steamers, 1598

Dominion Steel Corporation, 623

Dominion Troops, Services of overseas, Resolution of thanks from British House of Commons, 1159

Dorval Military Property, 3727, 3731

Doughty, Dr., and war trophies, 4557

Douglas, Mr. James M. (Strathcona)
Budget, 2838. Tariff for revenue, 2838; income tax—manufacturers and farmers, and prices, 2839

Douglas, Mr. James M.—Con.
Franchise Bill
Counting and reporting vote, 1109
Oath by elector, 1102
Polling divisions, 1517
Polls, hours to be open, 1924
Returning officers, 1584
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1458
Rulings and statements as Chairman
Bills, printed in both languages, 3251
Soldiers Settlement Act—cattle branding, 1698
Special War Revenue Amdt. Bill
Bank overdrafts, 3798
Candy, 3592
Carpets and rugs, 3585
Hats, 3453
Jams and marmalades, 3796
Underwear, 3453-4, 3567

Douglas, Mr. John C. (Cape Breton South and Richmond)
Coal purchases by Canadian Merchant Marine, ques. 1115

Drayton, Hon. Sir Henry (Minister of Finance)
Auditor General's report, 458, 2179, 2390
Belgium, proposed credit, 583
Bonds, tax-exempt, 3339
Budget, inquiry as to, 1047
Budget, the, 2476. Exports and imports (aggregate trade) 2477; national debt, 2478; inflation, 2479; trade with Great Britain and with United States, 2481; revenue and expenditure, 1919-20 and estimated for 1920-1, 2483; Grand Trunk acquisition, 2484; luxury taxes, 2486; motor cars, liquors, sales, stamps, moving pictures, 2487; income tax, 2488; business profits tax—customs war duty removal, 2489; tariff, 2490; resolutions, 2492
Business profits war tax, 3111-7, 3229-37
Public utilities, 3230-7
Canadian National Railways and Canadian Government Merchant Marine—withholding of information justified, 1679-80
Civil Service
Bonus, 1269-71, 1279-89
Slide masters, 1279
Insurance, 1054-6, 1779-81
Retirement fund, 459-60
Currency (coinage) 399, 401
Exchange and, 461
Currency Act Amdt., 460-2
Customs Tariff Act Amdt. Bill, 3110-1, 3174

Drayton, Hon. Sir Henry—Con.
Demobilization. See under this title, War Loans
Gas and electricity, tax, 3111-4
Gold shipment to New York, 181
Government annuities, 402-6, 462-3
Income War Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 3118-28, 3237-55, 3296, 3316, 4288
Absentees, 3303
Accounting period, 3305-8
Additional information, demand for, 3302
Beneficiaries, 3309
Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and, 3306
Charities, 3313
Consolidation of laws, 3315
Deficits and losses, 3240-1, 3297
Delinquents, disputable assessments, 3118-27
Distraint of goods, 3304
Dividends, when liable, 3305-6
Earned and unearned incomes, 3309-10
Errors in returns, 3315-6
Estate accumulating in trust, 3243, 3309
Exemptions on account of children, 3297
Five per cent added, 3251-2
Graduated tax, 3126
"Householders," 3249, 3315
Indemnity of members and, 3306, 3310-1
Installments, 3301, 3253
Partnerships, 3252
Part payment with return, 3253
Patriotic and charitable funds, 3244-8, 3309
Penalties, 3303
Pensions, 3253
Refunds, 3301
Residence or investment outside Canada, 3249-51
Retroactive provision, 3304
Returns, 3253-4
Forms, in French, 1085, 1573
Stock dividends, 3238-40
Tax Bills delayed, 3125
Interim Supply Bill, 3215-8
Kingston Harbour works, 459
Loan Companies Act Amdt., 1776-1779
Mint, the, 615-6, 798
Newsprint shortage, 2967-8
Returned soldiers' insurance, Senate amdts., 4466
Returns and questions, 753
Scottish Canadian Insurance Corporation, 583-4
Session of Parliament, time of, 3217
Shipbuilding, cost of—not another popular loan, 917

Drayton, Hon. Sir Henry—Con.
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3988-4017, 4155-68
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Administration—cards of directions, 3480, 3791
Amdt. (Mr. Crerar). Taxes payable at source, 3483-7
Auctions, 3575
Automobiles, 3597, 3793
Bank overdrafts, 3624-5, 3798-3800
Beer used to make vinegar, 3604
Binder twine, 3623
Boats, canoes, etc., 3588-92
Boots, 3563-3585
Breakfast foods, 3795
Bric-a-brac, 3576
Candy, 3592-4
Caps, 3566, 3790
Carpets and rugs, 3585
Chandeliers, 3578
Changes made in resolutions, 3345
Clark, Mr. M., reply to, 3442-5, 3449
Date of coming into effect, 3607, 3629
Defended—precedent of 1896, 3444
Duties paid before, 3624
List and explanation, 3561-2
Chewing gum, 3594
Clocks and watches, 3574
Clothes, 3564, 4289-90
Collection,
Method of, 3465-8, 3458-9
Progress of—retailers and collections, 3479
"Consumer," how defined, 3795
Containers, 3633-4
Curtains, 3578
Debate of, arrangements for, 3454-6
Dresses, except silk, 3587
Duties paid before changes, 3624
"Excise and sale" and luxury taxes, 3316, 3319-20, 3465-8
Amdt. (Mr. Lemieux), exemption of returned soldiers, 3447
Explanation and answering of questions, 3326-35
Firearms, 3595, 3793
Food, 3616, 3795
Fountain pens, etc., 3577-8, 4289
Furniture, 3575-6
Gas and electric light fixtures, 3597
Glass, cut, 3569
Imports and manufactures, 3566
Instructions issued, 3791, 3480
Jams and marmalades, 3796
Jewellery, 3578-85
Licenses, 3581
Medals, 3585
Wedding rings, 3584, 3797

Drayton, Hon. Sir Henry—Con.
Special War Revenue Act—Con.
Lace, 3792-3
Lace and braid, 3574
Licenses, 3606-8, 4290
Small manufacturers, 3797
Liquor cabinets, smokers' cabinets and tea wagons, 3793
Merchandise not delivered on May 19, 3613
Moving pictures, 3627-8
Musical instruments, 3595-6, 3628-9
Oriental rugs, 3577
Overcoats, 3586
Paragraph by paragraph, consideration, M. 3487-8
Peas (split), etc., 3795
Penalties, 4290
Permanency of taxes, 3479
Plated ware, 3572
Playing cards, 3599-4000
Prices, how arrived at, 3790
Promissory notes, 3624
Proprietary medicines, 3600-6
Purses and pocketbooks, 3568
Real estate sales, 3796
Refunds, 3607-8, 3629-31
Ribbons, 3574
Sales taxes, 3608-17, 3794
Foods, 3616-7
Manufacturers' agents, 3610
Senate amendments, 4505-6
Silk fabrics, 3572-3
Silk kimonas, etc., 3790
Silk waists, 3632
Silks, 3563
Spirits and medicated wines, 3600, 3793
Sporting goods, 3569-72
Stamps, 4290
Stamp taxes, 3627, 3801
Stock transfers, 3625-6, 3800
Stockings, 3567
Tobacco pipes, 4289
Toilet ware, 3576
Tooth washes and powders, 3794
Underwear, 3568
Wedding rings, 3797
Wheat meal, 3796
Supply
Interim vote, 754-6
Taxation of mutual insurance companies, 2080
Trust and Loan Company of Canada, 586
Trust Companies, 855
Trust Companies Act Amdt., 1779
Victoria Shipowners (limited) 4584
War loans—oversubscriptions, 4137, 4180-1, 4287-8

Dredging, 3781-90

Drugs. See Opium and Drugs; Food and Drugs; Proprietary Medicines

Dry Docks, 4567
Vancouver, B.C., ques. 316, ques. 3620
Victoria, B.C., ques. 3619

Duff, Mr. William (Lunenburg)
Archibald, Col. Grassie, ques. 2007
"Canada," steamer, ques. 1230
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Ques. 996
Income and expense, 623
Information withheld, policy opposed, 1676, 1681
Canadian navy, ques. 540
"Canadian Recruit," steamer, ques. 312
Cape Race, 2117
Charlottetown fish hatchery, ques. 313
Civil Service
Insurance, 1054-5
Retirement fund, 459-60
Dredging, 3783-4
Extension of trade, 1884
Firearms—licenses—ship-captains, 3411
Fisheries
British Columbia, 3534
Department, estimates, 3521-5
Development of, M. in favour, 839
Food inspectors, 3539-41
Franchise Bill
Advance and proxy voting, 1164, 1933-6, 2001
Peace and good order, 1107
Voters' lists, provincial, 2333-7
Govt. steamers, crews, wages, 2112-3
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, branch lines, 1318-9
Halifax marine agency, 2110
Hanna, Mr. D. B. and Canada Steamships, Limited, 1742
Health Department and Civil Service Commission, 3543
Housing expenditure, 3550
Icebreakers, "Montcalm," 2112
Ice conditions, Atlantic coast, 2105-7
International Fisheries Commission, ques. 311
Liquor shipments and Marine Dept., 2108
Lunenburg, registrar, 2108-10
Margeson, Mr. J. W., ques. 1036
Marine hospitals, 3554
Masters and mates, 569, 984-6
Naval defence
Newfoundland, position of premier of, 3499
Naval service, 3516-20, 4395

Duff, Mr. Wm.—Con.
Naval Service..Con.
Additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4401-2, 4291-9
Badges, 437-446
Department
Ballantyne, Hon. Mr., statement as to leader of Opposition, 4412
Salaries, 4409
O'Connor, Mr. W. F., K.C., ques. 3618
Oleomargarine, 1865
Pensions Board employees and soldier organizations, ques. 1116
Pictou harbour, 2184-89, 3493
Wharfage dues, 2189
Pilotage, 2120-1
Public buildings—payments, 3724
Roumania, shipments to, ques. 312, ques. 343
St. Lawrence river power development, ques. 1120, ques. 1230
Shipbuilding and Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 632, 641, 646
Expense and income, 904-6
Government ownership, 906
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4001-8, 4148-51, 4159-67
Sick and distressed mariners, 2256-58, 2260
Skeena river hatchery, ques. 412
Soldier settlement, and fishermen, 1690
Special War Revenue Act Amdt Bill, 3466
Bank overdrafts, 3625
Collection, method of, 3478-80
Motor boats, canoes, etc., 3588-90
Musical instruments, 3595
Staff, estimated, 3478
"Stanley," steamer, ques. 312
Steamboat inspection 1051-2, 1763-75
West Indies, 1885

Duncan, Mr. Walter, ques. 1117, ques. 2720

Dupont, Mr. Joseph, ques. 590

Du Tremblay, Mr. P. R. (Laurier-Outremont)
Allies conference at Ostend, 2476
Budget, 3063. New taxes and high cost of living, 3063; income tax—revenue needs as argument for new taxes—tariff commission, 3064; shipbuilding—the German war indemnity, 3065; England after the war—congratulations to Minister of Finance, 3066
Franchise Bill
"Candidate," 1985
Proclamation—two languages, 1082
Newspaper postage, 3760
Ottawa city, agreement with, 988
Parliament buildings, 1427
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4005, 4009
War indemnity—Canada's share, 1084

Economic Conditions of the World
Peace conference declaration, 1888. Prices; peace not yet established; production, increase of needed; consumption, increase of; inflation of currency; profiteering; thrift; credit, difficulties in; co-operation of all classes needed; conclusions, summary of

Economic Development Commission, ques. 1896

Editorial Committee, 4322. See also Printing
French member necessary, 4503-5

Edmonton
Alberta penitentiary, 3855, ques. 2777
Post Office, 4518
Deputy postmaster, ques. 1739
Papers, motion for, 1900
Money parcel lost, ques. 412, 923

Edmundston
Post office and customs, ques. 2722

Education. See also Technical Education; Schools
Aliens, of, 819, 822
English speech among the foreign-born, 814
Federal Bureau of, 826
M. (Mr. Edwards) in favour of, 1362
Methods of, 820

Edwards, Mr. John Wesley (Frontenac)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 135. Reply to Mr. W. F. Maclean, 135; vacancies and by-elections, 136; Assiniboia by-election—absence of Prime Minister, 137; cabinet representation—Hon. Mr. Blondin, 138; French-Canadians and Hon Mr. Blondin—War-time elections act, 139; Military Voters Act and its effect on election, 140; Opium, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King and, 141; Hearst papers, 142; Quebec and its "hour," 143
Aliens
Immigrants and Canadian citizenship, 826
"Suckling traitors," 732
Budget, 2723. Tariff inquiry and revision, 2723; Liberal party and tariff, 2724; comparison of party records on the tariff, 2725; tariff amdts. of Mr. McMaster and Mr. Fielding, 2728, 2732; Mr. M. Clark and tariff proposals, 2729; Great Britain and protection—fiscal matters and prices in 1909, 2730; reciprocity, 2731; rural depopulation, 2733; Canadian agriculture and United States markets and competition, 2734; Mr. Crerar and the farmers, 2737;

Edwards, Mr. John Wesley—Con.
Budget—Con.
Grain Growers' Grain Company, etc., 2738; protection not for a section, but for the country, 2739
Capital punishment, 308
Civil Service
Holidays, 4059
Senate staff, 4059
Clark, Mr. M., record and views on free trade, 2729, 3436-8
Farmers' party, 610
Federal Bureau of Education, 826, 1362, 1384-5, 1396, 1400
Franchise Act, 733
Aliens—certificate, 2231, 2245
Contributions—Assiniboia expenses, 1187
Proclamation, language of publication, 1831-2, 1836, 2280-4, 2288-91, 2295
Recall, the, 2030-4, 2039-42
Assiniboia 1180-1, 1186
Registration—interrogatories, 1168
Returning officers, public officials, 1793
Grading export butter and cheese, 592, 609
Hearst publications, 142, ques. 993, 1290
Income tax
Charities, 3312
Exemptions on account of children, 3297-3300
Inspector at Kingston, ques. 2181
Indemnity of members and salaries of, ministers, 4083
Lighthouses and keepers, 2114
Military training, 3713
Militia
Active militia—allowances, 3671
Cadet service, 3712
Musical instruments, tax on, 3595
Oleomargarine, 597, 612, 1782-7, 1849-73
Pensions and re-establishment, 3941
Pensioner resident outside of Canada, 4047-9
Widowed mother resident outside of Canada, 4047
Portsmouth penitentiary, vacancies in chief positions—Stoneham case, 568
Press gallery reporters, 4503
Race track betting, 3430
Rural mail carriers, 4525
Shipbuilding contracts, 666-7
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4011
Soldier settlement, 1688-89
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill, 3319, 3339
Changes proposed by Finance Minister, 3436
Stoneham, Finlay, deceased convict, 568
The Menace, ques. 1899
Timiskaming election, 1188

Eggs—imports and exports, ques. 1898

Eight-hour Day, 334, 367, 449
Agriculture and, 374-80, 384, 453
Contractual rights, 372, 373-4
Dominion and provinces, jurisdiction, 450, ques. 509
Minister of Justice, opinion of, 455
International Conference at Washington—draft provisions, 371
League of Nations and, 383
Peace Treaty and, 381
Summary of position in different countries, 382

Electoral Atlas, ques. 317

Electoral Lists,
Bagot county, ques. 2011
By-elections, for, ques. 310. See also Dominion Franchise

Election, General
Cost of, ques. 587
Deposits lost, ques. 922
Opposition leader's motion in favour of, 35

Electric Railways. See Railway Act, 1919 Amdt. (Provincial Jurisdiction)

Electricity
Competition in sale of—taxation, 3106, 3113
Export of, ques. 1624. See also Special War Revenue Act
Inspection, 1887

Elevators. See also Grain; Canada Grain Act; Commercial Feeding Stuffs Dominion Government, ques. 3862-3
Fort William, 565
Screenings, ques. 704, 3401-2
Terminal, 1878

Elgin East vacancy, 1, 11

Elkin, Mr. Stanley E. (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert)
Budget, 2559. Exchange rate, 2560; business profits war tax—natural resources and development, 2560; protective tariff and those who benefit by it, 2561; the organized farmers and their business activities, 2561; farmers are prosperous, 2562; voting strength of country and city, 2563; American factories brought into Canada by protection—reductions in Canadian tariff, 2564; free trade, effect of on transportation and credit, 2567; duty of members of Parliament to lead public opinion, 2568

Emigration,
Canada, from, ques. 1119
Mennonites to United States, 2127, 2179, 2248

Empire, the. See also Washington, Canadian Minister at; League of Nations; Peace Treaty
Canada's status in, 359
Independence opposed by Government and Parliament, 365
Imperial War Cabinet, 362

Employment Offices, 4512-3
Order in Council affecting, 3087

Employment Offices Co-ordination Bill, 1r., 2313-14; 2r., 3086; com., 3088; 3r., 3092

Enemy Aliens. See Aliens; Naturalization; Dominion Franchise

Enterprise Foundry Company, ques. 2415

Entomology, Branch, 2401

Erieau, 2115

Estimates. See also Supply, Com. of Form of objected to,
Civil Service bonus, 1276
Method of voting, 108, 2778. See also King, Hon. Mr.
Supplementary, 1920-21, 1229, 1254, 2412, 4257, 4413
Inquiry as to, 3769
"Examiner of Estimates" 108

Ethier, Mr. Joseph A. C. (Laval-Two Mountains)
Bankruptcy Bill, 4097
Cinematographic films, tax on, ques. 3489
Civil Service
Bonus, 3228
Classification, ques. 505, 552, 592, 675. See also under this title, House of Commons
Conscription, ques. 320
Conservation Commission, ques. 2573
House of Commons
French language, rights of, 1040
Organization and classification of staff, 858, 1038
Naval Service—Ballantyne, Hon. Mr., reference to leader of Opposition, 4411
Otter, Sir William Dillon, ques. 673
Post Office and Customs Departments, rumoured investigation, 3623
St. Hermas postal service, ques. 412
Tobacco, duties on, ques. 1114

Ethyl Alcohol. See Inland Revenue; Special War Revenue

Euler, Mr. William D. (North Waterloo)
Aliens and franchise, 340. See also under this title, Franchise; Naturalization
Belgium, proposed credit to, 582
Canadian National Railways, mail contracts and, 4530
Civil Service bonus, 4547
Eight-hour day, 357, 383
Jurisdiction, ques. 509
Franchise Bill, 739
Advance polls, 3876
Aliens, 2057, 2065-6, 2071, 2074-5, 2091-6, 2227-8, 2231-2, 2240-2
Amdt. 2096
Amdt. to 3r., 4367-72
Voters' lists, 2429
Provincial lists, 3895
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1501, 1505
Income tax, 3126
Internment case, 4518
League of Nations, 357
Letter carriers, 4529
Naturalization Act, 3683
Alien, enemy origin, 3920
Certificate not issued, 3919
Imperial citizenship and, ques. 996
Revocation of certificate, 3915-8
Opium and Drug Bill, 1633-4, 1746, 1751-3
Parliament Buildings, 1425-7
Postal employees' salaries, 2670, 3145
Roumania, advance to, ques. 3488
Rural mail carriers, ques. 414, 4523
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4144-7, 4156
Special War Revenue Act Amdt, 3439
Auctions, 3575
Automobiles, 3598
Boats, canoes, etc., 3590-1
Collection, method of, 3439, 3459-62
Furniture, 3574-5
Hats, 3562
Gas and electric light fixtures, 3596
Jewelry, 3579
Luxuries, on retail sale, list of, 3462
Musical instruments, 3628

Europe, distress in, 116, 4545. See also League of Nations

"Examiner of Estimates," 108

Exchange, rate of, 69, 112, 126, 145, 157, 165, 178, 190
Gold shipment to New York, 181
United States trade, and, 55

Exchequer Court Act Amdt. Bill, 1r., 2003; 2r. com., 2200; 3r., 2204

Excise
Estimates, 3859

Excise and Sales Tax. See also Special War Revenue
Prices, effect on, 3329

Exhibitions, 4558

Exhibition Buildings, use of by Militia, ques. 2009

Experimental Farms. See also Agriculture; Commercial Feeding Stuffs, ques. 1360, 2382, 2390, 2412
Achievements of, 1013
New buildings, etc, 3156
Ontario, extension in, M. by Mr. Sutherland, 1005
Swift Current, 4560

Exploration
Stefansson expedition, ques, 704

Explosives, 2248. See also Beloeil; Mines

Export Regulations. See Customs Act Amdt

Exports. See also Trade
Hides to United States, ques. 313
Increase of and means to promote, 621, 626
Wheat to United States, ques. 313
Wheat to Greece, ques. 415

Expropriation. See Irrigation Act

External Affairs, Dep, 4534

Extra-Territorial effect of Dominion legislation, 4169

Fafard, Mr. J. Fernand (L'Islet)
Budget, 2717. Wish courage to those who have to pay taxes—railway deficits—standing army, 2717; militarism—new taxes—tariff revision, 2718; high cost of living and popular unrest, 2719; national unity, 2720
Cimon, Mr., and Military defaulters, ques. 1462
Civil Service classification, ques. 997
Dominion land surveyors, ques. 1115, ques. 2006
Flax industry, 693
Food—price regulation, 1144, 1151
High cost of living, 1151
St. Camille-Cabano proposed railway, ques. 589

Farm Labour, 1011, 1220, 1227
Spring work, for, ques. 800

Farms, Fertility of. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Farmers' Account Book, ques. 315

Farmers' Movement and party, 102, 127, 153, 186, 196, 282, 1219, 1226, 2057. See also Canadian Council of Agriculture
Subsidies and bounties, position on, 899

Federal Bureau of Education. See Education

Federal Emergency Fund, ques. 1199; ques. 2182

Fertilizers, 119

Fielding, Hon. William Stevens (Shelburne and Queen's)
Admiralty Act Amdt, 3086
"Allied and Associated Powers," 1234
Bill—printing of in English and French, 1057
Board of Commerce, 1685
Bridges, 3772-9
British Columbia Indians, 952
British North America Act Amdt, 41-69-70
Budget, The, 2495. Congratulations to Minister of Finance in view of difficulties of situation, 2496; loans, stabilizing the market, 2507-2517; borrowing in Canada and its effect, 2490; revenues and expenditure, 2500; net debt, 2501; economy needed, 2502; tariff, free trade or protection 2,503; bounties, 2506; the Farmers' party, 2507; Liberal party and policy, 2508; tariff inquiry, 2509; amdt moved, 2510
Budget, date of, 2247, 2318
Budget debate not limited by amdt, 2518
Business of the House, order of, 2314
Business profits war tax, 3111
Public utilities, 3231-2
Canada and the Empire, 493
Canada and the United States, 496
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Crews, 641
Canadian National Railways
Lockeport proposed extension, 3085, 3376, 4218
Nomenclature and legislation, 3390
Western extensions, 3390
Withholding of information, 1667
Withholding of information, 1667
Canadian representative at Washington. See, under this title, Washington
Correspondence, 3081
Canadian Wheat Board, 4358
Capital punishment, 308
Civil Service
Bonus, 1269-72, 1289
Insurance, 1056
Ottawa, taxation, 579
Retirement, 3825-30, 4460-5
Retirement fund, 459-60
Returned soldiers and, 3131

Fielding, Hon. William Stevens—Con.
Civil Service—Con.
Superannuation
Pensions, inadequacy of based on former values, 391
Principle approved, 392-4
Temporary employment, 3129-33
Coal Operations Director Bill, 3361-3
Concurrence in supply, 4586
Criminal Code Amdt (French version) 3081-84
Currency, coinage, 399
DeCelles, Mr., superannuation of, 2968
Dominion Lands Act Amdt (United States soldiers) 1234
Dredging, 3783
Dry docks, 4570-2
Eight-hour day, 380
Estimates and their discussion, 4586, 4589
Experimental and demonstration farms, 2385-6
Export regulations, 3621
Extra session, 1919, ques. 543
Firearms, licenses, 3410-3
Fish inspection, 1054, 4586
Food and drugs Bill, 956-69, 1257, 1260-2
Franchise Bill, 759
Advance and proxy voting, 1162
Aliens—certificate, 2072-6, 2234-7
Ballot and counterfoil, 1105
By-elections, simultaneous, 1090-1
Amdt. to 3r., 4359
Chief Electoral Officer, 1513, 4136-7
Successor to, 4270
Contributions—expenses—public treasury should pay, 1197
Conveying voters, 1063
Corrupt practices, 1160
Deposit, 1091, 1110
Disqualification of candidate, 1086-8
Election expenses, return, 1155
Election officers, fees, etc., 1111-2
False statement made to affect election, 1067
Nomination of candidates, 1090-2
Proclamation, 1081-2
Provincial lists, 2323, 2352-5, 2419-20
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to 3r., 4365
Nova Scotia lists, 3899-3900
Returning officers, 1515 ,1521-5, 1532-5, 1581
Amdt—public officers, 1521
"Standard time," 1988-9
Franking privilege, 3358
French speeches in House, translation of, 700
Government annuities, 403, 4528

Fielding, Hon. William Stevens—Con.
Grand Trunk Railway, 1251, 1296-1303, 1356
Branch lines, 1319-21
Loans—amdt., 1504, 1537
London—Trafalgar Square office, 1251
Ratification of agreement, 1321-4
Stocks, value of, 1562-3, 1567
Halifax, Militia Dept. property, 3724
Hartney, Mr. E. P., 4566
House of Commons
Empire Day adjournment, 2575
Monday for Government business, 1464
Orders of the day—time taken by Minister in reply to question, 3425
Saturday and morning sittings, 2786
Staff, organization and classification of, 1037
Messengers, 3097
Icebreakers — Nova Scotia south shore ports, 1607, 2124
Income tax, 3251
Charities, 3247-9, 3312-3
Deficits and losses, 3241
Dividends, when liable, 3304-6
Part payment with return, 3253
Indemnity of members and salaries of Ministers, 4078
Correction of press report, 4171
Separate bills suggested, 4380, 4454
Inquiry for return, 3226
Inspection and Sale Act Amdt
Nova Scotia fruit growers, 2017, 3109
Jellicoe, Admiral, 386
Judges' salaries and pensions, 4418-23
Doherty, Right Hon. Mr., case of, 4424
League of Nations
Canada's contribution toward expenses, ques. 589, que. 618
Canada's status, 350 353, 366
Labour, 355-6
Peace, maintenance of, 353
Loan Companies Act Amdt, 1778
Lockeport, 3085, 3376, 4218
Lockeport-Froude's Point steamer service, 4514, 4284-5
Lotbiniere and Megantic Railway, 4585
Maple products, 796-7, 1254
Militia, Contingencies, 3714
Mint, the, 616
Naval College graduates, 4562
Naval Service
Additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4386
Estimates, 4316-20
Newspaper postage, 3761
Nickel coinage, 400
Oil—leases, royalty on, 3809-10
Oleomargarine, ques. 1117, 1787, 1856-74

Fielding, Hon. William Stevens—Con.
Opium and Drug Bill, 1750, 1760
Ottawa city, agreement with, 580, 991-2
Parliament Buildings, 1418-23, 1429-32
Furniture and fittings, 3155
Partisanship, extreme, 493
Peace Treaty
Bulgaria, with, 475, 493, 1058-9
Canada's position, 493
France—protection against Germany, 1059
Ratification, 475
Peat, 3807
Penitentiary Act Amdt., 3409-10
Pensions—widowed mother, 4044-6, 4050
Point of order—matter pending before com., 3652
Prime Minister and portfolio, 4456
Privilege—Press report — indemnity of members, 4171
Public accounts, 1839
Public buildings, none new, 3147
Purchasing Board, 1469-78
Registered postal rate, 3733
Registrar of shipping, 2109
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3203, 4575
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3997, 4155-6, 4160-6
Sick and distressed mariners, 2265-6
Soldier Settlement, 1692
Fishermen and, 1690
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill, 3320
Automobiles, 3599
Boats, canoes, etc., 3589-90
Collection, method of, 3464-6
Containers, 3615
Debate on Bill, arrangements for, 3454-5
Fountain pens, 3577-8
Furniture, 3576
Imposition, mode of, 3340
Jewellery, 3339, 3578-84
Musical instruments, 3596, 3629
Proprietary medicines, 3602
Sporting goods, 3570
Stock transfers, 3626
Sugar embargo, 3226
Supply
Interim vote, 754-6
Terminal elevators, 1878
Trade Commissioners, 1886
War loans
Bonds, amount of, ques. 2008
Validation of over-subscriptions, 4180-1
Victory loans, 2520
Washington, Canadian Minister at
M. in amdt. to Supply, 2442-4, 2453, 3081, 4534-42

Finance. See also Budget; Grand Trunk Railway; Highways; Loans; Taxation; Chartered Banks.
Department, employees, ques. 592
Dominion revenues, ques. 1001
Federal emergency fund, ques. 1199; ques. 2182
International Financial Conference, 1465
Obligations and revenues, ques. 998
Tax-free bonds, 192

Firearms. See Customs Act; Criminal Code

Fiscal Policy of Government. See also Address; Budget Inquiry, 583

Fiset, Dr. Michel, ques. 317, 2015, 4530

Fish Inspection Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 855, 1052; 1r., 1054; 2r., 1175; Com., 4585; 3r., 4586

Fish Meat used as food for hogs, 3164

Fisheries
Biological Board, ques. 2572
British Columbia fish, quantity, ques. 505
Development. Res. (Mr. Duff) in favour of, 839
Dogfish, 848
Estimates, 3520
Fishermen, education of, 846
Grenfell, Dr., and, 2266
Hatcheries
Charlottetown, ques. 313
Salmon, 848
Skeena river, ques. 412
International Commission, ques. 311
Japanese and, 844
Lobster hatchery employees, ques. 4096
Lobsters, illegal fishing, ques. 410
Officers,
Isle Madame, ques. 3294, 3520
Overseers and guardians, 3522
Pacific Coast, 3521-2
Patrol, 3521, 3523-4
Returned soldiers, and, 531, 885
Peck, Mr., M. Res. 3933. See also Soldier Settlement Treaty with United States 1290, ques. 1002, 1290, 3161
Vessels. See that title

Flax. See also debates on Scientific Research Bounty, 1886
Grants, ques. 806
Industry, res. (Mr. Glass), 675
Seed. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Flour. See also Wheat
Canadian, shipments of, ques. 1788
Mills, small, ques. 799

Flynn, Capt. Percy, ques. 2415

Fontaine, Mr. Joseph E. (Hull)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 104. Opposition leader and the War—public debt and expenditure, 104; Board of Commerce—Franchise Act—capital and labour, French Canadians, 105, proposed general election, 106
Budget, 2715. Union Government and tariff revision, 2715; war profits—unwarranted expenditures and inadvisable economies, 2716; downward revision of the tariff, 2717
French speeches in House, translation of, 701
Income tax, 3251
Purchasing Board, 1484
Special War Revenue Act Amendment Bill, 3468

Food
Gambling in, 4133
Hoarding of, ques. 807
Inspection. See Food and Drugs Bill
Production, compared with United States, 679
Shortage, 385, 1845
World situation, 675

Food and Drugs Bill. 1r., 582; 2r., 955, Com., 955, 1256; 3r., 1465
Amdt. (Mr. Pedlow) to refer back, 1465, neg. 1466
Access, refusal of, 977
Adulterations
Drugs, 957-8
Food, 961
Analyses, 963-4
Chief analyst, 967
Compounds to be marked as such, 960
Inspector, 957
Materials usable for adulteration, 977
Misbranding, 958, 1256
Proceedings—evidence, 962
Expenses, counsel fees, 978
Knowledge, 973
No certiorari, 975
Other remedies, 979
Prosecutions, 1263
Regulations, 958, 967-9
Sales, penalties, 971
Samples and bulk, 961
Seizure, 967
Standard containers, 1258
Voluntary payments, 976

Ford Car, 119, 2815, 2823

Foreign Credits
Belgium, proposed, 582
Serbia, reported, 567

Foreign Relations. See League of Nations; Washington, Canadian Minister at Foreign Trade, 2477, 2481. See also Budget

Forestry, 3285

Forests, Waterways and Water Powers. See also Dominion Lands and Parks
Com. appointed, 307

Fortier, Mr. H. A. (Labelle)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 132. Canada under federal compact, 132; Imperialism, 133; Canada's relations with the Empire—divorce—Labour's legitimate claims, 134; proposed general election, 135
Budget, 2889. Congratulations to Minister of Finance—production and thrift—government extravagance—militarism, 2889; soldiers turning to occupations of peace—railway nationalization, 2890; Liberal fiscal policy—general election advocates, 2891
Exchequer Court Act Amdt. 2201-3
Hull and Montreal highway, 1113
Judges' salaries, 4339-40
Printing Bureau linotypes, ques. 670

