House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Wednesday, May 5, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

Rt. Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 108, to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will the right hon. gentleman please explain?

Mr. DOHERTY: The first purpose of the Bill is to make provision for the constitution of the Exchequer Court so as to bring it into correspondence with a provision that was passed the session before last as an amendment to the Judges Act. The Exchequer Court as constituted under the Exchequer Court Act is composed of the judge of the Exchequer Court and an assistant judge. When the amendment to the Judges Act was passed in the first session of 1919, there was in contemplation a modification of the constitution of the court, and in making provision for salaries, provisions were made to correspond with that contemplated modification. Salaries were provided for the president of the court and for two judges, whereas the Act constituting the court created only a judge of the court and an assistant judge. The purpose of the present Bill is to meet, I might say half way, that provision in the Judges Act, which in itself will have to be modified by substituting in the Exchequer Court Act for the provision that the court shall consist of a judge and an assistant judge, a provision that the court shall consist of a president of the court and one puisne judge. The provision in the Salaries Act will have to be made to correspond to that, the number of judges being cut down from two to one. Then, there is a modification of the existing provision with regard to the possible provision of a deputy judge in cases where one may be required.

The next provision is in regard to the office of registrar.

Mr. HOCKEN: Louder.

Mr. BUREAU: The Orange Sentinel cannot hear.

Mr. DOHERTY: I certainly am most anxious that all vigilant "sentinels" shall be aware of what I am doing. The second purpose of the Bill is to make provision enabling the registrar of the court, with the authority of the president or the judge, to deal with certain practice matters, and in that connection provision is made for the appointment and the salary of the registrar.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a first time.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

Rt. Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 109, to amend the Supreme Court Act.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose of the proposed change is to bring about a simplification and uniformity in the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and also to prevent appeals being brought to it in matters of trifling importance on the plea that title to land or future rights are involved. To accomplish the purposes intended, it is proposed that appeals as of right to the Supreme Court should be restricted to cases in which the amount or value of the matter in controversy in the appeal, whatever its nature, exceeds the sum of $2,000 exclusive of costs and that in all other cases an appeal shall lie ordinarily only by special leave of the highest court of last resort in the province. Provision is made for appeals per saltum, that is, for appeals from courts other than the final court of last resort in the province. But such appeals are subject to leave by the court of final resort in the province concerned.

Provision is also made for appeals that arise under section 232 of the Railway Act, where the Supreme Court or High Court has concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Appeal, and there is no appeal from the former to the latter, and, therefore, under the law as it now stands, no appeal to the Supreme Court under the existing jurisdiction.

As the law now stands, in all the provinces of Canada, except Quebec and except in the special cases with regard to titles to real estate and so forth, the right to appeal now depends upon a sum exceeding $1,000, or property of equivalent value, being involved in the appeal. In Quebec, on the other hand, the corresponding restriction on the right to appeal is to cases in which the matter in controversy in the action, that is, demanded in the action, amounts to at least $2,000. Thus a judgment for $100 damages recovered in Quebec, if upheld in the Court of Appeals, is now appealable de plano to the Supreme Court, if the plaintiff's original demand was not less than $2,000 It is felt that an appeal actually involving a matter of comparatively small value should not be permitted as of right merely because the plaintiff had been advised to claim a comparatively large sum in the first instance. These cases are provided for by extending to the province of Quebec the power to grant leave now existing in the other provinces, but as modified in section 41 of the present Bill. The Bill substantially involves giving to the provincial courts in all the provinces exclusive rights to grant leave to appeal in cases not now appealable de plano.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand that to mean that the judgment must be for over $2,000 in Quebec now?

Mr. DOHERTY: In order that there should be an appeal de plano, the judgment itself, the amount in issue on the appeal to the Supreme Court, must be $2,000, and the same provision will hold good as regards all the provinces. But to afford a recourse to those parties who had, because of the original amount of their demands, a right to appeal, and who may consider that they are being deprived of some substantial right, there will be provision whereby in cases of that kind, upon leave from the court of last resort in the province, an appeal may be had to the Supreme Court, although the amount at issue on the appeal is not $2,000. That provision also will be common to all the provinces.

The principal purpose of the Bill is to bring about uniformity in the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, doing away with the present existing distinctions in that jurisdiction, depending upon the province from which the appeal comes.

To summarize the Bill, under it, in order to be appealable to the Supreme Court, a judgment must be rendered in a judicial proceeding as defined. The Bill contains a definition of a judicial proceeding, really adopting, I think, the present accepted view, but it is put in in order to clear up difficulties and differences. The judgment must not be discretionary, except in equitable proceedings in provinces other than Quebec. It must be a final judgment, as defined in the Bill, unless it directs a new trial or grants or refuses a non-suit, and finally, it must not be rendered in a criminal cause or in habeas corpus, certiorari or prohibition arising out of a criminal charge, or in habeas corpus on extradition. To be appealable as of right, the judgment must involve matter amounting to or having a value exceeding $2,000 exclusive of costs and must be rendered by the highest court of final resort in the province. Appeals from any other court require the leave of the highest court of final resort in the province, or if $2,000 be involved, the consent of the parties. If the judgment be rendered in a proceeding originating before any court, board or commission, of which the judges or presiding officers are not appointed by the Dominion Government, or if it involves less than $1,000 (except in the special cases; that is, the special cases covered by clauses (a) to (e), that is to say, cases having to do with titles to land and so forth) leave of the highest court of final resort in the province to appeal from it is required.

If an amount between $1,000 and $2,000 is involved, and the proceeding originated in a court of which the judges are appointed by the Dominion Government and in the special cases mentioned, that is cases with regard to title to land, future rights, validity of statutes and patents and so forth, leave to appeal may be given by the Supreme Court if refused by the highest court of final resort in the province.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

PAROLED PRISONERS.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. How many prisoners were released under ticket of leave during last year?
2. Is it true that one W. H. Tapley, convicted of rape against his daughter, and sentenced to penitentiary, was released recently under the ticket of leave?
3. If so, why and at whose request?

Rt. Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. 824.
2. Yes.
3. By order of His Excellency the Governor General on petitions by his sons and daughter (the victim of the crime), and others, after he had served, with remission, seven years and three months.

WINNIPEG GRAIN EXCHANGE.

*Mr. PECK:

1. Is the Government aware of any combination of vessel brokers in the Winnipeg Grain Exchange formed since the year 1914?
2. Was this combination in the nature of pooling their interests?
3. Was such pool recognized by the Canadian Wheat Board and did such board authorize its continuance and recognize it as a proper and reasonable organization for such a purpose?
4. Did the Government aid such pool?
5. Who were the members of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange who compose this combination or pool?
6. Was the present chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board or his immediate business associates connected with the combination?
7. Who were the vessel brokers who were members of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange at the time of the outbreak of the war?
8. Among these, who enlisted for overseas service and in what capacity?
9. Are any of these overseas men still members of the Exchange, and who are they?
10. Did any of these men apply for admission to the pool mentioned above after returning from the war, and if so, with what result?
11. Does the Government or Canadian Wheat Board purpose the allowance of the continuation of such a pool, and if so, will members of the Exchange who performed overseas service be permitted to become associated with and enjoy the benefits derived from such organization?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: These questions refer to matters entirely within the competence of the non-governmental agencies and agents therein mentioned, with the organization and operation of which the Government has nothing to do and of which it has no records.

THE CALENDAR OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Why is the calendar on the Table of the Clerk of the House of Commons in English only?
2. Is it the intention of the Government to have also on this table a French calendar?
3. If so, when?
4. If not, why?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My reply to the question asked by my honourable friend the member for Charlevoix and Montmorency, is this:

In placing that calendar on the Table of the House of Commons, traditions of former years since the origin of Confederation until our days have been observed. Under these circumstances, I do not deem it necessary either to replace it with another one or to put another one on the Clerk's desk. What was sufficient for the fathers of Confederation should surely satisfy us, for we are not less intelligent nor more patriotic than our predecessors.

PRINTING BUREAU EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BOURASSA:

1. How many French-Canadians were employed, in every branch of the Printing Bureau, on the 1st of March, 1920?
2. How many English-Canadians were employed, in every branch of the Printing Bureau, on the 1st of March, 1920?
3. At the same date, what was the number of employees of other origin?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON: 1, 2, 3. No record.

ST. ROMUALD POSTMASTER.

Mr. BOURASSA:

1. What is the name of the postmaster at St. Romuald, Levis County?
2. When was he appointed?
3. What are the names of the persons who recommended the appointment of this postmaster?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Henri Dutil.
2. April 19, 1920.
3. The Post Office Inspector, S. Tanner Green, Quebec; by the Mayor and the Curé of the place and by petition signed by over 60 citizens using the post office.

TUBERCULAR RETURNED SOLDIERS.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie):

1. What is the total number of returned soldiers adjudged tubercular subjects now under treatment in our sanatoria in the different provinces throughout the Dominion?
2. What percentage have been discharged from the sanatoria considered cured?
3. What is found to be the time required to treat the above patients in the sanatoria before cure is effected?
4. What percentage are considered incurable?
5. What is the percentage of deaths while undergoing treatment?
6. What is the total number treated in each province respectively?
7. What is the cost per capita per month?
8. Have any investigations been made to show that soldiers who have been gassed develop tuberculosis as a result thereof?

Mr. HUGH CLARK (Parliamentary Secretary):

1. 1,715.

2. 30.4 per cent.

3. The average period for sanatorium treatment is 6-7 months. This figure is taken from a return based on all admissions to sanatoria and include certain non-tuberculous and observation cases. Therefore, it may be assumed that the stay of the average tuberculous case is of longer duration.

4. 15.6 per cent.

5. 6.23 per cent.

6. The total number of ex-soldiers treated in sanatoria in each province is as follows:

Ontario	3,404
Quebec	1,350
Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia	1,126
Manitoba	687
Saskatchewan	445
Alberta	275
British Columbia	735

7. $77.10 for maintenance, treatment, etc., not including capital expenditure.

8. A Board of Consultants, consisting of five of the most competent tuberculosis specialists in Canada, is investigating the whole question of the treatment of tuberculosis occurring amongst ex-members of the forces. The board has been requested to make special inquiries in each sanatorium with reference to patients who are shown on their medical documents to have been exposed to gas, in order that the connection of gassing with pulmonary tuberculosis may be definitely established.

CANADIAN NORTHERN SECURITIES.

Mr. JOHNSTON:

1. What Canadian Northern securities matured during 1919, and during the present year?

2. What was the individual amount of these securities, at what price were they sold, and what rate of interest did they carry?

3. Were payments made in Canadian funds? If not, what did the adverse rate of exchange cost Canada?

4. What was the yield to the investor in each case?

5. Were new securities issued to retire them? If so, at what price were they sold, and what rate of interest did they bear?

Hon. Mr. CALDER:

1. January 10, 1919, $1,250,000 Canadian Northern Railway 6 per cent Secured Gold Notes, dated January 10, 1917; February 1, 1919. $2,000,000 Canadian Northern Railway 4 per cent Land Grant Bonds, dated February 1, 1899. Canadian Northern Railway 4 per cent Land Grant Bonds, $2,000,000, sold at 100; interest at 4 per cent per annum. Canadian Northern Railway 5 per cent Secured Notes, £450,000, or $2,190,000, sold at 95; interest at 5 per cent per annum.

3. Six per cent Secured Notes paid in New York funds exchange cost $27,312.50; 4 per cent Land Grant Bonds paid in Canadian funds; 5 per cent Secured Notes paid in sterling funds. See answer to No. 5.

4. Six per cent Secured Notes yielded to investor 6 per cent; 4 per cent Grant Bonds yielded to investor 4 per cent; 5 per cent Secured Notes yielded to investor 6.05 per cent.

5. Six per cent Secured Gold Notes retired by loan from Dominion Government; 4 per cent Land Grant Bonds retired by funds received from sale of lands under mortgage agreement; 5 per cent Secured Notes retired by issue in England of Canadian Northern 3-year 5 per cent Secured Notes guaranteed as to principal and interest by the Dominion of Canada, sold at 97¼.

DOMINION LAND SURVEYS.

Mr. FAFARD:

1. May the Civil Service Commission refuse the reappointment of a Dominion Land Surveyor employed for several years consecutively without any reason being shown for such refusal and when his services are satisfactory to the head of the department?

2. Is Order in Council, P.C. 1479, considered to be applicable to the appointment of employees requiring special technical qualifications?

3. Must men in a technical service be promoted in lists prepared by the Civil Service Commission rather than on merit, as decided by the head of the branch under whom they serve?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. The regulation governing Season appointments which has been approved by the Governor in Council, promulgated by Order in Council of July 17, 1919, (P.C. 1479), is as follows:

"All positions in the Civil Service where the nature of service is such that it is not continuous through the year but recurs in each successive year, shall be designated as "Season Positions," and shall be subject to the provisions of the regulations applicable generally to positions to be filled by open competition, including preference to returned soldiers if such are qualified and available. Provided that when a department feels that a former seasonal employee is indispensable, and so writes the commission, giving the grounds on which they reach that conclusion, and provided also that such seasonal employee has filed in the office of the commission in such form as may be prescribed, an application for reappointment endorsed by the deputy head of the department, at least one month before the date when he shall again be required to report for service, the commission may give consideration to a requisition for re-employment, and may certify the persons who have made such formal requests that they shall be reappointed to their former positions, if in the meantime they have not been reported against and are not otherwise disqualified. In every other case such positions must be advertised, in order to determine whether any returned soldier possessing the necessary qualifications is available.

"Provided that for sufficient reason the commission may waive the time limit for filing applications."

2. Yes.

3. All lists prepared by the Civil Service Commission are in order of merit. In deciding cases of promotion the following Order in Council of December 3, 1919 (P.C. 2434), governs, viz:-

"Until such time as the regulations of the commission governing promotion examinations have been approved by the Governor in Council, promotions may be made by the commission based upon an examination of the qualifications of the candidates considered by the commission as in line for the vacancy required to be filled, efficiency and seniority to be the governing factors in such examinations."

COLONEL GRASSIE ARCHIBALD.

Mr. DUFF:

1. Is Colonel Grassie Archibald at present in the employ of the Canadian Government in any position?

2. Was he at one time in such employ at Aberdeen, Scotland?

3. If so, what was the nature of his duties and what salary was he paid?

4. What was the total cost of the office of which he was in charge?

5. Whilst holding the rank of colonel where and when did he serve?

6. Did he have any military service before his appointment as colonel?

7. If so, under what rank or ranks and where did he render such service?

8. What was the total remuneration from all sources received by the said Colonel Grassie Archibald whilst in the Canadian army?

9. Whilst receiving pay for military service did he receive any other pay from any other department of the Government?

10. If so, from what departments and what were the different amounts paid him by each department?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. No.

2. Yes.

3. Canadian Government emigration agent; was appointed at $1,800 per annum and was in receipt of $2,000 per annum at the time of his resignation.

4. $43,000.20, from December 26, 1912 to December 31, 1919. This is made up of $21,051.03, salaries (including salary of Mr. Archibald) $6,276.30 rental; $2,901.75, for shows and lectures; $12,771.12, for advertising, travelling, office and general expenses.

5. This officer did not at any time hold the rank of Colonel. While holding the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, he served as follows: In France, from 2nd December, 1918, to 23rd June, 1919. In England, 24th June, 1919, to 2nd August, 1919. In Canada, 3rd August, 1919, to 15th August, 1919.

6. Answered by Nos. 5 and 7.

7. (a) Appointed to 76th Regiment, Canadian Militia, as lieutenant, 22nd August, 1910. (b) As lieutenant, Canadian Militia, attached to Depot Gordon Highlanders, Arberdeen, Scotland, between 14th May, 1914, and 10th July, 1914, for instruction, and without expense to the public. (c) Joined 1st Canadian Contingent, 17th Battalion, at Pond Farm Camp, Salisbury Plain, 1st November, 1914, from which date he was gazetted to the C.E.F. with the rank of captain in the C.E.F. (d) Captain in France from 15th February, 1915. Major in France from 31st December, 1915. A/Lt.-Colonel, France, from 2nd December, 1918. Temp. Lt.-Colonel in France from 2nd June, 1919. Returned to England, 24th June, 1919. Proceeded to Canada, 3rd August, 1919. Lieut.-Colonel, struck off strength on general demobilization, 15th August, 1919.

8. From 1914 to 15th August, 1919, pay and allowance of his rank, $14,746.50, and, in addition, six months' War Service Gratuity, $2,196.

9. Yes.

10. From Department of Immigration and Colonization during the period of military service $9,354.45.

NEW ONE CENT COIN.

Mr. DENIS:

1. When does the Government intend to make, issue and put in circulation the new one cent coin?

2. Does the Government intend to have these coins stamped in French and English languages?

3. If not, why?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. As soon as coinage dies have been prepared, these dies are now in course of preparation and it is expected the new coins will be in circulation before the end of 1920.

2. and 3. In the new one cent coin the same designation will be used as has been used since Confederation.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING:

1. What is the amount of Canadian Government bonds issued in Canada since the beginning of the war and still outstanding?

2. What is the amount of such bonds exempt from the operation of the income tax law?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

War Loan, 1915-1925	$100,000,000	$ 43,246,300.00

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY HEAD OFFICE.

*Mr. FOSTER (York):

The Grand Trunk Railway having been taken over by the Government to be operated in conjunction with the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific, is it the intention of the Canadian National Railways Board to have its head office in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: The question has not been considered:

CANADIAN NORTHERN LANDS.

*Mr. TOBIN:

1. Have the 439,380 acres of land earned by the Canadian Northern railway and its subsidiaries from the province of Quebec been transferred to the Government of Canada as part of the assets of the Canadian Northern Railway system?

2. If so, when were said lands transferred?

Hon. Mr. CALDER:

1. Contracts are executed between the province of Quebec and the several railways included in the Canadian Northern Railway system covering the lands referred to, but the land has not yet been selected. Negotiations have recently been under way between the railway and the Provincial Government.

2. Answered by No. 1.

VICTORY LOAN SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. Has the Government named a committee on Victory Loan, with headquarters at Montreal?

2. What is the purpose of said committee?

3. What are the names of the persons serving on said committee?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. The Victory Loan Special Committee has a district office at Montreal.

2. The main purpose of the control exercised by the committee is to insure a sound and steady distribution of bonds offered from time to time with a view to preventing violent fluctuations and securing for investors who are forced to sell the best possible prices.

3. The members of this special committee are G. H. Wood, Toronto, chairman; Edwin Hanson, Montreal, vice-chairman; P. McDougall, Montreal; Edgar M. Smith, Montreal; Sir Augustus Nanton, Winnipeg; H. R. Thudhope, Toronto; J. W. Mitchell, Toronto; W. A. MacKenzie, Toronto.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ARBITRATION COST.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Antigonish and Guysborough):

Hon. Mr. CALDER: The following is in so for as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned: $86,178.25.

PAYMENTS ON STERLING TO C.E.F.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. Have the members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who received their pay in England or in France been paid the difference in exchange?

2. If not, who received said benefit?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. All payments in sterling to personnel of the Overseas Military Forces of Canada during the years 1914-15-16-17 and '18 were converted to Canadian currency at the par rate of exchange, $4.86 2/3 to the pound and debited to their pay accounts at that rate. Payments in continental currencies were converted from such currency to sterling at a flat monthly rate of exchange established by the War Office, based on commercial rates, which in the case of French currency varied from five francs equals four shillings in 1915, to three and five pence in 1919.

2. All payments to members of the C.E.F. Overseas were made out of moneys at the credit of the Dominion Government in the Bank of Montreal, London, which moneys were received from the Imperial Government by way of advances for war purposes, at par, so that no benefit accrued to the Dominion Government by reason of exchange. Balances of pay and allowances held in England by Canadian soldiers were on their return to Canada converted into Canadian dollars at the par rate of exchange.. The expenditure necessary to provide for this conversion being charged to Vote 544, 1919-1920.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT MERCHANT MARINE FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Antigonish and Guysborough):

Are the rates of freight charged by vessels of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine Limited, subject to the control in any way of the United States Shipping Board?

Hon. Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

SPUR LINE BETWEEN STE. ROSALIE AND BAGOT.

Mr. MARCILE (Bagot):

1. Is the spur line of the railway between St. Rosalie and Bagot wholly constructed?
2. What amount has been spent up to date on that line?
3. Have the farmers been paid for their rights of way?
4. If so, what is the amount?
5. If not, why?
6. What is the level of the new line as compared with the old one?

Hon. Mr. CALDER:

1. No.
2. $225,338.52.
3. Cheques have been issued for fourteen out of a total of twenty-one parcels of land.
4. $7,821.70.
5. Negotiations have not been completed for the balance of the land.
6. Maximum grade, new line, 4/10 of 1 per cent. Maximum grade, old line, 1.07 per cent.

EXHIBITION BUILDINGS USED BY MILITIA.

Mr. FOSTER (York):

1. How much is the Government paying for the exhibition buildings in St. John, N.B., used by the militia during the war?
2. How much is the Government paying for the Toronto Fair buildings used by the militia during the war?

Hon. Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. Insurance premiums	$ 918 85
In full and final settlement of all claims against the department	35,000 00
	$35,918 85

No rent was paid.

THE LAST CENSUS.

Mr. PARENT:

1. Is it true that, in the last census, in certain provinces, and especially in certain cities, the figures of the population were considerably exaggerated?

2. Does the Government intend to take measures in order to prevent similar errors in the next census?

3. If so, what action will be taken?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER:

1. The Government has no information of such being the case.

2 and 3. The Government will take every precaution to procure an accurate census.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY FREIGHT TARIFFS.

Mr. MACNUTT:

1. What freight tariffs, if any, were filed with the Government showing the reductions in rates agreed to by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by Special Act 60-61 Victoria, chapter 5, 1897, Crow's Nest Agreement (assented to June 29, 1897)?

2. What are the particulars of each tariff, date, number, date effective, description of tariff and application?

3. If tariffs were not filed, will the Government bring down an immediate report from the Department of Railways and Canals, or the Board of Railway Commissioners, giving the information requested in clause 2 above?

4. What was the carload rate on horses in ordinary box cars, from Toronto and other stations in Ontario to Regina, under the Crows Nest Agreement?

5. What was the carload rate on horses in ordinary box cars, from Toronto and other stations in Ontario to Regina, prior to Privy Council Order 1863, July 27, 1918, and which order authorized the Board of Railway Commissioners to disregard the Crows Nest Agreement?

6. What rates in excess of the guaranteed rates (Crows Nest Agreement) were exceeded by the Canadian Pacifi railway, prior to P.C. 1863, July 27, 1918, referred to in clause 5?

Hon. Mr. CALDER:

1. The Crows Nest Pass Agreement was assented to June 29, 1897. The railway companies, subject to the Board of Railway Commissioners, commenced filing their tariffs with the board, December 1, 1904.

2. Following is a list of the freight tariffs of the Canadian Pacific railway applicable in whole or in part to the commodities covered by the Crows Nest Pass Agreement, as first filed with the board:

Tariff.	Effective.	Description.
C.R.C. E. 257,	Aug. 1, 1904..	All-rail. Eastern Canada to points in Manitoba, and Ontario west of Port Arthur.
C.R.C. E. 259,	Aug. 1, 1904..	All-rail. Eastern Canada to Assiniboia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.
C.R.C. E. 232,	Opening of navigation, 1905	Lake - and - rail. Eastern Canada to Ontario and Manitoba, Port Arthur and West.
C.R.C. E. 234,	Opening of navigation, 1905	Lake - and - rail. Eastern Canada to Assiniboia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.
C.R.C. E. 128,	May 20, 1903..	All-rail. Live Stock, Eastern Canada to stations Fort William and West.
C.R.C. W. 40,	May 10, 1902..	From Port Arthur and Fort William, westbound to Ontario and Manitoba.
C.R.C. W. 41,	May 14, 1902..	From Port Arthur and Fort William, to Assiniboia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.
C.R.C. W. 73,	Oct. 7, 1903..	Grain and grain products from stations in Western Canada to Port Arthur and Fort William.

3. Answered by Numbers 1 and 2.

4. The carload rate on horses in ordinary box or stock cars from Montreal and stations west thereof in Ontario and Quebec to Regina, shown in the first tariff filed with the board, namely C.R.C. No. E.-128, effective May 20, 1903, was 74 cents per 100 lbs., minimum weight, 20,000 lbs. per car.

5. The carload rate on horses in ordinary box or stock cars from Montreal and stations west thereof in Ontario and Quebec to Regina, prior to Privy Council Order 1863, was 96 cents per 100 lbs., minimum weight 20,000 lbs. per car.

6. This cannot be answered specifically as the tariffs first issued under the Crows Nest Agreement are not in the files of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Compared with the tariffs filed with the board, December 1, 1904, the rates on the commodities covered by the Crows Nest Agreement do not appear to have been exceeded until the issue of P.C. 1863, except on horses, in carloads, on which the rates exceeded those of December 1, 1904, as follows, in cents per 100 lbs.:

Tariff.	Effective.	Rate.
C.R.C. E. 28	May 20 1903....	74 cents.
C.R.C. E. 1790	July 21, 1910....	96 cents.
C.R.C. E. 2894	Jan. 1, 1915....	96 cents.

TOTAL LIABILITY OF CANADIAN NORTHERN.

Mr. PAPINEAU:

What was the total liability of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, including also the liability of the Equipment Company of the Canadian Northern, the 31st of December, 1919?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: The total indebtedness of the Canadian Northern Railway as of December 31, 1919, including funded debt, equipment securities, land securities, advances made by the Dominion Government, and all other liabilities outstanding was $566,097,468.10.

ST. THEODORE D'ACTON POST OFFICE.

Mr. MARCILE (Bagot):

1. When was the location of the post office at St. Theodore d'Acton changed?
2. Who recommended the present location?
3. Is the Government aware that it is very far from the church and consequently inconvenient to the farmers?
4. Have Messrs. Telesphore Picard and Remi Desautels, both residing in front of the church, refused to take said post office in their homes?
5. Have these two gentlemen been asked to take charge of the post office?
6. If not, why?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Appointment of Mrs. Rene Gauthier authorized October 10, 1919.

2. Mr. Victor Gaudet, Post Office Inspector for the Montreal district.

3. No.

4. Mr. Telesphore Picard applied for the appointment but there is no record that Mr. Remi Desautels applied.

5. No.

6. The inspector reported that "several candidates were in the field, but a large majority of the leading citizens of St. Theodore d'Acton, not to say all of them, are in favour of Mrs. Rene Gauthier. Recommendations in her favour have been received from the parish priest, the mayor, the members of the municipal council, the secretary-treasurer, the principal merchant of the place, the owner of the butter factory, and several other leading citizens. * * * There is no returned soldier available."

BAGOT COUNTY ELECTORAL LIST.

Mr. MARCILE (Bagot):

1. Has the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received the electoral list of the county of Bagot?
2. If so, is it possible to have copies of same?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has not received the electoral list of the county of Bagot. The obligation on the part of custodians of provincial lists to furnish the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery with certified copies thereof ceased on the passing of the War-time Elections Act, September, 1917.

2. Copies may be obtained from the Registrar for the county of Bagot.

SHAREHOLDERS OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Antigonish and Guysborough):

1. Who are the shareholders of the corporation known as the "Canadian Government Merchant Marine?"
2. Did the shareholders invest any of their own money in this venture? If not, who furnished the capital?
3. Who are the directors?
4. Is there a separate company or corporation for each ship?
5. In what name does the title to the ship stand on the registry?
6. Does the Department of Railways and Canals receive a statement at stated periods from the Canadian Government Merchant Marine showing the profits and loss of the business? If so, how often?
7. Who is responsible to the ratepayers for the conduct of the business carried on by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine?
8. Is a separate account kept for each ship?
9. What rate of insurance is being paid on the hulls of ships belonging to this company?

Hon. Mr. CALDER:

1. All of the issued capital stock of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, less directors' qualifying shares, are owned by His Majesty the King and held by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada.

2. The total investment in the Canadian Government Merchant Marine is made by the Government.

3. Mr. D. B. Hanna, Mr. A. J. Mitchell, Major G. A. Bell, C.M.G., Mr. E. R. Wood, Mr. Robt. Hobson, Sir Hormisdas Laporte, Dr. A. P. Barnhill, Col. Thos. Cantley.

4. Yes.

5. Title to each vessel will stand on the registry in the name of the separate ship company, with a mortgage thereon in favour of His Majesty the King.

6. A statement of the operations of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, as furnished to the directors at their regular meetings, is supplied both to the Department of Railways and to the Department of Marine.

7. The Government.

8. Accounts are kept showing, separately, the operation of each vessel.

9. Arrangements for insurance and rates are made by the operating company. Rates of insurance vary from time to time and lowest tenders are accepted.

BOARD OF COMMERCE REPORT.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

When does the Government expect that the Board of Commerce will make its report to the Government?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I am not certain just when the report will be brought down, but my latest information is that it is nearly ready for laying upon the table of the House.

TAXATION OF "MUTUAL" INSURANCE COMPANIES.

*Mr. RINFRET:

1. Does the Government intend to impose a tax of 15 per cent on the "mutual" or non-authorized insurance companies?
2. If so, how many companies, approximately, are to be affected by said tax?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This information will be given when the legislation pertaining thereto, if any, is brought down.

CANADIAN NORTHERN PORT ARTHUR TERMINALS.

Mr. BUREAU:

1. Have the terminals, lands and buildings forming part of and operated by the Canadian Northern Railway system at Port Arthur been turned over to the Government as part of the system of the Canadian National Railways?
2. Have the ore docks and buildings located at Port Arthur and forming part of and operated by the Canadian Northern Railway been turned over to the Government as part of the system of the Canadian National Railways?
3. Have the lands, buildings and other properties of the Atikokan Iron Company been acquired by the Government and are they now controlled and do they form part of the Canadian National Railway system?
4. Have the lands controlled by the Lake Superior Terminal Company, part of the Mackenzie-Mann Company or Canadian Northern Railway system, been acquired by the Government and are they now the property of and operated by the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. Mr. CALDER:

1. The terminals, lands, and buildings used by the Canadian Northern Railway system at Port Arthur are owned by said company.
2. No, but the Canadian Northern Railway is operating these premises under lease.
3. No.
4. The Canadian Northern Railway owns the entire capital stock of the Lake Superior Terminals, Limited, thereby controlling any lands or properties owned by that company.

[Mr. Calder.]

EXCESS BUSINESS PROFITS TAXATION.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

How much has the Government received as an additional revenue through the Excess Business Profits Tax Act over and above what they would have received under the Income Tax Act, assuming that all companies would have been taxed at 10 per cent?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: To answer this question would necessitate the examination of approximately 100,000 returns and the employment of many accountants.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS INCORPORATION.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Have any Orders in Council been passed under the provisions of section 11 of chapter 13, 9-10 Geo. V, An Act to incorporate Canadian National Railway Company and respecting Canadian National Railways?
2. If so, when and what are the number of said Orders in Council?
3. If not, why?

Hon. Mr. CALDER (for Mr. Reid):

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. The provisions of section 1 of the Act referred to have not been given effect to.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie):

1. What are the totals of credits advanced by the Canadian Government to (a) Great Britain, (b) the Allied Powers, before the armistice.
2. Of these totals what proportions were used respectively for the purchase of (a) agricultural products, (b) manufactured goods.
3. What are the totals of credits advanced by the Canadian Government to (a) Great Britain, (b) the Allied Powers, after the armistice?
4. Of these totals what proportions were used respectively for the purchase of (a) agricultural products, (b) manufactured goods?

Mr. BUREAU:

1. How many horses were brought back to Canada from overseas, including those from Siberia?
2. What did it cost per head to bring them back?
3. Are all senior officers from colonel upwards entitled to a horse?
4. What officers get two horses?
5. What was the cost to the country to feed these horses from their arrival in Canada up to the 15th of March?
6. How many officers and men are employed looking after said horses from the date of their arrival up to the 15th of March?
7. Where are these horses at the present time?

Mr. REID (Mackenzie):

1. What is the amount of Income Taxes for which returns have been made for the respective years 1916, 1917 and 1918, but which have not been collected?

2. What is the amount of Business Profits War Taxes for which returns have been made for the respective years 1916, 1917 and 1918, but which have not been collected?

Mr. FOSTER (York):

How much money has been spent by the Dominion Government since Confederation on improvements in the harbours of Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Port Arthur, Victoria and Vancouver?

Mr. DELISLE:

1. Is it a fact that the so-called American experts employed by the Government for the re-classification of the Civil Service have finished their work or been dismissed or have resigned?

2. What are their respective names and salaries per day, and how much extra moneys have been paid to each of them respectively for travelling expenses and overtime?

3. Is it a fact that on leaving employment they have taken away with them the cards filled by the employees for the purpose of the re-classification? If it is so, is it the intention of the Government to claim these cards?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Is the following statement credited to T. B. Patton, Income Tax Adjuster, correct—that Income Tax collected by the Federal Government from farmers of Canada amounted to the sum of $389,011 in four years, and the total amount collected was $83,768,110 from all other sources?

2. What was the total amount of Income Tax collected by the Federal Government in the past four years?

3. What was the amount of Income Tax collected from each province for each year?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens):

What are the names of all persons who have passed the Civil Service examinations from the province of Prince Edward Island in 1917, 1918 and 1919, showing: (a) the grade for which they passed; (b) the number of marks made by each; (c) those who are returned soldiers; (d) those who have received an appointment with the name of their position?

NOTICES OF MOTION.

On Government Notices of Motion being called:

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask when hon. members will have the opportunity to move the resolutions under "Notices of Motions."

Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire now to proceed to the order "Notices of Motions" so that any motions that are unopposed may be passed, and that others may be dropped.

BOARD OF COMMERCE PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Montmorency) moved:

For a copy of all investigations, reports and proceedings in connection with the work carried on by the Board of Commerce, along with a copy of all decisions rendered showing sentences or fines imposed by the said board and a statement showing the costs of conducting such proceedings and investigations.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I am not prepared to adopt that motion at the present time for two reasons. One is that the amount of work involved would be very great and the return tremendously bulky. In the second place, the report of the Board of Commerce is pretty nearly ready for laying on the table of the House, and I think it will give all pertinent and really useful information in connection with this question. The motion calls for a detailed report of everything that has been done by the Board of Commerce as a body.

Motion stands.

PROPOSED GOVERNMENT SUPERVISION OF STEAMSHIP COMPANIES.

On the order for the motion:

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton):

That, in the opinion of this House, the recommendations set forth in the final report of the Royal Commission on the Natural Resources, Trade and Legislation of certain portions of His Majesty's Dominions, and presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of His Majesty, in March, 1917, showing that it is not desirable that the operations of the steamship companies carrying passengers and freight between the Dominion of Canada and the United Kingdom should remain longer without some measure of Government supervision, should be given effect; and that this Government should take immediate steps to assist the Imperial Government in bringing about Government control of the ocean carriers doing business (or, from time to time, doing business) between ports in the United Kingdom and ports in the Dominion of Canada, and that a permanent commission representing all parts of the Empire be established, which shall be invested with wide powers relative to transportation on the high seas; such powers, as far as possible, to be similar or analogous to those which have been conferred in Canada and in other Dominions upon permanent commissioners charged with the supervision and control of railway and steamship rates and their methods and conditions of operation.

Mr. J. A. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): May I ask if the Acting Prime Minister is prepared to accept this resolution?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): No, I am afraid not. I would advise my hon. friend to drop it. If he wishes to make any remarks in reference to it he can do so when the House is in Committee of Supply.

Mr. ARMSTRONG: I will drop it under the circumstances.

Motion dropped.

CORRESPONDENCE RE INDIAN AFFAIRS.

On the order for the motion:

Mr. CANNON:

For a copy of all correspondence between the last Huron chiefs of the Indian Reserve of Lorette, Messrs Sioui and Sullivan, barristers, and the Department of Indian Affairs since 1883.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I would ask that this motion stand, unless the hon. member wishes to drop it. The amount of work that would be involved in preparing the return to this order would be very large. If there is any particular information that my hon. friend desires I would advise him to take the matter up with one of the officers of the department, and I am confident he would be able to secure the information he seeks without necessitating all the work that this motion would call for.

Mr. CANNON: I will do that with pleasure.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the motion dropped?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Motion dropped.

THE HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

On the order for the motion:

Mr. CAMPBELL proposed:

That, in the opinion of this House, owing to insistent demands from the West, extending over a long period, and after many years investigation as to the feasibility of the route, the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway as a national enterprise was commenced in 1910.

And whereas the work progressed very slowly but was carried on until the close of the year 1917, by which time the grade was completed to the bay and rails laid as far as mile 332, including the construction of two large steel bridges over the Nelson, and extensive work at the Port Nelson terminals; the total expenditure now being over $20,000,000.

And whereas, owing to the length of time that the road has been under construction, and to lack of attention paid to the completed part thereof, the whole roadbed is in danger of serious deterioration.

And whereas the construction of this road has been the means of bringing to light the existence of natural resources in the territory through which it passes, and in the bay itself not hitherto known, such as minerals, pulpwood, fisheries, water powers and agricultural lands, the development of which would undoubtedly be to the material advantage of Canada; and whereas to leave the road in its present unfinished state would mean the loss of millions of dollars directly, and much more indirectly, through non-development of the above-mentioned resources. And whereas certain lands in the West were, some years ago, set aside to be disposed of in manner stipulated to create a fund for the construction of the railway, and sales of these lands have been made to the extent of $30,000,000, over one-half of which has been paid, it is advisable that the Hudson Bay railway should be completed to the bay this year by the laying of steel for the remaining 92 miles and the doing of such other work as may be necessary to put the road in proper shape for operation.

Mr. J. A. CAMPBELL (Nelson): I have no desire to delay the proceedings of the House by a lengthy discussion of this motion, if there is some means by which a formal statement of my views might be obviated. I was wondering whether the leader of the Government could say what work it is proposed to do on the Hudson Bay railway this year an—

Mr. SPEAKER: Any statement of that kind will not be in order at this stage. The motion has been called and the hon. member can signify his desire that it stand, or be either passed as non-contentious or dropped. He can obtain his inormation in Supply or on the motion to go into Supply.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) understands that if he allows his motion to stand now he cannot bring the question up on the Estimates, and I suppose he would like to be free to make some remarks on the subject matter of his resolution when the Estimates are before the House. I would therefore advise him to drop the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Very well. I understood, however, that in view of a statement made a few days ago to a deputation, the Acting Prime Minister—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order; the hon. member is not in order in discussing the subject at this juncture.

Motion dropped.

CORRESPONDENCE RE CRIMINAL TRIALS.

On the order for the motion:

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For the production of copies of all letters, telegrams, papers and correspondence exchanged between the Department of Justice and others, as the case may be, in reference to the trial of one Onofrio Montzano held at Murray Bay, district of Saguenay, in 1912, and the trial of the Labrie brothers, held at Sherbrooke, district of St. François, and their release from penitentiary on account of irregularities in the proceedings followed at each of these trials, and also copies of all documents contained in the records of the Department of Justice in reference thereto.

Rt. Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): With reference to this motion I may say, so that the hon. member may not be disappointed, that my strong impression that it is unlikely that the documents called for by this motion will be procured. If the hon. gentleman reflects a moment he will realize that the Department of Justice has no direct communication with the provincial courts in the administration of justice. All the records of those courts are provincial records and we do not get reports of that character.

Motion agreed to.

W. H. TAPLEY AND E. L. BAUGH.

On the order for the motion:

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For production of copies of all letters, telegrams, papers, documents and correspondence in reference to the release from penitentiary of one W. H. Tapley and one E. L. Baugh.

Rt. Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): It is impossible to assent to the passing of this resolution. It is very well recognized in the House that correspondence with regard to applications for tickets of leave is of a confidential nature and is not to be brought down. There are numerous instances in which the matter has been brought up, and the last time I recollect its being discussed was in 1913, when the subject was discussed on both sides of the House, and when the late Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier entirely concurred in the view that these papers were not of a kind that ought to be ordered to be brought down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion stand, or is it dropped?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Dropped.

Motion dropped.

BOARD OF COMMERCE.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Montmorency): I desire permission to revert to Order No. 5:

For a copy of all investigations, reports and proceedings in connection with the work carried on by the Board of Commerce, along with a copy of all decisions rendered showing sentences or fines imposed by the said board and a statement showing the costs of conducting such proceedings and investigations.

I would ask that this motion be dropped.

Motion dropped.

CHAMPLAIN MARKET SITE.

Mr. C. G. POWER (South Quebec): I ask permission to revert to Order No. 6:

For a copy of all documents, contracts and correspondence relating to the negotiations between the city of Quebec and the Transcontinental railway regarding the Champlain market site and the proposed docks and grain elevators situated along the front of the St. Lawrence river, Quebec.

I beg to move this motion:

Motion agreed to.

DR. MICHEL FISET.

Mr. J. A. ROBB (Chateauguay-Huntingdon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Lavigueur) I move on his behalf resolution No. 32:

For copy of all papers, documents and letters in connection with Dr. Michel Fiset, of Quebec city, appointment by Order in Council, dated 18th April, 1914, as parcel post supervisor in Quebec city, with a salary of $2,800 a year.

Motion agreed to.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. LAPOINTE:

For a copy of a letter sent on January 30, 1920, to the Right Honourable Sir George Foster, Acting Prime Minister, by J. T. Ross, Esq., President of the Quebec Board of Trade, concerning the intention of the Government to build in Canada a number of 15,000-ton passenger steamships with a speed of 18 knots for the Canadian service, and a copy of the letter in answer thereto.

Mr. LAPOINTE:

For a copy of a letter of the Board of Trade of Quebec to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, dated December 29, 1919, concerning the loss of the Government steamship Canadian Recruit and the accident to the Government steamer Canadian Spinner and other accidents due to want of icebreakers, and a copy of the letter in answer thereto.

Mr. LAPOINTE:

For a copy of a letter from J. T. Ross, Esq., President of the Quebec Board of Trade, to D. B. Hanna, Esq., President of the Canadian National Railways, concerning certain facts in connection with the operation of the Government railways and the ocean shipping business of the port of Quebec, and a copy of the answer to said letter.

Mr. LAPOINTE:

For a copy of a letter from the Board of Trade of the city of Quebec to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, dated October 24, 1919, concerning the new policy adopted by the ocean mail steamers of not stopping at Quebec in their outward voyage, and a copy of the answer to said letter.

Mr. LAPOINTE:

For a copy of a letter signed by twenty-two senators and members of the House of Commons representing the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, addressed to Sir Robert L. Borden, Prime Minister of Canada, dated September, 1919, recommending the shipment of grain by rail via Quebec; also a copy of the answer to such letter as well as the letters sent by J. T. Ross, Esq., President of the Quebec Board of Trade, to the Minister of Railways and Canals during the months of January and February, 1920, concerning export of wheat via Quebec, and of the letters of the Minister of Railways and Canals in answer thereto.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For the production of copies of all letters telegrams, papers and correspondence exchanged between the Department of Agriculture and others in reference to the establishment of a Demonstration Farm at Baie St. Paul, in the county of Charlevoix.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For the production of copies of all rules of court made by the different Superior Courts of Criminal Jurisdiction of Canada according to the provisions of section 576 of the Criminal Code.

On motion of Sir George Foster the House returned to the Orders of the Day.

REPORT NOT PRINTED AS ORDERED.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I desire to call your attention, and that of the Government, to an irregularity in the carrying out of the order of the House passed at the last session of Parliament. On the motion of the hon. the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder), who was then acting as chairman of the special committee on Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment, the House unanimously decided:

That the report of the special committee on Bill No. 10, an Act to amend the Department of Soldiers' Re-establishment Act, the minutes of their proceedings and the evidence taken by them and presented to the House on the 31st October, together with a suitable index to be prepared by the clerk of the committee, be printed in the appendix to the Journals of the present session.

That one thousand extra copies in English and 250 extra copies in French of the said report, minutes, proceedings and evidence—be printed. It is apparent that no French copies are available or were available at any time. Upon inquiry by some hon. members of the secretary of the special committee sitting this year, and of the distribution office, it is found that no French copies are available and it appears that there never were any French copies available. I am now directing your attention to the subject because some hon. members of the House would like to have copies of this report printed in French.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The Order evidently was not carried out.

Mr. BELAND: Evidently.

Mr. SPEAKER: This matter is entirely new to me. It has not been before me in any official way. I shall have immediate inquiry made—although I have no doubt the facts are as stated by the hon. member—and find out the reason why the order was not obeyed.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. KAY.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. F. KAY (Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker I rise to a question of privilege. In the Ottawa Citizen of this morning I find a statement which is untrue, misleading and absolutely false. In mentioning a few remarks I made yesterday on the Oleomargarine Bill this paper speaks of "Fred. Kay, member for Mississippi." I wish to absolutely deny that I represent any part of the United States in this House whether it be Mississippi, or even Missouri. I am proud to say I was born and bred a Canadian, that I intend to stay one, and that I have the honour of representing in this House one of the oldest and best counties in the eastern townships, namely Missisquoi.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT.

On the motion of Hon. S. F. Tolmie (Minister of Agriculture) Bill No. 104 to amend the Inspection and Sale Act was read a second time and the House went into committee on the Bill, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—Section prescribing sizes of apple barrels, fruit boxes, etc; penalty section and section authorizing minister to appoint inspectors, etc., repealed:

Mr. BUREAU: We are repealing four sections of the Act of 1918. Will the minister tell us what these sections are? I see in the marginal note that they prescribe the size of apple barrels, and fruit boxes and provide for penalties in case of contravention. Will the minister read the sections we are repealing? I see by the other section that we are not substituting what we are enacting now for these sections. How will the matter stand when they are repealed?

Mr. TOLMIE: In 1918 a conference was held of fruit men, package manufacturers and representatives of the Government fruit branch with a view to arriving at some satisfactory arrangement, with regard to fruit packing—the nature and quality of the packages and the different fruits that will be held in these different packages. It was found that the provisions of the Act did not work out very well and it is proposed to repeal section 325, relating to apple packages and section 326 relating to berry packages with a view to having these governed by regulations so that they can be changed from time to time to meet the changing situation. A recent conference was held of fruit men, Government representatives and fruit package manufacturers and they agreed that this is the best system to follow in order to meet the situation. Sections 320 and 333 (b) refer to penalties and also give the Governor-in-Council power to make regulations.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. gentleman refers to a conference that was held between departmental officials and representatives of the fruit trade. Did that conference represent the fruit interests of all the provinces? The fruit industry is a very wide one; it affects the Atlantic provinces, the Pacific coast, and to some extent Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am informed by the representative of the fruit branch that this was a very representative meeting.

Mr. FIELDING: Were representatives of the Nova Scotia fruit growing industry present?

Mr. TOLMIE: I will be able to find that out definitely for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FIELDING: All I want to know is whether they concur in what is being done.

Mr. BUREAU: If I understand the minister the Act of 1918 laid down rules as to the package of apples, berries, etc. To-day this power is being taken away from Parliament and it is proposed to give authority to certain officials of the department to control this matter by regulations that shall be adopted by the department. I must again make a complaint that I have made before. We should have before us sections 325 and 326 of the Inspection and Sale Act of 1918. As it is we do not know what the purport of those sections is. If the sections were printed on one side of the Bill we could gather their purport at a glance and readily comprehend what changes it is proposed to make. As far as I can see it is now contemplated to take away jurisdiction from Parliament and vest it in the minister or the officials of his department. I would like to know the nature of the provisions in question and in what respect they were found defective by the meeting of the fruit growers as my hon. friend has just stated. What particular regulation is complained of by the Fruit Growers' Association? In these sections it is stated what the dimensions of the package should be and how the apples should be packed. If the provisions of the law as they stand are defective why not make the correction here, instead of requiring Parliament to abandon the right of making regulations for the packing of fruit and vesting the power in the officials of the department.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall clause one carry?

Mr. BUREAU: No, I want an answer to the question I have just put to the minister.

Mr. TOLMIE: I might say that the dimensions and specifications of the various fruit packages contained in these sections were unanimously approved, as I said before, at a meeting of delegates from the various provinces held in Ottawa on March 26, 1918, and were embodied in Bill No. 108 which was passed on May 24 of that year. It has since been demonstrated that owing to the highly technical character of these sections, which have to do with the dimensions, capacity, and quality of material in some of the containers, the manufacturers have found it difficult, in some cases, to meet all the requirements.

Mr. BUREAU: The minister has now at his desk an official of his department to advise him. In order that the official in question may understand what I mean I might repeat that as a result of a conference of fruit growers the law of 1918 was passed. I want to know in what particular respect the fruit growers complained against the regulations which were enacted by Parliament?

Mr. TOLMIE: One of the objections was that in Nova Scotia it was necessary to increase the length of the stave and widen the capacity of the barrel—it being of soft wood—so as to contain the same amount as the hardwood barrel.

Mr. FIELDING: Would my hon. friend be able now to answer the question I troubled him with a moment ago as to whether at the latest conference the fruit growers of Nova Scotia were represented?

Mr. TOLMIE: It was a Dominion-wide representation.

Mr. FIELDING: That is a very general answer, but sometimes a conference with Dominion-wide representation is not attended by representatives from all sections. I desire to know whether the fruit growers of Nova Scotia were represented, and if so by whom.

Mr. TOLMIE: In this case Nova Scotia was represented by Mr. McMahon, and the secretary of the Nova Scotia Fruit Growers' Association.

Mr. FIELDING: Those are very excellent gentlemen, and I thank my hon. friend for the information. I am satisfied myself, and I am sure the House is equally satisfied that the hon. gentleman has only good objects in proposing these changes. The minister will see, however, that he is rather running up against—the sentiment of the House, shall I call it? There has been a good deal of talk in recent times with respect to government by Order in Council—

Mr. BUREAU: Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING: —in fact, a few days ago an hon. gentleman on the Government side spoke very strongly against the ministry undertaking to do things by regulation. It is a very embarrassing question, but I think my hon. friend's object is good; and with the assurance that the fruit growers of my own province have been consulted in the matter, I have no desire to do otherwise than give my consent to the Bill.

Mr. BUREAU: It is not a question with me of consulting the fruit growers of Quebec, but it is a question of principle. What reason has the minister for taking into his own hands the power of regulating the packing of fruit in Canada? Did anybody ask for this alteration?

Mr. TOLMIE: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: The only reason the minister gives is that the regulations enacted after the conference of 1918 will force the Nova Scotia people to lengthen the staves of their barrels. If that is the only thing that has given rise to the proposed change, I would propose that we legislate so as to allow the Nova Scotia fruit growers to have a package which will conform with the usage heretofore followed in that province, and to have smaller barrels to pack their fruit in. I am not willing to abandon the privileges of Parliament simply for the purpose of shortening the staves of a barrel by one-half or three-quarters of an inch. I would not consent to the changes proposed except the minister were able to show that they were demanded by the fruit growers throughout the Dominion. It appears, however, that the only objection comes from Nova Scotia that it would involve shortening the staves in the barrels there. I do not think that is sufficient.

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. TOLMIE: The change in the barrel is not due to any personal whim of either the minister or any of the officials of the fruit branch, but to a request from Nova Scotia that the barrel be standardized.

Mr. McCOIG: Will the barrel be of the same size in Nova Scotia as in the other provinces under the new regulation?

Mr. TOLMIE: The same capacity.

Mr. BUREAU: What is the use of the change? If Nova Scotia is forced to change its barrel the minister certainly cannot allege that that change is required because Nova Scotia is affected by the legislation.