Fort William elevator, 565, ques. 1358. See also Elevators

Forward Movement of Christian churches, 98

Foster, Mr. A. DeWitt, ques., 1201

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George (Minister of Trade and Commerce and Acting Prime Minister February 26-May 12).
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 35. Congratulations to mover and seconder, 35; Opposition leader's criticism, 36; Franchise Bill—Grand Trunk agreement, 37; preparedness of sessional programme—government by Order in Council—absence of Prime Minister, 38; Peace negotiations and treaty, Canadian Ministers needed in Europe, 39; Ministers of the Crown in the Senate—commissions, 40; cabinet responsibility, 41; proposed general election—the Government's work and record—prosecution of the war, 42; Civil Service reform—Health department—scientific research, 43; women's franchise — prohibition — shipbuilding—cost of living, 44; production—War Purchasing Commission, 45; finance—returned soldiers, 46
Amnesty, general, to political prisoners, 1790
Archambault, Mr., questions by, 709
Armenians, 855
Auditor General's report, 2179, 4276
Bill (Mr. Stevens) proposed introduction, 1216
Board of Commerce
Canners, 1046
Correspondence, 3426
Motion for papers, 2013, 3863
O'Connor, Mr., reported resignation of, 1685
Porter, Mr. Arthur, dismissal of, 568
Robson, Judge, resignation of, 114, 1900
Budget, date of, 1465, 2126, 2247, 2318
Budget, 2510. Debt, gross and net, 2511; economy of administration, 2512; Civil Service policy, 2513; no more loans at present, 2513; taxation to meet present needs, methods of taxation, 2514; forethought and afterthought, 2515; Bank of Montreal trading account, 2516; free trade or protection—Liberal party's policy, 2517
Business of the House
Easter adjournment, 752
Empire Day adjournment, 2575
Late sittings, 1894
Legislation foreshadowed, 1789
Monday for Government business, 1464, 1573
Notices of motion standing, 1628, 2013
Order of, 2314
Wednesday evening sittings, 1044-5
Cabinet changes, 386, 447
Canada Grain Act, administration of, 1877, 3822-4
Canada Steamships Limited and Mr. D. B. Hanna, 1789
Canada Year Book, 1879
Canada's national status, 486
Canada's representative at Washington, 449, 1742, 2177, 2460
Canadian Wheat Board, 4323, 4098, 4110-1, 4341-58
Losses, possible, 4348, 4516
Magill, Dr., statement by, 4124-5, 4342-7
Telegram to Mr. Sifton, 4348
Canadians in Imperial Service, 857
Civil Service classification, 675
Correspondence, motion for, 592
Copyright Bill, 752
Daylight saving, 1574

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George—Con.
East Elgin vacancy, 11, 1085
Economic conditions of the world—Peace Conference declaration, 1888
Estimates and their discussion, 4588-9
When to be brought down, 567
Explosive works at Beloeil, 2248
Extension of trade, 1880-6
Federal Bureau of Education, 1398
Flax bounty, 1886
Franchise Bill
Disqualification of candidates, 1089
Returning officers, 1531
Statement as to possible additions, 582
French speeches in House, translation of, 700
French treaty, 3425-26, 4274
Gisborne, Mr. F. H., K.C., Parliamentary Counsel, 4587
Grain Exchange, closing of, reimbursement of losses, 4516
Grand Trunk Railway, 11
Correspondence, 1228
Stock, 754
Hearst Publications, 1290
House of Commons.
Acoustic properties of, 1418, 2126
Debates, Translation of French speeches, 4588, 700
Staff, 1037
Hudson Bay Railway, 2014
Hurons of Lorette, 2014
Imperial Conference, 114
Industrial legislation, 1790
Inquiry for returns, 857
International Financial Conference, 1465
Ireland, condition of, 856
Japanese occupation of Vladivostock, 1945
Jellicoe, Admiral, visit of, 11
Joint distribution office, 1037
League of Nations, 567
Armenian mandate, 1465
French occupation of German territory, 1046
Marshall, the late David, M.P., 10
Mennonites, 2127
Ministers and Grand Trunk stock, 590
Ministers' knowledge of their business, 527
Naval service, ministerial statement, 708
Newfoundland, 4276-81
Oral answers to questions, 1623
Parliament buildings, 2, 1418-20, 1432-3
Parliamentary librarian, 114
Partisanship, 485, 488
Peace, 230
Peace Treaty, 485
Pensions and Re-establishment Com.
Resignation of:

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George—Con.
Pensions and Re-establishment Com.—Con.
Lang, Mr., 1085
Peck, Mr., 2081-2
Pensions, soldiers, taxation of, 1895
Prime Minister
Illness and absence of, 9, 114
Return of, 2126
Printing, Joint Committee on, 4321
Public accounts, 1838
Purchasing Board, 1467-70, 1474-9
Questions not answered, 949
Railways, freight to Canada from United States prepaid, 1893
Returned soldiers, 520. See also, under this title, Pensions; Soldiers
Cash gratuities to, 1082-84
Life insurance, 522
Returns, delayed, 459
Russia, 4322
Saar Valley Commission, 344
St. Julien, battle of, 1357
St. Lawrence route, insurance, 4515
San Remo Conference, 1465
Scientific Research, 617, 2176
Serbia, reported credit to, 567
Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Dept., 520
Soldier Settlement, 521
Statistical Department, 1880, 3296
Steamship companies, supervision of, 2013
Steamship Services
Cape Breton; Lockeport-Froude's Point; Magdalen Islands; Newfoundland; New Zealand; St. Lawrence, etc.; St. John-Digby; South Africa, etc., 4276-87
Economies in, 4287, 4515
Steel and Shipping merger, 1895, 1955-6
Sugar
Embargo, 3226
Prices, 1896
Supply, Com., of, arrangements for, 1597
Interim vote, 755
Terminal elevators, 1878
Trade Commissioners, 1885-6
Universal military training, 948
Victory loan transactions, 2520
War indemnity, Canada's share, 1084
Washington, Canadian Minister at. See under this title Canada's representative at Washington
Water carriage of goods, 1216
West Indies, 1884, 2892-3, 3860

Foster, Mr. Thomas (East York)
Bell Telephone rates appeal, ques. 2009
"Excise and sales" tax, 3451
Returned soldier (amdt. Mr. Lemieux) 3452, 3455, 3458-9

Foster, Mr. Thomas—Con.
Exhibition buildings and militia, ques. 2009
Franchise Bill, 763
Grand Trunk Railway
Head office, ques. 2008
Technical education, ques. 2519
Toronto
Grain elevators, ques. 1897
Harbour improvements, ques. 2181

Fournier, Mr. C. A. (Bellechasse)
Board of Commerce, 3227
Canadian National Railways, official cars, ques. 409
Cattle embargo, ques. 340
Electric power, export, ques. 1624
Food and Drugs Bill, 958, 977, 1260
Hides, exports to United States, ques. 313; ques. 343
Intercolonial Railway, pensions, ques. 313
St. Valier wharf, ques. 1231

France
Advances to, ques. 318
Occupation of German territory by, 1046

Franchise, 25, 28, 36, 37, 53, 114, 151, 155, 283
By-election lists, ques., 310. See also Dominion Franchise Bill

Franco-Canadian Customs Tariff Convention, ques. 3684

Franking Privilege. See Post Office Act Amdt. Bill

Fraser, Mr. Evan E. (Welland)
Judges' salaries, 4339

Fraudulent Naturalization Papers, ques. 4096

Freight Cars. See also Railways
Grain and grain products in, ques. 1035

Freight Rates. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Railways; Railway Act Amdt.

French Language. See Language Questions

French Treaty, ques. 1788; 3425-6, 3684, 4274, ques. 4323

Fripp, Mr. A. E. (Ottawa)
Biggar, Mr. O. M., K.C., 4265-6
Canada Highways Act, ques. 802, ques. 1119
Choquette, Ex-Senator P. A., ques. 2572
Civil Service
Classification, M. for papers, 544, 556
Commission, staff, ques. 2414
Printing Bureau, ques. 320, 3742
Taxation of incomes, 579-80
Ottawa city, agreement with, 579

Fruit Packages. See Inspection and Sale

Fuel. See also Coal
Price, 321

Fulton, Mr. Frederick J. (Cariboo)
British Columbia Indians, 953
Soldier Settlement, 1695
Cattle branding, 1699

Gambling. See Criminal Code

Game. See National Parks; Northwest Game Act

Gargoyles, 1433, 1493

Gas, taxation of, 3106

Gas and Electricity inspection, 1887

Gascons Wharf, ques. 411

Gaspesia, resources, attractions and need of railway extensions, 4213-7

Gauthier, Mr. L. J. (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 61. Quebec badly treated, waiting for its hour—war and the constitution, 61; Liberals and Union Government policies, 62; public unrest—Prime Minister's health, 63; proposed election, 64; party system and government, 65
Budget, 2605. Tactics of United Farmers, 2605; Liberals and tariff—Wheat Board, 2606; the Government and its record—Canada's production, 2607; currency, credit and gold reserve—profiteers and prices, 2610
Privilege—Complaint of Treatment by civil servant, 4097

Gauvreau, Mr. Charles A. (Témiscouata)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 209. French language—Hon. Mr. Chapais and conscription—Hon. Mr. Blondin, 209; Mr. DeCelles' retirement, Hon. Mr. Sevigny—Canadian National Railway shops at Rivière du Loup—Quebec biding its time, 210
Arthur Young Co., ques. 1511, ques. 1740
Bank Act Amdt., inquiry, 1573
Business of the House—holiday adjournment moved without notice, unanimous consent denied, 2575
Canadian National Railways
Engine repairs, ques. 3079
Cimon, Mr., collections by, ques. 1461
Civil Service, 670
DeCelles, Mr. A. D., 210, 2968; ques. 3489

Gauvreau, Mr. Charles A.—Con.
Dominion Canners ques. 415
Dupont, Mr. Joseph, ques. 590
Empire day adjournment, 2626
Franchise Bill
Disqualification — charitable support, those receiving, 1813-5
French translation, 779, 1061
Indian agents, 3276
Intercolonial employees, pensions, ques. 589
Isle Verte, 3160
Lennox, Mr. Justice, 1232
Lightkeepers, 2110
Montmagny colonization lots, ques. 1229
Parliamentary librarian, 114
Pension Commission employees, ques. 2895
Public Works employees, 3142
Questions
Passed as orders for returns, 1743
Portion deleted, 1045
Rivière du Loup workshops, ques. 315, 801
St. Malo shops, ques. 3079, ques. 3618
Saturday and morning sittings, 2626
Sevigny, Hon. Albert, 210
Témiscouata railway, ques. 674

General Election, proposed. See Address

Genoa, International Labour Conference, 3359

Geological Survey, 3801, 4513. See also Mines

Georgian Bay Canal and Shipbuilding, 915

Germany
Reparation by, ques., 1463, 2574
Allies Conference at Ostend, 2476

Germany and Austria
Books, ques. 806
Imports from, ques. 2416; ques. 3359
Trade with, ques. 801

Gervais, Mr. Theodore (Berthier)
Budget, 2556. Popular unrest, 2556; tariff policy and its effects, 2557; agriculture, its opportunities and needs—manufacturers and high tariff, 2558
Butter and oleomargarine, ques. 2720
Canada Highways Act, payments under, ques. 806
Scrap iron and steel, ques. 1739
Sorel shipyard superintendent, ques. 343
Vandal, Mr. Calixte, ques. 1740

Gisborne, Mr. F. H., K.C., 4587. See also Dominion Franchise Bill; Chief Electoral Officer

Glass, Mr. Samuel F. (East Middlesex)
Alien immigrants, 836
Board of Commerce, 1148-9
Export Butter and Cheese, 598-9
Flax industry, 675
Food and Drugs Bill—Toasted corn flakes, 1261
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 3876-7
Deposit, 1095-6
Election accounts, 1112
Nomination, place of, 1092
Proclamation, language of publication, 2275-6
Returning officers, 1595
Oleomargarine, 1868
Opium and Drug Bill, 1639
Post Office Department, 3743
Prices, 1148-9
Soldier Settlement, 2133-5
Special War Revenue
Fountain pens, 3577
Gas and electric light fixtures, 3596

Gold, 3107. (See also Currency; Yukon)
Commissioner, 3108
Shipment to New York, 181
Standard—Dominion notes and, ques. 588

Good Roads, 45. See also Canada Highways Act

Gophers, 3793

Gordon's Reserve school (Indian) 3269, 3278

Gouffre, Riviere Du, ques. 1121

Gould, Mr. Oliver R. (Assiniboia)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 124. Parliament building—Canadian Council of Agriculture platform, 125; Assiniboia election—trade and rates of exchange, 126; tariff and protection—water fronts and mines as taxable resources, 128; conditions in Assiniboia—grasshopper plague, 128; sessional indemnities for unrepresented years, 129
Budget, 2951. Finance Minister's great task—Mr. M. Clark's address—Mr. Meighen on Britain's policy and condition, 2952; exorbitant protection—Dominion Textile Company, 2953; shoes and protective duties; Farmers' platform, 2954; Western Canada Colonization Association—names applied to Progressive group, 2955; Messrs. Stevens, Mowat and Stacey and protective duties, 2956; faith, hope and charity, 2959; farm implement manufacturers, 2960; apple

Gould, Mr. Oliver R.—Con.
Budget—Con.
prices and protective duty, 2961; lumbering industry and housing problem, 2962; members of the House and special interests, 2964; wages in protected manufactures — proposed railway extension to coal area, 2966
Canadian Wheat Board, 4112-4
Civil Service bonus, 1287
Election for Assiniboia, 1
Franchise Bill
Contributions—Assiniboia expenses, 1172-84
Deposit, 1095
Recall, the, 1181, 2027-30, 2037
Returning officers, 1590-3
Grading export butter and cheese, 607
Grasshopper plague, ques. 705
Indemnity of members, 4449
Indians and wild game, 3280
Parliament Buildings, 1424
Portal immigration hall, ques. 674
Recall. See under this title, Franchise
Seed Grain Purchasing Commission, ques. 1117
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4000, 4015-6
Soldier Settlement Act
Cattle branding, 1699
Increase in stock, 1702
Special War Revenue
Airplanes, 3592
Caps, 3566
Trust and Loan Company of Canada, 586
Universal military training, 947

Government Annuities, 4528

Government Annuities Act Amdt Bill. Res. 402; 1r., 406; 2r., com., 462; 3r., 463

Government Ownership, 124. See also debates under Canadian National; Grand Trunk
Ships, of, 627, 659. See also under Shipbuilding

Government Printing Bureau. See Printing

Government Steamers. See also Vessels
Civil Service insurance for crews, 1779

Grain and Grain Trade. See also Agriculture; Canada Grain Act; Canadian Wheat Board; Commercial Feeding Stuffs; Seed Grain
Cereal shipments from Canada, ques. 1626
Dominion Seed Grain Purchasing Commission, ques. 1117 Elevators. See also that title
Halifax, ques. 1116
Terminal, Port Arthur and Fort William, 565, ques. 1358
Toronto, ques. 1897

Grain and Grain Trade—Con.
Flour mills, small, ques. 799
Freight cars, ques. 1035
Grain Exchange, closing of, losses, 4516
Participation certificates, ques. 802
Wheat
Importation in 1912, ques. 590
Shipped by farmers to United States, ques. 802
Spirit River shipments, 566
Winnipeg Grain Exchange, 2005

Granby Public Building, 3149

Grand Etang, 2114, 3779-80

Grand Trunk Railway Company..
Administration of, 4173
Entrance to Montreal, ques. 413
Head office, ques. 2008
London. Trafalgar Square office, 1251
Pensions—and Strike of 1910, 1122
Agreements and letter to Mr. Hays. 4508
Amdt (Mr. Mackenzie King) 1536; neg. 1572
Shareholders, list of, 3426-7, 4258
Stocks, ques. 1361-2, ques. 590, 753
Subsidiary companies, ques. 996

Grand Trunk Railway Acquisition, 11
Arbitrators, 1047, 3860
Taft, Mr., ex-President, 3490
Budget, statement by Minister of Finance, 2484
Correspondence, 1228, 1235
Loan, 4579

Grand Trunk Railway Acquisition Bill. 1r., 1113; 2r., 1235; 1291; 1311; Com. 1311, 1315, 1435, 1486, 1536; 3r., 1572

Grasshopper Plague, 128, ques. 705, 2375

Gratuities to Soldiers
Statement by acting Prime Minister, 1082. See also Pensions

Great War Veterans Association, 3669
Soldier Settlement and, 2142

Greece
Advance to, ques. 318
Roumania, and,
Loans, ques. 3488
Purchases by, ques. 2414
Wheat shipments to, ques. 415, ques. 509

Grenfell, Dr., and fishermen, 2266

Grey, Earl, farewell message, 18

Griesbach, Brig.-Gen. William A. (West Edmonton)
Currie, General Sir Arthur, 3653
Enlistments by Provinces, ques. 408
Franchise Bill
Disqualification, charitable aid, those receiving, 1815
Polling divisions, 1516
Returning officers, 1582-4
"Or a returned soldier," 1525
League of Nations, 3976
Militia
Cadet service, 3704
Contingencies, 3716
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3212
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4159
Universal military training, 933

Griffenhagen and Associates, 3623, 4521. See also Civil Service
Papers moved for and laid on table, 3863

Grosse Isle, ques. 1003
Buildings, ques. 344
Quarantine, 3151
Wharves, ques. 343

Guthrie, Hon. Hugh (Minister of Militia and Defence, and acting Solicitor General)
Bankruptcy Bill, 2246, 3255-65, 4263
Battlefields Memorials, 1460
Demobilization, 4549
Franchise Bill, 338-40, 775-87, 1061-82, 3864-3914; 2r., motion for, 710, 741-2, 773-5
Advance and proxy voting, 1162, 1166, 1933-43, 1997-9, 2002, 3864, 3873
List, 3875-7
Nova Scotia list, 3914
Agents and Officers to vote, 1098, 1918-9, 4271.
Aliens—certificate, 1536, 2057-64, 2214-20, 2226-30. See also under this title, Qualifications of Electors.
Armed Strangers, 1108
Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, 1513-5
Ballot
Counterfoil and, 1104-5
Ballots
Counting before opening of poll, 1101
Forgery or destruction of, 1098
To be alike, 1097
Ballot boxes, expenses of returning, 1927-8
Bribery, treating, undue influence, personation, 1156-9
By-elections
Simultaneous 1090-1
Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) to 3r., 4359

Guthrie, Hon. Hugh—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Campaign funds, Publicity amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to 3r., 4273-4. See also under this title, Contributions
Canada Temperance Act, 1166, 2052-4, 3864-6
Candidates,
Consent of, 1095
Disqualification, 4271, 2023
Chief Electoral Officer, 1512-3
Biggar, Mr. O. M., K.C., appointment of, 4264-70
Remuneration, 4136-7
Clerk of Crown in Chancery, 1069-73
Compulsory voting, 1062
Contributions, 781-4, 1169-70
Amdt (Mr. McMaster) 1194-5
Conveying voters, 786, 1061-4
Corrupt practices—disqualification, 1160
Counting and reporting vote, 1109
Debate of Bill, arrangements for, 1072, 1837-8, 1944-5 2001-2
Definitions, 775
Deposit, 1092, 1094-6
Return of, 1110
Deputy returning officers, 1074
Lists of, 1097
Disfranchisement, 1160, 1536
Charitable support, those receiving, 1813-20, 1997
Criminals, 1820
Hindus, 1812
Returned soldiers excepted, 1811-2, 1821-3
Disqualification of candidates, 1160, 1085-8
Election clerk, 1073, 1515-6
Election expenses, 1152-5, 1930-3
Accounts, audit of, 1929
Return by agent, 1155-6
Election officers
Disqualified parties, 1075-8
Fees, etc., 3867-8, 4271
Taxation of, 1111-2
Election papers, 1928, 1988, 2023
Election return, 1928
Executory contracts void, 781
False oath, 781
False statement made to affect election, 1065-7
Fees, statement to be placed in box, 1927
Forms, 3868-76
Advance polls, 3873-5
Indians, 2055-7
Interpretation
"Advance poll," 1943
"Candidate," 2943-5, 1985

Guthrie, Hon. Hugh—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Interpretation—Con.
Opposition, attitude of, 725
"During an election," 1986-7
"Election officer," 1987-8
"Election Papers," 1988
"Electors," 1917
"Hours of the day"—"Standard time" 1988-9, 1944
"List of voters," 1989
"Members,", 1989
"Personal expenses," 1991
"Rural polling division," 1992-3
"Urban polling division," 1991
Liquor on polling day, 1108-9
Misfeasance, etc.,—penalty, 1074-5
Names not on list, 1926, 4272
Oaths, 3877-8
Naturalization—amdt (Mr. Euler) to 3r., 4369
Nomination, 1916
Candidates, of, 1090-6
Place of, 1092-3
Postponement of, 1096
Non-electors and non-residents canvassing, 784-6
Notices, 777-8, 1169
Oaths, 779-81, 1166
Elector, by, 1102
Ontario voters' list, 3880-98
Amdt proposed, 3896; agreed to, 3898
Paid propaganda, publicity of, Amdt. (Mr. McMaster) to 3r., 4375
Pass on railway, 1065
Payment of voters' expenses, 1064-5
Peace and good order, 1105-8
Poll books, etc., to returning officer, 1078-80
Polling divisions, 1516-20, 1996
Polling stations, additional, 1826-7
Polls
Hours to be open, 1920-6
When to be held, 1101-2
Population and status of place, 2320
Printer's name, 779
Proclamation
Language of publication, 1837, 1918, 2268-73, 2291-2, 2301
Mailed to postmaster, 1080-2
Notices, etc., 2319
Provincial lists, amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to 3r., 4364. See also under this title Voters' Lists
Qualification of electors, 4271
Aliens—certificate, 2059, 2076, 2085-8, 2092, 2099-2103, 4271
See also under this title Aliens, Naturalization

Guthrie, Hon. Hugh—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Qualification of electors—Con.
Indians, 2055-7
Naturalization, 4271
Recall, the, 2044
Recount by Judge, 1110
"Registrar" and "Enumerator," 1096-7
Registrars, 3899
Duties of, 3909-10
Rural, attendance of, 3908
Registration—interrogatories, 1167
Voters, of, 4272
Removing notices, 779
Repeal, 776
Returning officers
Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 1574-6
Further duties of, 1096
Ineligible parties, 1073-4
Poll books, etc., to be sent to, 1828
Public officials, 1791-2, 1809-10
Schedules, 1166-9
Standard Time, 1988
Telegraph, communications by, 1068-9, 1198
Translation into French, 779
Voters' lists, 2319
Addition and elimination of names, 3909-13
Copies, securing of, 2319-20
Married woman's name, 1827-8
New—when unnecessary, 1825-6, 1997, 4272
Possible delay in printing, 3902
Preparation of, 3878-99, 4271
Provincial, 2417-23, 2430-4, 2438-41
Amdt. (Mr. Ross) 2324, 2329-30, 2333-4, 2345-66
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to 3r., 4364
Voting
Language of voter, 1997
Manner of, 1103-5
Notwithstanding disqualification, 1825
On certificate, 1098-1101
Women voters, Quebec, in, 2419
Writ of election, 1166
Writ, nomination, election—delay, 1092
Militia
Active militia—allowances, 3654-74
Air Service, 4553
Annual drill, 3676-81
Cadet service, 3702-4, 3714
Civil pensions, 4553-5
Contingencies, 3714-6
Customs dues, 3716
Demobilization, 4549
Dominion arsenals, 3717-25
Engineer services and works, 3723-5

Guthrie, Hon. Hugh—Con.
Militia—Con.
Estimates, 4548-55
Grants to associations, 3725-6
Military properties and maintenance, 3726-7
Dorval, 3731
Toronto, 3729-31
Ministerial statement and summary, 3636-45. Estimates compared by branches with former years, 3636; increase due to higher prices, 3638; permanent force and slowness of recruiting, 3639; returned officers, 3641; volunteer militia, 3642; barracks, rifle ranges, 3643; unity of directing organization, 3644
Ordnance, arms, lands, etc., 3727-32
Permanent force, 4548
Staff, 4548-55
Warlike Stores, 4549
Militia Pension Act, 4020-1
Quebec's ancient fortifications, 424
Returned Soldiers' buttons, unauthorized wearing of, 4020

Guysborough Harbour, 2124

Habeas Corpus
Labrie case, 3227, 3295, 3558, 3840
M. for papers, 2014

Halbert, Mr. Robert H. (North Ontario)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 282. Parliament Building—Farmers' movement not a class movement, 282; popular unrest and its cure, 283; proposed general election—Franchise Act, 283; A United Canada, 284
Budget, 2941. Reply to Mr. Cockshutt, 2941; inheritance and income taxes, 2942; farmers' deputation on conscription—a former Conservative — the farmers and public affairs, 2943; public problems the concern of the ordinary citizen—economic as well as political democracy, 2944; public and press, 2945; profits system should function naturally—food production hampered—decrease of farm population, 2945; drawbacks to manufacturers—tariff tax on the coffin, 2946
Election for North Ontario, 1
Foster, Mr. A. DeWitt, ques. 1201
Franchise Bill
Contributions, 1191
Oath by elector, 1102
Recall, the, 2025
Grading export butter and cheese, 606
Indemnity of members, 4083
Oleomargarine, 1871-2
Soldier Land Settlement, 2147

Halifax
Grain elevator, ques. 1116
Marine agency—telephone, 2110

Halifax and Southwestern Railway, 3085

Halladay, Mr. H. H. (Bow River)
Alien immigrants, 820
Franchise Bill
Polling division, 1518-9
Income tax, charities, 3314
New party movement, 126
Soldier Settlement, 1701

Hanna, Mr. D. B., 622, 642, 1679, 4183. See also Canadian National Railway
Canada Steamships Company, and, 1742, 1789
Suit against Mr. Cahill, M.P., 2379

Hanna, town, 2379

Hansard. See House of Commons, Debates

Harbours. See their titles

Harold, Mr. John (Brant)
Food and Drugs Bill, 971
Indians and Franchise, 2055-7, 4035
Purchasing Board, 1485
Special War Revenue
Binder twine, 3610, 3623
Furs, 3569, 3791-2
Jewellery, 3579-80, 3584
Underwear, 3567

Harris, Mr. Lloyd, 1948

Harrison, Mr. Charles R. (Nipissing)
Budget, 3041. Iron and steel industry, bounties — French River waterway, 3041; Northern Ontario—Timiskaming by-election — Labour and One Big Union—class warfare denounced, 3043; Mr. G. B. Nicholson and organized labour, 3043
Eight-hour day, 382
Franchise Bill
Interpretation, 1991
Polls, hours to be open, 1921
Grand Trunk strike of 1910, and pensions, 1129
North Bay shore protection, 3160

Hartney, Mr. E. P., 4566

Hay, Mr. Thomas (Selkirk)
Campaign funds, 1222
Catalogues, postal rate on, 3744
Civil Service retirement, 3837
Franchise—voters' lists, 2441
House of Commons staff, 4566
Indemnity from Germany, ques. 1463

Health. See also Food and Drugs Bill; Honey adulteration; Opium and Drug Bill
Department, 43, 242, 263, 3539

Hearst Publications, 142, ques. 993, 1290

Hearst, Sir William, 3986

Hebertville-St. Joseph D'Alma mail, ques. 1000

Henders, Mr. Richard C. (Macdonald)
Alien immigrants, 835
Budget, 3015. Congratulation to former and present Ministers of Finance — direct taxation approved, 3016; income tax—removal of customs super-tax-postponement of tariff inquiry, 3017; personal position on the tariff, and on proposed taxes, 3019; party records on tariff compared, 3020
Canadian Wheat Board, 4351
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3408
Franchise Bill
Polls, hours to be open, 1923
Voters' lists, 2438
Opium and Drug Bill, 1645
Rural mail, 4529
Special War Revenue
Caps, 3566

Henderson, Mrs. Rose, 2807, 2898, 3039

Hennick, Mr. Daniel D., patents of, ques. 1510

Hewitt, the late Dr. Gordon, 2375-6, 2382, 2402

Hickey's Wharf, ques. 706

Hides, exports to United States, ques. 313, ques. 343

High Cost of Living, 68, 72, 78. See also Address; Board of Commerce; Budget; Popular unrest; Prices of necessaries, (Mr. Burnham) 321

Highways.. See Canada Highways

Hindus, soldiers. See Dominion Franchise

Hinton, Mr. W. P., 1311

Hocken, Mr. H. C. (Toronto West)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 284. Controversy between Mr. Rowell and Mr. Murphy, 284; French language in schools, position of Orange order, 285; opinion of Senator Belcourt, 286; French Canadian aims and ambitions, 287; clerical influence — Senator David's book, 288; Quebec's local autonomy, 289; French Canadians and the war—Orange order's war record, 290; Orangemen and political party; Orangeism a bulwark of the constitution, 291; Orange Sentinel, 292
Alien immigrants, and Canadian citizenship, 821
Budget, 2659. Congratulations to Minister of Finance, 2660; new taxes and the masses, 2660; personal views on tariff changed by conditions — protective tariff necessary, 2661; development of rsources—economy through reducing number of civil servants, 2662; promoting efficiency in Civil Service, 2663;
Canadian Wheat Board, 4113
Civil Service
Commission, employees, ques. 1121
Customs, employees, 317
House of Commons, employees, 1043
Inside, ques. 510
Dager, Herman, J., ques. 2182
Divorce Bills, remission of charges, 4321
Electoral atlas, ques. 317
Empire day adjournment, 2575
Franchise Bill
Polls, hours to be open, 1921-2, 1925
Proclamation, language of publication, 2296-9, 2301-2
Recall, the, 2036-8, 2042-3
Judges' salaries, 4338
Personal position as member, 2043
War profits in Britain, 2631-2

Hogs, raising of. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Homesteading. See Dominion Lands Act

Honey Adulteration Bill. 1r., 582; 2r., com., 3r., 798; Senate amdts., 2314, 2412

Horseracing,
Dr. Rutherford's report, 540
Race tracks and betting, 3415, 3427

Horses
Carload rates on, ques. 2010
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3204

Hospitals
Alcohol tax and, 3495
Ste. Anne de Bellevue, ques. 1115
Ships. See Canada Shipping Act (Sick and Distressed Mariners)

Houle, Mr. Joseph, ques. 2313

House of Commons. See also Deputy Speaker; Speaker
Adjournment, decorum at, 1838

House of Commons—Con.
Adjournment, to discuss matter of public importance. See the several subjects
Adjournments
Ascension Day, 2311
Easter, 752
Empire day, 2574-5, 2625-6
King's birthday, 3080
Answers to questions
Complaint (Mr. Sinclair) 1649
Audibility of debates, 345, 388, 394, 405, 461, 2126, 2317, 3521, 4055, 4419
Statements by Mr. Stevens and others, 1416, 4055
Suggested rearrangement of seats, 394, 1417
Business of, 3216
Complaint of delay, 2778, 3506, 3622, 4102, 4274, 4314, 4547, 4586
Legislation pending, 1789, 2723, 2779
Monday — Government business, 1464, 1573
Order of, 3106
Private Bills, special facilities for, 3957
By-elections, 148
Assiniboia, 1, 56, 126, 137, 168, 1172, 1174-84, 3473
Carleton and Victoria, 1223
Kamouraska, 948-9
Ontario North, 1
St. James, 707, 787
Victoria city, 1
Calendar of the House, ques. 2005
Chamber,
Acoustic properties of, 2317-8. See also under this title, Audibility
Central floor, ques. 2894
Committees, standing, 9, 304. For proceedings and reports, see titles of the several Committees
Debates, official report of Documents not read, insertion of. See Deputy Speaker; Speaker
French reporters, 1425
French speeches, translation of, 552, 697, 4587
Decorum
Conversation, 2317-8
Distribution office, 1037
Divisions
Address—amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) for general election, 303
Appeal from ruling of the Chair, 3664
Budget—amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 3077
Dominion Franchise Bill
By-elections, amdt. (Mr. Fielding) to 3r., 4360
Contributions, publication of, amdt. (Mr. Maharg) to 3r., 4373

House of Commons—Con.
Divisions—Con.
Dominion Franchise Bill—Con.
Naturalization—amdt. (Mr. Euler) to 3r., 4372
Paid propaganda—amdt. (Mr. McMaster) to 3r., 4378
Provincial lists, amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to 3r., 4366
Food and Drugs Bill—amdt. (Mr. Pedlow) to 3r., 1466
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition—strike of 1910;
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) 1572
Appeal from ruling of Chairman, 1327
Indian Act, amdt., six-months' hoist, 4179
Washington, Canadian minister at, 2475
Estimates, method of voting, 30, 108, 567, 2779, 3769, 4586, 4589
Indemnity of Members, 3228, 3853-4
See also Salaries Act and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill Alleged round robin, 2967
Correction (Mr. Fielding) of press report, 4171-2
Debate on motion for supply, 4069-95
Illness, 4458
Press, attitude of, 4441
Provinces and Dominion compared—statistical table, 4440
Taxation of, 3242
Internal Economy Commission, 9
Lobbies, admission of strangers to, 1629
Members,
Attendance of, 135, 964, 1838, 2782, 2968, 4457. See also, under this title, Indemnity
New
Election and introduction
Gould, Mr., 1
Halbert, Mr., 1
McDonald, Mr., 1684, 1787
Rinfret, Mr., 1357
Stein, Mr., 949
Tolmie Hon. Mr., 47
Threatened, 1743, 1841
Parliamentary Restaurant. See that title
Post Office
Use of box by Mr. K. H. Palmer, ques. 1001
Press Gallery. See that title
Private members' business, state of, 564
Privilege
Cronyn, Mr., resignation of Mr. Peck from Pensions and Re-establishment Com., 2081

House of Commons—Con.
Privilege—Con.
Edwards, Mr., report in Ottawa Journal and Montreal Gazette, 4503
Fielding, Mr., press report, 4171
Gauthier, Mr.—complaint of treatment by civil servant, 4097
Lavigueur, Mr.—Judge Lennox on non-English speaking witness, 1231
Kay, Mr., reference to by Ottawa Citizen as member for "Mississippi," 2016
Mackie, Mr. H. A., comment on absence from House, 2968-9
Questions, inquiry as to, 949, 2126
Questions passed as orders for returns, status of, 1743
Quorum, attendance of members, 964
Report not printed as ordered, 2016
Returns, asked for, 459, 618, 857, 4258
Senate and,
Joint Committee on unification of certain branches, 402
Joint distribution office, 1536
Sittings, duration of, 1838, 1893, 4432
Morning and Saturday, 2723, 2778, 3684
Two o'clock, 3080
Speaker's Chair, offer of from British Parliament, 3224
Staff
Bonus, 3228
Committees, 1042, 4547
Journals, 1038
Law Branch, 1038
Members' stenographers, ques. 2311
Organization and classification of, ques. 590, 753, 858, 919, 949, 1037, 3092, 4172, 4414, 4459, 4504, 4563
Parliamentary Counsel, 339
Sergeant-at-Arms Department, 3094
Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, 9
Translators, 552, 2093
Supply, Com. of—Friday rule—statement of Minister permitted by consent, 2366
Unauthorized distribution of documents in house, 1743, 1841
Vacancies, 160
Elgin, East, 1, 11, 1085
Kamouraska, 1
St. James, 1

House of Commons Act Amdt.. See Salaries Act

Housing, 3543
Adams, Mr., 3551-2
Demobilization and, 3543
Dominion—provinces agreement, 3548
Farmers and, 3546
Houses built, 3545-7
Programme, ques. 707

Hudson Bay Railway, ques. 806, 867, 2752, 4231, 4243
Manitoba land, ques. 1897
Res. (Mr. Campbell) 2014

Hughes, Lt.-Gen. Sir Sam (Victoria, Ont.)
Baker, late Lieut. Col., memorial to, 2776, 3557
Bolshevism, 3649
Canadian Wheat Board, 4123
Chauveau, Col., and Pinze, Col., 3666
Civil Service
Holidays, 4262
Retirement of members, 4066-9
Currie, Col. John A., M.P., 3655
Currie, General Sir Arthur, 3648, 3655
Dorval military property, 3731
Franchise Bill
Provincial lists, 3897
Registrars and enumerators, 3907
Fuel Supply, 3181
Special powers for Railway Commission, 4326-30
Indemnity of members, 4079
Militarism, 3649
Military training, 3704, 3709
Militia
Active militia—allowances, 3658, 3674
Annual drill, 3678
Barracks, 3648
Cadet service, 3704, 3709
Ministerial statement of Mr. Guthrie, 3648
Officers reverting to rank, 3681
Rifle ranges, 3649-54
Toronto property, 3729-31
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 4021
Speer, Rev. Dr., statement by, 3491

Hull and Montreal Highway, 1113

Hungary, 1059-60, 3983-4

Hunt, Mr. A. B. (Compton)
Military districts in Quebec, ques. 1035

Huron. See Indians

Hydro-Electric and Ontario Radial Railways, 3113-4, 4172

Ice-Breakers, 1598-1612, 2103-7
"J. D. Hazen," 1599, 1602
"Montcalm," 1606-7. 2112
St. Lawrence, ques., 317
New vessel for, 1620-1
Uniforms for men, 1603-4
Fair wage contracts, 1608-9

Ile D'Orleans and St. Lawrence River Navigation, 3295

Ile Verte, 2111, 3160

Immigrants
Landing of at Montreal and Quebec, 3226-8

Immigration
Emigration and, ques. 1119
Imperial ex-Service men, 387
In 1919 and 1920, ques. 3862
Medical inspection, 3555
Ontario and, 1012
United States from, ques. 1463

Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, rejected by Senate, 3426

Immigration and Colonization
Department, 4557
Conner, Mr. James, dismissal of, 415
Estimates, 3555

Imperial Conference, 114

Imperial Ex-Service Men, immigration of, 387

Imperial Munitions Board
Ships, ques. 1002

Imperial Press Conference, ques. 410

Imports. See also Budget; Customs; Trade
Certain countries from, ques. 2182

Income Tax, 2488. See also Budget, Ways and Means, Taxation
Inspector at Kingston, ques. 806, ques. 2181
Returns, errors in, 3302
Forms in French, 1084, 1573
Toronto payments, ques. 592

Income War Tax Act, 1917, Amdt. Bill. See Revenue Bills. For details, See Drayton, Sir Henry

Indemnity of Members. See House of Commons

India, Status of under League of Nations, 361

Indian Act Amdt. Bill. 1r., 386; 2r., ref. to Special Com., 704; 795; Report, 3617-8; Com., 4021; 3r., 4137, 4173
Amdt. six-months' hoist (Mr. Mackenzie King) 4179

Indian Affairs, Dept. of, 3273
Com. of Supply, in, 3265

Indians, 3265. See also British Columbia Indians
Enfranchisement, ques. 807. See also Indian Act; Dominion Franchise
Gordon's Reserve, 3628

Indians—Con.
Hurons of Lorette, 1152, 2014
Reserves, ques. 802
School buildings, ques. 2894
St. Regis, ques. 799
Sparrow, Dr. C. J., attendance on, ques. 1897
Tuberculosis, 3276

Industrial and Scientific Research, 1886

Industrial Disputes Investigation Act Amdt. Bill. 1r., 1357; 2r., 1900; com., 1901, 1971, 2190; 3r., 2248-51

Industrial Legislation, 1790

Industrial Survey of the Dominion, ques. 341

Infectious Diseases. See Canada Shipping Act (Sick and Distressed Mariners)

Inflation, 107. See also Currency Act

Information Service, Department of External Affairs, 4543

Inland and Coastwise Shipping Rates, proposed to be under Railway Commission. See Railway Act Amdt.

Inland Navigation
Canadian Government Merchant Marine and, ques. 2572
Freight boats, ques. 2572

Inland Revenue Act Amdt. Bill. See Revenue Bills

Inside Service. See Civil Service

Inspection and Sale Act Amendment Bill (Fruit Packages). Res. 1573; 1915; 1r., 1916; 2r., 2016; com., 2016; Ref. to Special Com. on Agriculture, 2023; Com., 3109; 3r., 3110

Institute of Agriculture, 2411

Insurance. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine; State Insurance for Returned Soldiers; Civil Service
Annuities, and, 403
Fire—mutual companies, taxation, ques. 2012, 2080
St. Lawrence route, 4515

Intercolonial Railway. See Canadian National

Interior Department, 3192

Internal Economy Commission, 9

International Financial Conference, 1465

International Fisheries Commission, ques. 311

International Institute of Agriculture, 2411

International Joint Commission, 3986
St. Lawrence river development, ques. 1120, ques. 1230

International Labour Conference, 798, ques. 803, 1790
Canadian representative at, 3359

International Parliamentary Conference on Commerce, ques. 2721

International Waterways, 3985. See also International Joint Commission

Internment, 4516

Inverness Railway and Coal Company, ques. 319, 2380, 4236-49

Ireland, condition of, 856

Iron and Steel Industry, 21

Irrigation Act Amdt. Bill. 1r., 3358; 2r., com., 3694; 3r., 3702

Isle Madame, fishery officers, ques. 3294

Italy, advances to, ques. 318

Jacobs, Mr. Samuel W. (George Etienne Cartier)
Bankruptcy Bill, 920, 3260-5
Board of Commerce
Murdock, Mr., letter of, 4489-99
Robson, Judge, correspondence, 3769
Budget, 3027. Shipbuilding—advances to Roumania and other countries 3027; Mr. M. Clark and Mr. Fielding, references to Jews—advances unaccounted for, 3028; Canadian Northern Railway and Montreal Tunnel Co., 3029; immigration, 3030; excess profits tax, 3031; promises of members of Union Government as to continuance for war only, 3031; beer tax—East Elgin vacancy, 3032; Mr. Rowell's address, 3033
Business profits war tax, 3111-7
Canadian National Pictorial, 4544
Canadian National Railways
Montreal-Ottawa, 4190
Civil Service
Employees on public works, 3134-5
Retirement of members, 4065-6
Criminal Code Amdt. (French version) 3083

Jacobs, Mr. Samuel—Con.
Export regulations, 3622-3
Food and Drugs Bill, 978-9, 1264-5
Franchise Bill, 768
Aliens—certificate, 2069, 2076-8, 2097
Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, 1514
Chief Electoral Officer, 1070, 1512-3
Conveying voters, 1062
Disqualification of candidates, 1087
"Ecclesiastics," 1070, 1075-7
Election officers, parties disqualified, 1075-8
False statement made to affect election, 1065-6
Indians, 2055
Naturalization
Amdt. (Mr. Euler) to 3r., 4370
Proclamation, language of publication, 2306
Returning officers, 1533-4
Telegraph, communications by, 1068-9, 1198
Grand Trunk Railway, 1488-91
Branch lines, 1314
Income tax
Distraint of goods, 3303-4
Not a joke, 3119
Indians, Christian missions amongst, 3268
Internment cases, 4517
Japanese occupation of Vladivostok, 1945
Naturalization, British Government, representations by, 3917
Peace treaty, United States Senate reservations, 1060
Purchasing Board, 1480
Schelking, Baron, ques. 3618
Shipbuilding
Contracts, 908, 919
Returned men employed, 909
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4145-8
Special War Revenue
Beer, 3605
Firearms, 3595
Overcoats, 3586
Stock transfers, 3626
Steel and shipping merger, 1967
Supreme Court Act Amdt., 2318
Typhus epidemic, 4545
Vessel rates—letter from Montreal Corn Exchange, 1727

Japan, 3670-1

Japanese
Canada, in ques. 805
Fisheries, 844
Occupation of Vladivostok, 1945

Jellicoe, Admiral Viscount
Visit of, 11, 92, ques. 310, ques. 314
Papers called for, 321
Report presented, 308, ques. 309, 344, 386
Australia and New Zealand, 1159
India, inquiry, 1290
Printing of, 386
Job Brothers, wharf rent, 2124
Johnson, "Pussyfoot," 786
Johnston, Mr. J. Fred (Last Mountain)
Agricultural problems, 2397
Budget, 2664. Protection does not retain population—no handicap should impede agriculture—appreciation of Minister of Finance, 2664; ex-Minister of Finance and public borrowing—school lands trust fund, 2665—Mr. Elkin and protection, 2665; farmers and payment of taxes, 2666; farmers and American grain markets, 2667; cross-benchers and the Budget, 2668; make the farmers prosperous, 2669
Canadian Northern securities, ques. 2006
Canadian Pacific Railway taxation, ques, 1360
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1940-1
Aliens—certificate, 2099, 2244
Returning Officer, 1583
Gordon's Indian reserve, 3628-71
Immigration and emigration, ques. 1119
Immigration in 1919 and 1920, ques. 3862
Last Mountain river dam, 3788-9
School buildings on Indian reserves, ques. 2894
Soldier Settlement, 2149-50
Special War Revenue Amdt. Bill
Containers, 3633
Wheat meal, 3796
Sugar importations, ques. 2009

Joint Committee on Printing. See Printing

Joint Distribution office, 1536

Joint Industrial Councils, 4512

Judges. See also Admiralty Act Amdt., Exchequer Court Act Amdt.
Salaries of in province of Quebec, ques. 1035, 3227

Judges' Act Amdt. Bill (Salaries). Res., 4323; 4331; 1r., 4340; 2r., 4341; 4417; com., 4418; 3r., 4426

Juvenile Delinquents Act Amdt. Bill. 1r.,2842

Kamloops, public building, 3156

Kamouraska, vacancy and election, 1, 948-9

Kapuskasing-Spirit Lake, 2398-2401

Kay, Mr. W. Fred (Missisquoi)
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3167-70
Honey adulteration, 2315
Missisquoi Bay—not fishing, 3535
Oleomargarine, 1968-71
Privilege—Ottawa Citizen—not member for "Mississippi," 2016
Rent of Daly Building, Ottawa, ques. 1200
Rural mail, 4525

Keefer, Mr. Francis H. (Parliamentary Secretary for External Affairs)
Franchise Bill, advance polls, 3876
National defence, 4302-3
Natural resources development, 1030
Oleomargarine, 1874
Passports, 4544
Shipbuilding, 634, 4142
Stewart, Mr. W. J., 3985
Vessel rates, proposed regulation, 1733
West Indian trade, 635

Kelley, Rev. P. R., 794

Kemp, Hon. Sir Edward (Toronto East)
Canteen profits, 709

Kennedy, Mr. J. Wilfred (Glengarry and Stormont)
Budget, 3067. Strange features of previous speeches—tariff, "moderate protection," 3068; protective tariff directs capital towards manufacturers rather than to-towards farming, 3069; dairying farm surveys, 3070; cheese product and prices—appropriations for the benefit of agriculture, 3071; features of the budget criticised or commended, 3072
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3406-8
Indemnity of members and salaries of ministers, 4447
Oleomargarine, ques. 1627, 1859
Rural mail carriers, 1283
St. Anne bridge, 3776

Kennedy, Mr. William C. (North Essex)
Budget, 2644. Expenditure and public loans, 2644; banks and their profits—Victory bonds, stabilizing, 2645; collection of taxation, American system—unnecessary expenses, Board of Commerce, Wheat Board, 2646; wheat prices, Canada's credit as affected by Govt. dealings, 2647; subsidies—shipbuilding, 2648; tariff, 2649
Experimental farms, 2384-7
Income tax, Toronto payments, ques. 592
Interest to Govt. by chartered banks, ques. 673

Kennedy, Mr. William C.—Con.
Parliament Building, 1426-7
Shipbuilding, 664
Vessel rates, proposed regulation, 1732

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie (Prince, P.E.I.)
See also Leader of the Opposition.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 23. Mover and seconder—external affairs dwelt upon in Speech from the Throne, 23; Grand Trunk agreement, absence of documents—Opium Convention, food not drugs, 24; Parliamentary government, extension of term of Parliament, 25; Franchise Act, 26; War-time Elections Act, 27; Proposed new Franchise Act—vacancies, 28; Parliament a deliberative assembly—voting of supply, 30; government by Order in Council—Prime Minister's absence, 31; Cabinet changes—commissions and government, 32; cabinet representation and responsibility, 33; need of post-war policy, 34; amdt. in favour of early general election, 35; (neg., 303)
Air Service, 4554-6
Auditor General's report, 458
Bill not distributed—objection to proceeding with, 1057
Board of Commerce
Murdock, Mr., resignation of, 4170-77, 4466, 4460, 4499
O'Connor, Mr., resignation of, 3685
Robson, Judge, resignation of, 4258
British Columbia Indians, 792-3, 950
Budget, inquiry as to, 1465, 2126, 2247
Budget, 2969. Congratulations to Minister of Finance, 2969; no further loans—direct taxes, approved—economy, 2970; Government's promise for period of the war—general election proposed, 2971; war-time spirit and extravagance—advances unaccounted for—contracts without tender, 2972; supervision of Parliament—loans to foreign countries — unnecessary appropriations, 2973; a profiteer's Budget—income tax delinquents—tax on war profits, 2974; war-wealth taxes in Britain, 2975; the community's share in production of wealth—high cost of living, 2977; industry and taxation—taxes on capital, 2979; manufacturers and freedom of production—basic industries, 2980; urban and rural populations, 2981; Liberal platform on agricultural production, 2982; Health Department and tuberculosis, 2983; child life and welfare—National policy,

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Budget—Con.
2984; St. John harbour and its trade, 2985; cargoes in as well as cargoes out—all classes to be considered in arranging taxation, 2987; Britain's industries and tariff policy, 2987; England and Germany—Supreme Council of Peace Conference, declaration, 2988; Mr. Fielding's amdt., 2989; Government's promise of tariff revision, 2990; Liberal tariff platform and Mr. Fielding's amdt., 2991; Liberal party's fiscal policy—British preference, 2993; Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Fielding tariff, 2994; common ground for Liberals, Farmers and Labour—need of unity on the part of those who think alike, 2995; two wings of the Government forces, 2996
Business of the House
Complaint of delay, 2778, 3506, 4102, 4274, 4314, 4547, 4586. See also under this head, Interim Supply Bill
Defective legislation—complaint of, 2779, 3147
Hasty legislation, 2779
Legislation pending, 1789, 2723, 2779
Long sittings, 1893, 4432
Morning and Saturday sittings, 2778, 3684
Wednesday evening sittings, 1044-5
Canada's national status, 464
Constitution, power to amend, 468
Parliament, authority of, 468, 474
Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert Borden, 472
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Business statement, 950
"Canadian Inventor", steamer, 3226, 3359
Canadian National Railways
Grand Trunk loans, 881
Withholding of information, 1656, 1669-70
Canadian Wheat Board, 4102
Cash gratuities to returned soldiers, 1083
Civil Service
Canadian National Railways employees, and, 3140
Classification, 3142-4, 3769, 3985, 4547
Insurance, 1055-6, 1779-80
Retirement of members of, 3836-9, 4063-8, 4461-2
Taxation of salaries, 579-80
Civil Service Bill—Senate amdts., 4059
Coal Operations Director, 3186-91
Jurisdiction, 3691
Orders in Council, ratification of, 3185, 3360-75
Cold storage and fox farming, 2407-9

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Concurrence in Supply, 4586
Contracts signed by Government before submission to House—Ottawa agreement, 1047
Criminal Code Amdt. (French version) 3081
Customs Tariff Act, 3174
Demobilization, 4550-3, 4585
Appropriation for, 1877, 1887
Dominion Franchise Bill
2r., reply to Mr. Guthrie, 723
Advance Polls, 1933-43, 1998-2002, 3874
Agents and officers, 1918
Aliens—certificates, 2075, 2212-7
Ballots
Counting before opening of poll, 1101
Forgery or destruction of, 1098
Bribery, treating, undue influence, personation, 1156-7
By-elections, 1091
Campaign funds, publicity — amdt., 4272-4
Canada Temperance Act, 2054, 3866
Chief Electoral Officer, 4136
Biggar, Mr. O. M., appointment of, 4268
Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, 1069-72
Contributions, 783-4
Counting and reporting vote, 1109
Corrupt practices, 1160
Debate on, arrangements for, 1072, 1944, 2002
Deposit, 1092, 1095
Return of, 1110
Disqualification of candidates, 1086-8, 4271
Election expenses, 1929-32, 1155
Accounts, audit of, 1929
Return by agent, 1155
Election officers, 1075
Fees, etc., 1112, 3867
Enumerators. See under this title, Voters' lists.
False statement made to affect election, 1066
Indians, 1535
Inquiry as to possible additions, 582
Interpretation
"Candidate," 1944
"Rural polling division," 1992
Liquor on polling day, 1108-9
Names not on list, 1926-8,
Oaths, 3877-8
Non-contentious clauses, 775
Oath by elector, 1102
Ontario voters' lists, 3880-98

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Dominion Franchise Bill—Con.
Paid publicity—Amdt. (Mr. McMaster) to 3r., 4376
Peace and good order, 1105-7
Polling divisions, returning officer's discretion, 1995-6
Polls
Fourteenth day, 1101
Hours to be open, 1920-2
Preparation of voters' lists, clause not acceptable, 3905-6
Provincial lists, amdt. to 3r., 4361
Recall, the, 2043
Recount by judge, 1110
"Registrar" and "enumerator," 1096-7
Registration—interrogatories, 1167
Telegraph communications by, 1068
Vacancies, 1091
Voters' lists
Addition and elimination of names, 3911-3
Candidates, to, 3908
Preparation of, 3879, 3905-6
Provincial, adoption of, 2355-7, 2365-6, 2421-36
Voting, manner of, 1103
Drill halls, 3147-8
East Elgin vacancy, 11, 1085
Eight-hour day, 373, 451-2
Contractual rights, 373-4
Employment offices, 3087
Minister, powers of, 3091-2
Orders in Council, effect of, 3091
Estimates and their consideration, 30, 567, 859, 918, 2779, 3215-7, 3769, 4586-8
European distress, 4546
Exchequer Court Act, 2201
Export regulations, 3622, 3690
Farm problems—fertilizers, 2405-7
Food and Drugs Bill, 956-61, 971-9, 1257-8
Franchise. See under this title, Dominion Franchise
Citizenship, and, 340
Gisborne, Mr. F. H., Parliamentary Counsel, 4587
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 11, 1113 1291, 1313, 1488, 1509-10
Appeal from Chairman's ruling—difference in question as put, 1327
Arbitrators, 3860
Correspondence, 1228, 1235, 1251-3
Ratification of agreement, 1329
Strike of 1910 and pensions, 1136-7, 1329-56, 1537-51, 1557-61, 4507-12
Amdt. to 3r., 1547
Hewitt, the late Dr. Gordon, 2382

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
House of Commons Staff, 3099
Housing, 3543-8
Expenditure for, 3543-4
Houses constructed—rural and urban areas, 3546
Icebreaker and car ferry, 1601, 1621
Uniforms of men on— contracts, fair wages, 1604-8
Income tax delinquents, 3119
Indemnity of members and salaries of ministers, 4075, 4431
Indian Act Amdt. 4029-39
M. six months' hoist, 4179
Industrial Disputes Investigation, 1900-15, 1971-4, 1977-85, 2190-7, 2248-9
Interim Supply Bill
Opposition's intention as to advances in future, 3215-7
Irrigation, 3700-2
Jellicoe, Admiral Lord, visit of and report, 11, 344
India, 1290
New Zealand and Australia, 1159
Kamouraska, by-elections, 948
Labour Dept. estimates, 3821, 4512. See also under this title, Eight-hour day
Labour, Minister of, 4512
League of Nations, 464
Ames, Sir Herbert, statement by, 3971
Canada's status, 360-7
Labour
Canada's status in relation to, 356
International Labour office, 355-7
Liberal Party's tariff policy, 2537
Little Sands, 4580
Magdalen Islands, 1601
Maple products, 797, 1254
Marshall, the late David, M.P., 10
Militia, 3710
Active militia—allowances, 3657-8
Annual drill, 3674-5
Cadet service, 3702
Contingencies, 3715-6
Dominion arsenals, 3720
Amdt. to reduce vote, 3721-2, neg. 3722-3
Military properties, maintenance, 3726
Ordnance land, 3728
Permanent force
Barracks, 4579
M. to reduce vote, 4548-9
Reply to Ministerial statement by Mr. Guthrie, 3645
Narrows, the, 3159
Naval Service
Additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4408-9

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Naval Service—Con.
Additional appropriation—Con.
M. to strike out, 4313-6
After-war conditions, 3511
Correspondence and negotiations, 4408, 4503
Dept
Estimates, consideration of—agreement as to debate, 4409
Debate should be deferred until Supplementaries, 3520
Increase of, 3506-8, 3512-3
Halifax and Esquimalt, 4390
Policy of government, 707
Pre-war lines, 3511
Submarines, acceptance of, 3512-3
Opium and Drug Bill, 1640-8
Control—statement of historical development, 559, 1761
Habit forming drugs, use of, 562
Orders in Council
Coal Operations Director, 3185, 3360
Ottawa city, agreement with, 579, 988-92, 1047
Parliament, two sessions in one year, 4457
Parliament buildings, 4
Peace treaty
Bulgaria, with, 464, 1057-60
Hungary and Turkey, 3983-4
Parliament, authority of, 3984
Pensions and Re-establishment, Com. recommendations, special facilities for legislation founded on, 3957
Petroleum and naphtha inspection, 1916
Prime Minister,
Absence of, 138
Health of, denial of statement by Mr. A. Thompson, 80
Return of, 2126, 2454
Prince Edward Island
Car ferry, 2103-4, 1601, 1621
Railway, 891-2
Purchasing Commissioner, 1469-70, 1477, 1483, 4580-1
Resignations of cabinet ministers, 386
Royal Canadian Mounted Police
Barracks, 4572
M. to reduce vote, 4574
Change of name of Force, 398
Expenses, 3203-8
Provincial authorities, and, 3196
Royal military college, 3152-3
St. Julien, battle of, 1357
Scientific Research, 2174
Services during the war—personal statement, 1405
Session of Parliament,
Progress of, 2779

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Shipbuilding
Contracts, 651, 892-4, 906, 909-10
Expenditure, meeting of, 915-7
Programme, 662-9
Soldiers
Cash gratuities, 1083
Great War Veterans' Association charges, 3223
Settlement, 1684
Speaker's Chair, 3225
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
"Excise and Sales" tax, 3318-23
Licenses, 3607
Stock in trade, 3604
Speer, Rev. Dr., statement by, 3492
Statistics, including census, 1880
Steel and Shipping merger, 1959-60
Supplementary estimates, inquiry as to, Supply and Budget, 918
Civil Government, 859
Com. of, arrangements for, 1597, 1615
Interim vote, 754-5
Technical education, 1762
Timiskaming election, 1995
Trade Commissions, 1885-6
War memorial, 3228
Washington, Canadian representative at, 448, 2178, 2454-63, 4540-3
Amdt. to reduce vote, 4540

King's Bench, Court of, jurisdiction, 3295-6

Kingsmill, Admiral Sir Charles, 707

Kingston
By-election, 459
Harbour improvements, 458
Income tax inspector, ques. 2181

Kingsville public building, 3153

Kinmel Camp, 709

Knox, Mr. Andrew (Prince Albert)
Budget, 3051. Increase revenues by lowering the tariff—farmers and packers, 3051; critics of Progressive party—attacks on Mr. Crerar—Canada should have greater population—immigration policy, 3053
Canadian National Railways, western extensions, 3388
Road and structural material, 3808
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3201
Stock-raising—sunflower ensilage, 2388

Kouchibouguac, 4578

Labour. See also International Labour Conference; League of Nations; Eight-hour day; Grand Trunk; Industrial Disputes; Bulgarian Treaty Labour—Con.

Capital and, 16, 22
Employment offices, 4512-3
International Labour Conference, 3359
Joint industrial councils, 4512
National industrial conference, 4512
Washington Conference, 371

Labrie Brothers. See Habeas Corpus

Lachine Canal, work on, 3423, 3561
Bridge, 3778, 4236

Lafortune, Mr. David A. (Jacques Cartier)
Indemnity of members, 3228
Lachine canal bridge, 3778, 4236
St. Anne bridge, 3775

Lake of the Woods, 3985

Lalor, Mr. Francis R. (Haldimand)
Luxury taxes in United States, 2528-9
Oleomargarine, 1782-4
Special War Revenue
Automobiles, 3598
Bank overdrafts, 3798-3800
Jewellery, 3583
Sales tax, 3609-17
Silk goods, 3573

Lanctôt, Mr. Roch (Laprairie and Napierville)
Budget, 2766. Balance sheet, items entered as assets, 2766; Canadian National Railways, deficit — prosperity and prices, 2767; expenditure criticised, 2768; war and conscription, 2769; burden of taxation—low revenue tariff favoured, 2770; war profiteers, 2771
Indemnity of members and salaries of ministers, 4444, 4450-5
Amdt. in Com. negatived, 4457-8
Judges' salaries, 4417-25, 4333
2r. of Bill objected to, 4341
Militia, 3650
Potato bag, 4562

Land Surveyors, ques. 1115, ques. 2006

Land Tax. See Taxation

Lands. See Dominion Lands; Indians
Canadian Northern, in Quebec, ques. 1626, ques. 2008
West, in, ques. 1118

Langton, Brig.-Gen. J. G., ques. 541, ques. 811

Language Questions, 87, 110, 209. See also Dominion Franchise; Education, Criminal Code Amdt. (French Version)

Language Questions—Con.
Auditor General's report, ques. 1627
Bilingual stamps, ques. 314
Blue books, ques, 992, ques. 1004
Calendar, House of Commons, ques. 2005
Customs forms, 3859
Debates reporters, 1425
Editorial Committee, 4322. See also Printing
Election proclamation, 1828. See also this title under Dominion Franchise
Farmers' Account Book, ques. 315
House of Commons, in, 697, 1039, 4587
Income tax forms, 1084, 1573
Lennox Mr. Justice and non-English speaking witness, 1231
Pensions report, 2016
Publications in French, ques. 541
Replies in English to letters in French, 1045
Schools, in, 285

Lapointe, Mr. Ernest (Quebec East)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 264. Proposed general election, 264; by-elections, 265; Union Government and public opinion, 266; mandate of Parliament, 268; cleavage between progress and reaction, 269; illness of Prime Minister, 270; Unionist party differences—Liberal party's attitude, 271; Franchise Act and redistribution, 272; Imperial Conference, 273
Air Service, 4555-6
British Columbia Indians, 793-5
Budget Speech, inquiry for copies of, 2626
Business Profits war tax, 3113
Public utilities, 3229-34
Civil Service classification, 555-6
Coal Operations Director Bill, 3370
Easter adjournment, 752
Electricity, competition and taxation, 3113-7
European distress, 4546
Exchequer Court, 2201-3
Federal Bureau of Education, 1383, 1401
Franchise Bill
Advance and proxy voting, 1163
Aliens—certificate, 2062-3, 2100-1, 2219-21
Assistant Chief Electoral officer, 1513
Canada Temperance Act, 2053-4
Chief Electoral officer, 4266-7
Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, 1072-3
Contributions, 782-3
Debate on, arrangements for, 1837
Disqualification
Charitable aid, those receiving, 1813-4
Indians, 2055

Lapointe, Mr. Ernest—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Interpretation—"Standard time," 1989
Polling divisions, 1518-21
Recall, the, 2036
Returning officers — public officials,
Voters' lists, 2418-30
Married Women's names, 1827, 2418-22
Gaspesia—railway extensions—memorial of Quebec Board of Trade, 4216-7
House of Commons
Notices of motion, 1628
Saturday and morning sittings, 2782
Staff, 4414, 4563
French translators, 1043
Journals, 1039
Immigration Act, 3426
Imperial Conference, 114
Indemnity of members and salaries of ministers, 4437
Income tax, 3242
Newspaper report, 4172
Indian Act Amdt. Bill, 4137, 4173-7
Industrial legislation, 1790
Lennox, Mr. Justice, 1232
Militia, 3670
Annual drill, 3677
Moving pictures—Canadian National pictorial, 4544
National Transcontinental Railway, rentals, ques. 1461
Naval Service—additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4317-9
Parliament Building, 1424
Prime Minister's return, 2126
Quebec riots of 1918, 1209
Resignation for Kamouraska, 1
St. James by-election, 787
Soldier settlement, 1685
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill—Quebec Board of trade and, 3457
Vessel rates, proposed regulation of, 1734
Washington, Canadian Minister at, 2449
Winnipeg strikers, ques. 2181

Lapointe, Mr. L. A., M. P., death of, 1

Last Mountain River, Dam, 3788-9

Lavigueur, Mr. Henri E. (Quebec County)
Fiset, Dr., Michel, ques. 317, 4530
Income tax, exemptions on account of children, 3298
Lennox, Mr. Justice, 1231
Militia, 3678
Orleans Island, public works, ques. 810
Parcel post supervisor, 4530
Parliament buildings, 1429
Pilotage, 1839