Mr. TOLMIE: In Nova Scotia, where soft wood is used both for heads and staves, it is necessary to increase the length of staves in order to secure the legal capacity. The experience of the Fruit Branch is that these matters are of a highly technical nature and that it is far more practicable to have them adjusted after consulting the growers and others interested than to wait for a session of Parliament.

Mr. SEXSMITH: Has Nova Scotia now the same size barrel as Ontario?

Mr. TOLMIE: The same capacity.

Mr. ROBB: The legislation of 1918 was not put through hastily; it was preceded by careful consultation with the different fruit growers throughout all the provinces. Now, a year later, the minister suggests another change, not so much at the instance of the fruit growers and fruit dealers as at the instance of those who manufacture the barrels and packages. Have we any assurance that the minister will not soon come before us again asking us for further changes? All these changes involve additional cost and add to the high cost of living. Barrels that were used in prevous years in the domestice trade can be used again this year. Barrels are very scarce and are very expensive, the price having almost doubled within the last five years. The minister may enact legislation that will make absolutely useless the barrels that were used last year, and that additional cost will ultimately come back on the consumer. It seems to me that the minister should make haste slowly and not grant legislation from year to year simply to suit the whims of the manufacturer of packages.

Mr. TOLMIE: The whole movement is designed to standardize fruit barrels all over the continent. It was made at the instigation of the fruit growers themselves. Sufficient time is permitted for them to use up their old packages. I am not anxious, and I know that the department is not anxious, to make unnecessary changes, but if a change would be a distinct improvement upon what we have had, I cannot guarantee that I will not take action.

Mr. SEXSMITH: I wish to register my protest against too much legislation by Order in Council. This is a very serious matter. As my hon. friend (Mr. Robb) has pointed out, the barrels that were in the trade last year will be used again this year. Barrels that were formerly purchased at 22 cents now cost from 80 cents to $1 each, and that is quite an item to the fruit growers. Moreover, the fruit growers have never any knowledge of what may happen. Orders in Council are published in the Canada Gazette and only one fruit grower in a thousand ever sees them. The fruit grower may be proceeding on the idea that the regulations are the same as they were last year, whereas they may have been changed over night.

Mr. TOLMIE: I have pointed out that the grower is given ample time in which to use the barrels in his possession. There is always a free and full discussion before any action of this kind is taken. I have stated that this legislation was discussed with the fruit growers in every province of the Dominion that is interested in fruit growing.

Mr. BUREAU: If this consultation with the fruit growers resulted in anything definite, the minister ought to know about it by this time. Surely we are entitled to know what changes he proposes when he takes into his own hands the power of making regulations. If he does not know, we should let the Bill stand until he does know. If he does know, he should tell us what changes are proposed. I do not think that we ought to relinquish our right to legislate in these matters and permit them to be dealt with by Order in Council.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. BUREAU: Lost.

Section 1 carried on division.

On section 2—power to make regulations extended:

Mr. BUREAU: What is the section which is here repealed?

Mr. TOLMIE: It reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council may make such regulations as he considers necessary in order to secure the efficient enforcement and operation of this Part, and may by such regulations provide for the imposition of penalties not exceeding thirty dollars on any person offending against them; and the regulations so made shall be in force from the date of their publication in The Canada Gazette, or from such other date as is specified in the proclamation in that behalf; and the violation of any such regulation shall be deemed an offence against this Part and punishable as such.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand the minister to say that under the old Act the penalty is a fine of $30?

Mr. TOLMIE: The repeal of sections 330 and 330B is desired in order that the penalties may be made uniform. At the present time the Act is inconsistent as regards the maximum penalty that may be imposed on any person violating any of the regulations. The Order in Council dated September 14, 1901, passed under authority of the Fruit Marks Act, then in force, gave the Governor in Council authority to make regulations for the enforcement of the Act and to impose penalties not exceeding $50, while section 333B provides a maximum penalty of $30.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not see any inconsistency. The Bill provides that the Governor in Council may make regulations and provide for a penalty not exceeding $30. If I understand aright the reading of that typewritten sheet, the minister says that an Order in Council was passed providing for a penalty of $30. To-day this section goes further; it reads:

> (d) to prescribe penalties not exceeding fifty dollars, and, in default of payment of any such penalty, imprisonment for any term not exceeding one month, for the violation of the said regulations, which penalties shall be recoverable upon summary conviction under part XV of the Criminal Code.

We are to-day taking away from Parliament the right to regulate a matter of Trade and Commerce which concerns all the people of Canada and which is, therefore, a matter that should be known by all the people of Canada. As was rightly said by an hon. gentleman opposite a few minutes ago, while it is all very well to promulgate the decress of the Governor in Council by publication in the Canada Gazette, the Canada Gazette is read by very few people except those who are immediately interested. Therefore, I do not think it is fair that the Governor in Council should have the right to make regulations which heretofore have been made by Parliament, and to have the power to send people to jail if they contravene these regulations when, as a matter of fact, the people who contravene them have no opportunity, I might say, to know what the regulations are, and the point that these publications in the official Gazette are not seen by the people the same as laws that are enacted by Parliament, is a good point. If every fruit grower in Canada has to take the official Gazette in order to find out whether he is packing or shipping fruit within the four corners of the section of the Statute, you are asking from that man something that is practically impossible, and you reserve to yourself the right, if that man does not conform with those regulations, to fine him $50 or send him to jail. I would call the thing iniquitous.

Mr. TOLMIE: There is no lack of publicity about any new regulations. They are published in the agricultural and horticultural press, which is obtainable in all parts of the country, and then at all the fruit meetings they are very fully discussed before and after the regulations are put into force, so that all the fruit growers have a very full knowledge of the law. As regards prosecution, no prosecution is carried out unless there are clear-cut grounds of fraud or of an attempt to defeat the law.

Mr. DEVLIN: I should like to second the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau). The great trouble in this country is that we have had too much Government by Order in Council, and the people now want a little bit of responsibility by the Government. It has been the custom of this Government, from its very inception, simply to pass on to somebody else the responsibility which it should assume. We have had instances galore of Government irresponsibility through Order in Council. In other words, to make myself clear, hon. gentlemen opposite who form the Government to-day, who are responsible to the people by the constitution of this country, have preferred to make by Order in Council all their regulations, even regulations extending the Acts of this Parliament. We have had it in the case of oleomargarine; we have had it in regard to all the important legislation that we have had this session. What is the important legislation we have had? We have had amendments to the Opium and Drug Act, to the Oleomargarine Act; we have had amendments to certain Acts which have had for their purpose to legislate us right into heaven. The next thing we know is that some Order in Council will be passed which will transfer us, even without death, right into heaven. The people of this country want to know the legislation that is being passed; they want to be familiar with each part of the legislation, and I would point out to the Minister of Agriculture, who is a new minister and who is, perhaps, not as familiar as he might be with conditions prevailing throughout the whole of Canada, that the less Government we have by Order in Council, the better for the Government, the better for the people who support the Government and the better for the people for whom the Government is supposed to act. We should not have Orders in Council changing, perhaps radically, portions of the legislation now sought to be passed, changing regulations which should be known first to the representatives of the people in order that they may give their opinion, because we have in this House men sent here from all portions of Canada to represent different classes. We have here any number of members like myself representing agricultural communities. We have men like my hon. friends down at the other end of the Chamber representing the National Progressive party. In some parts of the country they call themselves United Farmers; they are National Progressives. They have not yet begun to act under Order in Council, but the Minister of Agriculture has. He is hardly in the Government before he proposes to change the legislation of this country by Order in Council. I call the minister's attention to this, and I hope he will suspend the operation of his Bill until such time as he finds out some other way by which the representatives of the people may pass legislation than by Order in Council.

Mr. BUREAU: We repeal here two sections, sections 325 and 326. Section 325 relates to fruit packages and section 326 to berries and currants. In the same Act of 1918, section 328 provides:

> Every person who, by himself or through the agency of any other person, violates any of the provisions of sections 320 and 321 of this Act, shall be liable, upon summary conviction, for the first offence, to a fine not exceeding $25 and not less than $10; for the second offence, to a fine not exceeding $50; and not less than $25.

And so on.

The penalties are graded as the offence is continued; but under this we abandon the right of punishing violators of the law, and we give to the Governor in Council power to make such regulations as will land in jail the man who violates section 333B, if he does not pay his fine. I again object to this section, and I think, as my hon. friend (Mr. Devlin) said, that we had enough of this legislation by Order in Council during the war. Those were abnormal times, and in those times were willing to allow a great deal of latitude to the Governor in Council so that he might be able to do all sorts of things. But to-day the war is over, and we want to bring things back to normal as quickly as possible and that will not be brought about by continuing the same system as was continued during the war, namely, of curtailing the rights of Parliament and increasing the powers of the Governor in Council in regard to various matters. I want to register my protest against this provision. If sections 325 and 326 required to be remedied they should be remedied here. If the minister has discovered any flaws in the working of the Act, let him state them to the committee. We are asked to hand over all our powers to the minister and he will not tell us what changes he proposes to make by regulations, or what flaws have been discovered in the Act. Parliament is certainly entitled to know these things, and if the minister would give us an explanatory statement we should be able to judge whether it was necessary that he and his department should be the sole judges of what legislation ought to be passed concerning fruit growing, fruit packing and fruit shipping.

Mr. ROBB: In view of the opposition that has developed to this legislation not only from this side of the House, but from supporters fo the ministry, may I suggest to the minister that it would expedite business if he would postpone further consideration of this Bill, and have it referred to the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. STACEY: Hon. members who have knowledge of the matter which is referred to in this clause of the Bill will readily realize the importance of some such step as is now proposed by the minister. I happen to know that the Dominion Government in conjunction with certain Provincial Governments is seeking to standardize containers of certain fruits which are produced in this Dominion. It is very essential that there should be uniformity throughout the entire country in this matter. It would be almost ludicrous, were it not so serious, to hear hon. members speaking of determining here in this House what shall be the size of certain fruit containers. I venture to say that there is only a small number of men here in touch with the fruit business who are in a position to form any definite judgment upon these matters, even though they be the representatives of the people. If those who are directly engaged in the business throughout the various provinces can by co-ordination and co-operation with the Dominion authorities come to an unanimous conclusion regarding size of containers and other matters, that is the goal to be reached, and that I am satisfied is the purpose of this Bill. It is, from my point of view, entirely aside from the question to call this proposed legislation "legislation by Order in Council." The purpose of these amendments is to secure fair play for all, in the interests of the industry and in the interests of consumers. Hence the desire to secure uniformity. That is the object of the Bill, and I sincerely hope that it will carry.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Notwithstanding the remarks which have just been made and the risk I may be incurring of being considered one of those who have no knowledge or experience in connection with this matter, I must say that I do not view with approval the clause which is now before the committee, authorizing the Governor in Council to fix the dimensions and capacity of all containers. We were told by the minister when the first clause was under consideration that a uniform container or barrel had been decided on for all Canada. That being the case, I do not see any reason why it should not be mentioned in the Bill. The minister has told us that these regulations are all published in the agricultural and horticultural press of the country, and that those who are interested in the business will familiarize themselves with the regulations which may be enacted. People under certain circumstances may possibly afford to go it blind, provided they have absolute confidence in the wisdom of such a policy, but under present conditions, and in connection with a measure of this kind, I do not think it is advisable or in the public interest to be continually changing the style or size of these containers. I think we ought to have a uniform package for fruits, and it should be mentioned in the Bill so that people would know whether or not they were violating one of the statutes of this country. To do these things by means of regulations which are not yet known is surely not in keeping with the form of government we have in this country. We are asked to pass legislation delegating certain powers to the Government, without any knowledge of the regulations that are to be drawn up. If that system was adopted in connection with all the business that came before Parliament, we might just as well stay home and let the Government carry on the business itself. Personally, I think this is a case where we should state clearly and definitely what the size of the containers shall be. Then people would know that the size was fixed by statute, and would not be changed by regulations which might hereafter be passed.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member (Mr. Stacey) seems to think that because a man is not a fruit grower he should not take part in anything that interests the people of this country. When he told us that we knew nothing about fruit growing, I do not know whether he wanted us to infer that he did know something about it and was in fact getting up and addressing the committee as an authority. If it is really true, I am glad to know that he knows something about something.

We do not stand here in the interests of the fruit growers or the makers of packages. We stand here for principle, in the interests of the taxpayers of Canada. This is not simply a case of determining the size of barrels or boxes for the packing of fruit. Parliament passed certain legislation after a conference with the fruit growers of Canada. They certainly know something about the growing and packing and shipping of fruit, as much no doubt, as my hon. friend (Mr. Stacey). They are also taxpayers of this country, and they have sent representatives here to this Parliament to exercise the powers which the constitution gives them and not to delegate those powers to the Governor in Council. We are here to represent the people and legislate for them. My hon. friend (Mr. Stacey) may choose to carry on the business of this country by Order in Council, but I, for my part, will not accept that principle. I think this Bill is wrong in principle because it asks Parliament to divest itself of rights which it has exercised, and wisely exercised, after taking all due precautions by consulting those interested in this industry in this country. The legislation which was passed in 1919 was assented to by all the fruit growers of this country. If in the working out of the Act there has been discovered any flaw or something wrong, I say we are entitled to know what those flaws are, and what it is we are asked to remedy. I think we should have a statement from the minister as to the evils he desires to correct, and

I say further that it is the duty of this Parliament to provide the remedy and not divest itself of its responsibility and privilege of enacting legislation with respect to these matters.

Mr. TOLMIE: I should like to give a little more information. I have already referred to the apple barrel which will contain 7056 cubic inches. It has been found necessary to make a change with respect to the berry baskets, because the express companies practically gave the fruit men to understand that they would cease to carry the fruit in the old package on account of the loss entailed. Under the old conditions the packages contained sloping sides. They are now being made nearly straight in the sides and will contain the same quantities as before, 11 quarts and 6 quarts. This safer carriage of fruit of course means cheaper fruit for every one. These conferences are held by the fruit men and all these matters are carefully discussed with representatives from all over the country, and there is no doubt that the delegates that come to these meetings have previously consulted all the fruit men in their respective districts, so that you really get the opinion of the best fruit men from all over Canada. I know, as a civil servant who has spent a number of years in the Health of Animal and Live Stock branches, that in many cases circumstances have occurred that made Orders in Council necessary, for very serious losses might have taken place had matters been held up until such time as legislation could come before Parliament. I do not wish in any way to push this matter unduly. I desire to do the right thing by hon. members, and if in their opinion this legislation should be referred to the committee on agriculture I am quite willing to accept that view.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. BUREAU: I understand that the minister is willing to refer the matter to the committee on agriculture, and that appears to be the opinion of all hon. members. It is desirable that we should have a thorough discussion of the subject in the light of further information.

The CHAIRMAN: If it is desired to refer the Bill to the select standing committee on agriculture there must be a motion to report progress. When the Bill is before the House it can be referred by the House to that committee.

Mr. TOLMIE: I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TOLMIE: I move, Mr. Speaker, that Bill No. 104, which we have just had under consideration be referred to the committee on agriculture.

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion can, of course, be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT.

The Houe resumed from May 4, consideration in committee of Bill No. 12 (Hon. Mr. Guthrie) respecting the election of members of the House of Commons and the electoral franchise.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When progress was reported upon this Bill on Tuesday evening, all of the clauses and schedules had been read and considered.

Mr. BUREAU: Before we proceed, Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to draw the attention of the Acting Solicitor General to the fact that although he made the statement last night that the term "election papers" had been used in several clauses, I have failed to find those words after a perusal of the Bill? I ran through the Bill hurriedly this morning but could not find the words "election papers" anywhere. Would the minister indicate in what particular sections those words appear?

Mr. GUTHRIE: At the present moment I can only ask my hon. friend to compare his copy of the Bill with the copy at the Clerk's table. In some twelve or thirteen places we have struck out the words "ballot papers" and replaced them with the words "election papers." These would appear in all clauses relating to the return which has to be made by the Chief Electoral Officer, and in those clauses which provide for the sending of papers from that officer to the various ridings.

Mr. BUREAU: I read the whole Bill through this morning but I could not find the words "election papers."

Mr. GUTHRIE: You have not amended your copy as we have gone along.

The CHAIRMAN: When progress was reported last evening all of the clauses and schedules has been read and considered. Paragraph (k) of clause 2, clauses 19, 29, 32, 37, 44, 45, 63, 76 and 101, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Gloucester to clause 37, the amendment proposed by the hon. the Acting Solicitor General to clause 44, and several forms in the schedules to the Bill had been allowed to stand for further consideration. The other clauses and forms had been adopted. Clauses 19 and 76 which provide for the expenditure of money by the Government still await the approval by the House of the required resolution. We have now reached clause 101. Shall that clause carry?

Mr. TWEEDIE: With the consent of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I should like to revert to clause 39, which has been passed, for the purpose of submitting an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: It is, of course, only by unanimous consent that this motion can be made. The hon. member moves that the committee return to clause 39, which has already been agreed to. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Clause 39 refers to the disqualification of candidates. In the consideration of the subsection which had relation to campaign expenses of candidates, a discussion arose incidentally touching the subject of agreements which are in the nature of a recall, and at that time I submitted that we should have legislation on the statute which would cover that point, so as to disqualify from holding a seat in the House any man who signed his resignation in advance of an election or who entered into any agreement which in itself might operate as a recall, placing in the hands of a committee, whether large or small, the power to demand his resignation. Undoubtedly there has been an endeavour, especially in the West, to engraft upon our constitution something which is not in the least degree adapted to it or to the laws of any of the provinces. And while repeated efforts have been made to induce Provincial Governments in the West to enact legislation in the nature of a recall, something of that character having been done in Manitoba, although I believe it was subsequently disallowed by the Privy Council the majority of the provinces have refused to go that length, but have introduced legislation in the form of an initiative and referendum. By the initiative and referendum the electors are given the power to draft initiatory legislation and forward it to the Provincial Legislatures for adoption. The referendum could thus take all legislation from the Government and submit it to the people for their approval.

These are not the questions that I propose to discuss to-day but I intend to confine myself to the amendment to this section which I propose to introduce and which will deal simply with the question of the recall in so far as it may be made a disqualification for any candidate at an election. I think that the question of the recall, whether it may have justification, or whether it may have advocates, cannot be introduced into this country but when we get down to the scientific recall which has been adopted in a great many of the western states we find that the power which is given by the recall is not reposed in the hands of any individual, and it is not reposed in the hands of any committee which may be selected by any particular group, but the recall, no matter whether the percentage of those who are required to sign the petition for recall be large or small, is a power which, in theory, is reposed in the body of the electors and the electors as a whole are entitled to exercise it.

What do we find to be the system which is being adopted in this country? There is no pretence whatever to repose power in the majority of the people. There is no pretence to repose in the people, as electors, the right to circulate and sign a petition to recall a man from the legislature but the right is exercised as the result of a bargain. The man who is a candidate in many cases is asked to sign his recall before the people have even had a chance to vote whether he shall represent them or not. In the case which we have cited in this House by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould), we find that an agreement is entered into between the candidate and a committee of fifteen men. These fifteen men are not the choice of the people of the country. They are generally men who are closely allied with a political organization and the object of the agreement is that that committee of men who are bound by party ties shall exercise a jurisdiction over the man who has been elected to represent the people in the House of Commons. As I pointed out before, I believe that any such method as that simply results in the stultification of the man who occupies a seat in this House. When he comes here he must realize that, if he is an honourable man and has entered into an agreement with these fifteen men, or with any committee, he is bound to obey the dictates of those fifteen men and if they say: "You shall vote for some particular piece of legislation," he must either violate his agreement and become a dishonourable man or follow the dictates or instructions which they give to him. It is fettering him in deciding the course that he shall pursue, and it is fettering him in the performance of the duty which he owes to the people as a whole. The results which were pointed out by Edmund Burke in a speech which he made to the electors of Bristol when he was withdrawing from the contest there, are working out in the same way in this connection. Mr. Burke says:

> Let me say, with plainness, I who am no longer in a public character, that, if, by a fair, by an indulgent, by a gentlemanly behaviour to our representatives, we do not give confidence to their minds and a liberal scope to their understandings, if we do not permit our members to act upon a very enlarged view of things, we shall at length infallibly degrade our national representation into a confused and scuffling bustle of local agency.

A man who signs any such agreement with a committee is simply a delegate to this House and not the representative of the people of his constituency or a representative of the people of the whole of Canada. If the people of this country desire the recall, I submit, it is their duty to bring about such a change in our constitution as will permit it but it is not their right to attack and subvert the constitution and try to introduce into our system something that is unconstitutional; or to try to defeat the ends of our constitution or to make the House of Commons which is supposed to be representative, unrepresentative. When they get the constitution amended so that the recall may be properly adopted under it it will be time for us to determine whether or not we shall have the recall in this country. Personally I think it would be a very unsafe thing to have brought into the political life of Canada. I submit that any of these agreements which are entered into at the present time, any recall which may be signed in advance, should be ground for disqualifying the man who signed it to hold a seat in this House because he does not come as the servant of the people as a whole but simply comes as the delegate or agent of a few people in whose hands he places his resignation, or with whom he has entered into such an agreement. I do not propose to take any longer time. I am bringing this before the House for the purpose of getting a free expression of opinion and I shall now read my amendment. I beg to move:

That clause 39 be amended by inserting, as paragraph (h) of subclause 1, the following words:

"(h) Persons who have signed any agreement, whether amounting to a resignation, a recall or otherwise, which would in any manner whatsoever limit the independence of such person in the event of his being elected member of the House of Commons."

Mr. FIELDING: With my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Tweedie) I have little admiration for the recall. In these progressive days, so-called, there is a demand among many excellent citizens for a plan of political action which is described as the initiative, referendum and recall. I do not find myself able to join in that demand. The referendum is occasionally necessary. We have it in our municipal affairs, we have it in the Scott Act, and we are going to have it under the Act which we adopted last session in connection with the question of prohibition throughout the Dominion. We are all in a measure joining in the referendum from time to time. The initiative has less to recommend it, although I speak with great respect because I know very many people in the country regard it as one of the things which modern politics require.

In regard to the recall, I entirely disapprove of it. I have no sympathy whatever with the recall, but why should I prevent any man in any part of Canada supporting the recall system if he wants it? I regard it as an unwise thing on the part of the farmers, but if they are pleased to regard it as a part of wisdom, and they want to establish the recall amongst themselves, I do not see why we should by legislation deny them that privilege.

I may think it is not the best form of legislation; I may think we would be very unwise in passing it; I would not vote for a candidate who signed a recall pledge; I think good reasons could be shown why the recall ought not to commend itself to the best judgment of the country; I regard it as a matter entirely belonging to—shall I say the internal economy of the Farmers' Party; but if it pleases them I do not see why they should not be allowed to have it. We may do very many things which in the eyes of our neighbours are unreasonable and foolish, but we would not legislate against them. If the farmers say they will not vote for a red-headed man I might think it is unwise, but if it pleases them it does not hurt me—let them have the privilege if they choose. They may say they will not vote for a man who wears good clothes—we have these days a movement for the wearing of overalls—and they will only vote for the man who belongs to the Old Clothes Brigade. That is perhaps very commendable, but I do not think it is a matter for legislation in any shape or form. I strongly urge upon my hon. friend from Calgary—with whose views concerning the recall I largely sympathize—not to treat it as a matter for legislation at all. Let us leave the recall to the people of this country; let them try it a bit. I believe the best thing we can do in the case of some of these so-called modern reforms is to give the people a chance to try them out and they will discover very often that they do not produce the great results they hoped for. With reference to the recall, if it pleases our farmer friends to have it as part of their platform, let them have it within themselves, and I think they will get tired of it eventually.

Mr. R. H. HALBERT (Ontario, N.): I think my hon. friend (Mr. Tweedie) is mistaken as to the working of the recall. In the first place, no committee has a right to recall the member who has been elected until they have had placed in their hands a petition signed by from sixty to seventy-five per cent of the electors of that riding; and for my part I would not want to hold a seat in the House if seventy-five per cent of the people in my constituency did not wish me to be here. No doubt some hon. gentlemen fear the idea of a recall because it might prevent them from getting a judgeship or a seat in the Senate. Take it in connection with the running of a business. Suppose I were a business man, and my hon. friend from Calgary came along to me and said he wanted to hire a manager. Let us suppose a conversation took place along this line: "Halbert, will you take the job?" "Yes, under certain conditions." Very well, name your conditions." "My conditions are: First, that you engage me for four years and in that time you cannot sack me. If in that four years I think my services are worth more to you than they are at present, and I wish to have my salary raised, you must not object. Or, if I see a better job in those four years I wish to be at liberty to resign. I will take that better position and you can have no comeback." If I hired a man under such an arrangement as that it would be up to my friends to look after me, because I would certainly need their care. But that is the way in which members of Parliament have in the past been elected, and that is why the recall finds a place in our platform. However, my reason for speaking was to put the hon. member right in this respect—that no committee of ten or twelve has any power to put the recall into effect until they have had presented to them a petition signed by sixty or seventy-five per cent of the electors of that riding. And if that percentage of the electors do not want the member to remain in Parliament I do not see why he should stay there. I can see the fear which some hon. gentlemen entertain. If I may use the expression without irreverence, they have had the fear of God put into their hearts by reason of the adoption of the recall platform. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to return home when seventy-five per cent of the electors in my riding say so. In conclusion, in order to put the hon. member right upon another point, let me say that I did not sign any recall—I was not asked to.

Mr. D. L. REDMAN (Calgary E.): I am not clear as to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Halbert) meant by stating that if sixty to seventy-five per cent of the people of his constituency were opposed to him he would not wish to retain his seat. Let me say further that I do not believe that any such percentage of the electors in his constituency voted for that hon. gentleman when he was elected some few months ago.

Before proceeding further with a discussion of this matter, I think it is well that we should clearly recognize the difference between the real or radical recall and the signed resignation with which we are dealing to-day. The recall—which usually goes with the initiative and the referendum—is a matter of legislation, and may form the subject of an Act introduced by a ministry to deal with the election of members of Parliament. That policy is now in existence in many of the states of the American Union. In general terms it provides that sometimes twenty-five per cent, and sometimes fifty per cent of the voters in any constituency may petition for the holding of a new election, and when the requisite petition has been duly filed a new election is held. A majority vote will then elect either the sitting member or any candidate who runs against him. That is the way in whcih the real, or radical, recall operates. It has been in existence for many years in various states of the Union, and even to-day after years of experience opinion is greatly divided as to the benefit which has been derived from that legislation. Perusing a book of Professor Barnett, of the university of Oregon, written in 1915, dealing with the results of the operation of the recall in that state, I find he cites three cases which may be briefly stated as follows: First, the case of a mayor who was asked to resign on the supposition that he had diverted public funds from their proper channel; but it was pointed out that the real reason was that he had wished to open certain streets which some property owners had closed, and they taking advantage of the recall had brought these charges against him and had him defeated. In the next case a charge of immorality was brought against the official, and it turned out that the real question at issue was a fight between two banks which had had control of the city for some time. The third case was where an official was accused of diverting public funds but it transpired that the real reason for the demand for his recall was that the anti-prohibition forces wished to get rid of him on account of his stringent enforcement of the prohibition law. Let me say that I am not making an argument against a scientific, radical recall; I am simply pointing out the nature of the first three cases which arose in the state referred to. If you refer to the book in question you will find that the same conditions prevailed in case after case—that is, the recall was practically never used to get rid of an improper official, but was improperly used by people who had special financial reasons for invoking its use, and that its use was accompanied by gross misrepresentations of the character and efficiency of the man who was holding the position and by the inflaming of public passion. It is extremely doubtful whether any good resulted from the use of the system. However, that sort of recall is at least an attempt to give the people greater control over their representatives, and it is necessary that the people should have some way of getting rid of improper officials. As to the value of the real recall we are not to-day asked to vote for that principle; we are dealing to-day with an entirely different thing—the signed resignation. The signed resignation is as far from the recall as the north pole is from the south. The recall is an attempt at radical and advanced legislation; in the signed resignation I can see nothing but an attempt to perfect a political machine. No other conclusion can be come to. It is not a attempt to give the people greater power over their representatives; it is an attempt to defeat the will of the people and to take away from them the representative which they have just elected. In making these remarks I am not speaking of any arrangement by any member of the House although the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) the other day stated that he had signed a resignation.

Mr. GOULD: I beg to differ from my hon. friend.

Mr. REDMAN: Well, he said he signed an agreement of that nature. He did not state the nature of the agreement and so we do not know what the nature of it is; or whether it is harmful or beneficial. But I am now discussing the problem itself as an abstract problem.

As the member for West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie) has said, a member elected to this House is not necessarily only the representative of his own constituency. I think it is his duty first to lay before Parliament the rights and claims and needs of his own constituents, just as any counsel would do on behalf of his clients. But that done, it is his duty, in casting his vote, to have regard to the best interests of Canada as a whole; if necessary, to compromise on the interests or needs of his own constituents if that must be done in order that legislation in the best interests of Canada as a whole may be passed. That is my conception of the duty of a member of a British Parliament. How would it be possible for a member who had placed in the hands of an individual or a local committee a signed resignation, to represent the best interests of the whole of Canada? Is it possible for that man to represent all his constituents? Could it even be said that he represents the majority who elected him? While the individual or committee who hold his signed resignation may at the time of the election have had the confidence of or have been in agreement with the majority who elected the member, it does not follow that a year hence or two years hence when new problems come up, new issues have to be faced, this individual or this committee will be in agreement with the majority who elected the member. So that logically, by a process of reasoning to which there can be no answer, the only person or group of persons whom the member who has submitted a signed resignation can be said to represent are those who hold his resignation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have arising in this country new sorts of political parties, and I think that the question of "signed resignations" in relation to these new parties should be discussed. It would be extremely dangerous for political parties the basis of whose organization is a policy which they believe to be in the best interests of the country, to use this signed resignation. That being true it is exceptionally dangerous when the signed resignation is used in the case of a political party whose basic principle is the betterment in their view of an economic class. I think we must accept the principle that that is the basis of the new political parties that are arising. We may also conclude that members of an economic class party must of necessity legislate in the interests of that economic class. It may be that they will legislate at some time in the interests of all the people of Canada, but on the other hand it may be that the interests of their economic class will be opposed to the interests of all the people. If that be not true, then why do they organize as an economic class? Surely that argument need not be pressed further.

Now, if we have as members of this House representatives of political parties the bases of which are certain economic principles for economic classes, the committee or individual holding their signed resignations is bound to think solely along the lines of these economic principles. They are not here like the ordinary member, to hear the opinions of other economic classes; they are not here to hear the opinions of the representatives of other parts of Canada. They are away at a distance; they are naturally full of the ideas entertained by their own class, and they will restrain the free action of their member here under threat of filing his resignation with the Speaker if he does not fulfil their orders and act in accordance with what they consider to be the interests of their economic class.

But what are the other classes of this country to do? It may happen that this new formed economic class may have control of the Government of this country although the majority of the people may have voted against them as we see in the province of Ontario to-day. Who is going to take care of the other economic classes? Who is going to take care of the interests of the majority of the people if we have here groups of members who dominate the Government, who have left behind them in the various constituencies of Canada signed resignations and who have to act in exact accord with the local and class viewpoint, of the individuals who hold their resignations?

You may ask, why, if in the past we have never had such legislation as that proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Tweedie), it is necessary to ask for it now? For the first time in the history of this country we find a tendency on the part of political parties to use this signed resignation and when we are considering the Franchise Act under which the members of Parliament will in the future be elected, I believe it is the right time to get rid of this signed resignation business. It has nothing to do with the recall. It is, in my opinion, absolutely reactionary, and is brought forward for one reason and one reason only, that is, to perfect a political machine.

Mr. H. A. MACKIE: I think we ought to be careful when dealing with this matter about continually referring to the farmers as though they were entirely responsible for the idea of the recall in this country. Besides, I am not of the opinion that all the farmers of the country are of one thought and of one mind with those who are called the leaders of the farmers in this House. I am also of opinion that as soon as the farmers in general shall have discovered that their leaders are made of clay, a large number of them at all events will change their opinions very considerably. It is their gods that I attack; not the farmers as a class. For instance, I hold in my hand a pamphlet that was issued by the Tory Party in Alberta calling upon not only the farmers of that province, but everybody in the province to support the Opposition at the ensuing election because of their policy on the initiative, referendum and recall. So that our good Tories are as much at fault in that respect as the farmers.

I wish to say a few words with regard to the remarks made by the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), who says that "if the farmers want the recall, why, let them have it; if anybody wants anything, why, do not dispute it." I myself was to a certain extent in favour of the recall when I had not nearly as broad a view of politics as I have acquired since I came to Ottawa and have had opportunity to study the science of Government at closer range. What I see in the recall, whatever may be its form, is an intimidation of the member, who is asked to follow only a particular course and who must resign his seat if he does not follow that course. The clause that was put in the platform of the Conservative Party in Alberta with regard to the recall is as follows:

> The recall is a method by which electors may exercise direct control over a representative. If he acts contrary to their will, he may, on petition of a certain percentage of the electors of his constituency, be suspended from office. A new election is then declared, at which the so-called representative may stand. The operation of the initiative and referendum tends to lessen the necessity for the exercise of this right.

Mr. Chairman, if the recall in any form whatsoever means that you may have by-elections all over the country at any time, it is bad even from the point of view of expenditure. But that is of minor importance when you consider that the recall appeals to the intellectual and moral weakness of the candidate, because it characterizes his whole course with a lack of courage in that he may not use his intelligence and his judgment for the best interests of Canada. It so controls or intimidates him that he may vote in this House against his conscience, and when he does that, it is a form of corruption. The recall in any form whatsoever is bad, and contrary to the opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding), I say that if the recall being bad in its essence, it then becomes the duty of this free Parliament to condemn it, since it is going to bring about in this country a condition of things which is not desirable. I shall be pleased to support the amendment.

Mr. BEST: I wish to support the amendment because I believe there is not in this House a member who is elected to represent only his own constituents, as distinguished from the people of Canada as a whole. The opinion of the people is that every member, who is elected by a majority of the voters of his constituency, is elected also to represent the Dominion of Canada as a whole. I was rather surprised to hear my hon friend (Mr. Fielding) say: "If the farmers want this, why not let them have it?" The hon. member can surely see that the farmers are just as much divided in opinion on public questions as other classes in this House. We have many farmers sitting on the other end of the Chamber and others distributed throughout both sides of the House, and on every question that comes up in the House, the farmers are divided, just the same as hon. members in other pursuits in life, so that the farmers are not all of one opinion. I understood the hon. member for Ontario North (Mr. Halbert) to say that he would not want to sit in this House unless he knew that from 60 to 75 per cent of the people in the constituency that he represents were in favour of his being here.

Mr. HALBERT: I said that if 75 per cent of the electors of my riding signed a petition asking for my resignation, I would not wish to sit here in this House.

Mr. BEST: If that be so, the hon. member should have resigned before he took his seat because much less than 60 per cent of the electors voted for him. That people should want to have a law permitting the election of a member by a majority of say one vote—and that means a good deal less than 60 per cent of the electors—and at the same time stating that 60 per cent should be required to recall him, is something that I cannot understand. As regards the recall, I know that, in the case of provincial members, I heard a candidate say on the day of the nomination: "My resignation is now in the hands of the committee." So his resignation was there. I do not know why we should have in this country a law whereby in the case of a member who is elected by a majority of five or ten in his constituency, should have to resign, if ten or twelve men should get sore on him for something he has done, perhaps in the best interest of the country, they should be able to get together all that voted for him and five or six more—and that would not be 60 per cent of the electors of the constituency. Hon. members are elected for a term of five years at the longest, and one man cannot ruin this country in that time even if he makes some mistakes. There is not in the whole Dominion any constituency in which nearly all the electors think that their representative votes or does wrong on any particular occasion. Therefore, it is very wrong to have any law that will allow a few people, if they get sore on any member, to cause him to resign his seat, thus bringing on another election. Such a system is vicious and should not be allowed. I therefore, heartily support the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Tweedie).

Mr. GOULD: I am glad to have an opportunity of making a few remarks to the committee upon this question. It seems to me that I have been the direct cause of this amendment, and of the speeches that have been made supporting it. It has occurred to me to ask why, seeing that this has been a public question in all parts of the Dominion of Canada for fifteen years, the hon. gentleman who moves this amendment today has not thought so before, although he had many opportunities to do so. If he is now, as he says, asking in the interest of truth and justice, why has he so long refrained from bringing the matter to the attention of the House.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Might I be allowed to make a correction? My hon. friend (Mr. Gould) is not the direct cause of this. This is simply a question of principle, and the reason it was not taken up in the House before was that there are for the first time members holding seats in this House who have acknowledged on the floor of this House that they have signed such an agreement as to resigning.

Mr. GOULD: I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation, but I did not wish to infer at all that this amendment has been submitted in any spirit of vindictiveness. I appreciate very much the manner in which the hon. members for both Calgary East (Mr. Redman), and Calgary West (Mr. Tweedie), presented their arguments. I would again revert to this, that evidence has been submitted today that on the provincial platforms of Alberta, mark you, a Conservative party and mark you further, while they are in opposition—and that suggests the argument that they are equally as pure while they are in opposition as they are while in office —approve of the recall. The hon. gentleman for Calgary West has been living in Alberta, and it is not recorded, or at least I have not yet met the evidence, that his voice has ever been raised in provincial politics to denounce this vicious recall which is being advocated by the Tory party.

Mr. TWEEDIE: If the hon. member had been living in Alberta privately or publicly, he would have known many years ago my feelings on that matter, and they have never changed. I have always opposed that in convention and out of convention.

Mr. GOULD: You were the leader of the Conservative party out there, and yet you allowed that party to adopt that principle in their platform.

Mr. TWEEDIE: If I may again correct the hon. member, I was not the leader of the Conservative party, and I never would allow any party to which I belong to have any such plank in their platform.

Mr. GOULD: Very well. I am, however, pleased that this has come to the surface to-day, and I am also pleased that evidence has been submitted that the Conservatives of Alberta have been more guilty than possibly I have been myself. You try to explain the recall, and again you say "resignation in the hands of the committee." I have a recollection of April 13, when I explained to the House that I had neither signed the recall nor placed my resignation in the hands of the committee. I believe I made a statement in regard to an agreement with the committee and I will give the information once more, that the agreement which I have with the committee is that if they disapprove, they can ask me to come back and explain, not to resign. The onus of responsibility is on the committee in the first place, and I maintain that it is in the interest of good legislation that all the members of this Parliament should be under a similar arrangement. I have a committee of fifteen who are keeping themselves well posted upon public matters in that part of the country, and they are advising me from time to time. They are sending me information and their opinions on public questions, and this helps me materially in my course in this House. I am very much pleased to have their opinions, and I am sure the hon. gentleman for Calgary West can find in his electoral district fifteen men who can and would advise him, and possibly at times he would find that their advice would not conform with the opinions he expresses here. The advice I receive is good, and I say that such a course is progressive. That is one of the reasons why we claim the right to call ourselves progressive. The hon. gentleman states that he believes in the initiative and the referendum. Oh, yes, it is in actual operation throughout the Dominion, and it has been; but I will point out that the initiative and the referendum are more on the principle of direct legislation, and I will point out further that, through the medium of the initiative and the referendum, you can get the recall and a true expression of public opinion, and no power in Canada will prevent that.

If you give the right to initiative and referendum, you have the right to recall and for any act brought into being through the initiative and referendum, and consequently if you are consistent you cannot enact legislation preventing the recall. Hon. members come to this House with the right to sit for five years, representing or misrepresenting the people during that time. Some have done things contrary to the interests of the people, yet the people who sent them here have had no recourse. That is the reason why the recall has been introduced, and I believe it is a good thing to bridge the gulf between the time a member is elected and Parliament dissolves and he presents himself again to the people. That is one of the reasons why I approve of the recall, and why I cannot support the amendment. I think I could refer to a text from Scripture to illustrate what I mean, and that is, to take the beam out of your own eye before you presume to take the mote out of your brother's. If pressed very hard, I think I could also give evidence to show that your own ranks have been working to get this recall put on the statute book.

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member to address his remarks to the Chair, and not to the other side of the House.

Mr. GOULD: I was going to say that the hon. member (Mr. Tweedie) has let pass many opportunities of bringing this matter to the attention of the House, but since I made the statement in this House on April 13 the hon. member, actuated by some pure and holy motive, has become anxious to have members elected to this House by the straight and narrow way. I think that his newly-found virtue should be studied very closely by hon. gentlemen before they think of enacting his amendment into law. I would point out to the hon. member that public opinion is demanding the recall, and I honestly believe that there are members of this House to whom the recall would be a very, very dangerous thing. I believe that some hon. members who are so anxious to have legislation preventing the recall are the very ones who have reason to be afraid of its operation. I do not wish to discuss the matter any further. I might say that I have been asked by many hon. gentlemen opposite to give them a copy of our platform to study. It is a very interesting document, and I have given away so many that I have not a solitary one left for myself. I do not know whether they desire copies of it for purposes of discussion or to inform themselves just what our platform contains, but I am very pleased to let them have copies, and I have written to the West for a further supply. I hope they will find nothing wrong in our platform, but much that is progressive. We approve of the initiative and referendum. We believe in direct legislation. That is one of the planks in our platform, and one of the reasons why our platform is so progressive.

Mr. EDWARDS: I have no fault to find with the hon. member (Mr. Gould) or any other hon. member for subscribing to the platform of the party to which he belongs. If he and others sitting alongside him think that the referendum and recall is a plank which should be generally adopted in this country, they have a perfect right to put it in their platform and advocate its general adoption. But I take exception to the hon. gentleman and those who think with him carrying into effect the planks of their platform before they have had an opportunity to crystallize them into legislation, for that is a very different thing. If the members of this House wish to place legislation on the statute book favouring the referendum and recall, that is all right, but for some people in certain parts of the country to take the law into their own hands, as some have done in this matter, is something which I think should be very strongly deprecated.

The hon. member (Mr. Gould) has addressed some remarks to the hon. member (Mr. Tweedie) which I think he might very well have addressed to some hon. gentleman in his own particular group who have been in this House as long or longer than the hon. member (Mr. Tweedie). The hon. member (Mr. Halbert) sitting next to my hon. friend (Mr. Gould) thinks that some members of this House are rather fearful of the recall. Well, I do not think the hon. member himself had such an overwhelming majority that he should feel entirely peaceful at the prospect of facing his electors again. He did not have a very large majority to boast of, although he was in the field a long time and had a host of supporters backing up his candidature. He says he would not want a seat in this House if 60 or 75 per cent of his electors petitioned for his resignation. Would he wish to hold his seat in this House if 50 per cent of his electors sent in a petition for his resignation? The hon. member does not see fit to answer that question. It is getting on pretty thin ice so far as he is concerned. He was mighty careful to fix the percentage pretty high in his own case, and was mighty careful not to say that he would resign if 51 per cent of his electors petitioned for his resignation. That would be on too dangerous ground for the hon. member. My hon. friend does not know the facts with regard to the recall. He says that 60 or 75 per cent of the electors of a constituency must ask for the recall of a member before he gives up his seat, but the hon. member (Mr. Gould), speaking in this House on April 13th, said:

> An agreement does exist between my committee, whose names I have read, any myself. Forty per cent of the number of electors who voted at my election——

Not forty per cent of the number of electors on the list, but forty per cent of those who voted at his election.

> ——may, if I refuse to do what this committee asks me to do on the floor of this House—and that committee must meet very often and find out what public opinion is in the district of Assiniboia—if they advise me and I refuse to do that, they can apply the recall and ask me to go back.

So my hon. friend (Mr. Halbert) did not know what he was talking about when he spoke of 60 or 75 per cent having to sign a petition for the recall, for according to the hon. member (Mr. Gould) if forty per cent, not of the electors on the list, but of the electors who voted at his election, ask for his resignation he is bound to give it.

The objectionable feature is that the hon. member (Mr. Gould) entered into an agreement with a certain group of men in his constituency. He thereby placed himself in the hands of some fifteen men in that constituency and he says they keep careful watch of all his movements and actions in this House. He gets advice from there occasionally as to how he should conduct himself down here. They keep tab on his movements and discuss his every action in Ottawa, and the retention of his seat in this House depends upon his strict compliance with the dictates of these fifteen men. This, at any rate, is according to the statement of the hon. gentleman made on April 13th. He entered into an agreement which is tantamount to a signed resignation; he says so himself. His conduct is vigilantly watched by these men, who keep track of everything he does and says in this House, and if he should assume an attitude down here that does not commend itself to them they can initiate certain steps to get him to resign his seat. He may object to these fifteen men commanding him to hand in his resignation, because he has a sort of court of appeal to which he can resort. He can say: "It is all right; I entered into an agreement with you fifteen gentlemen—the council of fifteen—and although you think I have not done right at Ottawa and are asking me to quit, still, according to the agreement, I may either quit or ask you to present a petition signed by forty per cent of the number of those who polled votes." That is the position in which the hon. gentleman stands. If they get forty per cent of the number of votes polled at the election, then he must resignedly step down. Why, Sir, that is not even an expression of the opinion of the constituency. If it were fifty-one per cent or anything over fifty per cent of the votes of the electors of the constituency you might perhaps say that you were having an expression of opinion from one of the constituencies of Canada; but it is not even the majority of the constituency that is going to have the power to tell this man to give up his seat and go back to Assiniboia. I say, Mr. Chairman, with all due deference to those who believe in the principle of recall, that this important matter should be determined on the floor of this House. If a majority of the members approve of it and feel that its practice will be beneficial, all well and good; we can adopt it and crystallize it in the form of legislation. But until that is done, I certainly say that no group of people should be allowed to hold that power in their hands, for it is not in the best interests of the country at large that this principle, until at least it is recognized by a majority of this House, should be put into practice. Take the situation to-day in the province of Ontario. In the legislature of that province there is a combination of parties with a very narrow majority. The Drury Government may be giving to the province of Ontario the best legislation which that province ever received from any government, but it might run counter to the opinions of three or four groups of men in so many constituencies in Ontario, and with the narrow majority which the Government have at their command to carry on the administration, it would be possible for these three or four groups of people to call upon their members to resign their seats and thereby force an election upon the country. That I say is something that is to be deplored. It is in my judgment a reprehensible and dangerous attitude for any class of men to take. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould), under existing conditions, is in actual fact not here as a member of Parliament but as a delegate of a particular group of men in a certain part of the West. I do not know whether it would be in keeping with the rules of the House for me to address the hon. member as "the hon. delegate from Assiniboia" rather than "the hon. member"—

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Order, order.

Mr. EDWARDS: If my hon. friend from Red Deer will suppress his temper—

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The universal practice of this House has been for hon. gentlemen, when referring to other members in debate, to designate them "the hon. member for So-and-So." My hon. friend is raising the question whether it is not proper to refer to a certain hon. member as "the hon. delegate." I submit, Sir, that that is a breach of the rules of this House.

Mr. EDWARDS: May I discuss the point of order for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member may do so.

Mr. EDWARDS: According to the superior wisdom of the hon. member for Red Deer, it seems that I am out of order in even asking whether I might properly refer to the hon. member for Assiniboia as the hon. delegate from Assiniboia. Had I referred to the hon. gentleman as "the hon. delegate," my hon. friend from Red Deer might properly have raised his point of order; but I did not do so. I simply asked whether, under the rules of the House, I would be justified in referring to the hon. member as the hon. delegate for Assiniboia, and I fail to see that the hon. member for Red Deer has any ground for raising a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I did not understand the hon. member for Frontenac to refer to the hon. member for Assiniboia as the "the hon. delegate." Had he done so, the point of order raised by the hon. member for Red Deer would have been well taken. As the hon. member for Frontenac himself has declared in discussing the point of order, that he did not refer to the hon. member for Assiniboia in the manner suggested, there is no reason for interference by the Chairman.

Mr. EDWARDS: Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. member for Red Deer will be perfectly satisfied that he was out of order himself in suggesting that I was. I think the point I was making must have been clear to every hon. member, and certainly to the member for Red Deer, who is not slow in catching the point of an argument. The whole point I was endeavouring to make was that in view of the statement made by the hon. member for Assiniboia himself that he had entered into an agreement with a certain group of men in his constituency and was at their behest as to whether he should resign his seat or not, he was in fact a delegate of that group, sent to do certain work in this House. Under the rules I suppose I could not be permitted to refer to the hon. gentleman as the hon. delegate from Assiniboia, and yet the point in my argument was that he was not a member of Parliament in that independent sense in which the rest of members are. My point is, in short, that he is here in the capacity of a delegate, I intended no offence to the hon. member for Assiniboia in putting forward that contention, and as a matter of fact no hon. member can construe my remarks into anything offensive. I think the hon. member has made a mistake in subscribing to such an agreement as he says he has signed. The principle is bad and I therefore support the amendment moved by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie).

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I cannot congratulate the Opposition or the Government supporters, and least of all can I congratulate my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie), on the strategy of this amendment. I do not know that in my short political experience, and in the longer time that I have been reading the annals of Parliament, I ever knew an amendment proposed or a motion brought forward that had in it so many certain boomerang strokes. The hon. member for Edmonton has stated what I think is absolutely correct that the Conservative party in Alberta has been for years a very advanced party. Indeed it has not been Conservative in anything but name. It has been singularly unfortunate in its attempts to gain power, but the fact remains that it has had very democratic planks in its platform. One of its planks according to the hon. member for Edmonton who is generally correct in what he states——

Mr. GRIESBACH: Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to designate properly? He is referring to the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Mackie).

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Well, the greater includes the less, the less bears the name of the greater. I am sorry that I should have ruffled the feelings of my hon. friend (Mr. Griesbach).

Mr. GRIESBACH: Not at all; it is only in the interest of accuracy.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I am endeavouring to be as accurate as I know how. The member for East Edmonton (Mr. Mackie) has stated that this democratic plank has been the referendum, the initiative and the recall. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Tweedie) deny that it has ever been a plank in the platform of the Conservative party of Alberta?

Mr. TWEEDIE: It is not to my knowledge that the initiative, referendum and recall has been advocated, as the hon. member states. Personally, I have always been opposed to the recall and I am opposed to it now. Even if I had not opposed it, surely the hon. member for Red Deer would give a member the liberty of changing his views on any question?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I will certainly extend to my hon. friend all the liberty of thought that is within reason, but the liberty claimed by my hon. friend to be the leader of a party which could ever be suspected of supporting a democratic plank such as that in a province, and then to come into the debates of this federal House and found himself upon a statesman who lived at the end of the eighteenth century, who, great though he was, if he had been here to-day would be looked upon by all parties as a most obfuscated Tory, is a very large liberty indeed, and his change of mind is as swift as forked lightning.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I have the floor and my hon. friend can say what he has to say at some future time.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Red Deer has the floor and he cannot be interrupted unless he gives way.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I was only illustrating one of the possible boomerangs that might result from this amendment of unfortunate strategy. I may mention something more before I am finished with what I have to say on that subject. What I do want to say is that while I would not go so far back as Edmund Burke, great as he was, for my political models, I have a great personal regard for old British constitutional methods, and my feeling would be that the recall upon which the people of this country might particularly rely would be the recall of a majority in a general election held under ordinary circumstances and in a general way. But there are exceptions, Mr. Chairman. I think it was because there was distinct ground for thinking that there were exceptions that I had pleasure in supporting the amendment of the hon. the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) at the beginning of this session. There are exceptions, and I am here to state that, great though the constitution may be and great though parliamentary institutions are, circumstances may get to such a pass in the history and in the life of a country that it is not only necessary to recall a member, but it is necessary to recall a Government. I am here to state further that if the Government, seeing all these changes, were to go to the country, in so far as any evidence that is forthcoming from the recent by-election is concerned, the recall would come with mighty and sudden swiftness. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) talks of my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) not being the member for Assiniboia. Has he looked at the records of the election at which my hon. friend was elected?

Mr. EDWARDS: I did not say anything of the kind. I must correct my hon. friend. Let him quote me correctly and I will not say anything.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: My hon. friend said he was not the member in the ordinary, accepted sense in which others are members.

Mr. EDWARDS: Just so.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Now I have stated it, but after all it is a distinction very largely without a difference.

Mr. EDWARDS: I have heard that before.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Having altered the statement and brought it into absolute agreement, will my hon. friend kindly tell me why he says the hon. member for Assiniboia is not an ordinary member of this House when my hon. friend from Assiniboia had a majority of 5,294 in a total poll of 10,000 in his constituency?

Mr. EDWARDS: Very good.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: He is in this House quite extraordinary in that respect and if there were a general election tomorrow there would be a vast number of ordinary members on the other side and a larger number who might find themselves not members at all. The extraordinariness would be transferred to the supporters of the Government on the other side if the recent by-election give us any indication as to what may happen. My hon. friend from Assiniboia would be prepared, I am quite sure, to contest his constituency again to-morrow if need be and I do not think the result would be very different. No Unionist would think it would be, because they fought very shy of that constituency. They did not go near it. They did not put candidates up in it.

While I say again that I am a constitutionalist, in the old sense, I want to give my hon. friend all the points I can possibly give but when any body of men anywhere in this country come to me and ask me to sign an agreement, while I do not go the length that my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) went, and make a draft upon my future by making a distinct pledge here as to what I would do,—I am going to concede that it will be a pretty hard hurdle for me to jump. I have done a lot of thinking on my own account ever since I have taken an interest in public affairs and I am free to confess that this will be a pretty hard hurdle for me to jump and I will not commit myself any more on that point at the present time. I want to congratulate the hon. member for West Calgary upon his very suddenly acquired fondness for sound and ancient democratic principles. To those of us who come forward as the champions of larger democratic principles it is most charming to hear such confessions from some hon. members even although they only think they are democrats. I think the most democratic sentiment on this subject is that which has been uttered by my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's. I have not the least doubt that in the few words he uttered he expressed the doctrines of true democracy on this question. While he mentioned what his own personal predilections would be in favour of, the real attempt to curb the power of the people is on the part of those who want to say that when you are elected—by any scratch chance or on any single issue—you can sit there until the term of Parliament is out whatever your changes of view may be and whatever changes may have taken place in the country. That is not democracy, Mr. Chairman; that is securing power, by democratic subterfuges, to substitute an autocracy for a democracy.

If there were no other grounds on which I felt inclined to vote for this amendment I should certainly vote against it on at least these two grounds. The committee noticed, no doubt, that my hon. friend from East Calgary drew a very marked distinction between a signed agreement and a recall; and I am bound to say that my hon. friend from West Calgary spoke in the other sense. Mark the language of the amendment. It speaks of persons who have signed any agreement, whether amounting to a resignation, a recall or otherwise—that is to say, the amendment makes no distinction in principle between an agreement and a recall. We have the mover speaking in the sense of his amendment also making no distinction between an agreement and a recall; and yet his seconder from the same constituency of Calgary—or rather the eastern portion of that constituency— draws a very marked distinction between an agreement and a recall. Now, Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit to the hon. members of this committee that it is almost an insult to our intelligence to ask us to vote for an amendment whose strategy is so bad, and which has been drawn up so hurriedly, that the mover and the seconder do not agree as to their opinions upon it, and do not agree as to what their amendment means. That would be sufficient to condemn the amendment in the eyes and in the minds of all sensible men. There is another thing: I am a little hazy as to what the amendment would bind one to if one voted for it. I think the weakness of the amendment—as was hinted at by the hon. member from Shelburne and Queen's—is this: It does not make the very necessary distinction between a man acting in his private character and acting as a public representative. A man may sign an agreement, in his private character, with a partner that if their business requires he should go back to it he would resign his seat in Parliament. Until that private agreement was put in force would he necessarily be any worse servant of the people in Parliament? A man might make a written declaration to his wife in a letter that he would resign. In that case he would be bound to obey if he had the experience of most ordinary mortals. Would he on that account—while his written agreement with his wife was in existence—be any worse servant of his country in Parliament? The great thing, Mr. Chairman, that we want to obtain is that when a man is in Parliament—whether he signs an argeement or merely gives pledges to a party—he should live up to that agrement, and be true to his principles and to his pledges. Then he need not fear a recall either before or at a general election, in most cases. That is the sound principle.

Now I think a very neat argument was made as against the amendment by my hon. friend from North Ontario when he said that if seventy-five per cent of the electors signed an agreement for his recall he would not wish to stay here. I dare say his experience is not universal in this Chamber. If I were to look carefully around and to scrutinize, I might find some hon. members who would sit here, according to the way they vote, if even eighty per cent of their electors signed such an agreement. But there was nothing wrong in what my hon. friend said. He did not define that as the recall; he said that if seventy-five per cent wished him to go out he would not wish to stay. I endorse his sentiment. If seventy-five per cent, or any fair percentage above the half, signed a petition for me to get out of here, I should lose my own self-respect as a representative of the people if I stayed.

I have no more to say. The amendment is hazy; its authors do not agree as to its meaning; it does not commend itself to my intelligence; it does not commend itself to my democrartic principles. I endorse very heartily the position taken by my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), and I shall have pleasure in voting with him against the amendment.

At Six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The committee resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS: Mr. Chairman, I can see no real objection to such a bargain as that attacked by the amendment being made between a member and his constituents. Neither the member nor his constituents get from that bargain what they suppose they do get. I believe further, that such a bargain is hardly consistent with the proper working of the British constitution. If a member comes here as a delegate subject to the control of a section of his people, and not as a representative, the principle of responsibility is violated. If he comes here representing an opinion which is imposed by a portion of the electorate, they and not he are responsible. And there is no means of calling them to account. On the other hand, if he comes here bound to exercise his best judgment in deciding upon a question and if he makes a mistake, or if for any unworthy motive he votes in the wrong way, he is responsible. He must make his explanation to his people, and when he again submits himself for their judgment they express their opinion with regard to the consequence of his action and upon his personal connection therewith.

A bargain of the sort that is proposed, in the first place, puts a member at a very serious disadvantage, as I see it. He is not a free agent in respect of many of the questions that come before this House. If questions of fiscal policy, questions of great public import, have been decided upon by those whose delegate he is, he is not free to speak his mind upon them; he speaks the mind of some one else. Everything he says is subject to this condition. It is not the free judgment of a free man; the opinion which he expresses is that which is delegated here to express, just as counsel advocates his client's case in a court of law; no greater authority stands behind the opinion that he comes here to express. On the other hand, the people themselves are adversely affected by the contract. He is not responsible to them. They have taken the responsibility upon their own shoulders, and in very many cases they are not in a position to give a fair judgment upon the question at issue. We know that situations constantly arise in connection with which there is not a great deal of time to get information and to form a judgment upon a given question, and the public as a matter of fact are not informed upon it. I can think of one case in my experience, if you will pardon my making a personal reference. The first question upon which I spoke in this House was the question of alien labour and its conscription. I took the position that the principle was wrong. Practically every newspaper in my riding criticised my attitude. Now, I was right and my riding was wrong; yet had I at that time been subject to recall I should have been defeated upon that question because there was so much false opinion abroad in the riding. That is an illustration of how this matter would work out.

While holding these opinions, I think that when a member proposes an amendment in this committee the burden is upon him of showing: first, that there is an evil; second, that the evil is of such magnitude that it should be dealt with by legislation; third, that the legislation proposed will correct the situation. I do not think that any one of these three conditions has arisen. I cannot see that there is an evil. Right here let me call attention to a remark made by the member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark). He spoke of this amendment covering, in its terms, agreements other than those between the member and his constituents. But you will notice, Mr. Chairman, that it is not the agreement at all that is attacked; it is the signing of the agreement. That is, if the agreement is made without being put in writing, that act is not covered by the amendment now submitted. The amendment clearly does not touch the essence of the question which it was intended to touch. We have had no case before us yet where this has led to any abuse, and it is time enough for this House, or for any legislature, to deal with a condition when it has really developed into an abuse. The suggestion to deal with it in advance seems to be prompted in this case, I am sorry to say, by a desire to snatch a party advantage, and that is a false principle upon which to pursue any matter of legislation. Therefore, I would say that the mover of this amendment would be well advised if he would withdraw it and leave what I feel to be the natural consequences and penalties of the situation to correct it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am one of those who do not believe in the system of recall. It is a wrong principle, it is opposed to the principles upon which British parliamentary institutions are based. The advocacy of this system was brought into the western provinces by gentlemen coming from the United States, and in that country conditions are very different from those in Canada. Under the British parliamentary system a member of Parliament represents not only the electors of his constituency, but the whole country; under the United States system he represents his district or division. The difference is fundamental. Under the British parliamentary law a member of Parliament could not very well be a free agent, as he is supposed to be, and represent the country, if he is subject to recall, because his parliamentary activities would naturally have to coincide with the views of the men who may recall him at any time. I do not believe at all in this system in Canada, and I could not subscribe to a platform of which this system would be one of the main planks. On the other hand, I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding). I am opposed to this system personally, but I do not see why I should be opposed to any people holding as to it a different opinion from mine. This system is in operation in many states of the Union and even in some of the British Dominions, and I should not like to be a party to depriving compulsorily any man or group from having this opinion and holding that the recall is a good policy. The recall is not a Liberal policy; it is not a progressive policy. Some people are wrong in calling "progressive" every new thing that they advocate; there are innovations that are not reforms and that are not conducive to progress. On the other hand, the amendment is not a Liberal amendment; it would be an arbitrary measure on the part of this Parliament to disqualify any man who would subject himself to recall by the electors of his division.

Mr. HOCKEN: As I see the matter, the recall is the most objectionable feature of class government, and it is something that could be worked out by a class aspiring to rule the country in the interest of that class to the detriment of the whole community.

Mr. GAUVREAU: The hon. member goes straight to the point.

Mr. HOCKEN: I do not see any difference between a man coming into this House, having signed an agreement with fifteen farmers to retire when they request him to do so, and a man coming into this House, having signed an agreement with fifteen manufacturers to retire when they ask him to do so. What would my hon. friends of the third party say if a man came into this House who had signed up an agreement with fifteen manufacturers, or fifteen bankers, or fifteen of any of those classes that they call the capitalistic classes? But there is absolutely no difference. Let us assume that the manufacturers put up the campaign funds for a man and he is elected to this House. They will then be doing exactly what the farmers are doing in the West, and because in the West they put up the money to elect a man, they tie a string to him and say: You can stay in the House of Commons only as long as you do as we say. If that be parliamentary government under British institutions, then I do not understand parliamentary government.

Mr. GOULD: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. HOCKEN: When I get through, you may. I had an idea that when a man came into this House, he should come in as a free man. His constituents know his views from the way in which he has presented them on the platform and probably by a long acquaintance with him and frequent expression of his opinions, and if they are willing to elect him, knowing all that, then they must give him the right to exercise his judgment upon all questions that come before this House. If we get away from that and we have a group of labour men tied up with an agreement with fifteen men, a group of agrarians tied up with an agreement of fifteen men, and other groups tied up with other similar agreements, we would have a Parliament that would not be able to govern this country very satisfactorily. I was sorry to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) give the weight of his authority in condoning this particular plan of action. He does not believe in it; he thinks it is wrong. I think it is most pernicious, and I was sorry to see an hon. member with so much authority in this House go as far as he did. Unless we can, in this House, deal with each question as it comes up in accordance with our judgment and our consciences, we are not likely to be capable representatives of the people of the country as a whole. While I represent a population of about 80,000 in our city, I do not regard myself simply as representing them; I endeavour to the best of my ability to represent the people of Canada. A man who comes into this House tied up with such an agreement as the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) has admitted he has made is not in a position to do his work in this House as he should. Perhaps it would be a good idea if the hon. member for Assiniboia would produce the agreement and let us see what it contains.

Mr. GOULD: I might tell the hon. gentleman that the agreement I had was to go and buy a steer.

Mr. HOCKEN: I think the hon. member must be talking Ruthenian; I do not understand him. I should like him to produce the agreement.

Mr. GOULD: I should like to tell the hon. gentleman that it is none of his business.

Mr. HOCKEN: If that is the attitude the hon. gentleman takes, I suppose we shall have to submit to it; but it is very peculiar for a man in the responsible position he occupies to say in this House that he has made an agreement with fifteen men in his constituency to retire when they ask him to do so.

Mr. GOULD: I never made that statement.

Mr. HOCKEN: You have signed an agreement with these fifteen men.

Mr. GOULD: To do what?

Mr. HOCKEN: To resign when they want you to.

Mr. GOULD: I did not.

Mr. HOCKEN: I submit that after all the hon. member has said, not only to-day but on former occasions, he owes it to himself to produce the agreement and let the House see what it is. If it is a secret agreement that he cannot make public, so much the worse. We have his own words that he did make such an agreement, because on the 13th of April he said in this House:

An agreement does exist between my committee, whose names I have read, and myself.

That surely is a frank admission, and I submit that the hon. member ought to produce the agreement and let the House determine just what kind of a string his constituents have on him.

Mr. L. THOMSON: I rise to a point of order. I submit that an amendment is before the Chair, not an investigation of the character and actions of the hon. member for Assiniboia.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the point of order is well taken, because as a matter of fact we are not discussing the position of the present member for Assiniboia, but an amendment which is now before the Committee. I understood the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) to refer to this matter merely by way of illustration.

Mr. HOCKEN: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend (Mr. L. Thomson) has saved his friend from Assiniboia from further criticisms with regard to that agreement. If any other member had said as much as I have said, and I had an agreement of that kind in my pocket, I would produce it. I would stand by it—or I would renege. I just want to register my protest against this un-British system of men coming here with the possibility of their being recalled by a handful of men in their own constituency or anywhere else. I was very much surprised that the hon. member (Mr. M. Clark) with his long parliamentary experience and thorough knowledge of British institutions should defend such a practice.

Mr. L. THOMSON: I can agree in two particulars, perhaps, with some hon. gentlemen who have spoken in this discussion. I am not so much in love with the recall myself. Still, I believe this amendment is not called for, that there is no good ground for it. As to another particular, I do not know that I can quite agree with any hon. members whom I have heard discussing it to-day—I have not heard all the discussion, but most of it. It seems to be assumed that if a person signs such an agreement as has been mentioned, he cannot come here as a free and independent agent, that he cannot act independently. My hon. friend (Mr. Hocken) nods his head. I am astonished, because I had a better opinion of him. I really thought he was more independent. I can sign all the agreements you like, and I would still feel that I could act here in an independent way. I do not require the recall, because the moment my constituents satisfy me that they want me to go back I will go without waiting for a recall. So what difference does it make if I have signed an agreement to go back providing the majority of my constituents are opposed to me, when I will go back if I am so satisfied without any such written agreement?

Mr. HOCKEN: Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he would sign an agreement to do a certain thing and that he would then not do it?

Mr. THOMSON: My hon. friend did not understand me at all. I say that without signing an agreement I would go back in such a case. If I were satisfied that a majority of my constituents were opposed to me I would resign right now, without any written agreement. So the position is exactly the same. To show wherein I differ from some of the views expressed here to-day I cannot do better perhaps than to quote what I said in the House last year as reported in Hansard of the First Session of 1919, page 3579:

> But so long as we are elected to represent the people of the country, so long as our constituents select us to voice their views, and we are called here for the purpose of considering and discussing public measures, it seems to me we are bound by our voices and votes to give effect, so far as we are able, to the desires of our constituents, at least in so far as we are able to understand these desires and can conscientiously support them; and when we reach the stage where we feel that our own views and convictions are so far from being in accord with those of the majority of our constituents that we cannot properly represent them, we should resign and allow our constituents to select representatives who can represent them.

From the discussion this afternoon it would appear that members generally are entirely opposed to those views, although I thought at the time that they received the general approval of the House. I feel sure that if hon. gentlemen who have spoken would give voice to their best thoughts they would agree with those sentiments; that we should, so far as we can conscientiously do so, represent the views of our constituents, and when we cannot conscientiously represent the majority, let us get out, because the people have a right to be represented here. I notice that a distinction is drawn between the ordinary common people and the cream of creation who come here. I do not draw any such a distinction. It is said that the voice of the people is the voice of God. I think that is over-drawing it, but I think it is just as much the voice of God as is the voice of any clique here or elsewhere. I certainly dislike what has been preached in this House from time to time, that we are a sort of select few who stand on a different level from the ordinary common people of the world. But we have that doctrine preached to us very often, perhaps not in so many words, but in effect.

I believe that every member should not only represent the views of his constituents, but also do the best that in him lies for the benefit of the country at large. My hon. friend (Mr. Hocken) looks doubtful, as if the two propositions were contradictory. They are not so in the least. Some people believe they are contradictory because they have not enough faith in their constituents. I have sufficient faith in the constituents of Qu'Appelle to believe that they want me to act here, not merely in their own interests, but in the best interests of the country as a whole. A great many hon. members apparently think their constituents are so narrow-minded that they do not want their member to do anything except attend to their own special interests. I do not take that view of the people I represent, and the moment I do, I will get out, and very quickly, because I would not want to represent such narrow-minded people as a great many hon. members this afternoon seemed to think they were representing.

With regard to the recall, I am not in love with the principle. I do not say that I would not sign an agreement if I were asked to, because my position would then be no different from what it is now. It is chips in porridge as to whether I sign such an agreement, just as it is with any other hon. member who is not so firmly attached to his seat that he is not prepared to leave it when he feels that he is not able to represent his constituents properly. My hon. friend (Mr. Hocken) asked how we would like hon. members before they come here to sign an agreement whereby fifteen manufacturers would have the power to recall them. I would not have the slightest objection, providing there were the safeguards that my hon. friends (Mr. Gould and Mr. Halbert) have mentioned, namely, that the majority—for that is what it practically amounts to—want the member recalled. As long as those fifteen men are honest, and can satisfy themselves that the majority of the constituents want the member recalled, there is no objection whatever to his being recalled. I think it would not be a bad idea if some of us were recalled.

Mr. HOCKEN: That's bad doctrine.

Mr. L. THOMSON: I believe in the people ruling. My hon. friend does not.

Mr. HOCKEN: I believe in all the people ruling.

Mr. L. THOMSON: So do I. While I agree with my hon. friend that we should keep in mind the good of the people as a whole, my view is that the people of any particular locality who select a candidate and send him to Parliament have a right to have their special views represented in the House. I believe that we should bear always in mind the good of the whole people, and I believe that our constituents entertain that view. Before I was nominated at the last election I tried to make my position perfectly clear. My experience in the House had shown me—and it was not a very pleasant experience, I must say—that unfortunate situations might arise at times from a party point of view, that under certain circumstances a man had the right to use his own judgment and that it was not safe for him to depend on the views of any one else. I therefore said to my constituents: If you are going to select me as your candidate I want you to understand that I will go on one condition only, and that is, that I shall be entitled to use my own judgment in any case where I think necessary. And I said further: If you are not going to send me to Parliament on that condition I do not want the nomination, and I will not go.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is not the case with your hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould).

Mr. LEVI THOMSON: Having made that perfectly clear, I was returned to Parliament by acclamation, which I think showed that the people generally in my constituency held the same view that I hold, namely, that while to a large extent a member represents the views of his constituents, he must be given a free hand and be allowed to exercise his own judgment when circumstances demand that he should do so.

Mr. EDWARDS: Suppose, when the hon. member had put to his constituents in that manly way the position he took, they had said: That is all very well; now, will you sign your name to this agreement before you go to Ottawa?—what would he have said?

Mr. LEVI THOMSON: I would have no hesitation in signing it. I might not approve of the proposal in its entirety, but I say that those people would have the right, if they saw fit, to ask that their views should be presented before Parliament. And without signing any agreement I represent their views now.

Mr. EDWARDS: You would not regard that request of theirs as a mark of confidence, would you?

Mr. LEVI THOMSON: The fact that they have returned me to Parliament is a mark of their confidence in me. With regard to the remarks of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) and others in connection with the question of initiative and referendum, I do not see why certain constituencies should not do certain things they want to do if they see fit. I have no objection to the principle of initiative and referendum. I took my stand on that question long ago, and am in favour of it; and if the majority of the people were in favour of recall I would accept it because I would be in a minority. My main objection to the recall is not the objection that has been urged here. I object on the ground that it would relieve the people themselves of a certain responsibility which they ought to shoulder. When the people of a constituency select a man to represent them for four or five years we have the right to expect that they shall exercise every care and precaution to ensure that the man whom they choose is a man in whom they can repose absolute confidence and on whom they can depend during the term he represents them in the House. I think we have the right to expect that the people should shoulder that responsibility, and that is the ground upon which I object to the recall. I do not object to the recall because I do not want to be recalled myself should a majority of the people whom I represent be dissatisfied with the manner in which I have discharged my responsibilities to them. If I am fool enough not to know when the people are dissatisfied with the way in which I represent them I hope they will show me my error. My hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie) is a lawyer and should understand the legal effect of his amendment, and I think he will agree with me that that effect is that the agreement which is signed must be of such a character as to limit the independence of the member. If he considers for a moment I think he will agree that it will depend on the man himself as to whether his nomination is regular and legal. If the man were of such a character that his independence would not be affected it would be perfectly safe to nominate him; but who is to decide whether a man is of that calibre or not? Is it the returning officer who is to decide that point? The returning officer decides a great many things, but is he to call witnesses to decide whether the man nominated can be trusted to exercise his own independence in spite of his liability to be recalled? He must decide whether the man is so crooked and unreliable as not to be trusted to act on his best judgment for fear of being recalled. I think my hon. friend will see that there is a valid objection to his amendment as framed. If the man is worthy of nomination this amendment cannot apply to him, because a man is not worthy of nomination unless he is independent enough to act on his own best judgment even though he expects to be recalled five minutes after.

Mr. BURNHAM: I must say that I am very much at sea after listening to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. L. Thomson). I do not know whether he proposes to vote on principle or in defiance of principle, or whether he agrees with the amendment or not. At one moment he says he agrees with it and at another he says he does not. It is a case of "now you see and now you don't." The fact that I cannot apprehend the exact view of my hon. friend is perhaps due to my unfortunate stupidity, but nevertheless that fact remains. If members of the House are sent by their constituents with instructions to vote for the recall, the House will pass a law enacting the recall. I do not think there is any doubt about that. So that saying that there shall be no recall or that the principle is wrong is surely beside the question. If the people elect members and send them to vote for recall, initiative and referendum, the whole three if you will, they certainly will vote for it. If they are not sent here for some specific purpose of that kind possibly it would be premature for them to do so. I can understand the agreement that some of these gentlemen are said to have signed. It is in anticipation of the legislation that is demanded by some, namely, that there should be the recall. As a consequence, the constituents, feeling that it ought to be the law, if it is not, require their member to sign some such agreement. I do not think that can be said in any way to restrict the independence of the member, because the member who is invited to represent the constituency is well aware of the restriction which exists, and moreover the member is invited to represent the constituency, not himself. Many people run away with the idea that they are here to exercise their own judgment. They are certainly not, except within the limits of absolute right or wrong—which neither they nor anybody else can comprehend;—they are here to represent their constituents within reasonable limits and excepting some of the glaring measures now before the public which deny reason and right.

Within reasonable limits therefore we may say that a man finds that some policy has arisen—such, for example, as the Canada Steamship merger or the steel merger, or the great agricultural merger that is now maturing, or something like that,—on which he has had no instuctions, but on which he may have very definite opinions. These opinions may be entirely contrary to the opinions of a great number of his constituents. Surely it would be absurd, within reasonable limits, that this man should not accept notification that he should return and confer with his constituents on the subject. In any event it will undoubtedly be the law some day that a member will take his membership on the understanding that all these restrictions apply;—if he does not like to take the job he can stay at home. But that this new law is coming is undoubted. I think anybody can see that everything that facilitates the movement of the machinery of legislation is likely to be enacted, and endorsed and received by the public.

Undoubtedly, sometimes, Mr. Chairman, it might not work well, but it is within the power of the constituents to see that it does. It is true that we have had measures adopted in this House which defy the constituents and that we have had members who have defied their constituents. The constituents are tired of that, and I fancy a good many of the members are, too. Democracy, instead of developing on democratic lines, has in the most extraordinary manner, as someone well expressed it the other day, settled itself in government. Privy councils were originated in the reign of the Stuarts for the purpose of curbing the power of the king. They were then supposed to represent the opinions of the people. But having disposed of the absolute authority of the king they have proceeded in these later days to dispose of the absolute authority of the people. These things must be said, and surely it is but common sense to say that the people who pay the taxes and bear the burden and heat of the day are entitled to be consulted.

While I myself personally would feel it a severe affliction, and a reflection upon my judgment, should the people take action by way of recall, I must nevertheless admit that it is right and reasonable, with proper safeguards, such as possibly twenty-five per cent or something of that description. I would be recreant to my duty if I did not speak in favour of that advanced principle. It may be possible that if we did confer with our constituents the member would convince them that they were wrong and he was right, in which case the blushing member, after he had converted his entire constituency, would return to Parliament in a great wave of popular approval and the offence which might be given to his supersensitiveness would be compensated for by the acclaim with which he would be received in recognition of the astounding victory that he had achieved over his constituents. But do not let us commit the error of saying that we stand in the way of trying any reasonable measure which would allow us to confer with our constituents in order that they might express their opinion and that we might express ours.

Mr. J. F. REID: Mr. Chairman, I have always supposed that the Conservative party of Alberta stole this plank of the recall from the platform of the Non-Partisan League which was strong in Alberta at that time. I am told also on good authority that this was a very astute expedient of the Conservative party in Alberta to put one over on the Non-Partisan League. The hon. member for West Calgary—

Mr. TWEEDIE: Will the hon. gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. J. F. REID—was the leader of that party at that time. I am not quite sure whether he was the recognized or official leader, but I do know that he was the man "with the punch" behind the leader, if he was not the actual leader himself. On account of that I understand that the Non-Partisan League in the province of Alberta has pretty well gone out of business, the assumption being that the Conservative party in Alberta became the Non-Partisan League whose strongest appeal was direct legislation.

Considerable has been said about signing an agreement. An attack has been made on the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) because he signed an agreement which seems to tickle the curiosity of hon. members opposite. Why? The Conservative party was the party which instituted this procedure. If the hon. member for Assiniboia has been guilty of the offence of signing an agreement, he is not the only one in this House who is guilty of it. There is an old Scotch saying that you had better clean your own doorstep before you go abroad to clean the doorsteps of others. What is the difference between the procedure instituted by the Conservative party and signing an agreement such as the one which the hon. member for Assiniboia is understood to have signed? I am of the opinion that not one hon. member on the other side of the House sits there a free man. I will endeavour to prove it. Is it not a fact that in the election of 1917, before hon. members received the endorsation of Union Government, they promised allegiance to the Union Government?

Mr. HALLADAY: Absolutely not.

Mr. J. F. REID: I will call for the next man who will get up and deny it.

Mr. CLEMENTS: I deny it, absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN: This proceeding is wholly irregular and not in accordance with the rules.

Mr. J. F. REID: I am sorry if I have trespassed the rules of the House, but I have respect for your ruling, Sir.

Mr. GAUVREAU. It was very interesting, though.

Mr. J. F. REID: I will say, this, however, that in the province from which I come, the candidates who got the endorsation of the Union Government had to pledge themselves.

Mr. LALOR: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. J. F. REID: I will tell the hon. members of this House what was the reason for the bringing into being of this recall —it was the old party system. I know whereof I speak. We elected members out in Western Canada whom we thought to be strong enough to stand up here in Parliament and represent the views of the people who elected them; and some of them have told me that when they got down here they were whipped into line and they had to support their party. That is the reason the recall was put into force.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. J. F. REID: Those hon. gentlemen were tied, they were not free.

[Mr. J. F. Reid.]

Mr. EDWARDS: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. When the Chairman rises it is the duty of all hon. gentlemen to take their seats. I ask the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) does he desire to put a question or state a point of order?

Mr. EDWARDS: If I may be permitted I wish to ask the hon. gentleman a question, but if he does not consent, well and good.

Mr. J. F. REID: My practice in this House—I think all will agree as to that—is not to interrupt any hon. gentleman when he is speaking in debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is the recall.

Mr. J. F. REID: I do not believe in favouritism.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS: I do not think you have any favourites.

Mr. J. F. REID: The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) accused the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) of being the representative of a class.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. J. F. REID: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Assiniboia is the representative of a class, and if he has signed any document putting himself in the hands of such a class my hon. friend from West Toronto should be the last one to throw stones at that hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. J. F. REID: Is it any worse to represent a class than to represent an Order?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. HOCKEN: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question or state a point of order?

Mr. HOCKEN: There is such an absolute misrepresentation in the hon. gentleman's statement that I want to put it right.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Take your medicine.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for West Toronto has a right to correct any misrepresentation when the hon. member who now has the floor has concluded his speech. It will not be in order to make the correction at the present time.

Mr. HOCKEN: I hope to have that opportunity.

Mr. J. F. REID: It seems to me hon. members opposite are living in fear and dread of something, but they do not know what it is.

Mr. HOCKEN: No. we are not.

Mr. J. F. REID: I doubt whether any hon. member in this House has seen the good or the ill effects of the recall, but it seems to me that some, at least, have come to the conclusion that there is going to be a recall. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if there was a little less throwing of mud at each other across the floor of the House it would be better.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. HOCKEN: You have thrown a little yourself.

Mr. J. F. REID: Those who started it are more responsible than those who indulged in it on provocation.

Mr. HOCKEN: You are starting it.

Mr. J. F. REID: While the hon. member for Frontenac was attacking the young member for Assiniboia, the youngest—no the second-youngest—member in this House, I wondered whether the chivalry of Parliament had vanished. The hon. member for Frontenac—

Mr. EDWARDS: Get the baby carriage.

Mr. J. F. REID:—is one of the oldest and one of the ablest members in this House. In fact, I understand his ability is such that he was considered eligible for a position in the Cabinet.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: No, the Senate.

Mr. J. F. REID: Then why should any hon. member with the splendid ability of the hon. member for Frontenac attack a young and inexperienced member of this House?

Mr. EDWARDS: Get the nurse and the baby carriage.

Mr. HOCKEN: I rise to resent the mean insinuation of the hon. member—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HOCKEN:—that I came into the House to represent anything else but one of the best constituencies in the Dominion of Canada. There is a population of 80,000 in my constituency composed of every class —foreigners and English speaking people of every creed;—and six thousand soldiers went from my constituency, which accounts for a majority of over 10,000. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that neither he nor any other man in this House is more truly a representative of the people as a whole—men and women, rank and file—than I am in the constituency of West Toronto.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In view of the fact that this amendment has a direct bearing on the important question of the independence of members of Parliament I should not like it to go to a vote without expressing my views as to the significance of its proposal. In my opinion every member of Parliament should feel, if he wishes to represent the people in the broadest possible way, that when he enters this Parliament he is a representative not of any class, not of any creed, not of any section—I might say not of any particular constituency except to see that the views of his constituency are always properly presented—but that above all he represents the people of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. That, I think, is the only view a man can take as to his responsible position as a member of the Parliament of Canada. Having stated my belief in that regard, may I consider the significance of the amendment and what it proposes?

All our political institutions are a matter more or less of evolution. There was a time when the Governor of this country thought that he could dictate to his ministers, and that the ministers should have no say whatever unless it suited the particular view which the Governor entertained. It was an attitude which those who wanted things done only in accordance with their own way of thinking, were apt to encourage. A familar example which will be in the minds of members of the House was the occasion when Lord Elgin was asked to assent to the Rebellion Losses Bill which Parliament had passed in 1848. The Tories of that day thought that our governmental institutions were being outraged. They told Lord Elgin that if he assented to that Bill he would have to take all kinds of consequences, including his recall to England. What was the position that Lord Elgin took? He said that his advisers had given him the Bill to sign, and that he proposed to accept the advice of his advisers. What was he told? I am not quoting the exact words, but they were to the effect that his advisers were fools. To this Lord Elgin is said to have replied: If the people care to send me fools as advisers, then I must abide by the advice of fools. In that expression we find the principle underlying responsible government. From that time to this it has been held that the Governor is bound by the advice of his ministers so long as they represent the people, and that it is not for the Governor to say who his advisers shall be.

It seems to me that in regard to this particular amendment we are in a position very similar, as respects what is fundamental in what we mean by representative government. It is for the people to say whom they wish to send to this Parliament as their representatives, not for this Parliament to tell the people whom they shall or shall not send. If the people desire to choose as a candidate and to send to this Parliament as their representative a man who is tied, manacled or bound, whether by physical infirmity, by agreement, or in any other way, so long as all the facts and circumstances surrounding his position are publicly known, it seems to me that, on the theory that the people have the right to govern and to send whom they will to Parliament, they have a right to say whether or not that candidate should go to Parliament.

Now, with regard to the particular matter of the recall, were I in an election and had I as an opponent—I understand that there is the possibility of such being the case—one who is bound by any recall, I should urge strongly upon the electors that that was one of the main reasons why they should not give him their support; that one who is bound by an agreement, fettered in any way, subjected to any restriction of his liberty in this Parliament to take whatever action seems best as questions come up, is not in the best position to serve as a representative of the people. That, I think, is a strong reason why such a candidate should not be returned.

But that is a very different thing from this Parliament here and now saying that they will not allow the people of the country the liberty to choose between a man who is bound by the recall and a man who is opposing him and who will not be bound in that way. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the question is one which affects the fundamental rights of the people in the matter of Government, and believing as I do that the people should have the fullest liberty, the fullest freedom, in the choice of whom they wish to send to this Parliament, I shall oppose this amendment because I believe that it would deprive the people of a certain liberty in that regard. At the same time, I repeat what I said at the outset: that any member or any man who presents himself to the electorate and at the same time tells the electorate that he is not free in all particulars to use his best judgment as circumstances dictate, is not, to my way of thinking, the best type of representative to have in Parliament.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To a very large extent, speaking for myself, I agree with the views just now expressed by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). However, I think it is just as well that this question has been ventilated in the House; I do not think that the time that has been taken up in this discussion will be found to be wholly unprofitable.

Perhaps, there is some misconception as to the real meaning of the amendment. If I read the amendment aright, it does not raise the question of the legislative recall as it has been discussed in this House today; it raises rather the question of agreements which would in any manner whatsoever limit the independence of members of Parliament. Having regard to the real meaning of the amendment, I think most hon. members will agree that any agreement which does limit the independence of a member of this House should not be permitted to exist. I have heard it stated by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark), a man of broad learning and great experience, that these agreements are nothing more than political pledges. If that were all, I would agree with him that there is very little wrong in them. But they are not political pledges. Political pledges are made in the open.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Not always.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Political pledges are pledges made for the purpose of convincing an elector; they must be made in the open; they must be made notorious, or they will have no effect. The vitiating principle of such agreements as are referred to in this amendment, if I understand it aright, is the secrecy of the proceedings—a secrecy which, in the case of one agreement that I know of, an hon. member is determined to maintain. I heard my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) this afternoon say that he had been followed around this House by members who sought to obtain from him the platform of the Farmers' party. Well, around the corridors of this House I have heard a good many members say that they would like to obtain, not the platform of the Farmers' party, but the secret agreement which the Farmers' party insist that their candidates shall sign. Here is one principle to which I seriously object; that ten or fifteen or twenty men in any riding should hold any document of a secret nature—I emphasize that point, because if it is free and open I have no objection to it— which will in any way limit the independence of a member of this House. It is a wrong principle; it is a vicious principle; in my humble judgment it is a principle which Parliament should seek to do away with. I do not know that the amendment now proposed is the correct remedy; probably it was launched for the purpose of having this question discussed. I believe that the whole of the people should be made acquainted with these facts. My position is this—and I think I can speak for the Government in this respect—that so long as your agreement is made public, so long as the people understand it before they take advantage of the opportunity of voting on it, I see no objection whatever to it. If a candidate for election as a member of this Parliament is bound by an agreement of a special nature to any particular class of people, and if these facts are known, all well and good; let him go to the polls on that understanding. But the case is entirely different when the agreement is of a secret or private nature, if that agreement limits the independence of the member of Parliament.

Mr. M. CLARK: Will the hon. member allow me to tell him exactly what the Farmers' platform contains upon this question?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think I can dispense with that.

Mr. M. CLARK: There is no secret agreement mentioned in it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I can dispense with that for the moment. It has been brought to my attention—rumours at all events are afloat to the effect—that in the Ontario legislature to-day men are sitting who have been elected and who have actually signed a form of resignation in the form prescribed by the Ontario Statute, which form is witnessed by two electors. These documents were signed, I am told, before the nominations took place. Certainly, they were not made public before the election. If such documents exist, if they are secret documents and if they are permitted by the law, then I say that the law should be amended. That is my personal view of the matter. I hardly think this amendment is in the proper form to remedy the matter; but the amendment has at least served one good purpose; it has brought the whole question to the attention of the House and of the country, and I think it is a subject which should receive the attention of the Government. I do not know what the ultimate object of my hon. friend (Mr. Tweedie) in moving this amendment is. I would suggest to him, now that we have had the benefit of this discussion, now that we have a better understanding of the whole subject, that a little time be permitted to us to study out the question and come to some conclusion on it after we have made a better and fuller study of it than we have made up to the present. My suggestion to the hon. member is that he should remain content with the discussion we have had and withdraw the present amendment.

Mr. TWEEDIE: I would be very glad to follow immediately the suggestion made by the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) who has charge of this Bill, and I can assure him that I shall follow his advice and the suggestions also of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), after I have made a few remarks which I feel I should make in justice to myself and those who have spoken on this side of the House in connection with this amendment. When I introduced this subject, I introduced it purely as a question of principle without having in mind the status of any individual member of this House. I endeavoured, so far as was within my power, to avoid any personalities in connection with the discussion. I did not wish, that any remarks that I made or any remarks which were made by any hon. member in support of the amendment which I moved should in any way be derogatory or belitting of or hold in ridicule any hon. member who felt it his duty to speak in connection with this amendment. To that, I will refer later.

I have no apologies to make for moving this amendment, because I feel that, in connection with the political life of this country, while the question has not yet assumed vast proportions, it is a growing question which must be dealt with, and if we are to conserve our constitutional rights, it behooves us, as members of this House of Commons, to take into consideration and have in this House a frank discussion of the arguments which might be adduced for or against this question of the recall, the signing of a resignation before an election, or the entering into any agreement with any committee, which agreement might limit or control the activities or duties of a member of this House.

I cannot agree with the arguments which have been submitted by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) when, standing up in his place in this House as leader of one of the great parties of this country, he says that there is growing up in connection with our constitution a principle to which he cannot adhere and which he cannot support, and then says that he thinks it should be allowed to go unchecked. If this be a principle which is contrary to the constitution of this country, then it is our duty either to amend the constitution or to enact legislation which will prevent the circumvention of our constitution and the introduction of a system of which we are not, as a people cognizant.

A particular feature of this discussion which must certainly be very gratifying to every member of the House, is the free expression of opinion which we have here. The sentiments of members of the Opposition, as expressed by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's and the leader of the Opposition, go to show that that party with which they are allied do not believe in either the doctrine of the recall, or the doctrine of signing an advance resignation, or the doctrine of having any man who is a candidate in any constituency of this country enter into any agreement which is going to limit or fetter the exercise of his rights as a representative of the people in Parliament. But while it might be expected that the members of the Opposition would take that stand as one of the old-line parties in this country, and while we might look for expressions of opinion of that nature from this side of the House, a party which is composed of Liberals and Conservatives.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, all Tories.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Well, I will say they are all Tories, and I am glad my hon. friends recognize the conversion to the true principles which should govern this country. While I rejoice in that fact, I must say that I was greatly amazed and also greatly delighted when I heard the utterances of the representatives of the National Progressive Party in this country, as they have assumed to call themselves, or the agricultural or rural representatives. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. L. Thomson), who is a representative farmer, who supports the policy laid down by the Council of Agriculture of this Dominion, a policy which says that they believe in the initiative, the referendum and the recall—

Mr. L. THOMSON: No.

Mr. TWEEDIE: —that hon. gentleman standing up in his place in the House says that he is not in favour of the recall. Let us consider the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark), the hon. member who speaks with such eloquence, force and decision, the hon. member whose utterances on any question in this House are, so far as he is concerned, the last word to be said. That hon. gentleman, who speaks about myself having a lightning change of attitude, sits in this House as a member of the Farmers' Party in this country, a party which has as its platform the initiative, the referendum and the recall.

Mr. L. THOMSON: No.

Mr. TWEEDIE: In all my experience in a legislature or in this Parliament, I have never yet witnessed such an exhibition of straddling as the hon. member for Red Deer has given to-day in connection with the stand which he takes on the recall, the advance resignation, or the entering into an agreement with any committee of men in regard to his decisions in the House of Commons. He refers to the amendment which I have moved, and in closing his remarks, he very patronizingly says that that amendment does not appeal to his intelligence. But I am not responsible, Mr. Chairman, for the intelligence of the hon. member for Red Deer. If I judge from the discussions which have taken place since the moving of my amendment this afternoon, I am sure the amendment appeals to the intelligence of almost every member in this House, and there are in it points which are worthy of consideration and discussion.

When he got up to reply he very patronisingly said that he could not congratulate the Opposition, he could not congratulate the supporters of the Government, and least of all could he congratulate the hon. member for West Calgary, the mover of the amendment in regard to their stand. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I do not hold my seat in this House for the congratulations of the hon. member for Red Deer or anybody else, and if I were looking for congratulations in this House the hon.

member for Red Deer can rest assured that he is not the first man to whom I would appeal for congratulations. He takes the amendment, analyses it, and discusses it. He asks, what does it mean? He says: A man may want to enter into an agreement with his partner, but if this amendment passes he cannot enter into any such agreement Mr. Chairman, a man who has any intelligence, to use the hon. member's words, if he simply reads the amendment will see that it has no reference whatever to business, but simply to an agreement which limits the independence of such person in the performance of his duties as a member in the event of his being elected to the House of Commons. It has to do only with the performance of the duties of a member of this House, and it is immaterial whether a man enters into any agreement with his partner in regard to their business relations, as to his willingness to resign or not to resign or business reasons relating only to himself and not to his constituents. It is immaterial whether he enters into an agreement with his wife before he leaves home as to whether he will resign for family reasons. The question is, is he going to be allowed to enter into any agreement with anybody which is going to interfere with his independance as a member of the House of Commons or of the body in which he sits? He also suggests that so far as the mover and the seconder of this amendment are concerned, they evidently did not consider fully the meaning of the amendment. Being an old parliamentarian, such as he is, a man with much greater experience in political life than I have had, he must realize that when you are sitting in Committee of the Whole House there is simply the mover of the amendment. I have no seconder and there never was a seconder to this amendment. The hon. member is therefore either ignorant or else he wishes to misinform the House and give a false impression to the people generally. There was no agreement between myself and any member who has spoken on the amendment. Many of those who have made speeches on the amendment never saw it until it was presented. I am perfectly willing to stand on the construction of the amendment as it stands, and notwithstanding anything that the hon. member or Red Deer may say in this connection, there was no agreement, no arrangement, no discussion, no argument between those up here who supported that amendment and myself before I introduced it into this House. If he were unable to found his argument when he is considering a question so serious and so vital to the people of this country on matters which are mythical I am afraid that a great deal of the eloquence of his speech and a great deal of the eloquence of many of the speeches which he has made in this House would fade into insignificance. Were he tied down to hard facts in debate, much of the glamour would disappear.

I do not propose to take the time of the House at very great length, but I must refer to a matter in connection with which the hon. member for Red Deer saw fit to upbraid me, the fact that I read a passage from a speech delivered by the Rt. Hon. Edmund Burke to the electors of the city of Bristol when he withdrew from that contest. He uses the suggestion that I am founding my argument and backing my principles on the utterances of public men who lived in the latter part of the eighteenth century. It is very true that the Rt. Hon. Edmund Burke entered the British House of Commons in the year 1765 and for many years after remained one of the most valued members of that House and one of the greatest statesmen of the British Empire. If I have a choice between the declarations of the Rt. Hon. Edmund Burke and those of the hon. member for Red Deer, if this House will pardon me, I must state that I am going to accept the views of such an eminent statesman as the Rt. Hon. Mr. Burke.

Mr. M. CLARK: Will my hon. friend—

Mr. TWEEDIE: Sit down.

Mr. M. CLARK: I want to explain that I rose for the purpose of respectfully requesting—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Red Deer was quite justified in rising for the purpose of asking permission to put a question. I understand the hon. member of Calgary will not give way, and therefore, of course, the question cannot be put.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Mr. Chairman, I am a great believer in fair play. There is an old maxim which says, Do unto others as they do unto you. My hon. friend from Red Deer did it first; I am going to do it now. I said this afternoon when he was speaking "I rise to ask a question," but with that rapidity and speed, that vehemence and force, which he can put into effect, he kept right on. He said, "I have the floor and my hon. friend can say what he wishes to say at a future time." That being the treatment that was accorded me this afternoon by my hon. friend from Red Deer, I have great pleasure in stating to him now that he can say what he has to say at a future time. As I was about to remark, the gravamen of the charge which the hon. member for Red Deer held against me this afternoon, although I saw him clapping his desk when I read from the Rt. Hon. Edmund Burke's speech, was that I had the presumption to stand up in this House when we were discussing a very vital question and read a passage from an illustrious statesman who entered Parliament in the latter half of the eighteenth century. He says that I founded my doctrine on a statesman who lived in the eighteenth century. That is perfectly true, and if he will go back to Lord Macaulay he will find statements in Lord Macaulay which substantiate those in the speech of the Rt. Hon. Mr. Burke. Is it an offence that a member of this House should endeavour to inquire into what has transpired in the past history of Great Britain? Has there ever been a gentleman occupying a seat on the floor of this House who has held higher and oftener waved aloft the traditions of the British Empire than the hon. member for Red Deer? It is perfectly true that the Rt. Hon. Edmund Burke may have lived and taken his seat in Parliament over a hundred years ago, but, Mr. Chairman, if there is any man in this House of Commons who browses amongst musty pages of ancient history for dectum arguments to support his political foibles it is certainly the hon. member for Red Deer. I have sat in this House and I have watched him roll the Holy Scriptures under his tongue as a sweet morsel, and then thrust from the end of his tongue with venom some single passage therefrom, which he thought would forever silence his opponent. Is there any antiquity in the Scriptures? Is there any antiquity in the writings of the prophets or the disciples? Its antiquity is simply a matter of thousands of years. The gentleman who says that the utterances of the past should not come in, is the man who nurtures himself upon antiquity by day and night. I have listened to the hon. member for Red Deer delivering speeches in this House on many occasions on free trade, and whenever he makes those speeches he gives evidence that he sleeps by day and night with John Bright and Richard Cobden, whom he never fails to quote on those occasions, who were prominent in the public life of their native country in the early part of the nineteenth century, almost as ancient as Burke.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Tweedie) that we are not discussing the conduct of the hon. member for Red Deer in this House or elsewhere, but an amendment to clause 39 of the Bill now before the committee.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Mr. Chairman, I was replying to the hon. member for Red Deer in regard to the questions of personal recall, advance legislation, and initiative, and I thought that it was necessary to look back somewhat into history to ascertain what eminent men, whom the hon. member never tires of quoting, have said. And, if I referred to Burke, I did so not by way of criticism of the hon. gentleman. Indeed, Sir, I think my hon. friend is entitled to abundant commendation from this House for his thorough and indefatigable study of ancient history and economics. I am referring to these things merely to show how valuable an achievement the hon. member for Red Deer considers it to be to have read ancient history and to be able to cite Cobden and Bright and other eminent men who lived many decades ago, to say nought of the inspiration which one may get from Adam Smith if one desires to make a free trade country of Canada. I am about to close Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. TWEEDIE:—but I want to point out that it would not be wise for the members of this House to be discouraged because the hon. member for Red Deer has endeavoured to discourage the reading of history and the speeches and the lives of brilliant statesmen of the past. We should read these works and look back into past history for precedents and endeavour to apply them so far as they may conform to existing circumstances; and if such historic precedents are found to be incompatible with present conditions then let us discard them but evolve from such knowledge as we may acquire principles which may be applied to the present. Now, Sir, I have a word or two to say regarding the hon. gentleman's sincerity.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I must ask the hon. member to abide by the ruling just given. This is not the time to discuss the sincerity of the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Mr. Chairman, I graciously bow to your ruling. I shall not question the sincerity of the hon. member, but with your permission, Sir, and by leave of the House, I desire to draw a few comparisons between the hon. member for Red Deer and myself. I think I referred to some remarks of the hon. gentleman in which he says: "His"—that is, Tweedie's—"change of manner is as swift as chain lightning." Let us consider this statement for a moment.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: What I said was "forked lightning." I think you will agree with me, Sir, that I should not have words put into my mouth which I did not use. However, if the hon. member prefers the words "chain lightning" then he can employ them in the comparison.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Oh, it is forked lightning, is it? Well, I am very much obliged to the hon. member for Red Deer for the suggestion, because forked lightning will suit the purpose of my comparison much better. If we ever had a good illustration of forked lightning we certainly had it this afternoon when the hon. member for Red Deer spoke on this question of recall. That hon. member sits there as a supporter of the Farmer's party or the National Progressive party, or whatever else you like to call it, a party who have in their platform the initiative, referendum and recall. The hon. member stands up and tells this House—not unequivocally, but I think we can read between the lines—that he does not like the recall. He does not like it. There he is, standing up in this House as a member of a party which has the principle of recall as one of the planks of its platform, and at the same time telling us that he did not believe in it. On which horn of this dilemma does the hon. member prefer to be impaled? Again the hon. gentleman evidently had the idea of speed pre-eminently in mind when he used the expression "forked lightning" in his reference to myself. I do not believe that he used the figure of speech for the purpose of painting any picture of diversified interests; I think he meant to convey an impression of speed to the utmost limit. Well, let us analyse his figure of speech for a moment. First of all, let me say that so far as my position on the question of recall is concerned, since I have been in public life, I have always opposed it, I oppose it now, and I have yet to see good reasons advanced why I should ever endorse it or advocate it in this country. As regards the signing of any resignation in advance, my position is absolutely the same; and I take the same stand in regard to entering into any agreement with any committee whereby they shall have the control of my political conduct. I wish to point out to the hon. member for Red Deer that I stand square to the issue. I desire to make perfectly clear to every hon. member in this House precisely what my position is, and that is something which my hon. friend from Red Deer failed to do in his speech this afternoon. Now, let us look at his "forked lightning" and compare the speed of the hon. member for Red Deer with the speed of which I am capable. At one time in the career of the hon. gentleman he was one of those old staunch Liberals who sat in this House behind the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier and held aloft the flag of free trade and waved it in every corner of this wide Dominion. Now, I—

The CHAIRMAN: I feel sure that the hon. member for Calgary can reply to the speech delivered this afternoon by the hon. member for Red Deer without covering ground that is not relevant to the question before the committee.

Mr. TWEEDIE: My point is this, Mr. Chairman: The hon. member wishes to convey the impression to this committee that I changed with lightning rapidity, and I thought it might be somewhat instructive to hon. members if I might metaphorically place myself side by side with the hon. gentleman and let us compare our political race so that our representative speed capacities might be ascertained.