Lavigueur, Mr. Henri E.—Con.
Quebec riots of 1918, 1212
St. Jean wharf, ques. 317
St. Lawrence navigation, 3295
Ste. Famille wharf, ques. 317, ques. 810
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill — Musical instruments, 3628-9
Telephone contracts, ques. 1627

Leader of the Opposition
Speech on Address commended, 45
War the, and, 222, 1405

League of Nations, 8, 12, 161, 246, 4320.
See also Peace Treaty; Washington.
Ames, Sir Herbert, Financial Director of Secretariat, general statement by, 3961
Armenia, 855, 1465, 3979
Belgium, 3978
Brazil, 3978
Canada and the United States, 500
Canada's contribution to defray expenses, ques. 316, ques. 410, ques. 589, ques. 618, 3981, 4544
Canada's status under, 144, 214, 567. See also Canada's status
Canadian interests and representation, 567, 3982
Commercial treaties, 3973
Council of Nine, 3974
Disarmament, 3976
Eight-hour day, 449
Enforcement of decisions, 3975
German territory, occupation by France, 1046
Great Powers
If they withdrew, 3973
Those not now members, 3983
Greece, 3978
India, 361
Labour—Washington Conference, decisions, 371
Lenroot reservations, 496
Military contribution, 492, 502
Next assembly, 3977
Peace, 938
Persia, 3968, 3975
Public and private sessions, 3973
Russia, Poland, Ukrainia, 3968, 3978
Saar Basin, 3963, 3974
Secret treaties, 3973
Self-determination, 3978
Spain, 3978
Typhus epidemic, 4545
United States
Failure of to join, ques. 1118
Representation of, 3977

Leduc, Mr. J. Alfred (Westmount-St. Henry)
Butter prices, ques. 807
Grand Trunk entrance to Montreal, ques. 413
Hoarding foodstuffs, ques. 807
Lachine canal work, 3423, 3561
St. Pierre river floods, ques. 1115, ques. 4019
Westmount-St. Henri gatekeepers, ques. 998

Leger, Mr. Auguste T. (Kent, N.B.)
C. G. S. "Simcoe," ques. 413
Dredging, New Brunswick, 3781
Franchise Bill
Election expenses, 1932
Peace and good order, 1106
Polls, hours to be open, 1920-1
Proclamation—two languages, 1081, 1828-32, 2270-3
Returning officers, 1575
Voters' lists, provincial, 2332
Grand Trunk Railway, 1500-2
Inquiry for papers, 3769
Lightkeepers' remuneration, 1281, 2110
Milk tests, 2406
Oleomargarine, 1873
St. John armoury, ques. 994
Telegraphs and Telephones, 4576

Legislation. Royal Commission on, ques. 4502

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe (Maisonneuve) (Gaspé)
Administration of Justice
Labrie Brothers, case of, 3227, 3295, 3558-60, 3840
Bankruptcy Bill, 3256-63
Board of Commerce
Chairman, resignation of, 3863
Murdock, Mr., letter of, 4486-96
British mails, 4531
Budget, 2786. The new taxes, 2787; economy needed—naval expenditure rumours, 2788; British safety valves—Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George, 2789; The Onlooker and leading members of the Government, 2790; repressive measures criticized, 2791; Liberal party and tariff, 2792; Mr. M. Clark and the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 2794; party government—national unity, 2795
Buffalo herd, 3283
Canadian National Railways and Gaspesia, 4213-6
Caughnawaga, 3266

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Con.
Civil Service
Reorganization, ques. 3861
Griffenhagen and Associates, 3863, 4521-2, 3491
Holidays, 4261
Coal operations director, 3175
Coal Supply—M. to adjourn to discuss, 3686-8
Colonial Investment and Loan, 3859
Criminal Code Amdt. (French version) 3082
Customs
Appointments, etc., 3858-9
Forms, in French, 3859
DeCelles, Mr. 2968
Divorce Bills, charges, 4321, 4413
Dominion arsenals, 3717-20
Dorval military property, 3731
Dry docks, 4567-74
Editorial Board, 4559. See also, under this title Printing
European distress, 4546
Fish inspection, 4586
Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2223-4
Proclamation, language of publication, 1832, 2299-2302
Returning officers—public officials, 1799-1801
French treaty, 3425, ques. 3684, 4274, ques. 4323
Goods arrived—date of delivery, 4505
Fuel Supply—special powers for Railway Commission, 4325-30. See also under this title, Coal
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition—arbitration, ex-President Taft, 3490
Habeas Corpus. See, under this title, Administration
Hartney, Mr. E. P., 4566
House of Commons
Attendance of members, 4458
Staff—classification and organization, 4563-4
Income tax, 3237
Advertisements, 3240
Exemptions on account of children, 3298
Indemnity of members, 3310-1
Indemnities of members and salaries of ministers, 4442, 4458
Indian Act Amdt., 4137
Industrial Disputes, 2193-9
Judges' salaries and pensions, 4422
Labrie Brothers. See under this title, Administration
Magdalen Islands, 4282-4
Relief ships to, 1742

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Con.
Mail service, increase in, 4526
Military Service branch, 4517
Naval Service, 3513
Additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4309
Navigation, Pictou—Baie de Chaleur—St. Lawrence, 2186-9, 3492-3
Newspaper postage rates, 3349
Zone system, 3351
Nile Voyageurs, 3857
Northern Canada, resources, 3283-4
Peace Conference Labour Bureau, 4507
Pecuniary Claims Convention, 3857-8
Penitentiary Act Amdt., 3410
Permanent force, commissions to N.C.O's, ques. 3619
Point of order—relevancy, 3743
Post Office
Department, 3735-43
Estimates, 4521-2
Reorganization, 3739
Rural mail carriers, 4522
Post Office and Customs Departments
Rumoured investigation of, 3491
Printing, Joint Com. on, 4257, 4322, 4505
Purchasing Commission, 4581
Quebec-Gaspé service, 4282
Reindeer herds, 3284
Returned soldiers' needs, 3212
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3197, 3206
St. John harbour, 3492-3, 4567-74
Shipping federation, 2266
Sick and distressed mariners, 2260-2
Special War Revenue, 3444
Chewing gum, 3594
Returned soldiers, exemption of, Amdt. proposed, 3446-7
Supply, Com. of, Saturday, order for, 3840
Tobacco, 3819
Washington, Canadian Minister at, 2464
Correspondence, 3080-1
West Indies, 2892-3, 3161

Lennox, Mr. Justice, alleged statement by, 1232

Lesage, Mr. J. E. (Hochelaga)
Proprietary Medicines, ques. 1036
War Tax stamps, ques. 807

Letter Carriers. See Post Office

Levis Drill Hall, ques. 1360, 3727

Library of Parliament, 211, 1426
Joint Com appointed, 307
Librarian, 114. See also DeCelles

Lighthouses and Lightkeepers, 1281-2, 2110, ques. 1897
British Columbia, 1616
Charlevoix-Montmorency, ques. 319
Lighthouse Board, 2117
St. Lawrence river, 3295. For individual lights see their titles

Lindsay arsenal, 3717

Linen. See Flax

Liquor. See also Inland Revenue; Special War Revenue; Prohibition
Duties, 2487
Shipments to United States, 2107, 2118

Little Sands, 4580

Live Stock
Cattle embargo, ques. 340
Feeding of. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs
Shipments, inspection, 1614

Lloyd's. See Canada Shipping Act; Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Loan Companies Act Amdt. Bill. 1r., 855; 2r., 1776; Com., 1777; 3r., 1779

Loans, ques. 810. See also Victory Loans
Not another popular, ques., 810

Loans to Foreign Countries, Summary, ques. 318. See also Finance

Lobsters. See Fisheries

Lockeport
Froude's Point service, 4514, 4284-5
Railway connection, proposed, 3085, 3376, 4218

Loggie, Mr. William S. (Northumberland, N.B.)
Budget, 3033. New Parliament building—customs reductions, 3033; tariff revision—manufactured food products—adequate revenue, 3034; commercial and industrial competition — cottons, 3036; stabilizing the general tariff—export taxes, 3036; Mr. Fielding's amdt., 3037; Liberal tariff plank—the farmers and free agricultural implements, 3038; Budget approved, 3039
Franchise Bill—proclamation, 2267
Income tax returns, 3255-6
Newcastle-Tracadie, proposed railway, 4217
Opium and Drug Bill, 1754
Sick and distressed mariners, 3105

Loggie, Mr. William S.—Con.
Special War Revenue
Boots, 3565
Collection, method of, 3336-8, 3484
Dresses, 3586
Gloves, 3568
Jewellers, 3579-80
Lace and braid, 3573-4
Collars, 3574
Licenses, 3583, 3607
Penalties, 3302
Refunds, 3608
"Sales taxes" returned soldier amdt., 3452, 3610, 3336
Silk goods, 3563-4, 3572-3
Snowshoes, 3571
Stockings, silk, 3567
Taxes, effect of, 3485
Telegraphs and telephones, 4578

London, Canadian Mission in, ques., 410

Long, Mr. Charles E. (North Battleford)
Canadian Northern Railway extensions, 3391

Lorette, Hurons of. See Indians

Lotbiniere and Megantic Railway, ques. 590, 950, 4578, 4585

Louiseville, postmaster, ques., 1739

Lunenburg, acting registrar of shipping, 2108

Luxury Taxes, 2486. See also Special War Revenue

Macallum, Professor, 3806

Mack, Mr., Lunenburg, N.S., 2108-9

Mackenzie Avenue, Ottawa, ques. 999

Mackenzie, Sir William, private car, ques. 1628; ques. 2572

Mackenzie and Mann, 2379, 4184
Inverness coal, 4238

Mackie, Mr. Henry A. (East Edmonton)
Bird, Mr. Eustace G., ques. 1625
Canadian National Railways, rates, 4189
Carvill, Mr. George, case of, 4226
Child labour, 368
Civil Service
Dismissals and appointments, ques. 320
Holidays, 4058
Edmonton post office, 4518
Deputy postmaster, ques. 1739
Money parcel lost, ques. 412, 923
Eight-hour day, 337, 367, 379
Empire Day adjournment, 2575

Mackie, Mr. Henry A.
Federal Bureau of Education, 1374
Franchise Bill, 749
Aliens—certificate, 2091, 2096
Ballot boxes, 1097-8
By-elections, simultaneous, 1091
Chief Electoral Officer—Biggar, Mr. O. M., appointment of, 4269
Conveyance of electors, 787
Deposit, 1094
Notices, 778
Oaths, 780
Recall, the, 2028
Returning officers, 1522, 1532-3, 1577, 1582
Public officials, 1795-6, 1806
Voters' lists, 2426-36
Indemnity of members, 4074, 4448-9
Industrial disputes, 1910-11
Judges' salaries, ques. 1035, 4339, 4422
League of Nations, 3978
Marriage Act Amdt, 1787-8
Naturalization
"Disloyal," 3917-9
Galicians, 3922
Naval Service, additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4404
New party movement, 125
Oil from tar sands, 332-3
Oliver-St. Paul de Metis Railway, 344, 871
Privilege—comment on absence from House, 2968-9
Returned soldiers, provision for
M. for special Com. 513
Soldiers' widows and children, ques. 920
Saturday and morning sittings, 2781-2
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4005
Speech read—point of order, 2966
Washington labour conference, 371

Mackie, Mr. Herbert J. (North Renfrew)
Indemnity of members and salaries of ministers, 4446
Rural mail carriers, 4524

Maclean, Hon. A. K. (Halifax)
Canadian Wheat Board, 4111
Civil Service Act Amdt. 3133-9
Judges' salaries, 4421-2
Resignation as Minister, 448
Scientific Research, 2169

Maclean, Mr. W. F. (South York)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 129. Union Government — Prime Minister and Parliamentary government, 129; proposed general election, 130 Maclean, Mr. W. F.—Con.

Business Profits tax—public utilities, 3229-34
Canadian National Railways
Public ownership—duplications—colonization lines—community centres—situation in Toronto—public ownership in United States coming, 4195-9
Canadian Wheat Board, 4351
Civil Service, technical officers, 4514
Coal—alienation of lands, 3811
Estimates and their discussion, 4589
Federal laws, enforcement of, 4506
Fuel supply, 4506
Special powers to Railway Commission 4331
Grank Trunk Railway acquisition, 1439-42
Judges' salaries, 4335-41
Labour representatives, 4513-4
Newsprint shortage, 2968
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3947
Railway Commission, jurisdiction over telephones, 2413
Rural mail, 4525
Soldier Settlement—housebuilding, 1687
Steel and shipping merger, 1955-60
Toronto Union station, 3225-6

MacNutt, Mr. Thomas (Saltcoats)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 174. Proposed general election —census and representation, figures, 174; income tax and land value tax—the Farmers' party, 175; Liberals and free trade, 176
Budget, 2884. New party and its names—its platform on the tariff—former Liberals supporting the Budget, 2884; Mr. Stacey and duty on apples—Opposition tariff policy, 2885; effect of Budget on public revenues and on prices, 2887; income tax, land value tax, 2888; no tariff at all but land value tax and if necessary other direct taxes, 2889
Canadian Pacific Railway freight rates, ques. 2010
Franchise Bill, advance polls, 3876
Indemnity of members, 4081
Wheat participation certificates, ques. 802; ques. 802

McCoig, Mr. A. B. (Kent, Ont.)
Agricultural machinery, standardizing, 2079
Apple barrel, 2018
Budget, 2626. Manufacturers and tariff—United Farmers, 2627; effects of policy on stock-raising, 2628; profiteering

McCoig, Mr. A. B.—Con.
Budget—Con.
and Board of Commerce, 2629; prices, 2630; luxury taxes—taxation of war profits, 2631
Canadian Wheat Board, ques. 799, 3561, 4109
Chaplin, Mr., criticism by, 2816
Erieau port, 2115, 2118
Franchise Bill—voters' lists, 2350
Income tax
Part payment with return, 3254
Residence or investment outside Canada, 3251
Indemnity of members, 4083
Indians, enfranchisement, 4037
Opium and Drug Bill, 1705
Postmen, rumoured strike of, 3623
Purchasing Commission, 1472
Returned soldiers, provision for, 514
Special War Revenue
Bank overdrafts, 3624-5
Chandeliers, 3578
Sporting goods, 3571
Stock transfers, 3626

McCrea, Mr. Francis N. (Sherbrooke)
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1497
Stocks, 1571
Strike of 1910, 1570
Indemnity of members, 4454
Parliament Buildings, 1422-1434
Railways, purchase of by Government, 1454
Railway rates, 1498
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4013

McCurdy, Mr. F. B. (Colchester)
Budget, 2936. Budget should be circulated in condensed and popular form, 2936; supposed prosperity, prices, inflation, 2937; gold reserve—taxes and revenue, 2938; expenditures, public debt, 2939; sinking fund—effects of war extravagance, 2940; Government example needed — greater efficiency and economy in Civil Service, 2941
Income tax—corporations, 3239

McDonald, Mr. Angus (Timiskaming)
Budget, 3039. Failure to catch Speaker's eye—Timiskaming by-election — Mrs. Rose Henderson—One Big Union, 3039; in honour of Canada's soldier heroes, 3041
Canadian Northern Railway, North Bay through, ques. 3619
Election and introduction, 1684, 1787
Industrial disputes, 1909-11, 1975-7
Personal position on labour questions, 1977

McGibbon, Mr. Peter (Muskoka)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 215. Exchange situation, 216; Great Britain's industrial efficiency, German competition, 218; protection, income tax, taxation of foodstuffs, 218; duties on boots and shoes, agricultural implements, free goods, 219; tax on farm lands, development of resources —Franchise Act, 220; proposed general election, 221
Civil Service, 4059
Franchise Bill
Agents, 1098
Conveying voters, 786, 1062
Disqualification, charitable aid, those receiving, 1818
Income tax—Charities, 3246, 3314
Indians
Gibson, reserve, 3277
Tuberculosis amongst, 3277
Military training and cadet service, 3710
Newspaper postage rates, 3349, 3354
Northern Canada—oil properties, 3281
Oleomargarine, 1870
Opium and Drug Bill, 1746-50, 1753-6
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3937
Race track betting, 3429
Returned soldiers, 514
Scientific Research, 2164
Special War Revenue,
Automobiles, 3599
Boats and canoes, 3589-92
Proprietary medicines, 3602

McGibbon, Mr. Peter Robert (Argenteuil)
Parliament Buildings, 1434

McGregor, Mr. Alexander (Pictou)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech (Seconder) 18. Illness and absence of Prime Minister, 18; returned soldiers, 19; after-war conditions—class divisions, 20; iron and steel industry in war and peace, 21; labour and capital, 22
Pictou Harbour, 2185
Voters' lists, 2361-2

McIsaac, Mr. James (Kings, P.E.I.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 221. Parliament buildings, 221; contents of Speech from the Throne—Union Government—leader of the Opposition and the war, 222; illness of Prime Minister—proposed general election, 223; reply to Mr. McKenzie, 224
Agriculture, 2395

McIsaac, Mr. James—Con.
Budget, 2864. Congratulations to Minister of Finance—trade and production, 2864; national debt, 2865; revenue and expenditure—new taxes, 2866; Mr. Fielding's amdt. and address, 2867; fiscal policy of Liberal party, 2868; tariff investigation and amendment, 2869; national policy, 2870
Canadian National Railways
Prince Edward Island car ferry—standardization of railway — winter navigation—Georgetown harbour and terminals—invitation to Prince Edward Island, 4208-12
Car ferry, 2103
Franchise Bill
"Ecclesiastics," 1078
Polls, hours to be open, 1926
Voters' lists, provincial, 2360
Grading export butter and cheese, 606
Icebreakers, 2103
Lightkeeper's salaries, 2111
Masters and mates, examiner, 1610
North Lake harbour, 3159
School of navigation, 1612
Sick sailors, 3553-4
Soldier settlement, 2152

McKenzie, Mr. D. D. (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 46, 47. Congratulations, 47; new leader of the Opposition, 48; Montreal Gazette's and Hon. Robert Rogers' opinion of the Government, 50; Minister's absence from the House, 51; health of Prime Minister—extension of parliamentary term, 52; technical education — shipbuilding—production—returned soldiers-civil service reform, 53; Liberal policy—late Liberal leader, 54; exchange rate and foreign trade, 55
Admiralty Act, 3086
Appeals in sumary convictions, 3418-9
Arrest and summoning of persons outside the province, 3417-8
Banff National Park, 3770-6
Bankruptcy Bill, 3258-65
Betting machine, 3416
Board of Commerce
Constitutional question, 3685
Porter, Mr. Arthur S., dismissal of, 568
Budget, 2580. Tariff and tariff commission, 2580; the Budget, its purpose, 2581; revenue and expenditure, 2582; luxury taxes and prices, 2583; foreign credits, 2584; governmental interference in

McKenzie, Mr. D. D.—Con.
Budget—Con.
trade, 2585; government and by-elections, 2585; parties and the tariff, 2587; Liberals' and Farmers' tariff resolutions, 2588
Canada Grain Act, administration, 1877
Canadian National Railways
Appointments, how made, 3140
Canadian National Railway Company, 345
Extensions, 3376, 3384-9, 3393-4
Victoria County, 4241
North Sydney terminal, 4251
Reply to general summary of Minister of Railways, 872
Taxation of, 3393-4
Withholding of information, 1657-8
Canadian Wheat Board, 4114
Cape Breton
Need of railways, 875
Newfoundland steamship service, 4285
Civil Service
Bonus, 1270-2, 1276, 1280, 1284, 3147
Cheques, preparation of, 1285-7
Classification, 553
Insurance, 1780
Retirement fund, 460, 3836
Salaries, 3541
Temporary employees, 3133-5
Outside Canada, 3129
War record, civil servants with, 3131
Coal and iron resources, 327
Coal mining—prevention of explosions, 3814
Coal Operations Director, 3693
Orders in Council, 3186
Orders of, 3191
Cold storage for bait, 2408
Commercial Feeding stuffs, 3409
Criminal Code
Change of venue, 3421-2
Courts of appeal, 3423
Prisoner, re-election by, 3419-20
Currency Act Amdt., 460
Dominion lands, 1049-50
United States soldiers and, 1233
Dredging, 3786
Exchange rate, 55, 460
Exchequer Court, 2202-4
Experimental and demonstration farms, 2384-5
Firearms licenses, 3410, 3413
Fish inspection, 1053-4
Fisheries treaty with United States, 1290, 3161
Food and Drugs Bill, 957, 961-77, 1258-9, 1262
Prosecutions, 1263-9

McKenzie, Mr. D. D.—Con.
Food inspectors, 3540
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1942, 1999
Lists, 3914
Aliens—certificate, 2101, 2204
Bribery, treating, undue influence, personation, 1156-8
Burden of proof, 1161, 1825
Clerk of Crown in Chancery, 1071
Contributions, 1169
Corrupt practices, 1160
Deputy returning officers, 1074
Disqualification
Charitable aid, those receiving, 1818
Citizenships and franchise, 1824
Election officers, 1075-8
False statement made to affect election, 1066-7
Interpretation
"Lists of voters," 1989
"Voter," 1993-4
Orders in Council, repeal of 776-7
Payment of voters' expenses, 1064
Poll books, etc., returning officer, 1078-80
Preparation of voters' lists—complaint of unfairness, 3905
Proclamation—language of publication, 1832
Registrars, rural, attendance of, 3908-9
Returning officers, 1161, 1589-90
Voters' lists
Provincial, 1989, 2329, 2341-6, 2348, 2361-4
Voting notwithstanding disqualification. 1161, 1825
Writ of election, 1166
Franking privilege, 3358
Gas and electricity inspection, 1887
Government annuities, 462-3
Government steamers—wages, 1609-11
Grand Trunk Railway, 1291, 1299-1300, 1486, 1489, 1506-7
Branch lines, 1313-6, 1321
Stock, 1321
Strike of 1910 and pensions, 1130, 1551, 1568
Halifax-Cape Breton service, 4281
Halifax explosion, 3698-9
Harbour dues, 2189
Highlander's plaid and clasp, 445
Housing expenditure, 3550
Hungarian treaty, 1060
Icebreakers, 1600, 2106
Imperial conference, 359

McKenzie, Mr. D. D.—Con.
Income tax
Assessment methods, 3254
Charities, 3247, 3314
Delinquents, 3120, 3123-4
Exemptions, 3127
"Householders," 3249
Indians,
British Columbia, 951-5
Economic and religious situation, 3268
Education of, 3277
Enfranchisement, 4038-40
Nova Scotia, 3272-3
Tuberculosis amongst, 3275
Industrial disputes, 1901-4, 1912, 1972-3, 2199-2200
Isle Madame fishery officers, ques. 3294
Irrigation, 3698-9
League of Nations
Britain's treaty-making power and, 349
Washington Labour Conference, 355
Liberal leadership, and, 898, 913, 1277
Liquor sales—jurisdiction, 3498
Live stock shipments inspection, 1615
Loan Companies, 1778-9
Lotbiniere and Megantic Railway, 950
Marine hospitals, 3552-3
Masters and mates, 406, 562-4, 573-4, 979-87
Examiners, 1611
Militia
Cadet service, 3703
Headquarters officers, ques. 344
Mines Dept., explosives, 3804
Moving pictures of Canada, 1884
Naturalization, 3918
Naval Service, badges, 446
Necessaries, prices of, 327
Newfoundland, 4276, 4278-9, 4281
Cattle trade—veterinary, 2410
North Sydney
Harbour and breakwater, 2186, 3493-94
Terminal facilities, 875, 4241
Oleomargarine, 1875-7
Opium and Drug Bill, 1643-4, 1761, 1900
Ottawa city, agreement with, 578, 581, 989-91
Parliamentary restaurant, 3095-6
Patent Record, 1886
Peace Treaty, 1058-60
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3947
Fisheries and returned men, 3948
Pensioner resident outside of Canada, 4044-5
Vocational training, 3949
Widowed mother, 4044
Pictou harbour, 2186
Pilotage, 1967
Questions not answered, 949

McKenzie, Mr. D. D.—Con.
Railway Act Amdt. (Provincial jurisdiction) 3635
Railways, Govt. vs. private ownership, 872
Registration of shipping, 1614
Returned soldiers' insurance, 4054-5
Returned soldiers, 525
Soldier settlement, 527, 1695
Fishermen, aid to, 1691, 3948
St. John harbour—pilots, 2120
St. Lawrence dredging, 1617-20
Schools of navigation, 1612-3
Scottish Canadian Insurance Corporation, 583
Shipbuilding
Contracts, 911
Prices, 912
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3999, 4009-16, 4137, 4157, 4166
Sick and distressed mariners, 2266-7
Special War Revenue
Candy, 3593
Collection, method of, 3482
Debate on Bill, arrangements for, 3456
Excise and sales taxes
Returned soldier amdt. (Mr. Lemieux) 3452-3
Sporting goods, 3571-2
Spirits, illicit distillation, 3817
Statutes, suggested revision and consolidation, 3821, 4053
Steamboat inspection, 1051, 1767-76
Steamers "Champlain" and "Lady Grey," ques. 3619
Steel and shipping merger, 1965
Supply, interim, vote, 756
Supreme Court Act, 2315-16
Sydney harbour
South Bar lighthouse, 2116
Sydney Quarantine station, 3148
Sydney-Whycocomagh service, 4287
Terminal elevators, 1878-9
Ticket-of-leave system, 398
Treaty of Peace, ratification, 476
Wednesday evening sittings, 1045
Wharves and wharfage, 2123, 2189
Wheeler, Mr. S—rust proof wheat, 2388
Yukon and British Columbia, 3282

McMaster, Mr. Andrew R. (Brome)
Air service, 4555
Alien immigrants, 833
Asbestos, 4513
Banff National park, 3772
Board of Commerce—Murdock, Mr., letter of, 4474-8, 4494
Bright, John, on hours of labour, 326
Budget, 2518-20. Gross and net debt—taxation methods, 2521; inflation and rates of duty, 2522; deficit, and suggestions of economy, 2523; military preparations, 2523; public works, 2524; subsidies, 2525; taxation, methods, 2526; luxury taxes, 2528; tariff investigation, 2529; protection or free trade, 2530; United States free list—"Reduction Rimes," 2533

McMaster, Mr. Andrew R.—Con.
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Civil Service insurance, and, 1780
Canadian Mission in London, ques. 410
Canadian National Railways
Nomenclature and legislation, 3390
Taxation of, 3394
Withholding information, 1672-4, 1680
Coal Operations Director, 3694
Coinage
Deficient, 461
Silver—international standard, 400
Debates, difficulty of hearing, 1418
Eastern Townships, scenic beauty, 3538
Exchequer Court, 2204
Export regulations, 3622
Food and Drugs Bill, 955-9, 966-70
Franchise Bill, 738
Compulsory voting, 1062
Contributions—amdt. 1171, 1192-6
Paid propaganda, amdt. to 3r., 4374
Polling divisions, 1516, 1518-9
Proclamation, language of publication, 2284-5
Returning officers, 1524-5
Telegraph, communications by, 1068
Franking privilege, 3762-8
Grand Trunk Railway, 1313, 1325-8
Appeal from ruling of Chairman, 1327
House of Commons, pages, 3098-9
Indemnity of members, 4452
International Joint Commission—Sir William Hearst — Non-representation of Quebec, 3986
Irrigation, 3695-3701
Judges' salaries, 4419
Labour, Minister of, 4513
League of Nations, 3983
Expenses, Canada's contribution, ques. 410
Loan Companies, 1778
Militarism, 3706-7
Militia, Cadet service, 3704-8, 3706
Mines Department and Geological Survey, 4513
Missisquoi Bay, 3538
Naval Service badges, 444
News Service, 4333
Opium and Drug Bill, 1758

McMaster, Mr. Andrew R.—Con.
Palmer, Mr. K. H., ques. 1001
Parliament Building, 1418, 1429-30
Peace, 230-1
Peace Treaty, Ratification, 478, 3984
Pensions
French reservist from Canada, 4048
Widowed mothers, resident outside of Canada, 4045-6
Post Office Dept, postal rates, etc., 3738, 3756-8
Press censorship, ques. 541
Purchasing Commission, 1476
Race track betting, 3427-8, 3432
Regina Library, 396
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 396-7
Shipbuilding, 638, 666-7, 907-9
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3989-92, 4154-61
Special War Revenue, 3791
Administration — book of instructions suggested, 3791
Caps, 3566
"Excise and sales" and luxury taxes, 3466-7
Changes, date of coming into effect, 3607
Clocks and watches, 3574
Currency, foreign, depreciated, 3615
Fountain pens, 3577
Fuel, 3609
Glassware, cut, 3569
Imports and manufactures, 3566
Jewellery, 3582-4
Musical instruments, 3596
Neckwear, 3790
Proprietary medicines, 3603-4
Refunds, 3607
Socks, 3566
Sporting goods, 3570-1
Umbrellas, 3568
Underwear, 3568
Wedding rings, 3797
Steamboat inspection, 1770-75
Steamboat subsidies, 4515
T. Eaton Life Assurance Company, 669
Washington, Canadian representative at,

McMasterville, Explosive works at, 2247

McNichol, Mr. J. L. ques. 994

McQuarrie, Mr. W. G. (New Westminster)
Judges' salaries, 3853
Returned soldiers, 537

Magdalen Islands, 649, 1601, 4586
Visit of "Canadian Sealer," 649
Relief ships to, 1742
Steamship services, 4276-87

Magill, Dr., 4124-5, 4342-7

Maharg, Mr. John A. (Maple Creek)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 299. Farmers' movement, 299; reply to Sir Thomas White, 300; reply to Mr. McGibbon (Muskoka)—returned soldiers, 301; taxation of war profits, 302; tariff protection—proposed new Liberal and Conservative party, 303
Alien immigrants, 827, 839
Budget, 2632. Luxury taxes, 2632; Liberal party's tariff policy—Great Britain under free trade, 2633; Wheat Board and the farmers, 2635; farmers and purchase of American implements, 2636
Campaign funds, 1224
Canadian Wheat Board, 4131-5, 4346, 4351, 4355
Franchise Bill
Contributions, 783, 1189, 1191, 4373
Election expenses, 1154
Grand Trunk Railway, 1458
Indemnity of members, 4090
Opium and Drug Bill, 1634-7, 1641-2
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 395
Pensions, 615
Shipbuilding, inland waters, vessels for, 913
Soldier Settlement, cattle branding, 1700
Universal military training, 942

Mail Carriers, ques. 343. See also Civil Service; Post Office; Rural Mail

Manion, Mr. Robert J. (Fort William and Rainy River)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 211. Ontario and Quebec—Parliamentary librarian — Parliament Building, 211; proposed general election, 212; franchise, pensions, shipping, civil service, development, 212; tariff, 213; League of Nations, Canada's status, 214
Agricultural and industrial populations, ques. 1002
Budget. 2544. Tariff, 2544; free trade or moderate tariff, 2545; markets, 2547; foreign commerce, 2548; how to estimate prosperity and progress, 2550, 2634; railways, agriculture, pulpwood, minerals, 2552; foreign competition, 2554; tariff revision, 2554
Canadian Wheat Board, 4111
Chisholm, Col. H. A., ques. 3359
Coal Operations Director, 3179
Dairying—cheese, 2406

Manion, Mr. Robert J.—Con.
Food and Drugs Bill, 1636, 1642
Fort Frances public buildings, 3151-2
Franchise Bill
Advance and proxy voting, 1165
Contributions, 1190-1
Disqualification—charitable aid, those receiving, 1815, 1818-9
"Ecclesiastics," 1078
Non-residents and non-electors, 786
Voters' lists, 2429-30
Income tax—aliens in Canada, 3250
National resources development, M. in favour, 1017
Oleomargarine, 1864
Opium and Drug Bill, 1759
Returned Soldiers, M. for Special Com. 519
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 390
Shipbuilding—foreign trade, 906
Special War Revenue
Ethyl alcohol, 3604
Furniture, 3575
Medicines, 3627, 3631
Sporting Goods, 3571
War medals, ques. 1003, 1046, ques. 1120

Mann, Sir Donald, private car, ques. 2183

Mantezono. See Labrie

Manufacturers. See also debates on Address; Budget
Aid in appeals, 321
United States competition, 2857
Vessel rates, 1728

Maple Products Adulteration Bill. 1r., 582; 2r., 796; com, 796, 1254; 3r., 1256; Senate amdts., 2366, 4020

Marcil, Hon. Charles (Bonaventure)
Banff National park, 3777
Bonaventure
Experimental farms, ques. 414
Pensions, ques. 993
Postmasters, ques. 507
Public Works engineer, ques. 411
Wharves, ques. 411
Bonaventure and Gaspe, dairy products and fish, ques. 587
Bridges and the provinces, 3771-3
Campbellton-Cross Point
Bridge, ques. 3490
Ferry, ques. 342, ques. 411, ques. 588, ques. 1789, ques. 2415
Canadian National Railways—cars, 864
Chambly fort, 3725
Civil Service retirement, 3833
Dredging, 3783-7

Marcil, Hon. Charles—Con.
Franchise Bill
Election expenses, 1932
Polls, hours to be open, 1921-2
Gascons wharf, ques. 411
International Joint Commission, 3986
League of Nations, 3982
Matapedia
Bridge and highway, 3780, ques. 411
Station, freights, ques. 587
Mines Dept., 3803
Explosives, 3804
Montreal barracks, 3724-7
Montreal-Quebec-Gaspe service, ques. 587
Newsprint shortage, 2968
Peat, 3806
Public works, resident engineers, 3787
Quebec and Western Railway, ques. 411, ques. 412
Quebec, Oriental and Atlantic Railway, ques. 411, ques. 412, ques. 507
Registered postal rate, 3732-5
Restigouche bridge, ques. 411
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3998
Special War Revenue
Lace, 3793
Prices, how arrived at, 3790
Spirits and beer, 3817-8
Tache, Mr. Chas. Eugene, ques. 3490
Tobacco, 3818-9

Marcile, Mr. J. E. (Bagot)
Acton Vale post office, ques. 1899
Bagot
Electoral list, ques. 2011
Postal inspection, ques. 2721
Flynn, Capt. Percy, ques. 2415
Franchise Bill, 1991-2
Military Service defaulters, ques. 507
Picard, Mr. Elzear, ques. 993
Ste. Rosalie-Bagot spur line, ques. 2009
Theodore d'Acton post office, ques. 2011

Margeson, Mr. J. W., ques. 1036

Marine. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Canada Shipping Act. For vessels, see that title
Buoys, 2116
Department
Classification, 2113
Members of Parliament, treatment of, 2121
Services, restored to, 3507
Hospitals, 3552. See also Canada Shipping Act (Sick and Distressed Mariners)
Liquor shipments and, 2107
Wrecking plants, 1615, 2103
Wrecks, investigations, 1612

Marine and Fisheries
Com. appointed, 307

Maritime Provinces, Harbour Commissions, 3492-3

Marriage Act Amdt. Bill. 1r., 1787

Marriage Licenses, 3415

Marshall, Mr. David, M. P., death of, 1, 10

Martin, Mr. Peter F. (Halifax)
Fisheries
Benefits from government policy, 3535
Estimates, 3521
Halifax explosion, 3699
Voters' lists, 2337

Masonic Records in Parliament Tower, ques. 2894

Masters and Mates. See that title under Canada Shipping Act

Matapedia
Highway, ques. 411, 3780
Station, ques. 587

Matches—use of phosphorus, 356

Mayrand, Mr. Hormisdas (Maskinongé)
Louiseville postmaster, ques. 1739

Meat and Canned Goods Inspection, 2411

Medicines—See Foods and Drugs; Opium and Drugs; Inland Revenue; Proprietary; Special War Revenue

Meighen, Hon. Arthur (Minister of the Interior and Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 152; Farmers' movement a class movement, 153; franchise and conscription of aliens; reply to Mr. Caldwell—Canada's national status, 156; monetary exchange and trade, 157; proposed general election—Cabinet representation—illness of Prime Minister, 158; Union Government's mandate—government by commission, 159; vacancies, 160
Alien immigrants, 831, 2238-40
Alpine Club, 3288
Banff National park, 3771-2
Board of Commerce, Murdock, Mr., letter of, 4492-4500
British Columbia Indians, 386, 787-95, 950-5, 1047, 3273. See also under this title, Indian Act.