The CHAIRMAN: The statement having been made this afternoon by the hon. member for Red Deer, the hon. member for Calgary should be allowed to reply by a similar statement. He would not be in order in going back over the entire history of an hon. member's career in order either to justify or to refute any statement that bears no relevance to the question before the committee.

Mr. TWEEDIE: In deference to you, Mr. Chairman. I shall endeavour not to carry the analogy too far but just to the extent that it may appeal to the "intelligence" of the hon. member for Red Deer. I was about to point out that he had a prominent career as one of the leading Liberals of this country and that while he enjoyed that career I believe I was as devoutly attached to the tenets of the great Liberal Conservative party.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I do so not in the least because I object to anything my hon.

friend has said but because the Chair, for whom I have always displayed the utmost respect, has been openly defied.

Mr. TWEEDIE: I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that if I in the least degree have trespassed the rules of the House I am very sorry for it. I only asked for permission to answer the speech of the hon. member for Red Deer this afternoon and you can rest assured that I shall always obey your ruling, which I have considered to be extremely fair in the past, with the utmost willingness. But the hon. member for Red Deer seems to like lingering around the time when he was a great supporter of the Liberal party and just immediately I start to get away from that time he rises to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I feel sure that the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie) and the other hon. members of the committee will realise that if every hon. member in discussing this question went into the past history of every other hon. member to this same extent, it would be impossible to make any progress. I must once more respectfully ask him to bring his remarks to bear upon the question before the committee.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Without going into the past history of the hon. gentleman, I would just say that once we were opposed, then we were united, and now the hon. member is with the National Progressive party. I am with the old party in which we were united. He has beaten me by one lap, which shows greater speed than I had ever dreamed of in my life. There are other instances which I would like to enter into but I feel the hour is getting late and perhaps the House is weary. But I want to point out to the hon. member for Red Deer that in connection with any business before the House I am perfectly willing to transact that business in the usual way, but I do not propose to take lectures from the hon. member in this House, or other persons. If we get a general understanding in this House that one man is not sent here to lecture any or all other members, we will make more rapid progress with the business of the country that is placed before us.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that the House and the country as a whole should be delighted that this discussion has taken place here to-day. It has shown that the Liberal party opposes the doctrine of the recall, advance resignations and agreements with committees. The supporters of the Government are opposed to the recall, advance resignations and agreements with committees. Two men who spoke for the National Progressive party, of which there are some eight members in this House, repudiate the doctrine, and two more stand up and say that if they get 60 or 75 per cent of the electors in their constituency to sign a petition for them to go home, they will go. There has not been one man stand up in this House to-day and say that he believes in the advance resignation, that he believes in signing any agreement limiting the performance of his duty as a member or that he believes in placing the control of his seat in this House in the hands of a few men.

Following the suggestion of the Acting Solicitor General, who has charge of the Bill and the suggestions of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's and the leader of the Opposition, I shall be glad to withdraw this amendment and leave it to the further consideration of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the hon. member have leave to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: I wish to register my protest against an hon. member taking five or six hours of our time for the entertainment and amusement of the House without having in any way mentioned the measure that is at present before us. I object to allowing this committee to be experimented with in that way. I believe the object of the hon. member (Mr. Tweedie) was to get the feeling of the House, and I am convinced that if he had expected that he would achieve any measure of success he would have pressed the question to a vote. He has either gone too far or he has not gone far enough. If it is worth while to have an expression of opinion it is worth while to have a division. Then we will have a real expression. I might also point out another objection that I have to the proceeding that has taken place. Upon two or three nights during the present week, the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie), who is in charge of this Bill, has complained that its progress has been hindered by Opposition obstruction.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have never made such a complaint.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: Well then I will withdraw that remark and I will say that he has complained about the early rising of the committee. To-night when an hon.

gentleman who was speaking upon a matter that had no bearing upon this Bill at all, and was simply amusing the House, announced his intention of concluding his remarks, the minister called out, "go on; go on." Therefore, there is no sincerity at all in the statement of the minister that the Opposition are in any way lacking in a desire to proceed with public business, or that they are responsible for keeping the Bill before the House.

As the hon. member for West Calgary did not mention the amendment in my hearing to-night I do not understand why there is so much alarm about this recall. An organization outside of this House, one that has nothing to do with it, in its little union, or lodge, or whatever they call it, passes a resolution setting forth the principles upon which its members are willing to agree. I cannot see that in that there is anything that it is the business of this House to object to. If it were not for an agreement made by hon. gentlemen in 1917 there would not be any Union party to-day. Men came down here tied and bound by the conditions of an agreement which they had subscribed to, stipulating what they should do when they came here. I am not going to discuss that; I know it would not be in order but I would like to ask the Liberal Unionist members on the other side what their agreement was with the Union party?

Mr. EDWARDS: Were the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) parties to that agreement?

Mr. W. H. WHITE: I would think so. I did not enter into the agreement therefore I do not know what it is, but I read the platform of the Liberal Unionist party and it was stated that they had agreed to support the Government, and they appealed to the electors for that reason. Therefore they come down under exactly the same conditions with a pledge; the Farmer members come pledged to support the Farmers' platform. Many of them got a recall last winter, but they did not respond. In two or three constituencies, after they had failed to fulfil their agreement and were recalled, they did not stand for it.

In order that I may not be misunderstood I wish to say that I am not a member of that organization, but on the contrary have always been opposed by it. As far back as 1911 I was opposed by the Secretary of the United Farmers' Union, although the issue at that time was reciprocity. Their candidate ran as a third man and opposed me although he stood on the same platform that I did. That gentleman signed a recall. I can remember the date on which he signed it, and the fact that half a dozen members of the organization went down and saw that the document was signed and sealed in the Merchants Bank in Vegreville—and I may say in passing that it is still there. So that the recall is not a dangerous thing, sometimes indeed it is very harmless. It is not a thing that will do harm to any one. It did not harm me in 1917 when I had a difficult election coming on and did not take the popular side on the questions at issue. Another man—a member of the same organization, in the person of Ex-Governor Leedy of Kansas—called himself a non-partisan and stood on the same platform that I occupied as a supporter of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I think those people were the first to initiate the policy. Ex-Governor Leedy had his recall all right but it did not affect my election. I think hon. gentlemen opposite—particularly the member for West Calgary and some of the other Western members—are being stampeded with the fear that possibly this organization is going to meet with so much success that it will be difficult for them to secure any seats in that part of the province. If that is the view they entertain I agree with them. I believe the movement will be successful. At the same time, I do not see why the farmers, or any class of people, should not have the right to make conditions with their candidates the same as the Union Government did at the last general election. The Union Government at that time made an agreement with their candidates that they would support certain measures if elected. Perhaps, after all, those who are to blame for this movement are hon. gentlemen opposite, many of whom belonged to Farmers' organizations at the time of the last general election. At that time they told their electors that they only meant to support the Government on war measures, but that on the fiscal policy of the country and other questions they would adhere to the Farmers' platform. Many of them failed to carry out their promise, and perhaps it was for that reason that the recall plank was inserted in the Farmers' platform, so that in future when members do not live up to their pledges the people will have a right to recall them. My own opinion is that the opposition to it is merely an exemplification of the old Tory distrust of the people. They are afraid of the people. They dread this organization, which is growing all the time, and they are afraid to trust the people when the time comes for an election. They see something wrong about the Farmers' movement because these people band themselves together and pass by-laws that in my opinion have nothing to do with this Parliament. On several occasions this session I have noticed that when labour legislation, and other Bills of the same character were introduced, and the National Progressive members did not take part in the debate, attention was called to the fact and complaint was made that they did not support the measures in question, or else that they did object to some Bill. Criticism was levelled against them on both grounds. I think to-day's amendment is another example of the same policy. It has been introduced more with the idea of trying to draw out and get even with the members of the Progressive party at the other end of the Chamber than from any other motive. As the leader of the Opposition has said: Let the people rule. If a majority of electors in any constituency are in favour of the recall they have a right to enter into any arrangement they may care to make with their representative. For my part, I have always been opposed to calling upon members to sign recalls. I do not suppose I shall ever be asked to sign such a thing although there is very little difference between our party and theirs. The difference between us is of the nature that was described a few days ago by an hon. member when he remarked that on one occasion Lord Salisbury said that, "Gladstone was an old man in a hurry". I think the only difference between our friends at the other end of the Chamber and ourselves is that perhaps they are a little in a hurry. They are probably a little more advanced than we are, but they are standing on the same platform. We are pretty nearly agreed with them with the exception of what I may term these few "progressive" planks that have been adopted by them. The amendment of course has been withdrawn—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. WHITE: I should rather say the request has been made that it should be withdrawn. I do not think it is right that after so much valuable time has been taken up in discussing it the hon. member who moved the amendment should be allowed to withdraw it. The amendment should go to a vote in order that every member of the committee might record where he stands.

Mr. M. CLARK: I do not rise for the purpose of continuing the debate on this question, but simply for the purpose of removing a misapprehension which I would gladly have done earlier if the minister (Mr. Guthrie) had displayed his usual courtesy and granted me an opportunity. My purpose in rising is to read three lines of the platform of the Dominion Council of Agriculture on the question before the House. The minister seemed to base his support of the amendment on some idea he had that there was a secret agreement mentioned in the platform of the Council of Agriculture. My only purpose in rising is to say that no secret agreement whatsoever is mentioned in that platform; the word "agreement" is not mentioned at all. The plank in the platform reads thus:

> The establishment of measures of direct legislation through the initiative, referendum and recall.

Amendment (Mr. Tweedie) negatived. Clause agreed to.

On clause 101—Act to apply in elections under Canada Temperance Act:

Mr. GUTHRIE: This clause was permitted to stand because it had reference to the Canada Temperance Act. Under this clause it is proposed to take any vote that may become necessary under any of the proposed referendums which are being held in the various provinces. I beg to move that the clause be amended by adding thereto the following words:

> And upon the issue of a proclamation for the taking of a vote under the Canada Temperance Act, voters' lists shall be prepared in accordance with the provisions of this Act for any county or province as set out in such proclamation in the same manner as voters' lists are required to be prepared in the case of the issue of writs for a general election.

As the committee will understand, there will be no writ for election in the case of the Canada Temperance Act; proceedings will be instituted by way of proclamation. The object of this amendment is to provide that on the issue of the proclamation the lists will be prepared under this Act just as they would be prepared on the issue of a writ for a general election.

Mr. STEELE: Does that mean that the lists will be prepared in each constituency as they are in a general election?

Mr. GUTHRIE: In this case it will be in the province instead of in the whole Dominion, but the lists will be prepared in each constituency.

Mr. L. THOMSON: In preparing the lists for an ordinary election, the persons whose names may be placed on that list must have resided in Canada for twelve months prior to the issue of the writ. Will the provision in this case be that the residence in Canada shall be twelve months prior to the issue of the proclamation?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. L. THOMSON: That is made clear in the Act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. POWER: I am opposed to the adoption of this clause, because it provides that the Act shall apply to elections held under the Canada Temperance Act. My view is that public moneys should not be expended in order to hold referendums in the various provinces on such questions as prohibition or prohibitory legislation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think I shall have to rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The provisions of the Canada Temperance Act are not under discussion.

Mr. POWER: My point is this: It is quite possible that the Canada Temperance Act may be repealed; it might even be repealed this year. I would like the minister either to suspend this clause or not to amend it so as to make it easier for provinces to come to the Dominion Government and ask for the use of federal funds every time they wish to hold a referendum or to change their minds with reference to prohibition or prohibitory legislation. As I understand it, the minister's point of order is that we have so amended the Canada Temperance Act as to provide that referendums may be held under it, and that these shall be governed by the Dominion Elections Act. To that I reply that it is not within our province to make it easier, by the provisions of this Act, for the local legislatures or local bodies to hold any such referendums. If the minister's point of order is well taken, then I may not proceed; if it is not, I shall proceed to discuss the matter.

The CHAIRMAN: Any discussion of the results of the application of any province to the Federal Government for a referendum under the Canada Temperance Act would not be in order upon this clause.

Mr. CANNON: With further reference to what the hon. member (Mr. Power) has said, I do not wish to get in conflict with your decision, Mr. Chairman; I simply wish to direct the attention of the minister to the following facts. The Temperance Act is either complete or it is not. If it is complete, it must contain provisions for the taking of referendums; if it is not complete, it ought to be completed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That, of course, may be done by another Act.

Mr. CANNON: Exactly. Why put in the electoral law of Canada a clause which has exclusive relation to the Canada Temperance Act? This clause ought to be inserted in the Canada Temperance Act, not in the Franchise Act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think the hon. member (Mr. Cannon) is absolutely right in his contention. This clause should be put in the Canada Temperance Act, not here.

Mr. DOHERTY: The Canada Temperance Act itself provides that the persons who shall be entitled to vote under it are such persons as would be entitled to vote at a Dominion election held on the day of the plebiscite under the Temperance Act. Now, this Act simply says that the provisions which apply to everybody who is entitled to vote at a Dominion election shall apply in the case of a vote taken under the Canada Temperance Act. It is simply meeting the express provision of the Canada Temperance Act.

Mr. CANNON: The remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) complete my remarks. I said that the Canada Temperance Act was either complete or incomplete. The minister tell us that it is complete. Therefore, this clause is useless.

Mr. DOHERTY: I did not say that; I said that this clause completes it.

Mr. CANNON: If the Canada Temperance Act says that the referendum is to be taken according to the provisions of the Dominion Elections Act, why put this clause into the Dominion Elections Act having reference to the Canada Temperance Act? The clause in the Canada Temperance Act, of which the Minister of Justice has just spoken, renders this clause without any purpose or use.

Mr. DOHERTY: When that enactment was made in the Canada Temperance Act, there was then an Act of the Dominion of Canada, determining who it was that voted at the elections for this Parliament held under that Act; and the Canada Temperance Act, taking the existing condition of things, enacted that persons entitled under then existing legislation to vote at a Dominion election would be entitled to vote under the Canada Temperance Act. We are changing the whole law governing who is to vote at Dominion elections, and the purpose of the provision under discussion is simply to make it clear that, as this measure changes the class of persons entitled to vote and the provisions with regard to voting at Dominion elections, it shall in the future apply for the purpose of implementing and carrying out that express provision of the Canada Temperance Act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then, I submit that the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) had a right to raise the question he raised. When the Canada Temperance Act was enacted and provisions were made for a referendum to be taken, the provincial lists were to be used for the purpose of taking that referendum. With this new clause in this Bill, new lists will have to be prepared for the special purpose of taking that referendum, and the cost of that will be paid by this Government. That means that if the Provincial Government of Ontario take a referendum, lists will be prepared under this Bill that will cost, perhaps, $500,000, and that amount will be paid by this country. As I stated before, when the Canada Temperance Act was passed, it was not contemplated that we should have to prepare special lists as will have to be prepared under clause 101. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Power) was right in complaining that such a tremendous cost should be forced upon this country. If the province of Ontario or any other province wants to take a referendum this year, or next year, or the following year, let that province pay for it. I am certainly in order, and my hon. friend (Mr. Power) was in order, in opposing this clause on that ground.

Mr. POWER: I may not have expressed myself as well as I should; but I still maintain that I am in order inasmuch as this present Bill is possibly, even probably, a more expensive measure than the Act which was formerly in force, in that in a large number of provinces we now have a system of enumerators and we have added certain officials who did not act under the old Act. I am in order in opposing the application of this measure to the Canada Temperance Act on the ground that this is a new and more expensive measure, and, therefore, the people of Canada will have, on different occasions, to expend more money to suit the whim—or the wishes if some of my hon. friends prefer that term—of some of the various provinces of Canada. For that reason, I am opposed to the adoption of clause 101. I am opposed to it also, because, as has been so well stated by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon), if the Canada Temperance Act is complete, it should have within itself a provision such as this, to the effect that the Act for the election of members of the House of Commons of Canada shall also apply to the Canada Temperance Act. Such a provision as we have in clause 101 is utterly foreign to the Bill now under consideration, and, to my mind, should never have been inserted in this Bill, and I think the minister ought to see that it should be withdrawn from the Bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The point which has been raised is a very important one. Much will depend on how the lists are to be prepared. If the Bill is to remain as at present drafted, it means that a large number of enumerators will have to be appointed every time the machinery of this measure is set in motion. I do not think we are justified, if we take exception to the vast expenditure which that machinery is going to involve, in voting at this time to duplicate that expenditure every time the Canada Temperance Act comes into operation. Before we can intelligently discuss this clause and determine whether it is wise to pass it or not, we should know in what final shape the machinery of this law is to be, and then we can go on and discuss the next step. But if this bill is to remain as at present drafted, by passing this clause we shall vastly increase the drain on the federal treasury in connection with another Act already on the statute books. I ask the minister to consider that phase of the question, and I think he should let this clause stand until we have seen whether the Government cannot possibly meet some of the suggestions which have come from this side of the House in connection with the preparation of the lists, and which we believe will be just as effective as regards the machinery necessary for the Act and vastly less expensive.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think there is anything to be gained by so doing; but if my hon. friend wants to let this clause stand until clause 32 has been discussed and passed, I am quite agreeable.

Section 101 stands.

On section 29—qualification of electors:

Mr. GUTHRIE: Some days ago I gave notice that, when this clause was considered, I would move an amendment. I, therefore, move to amend clause 29 by adding, as paragraph (d) of subclause 1, the following words:

(d) Provided, however, that any Indian ordinarily resident on an Indian Reserve who has served in the naval, military or air forces of Canada in the late war shall be qualified to vote, unless such Indian is otherwise disqualified under paragraphs (a) (b) and (c) of this section.

Mr. CANNON: How could he be "otherwise disqualified"?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He might not have the residential and age qualifications, for instance.

Mr. BUREAU: Is the idea that the man who has served in the army or navy and is not twenty-one has not the right to vote? He is disfranchised?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under the amendment I have proposed the Indian who has served with the forces would only be entitled to vote when he complies with all the other requisites in regard to British citizenship, residence and age.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why limit it to Indians who are ordinarily resident on a reserve?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Indians who are living on a reserve and who are receiving the bounty of the Government are the wards of the Government and they have nearly always been disqualified under our Dominion Franchise Acts.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But there are Indians who are not living on a reserve, and they have no right to vote unless they are enfranchised. There are many Indians who are working and living outside the reserve. They have no right to vote at the present time, but why shouldn't they vote if they have served in the army or navy?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Any Indian not ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve is entitled to vote provided he has the other qualifications.

Mr. LAPOINTE: When he is on a reserve he will not vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he is ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve he will not vote.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Because he is looked on as a ward of the Government.

Mr. JACOBS: I am rather in favour of this clause. I think that any person who is in receipt of assistance from the Government, or who can be influenced by the Government, ought not to have the right to vote. It is an easy matter to see how they would vote if they had that right.

Mr. CANNON: What about an Indian who has served with the forces and who is not resident on an Indian reserve, but lives outside at a nearby village? Near Quebec there is an Indian reserve at Lorette. Some of the Indians live on the reserve, but others who are emancipated live in the village of Lorette outside.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are not disqualified under this clause.

Mr. CANNON: Under the amendment an Indian requires two essential qualifications in order to vote. First, he must have served in the army or navy or with the air forces, and secondly, he must be ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Off the reserve.

Mr. CALDWELL: Suppose an Indian had served in the late war and lived on a reservation, would he be entitled to vote?

Mr. CANNON: The amendment reads:

Provided, however, that any Indian ordinarily resident on an Indian Reserve who has served in the Naval, Military or Air forces of Canada in the late war shall be qualified to vote.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The minister said the amendment read: "Not ordinarily resident." Which is right?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It seems to be so simple as not to need explanation. A man is qualified to vote, not being an Indian ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve. The meaning of that is that an Indian who is ordinarily resident on a reserve has no vote. But if such an Indian residing on a reserve served in the army or navy or air forces he will have the right to vote provided he has the other qualifications.

Mr. HAROLD: Will an Indian who is not a resident on an Indian reserve and who is not enfranchised have the right to vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Unless there is some special disfranchising Act. This Act does not disqualify him. This Act only disfranchises an Indian ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve. I know of no other disfranchising Act. It may be that the Indian Act provides that an Indian in receipt of bounty shall not vote, but I am not sure about that.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend (Mr. Cannon) is absolutely right. The Act provides that an Indian ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve who has served in the army or navy or air forces shall have the right to vote, but there is nothing here giving the right to vote to a man who does not reside on a reserve but has served with the forces.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He does not need it. He is not disqualified. There is nothing in the Act that will disqualify a man who does not reside on a reserve.

Mr. BUREAU: He may be a member of the band, subject to all the rules of the band, and live outside the reserve.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is nothing in this Act that disqualifies him.

Mr. CANNON: As the law stands now, under the Indian Act an Indian is absolutely disfranchised. An Indian, to cease to be an Indian, has to be emancipated or enfranchised under the procedure laid down in the Indian Act. If that procedure has not been followed, and if the Indian has served in the late war and does not reside on an Indian reserve but in a nearby village the amendment does not give him the right to vote, I think he ought to have it. We have a reserve at Lorette near Quebec. Some members of the tribe live on the reserve and others in the village. Those living in the village have no right to vote unless they are enfranchised. I know that some of the members of this tribe have served in the war. By this amendment they would not be entitled to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This Act is pretty specific in its provisions. I am not sure what is in the Indian Act, but I am inclined to think from what I have heard around me that there is some disqualification in that Act of an Indian who is in receipt of money from the Government. They are looked on as wards of the Government. This Act won't interfere with them. There is no disqualification in this Act except of the Indian ordinarily resident on a reserve, and even they have the right to vote if they have served with the forces and are not otherwise disqualified. If he resides off the reserve he is not disqualified under this Act.

Mr. PARDEE: Yes he is, unless he is enfranchised.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he is off the reserve this Act does not disqualify him. It only disqualifies the Indian on the reserve.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: But the Indian off the reserve is disqualified by law until he is enfranchised. At the present time we have a Committee of this House studying the whole Indian question, and some members of the Committee are in favour of compulsorily enfranchising the Indians who live off the reserve because they are no longer wards of the Government. There are certain disabilites; they cannot be sued for debt, and so on. So my hon. friend is wrong when he says the Indians living off the reserve will have the right to vote. They will have that right only when they are enfranchised under the law.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Any disability is not under this Act; it is under the Indian Act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The other Act may be amended when the House sees fit to amend it. There is no disability under this Act except as against Indians who live on the reserve.

Mr. CANNON: Why not strike out the words "Indian ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve."

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I think there is something in the Indian Act which provides that unless an Indian renounces his tribal allegiance he has no vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he does renounce his tribal allegiance and then goes back to the reserve he cannot vote under this section.

Mr. PARDEE: Is an Indian who was not enfranchised but who served in the war and is now living off the reservation, entitled to vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not if the Indian Act says not.

Mr. PARDEE: Why not? If an Indian served in the war and is thus entitled to vote, why should he not vote, whether he lives on or off the reserve?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps we had better look at the Indian Act; we have so many different opinions.

Mr. PARDEE: The minister says, and this Act provides, that the man who is ordinarily resident on an Indian reservation and who has served with the air or military forces shall be entitled to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. PARDEE: If a man is not ordinarily resident on a reservation, what is his status?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He can vote anywhere.

Mr. PARDEE: No, not unless he is enfranchised.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This Act declares that he shall have the vote.

Mr. PARDEE: No, it does not declare that. Only the man ordinarily resident on the reservation shall vote. Now, why should the man who is not on the reservation but who served in the war not be entitled to vote? That is the point.

Mr. HAROLD: This point must be made clear. When our committee was sitting, we had before us Lieut. Martin, of Toronto. He is at present living in that city and has not a vote ordinarily because he is attached to the band and is not enfranchised. I think, therefore, that this amendment should cover those Indians off the reservation.

Mr. PARDEE: Exactly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move to strike out of the amendment the words "ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve."

Mr. HAROLD: Will the minister consider giving the vote to the wives of the Indians?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No; we give the Indians the vote only because of their war service.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move to amend clause 29 by adding to the said clause the following words:

Provided that no disability imposed by paragraph (b) of subsection 4 of section 8 of "The Naturalization Act", chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1919 (first session), shall disentitle a person on that ground alone to the said certificate.

Mr. EULER: When the principle of this clause was discussed on the second reading of the Bill some weeks ago and it was realized that the clause, when read with a certain clause in the Naturalization Act, would disfranchise probably one hundred thousand British subjects, I was very much gratified to hear the pronouncement from the Government, through the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen), that it was not the intention of the Government that there should be such an effect. and further that an amendment would be introduced later on that would remove the injustice. That amendment is now before us, and I may say frankly, Mr. Chairman, that I believe that a better remedy would have consisted in striking out that part of the clause altogether. I shall speak of that very briefly a little later. It is impossible to discuss the amendment intelligently without discussing to some extent at least the Naturalization Act. Indeed, I think there is even now in the House, and perhaps throughout the country, a very considerable misconception as to the purport of the Bill as it stands and of this amendment as it is now proposed. There are two groups of people who have been discussed in connection with this Bill, and the reason for that is to be found in the Naturalization Act that was passed last year, particularly section 8. I have no desire to transgress the rules, but I think it is necessary that I should make some reference to the Naturalization Act in connection with this subject. In section 8 of that Act provision was made that no persons of enemy alien origin could be naturalized in Canada without living in this country for ten years after the conclusion of peace. That provision embraced people who had lived in Canada for a great many years, and I discussed that question at the time and made an objection to the principle of applying that provision to men who had lived in this country for so many years, many of whom had considered themselves British subjects and many of whom had voted in the past. However, it was said at the time that it was necessary to draft the clause in that form because of the requirements of the British Government, who desired that all certificates issued in the future by the Canadian Government should carry with them Imperial naturalization. It was also promised by the Prime Minister at that time that he would make representations to the British Government to have that matter modified. That has not as yet been done, but I understand from interviews with certain members of the Government that application has been made to the British Government and that action may be expected. I should like to say, by the way, that if that cannot be obtained I would suggest to the Government that in all fairness they should introduce some legislation whereby these people might be given, if not Imperial naturalization, at least Canadian naturalization, which would meet the requirements of nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand of those who would like Canadian naturalization to permit them to vote. This would be all the more reasonable, because we know as a matter of fact to-day that the man in Canada who was formerly an enemy alien, or at least who was born in Germany or Austria and who has Canadian naturalization, finds it absolutely impossible to get the Imperial naturalization certificate even though he served in the war. If these people could get Canadian naturalization that would remedy the matter, as far as the franchise is concerned.

The amendment as proposed does not affect those people of enemy alien origin who cannot be naturalized for another ten years. I think there is an impression throughout the country—I know I have met with it in my own constituency—that by this amendment all those who cannot be naturalized until they have lived in Canada for ten years will now be able to vote. I think it should be made perfectly clear that people who have not been naturalized are not affected by this amendment at all, and that it only deals with those who are British subjects by operation of law. The people who are spoken of as British subjects by operation of law are those who are naturalized by reason of the naturalization of their fathers, in the case of children and minors, or those who are naturalized by reason of the naturalization of their husbands in the case of the wives of these men. In the Bill as it was presented these people would have been prevented from voting and I think, with the exception of one point that I desire to bring out briefly, the amendment as proposed by the Acting Solicitor General will make it possible under certain conditions that these people now receive the franchise.

The point I wish to raise is a legal one, and perhaps it may seem somewhat presumptuous for one who is not a lawyer to raise it. It is a point that I discussed with the Acting Solicitor General. He did not think there was any force in it. I discussed it with certain other members of the House who are learned in the law, some on this side and one or two on the other side, and in order that the opinion which I myself have on the point might be supported or otherwise by someone who could not in any way be considered a partisan, I drew it to the attention of a gentleman who has a great deal to do with matters of this kind in connection with naturalization and discussed it with him. That was the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Thomas Mulvey. When I placed it before him and asked him for his opinion, he said that the meaning which I took out of it was correct, and that at the very best it would be doubtful whether under certain sections of the Naturalization Act the right to vote which would be given by the amendment now proposed, would not again be taken away. I am bringing the point out now, not for the purpose of raising any objection but simply to make absolutely certain that the declared intention of the Government to give the franchise to these people shall be carried out.

The point is as follows: Under section 29, which we are now discussing, a certificate may be given to those British subjects who are British subjects by operation of the law. The certificate is given to:

> Every person who is naturalized as a British subject by operation of law who, but for such naturalization, is qualified and would be entitled at the date of this certificate to be personally naturalized in Canada.

For these hundred thousand people who are naturalized by operation of law it will be necessary, before they can vote, to go before a judge and prove to him that they are qualified for personal naturalization. They are not required, as I take it, to actually secure that personal naturalization, but they must have the qualification before he can issue a certificate to that effect which certificate gives them the right to vote. In the Naturalization Act, section 5, subsection 3, there is the following clause:

> Except as provided by this Act, a certificate of naturalization shall not be granted to any person under disability.

The word "disability" is defined in section 33 paragraph (d) as follows:

> The expression "disability" means the status of being a married woman, or a minor, lunatic or idiot.

What I have particular reference to in this connection is that the expression "disability" means the status of being a married woman. In the Act itself there appears to be no provision whatever for the personal naturalization of a married woman who is already a British subject, because her husband is a naturalized British subject. Therefore it would seem that when such a woman appeared before the judge and asked for a certificate which would give her the right to vote the judge would very naturally say to her that he is not entitled to issue a certificate of personal naturalization because there is no provision for the naturalization of a married woman who is already a British subject by operation of law.

The Acting Solicitor General did not agree with that view, as I have said before, and I have no doubt he will place his view on that point before the committee. If there is anything in it at all, the amendment which has been offered by him should be so framed that all possible doubt will be removed and that the object that is sought to be attained by the amendment will be fully carried out, and so that those who are British subjects by operation of law will find there is no obstacle placed in the way of their obtaining certificates and being allowed to vote.

I said a few moments ago, Mr. Chairman, that in my opinion the best remedy would be to strike the paragraph out altogether. It would make it very much more simple, there could be no doubt whatever about it, and it would base the franchise broadly upon the fact of British citizenship, which seems altogether fair and which would carry out the principle enunciated by the Acting Solicitor General himself when he introduced the Bill in the first place.

The point I want to make is that people affected by the amendment are already British subjects, and while I have no fault to find with the principle that is sought to be enacted here, that every alien should receive personal naturalization, it does not seem to me to be altogether fair that the principle should be made retroactive and that you should force British subjects, many of whom have voted in the past, to again appear before a judge in order that they may obtain a certificate. Indeed the chief objection that I have to that is this: I think it is altogether likely that in a great many instances these people will not appear before the judge, for various reasons. One of these reasons might quite conceivably be a certain matter of pride. For example take the case of the men who may have voted for ten or fifteen years, ever since they came of age, and who were naturalized because their fathers were naturalized. I do not see why these men should be placed in a separate class and again be asked to prove that they are fit for citizenship and for the exercise of the franchise; it seems to me they might very well be excused from that. Again, I believe it is altogether probable that in many cases the names of these people— wives of naturalized British subjects, and men naturalized by operation of law—will be placed on the voters' lists, and they will assume that they are entitled to vote. They will take no further trouble in connection with the matter. They will appear at the polls, and then it may be quite possible that somebody will object, will ask them for the certificate, and as they will not have it, they will be deprived of the franchise at that time. It seems to me that that should be avoided. It would be quite fair, I think, that the law might apply to all newcomers or those who are naturalized in the future, but that it should be made retroactive, it seems to me, is not fair at all. I would ask the Government in that connection not to have their amendment stop short of giving complete justice to these people, but to strike out the paragraph altogether, and let the franchise be the inseparable and logical accompaniment of mature citizenship, and give the vote to all who are British subjects of the proper age.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The question raised by my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) is not without some complexity. Under the Bill as originally introduced—clause 29, subclause 2—the intention of the Government in framing the clause was hardly expressed by the language used, as was pointed out on the second reading of the Bill by the Minister of the Interior. The effect of the clause as originally drawn, and now printed in the Bill, would be to disqualify a certain number of people in this country who had heretofore become British subjects by operation of law. The people who would have been thus disqualified, were the section allowed to remain in its present condition, were the wives and children of those who had come to this country from foreign countries and obtained naturalization in Canada during their minority. As the committee is well aware, the wife of an alien who becomes naturalized in this country, under our law, becomes a British subject. The wife did not have to appear and obtain the certificate of naturalization—she became a British subject by operation of law by the fact of her marriage. Under the old common law idea she merged her existence, her identity became merged in her husband, and by operation of law she became a British subject. So it was also with the children who were minors at the time the parent became a British subject. Not so with the children who had come to the age of twenty-one years. They retained their original citizenship until they should themselves apply for naturalization in this country. My hon. friend from North Waterloo was, I think, the first to point out, during the debate on the second reading of this Bill, that the clause as drawn, had the effect of depriving a certain number of British subjects of the right to the franchise. The Minister of the Interior very promptly informed the House that such was not intended—that if that were the interpretation of the language of the section it did not convey the intention of the Government—and he promised the House that when the Bill came up again an amendment would be introduced to give effect to the intention of the Government, which was to maintain the right of those persons who had become naturalized by operation of law to all their rights, including the right of the franchise. Now the amendment which I have just had the honour of moving is intended to cure that defect in the section as it is printed in the present Bill, and I would ask the committee to examine the language of that amendment. In my humble opinion the language of the amendment does cure the defect; but if there be any doubt on that point I have no hesitation in saying the Government has no desire to create a doubt on the subject, and we will employ any language that may be necessary to make the matter plain and free from doubt. In my humble opinion, however, the section which I have just moved as an amendment does remove the doubt.

It refers to paragraph (B) of subsection four of section eight. Let me read that paragraph:

> No certificate of naturalization shall, before the expiration of a period of ten years after the termination of the present war, be granted in Canada to any subject of a country which at the time of the passing of this Act was at war with His Majesty, but this provision shall not apply to a person who,
> (1) having served in His Majesty's forces or in the forces of His Majesty's allies or of any country acting in naval and military co-operation with His Majesty was not discharged from such service by reason of his enemy nationality, sympathy or associations, or,
> (2) is a member of a race or community known to be opposed to the enemy governments, or,
> (3) was at birth a British subject.

Now subsection 2 of section 29 of the present Bill makes this provision:

> For the purposes of this Act, the allegiance or nationality of a person, as it was at the birth of such person, shall be deemed incapable of being changed, or of having been changed, merely by reason or in consequence of marriage or change of allegiance or naturalization of any other person, or otherwise than by personal naturalization of such first mentioned person. Provided, however, that this subsection shall not apply to any person born on the continent of North America, nor to any person who in person applies to and obtains from any judge having jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings, a certificate under the hand of such judge and the seal, if any, of his court, to the effect following:—

Now as those two sections stand I think there is no doubt that the wife of a naturalized British subject, and the children who become British subjects by reason of their birth or their minority at the time their parent was naturalized—the effect of that section as it is printed to-day would be to deprive these people of a vote. Now, Mr. Chairman, note the amendment:

> Provided that no disability imposed by paragraph (B), of subsection four of section eight of the Naturalization Act, Chapter 38, shall disentitle a person on that ground alone to the said certificate.

So that if the only ground is the ground set out in paragraph (b), namely, that they cannot obtain naturalization for ten years because of the fact that they belong to what we know as the enemy races during the late war, that disqualification is removed by the amendment I now move; that shall not stand in the way of anybody who is a British subject by operation of the law heretofore.

My hon. friend from North Waterloo discussed this question with me very candidly a few nights ago. I understand that he has in mind some difficulties which he thinks might possibly arise in connection with the language of the naturalization law which is in force in Canada. I tried as best I could to point out to him—and I still maintain the same view—that his fears were groundless. But it is not desirable that there should be any doubt upon the subject, and if there is any way of making it clear I am quite prepared to make it clear. The hon. gentleman pointed out, in the first place, that our Naturalization Act, section 5, subsection 3, provides as follows:

> Except as provided by this Act, a certificate of naturalization shall not be granted to any person under disability.

I ask the committee to note the precise language: "except as provided by this Act". Then, he referred me to the interpretation clause of the Act, which says:

> The expression "disability" means the status of being a married woman, or a minor, lunatic or idiot.

Consequently, the impression created in my hon. friend's mind was that as a married woman was a person under disability, according to this interpretation she could not, having regard to the provision of subsection 3 of section 5, obtain naturalization. But the interpretation clause, section 33, commences this way:

> In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires . . . "disability" means . . . a married woman.

But that interpretation cannot be placed on the word "disability" in this Act, because the Act distinctly says otherwise; the context does otherwise require. Note again subsection 3 of section 5:

Except as provided by this Act, a certificate of naturalization shall not be granted to any person under disability.

Now, what is the provision of the Act? Section 11, to my mind, is so plain that he who runs may read. It says: "The wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject". That is in the first paragraph. Then follows paragraph (a):

Provided that the wife of an alien may be naturalized in like manner and with the same effect as if she were a feme sole.

Then it is provided that her naturalization shall not affect her children. There are two classes of people concerned: first, the wife of a British subject shall be a British subject, that is clear; second, the wife of an alien may be naturalized in like manner as if she were a single woman. That is clear; language could not be clearer. How does that apply under our section as amended? We come to the certificate. A woman says: My husband is a naturalized British subject; consequently I am a British subject by operation of law and I am entitled to vote. But, they say: you cannot vote: you have no naturalization certificate. Under this Act she has the right to go before a judge and say: I am one of those persons who have become British subjects by operation of law, I cannot appear personally and obtain naturalization because I am a British subject. The judge says: if that be so, then here is your certificate and she goes and votes. So, too, with minor children.

Now, the certificate contains a clause which might give rise to some shadow of a doubt, though I do not think it does. The certificate, which may be obtained from any judge who has power to deal with naturalization—and that includes all our county and minor court judges—is merely this:

This is to certify that from evidence submitted before me, I am satisfied that A.B. of.....in the province of.....(occupation).....is a person naturalized as a British subject by operation of law, who, but for such naturalization, is qualified and would be entitled at the date of the issue of this certificate to be personally naturalized in Canada.

Meaning clearly that being a British subject by operation of law, she cannot go personally and obtain naturalization. An alien might do so; a single woman might do so; but a British subject cannot do so because she is a British subject; that is the meaning of the section. Now, if there is any way of clearing up that doubt, if there is one, with regard to these people who are de facto British subjects, I am quite willing, if some one will suggest what language should be adopted, to meet the suggestion. So much with regard to that particular class of people—the wives of naturalized British subjects and the minor children who have become British subjects by law, by reason of their parents becoming naturalized.

Now, as to the broader question—a question which is a good deal involved. As the committee is aware, this Parliament in its wisdom passed a Naturalization Act in 1919. We were not, I admit, bound to pass it, but we did pass it, and we passed it after conference with the British Government and the Governments of the other British Dominions. The British Government submitted to these Dominions a certain Act and said to them: if you are willing to pass Part 2 of our Naturalization Act, we will accept Canadian naturalization throughout the British Empire; if you so desire, we will have a uniform Act; we cannot impose our will on the Parliament of Canada—that is stated in so many words in the British Act—but there is our Act; we leave it to you to decide whether you take it or refuse it. They said the same to Australia, New Zealand and the other Dominions. Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, I think, have adopted the suggestion; I am not sure about India. That made an Imperial Naturalization Act. For the first time, naturalization certificates issued in Canada become good throughout the British Empire. They are recognized in Great Britain, and theirs are just as good in Canada. That Act was passed by the Parliament of Canada with full knowledge of the circumstances; we must assume that, at all events.

Now, the difficulty that has arisen in this country is that there are apparently a number of people of German or Austrian origin —chiefly German, I think—who have been residents of Canada for a great many years and who have in most instances considered that they were British subjects. But the number of these people is limited; I do not think it is as great as we sometimes hear stated. It has been represented that hundreds of thousands of these people are going to be disqualified. Well, I do not think so. I live in close proximity to my hon. friend from Waterloo (Mr. Euler) and I know something about this matter. Well, these people have become careless in regard to the matter of their naturalization, or perhaps they have been imposed on by politicians who induced them to imagine that they were British subjects and had the right to vote. Perhaps some of them in the dim and distant past did obtain naturalization certificates which have since become lost or destroyed, or the records in connection with which have become obliterated. At all events, we have at the present time in various ridings in Ontario very old and very worthy people of German descent—possibly of Austrian descent, too——who cannot establish the fact that they are British subjects. They may say that they have voted for twenty, thirty or forty years. I have personal knowledge of some instances, because the admission was made to me, in which men who had voted had never been naturalized.

It has been argued that these people should not now be deprived of the right to be naturalized, though in section 8 of our Naturalization Act we have adopted the Imperial clause that provides that people of a former alien enemy state shall not be entitled to naturalization for ten years after the conclusion of peace. The situation is not a happy one; but it is one that has arisen, I think, largely on account of lack of interest or carelessness of the individuals themselves who did not see to it in years gone by that they were properly naturalized, or who were so careless in regard to the matter that the records became lost or the certificates were destroyed and they are unable to establish the fact now. The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) makes a suggestion to meet the difficulty; he made it last session. He has made it, I think, privately to the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden), and his request has been promised, and has received consideration. His proposal is this: That we in Canada have still the power to pass a Canadian Naturalization Act and that we should pass a Canadian Naturalization Act and by that means give these people the Canadian franchise. The matter has, however, assumed more than a Canadian aspect. We have passed an Imperial Naturalization Act which gives us the right to confer upon the people of this country citizenship throughout the British Empire. We passed that Act with our eyes open, making it on all fours with Acts passed in the other British Dominions. We passed it deliberately after a long experience during which we granted Canadian citizenship after three years' residence in this country, good only within Canada, and such a Canadian citizen who left Canada was not a British subject. In fact, I am told that high dignitaries of this country went as representatives of this country to Great Britain and found when they got there that they were not British subjects, simply because they had only Canadian naturalization. Now a man who gets a certificate of naturalization in this country, is justified in believing that he is a British subject throughout the British Empire. My hon. friend (Mr. Euler) says: You have it in your power to give Canadian naturalization. Deliberately, we rejected that old system and adopted a new one; we placed ourselves on a par with the other Dominions and the Motherland herself, and that was done after full consideration of all the circumstances. I think it was last session that the Prime Minister promised my hon. friend that he would fully consider the matter and take it up with the Imperial authorities. Doubtless the failure of his health and his consequent absence from this country prevented him from doing so personally although he started the negotiations. I am able, however, to tell the committee that the negotiations have proceeded, but they have not proceeded to that extent that the Government is able to announce that an arrangement has yet been reached.

I do not know if a satisfactory arrangement can be looked for in the near future. Personally, I am inclined to think this is one of the matters that may be discussed at the Imperial Conference to be held in 1921, although I cannot give the committee any more than my opinion in that regard. It is certain that up to the present moment we have not received the assent of Great Britain to that proposal. Shall we deliberately derogate from our own Act and create a new status after having deliberately overthrown the old status and accepted the Imperial one? I do not think it will be a very long time for us to wait until we have a final decision. It may be that there will not be any great necessity for voting in the interval; I hope there will not, but as to that no one can speak with any confidence. That, however, is the situation. The object of the present amendment is to make definite and certain that every one who is actually a British subject shall enjoy the right to vote, and if the amendment that I have moved does not make that clear, we shall make it clear if a better method can be suggested.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Who will be the persons, British subjects by operation of the law, who will remain disqualified or who will be unable to obtain a certificate entitling them to vote under this clause as amended? Will there remain any such persons?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No one who is a British subject.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then, what is the purpose of subclause 2 of clause 29 if every person will be able to vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not quite catch my hon. friend's meaning.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I want to know who are those who will be unable to obtain a certificate giving them the right to vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Those who could not go personally and get naturalized; those who depend only on their marriage or their parentage could not obtain naturalization under subclause 2.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka): In that class will be included those who do not have a good knowledge of the English or the French language.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That would be a disqualification. Any one who could not comply with the qualifications of our Naturalization Act, which include a knowledge of either the French or the English language, would be disqualified.

Mr. PARDEE: Might I ask the Acting Solicitor General, in opening, if those who were aliens and who had already become naturalized prior to the Nautralization Act of 1919, are still entitled to vote?

Mr. CALDER: A male?

Mr. PARDEE: Yes. He became naturalized prior to the Naturalization Act of 1919. Is he still entitled to vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I shall have to examine the clauses of the Naturalization Act as to that. I have them before me, but I have not time to examine them just now. It may be there is some discretion. He would have formerly one of the limited certificates, good only in Canada. My hon. friend refers only as to the vote, not as to obtaining Imperial citizenship?

Mr. PARDEE: I am speaking only in regard to the right to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, he can vote, but he has to make a new application if he desires to get an Imperial certificate, or a certificate under the Act of 1919.

Mr. PARDEE: But in order to vote at any succeeding election, he has not to get a new certificate, provided that he was naturalized prior to 1919, even though that Naturalization Act was passed in that year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think there is any doubt that a man who has heretofore been naturalized under the law of this country as that law stood at the time of the issue of his certificate, has a right to vote, and his wife would be a British subject according to law.

Mr. PARDEE: Would she have a right to vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. Unless she were a person born in North America, she would have to apply to a judge to show that she would have a right to vote, to get a certificate.

Mr. PARDEE: Even though the husband is entitled to vote owing to naturalization prior to the Naturalization Act of 1919 and his wife thereby became a British subject prior to 1919, the husband would not have to apply again and would be entitled to vote, but the wife would have to apply for a new certificate?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, she would have to apply to the judge, before voting, for a certificate under this clause.

Mr. PARDEE: In other words, although she became a British subject by operation of law, owing to the fact that her husband was naturalized prior to the Naturalization Act of 1919 and is still a British subject for the purpose of the franchise, his wife would still have to obtain a certificate in order to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, it is to meet her case that this clause was drawn.

Mr. PARDEE: But this would have no bearing at all on the man himself?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. PARDEE: I ask the Acting Solicitor General these questions by reason of the fact that the other day I received from a very eminent barrister, who has had much to do with the naturalization of these people, a latter in which he states:

The Government of Canada in 1917 took cognizance of the fact that there were many aliens who had resided in Canada for many years whose sympathies were with the United Kingdom as its Allies in the Great War and who had no Pro-German or other alien affiliations. This fact was officially recognized particularly in Orders in Council No. 2552 and No. 2948. Thereupon the Department of the Secretary of State published in pamphlet form the Naturalization Act of 1914 with Amendments, the Orders in Council and the departmental regulations applicable to naturalization.

The Act and the regulations prescribed all the steps necessary to be taken by an alien in order to perfect his naturalization. He was told that he must post up a notice, and furnish certain facts, and attend before the clerk of the Court to sign a petition, and then, finally, appear before the County Judge and give evidence to show that he had qualified under the Act.

The Orders in Council, the Regulations and the pamphlet freely distributed practically constituted an invitation to those who came within the meaning of the Act to come forward and become British subjects and Canadian citizens. Scores responded to the invitation. In the county of Grey about one hundred and fifty made application. I dealt with a number of these applications myself. Looking over these applications I see that some of them came to Canada in infancy; some at the age of four or five years; I believe that the majority of them came when under ten years of age; few came after twenty years of age; some of them had lived in Canada for sixty years; they practically knew no other country; ninety per cent of these men were told by the politicians of the day that they were qualified to vote if they would only swear that they were British subjects and they were told that all that was necessary was to take the oath of allegiance. Not knowing any better they believed that they were British subjects and voted as such at every election. They occupied positions of municipal trust, took a general interest in Canadian affairs and lived irreproachable lives so far as law and order are concerned. When the war broke out they were more or less opposed to Germany because the parents of many of these men had left Germany to avoid the burden of military service.

These men followed diligently the regulations prescribed by the department, engaged counsel and paid the fees prescribed by the Government, and to that extent enriched the Treasury, attended at the County Town once or twice and incurred expenses in connection with their naturalization varying from $25 to $35.

The applications were heard by the County Judges. Those who, in the opinion of the County Judge, who, from his local knowledge is best able to ascertain the facts, gave satisfactory evidence had their applications approved. Those who did not satisfy him were rejected.

A very large number of these applications were heard at the end of June 1919. Two weeks afterwards, on the 7th of July, 1919, the present Naturalization Act became law and these applicants, who had been for months making their applications, found that certificates would not be granted for a further period of ten years when the majority of them would be in their graves.

I need hardly say that solicitors who, like myself, had prepared the applications for these men and advised them as to the steps to take and the circumstances under which certificates would be granted, resent very strongly being placed in the position of taking fees from these men and then, owing to the Act of 1919, being compelled to advise them that the whole procedure was a farce and that they have lost their money.

One County Judge referred to it as a scandal and all who were concerned in putting through these applications feel that we were placed in a false position.

That is the opinion expressed by a very eminent Canadian barrister. Now are these men who had obtained these certificates prior to the Naturalization Act of 1919 still entitled, as they were before, irrespective of the ten-year clause in the 1919 Naturalization Act, to vote under the present Bill?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no doubt about it, if they obtained their certificates. I am speaking of the naturalization certificate under the law as it stood prior to the passing of the 1919 Act.

Mr. CALDER: There must be a naturalization certificate from the Secretary of State.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A certificate that complied with the law as it then stood.

Mr. PARDEE: So that any man who appeared before the county judge and was deemed fit for naturalization would be entitled to vote under the present Act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think he would be naturalized, under the 1914 Act.

Mr. PARDEE: Prior to 1919, complying with the law as it then was.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If my hon. friend looks at the 1914 Act he will find differently I think.

Mr. PARDEE: All the applicant had to do was this. He had to go before any barrister, preferably the County Crown Attorney, and prove if he was foreign born, that he had a residence of three years in Canada, then make his petition, then make his affidavit that he would file that petition, and give notice of application for naturalization for three months before the sittings of the county court sessions, and then become naturalized. What I want to know is this: Are those men who received their naturalization certificates from the County Crown Attorney, through the medium of being naturalized by the high court judge or a judge of the sessions, entitled to vote under the Act as it stands?

Mr. DOHERTY: No.

Mr. PARDEE: What have they got to do?

Mr. DOHERTY: They are not entitled because they did not get certificates of naturalization.

Mr. PARDEE: They did.

Mr. DOHERTY: Let me point out what they got. The judge, under the Act of 1914, gives nobody a certificate of naturalization, but a certificate that the applicant has satisfied him, the judge, that he has the necessary qualifications to be naturalized. That certificate of the judge is not a certificate that he is naturalized, but a certificate that he has the necessary qualifications. That certificate has to go to the Secretary of State, and upon that certificate the Secretary of State may issue the certificate of naturalization. He is under no obligation to issue it. On the contrary, he has an absolute discretion, and a man has never got his naturalization certificate until he gets it from the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State can grant it, and nobody else.

Mr. MORPHY: That is since 1914?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes. The judge intervenes simply as the instrument to gather the necessary evidence and forward to the Secretary of State the certificate that he has satisfied himself that the man has the qualifications. The people to whom my hon. friend refers are entitled to every sympathy, but unfortunately, as the situation is described, if all they got before the last Naturalization Act came into force was the certificate that emaninated from the judge, they did not get their certificate of naturalization and apparently this legislation of 1919 operated to hold the hand of the Secretary of State and prevent his issuing certificates of naturalization.

Mr. PARDEE: Taking what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) says, it means that those who had received naturalization prior to 1914 by certificate of the judge are not under this Act entitled to vote, and by reason of the Naturalization Act of 1914, they will yet have to wait four years before they are entitled to vote.

Mr. DOHERTY: The man who before 1914, or in fact, for three years after 1914, got naturalized under the old Act—under the old Act the judge naturalized; he gave his certificate of naturalization and that was the end of the operation, for his certificate was the certificate of naturalization —was a naturalized British subject in Canada, and the later legislation did not take away from him what he already had.

Mr. PARDEE: But it is taken away.

Mr. DOHERTY: The man who was naturalized under the Act in force prior to 1914, and which for people who had come into the country before 1914 remained in force for a further period of nearly three years, got naturalization in Canada alone, but he still has that thing that he got. So far as he personally is concerned his rights, so far as I know, are not affected by the legislation of 1919.

Mr. PARDEE: He is still entitled to vote.

Mr. EULER: I might just make a comment on what the Minister of Justice has said. He has given the impression, quite fairly, that those people who applied to the judge for naturalization were unfortunate in that the naturalization was not completed through the Secretary of State, and he intimates, I think, that they were unfortunate in that the Naturalization Act of 1919, which contains that ten-year clause, was the cause of their not completing their naturalization. With that I must take issue because, as a matter of fact, a good many people in my riding, some ninety-odd, made application through the judge, were approved of and the certificates forwarded to the Secretary of State for final naturalization. But naturalization was refused, although the power was there to grant naturalization, because in 1917 the Government had passed certain Orders in Council which made provision purposely for the naturalization of just such people as have been described in the letter read by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee). Yet while the machinery had purposely been created by the Government for the naturalization of these men, their applications having been approved of by the judge, when those applications finally came before the Secretary of State, who had at his disposal everything provided for the purpose, for some reason or other finally he declined to give naturalization. I submit that that was wrong.

Mr. DOHERTY: I was dealing with the case which the hon. member for West Lambton put forward, of the man who was cut off by the passing of the legislation of 1919. It is perfectly true that during the war the issuing of certificates under the legislation of 1914 to persons of alien enemy nationality was suspended.

Mr. EULER: Why, then, were Orders in Council, providing for such naturalization, passed during the war?

Mr. DOHERTY: When you say "Orders in Council," it is difficult to know precisely to what particular Orders in Council you refer. There were certain Orders in Council, looking to the particular cases of people who had been long periods of years in the country, and providing for exceptions to the general suspension that had been decided upon of the issuing of naturalization certificates to persons of alien enemy nationality during the war. Orders in Council were passed making it possible to create exceptions. But such exceptions were not given effect to under those Orders in Council, because it was found essential to the general safety of the Empire that, while the war was actually in progress, there should be no grants of naturalization to people of enemy nationality. That view was so strongly pressed and insisted upon that it was thought justifiable, notwithstanding that Orders in Council were passed, not to grant certificates while the war was on.

Mr. EULER: Do I understand the minister to say that there were actually no certificates of naturalization granted to people who had been born in Germany for example? Does he say that no exceptions were made?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not in a position to say that there was absolutely no exception made; I would have to verify that statement. But the general practice which the hon. member was complaining of was that certificates were not granted. Now, whether there were one or more cases that were considered absolutely exceptional I am not in a position to say. The administration of the Act was not in my personal control but in the Department of the Secretary of State, and I am not in a position to answer that question. I was trying to explain to the hon. gentleman how it happened that though there were Orders in Council looking to the making of exceptions, on general principles certificates have not been granted and those Orders in Council have not been generally carried out. I cannot say that, during the course of the war there were not possibly some cases so exceptional as to justify the granting of certificates.

Mr. PARDEE: Are those who were not naturalized prior to 1914 or 1919 and who had lived in this country for forty years, entitled to become naturalized, or must they wait for ten years?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If they came from what we know as alien enemy countries they must wait for ten years.

Mr. PARDEE: Even though they may have lived here forty years?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Even so.

Mr. PARDEE: Then I want to make a strong protest against such an invidious restriction being incorporated in this statute. I do not believe it will be in the interests of the country. I have very strong sentiments in connection with the war and the duties of citizenship, but it does appear to me that after all has been said and done, we should try as far as possible to get away from the war spirit and try to build the nation on the new principles which the war has taught us. Is it right that we should say to people, of whom undoubtedly there are large numbers in this country, that although they came here in order to get away as far as possible from the conditions that existed in their own countries; although they left their native land to avoid unjust and autocratic forcing into military service, coming to this country to seek peace and quietness and happiness and to contribute to the wealth of their adopted land by their thrift and economy,—is it fair that we should say to them that, notwithstanding the fact that they are good citizens, they shall be deprived of the rights of citizenship? No one knows better than the Acting Solicitor General that if you go up into these very sections where the largest percentage of these people live—and I can speak for Ontario—you will find men and women than whom there are no more thrifty, energetic, honest, law-abiding, God-fearing people anywhere. Yet, we are going to say to those people—Although you left your country many years ago, when you were mere children, and came here to escape the tyranny of your own country; although you have proved yourselves good citizens, having added to the wealth of this country, having paid your taxes, yet, by reason of a hard-and-fast law passed in this Parliament that recognizes nothing in mitigation of the accident of your birth, you are to be deprived of the right to have a single word to say in the government of your country. It does appear to me, and I want to speak as calmly and reasonably as possible, that in forcing such a measure through, the Government is only making trouble for itself in the future and creating a schism which ought not to exist. The whole civilized world to-day, now that the war is over, is trying to forget the past few years and to allay bitter hatred and animosity, yet we are attempting to open old wounds in Canada to-day. I say that this is bad legislation. It is an enactment that ought to be very seriously and carefully considered before it is passed. I care not one whit as to what the provisions of Imperial citizenship may be.

It has been said: You cannot derogate from your own Act. In so far as Canada is concerned, the Parliament of Canada is the only one to say who shall and who shall not vote for the representatives of this country. I do not want to take away from that to the extent of one iota. We are practically, in that respect, masters of our own destiny. We should not pass that legislation, leave that schism, that breach, for a period of ten years and practically segregate a large portion of the people. The Acting Solicitor General has said, it is not a happy situation. I absolutely agree with him. It is a distinctly unhappy situation. It is not only an unhappy situation, but it is a situation that the Government is making more unhappy. Why could we not wipe out that Naturalization Act in effect by this Act? The Minister of Justice shakes his head. I suppose he means that we cannot wipe out that Naturalization Act without consent. I know not why. Surely we in this Parliament have power to repeal an Act that we have passed. If we cannot do that, the sooner we know it the better. With Canada's status to-day—and with Canada's status I thoroughly agree—if we cannot, in our own House, run our own internal affairs, or make our statutes and declare who shall be entitled to return representatives for making the laws and looking after the affairs of this country without the consent of some one else, the sooner we know it the better.

I make the appeal very earnestly, I feel sincerely about it, and I am doing it for no political purpose whatever. This is an Act which will only redound to the discredit, and not to the benefit of Canada. I therefore think that we should so amend this Act, section 29 of the Bill, that the classes whom I have mentioned shall be entitled to vote. They have shown themselves to be good citizens and they are the victims of a condition for which they are not in the least responsible. Although they are thrifty, although they are God-fearing, although they are doing their best to upbuild Canada and promote its prosperity, shall we say, merely by reason of the accident of birth: "We will have none of you. You may pay your taxes, we will take your money, but as to you having a voice in the affairs of this nation, away with you." That is not good policy. It is not a policy that is going to build up and bring about the unity and cohesion of the people of Canada. The Government that passes that legislation and adheres to it is not acting in the interest of the people of Canada. It may be acting for a section of the people. The Government that passes that legislation will yet rue it.

Mr. DOHERTY: Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that he did not quite grasp the point that I disagreed with him upon, although I am not prepared to say that I can endorse everything he said. The hon. gentleman says that the Act that we are dealing with now is taking the franchise away from these people. That is a mistake. This Act is giving the franchise to every British subject, with restrictions that have no bearing upon the matter at present under consideration. The difficulty that arises in the path of those on whose behalf the hon. gentleman has spoken with such force and eloquence is not to be found in this Act.

Mr. PARDEE: No, it is in the Naturalization Act.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is in the Naturalization Act.

Mr. BUREAU: Does the hon. gentleman say that subsection 2 does not disfranchise people who, under the Naturalization Act, are British subjects?

Mr. DOHERTY: Let us keep to one difficulty at a time; the hon. gentleman has mentioned another class of people, but we are trying to deal with the particular class of people in regard to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pardee) has spoken. They are a class of people who never were naturalized. That is conceded, I understand. All this discussion is in the interest of a class of people who were not naturalized, who would desire to be naturalized but who are blocked in that respect by the ten-year requirement of the Naturalization Act.

Mr. CANNON: Some of these persons were naturalized by the operation of law.

Mr. DOHERTY: Suppose that there is a class also which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cannon) is interested in, it will make for clearness if we deal with each class by itself. The obstacle that is in the way of the particular class we are concerned with is the obstacle in the way of their becoming British subjects. If they could get over the obstacle of becoming British subjects under the Naturalization Act there would be no obstacle in the way of their voting. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pardee) wants to remedy that condition, and he suggests, as I understand, that the way to remedy that condition is to be found in this Act. It means that he wants to do it by providing that all those people who continue not to be British subjects shall nevertheless have the vote.

Mr. PARDEE: What I mean is that those people who have not been naturalized cannot be naturalized until ten years after the signing of the armistice.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. PARDEE: My contention is that this Act should provide that these people who are not alien enemies, without waiting for the period of ten years, should be entitled to become naturalized.

Mr. DOHERTY: The contention is that we should by this Act amend the Naturalization Act?

Mr. PARDEE: Quite so.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not going to suggest it cannot be done. I would like to suggest another possible alternative by which we could both meet the case of these people and at the same time avoid the complications which would result from our amending the Naturalization Act without having come to some understanding by which that amendment could not interfere with the Imperial nature of our naturalization. If we could get at that, if we could get the remedy in that way, it would seem to me that it would be possible to meet the situation by common consent.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is the remedy?

Mr. DOHERTY: As the Acting Solicitor General has pointed out the subject is one of negotiation with the Home government at the present time. If one were quite certain that we were going to have an election tomorrow, or in six months, or at sometime that would cause this legislation to operate to the serious detriment of anybody, that might be an argument to be urged for not pushing further our endeavours to conciliate the two positions. But the matter is now actually being dealt with, and actively dealt with. My hon. friend, the Acting Solicitor General, is not as sanguine as I am. Perhaps he has not the sanguine temperament of the people of my race.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Of your youth.

Mr. DOHERTY: Very well, of my youth; but speaking frankly I do not myself see, why we should apprehend that we must wait until the Imperial Conference in 1921 to have this matter adjusted. Speaking in all earnestness I would be anxious, and I think I can say that on behalf of the Government—the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) quite some time ago undertook, at all events, to bring the matter up—to find a manner whereby, without having either to dislocate our Imperial naturalization on the one hand, or to provide that these people may vote if they are not British subjects on the other hand—which I think would not be a desirable alternative—we could get at such an adjustment of this difficulty about the Naturalization Act as would remove the obstacle that stands in the way of that class of people, as to whom at all events—those of them who have been described to us this evening—I think there would be a general agreement that they were deserving of sympathy in this matter; at all events for myself I would not hesitate to say that I think they are. After all, so far as they are concerned, all that we are doing by this Act is to adhere to the requirement that a man must be a British subject in order to vote. Seriously, I hardly think the House would consider it desirable—if it is possible to attain the result in any other way—to introduce the novelty into our system of saying that people who are not British subjects may be entitled to vote.

Mr. PARDEE: Let them be naturalized.

Mr. DOHERTY: Then you have got to deal with them by dealing with the question of naturalization; and I would think it is preferable to deal with that question of naturalization in connection with the Naturalization Act, and in such a manner—if that be possible—as to meet the difficulty that now arises without jeopardizing or prejudicing the effect which ought to be attached, and which is attached at present, to our naturalizations. It was only as the result of very long negotiations, and a good deal of patience and of perseverance, that we attained the result which we have attained without sacrificing the principle for which the hon. gentleman spoke so eloquently—the principle that nobody but this Parliament ought to decide who ought to vote in Canada, or to decide who ought to be a naturalized British subject in Canada. It was only after a good deal of patience and persevering action that we arrived at the result which we have attained to-day under which the naturalization that comes from no authority in this world but the Canadian Parliament is recognized as an effective naturalization throughout the Empire. Now that is a very desirable thing, in the interest of all Canadian citizens.

Mr. JACOBS: May I point out to the minister that we have to take it all or nothing; with its defects and faults we have to swallow it.

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. We took it after it had been modified in most important respects upon the representations of the Government of Canada.

Mr. JACOBS: Then we agreed to the ten years' disqualification?

Mr. DOHERTY: The ten years' disqualification did not come in simultaneously with our naturalizations becoming Imperial. There was no ten-year disqualification in the legislation of 1914; the ten-year disqualification came as a subsequent provision in 1919. Before 1919 we had a Naturalization Act fixing the conditions of naturalization which we agreed to. It is true they were not all of them what we originally suggested; but neither were they all of them what Great Britain originally suggested. Nevertheless we came to an agreement—and let me say in parenthesis in passing that it was one of the most effective and clear-cut recognitions of our right to determine for ourselves the question of naturalization which was one of the few questions that remained in dispute. When we started out in the negotiations it was assumed in Great Britain that they would pass a Naturalization Act and that by virtue of their Act of Parliament their naturalizations would be effective in this country, but that was not the way the legislation finally passed. Their naturalizations are effective in this country because a section of a statute of the Canadian Parliament confers the power upon the Secretary of State over there to grant certificates of naturalization which shall be effective in Canada, just as their Parliament gives to us power to grant certificates that shall be effective in that country. There is no more outstanding piece of evidence of the recognition of equality of status than that very naturalization legislation, but that was not the way in which the matter was put forward to us at the outset. We had a year or so of negotiation. Now what have we achieved? We had achieved that situation before this legislation of 1919 that on conditions agreed upon, which made our legislation similar, our naturalizations obtained this great advantage, and their naturalizations obtained the same advantage by our legislation. Then came this desire on the part of the United Kingdom, and apparently certain other of the Dominions, to enact this exceptional provision arising out of the war. Now, of course to maintain our naturalizations Imperial it became necessary that we should keep our legislation similar or at least it was so thought; and it was, as I understand,—as to this I am not speaking from my own personal knowledge, I was absent when the legislation was passed—to meet that requirement of obtaining uniformity that the provision as to the ten years which had been adopted in Great Britain was adopted in this Parliament. My suggestion would be that we should make our best endeavour to obtain a remedy for that without disrupting our Imperial naturalizations, before we resort to what the hon. gentleman points out it is perfectly possible for us to do—repeal the provision which makes our naturalization similar to that of the United Kingdom, and I believe with that of the other dominions; I think they have all passed it, at all events whether that be so or not, to make it similar to that of the United Kingdom. Before we resort to that, before we say. "We have this thing that we want to remedy and we will pitch our Imperial naturalization to the winds for the sake of remedying that." Perhaps it would be justifiable to do so, I am not going to discuss that question now. Perhaps the remedy of this thing is worth that but I do not think we have reached that stage yet—let us make, at all events, our best endeavour to see if we cannot find a proper remedy for this difficulty without jeopardizing or without sacrificing the Imperial nature of our naturalization. I am hopeful that we shall find an adjustment of this difficulty which will enable us to preserve the Imperial nature of our naturalization and at the same time to meet the deserving cases that have been pointed out. I do not know that it is necessary for us this evening to consider whether this ten-year clause might not be properly applicable to some class of people. I do not know whether it would be suggested, for instance, that as regards people coming in in the future——

Mr. PARDEE: The Minister intimates that he is hopeful of an adjustment. May I suggest that those who are being debarred from the right to vote under the Act by reason of the provisions of the Naturalization Act be placed in the same position as women are now placed in who become British subjects by operation of law, namely, the position under which they may, if they have resided five years in Canada prior to the passing of the Naturalization

Act, 1919, go before a judge, take the oath of allegiance, and, provided they are otherwise properly qualified, be granted the right to vote? Why should those whom it is now proposed to debar be placed in a worse position than the women?

Mr. DOHERTY: The women we are including are women who are British subjects and who, if they had not become British subjects by their marriage, for instance, would on their own qualifications have been entitled to become British subjects.

Mr. PARDEE: So would these men.

Mr. DOHERTY: The difficulty with these men is that they are not British subjects, and under the existing Naturalization Law cannot become British subjects; and if this Act is going to give them the right to vote it will have to do so notwithstanding that they are not British subjects. On the other hand, the women my hon. friend speaks of are British subjects by marriage, and without this legislation would have the right to vote.

Mr. PARDEE: They are British subjects, but they cannot vote unless they get this certificate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is a different question.

Mr. PARDEE: It is not a different question so far as the purposes of this Act are concerned.

Mr. DOHERTY: They are a class of people from whom the vote to which they would otherwise be entitled is taken by this Act.

Mr. CANNON: And from the wives and the children.

Mr. DOHERTY: If this Act had not stepped in, these women, having become British subjects by marriage, or the children, having become British subjects by the naturalization of their fathers, would have had a vote. This Act steps in and says that people naturalized in that way, though they are British subjects,—it does not say they are not British subjects—

Mr. PARDEE: But it is the question of giving them the vote.

Mr. DOHERTY: This Act takes the vote from them.

Mr. PARDEE: But it gives it back to them if they get this certificate.

Mr. DOHERTY: Subject to certain conditions, it gives it back, but in doing both these things it is dealing with the right to vote,—granting or refusing, but always granting or refusing to a person who is a British subject. But as to the other class, we have to get over that other hurdle; perhaps it is only a sentimental thing—

Mr. PARDEE: I think it is.

Mr. DOHERTY: But I am not so sure that there are not some sentimental things that have value in the life of a nation.

Mr. PARDEE: Quite true.

Mr. DOHERTY: Surely the hon. gentleman will concede that it would be an undesirable thing to give the vote to a man who is not a British subject; that it would be better to find a way to make him a British subject than to try to find a way to give him a vote when he is not a British subject.

Mr. BUREAU: If you take the vote away from a British subject you may as well give it to one who is not.

Mr. DOHERTY: There are other British subjects who do not have votes.

Mr. CANNON: The minister's chief argument as against giving the vote to the first class, those who are not British subjects, was that that would involve an amendment of the Naturalization Law, and, as regards the second class, the wives and children, the electoral law says that they must secure from a judge a certificate before voting. According to the Naturalization Act, these people are British subjects. Section 1, paragraph 3 of the Naturalization Act says:

> Nothing in this section shall, except as otherwise expressly provided, affect the status of any person born before the commencement of this Act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That applies only to natural-born British subjects.

Mr. CANNON: No.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Read the heading.

Mr. CANNON: I have read it. So that according to this Act a woman is a British subject and her status can be changed by the Franchise Act. If we change it as is done in the Franchise Act, we are amending the Naturalization Act.

Mr. DOHERTY: I shall be glad, so far as it is in my power to do so, to throw any light I can upon the questions arising in regard to the women and the children under this section. But, as I said before, I would like to keep clearly distinct the two classes with which we have been dealing.

In that regard, it does seem to me that our best method is to exhaust every means of meeting the difficulty that results from the Naturalization Act, treating it as a naturalization question, before we resort to amendments to an election Act for the purpose of removing that difficulty—amendments that may cost us the very high price of loss of our Imperial naturalization or of putting upon us in the alternative of taking the position that though we cannot make these people British subjects, yet we give them the vote. This does not seem to me to be the proper origin of the grievance. The grievance is born not of this Act, but of the Naturalization Act. This Act itself, so far as these people are concerned, continues to recognize the principle that the right to vote applies to the British subject or citizen; that that is a sine qua non to the right to vote. All British subjects have not the right to vote, but up to the present no man who is not a British subject has had the right to vote. Now, it is a serious thing to suggest departing from that, and I think that hon. gentlemen might be satisfied to give us an opportunity to see whether we can meet the difficulty in dealing with the Naturalization Act, and to allow this Bill, which upon this question only stands by the principle that to be a voter you must be a British subject, to pass, so far as this particular provision is concerned.

Mr. EULER: I should like to make a few observations and to suggest what appears to me to be a very reasonable and logical remedy. At the outset I may repeat that it should be perfectly plain to the members of the Committee that there are two groups of people under discussion, and that the amendment itself only applies to those who are British subjects by operation of law.

I believe the amedment will give them the franchise if they fulfil a certain condition. But we have entered to-night upon a discussion of another matter, the status of another group of people in this country, who are not Canadian citizens because they are not naturalized, but to whom naturalization should be given. I think the Government itself is admitting that this second group of people, smaller than the first, is of a kind worthy of naturalization because they have for many years considered themselves British subjects. I admit that, in order that this second group of people may be permitted to vote, they must first obtain naturalization, and that the remedy must come through an amendment to the Naturalization Act or the enactment of a new law that will give them the franchise.

When the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) states that it is desirable that all Canadian citizens naturalized in future shall have Imperial naturalization, I agree with him entirely, and I believe that is a highly desirable thing. Last year when the new Naturalization Act was under consideration and the status of these people was being discussed, the Prime Minister at that time promised to take the matter up with the Imperial Government in order that a modification might be made that would permit of the naturalization of these alien people. The Minister of Justice to-night states that he is quite optimistic that that modification will be made. I am very glad to hear that; but I am just a little dubious about the rapidity with which that may be obtained, in the light of what has already taken place, or rather has not so far taken place, because the Naturalization Act of 1919 was passed almost a year ago and it is almost a year since the promise was made, quite honestly and sincerely I think, by the Prime Minister that he would attempt to obtain that modification; yet, to-day, so far as we know, we are precisely in the same position as regards these people as we were a year ago. I fear that if progress is not any more rapid than it has been, it may quite well come to the time of another election before justice is rendered to these people. It was not, apparently, the intention of the British Government, nor of the representatives of the Dominion when this matter was discussed at the Peace Conference, that the Dominions should be tied hard and fast to that ten-year clause. I think the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) will bear me out in that regard, because I think either he himself or the Prime Minister said on the floor of this House last year, when the Naturalization Act was under discussion, that it was intended and stated than that it should be possible for the Dominions, such as Canada, where conditions differed from those in England, to vary their laws with regard to people such as those whose case we have been discussing to-night. I think I am right in that. Yet when the Act was put through the British Parliament, it was so framed, inadvertently, that it became necessary for the Dominions to adopt that holus-bolus as their own. If it be true that it was not originally the intention to make the Act so stringent in this country, and if this slipped, if I may use that expression, inadvertently into the British Act so that it became necessary to make ours the same in order to conform with it, then it should not be difficult to obtain the consent of the British authorities to such a modification, and to obtain it very quickly if it was not originally the intention that the Act should be framed as it is at present. I throw that out as a suggestion. I mean to convey the idea that it should be possible to obtain from the British Government a consent to the modification very quickly, if possible, before this House rises. I should like to make the further suggestion, that if the Government receives a negative reply from the British Government, it then surely becomes the duty of the Canadian Parliament to protect its people by giving them Canadian naturalization.

I want to make this suggestion also, which I think is fair and would solve the difficulty with regard to this group of people which I am free to admit is not as large as the other group which is being enfranchised under this amendment. Why could not this Parliament simply enact, for the purpose of these people, the old naturalization law giving them only Canadian citizenship? I do not mean to say that we should keep on our statute books two naturalization laws permanently; but in order to meet the fair demands of these people who have waited a long time, why should we not re-enact the law which would give them Canadian naturalization, and then, just so soon as you obtain a modification of the Act of last year, we can repeal the Canadian naturalization law? I do not see why that suggestion could not be accepted, and if it could, it would solve the difficulty.

While I am on my feet I should like again to make the suggestion that I do not see what possible harm could be done—and this would obviate the difficulty with regard to these British subjects who are British subjects by operation of law—if you simply strike out subclause 2 of clause 29 and base the vote on broad British citizenship instead of compelling women—and this is absolutely true as I showed the other night—who have had sons at the war, who have had sons killed in the war— to appear before a judge in order to prove that they are worthy of the franchise, when it is admitted that they are British subjects, and when their husbands can go to the polls without appearing before a judge. They are British subjects by operation of the law, so why should they have to appear before a judge to prove that they have a right to vote?

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. FIELDING: I sympathize very warmly with the view of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) that we should, if possible, find a remedy for this grievance without interfering with the Naturalization Act which is, I think, of great value and importance to Canada. We had, as has been referred to in this discussion, a number of very distinguished citizens in Canada who thought they were British subjects, but who, while they were British subjects on this side of the Atlantic, discovered that they were not British subjects when they landed in Great Britain. After many years an Imperial Naturalization Act was enacted. The distinguished gentleman who is High Commissioner for Canada in London at the present time discovered when he got over there that he was not a British subject although he was a minister of the Crown in Canada. He was born in the United States; he was naturalized in Canada; he was a British subject for all our purposes, but he was not a British subject in Great Britain. It was to remedy that case and other cases of a like character that the Imperial Naturalization Act was passed. I think, in the main, that law is a good one. The Minister of Justice and the Acting Solicitor General have repeatedly referred to negotiations that have been in progress with respect to the naturalization law. I wonder if my hon friends could tell me what was the objective of which the Minister of Justice is so hopeful but of which the Acting Solicitor General is not so hopeful.

Mr. DOHERTY: The difference in our hopefulness is only as to period of time and not as to ultimate attainment. What we had in mind was to endeavour to have an agreement whereby this particular provision of ten years should not be insisted upon as being essential of application in all of the Dominions concerned in order that the certificate of that Dominion should be accepted as meeting the essential requirements for Imperial naturalization. Speaking for myself it seems to me it ought to be possible that, while you might insist upon certain fundamental things as being essential to the legislation of all the countries concerned, in order that the naturalization be effective throughout all those countries, there might fairly be left a certain play of discretion for each country to make additional requirements which it considers necessary to meet its own peculiar conditions.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Who will make the decision as to that?

Mr. DOHERTY: The decision, like all other decisions where you are trying to get concurrent action, would have to be by agreement.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A conference?

Mr. DOHERTY: You may do something by correspondence, you may do something by getting together, but I would hope that such a decision might be arrived at without calling a formal Imperial Conference to discuss the matter. I cannot promise, I do not know how it will strike other people. The hon. gentleman asked what was the purpose we had in view. The purpose we had in view, having this particular thing in mind, but not confining ourselves absolutely to that, was, speaking for myself, just what I have stated, that it ought to be possible. We have laid the foundation, we have got all these essential conditions which everybody was agreed should be the conditions of imperial naturalization, and it seems to me it ought to be quite within the bounds of possibility to continue to recognize all round the naturalizations as imperial as long as those fundamental things are adhered to, but still leave some opportunity for making suitable provisions in each country to meet conditions that may be peculiar to itself, those conditions taking the form of additional requirements.

Mr. FIELDING: The ten-year clause, I understand, is the real cause of the trouble; that is the snag. I understand that what my hon. friend has in mind is that they shall induce the British Government and the other parties to agree to reduce that period either generally or as respects Canada. Am I right?

Mr. DOHERTY: That is the object.

Mr. FIELDING: I understand that the hon. gentleman suggests that it might be reduced. Well, I know enough about the slowness of making changes over there to be a little less confident than my hon. friend is as to an early solution along these lines. The desire for uniformity in a naturalization law is very strong, and a proposal that you vary that uniformity and provide that there may be one condition for one Dominion and another condition for another will be objected to very strongly. I am inclined to think that the British Government will be slow to agree to a change. If I could feel it was coming very quickly, perhaps I would not feel there was any need of doing anything else. But why should we not in the meantime act on the suggestion of my hon. friend from North Waterloo and provide that these people who should be qualified, being naturalized under our hitherto law, so to speak, shall continue to be deemed British subjects in Canada for the purpose of voting. My hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) has said they are not British subjects. He assumes that now we have adopted this naturalization law a man can only be a British subject when he is a British subject recognized by the Imperial Act. But we have had two kinds of naturalization law in Canada for fifty years. We have had a naturalization law for Great Britain, and we have had a naturalization law for Canada. I agree that it is desirable that there should be uniformity, but we have had two kinds of naturalization law for half a century, and when we find that by this sudden change we are shutting out a worthy class of our people from the privilege of the franchise I can see no difficulty in passing an Act not touching naturalization law for imperial purposes, but providing that these persons, being otherwise properly qualified, shall be deemed to be British subjects in Canada so far as to entitle them to vote. I see no difficulty in doing that at all.

Mr. ROWELL: My hon. friend is in error in his statement that we have had two classes of naturalization under our Canadian law for the past fifty years. Speaking from recollection, we only had the one Act relating to naturalization in force prior to the recent imperial naturalization going into effect.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend sees what I mean.

Mr. ROWELL: It is quite true that a man born a British subject had the rights of a British citizen in all portions of the Empire. In that respect he stood in a different position from the man naturalized under our Canadian law, who did not have the right of British citizenship outside the Dominion.

As my hon. friend from North Waterloo has referred to the proceedings of the Imperial Conference when these and kindred questions were under consideration I desire to make just a brief reference to that, because I think it will throw some light on the present situation and on the prospect of reaching an understanding with the British government in reference to it. There are in the Imperial Naturalization Law—I am now referring to the Act passed by the British House of Commons in 1919 amending the existing naturalization law—two parts. One part of that Act relates to British citizenship throughout the whole Empire, and in order to secure the rights of British citizenship in all portions of the Empire the provisions of that portion of the Act would have to be complied with. There is another portion of the Act which relates particularly to procedure and practice in Great Britain. When the matter was before us at the Imperial Conference, speaking for myself, I understood that this ten year limitation was to go into the section of the Act that related to practice and procedure so far as Great Britain was concerned. It was a provision which, I understood, they considered it necessary under the existing conditions of public sentiment in Great Britain to incorporate in the law. So far as we were concerned we did not consider such a measure at that time was necessary, having regard to the conditions prevailing in Canada. I know that we did not assume at that time that we were assenting to that proposal as part of the general Imperial naturalization law. When the Act was passed, however, it was found that that section was in the portion of the Act that governed Imperial citizenship, and therefore when the Acting Solicitor General introduced the Bill last session, in order to bring our law into harmony with the general Imperial Act so that naturalization under our law would carry the right to British citizenship throughout the Empire, it was necessary for him to incorporate that provision also in our law. This matter was fully explained to the House when the Act was before us last session. I believe it will be possible—I may be wrong. I appreciate what my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) has said, it does take time and sometimes a great deal of time, to reach an understanding but I belive it will be possible—to reach an understanding on this point. For two reasons: First, I doubt if they have any such conditions prevailing in England as we have in Canada in relation to the particular class of citizens whose position has been under consideration to-night, namely: those who have come and lived here for years as citizens, and many of whom have been exercising the rights of citizenship, without technically having those rights. Therefore, I do not believe there will be objection, or should be objection on the part of Great Britain to a modification of the general law so as to permit of the naturalization of the class of citizens my hon. friend has referred to, to give them under the general law British citizenship throughout the world. Secondly, prevailing public opinion in Great Britain on this question is very different to-day from what it was in the midst of the war. Hon. members will realize that passing a naturalization law while the war was still on under the conditions that existed in Great Britain in June and July of the year 1918, is quite a different matter from passing a similar law under the conditions that exist in 1920. I think it is well within the range of possibility, even probability, that if the Imperial Parliament were passing that law to-day they might make a somewhat different provision from the one now in the Act. But having regard to the two considerations, first, that it is doubtful whether there exists in Great Britain, or possibly in any portion of the Empire, a situation such as we have in Canada, and secondly, the change in public sentiment and public temperament from the war situation in 1918 to the condition existing to-day, I believe we have good grounds for hoping that we may secure such a modification of the law as will permit the naturalization of those whose position has been discussed to-night. It is quite true that we could revive Canadian naturalization. That law has been repealed, but this Parliament could re-enact it and we could grant Canadian citizenship to those classes of people who have been referred to to-night. But I do not believe that it is desirable to re-establish a special class of Canadian citizens at this time if we can meet the situation in the other way; and until we have a refusal from the British Government to consider those proposals which the Minister of Justice is working on, we should not depart from the principle that is already recognized of having one citizenship throughout the Emprie.

Mr. EULER: Does the minister think that it is within the bounds of probability, at any rate, that we may get that reply from the British Government before the House rises?

Mr. ROWELL: It is possible; I cannot say that it is probable.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would it not be possible to take up this matter by cable through the High Commissioner in London at once with a view to obtaining some answer that could be given to Parliament in a day or two?

Mr. ROWELL: I doubt whether we could get an answer in a day or two. My hon. friend will realize that in connection with matters of this kind you are not likely to get a reply in such a brief space of time. I may say, however, that it is the intention of the Minister of Justice to use the cable, and so far as lies within our power, we shall secure the earliest possible reply.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad to hear the minister say that it is the intention of the Government to take this matter up by cable. I should think that if the Government were to represent to the British authorities that this Parliament is in session and is anxious to have this matter settled before prorogation, there would be every tendency on the part of the British office to facilitate matters. It is just a matter of the Government making their representations strong enough.

Mr. EULER: Will it be possible for the House to amend the Naturalization Act before the British Parliament has amended its Act in this particular?

Mr. ROWELL: I think the Act would have to be amended by the British Parliament before our naturalization could be made effective. All we could get by cable would be the answer of the British Government that they would or would not submit legislation to Parliament to cover the matter; but I should think that if they submitted legislation to Parliament that legislation would go through.

Mr. EULER: But it would not be possible for this Parliament to enact legislation at this session, under the best circumstances, according to the statement of the minister. If before we can legally do anything in this matter it is necessary for the British Parliament first to make their change, then, if they are not now in session, it would be impossible for us to enact legislation at this session.

Mr. ROWELL: One cannot, of course, say anything so far as that is concerned until one knows what answer the British Government will make as to what they are prepared to do.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON: I would not presume to follow the more or less involved legal discussion that has taken place to-night; but it seems to me, if I have been able to grasp the trend of the debate, that it is in the mind of the Government and of those who have been discussing this subject that the enactment of 1919, under which enemy aliens of German, Austrian, Bulgarian or Turkish origin cannot be granted the franchise in Canada or be naturalized for ten years after the signing of the Armistice, is to be amended and we are going to go back to conditions that prevailed before 1914 under which all these classes, without any effort being made to determine their qualifications for Canadian citizenship, might be naturalized and, as I heard an hon. member say to-night, be made Canadian citizens by the hundred overnight. I realize that what my hon. friend from North Waterloo has said with regard to certain individuals who have lived in this country for a long time may be correct; there may be some people of that class. But I would say to my hon. friend in this connection that if, as I understood him and as I think I understood the hon. member for West Lambton to say, there are men who have lived in Canada for twenty, thirty or forty years, having come to this country from Germany, Austria or Bulgaria, and who had not become British subjects up to 1914, then having lived in Canada all these years prior to 1914 without having manifested any desire to become British or Canadian citizens willing to share the full responsibilities which Canadians had to bear during the years of the war, they can very well wait for the period of time which it has been deemed wise for men of enemy countries to wait following the signing of the Armistice.

Mr. EULER: Is the hon. member aware that some of the men of whom he speaks actually had sons in the war who cannot get naturalization now?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I appreciate that fact, and if a means can be found to remedy that condition without opening the door wide, as is the apparent desire to-night, to all of these people of enemy origin so as to allow them to become enfranchised citizens, then I would be willing to go all the way in the interests of those men who had seen service in the war. But the whole trend of the discussion has implied a desire on the part of hon. members, not to rectify such specific defects as mentioned by my hon. friend (Mr. Euler), but to go back to conditions under which we were having dumped into sections of this country, night and day through a slipshod form of enfranchisement, hundreds of people who knew absolutely nothing of Canadian ideals and who evidenced the fact that they lacked all sense of Canadianism; for if they had Canadian ideals they would have become Canadian citizens before 1914. I am not considering this question from any partisan standpoint, but I say that it is absolutely unfair to those Canadian citizens who bore the burden of the war to say, now that the war is over, that we are going to open the door wide to Germans, Austrians, Bulgarians and Turks, and tell those people: "You can come to Canada and get identically the same privileges as are enjoyed by those citizens who palyed their part in the war and whose sons stood face to face with men of your origin in the trenches in France and Flanders and elsewhere". Before the Government goes very far in the direction of throwing the door wide open let me warn them that they are going to raise a question in this country that will not be easily settled.

Mr. FIELDING: I would like to call the attention of the Government to the difficulty of getting an answer from the British Government. Before an answer can be given it will require a decision of the British Government and decisions of governments, even of this Government, are not obtained very quickly. Having obtained the decision of the British Government, you require to have an Act of the British Parliament and that is something that will be attended with much difficulty. The minister has told us that negotiations were conducted between the British and Canadian Governments before this Act was framed. I take it that there were similar negotiations with the governments of the other British dominions. This Act has been something in the nature of a Treaty between Canada, Great Britain and the various overseas dominions and they will all have to be consulted before a change takes place. Taking all these things into account I am not in the least bit sanguine that a measure of immediate relief can be obtained in that direction. If there is a grievance, and the minister thinks there is a grievance, I think it will be better to seek the remedy in another way.

Mr. JACOBS: This section requires a few amendments in order to be acceptable. I think the Gordian knot ought to be cut by the minister who has the Bill in charge by striking out subsection 2 completely. That would give satisfaction all round. I consider subsection 2 a blot upon the Bill. To my mind it is nothing but arrant nonsense. I have stated this several times before when Franchise Bills similar to this were before the House, and I see nothing so far to cause me to change my view. We have not heard a word this evening in justification of the second part of subsection 2 which makes a distinction between people born on the continent of North America and people born in other parts of the world. The minister has not so far enlightened us as to why this distinction is being made. Before proceeding any further I should like to know why it is found in this Bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Because we recognize that people born on this continent are very similar in their ideas, laws, customs and habits to our own people and we can very quickly assimilate them to our ways, and that therefore we permit them to vote without any injustice to ourselves and without as long a period of probation as we require of people from central Europe or from other parts of the world.

Mr. JACOBS: Not central Europe. This takes in the whole of Europe, and includes France and Belgium.

Mr. GUTHRIE: From Europe. They are not accustomed to our ways, language, laws and political institutions. That is the reason for the distinction to be found in the Bill. Perhaps there may be other reasons, but that is the main reason. I think I can assure the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) that the Government has no intention whatever of indiscriminately opening wide the door to permit all the classes of people that we have been discussing to-night to come in and obtain naturalization as British subjects. There will be investigation and inquiry. There may be some worthy and some unworthy ones and I do not for a moment say that all the fathers of the boys who served in the war should vote. Certainly they will never vote in my riding with my consent. I could cite the concrete case of two young men of German parentage who went to the war, one of whom won the military cross. The father would not allow them to come home to bid good-bye to their mother; he threatened to shoot them. Do you think that man should have a vote? I would keep that man ten years on probation. I do not say that is the general thing but I do say that no government would be justified in indiscriminately throwing open the door and admitting everybody. There would be an inquiry so that the worthy ones may be rewarded and the unworthy ones put on probation.

Mr. JACOBS: The Acting Solicitor General is a very skilful lawyer. He skated over thin ice with regard to the question I asked him but he was very precise about what he would do to the man who wanted to shoot his sons. The official reason is the one he gave but there are unofficial reasons which he has not given why people from France or Belgium, speaking the same language as a third of the people of this Dominion, are placed in a category beneath that of people coming from Mexico. I am not satisfied with the explanation given by the hon. gentleman and I feel certain that none of the hon. gentlemen on this side are satisfied either.

I cannot understand why it is that a person becomes a better citizen by obtaining from a court a certificate that he is entitled to vote. How does that affect the party who obtains the certificate? The object of this law is a very simple one. It is to put as many stumbling blocks and objections as can be thought of in the way of foreigners casting their votes on election day. We may camouflage it under the garb of patriotism, but the object is very plain. In my own division there will be 5,000 women affected by this Act in the next election. They will have to obtain a certificate from a judge that they are entitled to vote. Just imagine 5,000 people in one division of the city of Montreal alone! The court house will be besieged, it will be impossible for the judges, working eight hours a day, to give the certificates out in two months before the election. And that is only in one division of the city of Montreal, to say nothing of the other places throughout Canada where they have a large foreign vote. I would ask the Acting Solicitor General if that is fair, right or just. He came before the House when the Bill was originally introduced and said that he wanted to be fair, just and impartial in this particular case. Why did he protest so much that he wanted to be fair, just and impartial in introducing this particular Act. When it was introduced before the House I pointed out one of the most glaring pieces of injustice that we have ever had in our statutes. If the Government has a sense of justice it should see to it that this section is struck out. Surely if the Minister of Justice does not want to do justice to the people in my riding he at least wants to do justice to the people in his own. Then the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) whose constituency adjoins my own, has a large number of people who will be affected in the way I have indicated. Is it because the Minister of Marine thinks that these people do not appreciate his work that he will sit quietly by and allow this law to go through? What is the reason he does not rise to protest against it when so many of the voters in his constituency are affected this way? As to the hon. member for St. Antoine (Sir Herbert Ames) he is not here, and therefore I do not want to say anything about him in connection with this matter. He is a gentleman for whom I have a very great deal of regard but, as I said before, he is probably not interested because he has gone to his reward. De mortuis nil nisi bonum.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to learn that the gift of prophecy with which my ancestors were endowed has fallen upon me. Last year when this Naturalization Bill was before the House I predicted what would happen by the abrogation of our local Naturalization Act, and the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) stated that nothing that I predicted could happen. But it has occurred. It was a case, Mr. Chairman, where we grasped at the shadow and dropped the substance. We had an Act that was workable. It was made in Canada, and for that reason ought to commend itself to good Canadians. But we were not satisfied with it. We wanted to go abroad to obtain our legislation, and we went to London and we got this legislation from them; and as I said before they told us, "You have to take it in its entirety or else not take it at all." We were so anxious for it that we took it with all its faults, and as soon as it appeared upon the statute books—on the very day this foreign piece of legislation was placed upon our statute books—we dropped our own local Act. Now we are casting about in the dark and discussing with ourselves what we are going to do to give relief to these people who are affected, and for whom so much sympathy has been so eloquently expressed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) this evening. Had that Act which we had on our statute book for many years, our own local Act, not been abrogated, there would have been no difficulty at all; the people who are affected by this Bill could have voted under the local Naturalization Act. Then we could have what I might call our "Sunday" Act, our "window dressed" Act, on the statute books, and every one would have been satisfied.

Mr. BUREAU: The swallow-tail-coat Act.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, the swallow-tail-coat Act as my hon. friend has said. But the trouble, Mr. Chairman, is that we always like to worship something from afar; we like to worship false gods; and we find ourselves in this condition purely because we dropped and wiped off the statute books an Act that would have given satisfaction all around, and took on this legislation which gives satisfaction to none. I do not know how the Government are going to explain to any respectable body of foreign-born what they had in mind by putting on the statute books this subsection 2 of section 29. The hon. gentleman thinks he has improved it with amendments. I remember when the weakness in the armour was discovered by the hon. member for North Waterloo on the occasion of the second reading of the Bill. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) rushed to the rescue and pointed out that the section did not mean what it said it meant. Now the Acting Solicitor General has introduced an amendment which he says, in effect, is going to correct the difficulty. The hon. member for North Waterloo, however, says that the Under Secretary of State agrees with him and disagrees with the Acting Solicitor General with regard to the meaning of certain words in this section when these are read with the words of another section of the Act. Now all this difficulty we can rid ourselves of by simply striking out the section which pleases no one, and which cannot please the Acting Solicitor General —to my mind it does not, because he is too good a lawyer to believe that any section such as that would meet with any commendation from lawyers or the community generally. It is bad in its inception, it is unjust in its conception; and for that reason I could have hoped that it had been stifled in its birth. I am satisfied to accept the other sections of the Bill, which I read over very carefully, and which I think are fairly just.

An hon. MEMBER: Not all.

Mr. JACOBS: Not all, but as much as we could expect from gentlemen who do not think as we do in some things. I scarcely believe the phrase, "nothing good can come out of Nazareth." Sometimes something good does come out; and I would be willing to give my unqualified praise if the hon. gentleman will consent, now that he is in an amending mood, to strike out this obnoxious clause from the Act. I may say that so long as I am a member of the House —this is not in the way of a threat, but it is a prediction—I will introduce, year after year, Bills to amend this obnoxious section, if it becomes law, until it is finally taken from the statute book. In other words I intend to picket the Government—I trust the Minister of Justice undertsands what I mean by that—I intend to picket the Government until this obnoxious section is removed.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. BUREAU: No. This important amendment has not been half discussed yet, we are only getting started. I move that the committee rise and report progress. It is one o'clock. The Railway Committee meets in a few hours, and there are important measures to be brought before that committee. I think we have done a good day's work. Sitting from three o'clock in the afternoon till one o'clock the next morning is a longer spell than my hon. friend the President of the Privy Council, at the International Labour Conference, agreed to allow the people to work in this country, and we do not want to set a bad example.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have not done very badly to-night, we have done fairly well, and were we to sit for another hour we would have done even better. I have no objection under the circumstances to ask the committee to rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

On the motion of Rt. Hon. Mr. Doherty, the House adjourned at 1.05 a.m. (Thursday).

Thursday, May 6, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BATTLEFIELDS MEMORIALS.

Hon. S. C. MEWBURN (Hamilton East) presented the first report of the special committee appointed to consider and report upon the question of what memorials, if any, shall be erected on the battlefields of the late war.

Mr. MEWBURN moved:

That the first report of the Special Committee appointed to consider and report upon the question of what memorials, if any, should be erected upon the battlefields of the late war, together with the statements and evidence attached thereto, be printed for the information of members of the House, and that rule 74 be suspended in reference thereto.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the requisite notice for such a motion, it can, of course, be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY—STANDARDIZATION OF PARTS.

Mr. A. B. McCOIG (Kent, Ont.) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 112, to provide for the standardization of parts of agricultural machinery.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have not seen a copy of the Bill and, therefore, I do not know what it contains; but from the title, as it appears on the Order Paper, there may be some question whether the subject matter has reference to trade, and if it has, the hon. member could proceed only by resolution. Subject to that consideration, the Bill may receive its introduction.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. McCOIG: The object of this Bill is not as some hon. members seem to think. We are asking for the standardization, not of agricultural implements, but simply of some of the interchangeable parts, and that can be very easily done without any great expense to the manufacturers and with great convenience to users of agricultural machinery throughout the country.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

SENATE BILLS.

Bill No. 110 (letter Z2 of the Senate), for the relief of Nellie Adeline Wallace.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 111 (Letter A3 of the Senate), for the relief of Marion Olive Booth.—Mr. Blake.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SALARIES OF THOSE RECEIVING BONUS.

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. What is the total yearly amount of salary paid to those who are to receive bonuses of $12,500,000?
2. What will be the average percentage per $1,000 of salary?

Hon. Mr. ROWELL: The preparation of an answer to this question would involve a computation in all branches of the Government of the salaries of those receiving a bonus, as distinct from all who are paid current rates of pay, and the average percentage on the basis of $1,000 of salary, one would think, would not have any particular value, because the bonus is not based on percentages. If the hon. member who has propounded the question has any particular information he desires to get, I should be glad to assist him in getting it, but it would involve a great deal of time and trouble to prepare an answer to this question as it stands.

REVEREND A. E. BURKE.

*Mr. BROUILLARD:

1. Was the Reverend A. E. Burke connected with the Chaplain Service of the Canadian Expeditionary Force in the late war?
2. If so, when did such connection cease and why?
3. Prior to, during, or after his connection with the said chaplain service, did Dr. Burke visit Bermuda or the West Indies?
4. If so, for what purpose?
5. Did Dr. Burke present a bill or account to the Government or to one of its departments for the said trip?
6. If so, what was the amount, when and by whom was it paid?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Yes.
2. 21st September, 1917. Surplus in his rank to establishment and requirements.
3. Yes.
4. While on leave with permission to proceed to Washington, D.C., he appears to have visited the West Indies (Cuba).
5. Yes; to the Department of Militia and Defence.
6. $882.20. Payment refused by the Department of Militia and Defence.

MILITIA DEPARTMENT PERMANENT APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. POWER:

1. Are arrangements being made for the making of a number of permanent appointments throughout the Department of Militia and Defence?
2. If so, how many returned soldiers have been recommended for permanency by the department?
3. How many civilians?
4. Of the civilians recommended, is there in each case no returned soldier presently employed by the department possessing the minimum qualifications for the position being filled?
5. What is the guiding principle in the selection of men for permanency?
6. If length of service is considered, will the military service of a returned man be reckoned against the clerical service of a man who did not proceed overseas?

Hon. Mr. GUTHRIE: A classification of the Department of Militia and Defence has been submitted to the Civil Service Commission. In every case where a returned soldier is holding a position which it is proposed to make permanent, his name has been submitted for appointment.

With regard to the other positions, it has been suggested to the Civil Service Commission that these positions should be thrown open to competition, thereby giving returned soldiers an opportunity of obtaining appointment to the same.

TORONTO SUBURBAN RAILWAY—PAID-UP CAPITAL.

Mr. DECHENE:

1. What was the actual paid-up capital of the Toronto Suburban railway on the 27th September, 1918?
2. Who were president, vice-president, directors and general manager of said company on said date?
3. What amount was paid to this company for (a) actual costs, (b) other rights and privileges?
4. When were said sums paid?
5. Did the Canadian Northern Railway buy only the stock of this company or did it buy the movable and unmovable property of this company?

Hon. Mr. CALDER:

1. $1,500,000.
2. President, Sir William Mackenzie; directors, Mr. L. W. Mitchell, Mr. F. H. Phippen, Mr. C. G Royce; general manager, Mr. C. G. Royce.
3. As the Canadian Northern Railway acquired all the assets of this company by assuming the liabilities there was no actual cash transaction between the companies.
4. Answered by No. 3.
5. Answered by No. 3.

TORONTO EASTERN—PAID-UP CAPITAL.

Mr. DECHENE:

1. What was the actual paid-up capital of the Toronto Eastern Company on the 27th September, 1918?
2. Who were president, vice-president, directors and general manager of said company on said date?
3. What amount was paid to this company for (a) actual costs, (b) other rights and privileges?
4. When were said sums paid?
5. Did the Canadian Northern Railway buy only the stock of this company or did it buy the movable and unmovable property of this company?

Hon. Mr. CALDER:

1. $250,000.
2. The provisional officers were: President, Mr. W. H. Moore; vice-president, Mr. A. J. Mitchell; directors, Mr. R. G. O. Thompson, Mr H S. Gausby, Mr. E R Gosset. As this railway was not in operation there was no general manager.
3. As the Canadian Northern Railway acquired all the assets of this company by assuming the cost of construction there was no actual cash transactions between the companies.
4. Answered by No. 3.
5. Answered by No. 3.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN.

Mr. HOCKEN:

1. How many persons are employed on the staff of the Civil Service Commission?
2. What are their names?
3. What are the respective salaries of said persons?

TAXATION OF MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to an item in this morning's Gazette, in the third column of page 4, regarding the proposed taxation of unlicensed mutual fire insurance companies. I shall summarize the article before putting my question. It is headed "Mutuals Face Taxation—Probably by Government Bill; Hope Less than 15 P.C.," and goes on to say that a committee of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association waited on the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries yesterday regarding this proposed taxation and were very courteously received—

Mr. BUREAU: Something new.

Mr. RINFRET:—but were not given much encouragement to hope that these companies would not be taxed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Cannot the hon. member put his question?