Meighen, Hon. Arthur—Con.
Budget, 2683. "Advances unaccounted for," 2683; luxury taxes, 2684; income tax in Canada, in Great Britain and in New Zealand, 2685-2707; tariff—England as an example, 2686; balance of trade, Great Britain and the United States, 2687; people below the poverty line, 2688; effect of free trade on movement of population, 2689; British industry and free trade, 2690; United States an alleged free trade country, 2690; agricultural population in Great Britain and in Canada, 2690; Great Britain and Germany in the field of manufacture, 2691; British reports on industries—iron, steel, tinplate, 2692; electrical trades, engineering trades, 2695; cotton trade, textile industries, 2696; Liberal party and tariff, 2697; Farmers' party tariff plank, 2699; duty on agricultural implements, 2701; Mr. Fielding and "adequate protection," 2702; tariff and foodstuffs, 2703; answers to questions invited—Liberal and agrarian party platforms, 2704; Mr. Crerar and direct taxation—tax on unearned increment of land, 2706; tariff should remain in force pending revision, 2708
Canadian Forestry Association, 3285
Canadian National Railways and Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Information properly withheld, 1664, 1668-70
Canadian Wheat Board, 4115-24, 4136, 4346
Capital punishment, 1152
Coal Operations Director, 3690
Fuel situation, 3175, 3182-92
Orders in Council, 3186-9
Ratification of, 3361, 3365-75
Orders of Director, 3189-92
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. 704, 1048-50
Homesteading privileges to United States Soldiers, 1113, 1233-4
Dominion Water Powers Branch, 3289-93
Employment offices, 2313-4, 3087, 4512-3
Minister, powers of, 3092
Orders in Council, effect of, 3088-91
Explosive works at Beloeil, 2314
Franchise Bill, 756-9
Aliens—certificate, 2238-40
Grand Trunk Railway
Stocks, value of, 1562-3, 1572
Strike of 1910, 1556-64
Hurons of Lorette, 1152

Meighen, Hon. Arthur—Con.
Indian Act Amdt. Bill, 386, 795-6, 4029-40, 4137, 4174
Indian lands (British Columbia) 386
Indians, 3265-80
Agents—salary and bonus, 3273
British Columbia, 3273
Caughnawaga, 3266-7
Education, 3277-80
Game laws and, 3280
Gordon's Reserve—school, 3270-1, 3278
Health and medical attendance, 3275
—Tuberculosis, 3276
Hurons of Lorette, 1152
Missionary work amongst, 3268
New Brunswick, 3273
Nova Scotia, 3273
Prairie Provinces and Northwest, 3267
Prince Edward Island, 3273
Reserves, surrender of, 3274
Self-sustaining, 3268
Sioux, 3267
Six Nations—education, 3280
Ungava—distress amongst — reindeer herds to be established, 3276
Yukon, 3274
Industrial Disputes, 1900-15, 1971-5, 1981-5, 2190-2200, 2248
International boundary surveys, 3293
Irrigation Act Amdt., 3358, 3694-3702
Joint Industrial Councils, 4512
Labour Dept. salaries, 4506
Lake Winnipeg and Elk Island, 3287
Macallum, Professor, 3806
Mill, John Stuart, and protection, 2907
Mines Dept. 3801-15, 4513
Coal, 3810
Dominion and provinces, 3803
Explosives, 3804
Explosions, avoidance of, 3814
Investigation of deposits, leases, etc., 3808
Lignite, 3805
Oil, 331, 3808-10
Overlapping, 3802
Peat, 3806
Resignations, salaries, etc., 3801-3805
Resources, alienation of, 3810
Road and structural material, 3808
National defence, 4302-4
National Industrial Conference, 4512
National parks, 3283, 3771
Naturalization—franchise and, 770-1
Natural resources of Western Provinces, 3293
Naval Service, 4302-4, 4315
Additional appropriation, $1,700,000 4393-7

Meighen, Hon. Arthur—Con.
Northern Canada's area, resources and administration, 3280-4
Northwest Game Act Amdt. 2892
Oil—Canada's position and resources, 331
Peace Conference Labour Bureau, 4507
Permanent Force, 3210-1
Provincial affairs and federal aid, 833
Reindeer—caribou, 3276, 3284
St. John River water-powers, 3290-3
Seed grain advances, 3286-8
Soldier Settlement, 1289, 1685-1702, 2127-50, 3218-24
Administration—criticism, 3223
Defaults, 3223
Fishermen, 3219
Irrigated lands, 3223
Loans, employment for districts, 3220
Ministerial explanation, 3192-4
Provincial free grants and, 3223
Repayments, 3218
Solicitors' fees, 3218
Staff, salaries, 3221-3
Training and allowances, 3224
Surveys, 3293
Tariff, personal position on—Mr. Crerar's criticism, 2900
Tar sands, 333
Technical Education, 1761
Yukon administration, 3281-2
British Columbia and, 3282
Yukon Placer Mining Act, 2892, 3106, 4264

Members of Parliament. See also House of Commons
Attendance of in House, 2782-6

Members' Indemnity. See House of Commons

Members' Stenographers, salaries of, ques. 2311

Menace, the, ques. 1899

Mennonites, emigration to United States, 2127, 2179, 2248

Mercantile Marine. See Canadian Govt. Merchant Marine; Canada Shipping Act

Metabetchouan postmaster, ques. 1120, 2876

Meteorological Service, 2125

Methylated Spirits for industrial power, 324, 3820-1

Mewburn, Hon. Sidney C. (East Hamilton)
Battlefields Committee, 2078
Resignation as Minister, 447

Michaud, Mr. Pius (Restigouche and Madawaska)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 214. Popular unrest—proposed general election, 215
American loans, ques. 313
Begin, Cardinal, insult to, 1574
Edmundston post office, ques. 2722
Franchise Bill
Oaths, administration of, 779
Proclamation, language of publication, 1828-32
Returning officers, 1591
Newspaper postage rates, 3349
Railway cars, 1114
Roy, Mr. Gustave, ques. 1898
St. John river—International Commission, ques. 1623
Special War Revenue—boots, 3565
Theriault and St. Quentin, N.B., 3080
Wheat exports and imports, ques. 313, ques. 590

Middlebro, Mr. W. S. (North Grey)
Food and Drugs Bill, 960
Franchise Bill
Contributions—Amdt. (Mr. McMaster) 1193-4
Polling divisions, 1517
Returning officers, 1580-1
Highways, payments to Ontario, 1046
House of Commons staff, 1038
Income tax—charities, 3246

Middlings. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs; Grain

Militarism. See Cadet

Military College, 3152

Military districts in Quebec, ques. 1035

Military Police, ques. 804; ques. 805

Military Service Act
Agricultural representatives, 3399
Collections by Mr. Cimon, ques. 1461; ques. 1462
Defaulters
Chicoutimi, ques. 409
Fines, ques. 507, ques. 543
Military Service branch, 4516

Military Training, 923. See also Militia; Cadet Service

Military Uniforms
Colleges, etc., for, ques. 413

Militia and Defence
Active militia—allowances, 3654
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to reduce, 3657; neg. 3673
Air Service, 4553
Annual drill, 3674
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to reduce, 3675; neg. 3679
Arsenals Dominion
Lindsay, 3717
Quebec—employees, ques. 1898
Associations, grants to, 3725
Cadet service, 3702
Contingencies, 3714
Customs dues, 3716
Demobilization, 4549
Department
Classification, ques. 3358, 4019
Headquarters officers who did not see service in France, ques. 506
London employees, ques. 671
Permanent appointments, ques. 2079
Printing and stationery, 4549
Engineer services and works, 3723
Headquarters staff, ques. 344, ques. 1511, 4548
Levis drill hall, ques. 1360
Military instructors for educational institutions, ques. 413
Military Service Branch, 4516
Ministerial statement, 3636
Military properties, maintenance, 3726
Ordnance, arms, lands, etc., 3727
Permanent Force, 4548
Barracks, 4579
Commissions to N.C.O.'s, ques. 3619
Flynn, Capt. Percy, ques. 2415
Quebec's ancient fortifications, 421
Rifle ranges—Connaught, ques. 671
Long Branch, 3728
Staff, 4548
Training areas, 4549
Transport and freight, 4549
Uniforms for colleges, ques. 413
Use of exhibition buildings by, ques. 2009
Warlike stores, 4549

Militia Pensions Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 1r., 3959; 2r., 4020; Com. 4020; 3r., 4021

Millers. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs; Grain

Miners' Disputes. See under Coal Operations

Mines and Minerals. See also Natural Resources; Yukon Placer
Asbestos, 4513
Coal. See that title
Com. appointed, 307

Mines and Minerals—Con.
Copper, 4513
Department, 3801. See also Geological Survey
Employees, resignation, ques. 672, 3802, 4512
Labour in, 370
Machinery, imported, ques. 1625
Oil, 331, 3281, 3808-10
Unused mineral deposits, 3810

Ministers of the Crown. See also Cabinet
Absence of, from Seat of Govt. 39
Attendance in Parliament, 51
Disqualification as candidate for House of Commons, 1086
Resignations of, 386, 447
Salaries, 3228, 4379

Minneapolis stockyards, 3166-7

Mint. See also Coinage; Ottawa Mint Act
The Royal, Ottawa Branch, 565

Missisquoi Bay, Net fishing, 3535-8

Molloy, Mr. J. P. (Provencher)
Elevators, ques. 1358
Franchise Bill
Polling divisions, 1518
Returning officers, 1595
Notices of motion, inquiry, 1628

Monroe Doctrine, 4294, 4310, 4404

"Montcalm," Icebreaker, 1060. See also Icebreakers

Montmagny, Colonization lots in, ques. 1229

Montreal
Corn Exchange, vessel rates, 1727
Harbour, wharves, ques. 674
Immigrants, landing at, 3226-8

Montreal and Hull Highway, 1113

Morden, Col., 1948

Morphy, Mr. Hugh B. (North Perth)
Active militia—allowances, 3659
British North America Act Amdt. 811
Canadians in Imperial service—Capt. Barron, 857
Cattle trade, 2373
Dairy industry, 2403-4
Difficulty in hearing debates, 463
Eight-hour day, 452-5
Franchise Bill
Chief Electoral officer—Mr. Biggar, K.C., 4267
Conveying voters, 1061

Morphy, Mr. Hugh B.—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Counting and reporting vote, 1109
False statement made to affect election, 1066
Interpretation, "Candidate" 1943-4
Liquor on polling day, 1108-9
Peace and good order, 1106
Polls, hours to be open, 1924-5
Proclamation—language of publication, 1829-30, 2274, 2285, 2293-6, 2304-6
Provincial lists, 3898
Returning officers
Oath of, 1166
Public officials, 1797
Voters' lists, 2425-6
Franking privilege, 3764-7
Grand Trunk Railway
Strike of 1910, and pensions, 1128, 1133, 1537-9, 1566, 4509-11
Government annuities, 463
House of Commons staff, 4565
Industrial disputes, 2197
Intercolonial Railway, 1443
League of Nations
Armenia, 3979
Enforcement of decisions, 3976
Provinces of Canada, position of, 452
Secret treaties, 3973-4
Second meeting, 3978
United States, 3981-2
Lignite, 3805
Militia—Dominion arsenals, 3718-9
National defence, 4302-3
Newspaper postage, 3753
Oil—leases, etc., 3809
Peat, 3807
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, provincial authorities and, 3196
Rulings and statements as Chairman
Chair to be addressed, 4481
Decorum, 4481
Judiciary, reference to, 4483
Shipbuilding advances Bill, 4149, 4163
Soldier Settlement, 1688, 2153
Steel ammunition charges, 3718-9
Trust and Loan Company of Canada, 586

Morrison's Limited, ques. 997

Motions, Inquiries concerning, 1628

Motor Cars. See Automobiles

Mounted Police. See Royal Canadian

Moving Pictures
Canada film service, 1882
Canadian National Pictorial, 4544
Tax on, removal of, 2487, ques. 3489

Mowat, Mr. Herbert M. (Parkdale)
Active militia—allowances, 3658-9
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 56. Proposed general election—by-election in Assiniboia, 56; Hon. Mr. Blondin—French Canadian Cabinet representation, 57; Liberal party and war policy, 58; Union party and Liberal members—conscription and party, 59
Budget, 2576. Congratulations to Finance Minister—tariff, 2576; agricultural implement prices—tariff and manufacturing concerns from United States, 2577; Mr. Fielding and tariff, 2578; militia expenditure and military preparedness, 2579; Imperialism, 2580
Canada Security Assurance Company, 1103
Canadian Expeditionary Force, ques. 1200
Civil Service retirement, 4067, 4464
Divorce Bills, remission of charges, 4413
Franchise Bill
Ballot—black border, 1168
Compulsory voting, 1064
Contributions — Assiniboia expenses, 1174-8
Election officers, 3868
Non-residents and non-electors, 785
Judges' salaries and pensions, 4426
Naval service, 3510
Badges, 441
Oleomargarine, 1873-4
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4152
Special War Revenue
Food, explanation desired, 3632-3
T. Eaton Life Assurance Company, 669
Toronto military property, 3728, 3730
Universal military training, M. in favour of, 923

Municipal Employees, Industrial Disputes Investigation Act and, 1902

Munitions Resources Commission, 2892

Murdock, Mr. See Board of Commerce

Murphy, Hon. Charles (Russell)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 231. Reply to Mr. Rowell—Religious orders from France, 231; secretarial fund, 238; Mr. Rowell's income tax, 240; expenditures on conferences, publicity, etc., 241; Department of Health—Mounted Police, 242; Mr. Rowell and his colleagues, 245; Peace Treaty and League of Nations—eight-hour day, 246; circular of Orange order, 249; proposed general election, 254

Murphy, Hon. Charles—Con.
Board of Commerce, Robson, Judge, resignation of, 11, 114
Budget, inquiry as to, 1047
Dominion Lands Act (United States Soldiers) 1234
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1999
Interpretation, 1986-8, 1987, 1988
Pass on railway, 1065
Telegraph, communications by, 1069
Grand Trunk Railway, 1242-3, 1250
Greek wheat contract, ques. 509
National debt, ques. 309
Naval defence policy, ques. 309
Newsprint Supply, 2893
Parliament Building, ques. 311; ques. 311 Cost, etc., 311
Parliamentary Com., ques. 311
P. Lyall Company, 3156
Point of order—comment on document quoted, 234-6
Prime Minister, illness and absence of, 9
Shipbuilding—contracts and prices, 901-2
Vatican Mission, ques. 310

Murray Bay-Tadoussac Service, 652

Mutual Insurance Companies, taxation of, ques. 2012, 2080

Myers, Mr. E. T. W. (Kindersley)
Canada Grain Act, 3823
Flax fibre grants, ques. 806
Wheat trade, 3823-4

National Battlefields Commission, 421

National Council of Women, oleomargarine and, 1841

National Debt, ques. 309. See also Finance
Loans in the United States, ques. 313

National Defence, 4302

National Industrial Conference, 4512

National Parks, 3769

National Transcontinental Railway. See Canadian National Natural Resources.

M. (Mr. Manion) in favour of development, 1017
Prairie provinces, of, ques. 995, 1047, ques. 1461, 3049, 3293
Royal Commission on, ques. 4502

Naturalization, 817. See also Aliens; Dominion Franchise, aliens, qualification of electors
Imperial citizenship, and, ques. 996
Papers, fraudulent, ques 4096

Naturalization Act, 1914, Amdt. Bill. 1r., 3682; 2r., com., 3914; 3r., 3922; Senate amdts. 4416

Naval Defence, ques. 309. See also Naval Service
Admiral Jellicoe's report, 308
Statement by Minister of the Naval Service, 3498

Naval Service
Additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4380
Badges, 437, ques. 506
Canadian officers, 4299
Civil Service Insurance and, 1779
Coast defence of Canada, United States and, 4294, 4298
Construction, programme of nations, 4301
Correspondence with Imperial Government, 4408, 4413, 4503
Demobilization, 4299
Estimates, how considered, 4380, 4411
Halifax and Esquimalt depots, 4296-7, 4307, 4390, 4394
Naval college, graduates, 4562
Naval conference of 1921, 4300
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," 4292-3. See also that title
Salaries of Dept., 4409
Ship construction, material, ques. 1114
Statement by Minister, 707

Navigation, aid and protection of, 2115
Schools of, 1612
St. Lawrence River—Ile d'Orleans, 3295

Navigation Rates. See Railway Act Amdt.

Navy, ques. 540. See also debates under Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Naval Service
Jellicoe, Admiral, 11. See also that title
Ships from Great Britain, 4413

Navy League of Canada, ques. 802

Nesbitt, Mr. E. W. (North Oxford)
Chairman, Committee of the Whole, Rulings as, 1326
Unanimous consent for statement in Supply, 2379
Civil Service retirement, 3833
Colonial Investment and Loan, 3859
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3403
Demonstration farms, 2396

Nesbitt, Mr. E. W.—Con.
Eight-hour day, 376
Food and Drugs Bill, 958, 963, 1257-8
Franchise Bill, 1066
Fuel, transportation cost, 330
House of Commons staff, 4565-6
Income tax
Beneficiaries, 3243
Charities, 3247, 3312
Deficits and losses, 3240-1
Five per cent added, 3251-2
Indemnity of members, 3242
Returns, 3253-4
Stock dividends, 3239-40
Judges' salaries, 3851
Natural resources, oil leases, 3810-3
Naval service badges, 445-6
Newspaper postage rates, 3348
Pensions, 433
Widowed mother resident outside Canada, 4045
Returned soldiers, 528
Insurance, 4054-5
Report of Committee, 1082
Rural mail carriers, 4522
Senate staff, 4060
Soldier settlement, 2129-30, 2138-43
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Automobiles, 3599
Collection, method of, 3344-5
Prices, effect on, 3330
Steel and shipping merger, 1952-3
Western Assurance Company, 3860

Neuville Station, ques. 2721

Newfoundland
Cape Race light, 2117
Trade with, 4241, 4242, 4276-7

New Parliament Buildings. See Parliament Buildings

New York—Canadian publicity branch at, 1882

Newspaper Postage. See Post Office Act Amdt.

Newspapers. See also Newsprint; Post Office Act Amdt.; Press
Payments to for printing, ques. 1114
Propaganda, and, 4375

Newsprint
Control, ques. 588, ques. 2720
Controller, resignation of, ques. 315, ques. 589
Embargo, ques. 994
Exportation and embargo, 1358, ques. 1114

Newsprint—Con.
Legislation, inquiry as to, 3227
Statement of Finance Minister, 2967
Supply, 2893

News Service, ques. 414, 4532

Nichols, Mr. M. E., ques. 1118

Nicholson, Mr. George B. (East Algoma)
Board of Commerce, Murdock, Mr., letter of, 4483
Budget, 2796. Liberals and free trade, 2796; congratulations to Minister of Finance—luxury tax—Mr. Fielding's amendment, 2797; contradictory tariff policies of members of Opposition, 2798; forty years' tariff policy of Government side, 2799; articles that would be duty-free under proposed King-Crerar government, 2801; personal position on fiscal questions, 2802; tariff and cost of living, 2803; Hon. E. C. Drury and others on cost of food production—development of natural resources, 2804; British fiscal policy—Mr. Crerar criticised, 2805; Timiskaming by-election and One Big Union, 2807; class prejudice and Bolshevism, 2808
Franchise Bill
Advance and proxy voting, 1163
Aliens—certificate, 2075, 2094
Deposit, 1094
Grand Trunk strike of 1910, and pensions, 1132
Income tax, 3476
Aliens in Canada, 3250-1
Errors in returns, 3302
Five per cent added, 3252
"Householders," 3249, 3315
Indemnity of members, 4093
Indians—Gordon's Reserve school, 3271
Industrial disputes, 1976-80, 2193-8
Military training, 3711
Militia, Cadet service, 3711
Newspaper postage, 3758
Opium and Drug Bill, 1755
Race track betting, 3429
Returned soldiers, 534
Pensions, 535
Widowed mother, 4042, 4052
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Boats, canoes, etc., 3590-1
Changes—when to come into effect, 3608
Collection, method of, 3474
Machinery for collection, 3324

Nile Voyageurs, 3857

"Niobe" and "Rainbow," 4293, 4297, 4401. See also Ballantyne, Hon. Mr., Naval Affairs

North Bay, 3160
Canadian Northern right-of-way and, ques. 3619

North Lake, 3159

North Sydney Harbour, 875, 2186, 3493-4

Northwest Game Act Amdt. 1r., 2892; 2r., com., 3r., 3105-6

Northwest Mounted Police. See Royal Canadian

Northwest Territories, administration of, 3280

Notices of Motion, inquiry as to, 2012

Notices, publication of in Canada Gazette, ques. 2179

Nova Scotia Steel Company. See Pictou Harbour

Noxious Weeds, 3171. See also Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Oaths of Office Bill, 1

Oats, 565. See Canada Grain Act

O'Connor, Mr. W. F., K.C., ques. 3618. See also Board of Commerce

Oil
Canada's resources, 331. See also Mines

Old Age. See Government annuities

Oleomargarine, ques. 543, 1010, ques. 1117
Butter, and, food values, ques. 2720
Imports, 597, 604, 606, 612
Regulations, ques. 1627

Oleomargarine Act Amendment Bill. Res. 1405, 1781, 1840; 1r., 1877; 2r., 1968; com., 1968; 3r., 1971

Oliver-St. Paul de Métis Railway, 344, 871

O'Meara, Mr., 792-3, 4038

One Big Union, ques. 409, 2807, 2897, 3039

Ontario
Highways—contribution to, 1046
Immigration, and, 1012

Opium, 24, 141
Convention (International). See debate on Opium and Drug Bill

Opium and Drug Bill. Res. 557; 1r., 562; 2r., 1621, 1629; com. 1632, 1744; 3r., 1900; Senate amdts., 3081

Orange order, 249, 285

Oranges and Figs grown in the open in British Columbia, 1016

Orders in Council. See also War Measures; Coal operations
Employment offices, 3087
Legislation and Government by, 31, 38, 177, 2018, 2020-1

Orientals
Canada, in, 825
Vote, and, See Dominion Franchise

Orleans, Island of, public works, ques. 810

Ostend, Allies Conference at, 2476, 2574

Ottawa
Agreement with Corporation, 557. See also Ottawa Agreement Bill
Connaught Rifle Range, 3728
Daly building, rental of, ques. 1200
Mackenzie Avenue, ques. 999
Public buildings, 3154
New, ques. 1002
Wellington street—public building, ques. 1002

Ottawa Agreement Bill. Res. 576, 557, 1r., 581; 2r., com., 988; 3r., 1047

Ottawa Improvement Commission. See debates under Ottawa Agreement

Ottawa Mint Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 615; 1r., 616; 2., com., 3r., 798

Otter, Sir William Dillon, ques. 673

Overdrafts, bank. See Special War Revenue

Oxford County, Ont., products, 1010

Pacaud, Mr. L. T. (Megantic)
Budget, 3020. The public burdens, 3020; tariff for revenue—programme of the Farmers' party, 3021; cost of living and development of natural resources—line of demarcation between the parties, 3022
Rural mail—Mr. Joseph Houle, ques. 2313

Palmer, Mr. K. H., ques. 1001

Paper, Manufacture of. See debates on Scientific Research
Newsprint. See that title

Papineau, Mr. Louis J. (Beauharnois)
Board of Commerce, M. 3863
Canadian Northern, total liability, ques. 2011

Pardee, Mr. Frederick F. (West Lambton)
Budget, 2740. Mr. Meighen and the new party—tariff revision, 2740; the consumer and taxes—the new taxes, 2741; address in Montreal, 2742; textile industries and protection, 2743; effect of new taxes upon population, 2744
Canadian Mercantile Marine, insurance, ques. 1511
Canadian National Railways
Deficit, 888-9
Fire insurance, ques. 1623
Withholding of information, 1663
Experimental and demonstration farms, 2382-4, 2388
Franchise Bill, 731
Advance polls, 1999-2001
Aliens certificate, 2063-70, 2225-6, 2230-2, 2238-9
Amdt. moved, 2226; neg. 2242
Election expenses, 1153
False statements made to affect election, 1065
Indians, 2056-7
Name not on list—oaths, 3878
Personation, etc., 1159
Plugging, 2350
Polling stations, additional, 1826
Provincial lists, 2350, 3883, 3889-93
Voters' lists, addition and elimination of names, 3911-2
Writ, nomination, election, delay, 1092
Grand Trunk Railway, strike of 1910, and pensions, 1553-6
Naturalization, 3916
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3938
Purchasing Commission, 1474
Roumanian orders, insurance, ques. 1739
Soldier settlement, 1684, 3192-3

Parent, Mr. George (Quebec West)
Barracks, 3725
Board of Commerce, ques. 408
Business profits tax, public utilities, 3230
By-election lists, ques. 310
Canadian National Railways, 3377
Census of 1911, ques., 2009
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill—M. for 3r., 3423
Food and Drugs Bill, 972-6
Franchise Bill
False statement to affect election, 1067
Payment of voters' expenses, 1065
Undue influence — "spiritual injury," 1158

Parent, Mr. George—Con.
Fuel situation, 331
Grand Trunk Railway — administration, 4173
Immigrants landing at Montreal and Quebec, 3226-8
Income tax, stocks below par, 3238
International boundary surveys, 3293
League of Nations, French occupation of German territory, 1046
Magdalen Islands, 649
Mail delivery—Monday holidays, 3354, 4522
Naturalization—certificate, 3917-8
Neuville station, ques. 2721
Peace, declaration of, ques. 801
Peace Treaties, 1059
Pilots, pensions, 4579-80
Public debt and revenue, ques. 592, 753
Quebec riots of 1918, 1202
Correspondence from sufferers, 1203-8
Shipbuilding, 649, 668
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4165-8
Special War Revenue Act Amdt.
Automobiles, 3598
Beer used to make vinegar, 3604
Furniture, 3575
Jewellery, 3580
Skis, 3570-1
Water-powers, surveys, etc., 3289-92

Pari-Mutuel machines, 3415

Parliament, Sessions of Extra session, 1919, cost of, ques. 543
Time of, 756

Parliament Buildings, 12, 76, 96, 106, 143, 221, 282, ques. 705
Commons chamber floor, ques. 2894
Cost, contractors, architects, ques. 311
Door contract, ques. 320
Fittings and Furniture, 1433, 3155
Gargoyles, 1433, 1493
Heating, plant, ques. 2896
King, the, message from, 1
Material supplied, ques. 311, ques. 705
Post Office, ques. 3294
Scaffolding, ques. 3079
Speeches on the occasion of their occupation, 2
Tower, alleged masonic records in, ques. 2894
Vote for in Supply, 1416

Parliamentary Counsel, 4587. See also, Dominion Franchise Bill

Parliamentary Library, 211, 1426
Librarian, 114. See also DeCelles, Mr.