Mr. RINFRET: I am coming to it. The report goes on to state that any proposal in this connection would probably not be brought down in the Budget, but later as a Government Bill, and the tax may not be 15 per cent. I would ask the Minister of Finance if this report is accurate? My reason for asking is that I put a question on the Order Paper with reference to this matter and I simply got the reply that the information would be given when the legislation was brought down. I should like to know if this information was given to a private delegation and refused to a member of the House.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (Minister of Finance): I do not know whether the hon. member is satisfied with what was told the delegation, but if he is, I am afraid he is satisfied with very little. The Government are looking for revenues. They are considering revenues at every possible point. It has not yet been determined what will be done in connection with the matter to which my hon. friend has referred. As I stated yesterday, the Government's intention will be made known when the appropriate legislation if any, is brought down.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—PENSIONS COMMITTEE.

STATEMENT BY MR. HUME CRONYN, CHAIRMAN OF THE PENSIONS COMMITTEE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. HUME CRONYN (London): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The Ottawa Citizen in this morning's issue publishes the letter of resignation of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Peck) from the Committee of Pensions and Re-establishment. In that letter the following statements are made:

I therefore resign, not only to protest in the name of the widows of the hundreds of brave men whom I had the honour of leading in the late war, but as a protest against a deplorable attempt on two successive days to camouflage the incident, and also as a protest in the name of common honesty and decency. I cannot bring myself to believe that actions such as have taken place are a credit to the committee or Parliament.

With the consent of the Pensions Committee, I desire to state that at this morning's session, on the written request of Mr. C. S. Blue, the official reporter present when the statements complained of were uttered by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. H. H. McLean), the whole question was fully investigated and the original stenographic notes—

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand the hon. member rises to a question of privilege on behalf of the committee, or on behalf of himself? In either case, I have to point out that it is a well-established rule of the House that there can be no reference in the House to the proceedings of any committee of the House until the report of that committee is before the House for consideration. Bearing that in mind, it is somewhat difficult to know how the hon. gentleman could properly refer to the proceedings before a committee, that committee not having reported.

Mr. CRONYN: The question of privilege is one in which I as chairman of the committee, am distinctly involved. I make this explanation on my own behalf, although I make it with the consent of the committee.

The whole question was fully investigated and the original stenographic notes were transcribed under oath by Mr. Blue.

Mr. SPEAKER: I regret very much to have to interrupt the hon. member, but if he desires to take exception to some statement with reference to himself which has been made in the public press, and to give a denial thereto, he would be in order on a question of privilege. On the other hand, if he wishes to set right a proceeding which took place before a committee of the House he certainly would not be in order in doing so at this stage.

Mr. CRONYN: I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to put this statement on record.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): In view of the position which this matter has assumed, both for members of Parliament and the public, it seems to me it would be well that an explanation of it should be heard, and I hope that the unanimous consent of the House will be given.

Mr. SPEAKER: Of course, the House can give its unanimous consent, and under the circumstances I have very great pleasure in putting the question whether the hon. member shall have the unanimous consent of the House to make his statement.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): If it be in accordance with the rules might I ask the hon. gentleman who leads the Government to repeat the remarks he has just made. I did not hear a syllable of them, and therefore I could not possibly act intelligently on a question based on any argument he delivered to the House.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: What I intended to say was this: Inasmuch as this matter has assumed a good deal of prominence and is of interest both to members of Parliament and to the public outside, I think it would be well that an authoritative statement should be made and go out to the country, and in that sense I think it would be a wise proceeding for us to give unanimous consent to hearing a statement from the responsible chairman of the committee.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU: Is the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Peck) present?

Mr. M. CLARK: If the hon. member is allowed to make a statement by unanimous consent, I should like to know how far the House will be allowed to go into the whole question. I should like to know exactly how far we are going against what is the rule, as stated by yourself, Mr. Speaker.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Where we would seem to get would be this: Instead of having conflicting statements first from one side and then from the other, we should have what I suppose might be considered a disinterested authoritative statement from the chairman of the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh no.

Mr. SPEAKER: There can be no debate upon the calling of the Orders of the Day. I take it that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) does not give his consent to the statement being made by the hon. member for London (Mr. Cronyn).

Mr. M. CLARK: I do not want to put myself in opposition to any sentiment that is general all over the House, but I should like to know on what ground the leader of the House can call the statement of the chairman of the committee the authoritative statement. The statement of the hon. member for Skeena, if it differs from the statement of the chairman, is just as authoritative to members of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not see how we can have debate on this question. It seems to me the House must either give or refuse unanimous consent. If any one member objects, unanimous consent, of course, cannot be given. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member (Mr. Cronyn) should have leave to make his statement?

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Beauce): The hon. member for Skeena is not present this afternoon and I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, the propriety of discussing this question on a motion for the adjournment of the House, to-morrow, for instance, when the hon. member for Skeena may be present and explain his side of the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: I shall have to ask the hon. member, in view of the fact that he cannot obtain the unanimous consent of the House, to refrain from making any further statement at the present time.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order being called for the second reading of Bill No. 108 to amend the Exchequer Court Act:

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The Bill has not been distributed and I do not know whether the leader of the Opposition will object to our proceeding.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: I would point out to my hon. friend that we did not conclude yesterday's business until one o'clock this morning and this measure was given its first reading only yesterday. I would therefore ask that this order stand.

Motion stands.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT.

The House resumed, from May 5, consideration in committee of Bill No. 12 (Hon. Mr. Guthrie) respecting the election of members of the House of Commons and the electoral franchise.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When progress was last reported upon this Bill all of the clauses and schedules had been read and considered. Paragraph (k) of clause 2, clauses 29, 32, 37, 44, 45, 63 and 101, the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Gloucester to clause 37 and by the hon. the Acting Solicitor General to clauses 29, 44 and 101 have been allowed to stand for further consideration. The other clauses have been adopted. Clauses 19 and 76 which provide for the expenditure of money cannot be adopted until the House has concurred in the required resolution. The question is upon the amendment proposed to clause 29. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Guthrie moves to amend clause 29 by adding to the said clause the following words:

> Provided that no disability imposed by paragraph (b) of subsection 4 of section 8 of "The Naturalization Act," chapter thirty-eight of the Statutes of 1919, (first session) shall disentitle a person on that ground alone to the said certificate.

Mr. BUREAU: Last night when we had a discussion on this clause the Acting Solicitor General intimated that it was not the intention of the Act to disfranchise any one, but when my hon. friend from Lambton urged that those who had been in this country for a certain number of years and had proved themselves good citizens should be afforded some means whereby to acquire citizenship in order to enable them to vote at elections, the Naturalization Act was raised as the bar sinister to any such proposition. I gathered from the remarks that were made in that respect that the Naturalization Act was regarded by a great many hon. gentlemen on the other side as something sacred. British citizenship, in the minds of those hon. gentlemen, is a holy ark that ought to be surrounded by every safeguard and precaution so that its purity may remain absolutely inviolate. Now, Mr. Chairman, accepting that high moral creed of my hon. friends, I do not see why, when the Naturalization Act says that the wife of a British subject is a British subject and the wife of an alien is an alien, we should give to male British subjects the right to vote but deny their wives, who happen to be alien, the privilege their husbands enjoy. We cannot contend that these women have been remiss in the duties of citizenship because they have not personally claimed naturalization. By law they have the same status as their husbands in regard to citizenship. But to-day we are saying to them that unless they were born on the American continent they must go to a judge and get him to certify that they are entitled to vote, in spite of the fact that the law says they can. Among those voters who are naturalized by law there are many Italians and Belgians who are married to French women; and the conclusion has forced itself upon me that the Government is introducing the Naturalization Act in this case because they are afraid of the votes of these women. They know that the women are more sensitive to injustice than perhaps men are, and they are afraid that the uses and abuses to which Orders in Council have been put, and the nefarious ways in which the business of the country has been conducted, will be keenly felt by the women. If this ark of British citizenship is so profoundly sacred to my hon. friends opposite, why in reason's name should they desecrate in order to deprive certain inoffensive and innocent people from a right which belongs to them? If the Government are afraid of the female vote let them be manly enough to come out and say so and eliminate entirely the enfranchisement of the other sex. If they are afraid that the women will go against them let them say outright that no women shall have the vote. But if the women deserve full citizenship by way of recognition of all that they have done in behalf of the country and the intelligence they have shown, then I say that they ought to be put on the same footing as men. I for one cannot support a measure that will tend to make the franchise more difficult for women who are entitled to it than for men, merely by reason of their sex.

Mr. CANNON: Clause 29 which gives the qualification of electors reads:

(1) Save as in this Act otherwise provided, every person, male or female, shall be qualified to vote at the election of a member who, not being an Indian ordinarily resident on an Indian reservation,

(a) is a British subject by birth or naturalization; and,

(b) is of the full age of twenty-one years; and,

(c) has ordinarily resided in Canada for at least twelve months and in the electoral district wherein such person seeks to vote for at least two months immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election.

If I understand the first paragraph correctly, every man and every woman in Canada who is a British subject, twenty-one years of age, and has resided in the electoral district for at least twelve months prior to the election, will be given a vote. This first paragraph establishes a very broad basis for the electoral franchise. When the minister introduced the Bill about a month ago he said that he and the Government generally wanted a fair, broad and generous franchise. His wishes would have been more completely carried out if paragraph 2 had been omitted and the section confined to the first paragraph. Paragraph 2 is as follows:

For the purposes of this Act, the allegiance or nationality of a person, as it was at the birth of such person, shall be deemed incapable of being changed, or of having been changed, merely by reason or in consequence of marriage or change of allegiance or naturalization of any other person, or otherwise than by personal naturalization of such first mentioned person. Provided, however, that this subsection shall not apply to any person born on the continent of North America, nor to any person who in person applies to and obtains from any judge having jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings, a certificate under the hand of such judge and the seal, if any, of his court, to the effect following:

Then follows the certificate. As I understand it, this second paragraph limits and restricts the basis upon which the franchise is granted in the first part of the section, having the effect of excluding the wives and children of naturalized British subjects in Canada—wives and children who have not personally been naturalized, but who are British subjects on account of the naturalization of husband or father.

When this clause first came up for discussion before the committee, the member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) pointed out that its effect would be to disfranchise a considerable number of persons; that if the electoral law was read in conjunction with the Naturalization Act, persons who were not at present naturalized would have to wait ten years before they could obtain their certificate of naturalization, and would therefore be unable to obtain the franchise until 1928. The Acting Solicitor General yesterday brought in the following amendment to section 29:

Provided that no disability imposed by paragraph (b) of subsection 4 of section 8 of "The Naturalization Act," chapter 38 of the statutes of 1919 (first session), shall disentitle a person on that ground alone to the said certificate.

That amendment has reference to the following subsection in the Naturalization Act:

No certificate of naturalization shall, before the expiration of a period of ten years after the termination of the present war, be granted in Canada to any subject of a country which at the time of the passing of this Act was at war with His Majesty, but this provision shall not apply to a person who,

(1) having served in His Majesty's forces or in the forces of His Majesty's Allies or of any country acting in naval or military co-operation with His Majesty was not discharged from such service by reason of his enemy nationality, sympathy or associations; or,

(2) is a member of a race or community known to be opposed to the enemy governments; or,

(3) was at birth a British subject.

As I understand it, the Acting Solicitor General's amendment relates not to the case of women and children, but simply to the case of the men. But the men are in no way affected by section 29, so that the amendment does not in any way improve that section. The amendment provides that even though certain persons may not be naturalized for ten years to come, they are not debarred from obtaining a certificate. Women and children do not need to be naturalized, Mr. Chairman. Section 11 of the Naturalization Act provides that the wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject—not by birth, not by naturalization; simply a British subject.

Take the case of an American who came to Canada and was naturalized and became a British subject after having lived in Canada the necessary length of time; the wife of that American becomes a British subject by the mere fact that her husband has become a British subject. An Austrian crossed over to America, came to Canada and was naturalized and became a British subject under our law. In accordance with the provisions of the Naturalization Act, the wife of that Austrian is a British subject. It cannot be denied—and the statement of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) last night bears me out—that the wife of a British subject by naturalization or by birth is a British subject no matter whether her husband is an Austrian, a German, an American, a Frenchman, or a Belgian.

[Mr. Cannon.]

Now, what about the children? Section 13 of the Naturalization Act, subsection 1, provides that the children of a man who is a naturalized British subject are themselves British subjects unless the father chooses subsequently to change his own nationality. Therefore I say that according to the Act as it reads now, the wife and the children of a British subject by naturalization are British subjects. The argument brought forward yesterday by the Acting Solicitor General, by the President of the Privy Council, and even by the Minister of Justice, was to the effect that section 29 had to be put in the law on account of the Naturalization Act as it now reads, and that it would be impossible for this Parliament to amend, change or alter that Act because it was the result of an agreement between the Canadian Government and the Imperial Government. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is no argument at all, because even if the Naturalization Act remains as it is to-day, these women and children are British subjects, and should and would be given a vote under our Franchise Act if paragraph two of section 29 was not added to the law.

As to the amendment which is proposed by the Acting Solicitor General I think it has no bearing on the case. Section two is an amendment to the Naturalization Act. The ministers and the supporters of the Government have contended that we should not touch the Naturalization Act—that if we did so it would be a breach of faith with the Imperial authorities. Well, what did the Government do? They introduced a paragraph in clause 29 of this Franchise Act which in itself is an amendment to the Naturalization Act, because it expressly says that people who are British subjects according to the existing law will not be treated as British subjects at election time but will have to follow special methods and follow a special process before they are given a ballot. It says, Mr. Chairman, that a woman who, according to section eleven, is a British subject in every way, shape or form, will have to go before a tribunal, and will have to be given a certificate, and that a judge who refuses to give that certificate will have the right to debar that person who is a British subject by law from casting her vote at an election. Paragraph two has also the same result and the same consequence as regards the children. According to the Naturalization Act these children are British subjects. The first paragraph of clause 29 of the franchise law says that all British subjects aged twenty-one years, and having a certain period of residence in Canada, are entitled to vote. Notwithstanding the fact that these children may have lived in Canada for thirty years and, that they are British subjects for all other purposes, despite the fact that they are British citizens cannot be denied or challenged, the Government introduced into this law a subparagraph to clause 29 which means that those children will have to go before a judge or a tribunal and will have to obtain a certificate before they are placed on the same level or the same standing as every other British subject in this country. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is altogether unfair and altogether arbitrary, and that this subparagraph ought to be struck out of the Bill altogether. The Minister of the Interior, speaking in the name of and on behalf of the Government, rose in this House the other day and said that the remarks made by the member for Waterloo (Mr. Euler) "have shown that there is such a condition and such a state of things in Canada that we ought to bring in an amendment." The amendment was brought in, but I ask the Minister of the Interior—or any other member of the Government, or any supporter of the Government—to explain how the amendment brought in yesterday can help these wives or help these children to whom I have referred. The amendment simply refers to a clause saying that within ten years after the termination of war no naturalization certificate shall be issued. These women and children do not need these naturalization certificates. According to the law of the country they are British subjects; and the Government by this law is simply withdrawing from them rights which were guaranteed to them—firstly when they were naturalized through the operation of law; and secondly—rights which were guaranteed anew when the Naturalization Act of 1919 was passed by this Parliament.

I assert that the present debate is one of the most important that ever took place in this House. Are we, once and for all, going to lay down the rule that this country will make a contract with people and respect that contract, or are we going to lay down the rule that we can bring people into this country under false pretenses, and break the contracts that we made with those people and the laws which protect them when it suits our purposes, and treat our existing law—our existing certificates of naturalization and the sovereign rights of citizenship in this country—as an ordinary scrap of paper? I think the Government has no right to do that, and that the House should exercise such a pressure upon it that the clause will be changed and every man, woman and child in Canada will know justice and fairness shall prevail when it comes to the rights of the franchise.

Mr. COWAN: When did we enter into a contract with the wives of aliens to whom the hon. gentleman has referred, that they would have the right to vote when they came into Canada?

Mr. CANNON: The law of our country says that if the hon. member for Regina comes from Belgium, settles in Regina, lives there for a certain period of years, and behaves himself in such a way as to show himself to be a good citizen, he is to be given a certificate of naturalization, and he becomes a British subject, enjoying all the rights and privileges of British citizenship, and that his wife and children also have the same privileges and the same rights. That is the law.

Mr. COWAN: We are only giving that privilege to them now. Consequently we never had any previous contract with the parties to whom my hon. friend refers.

Mr. CANNON: I am awfully sorry to disagree with the hon. member but I know something about the law of my country and the rule—which is just as old as the naturalization law itself—is to the effect that the naturalization of a British subject carries with it the naturalization of his wife. So much is this the case that I might quote to my hon. friend the old French saying which declares as regards the wife, "Qui prend mari prend pays," "She who takes a husband takes his country." Who ever heard, Mr. Chairman, that in any properly organized country the husband can be of one nationality, and that the wife in the same household should be of another nationality?

Mr. GUTHRIE: You will find it in the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Who ever heard that in any properly politically organized country the husband could be of one nationality, the wife of another nationality, and the children of a third nationality? Laws are based on rules of common sense. But what is the position created by this law? The Government, afraid of what they call the foreign vote, have taken, I may say, a circuitous means of excluding from the polls people who are British subjects and who have a right to record their votes at the next election.

The other night I heard the member for Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) discussing this question. I have great respect for that gentleman, but to tell the truth, Mr. Chairman, I have more respect for his opinions on railway matters than I have for his opinions on naturalization laws. The member for Algoma was basing his arguments on this question: Are we going to admit on an equal footing at the polls our enemies of yesterday. Then with his usual fluency the hon. member made a very patriotic appeal to this committee. But that is not the question at all, Mr. Chairman. We do not want to take our enemies of yesterday and put them on an equal footing with Canadian citizens we are only asking that those who are British subjects should remain so not only when it comes to making private contracts, not only when it comes to paying taxes, but that they should be British subjects even when it comes to exercising the franchise. That is what we want.

There is a principle of constitutional law, which is well recognized in every country living under the British constitution—the principle of no taxation without representation. We were told yesterday that people who died a hundred ye .rs ago should not be quoted in this House. I think that that ruling is very hard on our Lord who died two thousand years ago. But I will refer to the history of England, and that history records that the greatest constitutional struggles were fought to establish that principle of, no taxation without representation. To-day in this House we may be divided as Liberals on the one side and as Tories on the other, but the Tories of to-day were the Liberals of a hundred years ago. There are no such Tories either in Canada or outside as there were in England only a hundred or a hundred and fifty years ago.

Mr. McMASTER: They are a couple of generations behind.

Mr. CANNON: I say that every public man ought to support the principle for which John Hampden fought, the principle which brought about the English Revolution, the principle which brought Charles the First to the scaffold—a principle which is not only radical and liberal, but which should be respected by every man who knows anything about the history of England or appreciates constitutional liberty. To-day the wives and children of these British subjects are treated as citizens of Canada, and as such they have to pay their share of taxation into the public purse. They were British subjects yesterday, they are British subjects to-day, and they will be British subjects to-morrow notwithstanding the provisions of the Franchise law, and I contend that we have no right to exclude them from the franchise.

I admire the way in which the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) has conducted this Bill through committee. He was always willing to accept every fair suggestion whether made by hon. members on his own side or by hon. members on this side of the House. And the question that I put to him to-day, through you, Mr. Chairman, is one that should appeal to a member of the Bar and to a legal mind. I ask the Acting Solicitor General, through you, Mr. Chairman, to say: Is it a fair legal proposition to say, on the one hand, that a woman is a British subject, enjoying all the rights and privileges of British citizenship and, on the other hand, to say that, notwithstanding her British citizenship, she will not be allowed to vote, or will be allowed to vote only after having gone through certain formalities that no other British subject in Canada is obliged to go through? Is it fair, is it legal, is it logical? I say that it is not fair, and I think I have proved that it is not fair. I say that it is not legal, because the status of a person cannot be changed by one law and re-established by the other. To-day either I am a British subject or I am not; and if I am a British subject in the one sense, I am a British subject in every other sense. Therefore not only is it not fair, and not legal, but it is not logical.

How can you expect these people to understand that Canada is a land of democracy and of freedom if you treat them in this way? How can you expect them to have faith in the future of our country if to-day, to suit the whim of a small faction on the Government side that represents the prejudices of a small section of the people of this country, these British subjects are turned away from the polls as if they were not worthy to cast their vote and help decide our political issues?

I do hope that the Acting Solicitor General will reconsider this clause and will see to it that every British subject in Canada be given a vote. When this Bill was introduced the Acting Solicitor General declared from his seat that the franchise was to be given to every British subject of the age of twenty-one years having the requisite qualifications as to residence. Here are British subjects—British subjects according to the law passed in 1919, yet notwithstanding that law, notwithstanding the declaration of the Acting Solicitor General, these people will be deprived of their right to vote unless they have previously obtained a certificate.

I have seen examples of the most intricate pieces of legislation introduced by this Government, but I assert that this particular legislation is without parallel, and I challenge any hon. member to cite similar legislation passed by any democratic country which claims to be guided by ideals of freedom and liberty. We are not asking—and I repeat it, Mr. Chairman—we are not asking that our enemies of yesterday be given the vote and be put on the same footing as British subjects but we are asking that justice be done to people who were British subjects yesterday, who are British subjects to-day, and who will be British subjects to-morrow. That is our whole case. It is a case of fairness, it is a case of justice, and it is a case that ought to be favourably considered by the Government. What remedy is proposed by the amendment drafted by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen)? None at all. The amendment has no bearing on section 29.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Just to clear that matter up—if there is any question about that, we are not going to press the amendment.

Mr. CANNON: The point I wish to make is this. The Acting Solicitor General says in this House: "What we want is fairness." The hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Euler) gets up—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understood it was the hon. member for Waterloo North who wanted this.

Mr. CANNON: I do not know who wanted it, but I will explain what I think of it. My hon. friend (Mr. Euler) makes certain declarations in this House. The Government, officially, through the mouth of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen), says: "we shall see that that condition of things disappears and that a proper remedy is brought in." This is the remedy, and I defy any member of the Government to prove that the remedy, as drafted, and as introduced by the Acting Solicitor General, has any bearing whatsoever on clause 29 concerning women and children. There is another class, a class of people who are not British subjects, or who have lost their certificates of naturalization. The hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Nicholson) said that those people who are not British subjects, who never cared to be naturalized, although they may have lived for years in Canada, showed that they did not deserve to become British subjects. The hon. member may be right in certain cases, but this is not the case of all the persons referred to. At the time of Confederation in 1867—this is political history known to every member of the House—it was agreed between the two existing parties at that time that foreigners living in Ontario would be given the right to vote without their being sworn in any way. What was the result? Those people went to the polls; they were admitted as electors; they were granted every right and privilege of British citizenship, and they naturally never thought of going before a court or a judge to obtain a certificate, as the Government of this country were giving them all the rights and privileges of British citizenship. Most of those people are now dead; some, but only a few, still live. But what about their children, born outside of Canada, people who may be now forty, fifty, sixty years of age, who have lived in Canada practically all their lives? If their fathers were not British subjects, strictly speaking, according to the law, if those boys or girls were born outside of Canada, they are not British subjects. Could not something be done for those people, who are not foreigners who arrived in this country only two or three or five years ago, but who are people who have lived in Canada, for twenty-five, thirty or forty years and who are good citizens, in some cases the best citizens of this country?

Shall Canada refuse to do something for them? We are answered by the statement that the Imperial Act adopted by the Parliament of Canada cannot be amended. Let that be so; but why not add to clause 29 of this Bill a very simple paragraph stating that people who have lived in this country for ten or fifteen years, who had formerly been given the ballot, should have a right to vote, just as we did for the Indians last night, for the purposes of this Act? That would not be giving naturalization. We would not be putting aside the Naturalization Act of 1919; but we would be fair and just; we would be giving to those people something to which they are entitled. It was very simple for the Acting Solicitor General last night to amend the Indian Act as regards the franchise. He simply proposed the insertion of a clause whereby an Indian under certain conditions would have a right to vote. The Indian Act says expressly that no Indian has a right to vote in this country.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is my hon. friend quite right in that statement? Since last night, I have looked into that, and either I am wrong or he is right.

Mr. CANNON: There is no doubt about that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, I agree on that. We cannot both be right, I mean.

Mr. CANNON: But the Acting Solicitor General by that clause amended the Indian Act as it exists in this country.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I did not.

Mr. CANNON: That is, an Indian ordinarily living on an Indian Reserve, being a ward of the Government, has no right to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is not in the Indian Act.

Mr. CANNON: I say that the law as it exists to day is to the effect that an Indian, ordinarily resident on an Indian Reserve, being a ward of the Government, has no right to voe. Notwithstanding that law, notwithstanding the express provisions of it, the Acting Solicitor General says in this House: "If an Indian has served in the Canadian army or the Imperial army or in any of the Allied armies, he will be given the right to vote." The amendment is good and I supported it; but if it be as easy as that for the Acting Solicitor General to go through the Indian Act—

Mr. GUTHRIE: That does not conflict with the Indian Act, as my hon. friend must see.

Mr. CANNON: That is exactly the point I am making. By giving, under our electoral law, the right to vote to an Indian, although the Indian Act expressly says that an Indian, ordinarily resident on a reserve, being a ward of the Government, has no right to vote,—

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Indian Act does not say that. That is where my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. TRAHAN: The law says so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, there is a misapprehension.

Mr. ROSS: Has not the Franchise Act always said that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The franchise is not something that is born with us; it is something that is conferred. Heretofore we have not conferred it on the Indians; now we are conferring it on certain Indians, but there is no disqualification as regards the franchise in the Indian Act. The enfranchised Indian in the Indian Act,—I learned this only last night—is an Indian who has been given his liberty, not the vote. That is the sense in which the word is used in the Indian Act.

Mr. CANNON: The Acting Solicitor General is perfectly right, but we are not discussing the same thing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps that is so.

Mr. CANNON: My point is this, that according to the existing law in Canada, an Indian, ordinarily living on an Indian Reserve, being a ward of the Government, has no right to vote at an election.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is right.

Mr. CANNON: We shall soon understand one another. The Acting Solicitor General says that that is the law. Therefore, an Indian living on an Indian Reserve, being a ward of the Government, who was a member of the Canadian army or the Imperial army, or an Allied army, has no vote according to the franchise law. So, I say that the Naturalization Act says that unless a man is a naturalized or a born British subject, he has no right to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is nothing in the Naturalization Act about voting.

Mr. CANNON: I say that in the Naturalization Act a British subject is a man who is a British subject either by birth or by naturalization, and the Franchise Act says that only British subjects will have a right to vote under certain conditions. Why not put into our Franchise Act a clause covering a class of people who have lived in Canada for a certain number of years, who have been peaceable, dutiful citizens of this country for, say twenty or twenty-five years, but who are not British subjects on account of circumstances that I have explained and that other hon. members have explained to the committee better than myself? It is just as easy for this committee to insert this special clause as it was for the committee to adopt that special clause in connection with Indians. We shall not interfere with the Naturalization Act which will remain as it is now, but for the purposes of the franchise, we shall have a special clause covering the case of those people. As regards clause 29, if the Acting Solicitor General wishes to give to this House a token of his fair-mindedness, which we all appreciate, he ought to move first that subclause 2 be struck out altogether, and second, that there be substituted for subclause 2 a clause covering the case of the people whom I have just mentioned. He ought to move first that subsection 2 be struck out, and secondly, that in its place there be inserted a paragraph covering the case of the people I have just mentioned.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend (Mr. Cannon) has made a very elaborate argument upon entirely false premises. Speaking broadly, my hon. friend based his argument upon this principle, that the fact of being a British subject absolutely entitles one to the franchise.

Mr. CANNON: A British subject is entitled to the franchise if he has the necessary qualifications as to age and residence. That is the law.

Mr. STEVENS: The correction does not alter the point I am going to make. In support of his contention he proceeded to argue that the principle was based upon hundreds of years of practice under the British constitution, and he cited the revolutions at the time of King Charles and at other periods of British history, when certain vital principles respecting taxation and other matters were contended for by the people. Upon the principles which, as he alleged, were then at stake he bases his argument to-day for the enfranchisement of the particular class he refers to. He forgets, however, that the franchise as we have it to-day is a comparatively modern institution. Universal franchise was certainly unknown and most certainly was not accepted or practised at the time he refers to, when these great principles were fought out. The universal franchise comes within the memory of most members of this House. It is a comparatively new proposition. Furthermore, if my hon. friend wishes to base his argument on constitutional procedure he should remember that the franchise has been extended from time to time by Act of Parliament. The franchise is a gift; it is something that is granted to the subject. I would also point out that while the fact of being a British subject certainly entitles an individual to the protection of the laws of a country it does not necessarily follow that it entitles him to vote. I carry my hon. friend a step further, and he will correct me if I quote him wrongly. He suggests that we should incorporate in this Bill a clause that if a person has been resident in this country ten or fifteen years, whether he is a British subject under the Naturalization Act or not, he should be entitled to vote. That is an extraordinary doctrine, and I know of no precedent for it in British constitutional history.

Mr. CANNON: I made two different propositions. First, as regards the wives and children. I said that as British subjects they should be given the franchise. Secondly, as regards the men who have lived here in Canada for quite a number of years, but who for certain reasons are not British subjects, I said there should be a clause to cover these special cases, giving them the right to vote.

Mr. STEVENS: Can this House imagine a more extraordinary proposal than that an individual, simply because he has been resident in the country and obeying the laws of the country for a certain length of time, should be entitled to the vote, although he is not a natural-born or naturalized British subject? I have never heard of such a doctrine, and certainly no democratic or autocratic country either on the face of the globe ever heard such a proposal made seriously in its legislative assembly.

Let us look at this particular class. I think my hon. friend has beclouded the issue entirely. The point we are discussing is whether or not we shall extend the franchise to the wives of men who came to us from foreign countries, the men having been resident in Canada. Under the old laws of citizenship a woman from Austria, for instance, could come here and if on the day she landed, she got married to a British subject, by law she became a British subject that very day. I am taking an extreme case perhaps, but it is only by taking such a case that we can appreciate the point my hon. friend is trying to make. His proposal is that women, when naturalized by law, should at once be entitled to vote. I submit that that would be a preposterous proposition. Let us take a case that is not so extreme or so specific. By the progress of events and by recent legislation the franchise has been generally extended to women in this country. That is looked upon as the most progressive step in enfranchisement that we have taken in the past five years. Now what are we doing here? We are simply saying that the women aliens who came to our country and who married British subjects should show that they have the qualifications which their husbands must have in order to be naturalized. It seems to me that is a common sense proposition. More than that, if we were not to exercise some care in extending the franchise, I believe we would be derelict in our duty to the country at large. We must be very careful to see that the franchise is exercised only by those who have an intelligent understanding of the affairs of the country. I think in the past we have been altogether too careless in naturalizing people. We have naturalized persons who did not understand either of the two languages spoken in this country, and who had no knowledge of our democratic principles and institutions. They came perhaps from countries where they had never at any time exercised the franchise, and consequently did not appreciate the privilege that was given to them. I contend that before any person secures the franchise they should have an intelligent grasp of what the franchise means.

Mr. CANNON: A negress comes to Canada with an American husband. The American husband is naturalized, and she is therefore entitled to vote. A French woman from Paris, highly educated, comes over with her husband. The husband is naturalized a British subject. This woman has no vote, while the negress has. Does my hon. friend think that fair?

Mr. STEVENS: It may possibly be that there are some anomalies in the working of the law, but I would point out that the whole principle of the Franchise Bill is to extend the franchise. By this Bill we are not taking away from anybody anything they now have, but are simply extending the franchise to some. We are extending a means by which these people can exercise the franchise if they comply with certain conditions. My hon. friend (Mr. Cannon) said that the Bill as it stands is not generous enough. My hon. friend the Acting Solicitor General has agreed to an enlargement by the amendment which he proposes, and I think that in that regard he has done well. I for one would not advocate that we should enter into any reactionary policy in connection with the franchise. I think we must be broad and generous in the construction of our franchise law. Nevertheless, Sir, I believe that it is the duty of this Parliament to safeguard the rights conferred by the franchise so that this greatest privilege of citizenship may be exercised wisely and intelligently. I wish to point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Cannon) that he is not quite consistent, because, if I mistake not, there is in some of the provinces of Canada to-day a property qualification for voters. In other words, the principle which he enunciates, namely, that the fact of your being a British subject entitles you to vote provided you are twenty-one years of age and can comply with certain other requirements, is not applicable generally throughout the country. In provincial matters, there are property qualifications in some of the provinces. I think that Nova Scotia a few years ago, if not to-day, had such qualifications, and it is not many years ago since the other provinces had them. Generally speaking, we have passed that stage in the Dominion arena; we have virtually reached the point of universal franchise, although there are some classes that are still restricted, and I think Mr. Chairman that we are exceedingly wise in imposing the restrictions that exist. And I am reminded—I intended to state the fact—that these restrictions are imposed upon persons who are undoubtedly British subjects in every sense of the term. We enforce in a very marked sense the resident qualification. A man must have been for a certain time resident in the electoral district in which he votes. He might have been born in this country and have lived here all his life; he might have been prime minister of a province for a dozen years; but if he has not been a resident in the electoral district for a stated period he cannot vote. We look upon that as a necessary qualification, and this and other restrictions are eminently wise, notwithstanding that they apply to British subjects born or naturalized. The point I am driving at is simply this, that you cannot lay down the principle that because a person is a British subject either by birth or by naturalization he therefore necessarily is entitled to the franchise. The franchise is a right that exists altogether independently of the naturalization law, and in this Act we are not violating that law at all. We are dealing with a separate matter which is of the greatest importance in itself, and so long as this Act deals fairly with the people of the country and gives them a reasonable opportunity to exercise the franchise it discharges the function which is supposed to attach to it.

I desire to say a word or two in regard to the disfranchisement of certain classes of people. Now, Sir, I feel very strongly with the hon. member for Red Deer and one or two other hon. gentlemen whom I have heard speak on this question, that we should as early as possible in Canada allay the bitterness that has been engendered by the late war and endeavour to establish a new relation with our enemies. That is desirable, and I should be the last person to say anything now that might tend to open old wounds. But, Mr. Chairman, while we entertain that feeling—and I think it is genuinely entertained throughout the country—nevertheless there are certain things which common sense demands that we shall recognize. Although perhaps a large proportion of the people disfranchised by reason of enemy alien origin may wish to be good and loyal citizens of this country, still we have had ample experience to know that there are designing persons who even to-day, after all the bitter lessons of the war, are quite willing to use their influence among this class of people to the detriment of the country. We cannot shut our eyes to that fact; I do not think we dare. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I would be the last man to stir up any rancour or ill feeling, but the fact must be apparent that—

Mr. H. A. MACKIE: Would the hon. gentleman mind naming the agitators who are creating the disturbances or who are bringing any influence to bear on people in this country?

Mr. STEVENS: —it is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that I am speaking in a general sense, and I think my hon. friend knows that perfectly well. But it would be entirely beside the question for me to mention any names at this time.

Mr. EULER: Does the hon. gentleman not know that in such cases as he has referred to it would be the duty of the judge to examine the persons who appeared before him and to decide whether they were worthy of naturalization, and that if he found that they were not worthy he would be in duty bound to refuse the credentials?

Mr. STEVENS: I presume the hon. gentleman is referring to this clause under discussion?

Mr. EULER: Exactly.

Mr. STEVENS: Well, let me say that I am supporting the clause and I agree with my hon. friend so far as this clause is concerned. But what I do say—I think it is well that I should repeat it, and I can assure hon. gentlemen that I have no desire whatever to stir up trouble—is that it is unwise for us to close our eyes to the fact that there are individuals in Canada to-day who are quite willing to exploit the bitter feelings that arose during the late war in order to create discord and trouble in the country. The same thing has been experienced to the south of us, perhaps to a greater extent than in Canada. So that in the framing of this Franchise Bill, Parliament must take care that it shall not carelessly or recklessly extend the privilege of the franchise. One other point, Mr. Chairman, and I shall conclude. As years go by these disabilities which we have, as I think, very wisely imposed may be removed as present unsettled conditions subside and become normal once more, but I do not think that it is wise at this time to go to any extreme that may involve us in danger.

Mr. LEVI THOMSON: I do not purpose to discuss the question of the disfranchisement of certain British subjects, because I am well satisfied with what the minister said last night, if I understood him correctly. He said:

> The object of the present amendment is to make definite and certain that every one who is actually a British subject shall enjoy the right to vote, and if the amendment that I have moved does not make that clear, we shall make it clear if a better method can be suggested.

I assume that the minister was referring to cases of the kind under discussion: that is, the wives and families of naturalized British subjects from alien countries. I think I can quite agree with him in that, if he is prepared to change his amendment in such a way as to carry out what he says he has in mind.

In one or two respects the amendment as drawn will not, in my opinion, accomplish what I assume the minister desires to accomplish; and I assume he desires to accomplish what he says he desires. The wives and children of naturalized Germans and Austrians in our country are, in cases where the husband or father is naturalized, British subjects. I assume that my hon. friend's desire is to give all these people the right to vote; if he does not mean that, his statement of last night will require a good deal of explanation. Anything I have to say in this discussion will be with a view to directing the minister's attention to some things which I believe would prevent him from carrying out his desires as expressed last night. In the first place, the applicant for certificate must show that he or she is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of the English or French language. That is not the most important matter on which I wish to speak, but let me dwell upon it for a moment. I think I am right in saying that the section as proposed to be amended by the minister will mean that every person applying to a judge for a certificate such as is required under the section must satisfy that judge that he or she has a good knowledge of English or French and is of good character. Now the good character requirement we can hardly object to. In a great many cases, however, wives of naturalized British subjects will be debarred on the language test. Is that the minister's intention? The amendment means that any barrier placed upon a person by reason of section 8 of the Naturalization Act shall not disentitle him or her to receive that certificate from the judge. Has it occurred to the minister that in order to carry out the spirit of the Act the judge must in many cases give an absolutely false certificate? He must certify that the person is a person naturalized by operation of law, who, but for such naturalization "is qualified and would be entitled at the issue of this certificate to be personally naturalized in Canada." Now, the wife or child of a naturalized German or Austrian would not be qualified under these circumstances and would not be so entitled to naturalization. While the spirit of the amendment proposed would, perhaps, justify the judge in granting that quasi false certificate, I am satisfied that I know a judge who will not grant it under the circumstances; he will not give the certificate to the wife or the child of a German or an Austrian. I would not blame him for that, because we have no right to ask a judge to issue what is evidently a false certificate, even though it may be in keeping with the spirit of the law. What are you going to do with the judge who, on that ground, refuses to issue the certificate?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That brings us to the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Euler). My view is, and I am pretty strong in it, that the certificate is right in the form in which it appears in the Bill. The member for North Waterloo does not take that view; he doubts whether that is correct. Mr. Mulvey, the Under-Secretary of State, who has the administration of the Naturalization Act, is also inclined to think that there may be some doubt, and if a judge in the West has cast a doubt upon it, there is all the more reason why it should be made clear. Mr. Mulvey suggests that it can be made clear by inserting two or three words in the certificate, and when we come to it I propose to move an amendment.

Mr. L. THOMSON: I would like the minister to note the objection that I have taken; I do not know whether it is the same as that made by the hon. member for North Waterloo.

There is another point. Those who have had to do with naturalization know that the foreigner, as we call him, is not likely to apply for naturalization until he has some particular object in view, until there is some particular reason for his doing so. My experience is not exactly in line with what the member for Regina (Mr. Cowan) says was his experience and that of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Calder). I know that in the old days a great many of these people used to apply for naturalization before an election. In fact, that was about the only time they wanted it, unless it was when they wanted their patents. Now, what will be the result of that practice under present conditions? Large numbers of these people will not bother about this certificate until they are pretty sure an election is coming on, and in some of our western districts the judges will have their hands full if they properly carry out the idea which, I take it, the minister has in mind. I assume that the minister will expect the judge to require those who go before him for this purpose to establish that they are able to read and write the English or the French languages and also that they are of good character. How is the judge to satisfy himself on the point of character? I do not know what the rule followed by all the judges in the West is, but in the Moosomin district a judge, when he wants to satisfy himself as to the character of an applicant, must have before him two persons who know the applicant and whom the judge also knows. He will pay no attention to any person coming to swear as to the character of the applicant unless it is some one whom he himself knows. These applications must be made only before him in chambers at Moosomin. Now the judicial district of Moosomin is one of the oldest and most densely populated districts of Saskatchewan, and many of these people live seventy-five or eighty miles from the town of Moosomin itself. The requirement seems to be that such persons must go to Moosomin with two witnesses who must know the applicants, and must be known to the judge. With these special persons to vouch for them the applicants must go all that distance, in each case we will say, to Moosomin. Now there are a great many of such people that will require those certificates and the time of the judge will be pretty well occupied in hearing these applications. I would like the minister—sometime later, when he is on his feet—to relieve my mind as to whether there would be any limitation on the right of the judge to make a ruling as to the evidence that must be submitted before him, as to the persons by whom it shall be submitted, and also as to where the hearings can take place. It seems to me that there can be no proper reason why the judge should not be able to hear those applications at any place where he holds a district court. Even that would not be very satisfactory, for the reason that in most of the places outside of the judicial centre court is only held twice a year; and when an election is in view, at the time these people would be coming forward with their applications, there is no district court being held at that particular place and the parties desirous of making the application would either have to go to Moosomin or abandon their purpose altogether. If the section is passed, with the amendment suggested, a very large proportion of these people will be British subjects by operation of law—that is the wives and children of naturalized persons who were former Germans or Austrians—but only a very small number of them would be qualified to vote when an election takes place.

I would also make one further suggestion to my hon. friend who states that he is willing to receive suggestions—whether it is advisable or not I leave to himself—if he insists on some such certificate being granted, would it not be possible to have some persons appointed for this purpose in each important town or village throughout the district? For instance, take my own district, if half a dozen or a dozen men at the most important points were given the right to issue those certificates I would be quite willing to allow my hon. friend to appoint those men himself, because, in my opinion, he will choose men that are honest and thoroughly reliable. Let such persons as those issue the certificates. They know far more about the character of the applicants than the judge possibly could. After all that is the important point, and I think my hon. friend will agree with me as to that—such persons will be in a very much better position to give a certificate than any judge would. Therefore I would like my hon. friend to consider that suggestion.

Mr. EULER: It has been stated this afternoon by the Acting Solicitor General—and reference to it has been made by the member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon)—that this amendment has come as a result of certain representations I made some time ago, and the minister intimated that the amendment was in some sense to meet my wishes. That may be true. So far as I am concerned I feel that the amendment which has been submitted, and which we are now discussing does, in a measure, meet the views that were placed before the House at that time. But I was rather surprised to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cannon) state that it has absolutely no effect in the direction desired. If that were the case I would say, either that the work of the man who drafted the amendment is very bad, or that the amendment is an attempt at the worst betrayal of which any Government could possibly be guilty. I would hesitate to believe either of these conclusions; I do not view the amendment in that way.

I do not want to be placed in the position of opposing the amendment because I am in favour of it so far as it goes; my only objection to it is that it does not go quite far enough. It must be apparent to every member who has followed the course of this debate that a great deal of confusion exists as to exactly what the clause and the amendment mean. I am pretty sure that at least ninety per cent of the members of the House do not yet appreciate the distinction—and this is casting no reflection on any hon. member—that should be made between those people that are not naturalized and who we think should be allowed the franchise by naturalization, and that other group of people who were discussed on the second reading of the Bill, and whose grievance this amendment is supposed to remedy. I am not now going to discuss the status of those who are not British subjects. I shall do what I did the other night—refer to the rights of those women and men who are actually naturalized British subjects, and who, in my opinion, should be given the vote without being put to the necessity of going before a judge and once again proving that they are entitled to, and are fit persons to exercise the franchise. Now if the whole question has been so confusing to the members of the House, it is not to be wondered at if the same condition exists throughout the country, and it will certainly exist in the minds of the people who are most intimately affected by the condition in question. But I submit, Sir, that it is entirely unnecessary that any such confusion should exist. This amendment is not the best that could be offered. The existing confusion will vanish if we simply follow the law as we have it already in the Naturalization Act, entirely apart from this clause and which a much simpler amendment will accomplish. The whole difficulty, to my mind, arises from the fact that an attempt is here being made to enact a law which is in direct contradiction to the law which already appears on the statute books of Canada. When the Government realized the unfortunate effects of the proposed new law, they undertook to remedy the defect—not by removing the clause which is in direct opposition to an established principle of law already on the statute books of Canada, but by trying to reconcile two irreconcilable things, and thus they complicated and confused the whole question more than ever. I believe, Sir, that is stating the absolute fact. The whole difficulty arises by trying to enact a law which will be in direct contradiction to a law which already exists, and nothing but confusion can result from such an attempt.

First, we have the principle laid down in the Naturalization Act, that the wife of a British subject is herself a British subject. We may regard that, I think, as a definite axiom. It is not only enacted in the naturalization law of 1919, but it has been affirmed in every previous naturalization law since Confederation. Therefore I say it is an accepted axiom that the wife of a British subject is herself a British subject.

Then, quite inconsistently, in subsection 2 of section 29 we say in plain English that in so far as voting is concerned she is not a British subject. That is the extraordinary statement in that paragraph. In our naturalization law we say that the wife of a British subject is a British subject; but in this proposed election law we say in so many words that she is not a British subject. The two terms are absolutely contradictory, and that is why the confusion arises.

Now, when the difficulty is noted, along comes this amendment which tries to reconcile what I submit are two unreconcilable things. How can a person be a British subject and yet not be a British subject?

In my opinion, Sir, the remedy is very plain. Choose which of the two principles —the one already in the Naturalization Act under which the wife of a British subject is herself a British subject; and the other principle enunciated in this Franchise Act, that she is not a British subject for the purpose of voting—I say choose which of these two principles is the right one, and then destroy the one that is wrong. That seems to me to be the logical course to follow.

These women and these men who, as minors, became naturalized by operation of law are British subjects, as has been pointed out again and again, and I assert that it is absurd to say that right here in Canada—where after all this Parliament should have full control—those men and women shall be British subjects for one purpose and not for another; that for example, the men shall be put in the dual characters of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde: The whole thing is an absurdity and should not be placed upon the statute books.

Mr. NICHOLSON (Algoma East): Might I ask the hon. member a question? How would he treat British subjects who come to this country from British India?

Mr. EULER: That is a very easy question for me to answer. I would say that a person who is a British subject in Canada should be given the vote, regardless of colour, creed or racial origin. That is my personal opinion.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, these women are British subjects and their husbands are British subjects. I declare, and I know something of what I am about to say, that these husbands are probably no better and no worse than their wives so far as fitness for the franchise is concerned. These men, and quite properly so, are now permitted to cast their ballots, though of alien origin. Then the franchise having been extended to our women, and quite properly so, why should it not follow that as these men are granted the franchise, their wives—who are just as much British subjects as their husbands—should also be granted the franchise? Why should they be put under the necessity and the humiliation of going before a judge and showing once again that they are fit and proper persons to be given the franchise?

Mr. STEVENS: Will the hon. member permit me a question? He speaks of the wives going before a judge and showing once again that they are fit and proper persons to exercise the franchise. Is it not true that they have never before shown that fitness, nor have they ever established that they have the qualifications which their husbands had to have in order to be granted naturalization? And while I am on my feet, let me ask another question. Before the husbands could secure the franchise they had to comply with the Naturalization Act; the women never were naturalized under that Act, but by law, which law was based upon certain principles before women were enfranchised. Now that women are enfranchised, is it not fair that these wives should be asked to qualify up to the standard of their husbands?

Mr. EULER: The hon. gentleman tries to introduce a principle that has never been introduced before. The franchise has now been given to all women who are British subjects, except this particular class of whom we are speaking. There has been no intimation given that the Government is going to make certain that other women are to be tested before a judge as to whether they are fit and proper persons to exercise the franchise. If we are going to be consistent, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to make these people who have lived in the country for many years, to say nothing of the men who have voted in past years, and whom you are now going to make go before a judge to show their fitness to exercise the franchise—if we are going to do that, we should make certain that everybody who in future casts his ballot is a fit and proper person to be granted that privilege. Why not go back and make every woman who will now vote show that she is a fit and proper person to cast the ballot? Why confine it to the alien-born if the present law as to naturalization is to be satisfied? It seems to me that that is the only logical course to take if you want to be consistent. I contend that to-day there are men in this country—and many women too, who could not possibly fulfil the requirements of the Naturalization Act, as it is at this moment. Are we going to shut them out from the vote? We are not, and I think it is quite right that that we do not, because it would be a mistake to make that provision retroactive in respect to a privilege which they already have. The alien-born British subject should not be discriminated against.

I contended last evening that this law should not be made to apply to people who are already living in this country and are British subjects, but that, if desired, we might apply this law to those who come here in the future. They come then with their eyes open, knowing what is expected of them. I for one am quite in sympathy with the principle that in future, men and women alike, should be made to show that they are fit subjects for naturalization, and thus for the franchise.

Peculiarly enough, I have not heard any real defence of this subsection 2 of section 29 or any real reason given for its adoption. No real argument has been adduced as to why these women in particular should be segregated from their husbands, than whom they are no better and no worse—perhaps the wives are a little better; I am willing to admit that. Then why should they be put to the necessity of going before a judge and proving that they are fit persons to vote? I have heard no argument that convinces me of the necessity for this provision; in fact, all hon. members on the other side who have spoken, have practically avoided that point.

I was alluding a few moments ago to the fact that a great deal of confusion exists, and I listened with approval to what was said by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Levi Thomson). He stated that in his opinion the inclusion of this paragraph in the Bill will result, in a practical way, in the disfranchisement of a great proportion of these people. In that I think he is absolutely correct. I gave some of the reasons for my belief last night. In the first place, many of these women, especially those who are aged—and many of them are elderly women—will absolutely refuse to go through the ordeal of appearing before a judge and submitting themselves to a series of questions. They will prefer to remain at home and lose their vote. It may be said that that is not the proper attitude on their part; but it is a very natural one. On the other hand, I think a great many of these people, particularly the men, may be placed upon the voters' lists by those who think they ought to be there legally, and perhaps placed there by others who think that they have a moral right to be there—a great many of these people, knowing that their names are on the voters' lists, will go to no further trouble to get the certificate required by law, and when they appear at the polling booth they may be challenged by those opposed to them politically with the result that they will be deprived of their votes. I believe that will be the practical result of the inclusion of this clause in the Bill. All the confusion, all the injustice and all danger from a wrong interpretation of the Act; all danger that a judge even may make a partisan use of his power, and refuse the certificate to perfectly worthy people, British subjects, will disappear, if you will take the law as it stands to-day in the Naturalization Act and say that when a person is a British subject, he is a British subject for all purposes, including the franchise, if he fulfils the other requirements. As I said last night, I believe earnestly if a man or a woman is of the age of twenty-one years and is of good character, he or she should have the franchise as the direct result of British citizenship, and this clause which imposes on those people the necessity of going before a judge and proving to his satisfaction—and perhaps failing to prove to his satisfaction—that they are fit and proper persons to exercise the franchise, should be struck out.

Surely this should appeal to the Government as the only logical, fair and reasonable way in which to cure the wrong that flowed out of the Act as it was originally framed. I should like to press home on the Acting Solicitor General and the Government that by so doing they will be the means of saving many worthy people from difficulties and inconveniences which they do not deserve to have placed upon them. Believing that, I shall move an amendment to the amendment of the Acting Solicitor General and I hope he will accept it and withdraw his own, because I believe my amendment will meet the sense of fairness of most of the people of this country when they know the facts free from misrepresentation. I move in amendment to the amendment:

That subclause 2 of clause 29 of the Bill be struck out in its entirety.

Mr. H. A. MACKIE (Edmonton): The legal effect of the Franchise Bill as now proposed has been given very well this afternoon by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) and other hon. gentlemen, but I believe they have exaggerated to a certain degree the evils which may crop up under this measure. The amendment to the amendment undoubtedly meets the situation which both the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Euler) and myself had the honour of suggesting to the House on the second reading, and if hon. gentlemen opposite will take the trouble to study the amendment to the amendment carefully, they will see that it meets that situation. I said on that occasion that the Government can have only one purpose for that clause, namely, that it desires to raise the standard of the voter. My hon. friend (Mr. Euler) has, I believe, struck the proper key-note this afternoon along with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. L. Thomson), when they say that, whereas you are endeavouring to raise that standard by this legislation, you are making it possible, first, that persons applying for a certificate will be denied that certificate by reason of the prejudice unfortunately existing at present in the country, and second, that those who will be denied a certificate because they do not come up to the qualifications required of them under the Naturalization Act, shall be deprived of casting a vote in the elections in this country when, as a matter of fact, there are, in Western Canada as well as in Eastern Canada, very many persons who have to ask their friends in the polling booth how to mark their ballots. I am entirely in accord with the motive of the Government, and I do not believe the accusations of hon. gentlemen opposite against the Government are well founded. I am entirely in accord with the desire of the Government to establish a higher standard of education in the matter of voting, but I believe this is not the proper occasion on which to deal with that matter. I would rather see a law which would contain a provision stating that hereafter unless you can speak or write the English or the French language, or unless you have an adequate knowledge of one or the other or both languages, you may not vote. Then, we would have the whole population on an equal footing. I know, for instance, that in the western provinces there are a large number of men and women who will not be able to get their certificates, not because of their fault, but because of the circumstances in which they are situated and of their age, it will be impossible for them to qualify unless a judge is willing to take the broad view that he used to take at a time when such men came before him for naturalization papers for the purpose of securing patents to land. Under those circumstances, a judge was lenient, because he realized that it was necessary for a man to get his naturalization papers for the purpose of getting patent to his land. If such a man could say a few words in English or French and could express the balance of his meaning by gesticulation with his hands or by some other method, the judge would say: All right, I will give you your naturalization papers. But when such a man comes before a judge to obtain qualification to vote the judge may not be so lenient, and I know of some judges who have refused such people naturalization right along. Even now I have received letters from some of my constituents stating that they have made application and that they have been turned down because they do not know enough of the English language. This is one method of disfranchising those people, and they should not be treated in this way, unless you go further and treat every one in the same manner. What about the half-breed population we have in Western Canada? I attended one poll at Fort Chippewyan where there were 90 voters, not one of whom himself marked his ballot, but whose ballot was marked for him by the deputy returning officer when they told him for whom they wanted to vote. I doubt if they understood the issues in the provincial election; but they were entitled to vote, althought in the light of this provision in this Franchise Bill, they would not be permitted to vote.

Another feature which I should like to discuss for a moment is this. In Western Canada, there is a large population from Galicia. One portion of Galicia has to-day passed under the dominance of Poland; the other portion has been separated from Austria, but it does not belong to any country in particular, except that Poland has been given a sort of mandate temporarily until the League of Nations decides the issue whether eastern Galicia shall go into independent Ukraine or whether it shall form part of Russia as a whole. These people in the meantime are being looked upon as alien enemies, as Austrians, although they are detached from the Austrian Empire, and all of those people, by reason of the fact that the League of Nations has not yet determined what country they are in future to be nationals of have been refused naturalization papers. I have a number of letters from the Under-Secretary of State stating definitely that these people would be refused their naturalization papers until such time as the League of Nations shall decide where they belong. Assuming that this Government will finish the terms and that two more years will elapse before an election takes place, if the League of Nations shall have settled by that time the destiny of these people, they will then be entitled to make application for naturalization. If not, there will be out West a very large number of people who will not be able to vote at all, because they cannot be naturalized in Canada for the purpose of acquiring citizenship, and certainly they cannot be naturalized for the purpose of voting.

I would point out the advisability of supporting the amendment to the amendment and treating these people on the broad lines we have been accustomed to in the past in dealing with all the people of this Dominion. If there is to be any high standard of citizenship required before a vote can be cast let the Act state, that from now on certain classes shall not be allowed to help to determine public questions in Canada unless they have a certain educational status. I would support such a proposal if it were made to apply to all alike. But at the present time I should think that we are discriminating, because we are allowing a large number of people to vote who have no greater learning or education than those from foreign countries who have been brought to the western provinces. Let a standard be fixed from now on; let there be no discrimination. I would also ask the Acting Solicitor General to take into consideration the fact that in the three western provinces that large population from Galicia will not be able to secure the franchise unless the League of Nations decides within the next two years what shall happen to them.

Mr. JACOBS: I feel as if I were playing a return engagement here this afternoon, because I was the last to speak on this question last night. But I cannot allow the question to be put to a vote without saying a final word in the hope that the Acting Solicitor General may have had his heart softened in the meantime. This matter is of vital importance to the people in the large cities, where we have, as the House knows, an exceptionally large foreign population. I said last night that I estimated there were at least 5,000 of these foreign born people in my division who would be affected by this Bill. In the other divisions of Montreal there are at least as many, so that in the city of Montreal we have 10,000 foreign born who will be affected by this legislation. Last night when I asked the Acting Solicitor General why he sought to introduce this distinction into our law, he said:

> Because we recognize that people born on this continent are very similar in their ideas, laws, customs and habits to our own people and we can very quickly assimilate them to our ways.

That being the case you would expect that a judge who was going to pass on the applications brought before him would look into the question whether the applicant's ideas, laws, customs and habits were similar to ours or otherwise. Let me invite your attention to the form provided in section 29:

> This is to certify that from evidence submitted before me I am satisfied that A. B. of .....in the province of.....(occupation).....is a person naturalized as a British subject by operation of law, who, but for such naturalization, is qualified and would be entitled at the date of the issue of this certificate to be personally naturalized in Canada.

Is there anything said there with regard to the ideas, laws, customs, habits and character of the applicant? Not a word. The object of this certificate, as can be seen from the form, is identification pure and simple, and I challenge the Acting Solicitor General to show me where it applies to anything outside of identification. Why should the judges of the high court in the city of Montreal, for instance, be put to the trouble and inconvenience and annoyance of merely passing upon a question of identification when that could be very well done by the enumerator or by the deputy returning officer?

I say that the object of this section is to prevent as many as possible of the foreign born from voting at the next election. That is the object, camouflage it as you may, and I challenge the Acting Solicitor General to say that it is for any other object. He spoke of the ideas, law, customs and habits of our people, and contrasted them with those of the people coming here from Europe. Does the Acting Solicitor General know that under this Act people from Mexico, from Haiti, and from the Central American republics will have the right to vote? Every negress, every mulatto, and every quadroon in the United States who comes here and marries a British subject will have the right to vote. In what way I should like to know will that contribute to elevating our ideas, our customs, and character, and habits, and the mental and moral welfare of the people of this country? The women from Belgium and France, many of whom took part in the war, are not to be allowed this privilege but have to submit to this humiliating application which the minister intends to thrust upon them. I admire consistency and frankness in any one, as much in a government as in a private individual, and I say it is rank hypocrisy on the part of the Government to attempt to tell us that the object of this law is to see to it that the people who are voting under this law conform to the customs and ideas of the native born.

I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that when the Military Voters' Act was put on the statute books there was no such wild attempt to see to it that the ideas, the customs and habits and morality of the women who voted under that Act should be as carefully investigated as they are supposed to be under this Act. Women voters under that Act were taken wherever they could be found. If a man in the trenches had nine or ten sisters at home, he had eleven votes, no matter whether the women were from Belgium or France or Timbuctoo. The Government needed those votes, and they made use of them. To-day they think they do not need them. In fact in a very negative way, they do not need them because the Government knows how the women are going to vote so they bring before Parliament a measure to see that as few as possible will vote at the next election. This giving the vote to the women and then taking it away from them is very much in line with a good many other so-called philanthropic acts of the Government, but when you examine it you find you have very little. It is another case of, the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, but in this case we cannot say, Blessed be the name of the Lord. I would like to have the Acting Solicitor General pinned down to a statement regarding the form attached to section 29, and to ascertain from him how a judge by giving a certificate identifying a party as the party entitled to vote is going to give us any assurance as to the character of the voter. The thing is absurd. It is simply another piece of hypocrisy on the part of the Government, who under the guise of seeing to it that the people who come to this country are respectable and law-abiding citizens are depriving many of their right to exercise the franchise which they would have, but for this section.

I cannot add anything to what I have already said on this matter. When the By-elections Bill was before the House in July, 1919, I opposed it as vigorously as I could. When the Naturalization Act was before the House I opposed it, I opposed this Bill on its second reading and I intend to oppose it at every turn until it finally becomes law and as I hinted last night I intend to oppose it even then. The Government, I fear, in its own interests is making a mistake in attempting to place on the statute books laws of this kind. After all, what reason have they to feel that all these women whom it is sought to prevent from voting at the next election are going to vote against them? The Government claim that at the last election about 250,000 or 300,000 women voted for them. How is it that such a change has come about in the mentality of the women of this country? It is said that women sometimes, by intuition know who are their friends and who are not; and probably the Government has come to the conclusion that the women are going to vote against them en masse on that account. In this Bill there is a distinction which ought not to exist. We do not want to have one law for the stranger and another law for the British born subject. The law that exists in the land should be the law for all persons who live in the land, and any attempt to derogate or deviate from that well established principle is bound to meet with the reprobation of the citizens of this country. The Government may think that they are going to succeed by putting on the statute book a law of this kind, but I warn them that it will recoil upon their heads. There are a large number of foreign born people who will be permitted to vote under this Act, but their relatives will be precluded from the privilege, and I want to warn the Government seriously, that many of these people whose relatives are to be prohibited from voting at the next election are certainly not going to cast their votes in favour of a Government that puts on the statute book of the country a measure as iniquitous as this one.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Will the minister be kind enough to tell me what good reason there is and what good purpose will be served by compelling these British subjects to travel miles from their homes to obtain certificates? I represent in this House a purely rural constituency in which there is not a judicial centre, and the women who will be affected in that constituency will have to travel many miles at great expense, and will be absent from their families for one or more nights if they desire to obtain the necessary certificate. The law says that these people are British subjects. It gives to their husbands, who are British subjects, the right of the franchise, and I cannot see any good reason why these women should be compelled to apply to a judge or any tribunal for a certificate. Will the minister be kind enough to make a statement in regard to that point?

Mr. MYERS: Will the hon. gentleman say who he thinks will grant the certificate if not the judge?

Mr. JOHNSTON: I have asked the minister a question and I should like to have an answer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The question asked by the hon. member is practically the same as one submitted by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. Under this Bill as drawn it is provided that a person who has become a British subject by operation of law, in order to vote, shall obtain a certificate from a judge. That certificate is not for the purpose of identity, as my hon. friend from George Etienne Cartier suggested a few moments ago; it is for the purpose of satisfying the judge that the woman has such qualifications that in any event, though she may be a British subject by operation of law, she would be entitled to naturalization. I do not know the riding which my hon. friend represents, but I know that under this Act it is not only one circuit judge that can give a certificate. Any of the Superior Court judges can give it, and I assume that courts are held at regular intervals in these outlying districts. In the dense settlement of Montreal, according to my hon. friend (Mr. Jacobs), some ten thousand women will have to procure certificates, but I am satisfied even that large number can be accommodated for there are some thirty or forty judges in Montreal who will have the power to grant these certificates. One can easily magnify the difficulties under this Act, and no doubt there will be some inconvenience imposed. It has been pointed out that some judges may take exceptional views of the matter. Well, we are supposed to have judges who will take reasonable views of the law and administer the law as it stands; and I think that if there are judges who will not do so their conduct should be reported to the proper authorities. I cannot understand that any judge would say: "I will hear applications only at one point in my district." There is nothing in the Act that limits his jurisdiction in any way; there is nothing that imposes such a limitation upon him. I think myself that the judge is bound to hear an application wherever it is made, in any part of the territory under his jurisdiction, and I see nothing to prevent any judge from any other part of the province from coming in. This can be done in Ontario.

Mr. LEVI THOMSON: Is that true in regard to an application for naturalization? Is the judge bound to hear an application for naturalization from any point?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The judge is bound by the language of this statute, and there is nothing to say that he will hear applications only in one particular place. He must hear them wherever they are made in the territory over which he has jurisdiction, and there is nothing in this law that says he can name particular places.

Mr. LEVI THOMSON: The minister has not caught my question. I want to know if the same thing applies to an application for naturalization. Is the judge bound to hear that application at any place; if not, what is the distinction?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think he is bound to hear it at any place. The application has to be filed, in the case of naturalization, in the office of the clerk of the court. In this case the judge has jurisdiction over every portion of his territory, and it is not for him to say that he will hear applications only in this or the other place, and if a judge takes that ground his conduct should be reported to the proper authorities, and I am satisfied he would not continue in such a course or the law would speedily be changed.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: Will any fee be charged for the certificate?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, there is no fee for the certificate. I do not know that I can give any further information to the committee. I know that there are two views in regard to this amendment as there probably are in regard to the original clause. My hon. friend from Dorchester took forty minutes this afternoon to denounce my amendment and to show that it was, in his opinion, absolutely worthless. Yet my hon. friend from North Waterloo approved of it; he evidently thinks that half a loaf is better than no bread.

Mr. EULER: I thank the minister for expressing the very thought I had in mind. I was just about to say the same thing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: As I said last night and repeat now, if there is anything uncertain about the amendment which my hon. friend can make clearer by other language I am willing to give every consideration to his suggestions. If the language of the Under-Secretary of State meets the views of my hon. friend we may consider it. The amendment I have submitted meets with the approval of the Government, and it is the desire that it be passed.

Mr. J. F. REID (Mackenzie): In my riding there is a judicial centre and the resident district judge hold sittings of the district court throughout that territory. Suppose an application is filed with the court in one part of that territory and the judge is sitting somewhere else, could the party who filed the application appear before the judge where he is sitting and ask for the certificate?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Undoubtedly.

[Mr. Thomson.]

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): I understood my hon. friend (Mr. L. Thomson) to say that a similar request had been refused in his constituency.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then the matter had better be referred to the proper authorities. It has always been believed that judges of this country hold office for the convenience of the public as well as for the administration of law. If they get the other idea into their heads, the sooner we pass some law on the subject the better.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Subsection 2 of clause 29 states:

> For the purposes of this Act, the allegiance or nationality of a person, as it was at the birth of such person, shall be deemed incapable of being changed . . . by reason of . . . . naturalization of any other person or otherwise than by personal naturalization.

Now, section 33 of the Naturalization Act reads, in part:

> Where in pursuance of this Act the name of a child is included in a certificate of naturalization granted to his parent, or where, in pursuance of any Act repealed by this Act, any child has been deemed to be a naturalized British subject by reason of residence with his parent, such child shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be a person to whom a certificate of naturalization has been granted.

Under the Naturalization Act of 1919 a minor child becomes a British subject on account of the naturalization of his father and is deemed to be personally naturalized; is deemed to have received a certificate of naturalization. How do you reconcile the two Acts?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He gets it by operation of law. He does not actually get a certificate.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He is deemed to have had a certificate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the operation of law; that is what is referred to. He gets no actual certificate, but by operation of law he becomes a British subject and is deemed to have received a certificate.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think my hon. friend is not right as to that. The wife becomes a British subject by operation of law. There is no section that says the wife is deemed to have received the certificate. Minor children are placed in the same situation as the wife; they are deemed to be naturalized by the operation of law, but there is a special section which states that they are considered as having been personally naturalized, as having themselves received certificate of naturalization. How can you reconcile these two provisions?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They never have been personally naturalized and they never have received a certificate. The law says they shall be deemed to have been personally naturalized; consequently it is by operation of law that they are such.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That only serves to show the absurdity of legislation which makes persons half British subjects and half aliens. If personal naturalization is required of a person in order that he may be a British subject, then change the naturalization law. I read in an American magazine some days ago an article which stated that changes in the naturalization law of United States are being advocated to provide that personal naturalization only shall be valid. Change the law if you like, but as long as the naturalization of the husband carries with it the naturalization of the wife, the wife should be deemed a British subject for all purposes, not for some purposes only. People seem to be under the impression that this provision is designed only to meet the case of persons whose parents were of enemy origin. Well, that is a mistake; this provision applies also to persons coming from friendly countries. As was stated this afternoon, persons of French, Italian and Belgian descent, persons from other countries which were associated with Great Britain in the war, even though they are British subjects by the naturalization of husbands or fathers, would, under this provision, be deprived of the right to vote. This is a point of view which should be considered before section 29 is adopted in its present form. We have the disability clause providing for the ten year period of disfranchisement because that provision was first enacted by the British Parliament. The British electoral law never required personal naturalization on the part of women to entitle them to vote. Under the Representation of the People Act, 1918, women who are British subjects by birth or by naturalization are entitled to vote. Why should we have any different provision in this country? It is arbitrary to ask people to get a certificate from a judge before they shall have the right to vote. The right to vote should be made clear by Act of Parliament; it should not be subject to the whim of any person, a judge or any one else. Judges have varying rules in connection with the application of laws, especially when it is a question of administration, as will be the case under this Act. Some judges are more strict than others; some insist upon the furnishing of more particulars by applicants than others do. The law will not be uniform in its application, and for that reason and for all the other reasons that have been given this afternoon, I shall support the amendment of my hon. friend from North Waterloo.

Mr. McKENZIE: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, all these new troubles and difficulties that we have in connection with the franchise arose out of the war. We had no such difficulties before the war. Any man who came to this country obtained his naturalization, and there was no further trouble about it—he was entitled to all the privileges of a British subject. For that reason I cannot see why troubles which have arisen out of the war should be visited upon those nations which were friendly to us and fought side by side with us during the conflict, and why we should, by reason of the disturbing elements of war conditions, place at a disadvantage and disfranchise all these people who were friends and allies in the struggle. That is something I cannot very well understand. I notice, Sir, that in subclause (B), of subclause 4 of section eight of the Naturalization Act that we passed last year that when we were to inflict punishment upon a certain class of people we confined that arrangement to our enemies during the war. The subclause referred to states:

> No certificate of naturalization shall, before the expiration of a period of ten years after the termination of the present war, be granted in Canada to any subject of a country which at the time of the passing of this Act was at war with His Majesty, but this provision shall not apply to a person who—

and so forth. The idea of subclause (B) is to inflict that punishment and that disability upon subjects of a country who opposed us in the war. What I cannot understand is this: If an Italian came to this country to-day he would not require to be here ten years before he got naturalization; he got it in the ordinary way and perhaps he was never in the country before. But there may be an Italian woman who has been in Canada for perhaps twenty years. Our law ordinarily confers the franchise upon women; but that Italian woman will not be permitted to vote unless she goes perhaps a distance of sixty or seventy miles, states her case to a judge, and from that judge obtains a certificate. I submit, Sir, that the Acting Solicitor General should particularly consider that phase of the case. I am unable to understand why this disability has been placed upon friendly—foreigners, if you like; but those are not friendly or unfriendly foreigners, they are British subjects. Nothing has been alleged to their detriment, no charges have been made against them, and why should they be disfranchised and why should these impediments be placed in their way? I really cannot see the purpose of it. On the 24th May, 1918, we were just as wise as we are now. We had no greater reason on that date to be influenced by war difficulties than we are to-day—in fact, we were closer then to war conditions, and those conditions were more closely affecting us than they are at the present time. Nevertheless by an Act passed at that time, Chapter 20 of the Statutes of 1918, we said:

1. (1) Every female person shall be entitled to vote at a Dominion election who,—
(a) is a British subject;
(b) is of the full age of twenty-one years and upwards—

and so on. I could very well stop there, Mr. Chairman, and say that on the 24th day of May, 1918, we solemnly reached the conclusion that any woman in this country who was a British subject was entitled to vote. We had gone so far in that Act as not only to make them British subjects—those who were British subjects before—but to confer the franchise upon them. The hon. member for West Vancouver said a few minutes ago that we were not taking anything from these women which they now possess, and the House seemed to concur in the statement. But that cannot be the case, because by the Act from which I have quoted we conferred the right of voting on these very women from whom we are now taking it. Therefore we are depriving them of something which they now possess, a thing which we should not do. Now the Act from which I have quoted goes on to state as to the qualifications which a woman should possess to be entitled to vote:

(c) possesses the qualifications which would entitle a male person to vote at a Dominion election in the province in which said female person seeks to vote: Provided that a married woman or an unmarried daughter living with her father or mother shall be deemed to have any necessary qualification as to property or income if the husband or either of the parents is so qualified.

We propose to repeal that Act by the Bill now before the House, and I think it is a serious matter for a deliberative body such as ours to coolly and deliberately say that we were wrong in 1918 when we conferred this right upon these women, and that we are now going to take it away from them. There certainly ought to be some grave reason before we do anything of that kind. If women should come to this country—French women, Italian women, Syrian women, Polish women—if any of these foreigners should come here, settle down, help to develop the country, and live happily and faithfully with their husbands bringing up their families, what reason is there for depriving these people of the right we conferred upon them a little over a year ago. I cannot see the reason of the justice of it, and I would be sorry that we should do anything so harsh and drastic in this Parliament unless we were moved to do so by the very best of reasons.

The hon. member for Dorchester this afternoon presented the legal nature of this question in a manner so perfectly clear that there seems to be no necessity of dealing further with that phase of it. Section eleven of chapter 28 of the statutes of 1919 states:

The wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject, and the wife of an alien shall be deemed to be an alien.

There is a contradiction here. We say in one breath that this woman is a British subject, but in section 29 of the Bill that is now before us we say that it was impossible for her ever to be so. I ask the committee to consider the language of subsection 2 of section 29 of the Bill that is now before the committee:

For the purposes of this Act, the allegiance or nationality of a person, as it was at the birth of such person, shall be deemed incapable of being changed—

We say there that it was absolutely impossible for the woman, or the children who are affected by this legislation to be what we say they are under the provisions of the Act we passed last year. As I said before, I submit that only very grave reasons indeed should cause us to put ourselves in such a position. I can understand this Parliament passing drastic legislation during the war, but now that we have signed Treaties of Peace with our leading enemies, why should we attempt to perpetuate the war spirit for the rest of our lives and inflict these disabilities on people who were friendly to us during the war? The hon. minister says that we can get over these difficulties by obtaining the certificate mentioned in this subsection. As a rule when a judge is called upon to grant a certificate, certain things are laid down which must be proved before the certificate can be granted. I must confess that were I acting as a judge I would be entirely at a loss to know what kind of evidence it was necessary to present to me to qualify an applicant for a certificate. If the minister is determined to force this thing through, I would suggest that he add a clause stating specifically what a lawyer appearing for an applicant for one of these certificates would have to prove, so that he would know how to proceed before a judge. As the clause stands, everything is left absolutely to the discretion of the judge, and no lawyer can tell upon what grounds a judge will exercise that discretion. I submit further to the hon. minister, that in a district of probably 100 miles in length and 50 miles in width with only a single judge there will be no accommodation to meet the requirements of the thousands of men and women who will have to apply for these certificates. When our men had to make application for exemption from military service we had a military tribunal at every turn of the road.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understand other business will be taken to-night. I therefore move that the committee rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

Ocean and river service—to continue subsidies for wrecking plants—Quebec and British Columbia, $35,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it was understood the other evening that we might refer to some of the items that had already been carried. There is just one matter that I wish to speak to the minister about, and while it does not pertain wholly to his department, I think he will be interested in it. I refer to the car ferry between Cape Tormentine and Port Borden, Prince Edward Island. I understand that some dredging work was carried on at the car ferry terminals a little while ago and then it was discontinued. I am informed that a possible consequence of the discontinuance of the dredging may be that the car ferry will, one of these days, suffer an injury that will necessitate rather costly repairs. As the minister has to do with the repairing of these vessels, I should be glad if he would take the matter under review, and also have it taken up with the Department of Railways and Canals which, I think, co-operates with his department in this work. If this is a matter exclusively for the Department of Railways and Canals, I will bring it up when the Railway Estimates are before the committee.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: As this is a matter that pertains exclusively to the Department of Railways and Canals, I would ask my hon. friend to bring it up when the Railway Estimates are before the committee. In the meantime, I shall be very glad to speak to my colleague about the matter.

Mr. McISAAC: As we have the privilege of referring to some matters that came up before, I wish to make a few remarks regarding the item of $2,000,000 to provide for the construction of an icebreaking steamer to be used on the river St. Lawrence. When this matter was under consideration before, some remarks were made to the effect that this icebreaker might be so constructed as to be used, on occasion, as an auxiliary to the Prince Edward Island car ferry plying between Port Borden and Cape Tormentine. I am particularly desirous that no improper impression may be made regarding this icebreaker. If I understand this item aright, the appropriation asked for is for the construction of a large icebreaker to ply on the river St. Lawrence to facilitate shipping by keeping the river open in the winter season, and also for the purpose of assisting ships that may be in distress, and things of that sort. Should she be equipped with rails on her deck so as to be able to carry cars across the Strait as is done by the Prince Edward Island car ferry, and so be able to assist that car ferry if necessary, I shall be extremely pleased; but there is nothing in the item to indicate that such is the case. Last winter, I remember well, some ships were in distress in the St. Lawrence and urgent requests were made that the car ferry should leave her route and come to the rescue of those ships. For the car ferry to undertake such service would be a very great inconvenience, as it would completely tie up traffic between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. If I am not properly informed and do not properly apprehend the meaning and intention of this appropriation, I shall be pleased if the minister will put me right.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The icebreaker will be used primarily for the breaking of ice in the St. Lawrence at the end of the season and towards the opening of navigation.

It will also keep the ice bridge open at Cap Rouge. It will be so powerful that it will be able to go to the assistance of ocean vessels leaving Montreal or Quebec late in the season. Last year, as the hon. member says, two of the Government steamers got stuck in the ice, and if we had had an icebreaker, there would have been no difficulty whatever in at once rescuing both these steamers from the ice pack in which they found themselves.

The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) the other evening asked if I would look into the question of having the icebreaker so constructed that it would also serve as a car ferry. I do not know whether that is possible or not, but as I promised my hon. friend, the other evening, I shall take technical advice on the point when tenders are being called for. I cannot make any more definite statement at the moment. I know that all hon. members realize the importance to navigation on the St. Lawrence and on our east coast of having an icebreaker of this great strength. We only have two icebreakers at the present time, the Montcalm and the Lady Grey, neither of which is strong enough to cope with thick ice at certain seasons of the year. During the war an icebreaker similar to the one we are going to have constructed was sold to the Russian Government. The Earl Grey and the Minto were also sold, leaving us with only the Montcalm and the Lady Grey.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Inasmuch as I made the suggestion the other evening to which the minister has been kind enough to refer, I should like to say just a further word in regard to it. As the minister is aware, there is at the present time simply one car ferry between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Since that car ferry has come into use the people of the Island have become dependent on it to a degree that is almost exclusive. The result is that if anything should happen to the ferry at any moment, the Island will be shut off and there will not be available the variety of smaller craft that there would have been before people had come to rely so much on this car ferry. It is generally felt on the Island that there ought to be two car ferries, because if anything happens to the present one the people will be left without the accommodation to which they have become accustomed, and at certain seasons of the year that might prove very embarrassing indeed. It was for that reason I asked the minister to consider, at the time this great icebreaker is being constructed, whether it would not be possible to have it so designed that in off seasons and in times of emergency it might be used to accomodate the people of the Island, just as a second car ferry would accommodate them if it existed. I would not have made the suggestion if it had not been that one or two marine experts have themselves expressed their opinion to me that this large icebreaker could be constructed in that way. It is perfectly true that its main purpose will be to break ice in the St. Lawrence, but I would point out to the minister that it will only be doing icebreaking work during the winter season. In the summer it will be lying idle, and it could then very well be used, I should think, as a car ferry while the present car ferry is laid up for a month or a couple of weeks for repairs, as it always is during the summer months. If this icebreaker were constructed in the way I have suggested it would not only serve that purpose but would also be available in time of emergency. What is wanted by the people of the Island, and those who are being served by the people of the Island is a two-car-ferry service, and just as soon as the Government feel justified in making this provision I think that such a service should be commenced. But in these days of much needed economy, if anything can be done, in the interval to fill in, if we can find a way to "kill two birds with one stone," I believe it will be very much in the interests of all concerned.

Mr. DUFF: The ice in the St. Lawrence attains such a thickness that I am very doubtful if any icebreaker can be constructed that will be able to break the ice during the entire winter season. There is no question, however, that an icebreaker would be of very great service in the St. Lawrence during part of the season, and perhaps that is sufficient reason for the minister going ahead and getting built the most powerful icebreaker that can be constructed.

My object in rising, however, was not to discuss icebreaking on the St. Lawrence so much as the ice conditions on the Atlantic coast during the winter months. We endeavour to do a good deal of business from Sydney to Yarmouth and right up to the Bay of Fundy all the year round, but we are sometimes handicapped during the months of December, January and February by the ice conditions encountered on that coast. During the past two or three years we have endeavoured to get the Department of Marine or the Department of Naval Affairs to help us out when ice conditions were such that we could not get along without help, and the department have always been willing to give us any assistance they could. But I have one complaint to make, and it is this: During the present season practically the only ice steamer which the department owns was tied up at the dock at Dartmouth from November till April. I refer to the Stanley, and I say it was bad business on the part of somebody to so arrange for the repairs to that steamer that she was tied up at the dock during all that time. If the Montcalm or some other icebreaker had been available the department would have been quite justified in having the Stanley laid up for repairs. It is well known that the Nova Scotia and Atlantic coast is very dangerous in the winter season. Nearly every week some vessel will be sending in S.O.S. calls for assistance from Sable island or the Atlantic ocean. Whenever a call came last winter there was no steamer of the department to send out to vessels in distress. On one occasion this year when the steamer Powattan owned by the United States, was crossing the Atlantic with troops, she lost her propeller and for ten days was at the mercy of the waves. It was only by an act of Providence that the steamer did not founder, perhaps with all hands on board. The Government at last did send the Lady Laurier to her assistance, and this vessel under the captaincy of Captain Travis, did good work, in company with United States tug boats, in helping to get the vessel to port. But my complaint is that the Stanley should have been available during the winter months to go to the assistance of steamers in distress. The only steamer which the department could send to the assistance of vessels off the Nova Scotia coast was a little steamer called the Petrel, which is one of the fishery protective service boats. I may say that the captain and crew of that steamer did everything possible for the people at Shelburne, Lockport, Liverpool and Lunenburg, but the trouble was the steamer was not large enough to do the work that was required of her. If the Stanley or a steamer of that class had been available, and the Stanley should have been available, business men along the coast of Nova Scotia would not have had to suffer the inconvenience they did during those months. I am not finding fault, so much as pointing out to the minister that next year he should provide a steamer for this service so that business men along the coast of Nova Scotia need not be put to the inconvenience they were this winter. I understand the Department of Naval Affairs has a steamer called the Acadia which could have done this work, but she was laid up at Halifax. I would suggest that next year the steamer be stationed at Lunenburg or Liverpool to serve the people along the coast of Nova Scotia.

Mr. COPP: I want to ask a question of the minister with regard to the icebreaking steamer.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not want to interfere with the liberty of the committee, but it must be understood that this discussion which is not relevant to the item before the committee, takes place by unanimous consent. Is it the unanimous consent of the committee that the items already agreed to be again discussed?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. COPP: I understood we were discussing this item by agreement.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out that no agreement can bind the committee. Any agreement must be confirmed by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. COPP: I understood the minister to say that this icebreaking steamer was to replace one built two years ago and sold to the Russian Government. I should like to know when that steamer was sold, what she cost, and what was received by the Government for her.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The icebreaker in question was the J. D. Hazen, which cost, in round figures, $1,000,000. She was sold for the same sum to the Russian Government, and I understand that payment was made promptly.

Mr. COPP: The minister says he understands that she has been paid for?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. COPP: I suppose he knows it to be so.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: Is this the steamer which Vickers built?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: I am informed that Vicker's Limited sold this steamer for over a million and a half dollars; that is to say, they made a profit, over and above the cost price, of $600,000. Is that correct?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I was not a member of the late Government, and I have no knowledge of the transaction. All I know is that this steamer cost $1,000,000, and was sold for that sum to the Russian Government. The Canadian Government has been paid, and I had no knowledge of any profit which any outsider may have made out of the ship.

Mr. DUFF: Does the minister mean to say that the contract which the Dominion Government had with Vickers was for a million dollars, or that that was the sum which the Russian Government paid Vickers for this steamer?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Vickers did not sell the steamer. This icebreaker was sold through the British Government to the Russian Government. If it passed into any other hands afterwards I have no knowledge of the fact.

Mr. DUFF: It seems strange to me that if the Canadian Government made a contract with Vickers to build a ship Vickers should have sold the ship to the Russian Government or any other government. My information is that the Dominion Government, instead of carrying out the transaction themselves when inquiry was made with reference to the ship by the Russian Government, left the matter in the hands of Vickers, who made a profit of $600,000 more than the contract with the Canadian Government amounted to. Now, is that information correct or not? It seems to me that it is bad business on the part of the previous Minister of Marine. I wish my hon. friend (Mr. Ballantyne) to understand that I am not casting any reflections on him, because I know that he is too good a business man to stand for such a transaction. I am informed that through gross negligence on the part of the former minister the Canadian people lost $600,000 in this one transaction, the British or the Russian Government, whichever it was, having paid that sum to Vickers more than the amount of the contract which they had with the Government.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I can only say again that I have no knowledge of this alleged transaction. I am very well acquainted with my predecessor in office, and I am sure that the transaction was proper so far as he was concerned. The icebreaker was sold at cost price to Russia, through the British Government, and we were paid for it. The statement of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) is news to me, and I am not in a position to say anything further than I have already said on the matter.

Mr. DUFF: The matter might have been done by Order in Council. I do not blame the former minister personally. It is likely that an Order in Council was passed, and therefore the whole Government would be responsible.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: My colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) who was a member of the late Government, tells me that the icebreaker was not sold through Vickers but direct to the Russian Government through the British Government.

Mr. DUFF: I understand that the Government had a contract with Vickers to build the icebreaker, and that about the time she was completed the Russian Government made inquiries for such a steamer, and instead of the Canadian Government doing the business themselves and selling the icebreaker direct to the Russian Government they allowed Vickers to sell it, with the result that Vickers obtained from the Russian Government some $600,000 more than the contract price which the Canadian Government had agreed upon with them. I desire to know whether that information is correct, because if it is not I certainly should like to get some explanation of the matter. I do not want to accuse the previous Government of having done something which they did not do, but I have stated the information which has reached me from a reliable source, and I think the minister should clear the matter up.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is rather difficult for me to understand how the hon. gentleman could get such information, because this icebreaker was sold to the Russian Government in the way I have stated. The transfer was made from the Canadian Government to the Russian Government, the British Government having merely acted as an intermediary, and I cannot see where Vickers came into the transaction at all.

Mr. DUFF: That is just what I want to know. My information is that they got $600,000 which should have gone into the Canadian treasury. How did that happen?

Mr. McKENZIE: I shall not insist upon the minister giving us any information about this icebreaker, the J. D. Hazen. I remember that the question was up before an inquiry, in 1916 I think it was, before the Public Accounts Committee some time ago, but I have not sufficiently taxed my memory with what took place to make any precise statement in regard to the matter at the present time. I know however that it was not just the simple proposition which the minister says it was. My purpose in speaking on this question is merely to say this: The minister cannot escape responsibility by saying that the transaction took place before he became a minister. I would be sorry to say that the changes in the Department of Marine were somewhat akin to apostolic succession, but there is in the department a sufficient succession for the minister to be absolutely responsible for what took place in the department before he took charge of it, particularly while his own party was in power. But whether it was his own party or not, under constitutional ministerial responsibility, he must account to this committee for everything that took place in his department. While I do not wish to press the minister for information, I do not want him to get off with the excuse that this took place under some other minister and that consequently he is not responsible.

Mr. COPP: When I asked the minister a few moments ago about the icebreaker that was sold to the Russian Government, I had in mind the following statement which the minister made on April 23, in reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Robb):

> I cannot give any more information than I gave last year. The icebreaker J. D. Hazen, which cost approximately $1,000,000, was sold to the Russian Government. The officers of my department have made every effort during the last few months to get trace of her, but have been unable to do so.

Why were the officers trying to get trace of the J. D. Hazen if she had been bought and paid for by the Russian Government?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: If the Canadian Government had been able to get trace of the vessel, we thought that we might be able to buy her back at less cost than would be involved in building a new one. My department, therefore, instituted inquiries to that end through the High Commissioner in London, but without success.

Mr. COPP: The answer is quite reasonable, Mr. Chairman. The minister did not make this explanation at the time; consequently I did not understand why his department wanted to get trace of the vessel.

Mr. BOYS: The matter to which my hon. friend (Mr. Duff) refers was the subject of the Public Accounts Committee, and at that time the matter was fully gone into. The late Auditor General, Mr. Fraser, was disposed at one time to criticise the department, but as will be seen by a reference to the testimony which he gave before the committee on that occasion, in the end he absolutely exonerated the department. The whole thing is set out in quite a number of pages of evidence. I refer the hon. gentleman particularly to the evidence of the Auditor General, who, I think, first brought the matter to the attention of the committee.

Mr. DUFF: I am obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. Boys) for his explanation. But I think it would be better if the minister would lay the information and papers on the Table.

Mr. BOYS: It is on record now.

Mr. DUFF: Personally I would be willing to look the matter up, but that would not furnish other hon. members with the information which they may desire. I suggest, therefore, that the minister lay on the Table all the papers connected with this transaction.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I shall be glad indeed to do that.

For the maintenance and improvements of the Sorel shipyard, shops and offices, as well as operating expenses—$65,000.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman, I was not here when some of the other items were discussed, and if you will permit me I would like to make a few remarks with regard to one or two of them.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member may discuss them under this item. The committee has given its unanimous consent that reference be made to items already agreed to.

Mr. DUFF: The Border City Star, published at Windsor, Ontario, in its issue of April 26 last, contained a statement to the effect that the Marine Department were cooperating with the provincial authorities of Ontario in preventing the carrying of liquor from the Canadian side across the Detroit river to the American side, and that to that end the department had placed a number of swift motor cruisers on the Detroit river. Is that statement correct? And, if so, why is the Federal Government interfering with the shipment of liquor from Canada to the United States? If we have prohibition in Canada, it seems to me that the more avenues of escape there are for this liquor, the better; instead of preventing its shipment to the United States, we should use every effort to get it out of the country.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sure that the hon. member does not believe everything he reads in the columns of the press,—with all due respect to the press. I assure him at once that the Department of Marine did not place any motor boats at the disposal of the liquor authorities—was that what my hon. friend said?

Mr. DUFF: Provincial authorities.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Or the provincial authorities, either. There is nothing whatever in the report to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. DUFF: I am sure the minister is glad that I brought this report to his attention. I myself did not believe it, but I wanted to give the minister and his department a chance to deny it. With regard to item "Registration of Shipping, $6,000" may I ask the minister, who are the registrars of shipping in Nova Scotia?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have not the names at hand, but the registrars are really the collectors of customs. There are eighty ports of registry in Canada, twenty-two of which are in Nova Scotia.

Mr. DUFF: Who is the registrar at Lunenburg?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry that I cannot give his name, but he is the collector of customs. Perhaps the hon. member will recall his name.

Mr. DUFF: Is he the registrar, or the acting registrar?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: He is the acting registrar, I understand.

Mr. DUFF: Last year the gentleman who had acted for a number of years as collector of customs and registrar of shipping resigned on account of ill-health. After I heard that a certain gentleman had been appointed as acting collector of customs and acting registrar of shipping, I took the matter up, first with the Customs Department. After lengthy correspondence I was able to get information as to how the appointment was made. I understood from the legislation recently passed by Parliament that all appointments to the Civil Service had to be made by the Civil Service Commission, and was relying upon that fact, but was surprised to receive the statement from the Department of Customs that the appointing of the Acting Registrar of Shipping was not made by the Civil Service Commission but by a gentleman known as the Commissioner of Customs. I do not yet know who that gentleman is, nor do I care; but I want to say that the Government should not come here and tell us that the appointments are made by the Civil Service Commission, and then go outside and make them through the Commissioner of Customs or anybody else. I have no objection from a personal standpoint to this appointment and it might be quite proper for the Commissioner of Customs or the Minister of Customs to make the appointment—although I think the Commissioner of Customs is the "goat" in this case because the Acting Minister of Customs was the gentleman who actually exercised the power and not the commissioner. I do find fault, however, upon the ground that the Minister of Marine, in my opinion, is just as capable as the Minister of Customs and should have the selection of his own officers. When I found this gentleman had been appointed Acting Registrar of Shipping I first took the matter up with the Customs Department, but could get no satisfaction there. I then applied to the Civil Service Commission, and I have a letter from the chairman of that body in which he definitely states that the Civil Service Commission had nothing whatever to do with this appointment. I then wrote the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean), who at that time was Acting Minister of Marine, and he expressed considerable surprise that the appointment had gone through without consultation with him, either as the Acting Minister of Marine or as the godfather of the Civil Service Commission. When the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) himself returned to his office last winter I wrote him a letter and asked him how and why the appointment was made, and received a letter from him to the following effect:

OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES OF CANADA,

OTTAWA, 31st December, 1919.

DEAR SIR,—In answer to your letter of the 18th instant, I beg to inform you that the practice which has obtained in Canada since Confederation has been that the collector, or other chief officer of Customs, at a port of registry is ex officio the Registrar of Shipping, and the Canadian Order in Council passed on the 26th March, 1874, instituting Lunenburg a port of registry, appointed the collector of Customs at the port Registrar of Shipping.

When Mr. Mack, therefore, was appointed acting collector of Customs at Lunenburg, he ipso facto became acting registrar of shipping. I am not, as you may well understand, familiar with the manner in which Mr. Mack and Mr. Anderson were appointed to the Customs Service.

I gather from your letter that no permanent appointment as collector has yet been made. Following the previous custom and the requirement of the Order in Council creating Lunenburg a port of registry, whoever becomes the permanent officer will be the registrar.

Yours very truly,

C. C. BALLANTYNE.

You will see, Mr. Chairman, that neither the Minister of Marine nor his officials had anything whatever to do with the appointment of this official. Yet if there is one port in Nova Scotia where the office of registrar is an important one it is the port of Lunenburg, not because the business is so large but because there are so many transactions. The business done is on a co-operative basis there being sometimes as many as sixty-four owners in one ship. I do not think any such condition exists in any other port of Canada as exists there, and for that reason there are more transfers of ships or shares in ships by the registrar at Lunenburg than perhaps anywhere else in the world. The appointment of the officer in question was a very important one, and it seems to me that the Minister of Marine should certainly have had something to do with it. For this reason: If the Registrar of shipping does not act in conformity with the law, the Minister of Marine or his officials here will get the blame. Therefore that minister should not for one moment longer allow the Minister of Customs, or any officer belonging to the Customs Department, to make such an appointment. It is time the Order in Council passed in 1874 was repealed, and the Minister of Marine given the power to select his own officials. I repeat that the office of registrar in the town of Lunenburg is an important one, and if the present incumbent is only acting registrar, the Minister of Marine should be very careful before he allows the Minister of Customs to make that appointment permanent.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Possibly the hon. gentleman is aware that the Minister of Marine has not the authority, under the Shipping Act, to appoint registrars of shipping. That power is vested in the Minister of Customs only.

Mr. DUFF: That is what I said.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The passage of an Order in Council would not be sufficient to meet the situation. I would have to bring in legislation repealing clause 11 of the Shipping Act which vests the authority in the Minister of Customs.

Mr. DUFF: The minister did not grasp the purport of what I said. Perhaps I did not make myself sufficiently clear. I did not say the minister could remedy matters by passing an Order in Council. I said that the minister was acting at the present time under an Order in Council which was passed in 1874. I further said that it was high time that that Order in Council was repealed, and that it was a shame that the minister at present did not have the power to appoint his own officials.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I understand that at present the registrar of shipping charges fees, and that the owner of a ship has to pay all the expenses of a survey and of registry. Is this money spent at the head office or is it expended in the several ports?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The money is spent at the head office. Owing to the large increase of Canadian registered tonnage there are far more ships being registered now than has ever been the case in past years. On the 31st December, 1919, there were 8,615 vessels registered at ports in Canada; therefore the hon. gentleman will see how the number of ships under Canadian registry has grown.

Mr. FIELDING: Is any portion of this money applied to augmenting the salary of the collector of customs—is that the way it is done, or does the collector of customs receive an extra salary for these duties?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The various registrars throughout Canada are paid by a scale of fees as follows: For vessels under fifty tons net register, $3—

Mr. FIELDING: That is the fee which a shipowner pays?

Mr. DUFF: While the minister is getting that information will he permit me to say that the owners of the vessel pay all the fees in connection with the registry of vessels when they are built. Is it also a fact that the vessel owners when they transfer the ships or shares pay $1 for getting a bill of sale and fifty cents for a declaration of ownership. This money is paid to the registrar of shipping, and he puts that amount into his own pocket. This is a special amount which he receives and keeps, apart from his salary.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I find that I confused the fees for surveys with the registry of shipping. There are no fees charged for the registry of a ship.

Mr. DUFF: The owner pays the cost.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Agencies, rents and contingencies—$198,000.

Mr. DUFF: I would like to bring to the attention of the minister a matter concerning the agency at Halifax. Mr. Harvey, who is in charge of that agency, is, so far as I am aware, a capable official. For a great many years the Department of Marine and Naval Affairs has been paying for a telephone in his house, and this telephone was a very great convenience to the business men of Halifax or of any other part of Nova Scotia when there is any trouble along the shore and they wish to communicate with Mr. Harvey. But I notice that that "great family journal," the Halifax Herald—the minister will know what paper I am referring to—publishes a cartoon headed, "Cutting the life-line." I do not know if the minister can see this cartoon which I am holding up for his attention, but it refers to the fact that the Marine Department has ordered Mr. Harvey to discontinue his house telephone or they would hold him responsible for the expense. It is as important to have a telephone in Mr. Harvey's house as in his office for the purpose of looking after the work on the Nova Scotia coast, and I feel sure the Halifax Herald was mistaken when it circulated that report all over the province to the worry of a number of our business men who appreciate the importance of being able to keep in touch with Mr. Harvey in case of emergency. I would like to know if this statement is correct.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member is quite correct when he surmises that the article is unwarranted. The telephone is not going to be taken out of Mr. Harvey's house.

Salaries and allowances to lightkeepers—$650,000.

Mr. LEGER: I would like to call the attention of the minister to the salaries of the lightkeepers. When the items for bonuses were before the House I called to his attention the inadequate salaries paid to these men, and I was told that the bonus regulations did not apply to them. I find from the Auditor General's report that the salaries range from $84 to about $300. These salaries were small enough when the cost of living was normal, when, for instance, a barrel of flour could be purchased for $3 or $4, as against the current price of $14 or $15,—and so with other commodities. On a former occasion I urged the necessity of helping these men, and I hope that the minister will now see his way clear to give their case his favourable consideration, for these men perform splendid service at various isolated places on the coast.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I think the hon. member is aware that at the last session $60,000 was voted for additional salaries to the lighthouse keepers, and a like amount was voted in the previous session. I quite agree that these men perform splendid service at isolated points. I find that there are nineteen grades or classes of lighthouse keepers, No. 1 grade being paid $2,900, and this amount will go up to a maximum of $3,240 under the new classification. The remuneration goes all the way from this maximum amount down to as low as $80 a year. The lighthouse keepers who do not give all their time are of course paid these smaller salaries, but a general increase will be made to all lighthouse keepers under the new classification.

Mr. STEIN: Will these lighthouse keepers share in the bonus we voted the other day for the Civil Service? I put that question to the hon. Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), and I received a very nice smile from him, but no answer. So I expect the smile was affirmative, and that these men will share in the bonus.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The $60,000 voted at the two previous sessions represented bonuses to these men, but there will be no further bonuses granted from the vote my hon. friend refers to. As I said in answer to the hon. member for Kent, N.B. (Mr. Leger) a new classification has been made by the Civil Service Commission, and all grades of lighthouse keepers will now receive higher salaries.

Mr. GAUVREAU: If I am well informed, a delegation from the lighthouse keepers came here some time ago, and they left entirely pleased with what they were told, fully expecting that what they asked for would be granted to them. While I am on my feet I would call the attention of the minister to a request for a cable between Green Island and the mainland in the County of Temiscouata. I am sorry to say that, according to a letter I received from the department, no record is kept of the understanding arrived at many years ago between the Hon. Mr. Brodeur and myself. It was understood at that time that connection would be made between Red island in the St. Lawrence and Green island lighthouse and then with the mainland by means of the Kamouraska Telephone Company. The understanding was that the Government would provide the cable and the company would pay all expenses for laying the cable and the cost of operation. It was found at that time that that was too much for the company. The company now ask me if there is any way of getting 8,000 feet of cable to connect Green island with the mainland. Everybody who knows the river St. Lawrence opposite the river Saguenay realizes the difficulties that exist in that part of the river. It is one of the most dangerous spots on the river St. Lawrence, and if the department can afford the expense of providing a cable to connect Green Island lighthouse with the mainland, a great deal of expense will be saved to the department, and vessels going up or down the St. Lawrence will be afforded greater safety. I was told the other day by the deputy minister—and I think he is right—that it would be hard at the present time to ask for an appropriation for 8,000 feet of cable; but in view of the fact that if 8,000 feet of cable could be provided to connect Green Island lighthouse with the mainland, great aid will be given to navigation on the river St. Lawrence, I hope the minister, who received so well the deputation of lighthouse keepers, will see his way clear to grant that request. It is only for 8,000 feet of cable, and the company will lay the cable and pay all the cost of operation in the years to come. The amount is a small one after all, and the minister would be wise in granting that request, thereby ensuring greater safety to vessels plying on the river St. Lawrence.

Mr. BUREAU: What does the hon. member mean by Green island? Does he mean Ile Verte?

Mr. GAUVREAU: Green island is an island in the centre of the St. Lawrence and Ile Verte is the parish on the north side.

Mr. BUREAU: Is it called Green Island or Ile Verte?

Mr. GAUVREAU: On the map it is called Green island, but we can say either Green island or Ile Verte. I think the minister will understand me, all right. I would not like him to think I came from a "green" part of the country.

Mr. BUREAU: No, the hon. member is all right. I am asking this question merely for the purpose of information because I know that island is designated in our local statutes as Ile Verte. I know that a Geographical Commission was appointed to rebaptize certain localities, but I had occasion to look up some matters in connection with this island, and in the local statues I found it is designated as Ile Verte. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have not as perfect a knowledge of both languages as my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) has, but I do not see any difference between Ile Verte and Green Island. I will find out whether it should be officially called Green Island or Ile Verte. Personally, I should prefer the French name.

Mr. BUREAU: This is not a question of knowledge, and I do not want the minister to think I am trying to read him a lesson in either French or English. That has never been my custom and I am not going to start now, but I want to know how the name "Green Island" occurred on the map when the property is designated in our statutes as Ile Verte. If the change has been made by the Geographical Commission, well and good; but as this may lead to confusion, I want to find out whether Green island is the same piece of land as is designated in our statutes as Ile Verte.