Parliamentary Procedure. See also Deputy Speaker; Speaker; Douglas, Mr. J. M.; Morphy, Mr.; Nesbitt, Mr.; Steele, Mr.
Bill disposed of—question not to be raised during same session, 3426
Unanimous consent refused, 3423, 3821
3r., Industrial Disputes Bill, 2200

Parliamentary Restaurant, 47, 3094
Joint Committee, 437
Official list for, 2842-3

Parliamentary Secretaries, ques. 1036

Patent Medicines See Proprietary

Patent Record, 1886

Patents of Invention Bill 1r, 505

P. Burns Company, 582

Peace. See also League of Nations; Peace Conference; Peace Treaty
Declaration of, ques 801
Time and proclamation of, 231

Peace Conference
Economic Condition of the world, declaration on, 1888
Eight-hour day and, 335
Labour bureau, 4506-7

Peace Treaty, 12, 16, 96, 124
A potential cause of war, 927
Bulgaria, with, ques. 316, 463. See also Peace Treaty Bill
Res. and ministerial statement, 346
Senate concurrence, 1054
France—protection against Germany, 1059
Hungary and Turkey, 3983, 1060
Translation of, 3084

Peace Treaty Bill (Bulgaria) 1r., 949; 2r., com., 1057; 3r., 1061

Peat, 3806
Alfred plant, ques. 671

Peck, Lieut.-Col. Cyrus W., V.C., (Skeena)
Artillery, Canadian, in war, 3662
Empire Day adjournment, 2574
Fisheries, ques. 505
British Columbia salmon—trap fishing—parcelling out of fisheries—cannery licenses—hatcheries—Chief Inspector—monopoly opposed, 3525-33
Development, 854
Japanese and, 844-5, 3532
Fisheries
Naval Service and, 3532
Salmon hatcheries, 849-50, 3525

Peck, Lieut.-Col. Cyrus W., V.C.—Con.
Indians, British Columbia, 792-5, 3273
Agents, salaries, 3273
Enfranchisement, 4038-40
Militia—Active militia, allowances, 3662-8
Pensions, 434
Com. report—on m. to adopt, 3932
Amdt. 3933, 3952; withdrawn, 3956
M. for Special Com., 513
Resignation from Com., 2081
Returned men and fishing industry, 3932, 3938-40, 3956
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 390
Saar Valley Commission, 344
Senate, cost of, ques. 1118
Surveys, 3293
Uniforms, unlawful wearing of, 3417
Water-powers of British Columbia, ques. 1118
Winnipeg Grain Exchange, ques. 2005

Pecuniary Claims Convention, 3857

Pedlow, Mr. Isaac E. (South Renfrew)
Agriculture, problems and progress of, 2391-5
Armenians, 855
Audibility of debates, 461
Board of Commerce, 4494
Correspondence, 3426
O'Connor, Mr., reported resignation of, 1684
Civil servants with war record, 3129-30
Civil Service
Re-organization, 3741
Retirement, 4462-6
Demonstration farms, 2391
Food and Drugs Bill, 964-71, 1258-62
Prosecutions, 1263-4
Franchise Bill
Advance voting, and voting by mail, 1163-5
Contributions, 1196
Election officers, 1077
Telegraph, communications by, 1068-9
Income tax
Accounting period, 3306-8
Indemnity of members, 3243, 3306
Suggestions, 3124, 3128
Ireland, condition of, 856
Maple products, 1256
Mennonites, 2127, 2179
Mines Dept., resignations, 3804
Opium and Drug Bill, 1638-9, 1748, 1751-2
Pictou harbour, 2186
Postage stamps, used for inland revenue, 3737
Quorum, 964
Renfrew post office, 3151

Pedlow, Mr. Isaac E.—Con.
Slidemaster, retirement of, 446
Soldier settlement, 2131
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill, 3326
Candy, etc., 3592
Clocks and watches, 3574
Clothes, 3563-4
Collection, method of, 3470
Commodity tax, 3319, 3330
Importations, 3795
Jewellery, 3581
Lace, manufacture of, 3791-2
Licenses, 3606-7
Manufacturer who is also retailer, 3468
Overcoats, 3586
Prices, 3340
Purses, shopping bags, 3568
Pyjamas, 3567
Retail Merchants' Association, 3342
Returned soldier, amdt. (Mr. Lemieux) 3452
Sales taxes, 3612
Silk, 3563
Silk clothing, 3790
Silk waists, 3631-2
Socks, etc., 3567, 3791
Sporting goods, 3570
Stamp taxes, 3800-1
Stock transfers, 3626
Taxes, how paid, 3587-8
United States taxes, 3472

Pelletier, Mr. F. J. (Matane)
Cole, Mr. W. B., ques. 2893
Illustration farms, 2382-4, 2388
Industrial disputes, 1983
Masters and mates, 986
Oil, 3811-2
Sparrow, Dr. C. J., ques. 1897

Penitentiary Act Amdt. Bill. 1r., 2842; 2r., 3409; Com., 3409; 3r., 3410

Penitentiaries. See also Justice; Labrie Brothers
Alberta, ques. 2777, 3855
Appointments pending, 568
Manitoba, ques. 2574
Portsmouth, vacancies in chief positions, 568
Purchasing agent, 3840, 3854
Saskatchewan, ques. 2574
Stoneham, case, 568

Pensions, ques. 993, ques. 994. See also Pensions and Re-establishment; Pensions Act
Board of Commissioners, 614
Employees, ques. 2895
Soldier organizations and, ques. 1116
Margeson, Mr. J. W., ques. 1036

Pensions—Con.
District offices, closing of, 710, 857
St. John, N.B., 1742
Militia. See Militia Pensions Act
Royal Canadian Mounted Police. See that title
Taxation of, 1895
Widow and children, ques. 920
Widowed mothers, res. (Mr. Power) 427. See also Pensions Act

Pensions and Re-establishment—Special Com.
Appointment of Com., resolutions in favour
Andrews, Mr., 511
Rowell, Mr., 614; agreed to, Com. appointed, 615, 799
Reports, 1199, 3801
Adoption of final report
Res., (Mr. Cronyn) in favour, 3922, agreed to, 3957
Amdt. (Mr. Peck) subsidies to fishermen, 3932-3; withdrawn, 3956
Printing, 3822, 4321
Recommendations not embodied in Bill, how to be carried into effect; inquiry answered by Prime Minister, 4504
Resignations
Lang, Mr., (reported) 1085
Peck, Mr., 2081

Pensions Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 3864; 3959; 1r., 3961; 2r., Com., 4041; 3r., 4053
Additional pension, 4048
Drafting, 4041
Pensioner resident outside Canada, 4044-52
Widowed mother, 4041-50

Permanent Force. See Militia

Peterborough
Government Employees, ques. 542
Postmaster, ques., 342

Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Amdt. Bill. Res. 1573, 1762; 1r., 1762; 2r., com., 3r., 1916

Phosphorus, 356

Picard, Mr. Elzear, ques. 993

Pictou, East River lock, ques. 1119

Pictou Harbour Bill. Res. 1945, 2184; 1r., 2190; 2r., 3491; com., 3491; 3r., 3494

Pigs, Feeding of. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Pilotage, 1839, 2119, 4579. See also Canada Shipping Act
St. John, 2119

Placer Mining. See Yukon

Police. See Royal Canadian

Political Campaign Funds, 1063-4. See also Dominion Franchise; Assiniboia
M. (Mr. Burnham) prohibiting, 1216

Pollution of boundary waters, 3552

Ponton, Mr. G., ques. 341

Popular Unrest, 22, 63, 816, 1145

Population
Agricultural and industrial, 191, ques. 1002
And taxation, 3297

Port Arthur
Board of Trade—vessel rates, resolution, 1733
Canadian National Railway terminals, ques. 2012
Fort William, and, elevators, ques. 1358

Port Hood, 3159

Port Maitland, 4579

Portage la Prairie public building, 3156

Portal Immigration hall, ques. 674

Porter, Mr. Arthur S., dismissal of, 568

Ports, tax on ships arriving in, 2253

Postal Inspection—Bagot Co., ques., 2721

Postmaster General—Senate, member of, 3734. See also Blondin, Hon. Mr.

Post Office. See also Civil Service; Mail Carriers;
For individual post offices see their titles
Bilingual stamps, ques. 314
Department
Estimates, supplementary, 4518
Letter carriers, 1231, 1276
Classification, 345, 1231, 3424
Salaries and threatened strike, 2670, 3424, 3623-4
Toronto, 345
Magazines, postage rate on, ques. 1898
Money parcel ($50,000) lost, ques. 412
Offices in cities, province of Quebec, ques. 413
Parcel post—Dr. Michel Fiset, 2015
Parliament, hours of, ques. 3294
Rural mail carriers, ques. 414, ques. 506, ques. 591, 1233, 1282-3, 4522. See also Rural Mail

Post Office Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 2184; 3346; 1r., 3358; 2r., com., 3732; 3r., 3768. Senate amdts. 4263
Free matter, 3761
Newspapers and periodicals, 3745
Registration fee, 3732

Post Office and Customs Depts.
Rumoured investigation by United States firm, 3491, 3623

Potatoes.
Bags, 4562
Exportation of, ques. 1360

Poultry, Feeding of. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Power, Mr. Charles G. (South Quebec)
Board of Commerce, M. for abolition, 1146, 1150
Canadian Alpine Club, 3288
Canadian Currency on United States lines of Canadian National Railways, ques. 341
Canadian Forestry Association, 3285
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 644-5
"Canadian Recruit," wreck of, 648
"Canadian Sealer," Magdalen Islands trip, 649
Steamers. See also, under this title, Icebreakers
Crews, uniforms, ques. 1003
"Lady Grey" ques. 1361
Canadian National Railways, cargo for ships, 915
Champlain market, 2015
Court martial procedure, ques. 1359
Federal Bureau of Education, 1388
Firearms licenses, 3411-2
Franchise Bill, 777
Aliens—certificate, 2239
Bribery, treating, undue influence, personation, 1157-9
Canada Temperance Act, 2053-4
Disqualification, returned soldiers exempted from, 1811, 1820-4
"Elector," how defined, 1916-8
Executory contracts void, 781
Interpretation, 1991
"Candidate," 1944
Judges, revising officers, 722
Language of voter, 1997
Non-residents and non-electors, 786
Notices—handbills, 1169
Polling stations, additional, 1826-7
Polls, hours to be open, 1923-4
Returning officers, 1583-4, 1596

Power, Mr. Charles G.—Con.
Franchise Bill—Con.
Voters' lists, use of for advertising, 2319-20
French speeches in House, translation of, 702
Grain trade, 661
Grosse Isle, ques. 1003
Gulf of St. Lawrence Trading Company, 4285
Icebreakers, 1602-5. See also, under this title, Steamers
"Montcalm," 1606-7
Uniforms of men on, 1603-4
Indemnity of members, 1281, 4087
Indians—Sioux, 3267
Magdalen Islands-Belle Isle, 1605
Militia Department
Classification of employees, ques. 3358
Permanent appointments, ques. 2079
Newsprint, 3227
Peace treaties—Anatolia and Smyrna, 3984
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3946
Drafting of Bill, 4041
Offices, rumoured closing of, 710
Taxation of pensions, 1895
Widowed mother, 427, 436, 4041, 4051
Amdt. ruled out of order, 4052
Profiteering, etc., 1146
Quebec
Ancient fortifications, 421, 427
Arsenal employees, ques. 1898
Bridge, ques. 1116, ques. 1229
Marine storehouse, ques. 316
Port, grain trade, 858
Riots of 1918, 1210
Returned soldiers, res. (Mr. Andrews) for Special Com., 523
Shipbuilding, 661, 915
Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, ques. 2311
Soldier Settlement, 2141-7, 2151, 3222-3
Vocational training and, 3223
Spirit Lake, 2398-9
Stewart farm, 3223

Prairie Provinces
Natural Resources, ques. 995, 1047, ques. 1461, 3049, 3292

Press, The, 4532. See also Newsprint; Post Office; Censorship
Murray, Mr. G. M. and the, 2753

Press Conference. See Imperial

Press Gallery Reporters, 3747, 3750, 4411, 4503

Prevost, Mr. Jules E. (Terrebonne)
Automobiles, smuggled, ques. 807, ques. 1001

Prevost, Mr. Jules E.—Con.
Board of Commerce, ques. 996
Budget, 2771. Government and commissions, 2771; profits and cost of living—Board of Commerce, 2772; increases in expenditure—Liberal party and tariff revision, 2773; manufacturing industries Union Government, 2774; govts. made for the people, 2775
Civil Service Classification, ques. 2413
Customs war tax, ques. 1001
Dominion revenues, ques. 1001

Price Brothers. See Board of Commerce; Newsprint

Prime Minister, absence, illness, return, 137. See also Borden, Sir Robert Denial by Leader of Opposition of statement attributed to him, 80
Effect of absence on parliamentary government, 129
Head of Department, 4456
Illness, 63, 158
Portfolio, and, 4456
Return, inquiry concerning, 2126
Enters the House, 2316

Prime Ministers of Great Britain and Canada, correspondence, 3685

Pringle, Mr. R. A., resignation as Newsprint Controller, ques. 315, ques. 589. See also Newsprint

Printing
Dept. of Public, reorganization, 2968
Southam Press, ques. 4096

Printing Bureau, 84, ques. 320, 3742. See also Civil Service
Alleged Sunday work at, 4020
Commission of newspaper men and, ques. 1114
Dismissals, ques. 672
Wolff, Mr.—ques. 2005
Employees
Nationality of, ques. 2005
Retirement of, 545
Linotypes, ques. 670

Printing, Joint Committee, 2625
French-speaking member of Editorial Board necessary, 4503
Reports, 4257, 4321, 4504

Printing Plants, departmental, ques. 1738

Prisoners
Parolled, ques. 2005
Political, general amnesty to, 1790

Private Bills
Committee, 305, 2311
Discussed
Canada Security Assurance Company, 1103
Colonial Investment and Loan Company, 3859
Northwest Route, Limited, 3861
Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation, 583
T. Eaton Life Insurance Company, 669
Trust and Loan Company of Canada, 585
Western Assurance Company, 3860

Privileges and Elections, Com., 305

Privy Council
Board of Commerce and, 3685
Jurisdiction of, 2389. See Supreme Court Act Amdt.

Profiteering, by farmers, alleged, 3401

Prohibition, 44, 71, 102
As a principle, 1218, 1225, 1228
Canada Temperance Act, ques. 807
Taxes on liquors. See Inland Revenue; Special War Revenue

Promissory Notes, tax on. See Special War Revenue

Proportional Representation, 15, ques. 803

Proprietary Medicines. See also Food and Drugs; Opium and Drug; Special War Revenue
Taxes on, ques. 1036, 2487, 3542

Prorogation, 4589

Proulx, Mr. Edmond (Prescott)
Arrest or summoning of person outside province, 3417-8
Civil Service classification, 547
Desjardins, Mr. Alphonse, 3093
Eight-hour day, 337
Food and Drugs Bill, 1266-8
Franchise Bill
Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, 1514
Chief Electoral Officer, 1512
Contributions, 781
Disqualification of candidates, 1088
Election expenses, 1154
Five-year term for Parliament, 1091
Ontario lists, 3882
Polls—fourteenth day, etc, 1101
Proclamations, 1082
Language of publication, 1080, 1829, 2267
Stamp to be made, 1078
House of Commons staff, 1038

Proulx, Mr. Edmond—Con.
Income tax, 3122-7
Indemnity of members, 3096, 3853-4, 4448
M. to strike out clauses, 4459
Judges' salaries, 3852-4, 4337, 4421
M. for six months' hoist of Bill, 4417
Maple products, 1254
Parliament Buildings, 1418-21- 1434
Parliamentary restaurant, 3096
Race track betting, 3430-2
Rural mail, 1283, 4524-5
Salaries of Ministers, 4430
Soldier settlement, 2129-35
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill, 3577
Dresses, 3586-7
Excise and sales taxes, 3453
Musical instruments, 3629
Silk waists, 3632

Provincial Salaries and Indemnities, Taxation of, ques. 3490

Public Accounts Committee, 306-7, 1838, 4321

Public Debt, ques. 592, 753. See also Finance

Public Information Dept., ques. 1000, ques. 1740, 2639, 2999
Nichols, Mr. M. E., ques., 1118

Public Ownership, 93, 204. See also debates under Canadian National Railways; Grand Trunk Business profits tax. See that title
Electricity, 3113-7
Railways, of, 100

Public Works, 1417. For individual works see their titles
Agreement with Ottawa city, 557
Architectural and Engineering Branch, ques. 587
Canals. See that title
Department, 1416
Minister, 557
Tache, Mr. C. E., superannuation, ques. 3490

Pulp and Paper. See also Customs Act; Newsprint
Pulpwood, 148, 2552

Purchasing Commission, 44, 257, ques. 591, 3718, 3854-5, 4580
Res. to establish Purchasing Board, 1231, 1467

Pure Foods Bill, 3396

Putman, Mr., and Civil Service Commission, ques. 2414

Quarantine, 3554
Grosse Isle, ques. 1003
Sydney, 3148

Quebec (City)
Arsenal, employees, ques. 1898, ques. 3862
Board of Trade and Retail Merchants' Association—proposed taxes, 3457-8
Vessel rates, 1734
Champlain market, 2015
Fortifications, ancient, 421
Mail deliveries, ques. 591
Marine storehouse, ques. 316
Riots of 1918, M. (Mr. Parent) for papers, 1202

Quebec (Port) 650, 654-5, 661
Government Ships, cargoes for, 915
Grain shipments, 858
Harbour Commission, steam dredge, ques. 999
Immigrants landing at, 3226-8

Quebec (Province)
Canadian Northern lands in, ques. 2008
"Hour" of, 61, 67, 90, 143, 206
Military districts in, ques. 1035
People stay on the land, 94
Post offices in cities, ques. 413
Resources—timber, water-powers, 693
Tolerance, 90
Union government and, 83

Quebec and Saguenay Railway, ques. 506, ques. 1120; ques. 3619
Construction and operation, ques. 672
Freight rates, ques. 589
St. Irénée, 3423

Quebec and Western Railway, ques. 411; ques. 412

Quebec Bridge, ques. 1116; ques. 1229

Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix Railway, ques. 673, 4585

Quebec, Oriental and Atlantic Railway, ques. 411; ques. 412; ques. 507

Questions and Answers. See also House of Commons
Inquiry as to, 949, 2126
Oral answers to, 1623
Not answered, 753, 949
Canadian Government Merchant Marine—information withheld, 1649
Portion deleted, 1045

Questions Passed as Orders for Returns, 320, 344, 415, 510, 543, 591, 707, 811, 1004, 1037, 1121, 1201, 1231, 1362, 1464, 1511, 1628, 1741, 1788, 1899, 2012, 2080, 2183, 2313, 2417, 2519,, 4096
Status of, 1743

Race Track Betting. See Criminal Code Legislation—Statement of Rev. Dr. Speer, 3490, 3557

Radial Railways—Ontario and Hydro-electric, 4172

Railway Act Amendment Bills.
1. Fuel Supply. Res. 4324; 1r., 2r., com., 3r., 4331. Senate amdts. 4506
2. Inland and Coastwise Shipping. 1r., 160; 2r., 1707; debate adjourned, 1738
3. Provincial Jurisdiction. 1r., 2412; 2r., 3086; com., 3634; 3r., 3636

Railway Commission.
Business done from date of establishment, statement of, 1707
Fort William elevators, 565
Vessels and, 160, ques., 2414, ques., 2777

Railways. See also Canadian Railway War Board. For individual railways see their titles.
Cars, shortage, ques. 319, 1312
Canadian cars in United States, 880, ques. 997, 1114
Official, use of by Ministers, ques. 409
Transcontinental, ques. 999
Rates, 200, ques. 1036
Parliament and, 4188
Reports of, inquiry concerning, 1290
United States, freight from for Canada prepaid, 1789, 1893

Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, 880, 2378
Com. appointed, 305

"Rainbow." See Ballantyne, Hon. Mr.; Naval Defence; "Niobe"

Rape, attempted, 2841

Recall, the, 1180, 2023. See also Dominion Franchise Bill
Amdt. (Mr. Tweedie) 2025; neg. 2052
Dominion Council of Agriculture, platform on, 2052

Re-cleaned Screenings, ques. 507, 1009. See also Commercial Feeding Stuffs; Elevators

Reconstruction, 24. See also Demobilization; Pensions; Soldiers Civil Re-establishment; Soldier Settlement

Redman, Mr. Daniel Lee (East Calgary)
Badges for returned men, 443
Eight-hour day, 381
Natural Resources development, 1026
Pensions—widowed mothers, 429
Recall, the, 2026

Re-establishment. See also Demobilization Pension; Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment; Soldier Settlement
Federal emergency fund, ques. 998
Special Com.; Res. (Mr. Rowell) moved, 614; agreed to, 615

Registration Fee. See Post Office Act

Registration of Shipping, 1614, 2108

Reid, Hon. John D. (Minister of Railways and Canals and acting Minister of Public Works)
Banff National park, 3770, 3777
Bridges
Burlington Canal, 3777
Government policy concerning, 3773-9
Canadian freight and United States railways, 1789
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 652
Canadian National Railways
Appointments—how made, 3139-40
Branches and extensions, East and West
Politics and, 4194, 4222
East
Gaspé, 4247-9
Inverness, 4249
Lockeport, 4247-9
Newcastle-Tracdie, 4247-9
Nova Scotia, 3378
Westville-St. John, 4248
West, 3376-82, 3385-7, 4212, 4232
Brudenheim, 885, 4250
Distances, 3390
Land ownership, 3387
Willow Bunch — Wood Mountain, 3380-1, 3388
"Canadian Government Railways" defined, 4219
Canadian National Railway Company, 345
Canadian Northern Railway, 3377, 3390
Coal purchases, 2381
Contracts, details, 4251-6
Damage claims, 887
Deficits, 880, 886, 888
Demurrage "bunched cars," 4230
Directorate, 4190

Reid, Hon. John D.—Con.
Canadian National Railways—Con.
Equipment, 4191
Estimates discussion of, 4249-50
Grand Trunk loans, 881. See also, under this title, Grand Trunk
Hudson Bay Railway, 4233
Insurance, 4257
Intercolonial
Moncton office, 4268
Operation, 4247
Pension fund, 4248
Mackenzie and Mann, interest in subsidiaries, 4191
Maine Central connection, 3376
Management, 4189
Ministerial statement, 859
Prince Edward Island Railway, 891-2
Car ferry, 4246
Standardization of railway, 4247
Public ownership, 4190
Rates, 4187
Reports of operations, 3086
Stations—shelters, 891
Subsidiaries, 3389
Supplies, contracts for, 4193
Taxation of, 3393
Ties—list of contracts, 4251
Townsites, 4191
Withholding of information justified, 1652-7, 1674, 1684
Canadian National Railways Bill, 2842, 3085, 3376-94, 4187-95
Cars. See under this title, Railways
Capilano bridge, 3778
Carvill, Mr. George, 4226-8
Civil Service Commission, 3139
Contracts signed by Government before submission to House, 1048
Dredging, 3781-90
Nova Scotia, 3786
Drill halls, 3148
Dry docks, 4567-72, 4573
Experimental farms, 3156-8
Farm labour, 1227
Flags for public buildings, 3158
Fort Frances public building, 3152
Fort William elevators—coarse grain shipments, 565
Graham's Run, 3159
Granby public building, 3150
Grand Etang bridge, 3780
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition, 1113, 1311-8, 1435-60, 1486-1510
Administration, 4173
Branch lines, 1314-8
Correspondence, 1235-53
Hinton, Mr. W. P., 1311-2
Loan, 4579

Reid, Hon. John D.—Con.
Grand Trunk Railway acquisition—Con.
London-Trafalgar square office, 1251
Montreal-Toronto line, 1491
Shareholders, list of, 3426-7
Strike of 1910, 1542
Grosse Isle, 3151
Hamilton
Postal station, 3152
Post office, 3151
Hanna, Mr. D. B.
Cahill, Mr., and, 2380
Canada Steamships, Limited, and, 1743
Highways Act, contribution to Ontario, 1047
Hull and Montreal highways, 1113
Hydro-Electric and Ontario Radial railway, 4172
Isle Verte, 3160
Kamloops public building, 3156
Kingsville public building, 3153
Lachine lock bridge, 4236
Lotbinière and Megantic Railway, 950, 4585
Militia, Permanent force, barracks, 4579
Narrows, the, 3159
National parks, 3769-70
North Bay, shore protection, 3160
North Lake harbour, 3159
Oliver-St. Paul de Metis Railway, 344, 871
Ottawa buildings, fittings and furniture, 3154
Ottawa city, agreement with, 577-81, 988-92
Ottawa River conservation, 3779
Parliament Buildings, 1418-34, 3153
Port Hood wharf, 3159
Port Maitland, 4579
Portage la Prairie public building, 3156
Postage stamps for inland revenue, 3737
Post Office Dept., 3736-7
Public buildings, none new, 3147-8
Public works, resident engineers, 3787
Purchasing Commission, 4580-2
Question—complaint of unsatisfactory answer, 1047
Questions, inquiry as to, 2126, 2416
Railway Act Amdt. (Provincial Jurisdiction) 2412-13, 3634-6
Railway Mail Service, 4212
Railway rates, 864
Railways. See also, under this title, Canadian National; Grand Trunk
Car shortage, 881-5, 1114
Proposed discussion in Railway Com., 885
Reports of, 1290
Taxation of profits, 865
Renfrew post office, 3151
Royal Military College, 3152-3

Reid, Hon. John D.—Con.
St. Anne bridge, 3773-4
St. John
Harbour, 4567
Public buildings, 3148-9
Scammel, Mr. J. D., 3785
Shenacadie wharf, 3159
Shipbuilding, 652
Spirit River wheat shipments, 566
Steel cabinets, 3155
Sydney Quarantine station, 3148
Toronto
Postal station, 3155-6
Union station, 3226
Vancouver public buildings, 3156
Williams Head quarantine, 3156

Reid, Mr. John F. (Mackenzie)
Bridges, 3770
Budget, 2744. Mr. Edwards and United Grain Growers, 2744; Mr. Elkin and tariff, 2745; business methods of United Grain Growers—export market a necessity, 2746; duties collected in Canada and in the United States—railways in Canada and in Great Britain, 2747; Mr. Stevens and the farmers, 2748; Mr. Stacey and duty on apples, 2749; difficulties faced by Minister of Finance—income, luxury and excise taxes, 2750; life insurance for returned soldiers—railways—immigration, 2751; Hudson Bay railway—Mr. G. M. Murray and the press, 2753
Campaign funds, 1226
Canadian National Railways
Branch lines, 3384
Western extensions, 4232
Civil Service bonus, 1281
Commercial feeding stuffs, 3174
Duties on textile imports, ques. 1899
Experimental farms, 2398
Firearms licenses, 3414-5
Food and Drugs Bill, 1635
Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2100
Disqualification
Charitable support, those receiving, 1817
Election expenses, 1932
Recall, the, 2041
"Rural polling division," 1993
Grand Trunk Railway, 1459
Newspaper postage, 3751
Returned soldiers, tubercular, ques. 2005
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4153
Soldier Settlement, 1687-8, 2130, 2137-8
Cattle branding, 1700

Reid, Mr. John F.—Con.
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Firearms, 3793
Proprietary medicines, 3794
Wheat meal, 3795
Steamship subsidies, 4282
Vessel rates, proposed regulation of, 1721, 1734-5

Religious Orders from France, 231, 261

Repatriation Committee. See Pensions

Reports tabled, 1199, 1229, 1289, 1357, 1405, 1460, 1573, 1738, 2311, 2571, 2625, 2840, 3225, 4258, 4502

Restaurant Parliamentary. See Parliamentary

Restigouche, Interprovincial bridge, ques. 411

Retail Merchants' Association of Canada
Special War Revenue, 3342
Vessel rates, 1717

Retirement. See Civil Service

Returned Soldiers, 46, 68. See also Pensions; Re-establishment; Soldier Settlement; Civil Service; Dominion Lands
Badges, 437-47
Cash Gratuities, ministerial statement, 1082
Federal emergency fund, ques. 2182
Fishery officers at Isle Madame, ques. 3294
Fishing industry and, 531, 855. See also Fisheries
Franchise—exemption from disqualification, 1811, 1820
Life insurance, 519, 524. See also State Insurance
Militia Department appointments, ques. 2079, ques. 3358
Saar Valley Commission and, 344
Special War Revenue—taxation and, amdt. (Mr. Lemieux) 3446
Tubercular, treatment of, ques. 2005
Unauthorized wearing of buttons, 4020
University students, 519
Vocational training, 534
War veterans, petitions from, 505
Work for at Victoria—shipbuilding, 4584

Returns
Delayed, 459
Inquiry for, 618, 857, 3226, 4258, 3769

Revenue Bills
1. Business Profits War Tax Act, 1917, Amdt. Bill. Res. 3111; 1r., 3117; 2r., com., 3229; 3r., 3237
2. Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill. Res., 3110; 1r., 3111; 2r., com., 3174; 3r., 3229
3. Income War Tax, 1917, Amdt. Bill. Res. 3117; 1r., 3128; 2r., com., 3237, 3296, 4288; 3r., 4289
4. Inland Revenue Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 3494; 1r., 3498; 2r., com., 3815; 3r., 3821. Senate amdts. 4263
5. Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 3316; 3434; 3561; 1r., 3634; 2r., com., 3790; 3r., 4289. Senate amdts. 4505

Revenue and Expenditure. See Budget and debates thereon

Rhodes, Hon. Edgar N. (Cumberland) See Speaker

Richardson, Mr. Robert L. (Springfield)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 200. Freight rates, 200; Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways, effect of rate increases, 201; Grand Trunk Pacific, 202; public ownership of railways, 204; Union Government, Quebec and her "hour," 206; Hon. Mr. Crerar, 207; Liberals and the tariff, 208
Board of Commerce, 1947
Correspondence, 3427
Murdock, Mr., letter of, 4488
Canadian National Railways, 4199-4204; public ownership — Transcontinental freight rates increase—no political influence, 4199-4202
Rates, 1448
Conner, Mr. James, dismissal of, 415, 419
Electricity, public ownership, 3117
Franchise Bill—advance polls, 1934
Franking privilege, 3767
French speeches, translation of, 702
Grand Trunk Railway, 1447, 1499
Income tax, charities, 3313
Morning sittings, 2723
National parks and game preserves, 3287
Newspaper postage, 3746-60
Press, the, and, 3752-3
Newsprint, price, 2828
Railway rates, 1499
Rural mail, 4524
Steel and shipping merger, 1945-8, 1966
Vote—late in entering Chamber, 4180

Rifle Ranges. See Militia

Rimouski
British mails and, 4530-2

Rinfret, Mr. Fernand (St. James)
Budget, 2756. Fresh mandate from the people—election of 1917—by-elections, 2756; race prejudice and class party—cost of living—farmers and prices, 2757; profiteering, 2758; the new taxes, 2759; United States luxury tax how imposed—criticism of public expenditure, 2760; St. James by-election—Mr. Meighen's address, 2761; Liberal party and tariff—good understanding with English-speaking citizens desired, 2762; Quebec a tolerant province—the prosperity desired, 2763
Cressé, Mr. L. G. A., ques, 4502
Customs duties—basis of estimates, ques. 1788
Election and introduction, 1357
Franchise Bill
Poll, hours to be open, 1926
Proclamation—language of publication, 2278, 2282, 2291-2
French treaty, ques. 1788
German and Austrian imports, ques. 2416, ques. 3359
Imports into Canada, ques. 2182
Insurance companies, mutual, taxation of, 2012, 2080
Naval Service, additional appropriation of $1,700,000, 4391-2
Newspaper postage, 3750-1
Press gallery, 3750
Roumania and Greece, advances to, ques. 3488
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Beer, 3605
Excise and sales tax, 3335
Medals, gold, 3585
Musical instruments, 3595-6, 3628
Proprietary medicines, 3601

Rivière du Loup
Drill hall, 3726-7
Shops, ques. 315, ques. 801
Engine repairs, ques. 3079

Robb, Mr. James A. (Chateauguay-Huntingdon)
Alcohol, 3816-7
Apple barrels, 2018-21
Banff national park, 3769
Bankruptcy Bill, 3257
Budget debate, arrangements for, 2839-40, 2951
Business profits tax, 3234-7

Robb, Mr. James A.—Con.
Canadian National Railways
Extensions, 3388
Land ownership in, 3387
Mails, 3377
Canadian Wheat Board, 4120-5, 4134, 4342-57
Oats, effect on, 4357
Car shortage, 880-3
Coal operations director, 3179, 3367
Commercial feeding stuffs, 1290, 3164-5, 3405-7
Federal Bureau of Education, 1396
Fiset, Dr. Michel, 2015
Food adulteration, 3557
Fort William elevators, 565
Franchise Bill, election expenses, 1155
Grading export cheese and butter, 605
Grain and grain products in freight cars, ques., 1035
Grand Trunk Railway, 1311-2
Branch lines, 1316-20
Hinton, Mr. W. P., 1311
Icebreakers, 1599
Immigrants from United States, ques. 1463
Income tax
Charities, 3241-6
Mistakes made in good faith, 3302-3
Penalties, 3254
Residence or investments outside Canada, 3249-51
Indian affairs estimates, 3265-6
Indians—enfranchisement, 4029-37
Live stock shipments inspection, 1614-5
Malt, 3818
Oleomargarine, 1782, 1970
Purchasing Board, 1468-70
Railway mail service, 4212
Retirement of members of public service, 3836
Returned soldiers' insurance, 4055
St. Lawrence route, insurance, 4515
Seed Grain advances, 3286-7
Shipbuilding
Cattle shippers, and, 910
"Where is the money to come from?" 915
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill, 3574
Bank overdrafts, 3799
Duties paid before changes, 3624
Real estate sales, 3796
Taxes, how paid, 3587
Steel and Shipping Merger, 1966
Sugar embargo, 3226
Welland canal, ques. 1200
Western parks roads, 3283

Robson, Judge H. A. See Board of Commerce

Ross, Mr. Duncan C. (West Middlesex)
Automobile imports and excise, ques. 591
Chartered banks, ques. 591
Egg imports and exports, ques. 1898
Food and Drugs, 968, 975
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 3873-4
Aliens—certificate, 2222-3, 2229-31
Ballot and counterfoil, 1105
Deputy returning officers, lists of, 1096-7
Disqualification — charitable support, those receiving, 1819
Forms, 3871-3
Liquor at elections, 1108
Ontario law and lists, 3880-92
Polling divisions, 1519
Returning officers, 1525-8
Voters' lists, provincial, 2419-27, 2438
Amdt., suggested, 2321
Voting on certificate, 1098-1100
Income tax, losses, 3241
Indians
Medical attendance, 3275-6
Munsees reserve, 3277
Rural credits, ques. 589
Soldier Settlement, 3193-4

Ross Rifle Factory, ques. 1898, ques. 2721, 3722
Sale to Enterprise Foundry, ques. 2415

Roumania,
Advances to, ques. 318, 3027
Bonds, interest on, ques. 3488
Purchases by, ques. 2414
Insurance on, ques. 1739
Ports of shipment, ques. 343
Shipments, ques. 312

Round Robin, 2967

Rowell, Hon. N. W. (President of the Privy Council and Minister of Public Health)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 254. Reply to Mr. Murphy, 254; Lake Superior Corporation, 256; War Purchasing Commission — appointments of members to Senate, 257; Secretarial fund, 258; allegation of evading tax, 260; religious orders from France, 261; Mr. Rowell and his colleagues, 262; Women's Conference, 262; Health Department—Union Government, 263
British mails, 4532
Budget, 2997. Answer to Mr. Mackenzie King—Sir Thomas White's administration of finances—congratulations to Minister of Finance, 2997; public debt—expenditure, 2998; Department

Rowell, Hon. N. W.—Con.
Budget—Con.
of Public Information and the Daily Record, 2999; Canadian Official Record, Bureau of Information, New York, 3000; "advances unaccounted for," 3001; Civil Service appointments, number of, 3005; decreasing staffs in the Civil Service, 3006; expenditure and income estimated, 3007; public debt, inflation, 3008; Government's record in the war—Canada in a higher position than ever before—Mr. Fielding's amdt. 3009; Liberal Unionists' tariff record—tariff reduction, 3010; general election and franchise, 3011; Union Government's progressive measures—a tariff policy fair to all, 3012
Bulgaria. See; under this title, Peace Treaty
Business of the House, private members' business, 539
Canada's national status, 498. See also, under this title, League of Nations; Peace Treaty
Empire, in, 359
British connection maintained, 365
Canadian National Railways, mail contracts, 4530
Censorship, 396
Civil Service
Bonus, 1270-6, 3147, 3228
Classification, 548, 556, 1112, 3769, 3984
In force 1 April, 1919, 3142-7
Inside Service, 4019, 4172
Vote to pay increased salaries, 4546
Reduction of pay, 3137
Temporary employees, 3128-33
War record, civil servants with, 3129-31
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 1112, 3146
Senate amdts. 4056-60
Third reading, discussion, 3147
Colonial and Imperial Conference, 359
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 617
Bill withdrawn, 1290-1
Daughters of Canada, case of, 397
Distressed mariners, 2251-9, 2260-7, 3102-5, 4056
Edmonton post office, theft from, 923, 4520
Eight-hour day, 449-54
European distress, 4546
Food adulteration, 3557
Food and Drugs Bill, 582, 956-79, 1256-69, 1465
Food inspectors, Nova Scotia, 3539-40
Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2073-5, 2220-3, 2229-30
Disqualification of candidates, 1087
Government annuities, 4528

Rowell, Hon. N. W.—Con.
Health department, 263, 3539-57
Honey adulteration, 582, 798, 2314-5
House of Commons staff, 4414, 4567
Housing, 3543-52
Construction, 3546
Immigration—medical inspection, 3555
Information service, 4543-4
International Joint Commission, 3986
International Labour Conference, 798
Labour Conference at Washington, 356
League of Nations, 349
Ames, Sir Herbert, statement by, 3971-84
Assembly, the, 351
Budget of, Canada's contribution, 3982, 4544
Canada's interests and representation, 498, 3982
Decisions, enforcement of, 3975-6
Disarmament, 3976
French occupation of German territory, 1046
Labour, 354
Peace, maintenance of, 351
Phosphorus for matches, 356
Self-governing Dominions' status, 350
United States Senate reservations, 357
Letter-carriers' salaries, 345, 1276, 2670, 4529
Threatened strike—Government's attitude, 1231-2, 3424, 3623
Maple products, 582, 796-7, 1254-6, 2366, 4020
Marine hospitals, 3552-4
Naval Service, additional appropriation, $1,700,000, 4388
News Service, 4532
Opium and Drug Bill, 557, 1621-2, 1629-49, 1702-7, 1745-61, 1900, 3081
Parcel post supervisor, 4530
Peace Treaty. See also, under this title, League of Nations
Bulgaria, 498, 1057-61
France—protection against Germany, 1059
Hungary and Turkey, 1059-60, 3983-4
Pensions and Re-establishment, 435
Special Com., 614, 752
Pensions district offices, rumoured closing of, 710, 857
Pollution of boundary waters, 3552
Postal employees' salaries, 2670, 4526-30. See also, under this title, Letter Carriers
Postmen. See, under this title, Letter Carriers
Printing Bureau
Economies in, 3006
Sunday work, 4020
Proprietary medicines, 3542

Rowell, Hon. N. W.—Con.
Purchasing Board, 1470-1, 1481-4
Quarantine—Tracadie, 3554
Regina library, 396
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 10, 387, 4021, 4547-8, 4575
Buildings, 3214, 4573
Distribution of force, 3207-8, 3214
Duties of the force, 3195
Expense—Details, 3204-6
Division of with Provincial Governments, 3203
Increased, 3209
H.R.H. Prince of Wales, Honorary Commandant, 398
Name, change of, 398
Pensions, 388, 391, 398, 3202
Permanent Militia Force and, 3209
Provincial Police and, 3195-6
Strikes and, 3200
Ticket-of-leave system and, 399
Rural mail carriers, 1233, 4525-6
St. John pension office, 1742
Services of Dominion troops overseas, resolution of British House of Commons, 1159
Shipbuilding, expenditure, how to be met, 918
Supply and the Budget, 918
Toronto Postal employees, threatened strike, 3424
Venereal diseases, 3556
Washington, Canadian representation at, 4536-41
M. (Mr. Fielding) in amdt. to supply, 2444, 2474

Roy, Mr. Gustave, ques. 1898, ques. 1899

Roy, Hon. Mr., and International Labour Conference, 3359

Royal Assent, 1165, 2259, 3634-5

Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 242, 4547
Barracks, 3214, 4572
Change of name of force, 398
Duncan, Mr. Walter and, ques. 1117, ques. 2720
H.R.H. Prince of Wales, Honorary Commandant, 398
Ministerial explanation in Supply, 3194-6, 3200-15
Pensions, 388, 397
Special Com. not to consider, 615

Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bills
1. Commissioner. Res. 387; 1r., 10; 2r., com., 395; 3r., 459
2. Pensions. Res. 3864, 3958; 1r., 3959; 2r., com., 3r., 4021

Royal Commission on Natural Resources, Trade and Legislation, ques. 4502

Royal Military College, 3152

Rural Credits, ques. 589

Rural Mail Carriers, ques. 414, ques. 591, 1233, 1282-3, 4522. See also, Post Office
Pontbriand-Robertsonville, ques. 2313
Routes, ques. 506

Russia
Icebreakers, sold to, 1599, 1602, 2106-7
Military expedition to, ques. 995
Trade with, 4322

Ruthenian-Greek Rite. See Juvenile Delinquent Act

St. Camille-Cabano proposed railway, ques. 589

St. Hermas postal service, ques. 412

St. James By-Election, 707

St. Jean D'Orleans Wharf, ques. 317

St. Joachim Postmaster, ques. 1121

St. John, N.B
Armoury, ques. 994
District pension office, 1742
Exhibition buildings, use by militia, ques. 2009
Harbour, 2189, 2985, 3492-93, 4567, 4573
Obstruction, 2118
Pilots, 2119
Public buildings, 3149

St. John River
Report of International Commission, ques. 1623
Water powers, ques. 674, 3290

St. John and Quebec Railway, ques. 508, ques. 1036

St. Julien, Battle of, Commemoration, 1357, 1510

St. Lawrence River
I'le d'Orleans, 3295
North shore municipalities, ques. 922, ques. 1116
Post offices, ques. 1116
Power development on, ques. 1120
Engineers, ques. 1230
Route and channel
Dredging, 1616
Ice conditions and icebreakers, 230, ques. 317, 856-8
Insurance, 4515

St. Lawrence River—Con.
Route and Channel—Con.
Navigation season, 916
Steamship service, 652

St. Louis, Mr. Horace and translation of Revised Statutes, 3082

St. Malo shops, ques. 3079, ques. 3618

St. Peter River
Floods, 889, ques. 1115
Work on, ques. 4019

St. Quentin and Theriault, N.B., catastrophe, 3080

St. Regis Indians, ques. 799

St. Romuald, ques. 2005

St. Valier Wharf, ques. 1231

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. See Labrie

Ste. Anne Soldiers' hospital, ques. 588

Ste. Anne de Beaupre Wharf, ques. 506

Ste. Anne de Bellevue Military Hospital, ques. 1115

Ste. Famille Wharf, ques. 317, ques. 810

Ste. Rosalie-Bagot spur line, ques. 2009

Saar Valley Commission, 344, 3963, 3974. See also League of Nations

Saguenay River
Buoys, ques. 1000
Dredging, ques. 673

Sailors. See Canada Shipping Act

Salaries Act and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 4379; 1r., 4380; 2r., 4427; com., 4456; 3r., 4459

Sales Tax. See Special War Revenue

San Remo Conference, 1465

Savard, Mr. Edmond (Chicoutimi-Saguenay)
Bersimis-Rimouski Service, ques. 1463
Budget, 2870. Union Government—congratulations to Minister of Finance, 2871; the new taxes and cost of living—profiteering — Canada's liabilities, 2872; tariff revision—unfair treatment of Chicoutimi and Saguenay by Government, 2873; St. Catharine-Tadoussac mail, 2874; Metabetchouan postmastership, 2876; Liberal fiscal policy approved, 2879

Savard, Mr. Edmond—Con.
Chicoutimi, military expedition to, ques. 409
Hebertville-St. Joseph d'Alma, mail, ques. 1000
Inspector of weights and measures, ques. 4096
Malbaie-Tadoussac service, ques. 674
Metabetchouan postmaster, ques. 1120
North Point lighthouse, ques. 1361
Post offices in Quebec cities, ques. 413
Saguenay River
Buoys, ques. 1000
Dredging, ques. 673
St. Lawrence North Shore municipalities, 922, ques. 1116
Soldiers serving in Bermuda, ques. 1461
Telegraph operators, government, ques. 2182

Scammell, Mr. J. K., 3784

Scenic attractions, 3538-9

Schelking, Baron, ques. 3618

Scientific Research, 14, 43, 324
Committee, Special, 617, 2154

Scott, Mr. F. S. (South Waterloo)
Canadian National Railways, withholding of information, 1676
Income tax—charities, 3313
Race track betting, 3430

Scrap Iron and Steel, sale of, ques. 1739

Screenings, ques. 704. See also Commercial Feeding Stuffs; Elevators; Grain
Accumulation at elevators, 3395
Export to United States, 3167

Secret Diplomacy. See Debates under League of Nations; Peace Treaties

Seduction. See Criminal Code

Seed Branch, 2411

Seed Grain
Advances, ques. 321, ques. 2519
Alberta, ques. 674
Purchasing Commission, ques. 1117

Séguin, Mr. Paul A. (L'Assomption-Montcalm)
Budget, 3075. Extravagant expenditure, 3075; so-called luxury taxes—neglect of agriculture—Imperial navy, 3076; lighten people's burden—Mr. Fielding's amdt. 3077
Income tax—provincial salaries, ques. 3490

Seguin, Mr. Paul A.—Con.
Leaf tobacco, ques. 996
Military instructors for educational institutions, ques. 413
Military uniforms for educational institutions, ques. 413
Naval Service, 4406

Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. See Indemnity of Members.

Senate
Appointment of members of Commons to, 257
Cost of, ques. 1118
Immigration Act Amdt. rejected by, 3426
Provincial legislators and, 1087
Senator also Legislative Councillor, 209
Staff, 4056-9

Serbia, reported credit to, 567. See also League of Nations; Peace Treaty

Sevigny, Hon. Albert, 114, 210

Sex Hygiene, 942

Sexsmith, Mr. John Albert (East Peterborough)
Apple barrels, 2018-9
Canadian National Railways, standard time, ques. 588
Demonstration farms, 2390, 2396
Eight-hour day, 379
Food and Drugs Bill, 1260-1
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 1935, 1941
Assiniboia expenses, 1179, 1184
Conveying voters, 1063
Deposit, 1094-6
Polling place—parties present, 1102
Voters' lists, 2424-6, 2433
Oleomargarine, 1874-5, 1970

Shaw, Mr. Hugh M. (Macleod)
Canadian Northern Railway bonds guaranteed by Alberta, ques. 2180

Sheard, Mr. Charles (South Toronto)
Franchise Bill—liquor on polling day, 1108
Income tax—disputed returns, 3119-20
Letter carriers' salaries, 1231, 3424
Mines Dept., salaries, 3802-3
Special War Revenue Bill, point of order, 3318

Shenacadie Wharf, 3159

Shipbuilding, 44, 53. See also Shipbuilding Credits; Canada Shipping Act
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 622, 659

Shipbuilding—Con.
Contracts, ques. 314, 662, 892, 919
Govt. operation, Montreal shipping men's opinion, 908
Govt. shipyard at Sorel, 1620, ques. 2180
Inland waters, vessels for, 913
Material for, importation of, ques. 1114
Returned men and, 909
Ship plates, 623
Duty on, ques. 706
Statement by Minister, 618
Steel contracts, ques. 2573
Subsidies, 913
Supply—vote of $20,000,000, 892
Victoria Shipowners (Limited), 4583

Shipbuilding Credits Bill. Res., 3863, 3987; 1r., 4017; 2r., 4137; com., 4155; 3r., 4173
Conditions under which assistance may be given, 4155
Limitation of amount (amdt. Mr. McMaster) 4166
Parliament, report to, 4166-7
Preamble, 4155, 4167
Registration and ownership, 4157, 4167 (amdt. Mr. Duff) 4165
Size of ships, 4159
Wooden ships (amdt. Mr. Duff) 4161

Shipping. See also Canada Shipping Act; Steel and Shipping Registration of, 1614

Shipping Federation. See Canada Shipping Act

Ships. See also Vessels; Naval Service; Shipbuilding; Canadian Government Merchant Marine Foreign, taxation of. See Canada Shipping Act
Great Britain, from, acceptance of, inquiry for correspondence, 4413. See also Naval Defence; Naval Service

Shipwrecked Mariners. See Canada Shipping Act

Shipyard. See Shipbuilding

Shorts. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs

Sick and Distressed Mariners. See Canada Shipping Act; Marine Hospitals

Sifton, Rt. Hon. A. L. (Secretary of State and Minister of Mines)
Canada Temperance Act, 4559
Censorship, 4556
Editorial Board, 4559
War trophies, 4557

Simpson, Mr. Thomas E. (West Algoma)
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Confectionery, 3593
Sales tax, 3794
Voters' lists, 2424

Sinclair, Mr. John E. (Queen's, P.E.I.)
Canadian National Railways—Prince Edward Island car ferry—standardization of railway—Georgetown-Pictou route—labour conditions — Prince Edward Island representative on Board of Management, 4243-6
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3174
Franchise Bill, voters' lists, provincial, 2359-60
Govt. steamers, wages, 1598-9
Graham's Run, 3159
Hickey's wharf, 706
Icebreaker and car ferry, 1602
Judges' salaries, 3854
Maple products, 797
Newfoundland, 4280
North Lake harbour, 3159
Soldier Settlement, 2132
Wrecks, 1612

Sinclair, Mr. John H. (Antigonish and Guysborough)
Advances not accounted for, 2641, 3652-3
Alcohol tax—effect on science, 3496
Antigonish and North Sydney public works, ques. 543, ques. 1004
Army boots and shoes, ques. 506, ques. 1229
Auditor General's report, 4274
Banks, chartered, Government receipts from, ques. 1001
British Columbia Indians, 788-90, 951-3
British preference, ques. 811
Budget, 2636. Cessation of borrowing, 2636; checking waste and extravagance—Union party, 2637; how expenditure might be reduced, 2639; Dept. of Public Information, 2639; Militia advances unaccounted for, 2641; many appointments to the Civil Service, 2642; Liberal tariff platform — parliamentary govt., 2643
Buoy service, 2116-7
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Coal, ques. 1623
Earnings, ques. 1359
Freight rates, ques. 2009
Information withheld, complaint of, 1649
Shareholders, ques, 2011
Canadian National Railways
Deficit, 889-90
Eastern Nova Scotia and, 3377-8
Ships and, 897, 904

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Con.
Canadian National Railways—Con.
Taxation of, 3394
Western extensions, 3387-8
Canadian News Service at Washington, ques. 414
Canadian Northern Railway, arbitration, ques. 2008, ques. 3488
Canadian Railway War Board, ques. 508
Canadian Wheat Board, 4345-50
Central Vermont Railway, ques. 1035
Chartered Banks, money received from, ques. 1001
Civil Service, 3132-40
Appointments, ques. 311
Classification, 3144
Employees, number of, 2642, 3145-6
Insurance, 1780
Temporary employees, ques. 415, 3132-40
Coal Operations Director Bill, 3367
Cold storage, 2407
Dominion lands, ques. 1118
Dredging, 3783
Exchequer Court, 2201
Extension of trade, 1881, 1884-5
Fisheries
Overseers and guardians, 3522-3
United States, treaty with, ques. 1002
Food inspectors, 3539-40
Franchise Bill
By-elections, simultaneous, 1093
Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, 1070
Constables, 3907
Election officers, 1075
Fees, etc., 1111
False statement made to affect election, 1066-7
Interpretation, 1991-2
Oaths, administration of, 780
Poll books, etc., to returning officer, 1079
Proclamation, 1081
Recount by judge, 1110
Returning officers, 1575
Voters' lists
Addition and elimination of names, 3909-13
Preparation—partisanship complained of, 3906
Provincial, 2328-30, 2338, 2360, 3883-4, 3894
Transfer of voters, 3904
Voting on certificate, 1100-1
Government steamers—purchases for, 1610
Government vouchers, loss of at sea, ques. 3489
Guysborough harbour, 2124
Halifax grain elevator, ques. 1116
Health Dept.—variety of its business, 3541

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Con.
Honey adulteration, 2315
Housing, 3547
Expenditure
Demobilization vote, and, 3544-5
Ontario, adjustments with, 3551
Imperial Munitions Board, ques. 1002
Income tax, part payment with return, 3254
Indemnity of members, 4448
Inquiry for returns, 857, 4259
Intercolonial Provident Fund, ques. 509
Judges' salaries, 4340
Lightkeepers' salaries, 2113-4
Loan Companies Act, 1779
Lobsters
Hatcheries employees, ques. 4096
Illegal fishing, ques. 410
Marine hospitals, 3553
Market price of Government bonds, ques. 1462
Masters and mates, 981
Militia, 3674
Annual drill, 3681
Contingencies, 3716
Customs brokers, 3716
Rifle associations, 3725
Morrisons' Ltd. ques. 997
Newspaper postage rates, 3348
Nichols, Mr. M. E., ques. 1118
Ottawa city, agreement with, 990
Paper Currency, gold standard, ques. 309
Pensions and Re-establishment, 3941
Pensioner resident outside of Canada, 4044
Widowed mother, dependent parents, 4043
Pictou,
East river lock, ques. 1119
Harbour, 2187
Pilotage, 1839, 1968, 2119-20
Postal rates, 3736-7
Public Information Dept., ques. 1000, ques. 1740
Railway rates, 1036
Registration of shipping, 1614, 2109
Retirement of members of public service, 3827, 3833
Returns, delayed, 459
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3211
Pensions, 398
St. Lawrence dredging, 1617-20
Schools of navigation, 1612-3
Seed grain advances, ques. 2519, 3286-7
Shipbuilding, Govt.
Assets and liabilities, 896
Contracts and prices, 894, ques. 2573
Trade, tariffs and, 897

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Con.
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3989-92, 4006, 4009-15, 4157-8, 4166
Sick and distressed mariners, 2254-5, 2264-6
Soldier Settlement
Fishermen and, 1690, 3218-9
Staff of dept. 3221
Special War Revenue—candy, 3594
Steamers
"A. J. McKee," ques. 587, 910
"Recruit," ques. 1199
"Voyageur," insurance, ques. 2776
"33," ques. 410
Steamboat inspection, 1051, 1763-4, 2125
Terminal elevators, 1878-9
Turk—expulsion of from Europe, ques. 409
Unforeseen expenses, 1616
Vancouver, B.C., ques. 3620
Victoria, B.C., dry dock, ques. 3619
Winter fishing, 1609
Yukon Placer Mining Act, 3108-9

Skeena River Hatchery, ques. 412

Slidemaster, 1279

Slums, 816

Smith, Mr. J. E., Ques. 2722

Smith, Mr. William (South Ontario)
Demonstration stations, 1016
Franchise Bill, provincial lists, 3892
Rural mail carriers, 4523
United Grain Growers and the farmers, 2745

Smyrna and Anatolia, 3984

Soldier Organizations and Pension Board employees, ques. 1116

Soldiers. See also Returned Soldiers
Canadian prisoners, ques. 1462
Services of Dominion overseas, resolution of British House of Commons, 1159
Votes—effect in general election, 140
Widows and children of, ques. 920. See also Pensions

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. See also Demobilization; Reconstruction
Dept. 513, 520, 524, ques. 2311
Officials travelling, ques. 2311
Prospective ending of, 4456
Report in French ready for distribution, 2126
Report of Com. not printed in French as ordered, 2016
Smith, Mr. J. E., ques. 2722

Soldier Settlement, 275, 516, 521, 524, 527, 534, 1684, 2127, 3218
Colonization lots in Montmagny, ques. 1229
Ministerial explanation in Supply, 3192

Soldier Settlement Act, 1919, Amdt. Bill. 1r., 1289; 2r., 1685; com., 1685; 3r., 1839

Sorel
Government employees at, ques. 1199
Shipyard, 1620, ques. 2180
Superintendent, ques. 343
Vandal, Mr. Calixte, ques. 1740

Soulanges Canal Road, ques. 999

Southam Press Limited, ques. 4096

Sovietism. See Bolshevism

Sparrow, Dr. C. J., ques. 1896

Speaker (Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes)
Rulings and Statements of Amendments, consequential, 2315
Bills
Com., ref. back to—unanimous consent, 4264
Divorce, charges, 4321, 4413
Introducible only by resolution—ref. to trade, 2079
Introduction—not in "Notices of Motion," 1216
Not printed in French, 1152
Resolution adopted, but notice of motion for first reading possibly required, 1229
Senate amendments taken seriatim, 4059
2r
Declared carried, debate closed, 395
Member may speak only once, 3833
Principle only to be discussed, 3827
Same day as 1r., 4341
3r
Amdt. by House without ref. again to Com. 1537
Consequential amdts. 2315
Same day as Com. stage, 2204
Budget debate
Amdt. not to limit debate, 2518
Debate on Thursday and Friday, 2576
Com. suggested for convenience in asking questions—League of Nations, 3971
Comment on documents criticising members, 235
Debate closed by mover, 436, 446, 1137, 1966, 2316, 3102
Exception, by unanimous consent, 2784

Speaker (Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Debate closed by mover—Con.
Rule inapplicable, 2315
Mover of amdt. 3956
3r. of Bill, 2251
Debates, Official Report of
Insertion of documents not read, 363, 364, 1416, 1890, 3932
Question standing as order for return, 1743
Decorum,
Conversation, 2316, 4367
Cowardice, imputation of, 66-7
Noise—building operations, 345
Estimates, item in, debate on, 2467
Hartney, Mr. E. P., 4566
House of Commons
French language, status of, 1039-44
Honour of impugned by statement outside—Rev. Dr Speer, 3491, 3557
Officials and Staff
Organization and classification, 859, 1037-45, 3092-9, 4504, 4563-7
Pages, 3099
Side lobbies, admission of strangers to, 1629
Hypothetical against direct statement, 259
Imputation against a member, 234, 2846
Inquiry for report ordered in French, 2126
Interruptions, 457, 480, 734, 737, 1653, 1709-10
Board of Commerce, 4496-7
Language
"A void in their craniums," 737
"Deliberate falsehood," 2749
"Falsehood," 259
"Mean," 529
"Meanly and untruthfully alleging," 233
"Representatives....the stigma they have left upon themselves," 547
Retracted but afterwards referred to, 774
"Shameless" and words of like character, 235
"Spoke with a brief for the great Massey-Harris corporation," 2627
"Uttered a falsehood deliberately," 2845-6
Members
Asking for answer to question, 2179
Giving way by courtesy, 759
How to be referred to, 50, 528
Mover limited in reply, 1966

Speaker (Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Members—Con.
Not having the floor, not to be interrogated, 528
Right to speak exhausted, 1561, 1572, 1676, 2315, 2702, 4060
Speaking, may not interrogate another, 2631-2
Speaking, may submit questions, 2702-4
To speak only once on a motion, 1466, 1656-7
Motions
Negative, amdt., 4061
Non-debatable
Adjourning debate, 1017, 2840, 4062
Those moved by unanimous consent, 2626
Those taken up under arrangement of no debate, 2014
Notice not given—unanimous consent necessary, 2023, 2177, 2575, 2626
Consent refused, M. stands as notice, 2575
Public expenditure, calling for, 3933
Seconder absent, 418
Successive to adjourn debate, 2840
To adjourn for purpose of discussing matter of urgent, etc.
Steel and shipping merger, 1945-6
Coal shortage, 3685-6
Unnecessary
Authorizing Com. to sit, it not having reported finally, 2776
Withdrawn on understanding of reference, 437
Non-debatable subjects
Com., matters pending before, 3652-3
Report, presentation of, 4257-8
Subjects already debated, 3686
Notice of motion covering question in Votes and Proceedings, 2723
Notice of motion, undesirability of general debate—unanimous consent for Leader of the Opposition, 2178
Orders of the Day
Debate limited, 33, 230, 231, 710, 856, 1045, 1573, 1896, 2179, 2248, 2968, 3228, 3296
Application must be general, 3424
Appropriateness of matter, 1574, 2476, 1742, 3561, 3423, 3769
Argument, 3427
Labrie Brothers, case of, 3560-1
Letter carriers, 1232
Ministerial statements, 708-9
In the nature of making out a case, 3425

Speaker (Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Orders of the Day—Con.
Debate limited—Con.
Replying, latitude allowed in, 3425
Question to be summarized, 3295
Question only partly answered, 753
Question to the House disallowed, 1743
Stoneham, Finlay, case of, 568
Unanimous consent refused, debate not permissible, 2082
Parliamentary restaurant, 3094-6
Previous debate, 1217, 1675, 4417, 4431-2
Coal question, 3686
Privilege
Non-personal reflections, excluded from, 1231
Question may not be raised when another member has the floor, 529, 2838
Ref. to proceedings of Com. which has not reported, 2081
Questions
Answer of Government to be accepted, 753, 1743
Not to be altered by another member; notice to be given, 510
Passed as orders for returns, 1743
At option of Government, 511
Permission not needed to place on Order Paper, 1047
Portion deleted, 1045
Reference to answering—appropriate occasion, 1047, 2416
Standing for Member's revision, 2413
To Chairman of a Committee, and without notice, 2843
Quotations containing language forbidden under the rules, 234-6
Reading of Speeches, 2966
Recognizing members—Mr. Jacobs, Mr. McDonald, 3026, 3039
Relevancy, 734-5, 750-1, 1573, 1954, 3177, 4060
Address, debate on—Budget debate should not be anticipated, 129
Civil Service and patronage, 547
Debate on motion to adjourn for the purpose of discussing, etc., should be strictly relevant, 1951
Judges' salaries and indemnity of members, 4417
Limits of debate, 2468
Naturalization and franchise, 771
Pensions report—general election, 3946
Report not printed in French as ordered, 2016
Speer, Rev. Dr., statement of, 3491, 3557

Speaker (Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Supply—Committee of
Thursday procedure, 3686
Saturday procedure, 3840, 4275
Unanimous consent, 181, 617, 2078, 2625, 3956, 4060, 4321. See also, under this title, Debates, Official Report of, insertion, etc.
Adjournment to fixed time, moved without notice, 304
Customs Act, 3620
M. (Mr. Lemieux) Coal Supply, 3686
Mr. Mackenzie King on Canadian representative at Washington, 2178
Speech of mover not close of debate, 2784
Statement concerning Com. not otherwise permitted, 2081-2
Unauthorized distribution of documents in House, 1744
Vote—member late, 4180
Wednesday evening sittings, 1045

Speaker's Chair
Offer of gift from the Lords and Commons of the United Kingdom, 3224

Speech from the Throne debated. See Address

Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill. Res. 3316; 3334; 3561; 1r., 3634; 2r., com., 3790; 3r., 4289; Senate amendments, 4505
Arrangements for debate, 3617, 3631, 3454
Consideration in detail, 3487-8
Changes proposed, 3345
When effective, 3335, 3607, 3629
Clauses and subjects
"Consumer," definition of, 3795
Effect on prices, 3329, 3340
Importations, 3795
Licenses, 3579, 3600, 4290
Jewellers, 3579
Manufacturer, small, 3797
Manufacturer's agent, 3609
Merchandise not delivered on May 19, 3613
Penalties, 4290
Refunds, 3629, 3607
Retail Merchants' Association, 3342
Revenue from estimated sources, 3332-3
Sales, one or two per cent tax; res., 3608
Stamp taxes and stamps, 3626-7, 3800, 4290
Stocks in trade, 3604
Taxes, how paid, 3587

Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Sources of Revenue Discussed
Acetylene gas, 3796
Airplanes, 3592
Automobiles, 3597, 3793
Baby foods, 3473
Bank overdrafts, 3624-5, 3798
Beer, 3605
Used to make vinegar, 3604
Binder twine, 3610, 3623
Biscuits, 3460
Boats, canoes, yachts, etc., 3588
Boots, 3563-5, 3585
Breakfast foods, 3795
Bric-a-brac 3576
Candy and confectionery 3592
Carpets and rugs, 3577, 3585
Cattle feed, 3473
Chandeliers, 3578, 3597
Chewing gum, 3594
Cigarholders, etc., 3576
Clocks and watches, 3574
Clothes, 3563
Made to order, 4290
Coats, fur, 3791-3
Collars and collarettes of lace, 3574, 3792
Containers, 3615, 3632
Curtains, 3578
Dresses, except silk, 3586-7
Electrical supplies, 3460
Embroideries, 3573
Firearms, 3594, 3793
Food, 3616, 3795
Fountain pens, pocket knives, etc., 3577, 4289
Furniture, 3574
Furs, 3400, 3569, 3791-2
Gas and electric light fixtures, 3596
Glassware, 3569
Gloves, 3568
Hats and caps, 3438, 3453, 3574, 3562, 3565-6, 3790, 4290
Hosiery, 3791
Jams and marmalade, 3796
Jewellery, 3338, 3578
Licenses, 3579
Departmental stores, 3583, 3617
Medals, 3585
Wedding rings, 3584, 3797
Kimonas, petticoats and waists, 3790
Lace, 3573, 3791-3
Collars, 3574, 3792
Liquor and preparations containing alcohol, 3600
Liquor cabinets, etc, 3793
Meats, 3473
Moving pictures, 3627
Musical instruments, 3460-1, 3595-7, 3628

Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Sources of revenue discussed—Con.
Neckwear, 3790
Nightgowns, 3567
Oriental rugs, 3577
Overcoats, cloth, 3586
Pedlars, 3574
Plated ware, 3572
Playing cards, 3599
Promissory notes, 3624
Proprietary medicines, 3600, 3627, 3794
Purses and pocketbooks, 3568
Real estate sales, 3796
Ribbons (including typewriter ribbons) 3473, 3574
Sales tax, 2487, 3608, 3794
Silk
Clothing, 3790
Dresses, etc., 3562, 3632
Fabrics, 3572
Split peas, etc., 3795
Spirits and medicated wines, 3793
Sporting goods, 3569, 3572
Socks and stockings (silk)
Men's and boys, 3566
Women's, 3567
Stock transfers, 3624, 3800
Suits, women's, 3587
Tobacco pipes, 4289
Toiletware, 3576
Tooth washes, 3794
Umbrellas, 3568
Underwear, 3453-4, 3791, 3568
Wedding rings, 3584, 3797
Wheat meal, 3795-6

Speer, Rev. Dr. and Race Track Legislation, 3490, 3557

Spence, Rev. Ben., 1218, 1227

Spinney, Mr. Edgar K. (Yarmouth and Clare)
Budget, 2711. Congratulations to Finance Minister—Canada's war service, 2711; business profits tax, 2712; Canada's agriculture and fisheries, 2713; Mr. Fielding's amdt., 2714
Port Maitland, 4579

Spirit Lake, 566, 2398

Springs. See Irrigation Act Amdt.

Stacey, Mr. F. B. (Fraser Valley)
Alien immigrants, 823
Budget, 2618. British Columbia farmers, 2618; British Columbia resources—the team spirit—change of attitude on trade question, 2619; orchard industry, 2620; American competition with Canadian fruit growers, 2621; head tax, 2623

Stacey, Mr. F. B.—Con.
Campaign funds, 1225
Franchise Bill, Orientals, 1823
Hearing in the Chamber, suggested rearrangement of seats, 394
Indians, British Columbia, 4021, 4037
Inspection and Sale—Fruit containers, 2021
Oleomargarine, 1858
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 394-5
Soldier Settlement, 2141

Stamp taxes, 2487

Standing Orders, Com. appointed, 305

State Insurance for Returned Soldiers' Bill. Res., 3864, 3958; 1r., 3958; 2r., com., 4054; 3r., 4056; Senate amdts., 4466

Statistical Department, 1879, 3296

Statutes, proposed revision, 3821

Steamboat Inspection, 2125. See also Canada Shipping Act Amdt.

Steamers. See Vessels

Steamship Companies, proposed Govt. supervision of, 2013

Steamship Services
Canadian National Railway vessels, services, ques. 342
Campbellton-Gaspe, ques. 342
Charlottetown, 4280
Halifax-Cape Breton, 4281
Lockeport-Froude's Point, 4514
Magdalen Islands, 649-52
Malbaie-Tadoussac, ques. 674
Montreal-Quebec-Gaspe, ques. 587
Mulgrave-Canso, 4515
New Zealand, 4277
Newfoundland, 4277, 4281
South Africa, 4280
Victoria-Vancouver West Island, 4280
Victoria-Skagway, 4514

Steel Industry, 623, 629, 648. See also Shipbuilding
British Empire Steel Corporation, ques. 2777, 4010
Steel and shipping merger, 1895
Debate on M. to adjourn House, 1945

Steele, Mr. Michael (South Perth)
Alien immigrants, 812, 838
Board of Commerce resignations, 4258
Civil Servants with war record, 3130-1
Franchise Bill, voters' lists, 2440
Magazine postage rates, ques. 1898
Press, the, and postal rates, 3745-50, 3761
Retirement of members of public service, 3834

Steele, Mr. Michael—Con.
Rulings and statements as Chairman
Relevancy, 3219-20, 3680, 3713
Scientific research, 2169
Southam Press, Ltd., ques. 4096

Stefansson Expedition, ques. 704, 3284

Stein, Mr. Adolph (Kamouraska)
Criminal Code—petty thefts, 3420
Election and introduction, 949
House of Commons staff, 1041
Income tax
Appeals, 3243
Exemptions on account of children, 3298
Lightkeepers' salaries and bonus, 1282, 2110
Quebec and Saguenay Railway, ques. 3619
Rivière du Loup drill hall, 3726

Stenographers, Members', salaries of, ques, 2311

Sterling, payments to C.E.F., ques. 2008

Stevens, Mr. H. H. (Vancouver Centre)
Alcohol, tax on, 3495
Bill, introduction of—point of order, 1216
Budget, 2589. Minister of Finance and his critics—revenue and expenditure, 2589; foreign credits—Liberals and Liberal-Unionists, 2590; tariff as discussed by spokesman for the Opposition, 2591; war wealth taxation amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 2593; tariff reform, 2594; Farmers' platform, 2595; farmers and the sale of wheat, 2596; business profits taxes, 2598; elevators—political campaign contributions, 2599; income tax—the Budget and direct taxation, 2601; Wheat Board and wheat trade, elevators, etc., 2602; public debt and natural resources, 2603
Canadian Wheat Board, ques., 3294, 4104, 4112
Civil Service classification, ques. 674
Civil Service retirement, 3838
Debates—difficulty in hearing, 1416
Eight-hour day, 335
Fisheries—British Columbia, 3521
Franchise Bill
Advance polls, 3875
Aliens—certificate, 2089-91, 2094
Polling divisions, 1520
Returning officers, 1534
Grain trade. See under this title, Canadian Wheat Board
Indemnity of members, 4089
Military training, 3707-8

Stevens, Mr. H. H.—Con.
Militia, Cadet service, 3707-8
Naval Service
Badges, ques., 506
Debate on estimates—delay, 4411-2
Parliament Buildings, 1416
Purchasing govt. supplies, ques. 591
Returned soldiers' res. for special Com.—pensions, students, vocational training, 532
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 388, 395
Veterans and Pensions, 397, 3201
Sick and distressed mariners, 2253-4, 2263-4, 3099, 3105
Soldier Settlement—soldiers who remained in Canada, 1686
Special War Revenue
Bank overdrafts, 3798-9
Changes by Finance Minister, 3438, 3448
Water carriage of goods, 1213-6
Regulation of, 1723-7
Young, Mr. F., ques. 2313

Stewart, Mr. J. A. (Lanark)
Opium and Drug Bill, 1632, 1637, 1640, 1645, 1648, 1703, 1744-9, 1754-9
Special War Revenue
Proprietary medicines 3601-6
Sales taxes, 3611

Stewart, Mr. Thomas J. (West Hamilton)
Jams and marmalade, 3796
Letter carriers, 1232
Vessel rates, 1709, 1727

Stewart, Mr. W. J., 3985

Stoneham, Finlay, 567

Strikes. See also Grand Trunk; Industrial Disputes
How authorized in certain cases, 1902
Trial of Winnipeg parties, ques. 2181

Subsidies and Bounties—Farmers' party position, 899

Sugar
Embargo on, 3226
Importations, ques. 2009
Price, 1896

Superannuation. See Civil Service

Supply Bills. See Appropriation Acts

Supply, Committee of, 880, 1296, 1416, 1598, 1649, 1877, 2103, 2151, 2366, 2382, 2390, 3147, 3192, 3218, 3265, 3507, 3654, 3702, 3769, 3801, 3821, 3840, 3961, 4069, 4181, 4274, 4291, 4380, 4466, 4506

Supply, Committee of—Con.
Debate in, arrangements for, 1597, 1602, 1615
Ordered, 304
Subjects and items debated
Agriculture, 2382
Institute of, 2411
Minister, statement and review by, 2366
Bounties Act administration, 1877
British Columbia lighthouses, 1616
Canada Grain Act administration, 1877
Canada Year Book, 1879
Canadian National Railways, 4181
Civil Government, 859
Civil Service bonus, 1209
Cold storage, 2407
Culling timber, 1877
Customs, 3858
Dairying industry, 2403
Distressed seamen, 1613
Dominion lands and parks, 3283, 3769
Entomological Branch, 2401
Experimental Farms, 2382, 2390, 2412
External affairs, 3973
Fisheries, 3521
Flax, 1886
Gas and Electricity inspection, 1887
Health Dept., 3539
Immigration and Medical inspection, 3555
Indians, 3265
Industrial and Scientific Research, 1886
Interior Dept., 3192
Justice, 3840
Labour Dept., 4506
League of Nations, 3961
Lighthouses, 2110
Live stock, 1614
Marine hospitals, 3552
Marine, unforeseen expenses, 1615
Masters and mates, 1610
Meat and canned foods, 2411
Method of voting, 108. See also Estimates
Militia, 3654, 3702
Mines and Geological Survey, 3801
Naval affairs, 3507
Naval service, 4291, 4380
Navigation schools, 1612
Northwest territories, 3280
Ocean and river service, 1598, 2103
Patent record, 1886
Pilotage, 2119
Pollution of boundary waters, 3552
Post office, 4501
Public buildings, Nova Scotia, 3147
Public works, 1416, 3769
Quarantine, 3554
Railways and canals, 880, 2378, 4181

Supply, Committee of—Con.
Subjects and items debated—Con.
Registration of shipping, 1614
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3194
St. Lawrence ship channel, 1616
Seed Branch, 2411
Shipbuilding, 618
Soldier Settlement, 2127, 2151, 3192
Sorel shipyard, 1620
Statistics—census, 1879
Steamboat inspection, 2125
Steamship subsidies, 4277
Terminal elevators, 1878
Trade, extension of, 1880
Wharves, 2122
Wrecks—investigations, 1612
Wrecking plants, 1615, 2103
Yukon, 3281

Supreme Court, judgment in re Board of Commerce, 3685

Supreme Court Act Amdt. 1r., 2003-4; 2r., 2315; com., 2317; 3r., 2389

Sutherland, Mr. Donald (South Oxford)
Agricultural Gazette, 1085
Budget, 2910. Congratulations to Finance Minister—Sir Robert Borden's return —Mr. Trahan—Canada's part in the war, 2911; Mr. Fielding's amdt. and address, 2912; Mr. Crerar's resignation from the Government, 2913; the recall —Mr. Crerar and farmers' organizations in Ontario, 2914; political organizations on class lines, 2915; farmers' delegation on conscription; Sir Wilfrid Laurier's policy in 1917—the Government and tariff revision, 2916; England and Canada compared as to tariff conditions, 2917; United Grain Growers, Limited, its policy and profits, 2919; elevator screenings, 2920; record of Mr. Crerar and Mr. J. F. Reid—dairy industry and Mr. Crerar's administration, 2921; agriculture in Ontario, abandoned farms, 2922; overcrowding of cities everywhere, 2923; Canada's war record—conscription, 2924; Canada will carry on, 2925
Business Profits tax, public utilities, 3236-7
Butter in cold storage, ques, 543
Campaign funds—Grain Growers, United Farmers, 1227
Canadian Wheat Board, 4125, 4343-4, 4355-6
Civil Service, bonus, 1277, 1282-4
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3167-73, 3395-3409
Analysis, ques. 922

Sutherland, Mr. Donald—Con.
Eight-hour day, 384
Industry and agriculture, 453
Experimental farm system, ques. 1360
Ontario, 4560
M. for extension, 1005, 1014
Food and Drugs Bill, 965
Food shortage, threatened, 1845
Franchise Bill—Indians, 2056
Grain elevators, ques. 3862
Indemnity of members, 4095
Inspection and Sale Act—containers, 2021
Mining resources—prospectors, 3812
National Council of Women, declaration by, 1841
Oleomargarine, 1840-75
Re-claimed screenings, ques. 507
Registration postal rate, and express companies, 3744
Rural mail carriers, 1233, 1282-4
Soldier Settlement, 2131
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill—License, small manufacturer, 3797
Threat to members by outsiders, 1743
United Grain Growers' Limited, ques. 922

Sydney, Quarantine station, 3149

Syrians in Canada, ques. 3862

Tache, Mr. Charles Eugene, ques. 3490

Tache, Mr. J. de L., 4505

Taft, ex-President, and Grand Trunk Railway, 3490

Tariff. See also Address; Budget; Customs, Special War Revenue
French Treaty. See that title
Prices, 227
Reduction of—amdt. (Mr. Fielding) to Budget, 2510
7½ per cent, ques. 1001
Tobacco, duties on, ques. 1114

Tariff Changes, 2490

Taxation. See also Revenue Bills
Business profits, ques. 314
Civil Service income by Ottawa city. See Ottawa City Agreement Bill Customs. See also Tariff
7½ per cent, ques. 1001
Direct or indirect, 128, 167
Excess profits, ques. 2012
Govt. railway property, of, 580-1, 3893
Income, 123, 227
Forms in French, 1084, 1573
Incomes over $100,000, ques. 3490
Inspector at Kingston, ques. 2181
Trust and Loan Company of Canada, 586

Taxation—Con.
Income and profits, collection, ques. 806
Indemnity of members. See that title
Land, 128, 177, 220, 228, 2612, 2883, 2888
Single Tax, 1120, 2651-7, 2706
Luxuries, 2615. See also Special War Revenue
Mines, 128, 3810
Mutual Insurance Companies, ques. 2012
Provincial and Federal, 833
Provincial salaries and indemnities, ques. 3490
Railway profits, 865
Real estate transfers, 3796
War profits, 189, 302
War taxes, ques. 1001
War tax stamps, ques. 807
Waterfront privileges, 128
Wealth, 2527

Taxes, municipal payment by Dominion. See Ottawa City agreement

Technical Education, 43, 53
Government assistance, ques. 2519

Technical Education Bill. 1r., 1290; 2r., com., 1761; 3r., 1762

Telegraphs and Telephones, 4577
Govt. contracts, ques. 1627
Govt. operators, bonus, ques. 2182
Rates appeal, ques. 2009

Témiscouata Railway, ques. 674

Textiles, duties on imports, ques. 1899. See also Customs

Theodore D'Acton Post Office, ques. 2011

Theriault and St. Quentin catastrophe, 3080

Thompson, Mr. Alfred (Yukon)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 76. Parliament Buildings, 76; Orders in Council and Yukon—stability of Union Government, 77; industrial prosperity and popular unrest—high cost of living and the remedy, 78; Canada and Canada's achievements—local representation in the Cabinet, position of Hon. Mr. Blondin, 79; proposed general election—Leader of the Opposition on the health of the Prime Minister, 80; hopes for Prime Miniser's restoration to health, 81
Franchise Bill
Disqualification of candidates, 1088
"Rural polling division," 1993

Thompson, Mr. Alfred—Con.
Franking privilege, 3357
Opium and Drug Bill, 1631-2
Scientific research, 2160
Stefansson expedition, ques. 704
Yukon Placer Mining Act, 3107-9

Thomson, Mr. Levi (Qu'Appelle)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 177. Class representation and class legislation, 177; exchange rate and trade—Canadian Reconstruction Association, 178; proposed general election, 179
Budget, 2614. War revenue, 2614; luxury taxes—critics of Farmers' party, 2615; manufacturers and farmers, 2616; free list asked for by Farmers' party, 2617; manufacturers would benefit by tariff reduction, 2618
Federal Bureau of Education, 1386
Franchise Bill, 746
Advance polls, 1941, 2000-1
Aliens—certificate, 2091-3, 2099
Canada Temperance Act, 2053
Contributions, 1170, 1196
Conveying voters—compulsory voting, 1064
Disqualification — charitable support, those receiving, 1817-8
Election expenses, 1154, 1930-1
Nomination—"Elector," how defined, 1917-8
Recall, the, 2038-40, 2046
Returning officers, 1523
"Rural polling division," 1993
Voters' lists, 2434, 2441
Newspaper postage, 3756-7
Race track betting, 3432
Soldier Settlement, 1698
Cattle branding, 1700-1

Threat to Members, 1743

Three Rivers harbour, 3491

Thrift, 13. See also Government Annuities
Need of, Speech from the Throne, reference to, 8

Ticket of Leave, 398, 2015

Timber Culling, 1877

Timiskaming, By-election, 1188, 2898

Timiskaming Lake
Wharves, 2187, 3493

Tobacco. See also Inland Revenue and Customs

Tobacco—Con.
Duties on, ques. 1114
Leaf, ques. 996

Tobin, Mr. Edmund William (Richmond and Wolfe)
Asbestos postmaster, ques. 320
Auditor General's report, publication in French, ques. 1627
Blondin, Hon. Mr., trips to Europe, 541
Canada Gazette, ques. 2179
Canadian Northern railway lands, ques. 1626, ques. 2008
Chinese in Canada, ques. 805
Connaught Rifle range, ques. 671
Dominion notes and gold standard, ques. 588
Duncan, Mr. Walter, ques. 2720
Finance Dept. employees, ques. 592
Imperial Press Conference, ques. 410
Japanese in Canada, ques. 805
Langton, Brig. Gen. J. G., ques., 541, ques. 811
Medical officers and nurses, ques. 341
Military Police, ques. 804, ques. 805
Militia Dept., London employees, ques. 671
Obligations, Dominion, ques. 998
Parliament Buildings, 1422
Door contract, ques. 320
Post Office, ques. 3294
Ste. Anne soldiers' hospital, ques. 588
Special War Revenue Act
Boots, 3565
Sporting goods, 3572

Tolmie, Hon. S. F. (Minister of Agriculture)
Agriculture, review of, 2366. Increased production, possibilities, 2366; keeping people on the farm, 2371; city man and farmer—home and foreign markets, 2372; Dept. of Agriculture and its branches, 2373; summary of policy, 2376; dairy cows, 2378; labour situation, 2379
Agricultural Gazette, 1085
Animal Contagious Diseases Bill, 1622, 1840
Cold storage, 2407-9
Commercial feeding stuffs, 3163-74, 3403-9
Dairy industry, 2403-6
Cow testing and milk testing, 2406
Election and introduction, 1, 47
Entomology, branch, 2402
Experimental farms, 1013, 2375, 2382-9, 2396-9, 2401, 2404, 2412
Ontario and, 1015
Flax industry, 696
Fox farming, 2409

Tolmie, Hon. S. F.—Con.
Fruit Branch, 2410
Grading export butter and cheese, 602-4
Hewitt, the late Dr. Gordon, 2375-6
Inspection and Sale Act (Fruit packages) 1915-6, 2016-23
Apple barrels, 2022
Authority of Governor in Council, 2019
Nova Scotia fruit growers, 2017-8
Penalties, 2020
Size of packages, 2016-7, 3109
International Institute of Agriculture, 2411
Meat and canned food, 2411
Oleomargarine Bill, 1781, 1875-7, 1968-71
Potato Bag, 4562
Seed Branch, 2411
Tobacco growing, 2376, 2383
Victoria
By-election, 4584
Shipbuilding—work for returned soldiers, 4584
Wheat—work of Mr. S. Wheeler, 2388

Toronto
Exhibition Buildings, use of by militia, ques. 2009
Grain elevators, ques. 1897
Harbour improvements, ques. 2181
Income tax payments, ques. 592
Postal employees, threatened strike of. 3424
Postal station "A," 3155
Rifle range, 3728
Telephone rates appeal, ques. 2009
Union station, 3225-6

Toronto Eastern and Toronto Suburban Railways, ques. 1004, ques. 1510, ques. 2080

Tracadie Lazaretto, 3554

Trade
Austria and Germany, from, ques. 2416. ques. 3359
British Preference, 2079
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 621
Extension of, 1880
Foreign, 2477, 2481
France with Customs tariff convention, ques. 3684
Treaty, 3425, ques. 4323
Royal Commission on, ques. 4502
Russia, with, 4322
West Indies Conference, 3161
Greece and Roumania with, ques. 2414

Trahan, Mr. Arthur (Nicolet)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 87. Liberal party in the war, Trahan, Mr. Arthur—Con.

Address—Con.
87; Quebec, then and now, 88; farmers' and conscription, 89; Quebec and its "hour"—Quebec and its tolerance, 90; League of Nations—Canadian autonomy, 91; Navy, Lord Jellicoe's visit—tax exempt bonds—Grand Trunk Railway, 92; public ownership of railways—Civil Service classification, 93; agriculture, Quebec people stay on the land—the disease of luxury, 94; radicalism and imperialism, 96
Bankruptcy Bill, 3256
Budget, 2857. Progressive weakness of national credit and its causes—gold reserve, 2857; inflation of credits—prices, 2859; exchange situation and remedies therefor, 2860; Canada and Japan, position as result of the war— deflation, 2861; increased production necessary, 2862; Mr. Fielding's amdt.—Supreme Council for Peace Conference and commercial freedom — Europe's debts to Canada, 2863
Civil Service holidays, 4057-62
Franchise Bill, 776
Corrupt practices—penalties, 1160-1
Election expenses, 1153-4
Polling divisions, 1518
Mackie, Mr. H. A., absence of, 2969
Water-powers surveys, 3292

Transcontinental Railway. See Canadian National

Translation Staff. See Criminal Code Amdt. (French version); House of Commons

Trent Canal wharves, ques., 586, ques. 1359

Trust Companies Act Amdt. Bill. 1r., 855; 2r., com., 3r., 1779

Turgeon, Mr. Onésiphore (Gloucester)
Abey, Mr. H. R., ques. 1000
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 110. French language—New Brunswick cabinet representation. 110; representation and census, 111; proposed general election—land values taxation—exchange and currency, 112; franchise, 114
Biological Board, ques. 2572
Budget, 2649. Congratulations to Minister of Finance—Canada's soldiers, 2649; gross and net debt—new taxes, 2650; Mr. J. H. Sinclair's charges—free trade advocated—Henry George and land values taxation, 2651; Liberal party and free trade, 2652; Farmers' party

Turgeon, Mr. Onésiphore—Con.
Budget—Con.
and Liberal party—need of increased production, 2653; Mr. Elkin and tariff; manufacturers would benefit by free trade, 2654; foreign trade, harbours and shipping, 2655; free trade and new sources of revenue, 2656; land values tax and its effects, 2657; repeal of land value taxes in Britain, 2659; "Scientific tariff," 2659
Canadian National Railways
Deficits — rates — management—representation of labour — subdivisions, 4202-8
Rates, 1443
Experimental Farms, 2382
Franchise Bill
Advance polls—fixed day of the week for elections, 1164, 1942
Election officers, fees, etc., 3868
Proclamation—language of publication, 1080, 1828, 1833-7, 2267-70, 2310
Amdt. 1834, neg. 2311
Returning officers, 1530, 1581-2
French speeches in House, 701
Grand Trunk Railway, 1443
Indemnity of members, 4086
Pensions, 432, 3934
Quarantine—Tracadie and D'Arcy Island, 3554
Railway rates and Parliament, 4188
Returned soldiers, 531
Fishing industry, and, 3934
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 3993

Turk, Expulsion of from Europe, ques. 409

Tweedie, Mr. Thomas M. M. (West Calgary)
Banff National park, 3770
Farmers' Co-operative Company, 3995-6
Franchise Bill
Aliens—certificate, 2236-7
Contributions, 1184
Recall, the, 2023, 2029, 2033, 2045-50
Returning officers, 1528, 1533
Voters' lists, 2431-8
Indemnity of members 4090
Militia—active militia, allowance, 3669-71
Opium and Drug Bill, 1645, 1647-9
Personal position, 2049
Retirement of members of public service, 3826-9
Scientific research, 2172
Shipbuilding, Credits Bill, 3996

Typhus Epidemic, 4545

Uniform, unlawful use of, 3417. See also Criminal Code

Union Government. See debates under Address; Budget

United Grain Growers, Limited, ques. 922

United Shoe Company case, 4479

United States, See also League of Nations
Canadian ambassador to, announcement, 2177
Canadian representation in, 4533. See also Washington
Coast defence and, 4294, 4298
Export of screenings to. See Commercial Feeding Stuffs
Fisheries treaty with, ques. 1002, 1290, 3161
Immigrants from, ques. 1463
League of Nations, and, ques. 1118, 3977
Liquor shipments to, 2107, 2118
Shipping Board and Canadian Govt. Merchant Marine, ques. 2009
Soldiers and lands in Canada. See Dominion Lands Act Amdt.

Universal Military Training, 923

Unopposed Motions for Returns, 321, 415, 437, 544, 675, 923, 1004, 1123, 1362, 1464, 1628, 1900, 2015, 2313, 2417, 2722, 2896, 3079, 3294, 3490

Vancouver, B. C.
Dry dock, ques. 316, ques. 3620
Public building, 3156

Vandal, Mr. Calixte, ques. 1740

Vatican Mission, ques. 310

Venereal Diseases, 924, 927, 3556

Verville, Mr. Alphonse (St. Denis)
Board of Commerce, M. for abolition, 1143
Bonus and salaries, ques. 2079; ques. 2311
Eight-hour day, 381
Grand Trunk Railway and strike of 1910, 1564
House of Commons staff, ques. 590
Indemnity of members, 4072-3
Industrial disputes, 1981-2
Musical instruments, tax on, 3595-6
Parliament Buildings, 1424-7
Popular unrest, 1145
Price regulation, 1143
Profiteers—punishment, 1145

Vessel Rates, 1733, ques. 2414, ques. 2572, ques. 2777. See also Railway Act Amendment

Vessels. See also Shipbuilding
Canadian National Railways, ques. 342
Charge on for sick mariners, 2253
Icebreakers, 230, 1598, 1620
Uniforms of men on, 1603
"Montcalm," 1606
Importation of material used in construction, ques. 1114

Names
"A. J. McKie," ques. 587, 903, 910
"Canada," ques. 1230
"Canadian Inventor," 3226, 3359
"Canadian Pioneer," 902
"Canadian Recruit," ques. 312, ques. 1199, 648
"Champlain," ques. 314, ques. 672, ques. 921, ques. 1121; ques. 3619
"J. D. Hazen," 2105
"Lady Evelyn," ques. 3619
"Lady Grey"—Uniforms for crew, ques. 1003, ques. 1361
"Montcalm," 1606. See also Icebreakers
"Niobe" and "Rainbow." See Naval Defence
"Simcoe," ques. 413
"Stanley," ques. 312
"Three Rivers," ques. 1897
"Voyageur," ques. 2776
"33," ques. 410
Under Railway Commission, ques. 2777. See also Railway Act Amdt.

Victoria
By-election, 4584
Dry dock, ques. 3619
Shipowners (Limited) 4583

Victoria and Carleton, by-election, 121

Victoriaville-Arthabaska Branch Line, ques. 4502

Victory Loans, ques. 803, 2520
Amount of, ques. 2008
Commissions, ques. 320
Committee, ques. 320, ques. 2008
Gold, payments in, 2647-8
Tax exemption, 92. See also Loans

Vien, Mr. Thomas (Lotbiniére)
Canadian Govt. Merchant Marine, withholding of information, 1654-5, 1681-3
Canadian National Railways, 1457
Civil Service
Bonus, 1273, 1285
Holidays, 4062
Retirement of members, 4461

Vien, Mr. Thomas—Con.
Electricity, competition in sale of—taxation, 3116
Food and Drugs Bill, 1256, 1266-7
Franchise Bill
Disqualification, charitable aid, those receiving, 1815-8
Proclamation, language of publication, 2286-96
Grand Trunk Railway, 1454-9
Income tax, 3120
Charities, 3246
Stock dividends, 3239-40
Maple products, 1255-6
Opium and Drug Bill, 1703-6
Pilotage, 1839
Post Office salaries, 4527-9
Private Bills—insurance and loan, 3860
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3210-1, 3213-4
Shipbuilding Credits Bill, 4139
Soldier settlement
Defaults, 3223
Staff, 3220-1
Steel and shipping merger, 1953-6

Vimy Battlefield, ques. 1358, 1460

Vladivostok, Japanese occupation of, 1945

Vouchers, Govt. loss of at sea, ques. 3489

Wainwright, Herd of Buffalo, 3283

War
Army boots and shoes, ques. 506
Battlefields Memorial, 1460, 1738, 2078, 2177
Bonus to soldiers, 1082
Canada's record, 46
Canadian Expenditionary Force
Burke, Rev. A. E., Chaplain, ques. 2079
Members, ques. 315
Officers and men stationed in Canada, ques. 1200
Provinces, enlistments by, ques. 408
Sterling, payments in, ques. 2008
Vouchers, Government, loss of at sea, ques. 3489
Canteen profits, 709, ques. 800
Defaulters, Chicoutimi, ques. 409
Equipment, guns, 3661-2
Fishermen, and, 845
Indemnity
Allies conference at Ostend, 2476, 2574
Canada's share, 1084
Germany, payments, ques. 310, ques. 1463
Kinmel camp riots, 709
Medals, ques. 1003, 1046, ques. 1120
Medical officers and nurses, ques. 341

War—Con.
Memorial, 1460, 3228
Militia headquarters officers not in France, ques. 506
Pensions. See that title
Re-establishment. See that title
Trophies, 4557

War Bonds. See also Budget
Govt., amount of, 2009

War Bonds Over-Suscription Validation Bill. Res. 4137, 4180; 1r., 4181; 2r., com., 4287; 3r., 4288

War Measures Act, Coal Operations and. See Coal

War Purchasing Commission. See Purchasing Commission

War Tax Stamps, ques. 807

War Trophies, 4557

Washington, Canadian Representative at, 448, 1742, 3080-1, 4533
Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) to Supply, 2442-4, neg. 2475
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) to reduce vote, 4540
Announcement, 2177

Washington Labour Conference, 371

Washington, Trade Mission at, 1882

Waste, deplorable, 679

Water Carriage of Goods. See also Railway Act Amdt.
M. (Mr. Stevens) 1213
Order for Bill called—dropped, 2311

Water Powers of British Columbia, ques. 1118

Water Rights. See Irrigation Act Amdt.

Waugh, Mr.—Saar Valley Commission, 344

Ways and Means, Committee ordered, 304, 1289, 3078, 3110, 3111, 3215

Weeds. See Noxious

Weights and Measures, Inspector of, ques. 4096

Westfield Beach Railway, running rights, ques. 508, 4230

West Indies
Canada's trade with, 635, 2542
Conference, 1884, 2892, 3161, 3860
Outrages on blacks, 2845-6

Wharves, 2122. For individual wharves, see their titles

Wheat. See also Canada Grain Act
Exports to United States, ques. 313
Greece, for, ques. 509, ques. 415
Improved breeds of seed—Mr. S. Wheeler's work, 2387
Marquis, 1013
Participation certificates, 127, ques. 802, ques. 802
Production, 147
Shipments by farmers to United States, ques., 802

Wheat Board. See Canada Wheat Board

Wheeler, Mr. S., 2387-8

Whidden, Mr. Howard Primrose (Brandon)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 115; Proposed general election—Reconstruction, 115; Franchise Act—Canada and external affairs—European distress, 116; Little Canadians, 118
Alien immigrants, 829
Canada Temperance Act, ques. 807
Scientific research, 2166

White, Mr. A. V., ques. 1002

White, Mr. James, ques. 2573

White, Hon. Sir Thomas (Leeds)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 182. Personal position—congratulations to leader of the Opposition—proposed general election, 182; mandate of the Govt.—Franchise Act, 183; Union Govt. and its record, 184; the country needs stability of administration, 185; National Liberal-Conservative party—Farmers' movement, 185; Canada's war finance—Hon. Mr. Crerar, 187; tariff for revenue and for protection—his financial administration, 188; taking war profits for public benefit, 189; loans in New York—exchange rate and trade, 190—farmers leaving the land—domestic loans, 191; thrift campaign—tax-free bonds, 192; Canada's financial credit, 193; "Carry On!" 194

White, Mr. W. H. (Victoria, Alberta)
Agriculture and stock raising, 2376-8
Alberta penitentiary, ques. 2777, 3855-7

White, Mr. W. H.—Con.
Canadian National Railways
Brudenheim branch, 871-2, 885, 4250
Equipment, 4250
Canadian Wheat Board, 4130
Car shortage, 882-3
Franchise Bill, 765
Advance polls, 1934, 3875-6
Name not on list—oaths, 3877
Polls, hours to be open, 1920-1
Recall, the, 2050-1
Horse racing 3428
Naturalization, enemy alien origin, 3921-2
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 3199-3200
Pensions, 3202
Saskatchewan and Manitoba penitentiaries, ques. 2574
Soldier Settlement, 2132-3
Spirit River wheat shipments, 566

Wigmore, Mr. Rupert W. (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert)
Freight to Canada from United States prepaid, 1893
Opium and Drug Bill, 1753, 1756-8
St. John dry dock, 4573
St. John harbour—pilots, 2118
St. John river—wharves, 2123
St. John-Digby service, 4285-6

Williams Head quarantine, 3156

Wilson, Mr. J. R. (Saskatoon)
Agriculture, 2387
Canadian Wheat Board, 4354
Civil Service bonus—letter carriers, 1276
Coal Operations director, 3180
Commercial Feeding Stuffs, 3165-6
Franchise Bill—conveying voters, 1062
Income tax, charities, 3313
Newsprint, 2967

Wilson, Mr. J. R.—Con.
Soldier Settlement—cattle branding, 1699
Special War Revenue, 3574
Jewellers, licenses'—department stores, 3583
Wheeler, Mr. S., 2387

Wine—imports from France, ques. 1627

Winnipeg
Grain exchange, ques. 2005
Meterological station, 2125
Postal station "A," 3156
Strikers, trial of, ques. 2181

Wolff, Mr., and Printing Bureau, ques. 1624

Women in Industry, 369

Women's Conference, 262

Wood Alcohol, 3580

Workmen's Compensation Act and seamen, 2263. See also Canada Shipping Act, 2263

Wrecks, Investigations, 1612

Wrecking Plants, subsidies, 1615

Wright, Mr. H. O. (Battleford)
Budget, 2753. Luxury taxes, 2754; duties on farm machinery—farmers and tariff—Mr. Fielding's amdt., 2755
Franchise Bill, advance polls, 3876

Young and Co., Arthur. See Arthur Young

Young Men's Christian Association, 1219, 1226

Yukon, administration—salaries, etc., 3281

Yukon Placer Mining Bill. 1r., 2892; 2r., com., 3106; 3r., 3109; Senate amdts. 4264