Mr. GAUVREAU: What about my cable, now?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: In reply to the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau), I am informed that no record can be found on the files of the Marine Department that my predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Brodeur, made any such arrangement. I cannot make a definite promise to the hon. member to-night. I have already informed the members of the committee that we must practise economy, but I shall be glad to look into the matter, and if there is any possible way of meeting the views of the hon. member, it will be a pleasure for me to do so.

Mr. McISAAC: I am not sure whether or not I understood the minister aright regarding the increase of $50,000 in the whole appropriation for salaries and allowances to lighthouse keepers, whether it is for the purpose of increasing the salaries or whether it is to be applied by way of bonus. I understand that for the past two or three years certain of the lighthouse keepers—I do not know about them all—have received a bonus. Is this all the increase, or will any of those lighthouse keepers participate by way of bonus in the proposed appropriation of $12,500,000 for bonuses to civil servants?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: They will not participate in the bonus, part of which has already been voted. A moment ago I referred to the fact that at the last session of Parliament, and the previous one, $60,000 had been voted on each occasion. The Civil Service Commission have gone over the salaries of the lighthouse keepers; I have the reclassification here, and if it passes the House, there will be a substantial increase in salaries for all of the lighthouse keepers. If the hon. member wishes me to let him know what the increase will be for any particular class of lighthouse keepers, I shall be very glad to give him the information.

Mr. DUFF: I think every member of the committee will agree with me that if there are any public officials in Canada who deserve to be well paid for their services, they are the men who look after the lighthouses on both coasts and on the St. Lawrence and other rivers. Most of these men have to live on islands away from their friends and relatives; they deserve every consideration on the part of this Government, and I feel sure that the minister had that in mind in increasing the appropriation by the reasonable amount of $50,000.

I rose particularly to refer to the item for maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and icebreakers, which item was discussed in my absence. I should like to refer for a moment to the salaries or wages paid to the crews of Government steamers. The men on our Government steamers, many of whom I know very well, are the poorest paid men in Canada. Let me take, for instance, the Government steamer "Lady Laurier," which has done excellent work on the Nova Scotia coast. I find, looking at the Auditor General's report, that Captain Travis, captain of this vessel, received last year only $1,600, or in round figures about $135 a month. That is disgraceful. No captain of a small hundred-ton boat receives a smaller wage than Captain Travis of the "Lady Laurier," and a man with his experience and ability should receive at least $200 a month. I do not know Captain Travis personally, except to meet him perhaps once in two years, but it is a shame that a man of his experience should be receiving only $1,600 a year and $100 of a bonus from the people of this country for his services. On the same page, I find that the first officer of that boat received only $100 per month.

A mate on either a small steamer or a sailing vessel receives $150 a month, and it seems to me that a mate on a Government steamer should receive a larger salary than a mate on a small ship. I would suggest to the minister that he go over the salary schedule of his officers and see if something cannot be done towards compensating adequately these hardworking men. They have to go along the coast of Nova Scotia and out in mid-Atlantic in all kinds of weather. In the summer they encounter fog, and in the winter cold weather and storms, and it seems to me they are certainly deserving of an increase. One thing I cannot understand is why they stay in the Government service for such a small salary. Any time during the last five years it would have been no trouble for Captain Travis to get $200 or $250 a month. The same thing applies to the captain of the icebreaker Montcalm, Captain Hearn, who is one of the most capable navigators in Canada. There is no question that he is a first-class man, yet he only receives $135 a month. Why, any ordinary nigger gets almost that much on board a ship. I might say that on little fishing schooners cooks are receiving $250 a month. Captain Hearn's cook gets only $80 a month. That is a scandalous state of affairs. The same is true of the steamer Stanley. The Stanley is an absolute necessity on the coast. Her captain is very much underpaid. Captain Slawenwhite, the mate, has lived in Halifax for ten or fifteen years. He has no vote in my county, he votes in Halifax, so it cannot be said I am trying to catch a vote or talking for political purposes. He possesses a master's certificate and is paid only $110 or $120 per month. When he was at sea before he got into the King's uniform, and when wages were much lower, he was receiving perhaps $150 in wages alone, and if he left the Government service he would get at least $200 a month. I bring these matters to the attention of the minister because I have received several communications from men on the Government steamers within the last few months asking me to point out to the minister and to the committee when the Estimates were up how inadequate their salaries were. The minister should certainly do something to give these men a decent wage, for they cannot live on the wages they get. Captain Slawenwhite lives in Halifax, and I do not see how he can live there and raise his family on $110 a month. I appeal once more to the minister to see if something cannot be done to pay these men a decent wage.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member has been quoting the salaries. The blue-book does not show the bonuses.

Mr. DUFF: I mentioned bonuses.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Captain Hearn of the Montcalm gets $140 a month and a bonus of $19. The captain of the Stanley gets $135 a month and $17 bonus. When the re-classification goes into effect both of these officers will receive $160 a month. I must say that I do not know what steamship owner pays a cook $250 a month.

Mr. DUFF: Fishing vessels.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am glad to know there is so much money in the fishing business that they can afford to pay a cook $250 a month.

Mr. DUFF: The crew pay half and the owners half.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: They must have first-class chefs on those vessels. While I am in sympathy with doing everything that can be done to pay as good salaries as possible to the crews of the Government ships, I would certainly not be prepared to recommend to the committee a salary of $250 a month for cooks. We have very good cooks on our ships, and we get them for very much less than that. We pay the chief cook $70 a month, and the second cook $45 a month. There is a great deal of difference between $70 and $200 a month. Under re-classification all the members of the crews of the Government ships will have an increase in salary, but we cannot hope to compete with the very fanciful salaries paid by fishing vessels.

Mr. DUFF: This $250 is only paid by fishing vessels with a crew perhaps of nineteen men. A vessel with a crew of perhaps six or seven men would pay their cooks $100 a month. If the owners of sailing vessels in Nova Scotia can afford to pay their cooks $100, surely the people of Canada will be willing to pay their cooks an equal amount, if not a little more.

The minister has referred to the re-classification of the Civil Service. I would not advise him to pay his officers according to the re-classification schedules. If I were minister, I would kick up my heels if anybody asked me to go by that classification. It provides for able seamen, for instance, a salary of only $60 a month. The minister must know that it is impossible in this enlightened age to get able seamen for that amount. While the Arthur Young Company might be able to get them, nobody on the Atlantic or Pacific coast could hire his sailors for $60, and if the minister had to hold his ships in port until he got them at that price they would be tied up much longer than they are at present. Under the re-classification, a first-class master is to get $160 a month, a second-class master $140, third-class $120, and fourth-class $105. A first-class mate is supposed to get $100, and a second-class mate $80 a month. The minister ought not to be willing to pay the rates set out in this classification, or to continue to pay the wages he is now paying to the men on these steamers. These men should be paid for doing Government work just as much as they would be paid by any private corporation.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I notice an increase of $50,000 in the item for salaries for lighthouse keepers. I should like to know if this increase applies generally to lighthouse keepers and whether they will all participate in the increase. I understand there is to be a classification. Will every class of lighthouse keeper participate in some degree in the increase?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The increase of $50,000 applies only to certain classes, only to the more important lighthouses, not lighthouses in minor waters. It applies to lighthouses that are running all the year round.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I understand that the keepers in the smaller lighthouses were poorly paid, and I hardly think that it was a proper adjustment to spend the money altogether on the larger lighthouses while the smaller ones do not participate.

Mr. LALOR: Does this increase apply only to Nova Scotia? Are we on lake Erie and lake Ontario to expect an increase for lighthouse keepers as well?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The classification of the Civil Service applies to all lighthouse keepers throughout Canada. In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. J. H. Sinclair) I may say that the minor lighthouse keepers give only a portion of their time to looking after lights. I admit that their remuneration is small, but their duties are not very onerous. However, they also will come in for an increase under the re-classification.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I suppose it is true that the lighthouse keepers on the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes, which are frozen up part of the year, have considerable spare time during which they can add to their income. But that is not true as regards the Maritime Provinces and the coasts where the lighthouse keepers work all winter, night and day. They have always to be on hand to light the lamps, and some of these men are poorly paid indeed. In the increase of $50,000 I trust they will participate.

Mr. EDWARDS: I desire to add a word or two on behalf of the small lighthouse keepers. It may be true that those on the inland waters where the lakes and rivers are frozen part of the year have that portion of the winter months to themselves to do something else, but I should like to know what there is for them to do during that time. There is very little opportunity for them to make any money during the winter months, and practically speaking they have to depend entirely on the salaries they get for that work. I can see no reason why men occupying these important and responsible positions should be treated any differently, so far as bonuses are concerned, from any other men in the Civil Service. Where men who occupy clerical positions in the departments in Ottawa and perform their duties faithfully and well, receive salaries on which it is considered they cannot live, we unanimously agree that it is right that they should share in the bonus. Why, therefore, should the bonus not be given to those men who are tied down to such responsible duties as these men have to perform? In a city like Ottawa civil servants are in a position to combine their forces and press their demands in a way in which those who occupy isolated government positions cannot; but that does not strengthen the claim of the urban civil servants, nor does it weaken the claim of those who are not fortunate enough to be able to join forces and urge their case upon the Government. It is merely a question of fair play and just treatment, and I want to place myself on record as being of the opinion that if the bonus can be justifiably paid to civil servants in Ottawa and elsewhere it can just as reasonably and justifiably be extended so as to supplement the very small salaries which these lightkeepers have hitherto received.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I am not quite clear as to the division line between the large and the small lighthouses. Perhaps the minister can tell us what class of lighthouse keepers will get the increase.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There are nineteen classes in all. The bonuses voted for the past two sessions of $60,000 each were distributed among all lighthouse keepers, except certain men who can hardly come within that definition, such as men who hang up lights at the end of wharfs. They of course would not share in this additional $50,000, but all the lighthouse keepers in the Maritime Provinces and on the Great Lakes will. Those men who hang up lights would not participate in the increase.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: As a matter of fact they are not lighthouse keepers.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, but we have no other name for them.

Mr. McKENZIE: I desire to say something about St. Paul's island which is an important station on the Atlantic coast. It happens to be part of my riding and I would ask the minister how many lightkeepers and other employees of that kind there are on that island, and whether they are all in permanent appointments. I should like to know also what their present salaries are and what are their prospects under the new classification.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The question which the hon. gentleman asks is a poser. For the time being, I regret to say, I cannot answer it. I shall look up the information, and in the meantime, in order that we may make some progress, I would ask, with the consent of the hon. member, that we proceed to the next item.

Maintenance and repairs to lighthouses—$750,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Some two years ago I made application to the Department of Marine for the erection of a light at Grand Etang, Inverness. I have endeavoured to keep in touch with the matter up to now but I have not received very much information or encouragement. May I ask what has been done in connection with the matter?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am afraid I have to tell the same old story. Owing to the expenses of the war, the large public debt, and the necessity for rigid economy, the matter will have to stand in abeyance as a great many other important items have had to stand. But as soon as I can get a sufficient vote I shall be glad to see that it is attended to.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I am just as anxious as the minister that we should practise all the economy possible, but I am afraid that things have come to such a pass in the department that their economies are rather destructive than constructive. The port is a new one; a lot of shipping goes on there, and there is one light. What we want is a range light which will enable our vessels to come at night, because the coast in that vicinity is very rough. If any of our fishing vessels were wrecked on the coast, it would be remembered that the minister and those associated with him had destroyed the only means of safety we have, that is, our life-saving station at Cheticamp, in this fever for economy in small matters, while most extravagant in large matters. I for one cannot see where the economy comes in when the lives and property of the fishermen are at stake. It is economy to preserve the lives and property of the fishermen and to encourage them in their industry. But that has not been done. I propose to discuss on a later occasion some of the things that have been done during the last three years along the coast of Inverness which have been against the interests of the fishermen; are without any regard for their lives and property. But, so far as this small item is concerned, I wish to put myself on record as not accepting the argument of the minister based on the ground of economy. I cannot accept it, because it is not reasonable and without a thought for our great industry.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: In pre-war times the Department of Marine had an item in the Estimates each year for new construction and maintenance of lighthouses, sometimes as high as $1,000,000. I do not think that I shall be divulging a State secret when I say that I had a very much larger amount than $400,000 provided for this year, but I was not able to persuade my colleagues to see the matter in the same light that I did, and I was asked to keep the amount down to $400,000. While I regret that, I am in hearty accord with the other members of the Government in accepting the principle that our ordinary expenditures must be in keeping with our ordinary revenue. While I would like to do more, we really have not the money, and we must cut the coat according to the cloth.

Mr. DUFF: I wish to emphasize what my hon. friend (Mr. Chisholm) has said; aids to navigation, whether on the St. Lawrence or in the Maritime Provinces or on the Pacific coast, should not be neglected. The minister's argument with regard to economy while it is not without some force, is not a sufficient reason why, if a lighthouse or range light is necessary at Grand Etang, it should not be put there. The minister said that he had proposed a much larger amount than $400,000 for lights and aids to navigation in his original Estimates, but that Council did not accede to his request. Well, it is quite evident that the Minister of Marine has not as much pull with his colleagues as the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) has, because, if my memory is correct, the Minister of the Interior succeeded in getting his colleagues to agree to the appropriation of $100,000 more for parks in the West this year than was voted last year. It seems to me that there is more necessity for expenditure on lighthouses than there is for expenditure on parks in the West. It would be better if the Minister of the Interior would turn this $100,000 over to his colleague the Minister of Marine so that the life and property of people on both coasts of this country may be properly protected.

Mr. McCOIG: There is a great deal in what the hon. member (Mr. Duff) has just said. Complaints of this kind are being made by marine men not only in Nova Scotia, but also in Ontario. Considerable complaint has come from captains who are navigating on lake Erie with regard to the conditions at Erieau. Representations have been made to the department with regard to the danger to life and to vessels which are worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the reply has been that no accidents have taken place there, and that consequently there is no necessity for further action. While those who are thoroughly conversant with that section of the country and who know the difficulties that they have to contend with in making port with such valuable cargoes as go into Erieau state that further aids to navigation are necessary, hundreds of thousands of dollars are being spent in other departments upon works or enterprises which are not necessary. On stormy nights when heavy seas are rolling it would be a great comfort to those who are responsible for the navigation of vessels to know that they may enter harbour in safety. I hope that the minister will afford to the captains who are sailing on lake Erie, particularly those who go in and out of Erieau harbour, those facilities which can be provided at a cost of only a few hundred dollars and which would ensure the safety of many lives and the protection of much valuable property.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I see by the Auditor General's report that this item also includes buoy service. We have a large number of very valuable buoys on the coasts of the Maritime Provinces on which the country has spent a great deal of money. Many of these are taken up and stored during the winter season and put out again in the following season. Last year we had numerous complaints from captains that most of the summer had passed before these buoys were put out. I hope that the same thing will not happen this year. I do not know why it happened; we have the equipment for the putting out of these buoys. There must be some lack of efficiency when they are not set out early in the spring so that vessels may have the advantage of them during the season when they are most needed.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There is a great deal in what the hon. member says, but the department is very short of ships. The Earl Grey and the Minto, when we had them in that service, assisted in placing the buoys, as did the Aranmore, which, unfortunately, was wrecked last fall. The shortage of ships causes the delay, but we shall do the very best we can.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: What ships have you in this service?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Stanley and the Lady Laurier. We hope that we may get the Aranmore off the place on which she is stranded so that she too may be available.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Will the minister say if any of the buoys have been put out this season yet?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Certainly a very large number but I am not prepared to state what the exact number is.

Mr. CHISHOLM: The inquiry of my hon. friend has reference to larger buoys. I want to get some information respecting the smaller buoys that are taken up in the fall of the year when the ice makes along the coast. I would like to know if there is any scheme in operation as a result of which these buoys are placed by somebody. There are a great many points in my own county where the buoys were not placed until I looked after the matter myself. Now somebody ought to be in charge of this duty, but there appears to be nobody who is held responsible for placing the buoys. Will the minister tell me who is really responsible for placing these smaller buoys leading to the ports?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Will my hon. friend state what particular port he has reference to?

Mr. CHISHOLM: I would say Margaree, for instance.

[Mr. J. H. Sinclair.]

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That particular port was under the Halifax agency until this year, but there has been a redistribution of the territory covered by the agencies, and it is now under the Charlottetown agency. I will write to the agent there and find out the cause of the delay that the hon. member refers to.

Mr. CHISHOLM: There is an officer down there who is responsible for the placing of these buoys. Why does not the department give him instruction to look after them in the fall and put them in place in the spring, all along this coast? Then there would be no trouble about the matter. There is a contractor, I understand, who is paid so much to do the work, but he does not take the responsibility, he receives no instructions until he reports to the department, or somebody does, that the buoys have not been placed. Then some official of the department will send instructions to him, but such a procedure involves delay, and may result in very disastrous consequences.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The agent at Charlottetown has certainly been very remiss in his duties if what the hon. gentleman states is a fact.

Mr. CHISHOLM: It is true.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have no right to doubt what the hon. member states. The responsibility rests upon the agent at Charlottetown to see that all these buoys are placed, and if the work has not been done I must hold him responsible for the delay. I will see that a letter is promptly sent to him, and I will communicate a copy of the reply to my hon. friend, when I receive it.

Mr. McKENZIE: What has been done to repair the present South Bar lighthouse in the harbour of Sydney, which is a very important light? I understand the foundations were damaged a short time ago, and it is imperative they should be repaired and the lighthouse opened as speedily as possible.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Doubtless the hon. gentleman is aware that the department has a lighthouse board that studies all these questions pertaining to the future need of new lighthouses. I will bring the matter to the attention of the board at their next meeting.

Mr. McKENZIE: There has been a lighthouse on the South Bar for seventy, or perhaps one hundred years. A new light-house was built a few years ago but the department thought it advisable to erect it further out at the point of the Bar than where the old lighthouse was. However, the foundations gave way, I suppose owing to the action of the sea, and the lightkeeper had to leave the new structure and make use of the old lighthouse. That must be very embarrassing to shipowners, or seamen, entering the port, and it is very desirable that the new lighthouse should be repaired and put in shape as speedily as possible.

Mr. DUFF: I would ask how many lighthouses there are on the Newfoundland coast the up-keep of which is paid by the Dominion Government as well as the salaries of the keepers.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Seven is the number.

Mr. DUFF: I understand the Dominion Government pays the cost of upkeep and the salaries of the keepers?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, we do.

Mr. DUFF: I would call the minister's attention to a very important matter in connection with the condition of the lighthouses existing on that coast. The Cape Race lighthouse is perhaps one of the best, if not the best, on the North American continent. That lighthouse is of the utmost importance to navigators in both coming and going across the Atlantic. As the minister is well aware, for the last number of years—in fact ever since vessels have sailed the waters—there have been a great many wrecks either on the east side or on the west side of Cape Race lighthouse. Many steamers have been wrecked, and in some cases numerous lives have been lost. In conversation with a number of captains of steamers they made a suggestion to me which they asked me to bring to the attention of Parliament and the minister, and this is the suggestion: Just west of Cape Race, at the entrance of Trepessey Bay is Mistake point, and a little farther west is Cape Pine or St. Shotts. If a powerful gas buoy with a groaner were placed about five or ten miles from the shore, half-way between those two capes, the steamers passing this area would either see the light or the gas buoy or hear the groaner, and know their position. It would be the means of saving a great many ships and a great many lives. As the minister knows, the shores of Cape Race are very rugged and precipitous and the water is very deep. Vessels cannot tell, by soundings exactly where they are until they place their jibboom, or bow sometimes, up against the rocks. In bad or foggy weather when they are passing Cape Race it is difficult to tell their position, and the swift current there often takes them right onto the coast. The captains to whom I spoke suggested to me that it would be in the interest of shipping to have a large gas buoy at that point. Of course the providing of such an important aid to navigation at that point may be an international affair, and therefore the Newfoundland government might be asked to co-operate. Certainly the minister would be well justified in providing a sufficient amount of money to establish a gas buoy there as has been suggested. In view of the conditions which prevail there it is surprising that the suggestion was not made much earlier. Had it been carried into effect it would have been the means of saving many lives, and millions of dollars of property would not have been lost.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Canadian Government have never undertaken the responsibility of placing gas buoys along the Newfoundland coast. It is a matter that has engaged the attention of the Newfoundland government and which the Canadian Goverment have taken up with them from time to time. The subject is one to which I will with pleasure direct to the attention of the Newfoundland government. Every hon. gentleman will appreciate the fact that the Canadian Government could not properly maintain or look after a gas buoy so far distant from Canadian territory, and we have never, as I say, undertaken such a responsibility. However, there is a good deal in what the hon. member states, and I will again call the attention of the Newfoundland government to the matter.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I would like to get information in respect of the Lighthouse Board—its personnel, its location, its duties, dates of meeting, and so forth. If I can get this information on another item I shall not press for it now.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The personnel of the board consists of the Deputy Minister of Marine, the chief engineer, a representative from the Shipping Federation, the Commissioner of Lights, and a representative from the Dominion Marine Association. They have no set dates for meeting, but they meet quite frequently whenever business demands it. Their duties relate to lighthouse needs.

Mr. CHISHOLM: When the minister again brings down these Estimates would he get me a report from the board as to what they have done in respect to the application for a range light at Grand Matane? My people want this information, and I want it, and surely it is little enough for us to know what has been done, this matter having been before the board for three years or longer. What has the board done?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will be very glad to give that information.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am not quite satisfied with the information given me in regard to the Bar light in Sydney harbour. I would like to know what the board intends to do about repairing that lighthouse, which was erected at a cost of $100,000 and is about to fall down. The matter is of great concern to the people of Sydney and North Sydney.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I cannot make a definite promise, but I think in the very near future a new lighthouse will be built on the site of the one that was swept away.

Mr. McCOIG: When can the captains navigating lake Erie waters expect any better light service than they are receiving at the present time at Erieau? A heavy revenue is derived at this port from the valuable cargoes that are brought in there, and the very best lighthouse system should be provided, especially in view of the local dangers.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have a representative of the Lake Carriers Association on the Lighthouse Board, but at the moment I could not say whether he has made any representations in regard to the lighting system at this port. However, I will look into the matter and let the hon. member know.

Construction of lights and aids to navigations, including regulations of traffic in the Detroit river, and such other places as may be found necessary—$400,000.

Mr. POWER: What is meant by the regulation of traffic in the Detroit river?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There is what might be called a dual control of traffic on the Detroit river: The Americans look after their part, and the Department of Marine look after our part.

Mr. POWER: I am informed, it may be incorrectly, that the Department of Marine and Fisheries have certain gasoline boats on the Detroit river acting as revenue cutters to prevent intoxicating liquor entering the United States. I would like to know whether that is true or not.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member could not have been in the House when a similar question was asked by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff). I informed the latter gentleman that there was no foundation for the press report, and I make the same reply to my hon. friend.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: What portion of this vote is used in regulating traffic on the Detroit river?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: About $5,000.

Signal service—$65,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: The minister dismissed my question rather summarily in regard to St. Paul's island. I do not expect any information to-night, but when will the minister be able to give me that information?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will be very glad to give the hon. member the fullest detailed information not later than two days from now, and possibly to-morrow.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: What is the increase of $5,000 for?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Salaries.

Administration of pilotage—$400,000.

Mr. WIGMORE: I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, because I think it has been very well taken up to-night on individual matters, and I find from my experience that it is a great deal easier to get satisfaction by taking up these individual matters with the minister or the deputy minister rather than raising them on the floor of the House. I have always had very great consideration shown to me in connection with every matter that I have taken up with the department, and I have taken up many different matters. I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that a very serious condition exists in the Bay of Fundy and the harbour of St. John, due to the unfortunate sinking of a pilot boat by a steamer coming up the bay. When I first applied to the department they with their usual promptness took the matter up at once and sent for the agent at St. John to discuss it with them. I would like to know if any definite arrangements have been arrived at. I know the department have for the last two or three years been considering the pilotage system in St. John and the Bay of Fundy with a view to putting it on a permanent basis similar to what they have established at Halifax and other ports. Pilot matters in St. John have been handled during the past number of years by a Board of Pilot Commissioners, some of whom were appointed by the Government, some by the city of St. John, and others by the Board of Trade of St. John. But they feel that the time has now arrived when the Government should take some definite action and take this matter of pilotage over entirely, and either supply the pilots with proper boats and equipment or else make some other suitable arrangements the Government may have in mind. I am bringing this matter to the attention of the minister, because I know the people, the Board of Trade and the shipping interests of St. John, are very anxious to know what decision the Government have reached. If possible, I should like the minister to give me some information along those lines, and if he cannot give me it now, I should like to know when I may expect this information.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am happy to inform the hon. member that all arrangements have been made, and the Marine Department will take over the pilotage service of St. John by the 15th May.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: There is a very large increase, namely, $200,000 in this item. It seems to me that the usual experience when the Government takes over anything is that it becomes more expensive. There is no reason why the ships should not pay for pilotage. During the last few years shipowners have been making money, and it is a mistake that the Government should assume any expenditure in connection with pilotage, because all this pilotage service should be paid by the ships. I do not know what the plans of the minister are or whether there is a contra account for this item or not. There may be one: but if so, it would be well to have an explanation of it, because the item is a very large one, and I should like to lay down the principle that whatever is expended in pilotage on the coasts of this Dominion should be a tax on the shipping of the Dominion and not on the ordinary taxpayer.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member is quite correct. The pilotage dues will cover all the expenditure. This is merely a book-keeping entry, but the pilotage dues in each pilotage district throughout Canada fully cover the expenditure.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Does the minister estimate that the additional dues will amount to $200,000?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, and, I think, more.

Mr. COPP: The minister has given a very short statement in reference to taking over the pilotage service at the port of St. John. Is this a special arrangement for St. John harbour, or is it general throughout the Dominion?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member will no doubt recall that at the last session of Parliament legislation was passed vesting the pilotage authority for the port of St. John as well as the other principal pilotage districts in the Governor in Council, and that really makes the Minister of Marine the pilotage authority. The system that the port of St. John will come under now is similar to what has been in force in the pilotage districts of Montreal and Quebec for a long number of years. This does away entirely with the local pilotage board, and a local superintendent of pilots will be appointed at St. John, and he will report to the General Superintendent of Pilots at Ottawa. The pilotage districts that now come under the Minister of Marine are Halifax, Sydney, St. John, Montreal, Quebec, Vancouver and Victoria.

Mr. COPP: If I understand the matter correctly, pilots have in the past been licensed to do business, so to speak, on their own hook. Are these pilots who have been operating in the port of St. John to be kept on by the Government as Government appointees to do the work, or what will become of them?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The department will, of course, retain in the service the pilots who are there now, and what ever pilot boats they have the department will have to take over and pay for. The only difference is that we are transferring the authority of the pilotage district of St. John from a local board to the Minister of Marine at Ottawa.

Mr. CHISHOLM: How does the income from pilotage dues compare with the expenditure of last year, throughout the Dominion?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This is the first season that all these pilotage districts apart from the districts of Montreal and Quebec come under the Minister of Marine; but judging by our experience with those two districts, our revenue has been somewhat greater than the expenditure.

Mr. WIGMORE: Is the minister considering the matter of giving compensation to the owner of the pilot boat that was lost in the Bay of Fundy by being run down by a Canadian Government Merchant Marine boat?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Certainly. Unfortunately there was a collision in the Bay of Fundy between a Canadian Government Merchant Marine ship called the "Canadian Voyageur" and a pilot boat, but we shall have to negotiate with the pilots of St. John and see that they do not lose anything on account of the collision.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is it accepted that the fault was that of the Government boat?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: An investigation will have to be held; I cannot know who will be held responsible for the collision until such time as the court of inquiry comes to a decision.

Mr. McKENZIE: I thought the minister was committing his department a little too soon. It does not follow that because a smaller vessel collides with a larger one, the larger vessel was at fault. I am sure, if the pilot lost his vessel by reason of any faulty seamanship on the part of the captain of the larger vessel, the man should be recompensed, but the facts will have to be ascertained first and the minister will decide on those facts. I notice the minister states that the pilotage district of the harbour of St. John is to be taken over on the 15th May. Does the same remark apply to the harbour of Sydney?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, the pilotage district of Sydney has not yet been formally taken over, and I cannot say just when it will be.

Mr. McKENZIE: The season which is now under way will be carried on under the old system?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Do I understand the minister to say generally that the receipts from pilotage dues throughout the Dominion balance the expenditures? I find in the Auditor General's Report that $91,076.75 was expended in the administration of pilotage. I was endeavouring to lay down the principle that the expenditure in administering the pilotage should be in some way a tax on the shipping of the country, and I understood the minister to say that he was receiving more than he was spending as regards pilotage. Does that statement cover expenditures throughout the Dominion, or was the minister referring only to the river St. Lawrence and the harbour of St. John?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have not yet had one full season's experience with all the districts that I have mentioned, but as far as I can judge, we should come out on the right side. To take, for instance, the pilotage districts of Vancouver and Victoria from the 1st January to 31st March, the gross earnings amounted to $23,292.86 and the expenses were $20,505.49. I would not care to make too positive a statement, but my judgment is that in 1920 we ought to come out even, or very nearly so, if not a little on the right side.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: The minister is not prepared to give a general statement for the whole Dominion showing the receipts and expenditures of each of the districts?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have not the figures here, but I know that the revenue does take care of the expenditure.

Mr. McKENZIE: Will the financial year in this connection be the same as the Government financial year?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: Whenever we hear of a business merger, we are told that overhead charges and administrative costs are to be cut down. The Minister of Marine is going to merge all the pilotage districts under one head in the Department of Marine. I presume that will result in a saving in the cost of administration. I would suggest to the minister that instead of having commissioners at each port he turn the work of the district over to the marine agents at the different ports—the marine agents at Halifax, Sydney, Vancouver and other places. In that way I think the Government would save a great deal of money.

I am sorry my hon. friend (Mr. Wigmore) has been delaying the Estimates of the minister, especially in view of the lecture which he read hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. He comes before the committee and asks if the owners of the "Canadian Voyageur" are going to pay for the pilot boat that was sunk in the Bay of Fundy, when he could get that information without any trouble by going to the Hunter Block and seeing the minister or his deputy. My hon. friend is not treating the committee or the minister right in bringing up a small matter like that before the committee. I am surprised if the hon. member (Mr. Wigmore) has so much influence with the Department of Marine, that for a number of days or weeks there has been no pilot boat on the Bay of Fundy. If he has so much influence with the department he should have seen that the pilot boat was replaced within a day or two after the sinking. Apparently, he has not as much influence with the department as he thinks he has. Evidently some official of the department has been pulling his leg.

Mr. WIGMORE: Pilot boats are not picked up every day.

Mr. COPP: Nor sunk every day.

Mr. WIGMORE: As soon as the matter was called to the attention of the department they got busy at once and they have made arrangements along these lines. As to taking up different matters with the department, I think the time of this committee has been taken up with very simple matters that do not concern the ordinary member at all. These matters of detail concerning the different constituencies have take up the greater part of the time of this committee. They could have been dealt with more expeditiously by going to see the minister or his deputy at his office.

Mr. DUFF: If the hon. member is correct, then the statement I made a moment ago is also correct. If it is not necessary for us to get up on the floor of this House and refer to matters affecting our constituents, why did my hon. friend get up on his feet and bring to the attention of the minister the fact that a pilot boat had been sunk in the Bay of Fundy and ask who was going to pay for the damages? I can tell my hon. friend that I am going to ask as many questions as I like, and I shall not allow him to tell me when to sit down.

Mr. COPP: I think my hon. friend (Mr. Wigmore) may be excused for bringing to the attention of the minister the matter he did, because it gave the minister an opportunity of making a statement which, I have no doubt, my hon. friend will be very glad to have go down to the people of St. John who are deeply interested in this matter. However, I am not concerned with whether my hon. friend (Mr. Wigmore) thinks we are wasting time or not. I want to ask a few questions in regard to this pilotage business, as it is somewhat new to me. Are the pilotage arrangements which the minister has made for the port of St. John to be extended to the smaller ports along the Bay of Fundy, or are they confined to that one port?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: St. John only.

Mr. CHISHOLM: My hon. friend (Mr. Duff) made a suggestion to the minister a few moments ago, and I should like to hear the minister's opinion about it. He suggested that the marine agents at the different ports act as pilotage commissioners. While I am on my feet, I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Wigmore) that if he has been successful with the Department of Marine and Fisheries I congratulate him. If he had been to the department as often as I have, and had lost as much time looking after small matters and being disappointed and defeated every time, he would appreciate the great privilege of having some place where you could put your case before the Government. I take it that this committee is just for such a purpose. If I go to the Department of Marine and they turn me down, I am not going to stop there, because I am not built just that way. I am going somewhere else, and I do not know any other place to come to than this committee. If the hon. member (Mr. Wigmore) is going to deny me my right to come here and put these matters before the minister and the Government, I might as well go home. This is the sort of autocratic policy which my friend would like adopted. My hon. friend must realize that while we are in Opposition we are not getting as much courtesy and consideration from the department as apparently my hon. friend is getting. I tell my hon. friend, right here and now, that I have tried that other method for all it is worth. I have used all the power I have to try and persuade the minister in matters that I thought should be conceded, and I have failed, and failed often. My only recourse, then, is to come here. I can tell my hon. friend, however, that I do not expect very much here either. I am not of the right political complexion to suit this Government, but I shall discharge my duty to my constituents by coming here and submitting these matters even though they may appear to my hon. friend (Mr. Wigmore) to be small. I shall submit them to the ministry, and through Hansard I will make my constituents acquainted with the fact that I have brought these matters to the attention of the department and the Government. Would the minister be good enough to give us his opinion as to the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. Duff)?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Before doing that I desire to say, as Minister of Marine, and speaking also for the Government, that it certainly is the privilege of hon. members in this committee to ask as many questions as they like. I have made no objection at all, and I should be very sorry to see the discussion cut too short, because hon. members and the public generally have the right to know how the money voted by this committee is going to be spent, and if increases are being made, the reasons therefore.

With regard to hon. members calling on the department over which I have the honour to preside, I think hon. gentlemen opposite will agree that I show them just as much attention and courtesy, and just as great a desire to meet their wishes and requests, as I do hon. gentlemen on this side. I congratulate the constituency of Inverness in having such an able and persistent representative in this House. I find no fault whatever with his coming to the department as often as he does. I know the particular case he has in mind, but the only reason I could not meet his views in that matter was again, the lack of money. It is, of course, the duty of myself and every one connected with the department to be courteous and to endeavour to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen so far as we can.

In regard to the question, who shall be in charge of the pilots in the various districts, we are doing away altogether with the local pilotage boards and we shall have a local superintendent in the different pilotage divisions. My only reason for bringing the pilotage authority under the Department of Marine was that there might be an increase in efficiency. I shall not go into details now, but I am thoroughly satisfied that the pilotage work will be much more efficient under the new system than it has been in the past. The expenditure may be somewhat greater under the new system, but if it is there will be a corresponding increase in the efficiency. There is no necessity for local commissioners because we shall have an experienced man who holds a master mariner's certificate as superintendent of pilotage for each district, and he will be under the general superintendent of pilots, Captain Robertson, who is located at headquarters.

Mr. DUFF: These will be new appointees of the Government?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Some of them, yes.

Mr. DENIS: How long has this new system of pilotage under government control been in effect?

[Mr. Ballantyne.]

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That depends on the pilotage district you have in mind. The districts of Montreal and Quebec have been under the Minister of Marine for the past fifteen years. In fact, the deputy minister informs me that it is longer; they have been under the minister for at least twenty years.

Mr. CANNON: I understand that it is the intention of the department to decrease the number of pilots between the city of Montreal and the city of Quebec.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am not aware of such an intention.

Mr. CANNON: I received a communication to-day from a pilot informing me that the number of pilots between Montreal and Quebec was to be decreased from fifty to thirty-five.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There is no such intention on the part of the department.

Maintenance and repairs to wharves—$10,000.

Mr. COPP: What wharves does this item refer to?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This is a small vote for repairs that may be needed in connection with various wharves. We cannot tell what particular wharf or wharves will need repairs during the coming year, but I see that last year repairs were made in Nova Scotia amounting to $98.37; Prince Edward Island, $107.45; New Brunswick, $3,675.48; Quebec, $1,618.92; Montreal district, $198.82; Ontario, $1,714.04; British Columbia, $50; general account, $224.42; making an actual expenditure for last year of $7,687.50. We are asking for $2,000 less this year than the previous fiscal year, but we think it better to have a vote of $10,000, even though the expenditure last year was only $7,000 odd, in case the expenditures may amount to two or three thousand dollars more.

Mr. COPP: I want to draw the attention of the minister to a certain matter, and I think I may be pardoned for so doing if it may not be altogether within my purview. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Wigmore) has been largely devoting his attention to having the port of St. John properly attended to, and possibly he has not been able to find time to consider matters that are of some importance even though they may not be as important as the port of St. John. We have along the river of St. John—it is not in my constituency, but I come from the province—a large number of wharves which were constructed many years ago by the Government of New Brunswick. A few years ago, I understand, an arrangement was made between the local and the Dominion Governments by which these local wharves were to be taken over by the Dominion Government, who were to be responsible for their repairs. I have not been up the river for the last year or two, but I have been informed by a number of persons, and have received communications to the same effect, that these wharves are in a bad state of disrepair and that it is impossible for steamers plying up and down the river to tie up at the wharves. If the responsibility is upon the Dominion Government I would ask the minister whether a part of this money is to be used in repairing those wharves.

Mr. WIGMORE: I want to inform my hon. friend that this matter does not come under the Minister of Marine at all. I may further inform the hon. gentleman that I have already taken up the matter with the Department of Public Works, which has charge of these wharves, and while things are not moving as quickly as some of us may desire, I can assure my hon. friend that the Acting Minister of Public Works and his officials are looking after the matter.

Mr. COPP: I am much obliged to my hon. friend for this information, but I should like to have a statement from the minister himself. If my hon. friend has been so successful, and with such quick dispatch has been able to have matters attended to promptly by the Department of Marine, as he said just now, he might transfer the matter of these wharves to that department and perhaps he would receive more expeditious service. Evidently the information he has received from the Department of Public Works is not very reassuring.

Mr. WIGMORE: Oh, yes.

Mr. COPP: The matter is not one of concern to my particular constituency, but it appertains to the province from which I come, and I have had communications concerning it. I therefore thought that I would take this opportunity to call the attention of the minister to the condition of the wharves in question.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I think the hon. member is aware that the construction of wharves comes under the Department of Public Works.

Mr. COPP: This is a matter of repairs.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: A certain number of these wharves were transferred to the Marine Department, and the amount I am asking is for maintenance in a small way to keep in a proper state of repair those wharves that are under the jurisdiction of the Marine Department.

Mr. CANNON: Where are these wharves?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I can give the expenditure by provinces, but I cannot tell where each wharf is located.

Mr. CANNON: I ask this question because there a number of wharves which I know are in bad condition. I do not blame the minister at all, and perhaps it might be well to leave the matter until his colleague has his Estimates before the committee. I want to be sure, however, who is responsible for the matter.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: A few wharves may have been transferred to the Department of Marine but generally speaking they are under the Department of Public Works.

Mr. CANNON: When the Estimates of the Department of Public Works comes before the House, will there be a responsible head for that department or will the condition be the same as it is to-day?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There will be a responsible acting head in the person of the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. J. D. Reid).

Mr. CHISHOLM: What becomes of the revenues accruing from these wharves?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: A certain percentage goes to the wharfinger, and the balance to the department.

Mr. McKENZIE: For many years I have been bringing to the notice of the minister and his predecessor certain conditions with regard to two wharves in my county which I regard as part of the national railway system. One of them is right beside the railway at Grand Narrows. At that point passengers and freight coming by the railway are transferred to a boat that crosses the lakes over to a main body of Victoria county. It would be impossible for the railway to do business in that section of the county without this wharf; the tracks run out upon it and the goods are transferred from the car to the ferry. I do not think any wharfage fees are collected alongside the railway. But for the landing of freight and passengers at Baddeck on the other side of the lake it was also necessary to build a public wharf. For many years, while it was under the Public Works Department no fees were charged on the Baddeck wharf. These charges are small, but they are very bothersome, and I do think that as these two wharves are really part of the national railway system and absolutely essential to the operation of the road in that part of the country, no fees should be charged in connection with the handling of passengers and freight upon them. One of the reasons given last year for continuing these charges was that there was a wharfinger at Baddeck and that in order to pay him something would have to be charged. Well, the poor wharfinger is dead, and I do not think it is necessary to appoint any one in his place. The agents there look after the wharf, they are good, capable, honest men and they see that it is properly cared for.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: At present there is no wharfinger at either of these wharves and no dues are being collected. But under the statute we are obliged, I am afraid, to appoint wharfingers as soon as possible and prescribe the required tariff.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder Bay, Lake Superior and other points deemed advisable for the good of navigation—$40,000.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: During last winter the weather was very severe and the harbour of Guysborough was frozen over for five or six weeks. Application was made to the department to have the ice broken and the department did all they could, but there was no suitable boat on the coast to do the work. I think it will be quite possible to have a boat so equipped that it could break ice in these harbours in case of emergency and also perform the ordinary service carried on by the department every year. I would like the minister to look into that matter and see if anything can be done. We are badly in need of an icebreaker at certain seasons on the coasts of the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Stanley will be available as soon as the necessary repairs have been made, and when the new icebreaker is built it is the intention of my department to place the Montcalm down there. A considerable amount of icebreaking is required to be done on the coast of Nova Scotia every year, and I think the Stanley and the Montcalm will be able to cope with the situation.

Mr. FIELDING: May I, then, repeat a request I made to the minister on a previous occasion as respects the ports on the southern coast of Nova Scotia? The minister helped us last year to the extent of his equipment, but he has not the proper equipment, and until he gets some additional boats he really cannot give us all the assistance we require.

To provide for telephones at different points throughout the Dominion in connection with aids to navigation—$500.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I want to make application to the minister—I made a similar application to the department last year—for a cable to Margaree Island. This is a very important island, where the fishing industry is carried on on a large scale. It is about two miles and a half from the shore. There is a tri-weekly mail service from the mainland to the island, and it is very important that this cable be supplied if that can be done at reasonable cost. I would like the minister to consider the matter, because I think it is very important.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will be very glad to consider it.

Amount required to pay Messrs. Job Bros. for the use of their wharf at Greenly Island—$375.

Mr. DENIS: Is that a private wharf?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, the wharf is owned by Job Bros., and we have to pay them this amount for the use of that wharf.

Mr. COPP: This appears to be a new item. Nothing was paid last year.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It appears that the Government have been using this wharf for the past twenty-five years, and have never paid anything for it. Job Bros. made a claim on the department, and the sum of $375 has been agreed upon as the amount which should be paid. It covers a period of a quarter of a century.

Mr. CHISHOLM: For what purpose is the wharf used?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: For the purpose of unloading coal, lumber and provisions.

Mr. McKENZIE: It appears that this man has the patience of his ancestor. Is he the only Job now living? Where does he reside? The minister steered clear of telling us where he is.

Mr. FIELDING: Job Bros. are a well-known commercial firm in Newfoundland. Are they the parties mentioned here?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: They are the only Jobs that we know.

Mr. DUFF: How much money was paid last year in gratuities, or gifts, to the crews of vessels for saving life on the high seas? Sometimes instead of gratuities the gifts consist of gold watches or binoculars.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: If the hon. member will be good enough to bring the matter up again when we take up the Naval Estimates, under which the vote for life-saving equipment and stations comes, I will be glad to give him the information.

Meteorological Service, including Magnetic Observatory grants of $500 each to Kingston and Montreal Observatories, also allowance of $400 to L. F. Gorman, observer at Ottawa—$245,000.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: There is a large increase in this item.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I wish to explain the reason of the increase of $34,120. Part of it is for the augmentation of salaries, but the principal amount is for the opening up of a station at Winnipeg in connection with the Winnipeg Grain Exchange so that the weather conditions may be set forth throughout the Prairie Provinces. This will be most valuable information to the grain growers.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Is it contemplated to increase the salaries of the officers along the coast in connection with the meteorological station who have to do with the weather reports?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, it is not intended to increase the salaries generally.

Steamboat inspection—$105,470.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: What is the object of the increase in this item?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: To increase salaries and appoint a few additional inspectors.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Where are these additional inspectors to be appointed?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There is to be an additional man in the province of Ontario, one in British Columbia perhaps, and one at Quebec.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Who is the inspector in Nova Scotia?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Mr. Norman Curry.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Where is he located?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Halifax.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Is he the only inspector in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, there is another inspector named D. J. Murray.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Is he also at Halifax?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Does the duty devolve upon these men of inspecting vessels in all parts of Nova Scotia?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Who has been inspecting in the yard of the Nova Scotia Steel Company?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have the following inspectors in the province of Nova Scotia: N. A. Curry, D. K. O'Brien, A. McDougall, D. J. Stevens, and D. J. Murray.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Where are they located?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: At Halifax.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Which inspector inspects the ships built by the Nova Scotia Steel Company in Trenton, N. S. ?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It would be one of the five, but which particular one inspects the Nova Scotia Steel Company's plant I am unable to say.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Is one of these officers present all the time while a ship is being built?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, the officer would go there periodically during the construction of the ship. The Nova Scotia Steel Company have a contract for two small ships of twenty-eight hundred deadweight tonnage. On of them has been built and the other is under construction.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Does the minister receive reports from these inspectors regularly?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Mr. Macdonald, Chairman of the Inspecting Board, receives reports regularly.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Are those reports in the department?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Progress reported.

On motion of Rt. Hon. Mr. Doherty the House adjourned at eleven p.m.

The House met at Three o'clock.

SENATE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill No. 114 (from the Senate), for the relief of William Edward Vinall.—Mr. MacNutt.

COMMITTEE ON SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT—REPORT IN FRENCH.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. SPEAKER: On Wednesday last the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Béland) put a question with reference to the French edition of the report of the Committee on Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I find upon inquiry that the report is practically complete, and will be bound and ready for distribution on Tuesday next.

THE PRIME MINISTER'S RETURN.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask my rt. hon. friend if the report is correct which appears in the press to-day that the Prime Minister is actually on his way back to Ottawa.

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): The report is correct in so far as that the Prime Minister has started on his way. I do not know that it is correct to say that he will be here on Sunday. I am inclined to think not.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Perhaps the Minister of Railways might tell us.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: He knows nothing more about it.

DATE OF THE BUDGET.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Would my right hon. friend inform us when the Budget will be brought down?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It will be brought down, if nothing happens in the meantime, on Wednesday next.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Marquette): I regret that at this end of the Chamber we have not heard a word of the pleasant little dialogue that has taken place between the leader of the Opposition and the Acting Prime Minister.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU (Three Rivers and St. Maurice): They were having a tea party.

Mr. CRERAR: I should be obliged if they would repeat the performance in a little louder tone of voice.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is all the fault of the leader of the Opposition. He spoke in too mild a tone and I answered in kind.

Mr. CRERAR: That does not give us the information we desire, however.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The questions that were asked and the replies that were given were, first, whether the report which appeared in the press that the Prime Minister was on his way back to Ottawa was true, to which the reply was that the Prime Minister was on his way here, but that I doubted whether he would be here on Sunday next—

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Montmorency): It's a long way to Tipperary.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER:—The leader of the Opposition also asked when the Budget would be brought down, and I replied that it would be brought down, if nothing happened to prevent it, on Wednesday next.

Mr. A. R. McMASTER (Brome): Deo volente.

INQUIRY RE QUESTION.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU (Three Rivers and St. Maurice): Some time ago I put a question on the Order Paper as to the terminals, lands and buildings belonging to the Canadian Northern at Port Arthur. On the 5th of May the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Calder) brought down what purports to be an answer to that question, but which is not an answer. I would ask the Minister of Railways if he intends to answer my question.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Railways): I have not seen the question.

Mr. BUREAU: It appears on page 2078 of Hansard.

Hon. J. D. REID: I will look it up and give the hon. member a further answer on Monday, if the question requires any other answer.

Mr. BUREAU: Not "any other answer," but an answer.

MENNONITES LEAVING FOR THE UNITED STATES.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. I. E. PEDLOW (South Renfrew): In this morning's Montreal Gazette there is a despatch to the effect that the Mennonites of Manitoba have decided to leave Canada and seek new homes in the United States. There was a despatch in the press a few days ago that about 9,000 Mennonites had decided to leave Saskatchewan for the United States. I should like to ask whether the Government have any information in connection with this matter, and if so, whether they are taking any steps to induce these people to remain in Canada.

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): The Minister of Immigration (Mr. Calder) is not at present in the House, and I would rather my hon. friend deferred his question until he is here. I might add that it would be well for my hon. friend not to put too much trust in despatches.

SUPPLY.

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Soldiers' Land Settlement—salaries of Board of Commissioners, $17,000.

Mr. BUREAU: Have these Estimates already been taken up on some other day?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were taken up on one day which was not a Thursday or a Friday, so I am informed. I could not have been here myself.

Mr. BUREAU: What day.

Mr. DOHERTY: It was the day we had an amendment to the motion for going into Supply, which amendment was ultimately defeated and we went into Supply late in the evening and took up one of these items so that we could go on with them on another day, and then the House adjourned.

The CHAIRMAN: If members of the committee will look at Hansard of April 26, page 1741, it will be found that the first item in these Estimates was then considered.

Soldiers' Land Settlement, $50,000,000.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior): The committee will be entitled before being asked to vote the very large sum called for by these items, to a short statement of the work of the Soldiers' Settlement Board during the past year. The board was constituted in 1917, constituted, however, first of all, only for the purpose of assisting in the settlement of returned soldiers on Dominion lands. Certain work was done, certain entries were made, and assistance was given by the board to settlers on soldier grants or homestead lands. A year ago last December, power was taken and exercised under Order in Council, extending the work of the board to settlement on purchased lands, and enabling the board to give assistance by way of loans for improvements, stock, and equipment; a power it previously did not have. These powers so exercised as early as 1918 were confirmed by legislation of a year ago; and acting upon the Orders in Council and subsequent legislation the board has performed a very large achievement entailing a considerable financial commitment, a short record of which I think I should give.

The Soldiers' Settlement Act contemplated assistance to returned soldiers of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, of the United Kingdom, and of the United Kingdom's Allies in the great war, within certain restrictions set out in the definition. Under that legislation some fifty thousand men have applied to the Soldiers' Settlement Board, men almost wholly of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, and the work of the board has since consisted in the reception and disposition of those applications and of assistance to the men who were deemed to be qualified to receive that assistance under the Act.

At this stage I may say that the soldiers' settlement work divides itself into three distinct branches. There is, first, the agricultural branch; secondly, the lands and loans branch; and thirdly, what is known as the home branch. I might explain that the soldiers' settlement work is conducted, under the Act, as a part of the Department of the Interior, although in practice it has been carried on as a separate institution. That is to say, it is not in practice a distinct part of the department, having been conducted rather as in the nature of a separate department, the chairman of the board reporting direct to me as minister. The Interior Department is of sufficient magnitude to engage the full attention of the deputy minister. The Agricultural Branch has to do with the acceptance of applications from soldiers; with the deliberation as to whether or not the applicants are such as should be granted assistance; with the training of men who are found to require training; with the determination of the extent and character of stock and equipment which the men should receive; and finally with the supervision of the farming operations of the men after they are placed on the land.

Mr. BUREAU: When the minister uses the word "training," is its application confined to training for farming purposes exclusively, or does it mean training in general?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The training of which I am speaking is given only for the purpose of enabling men to become farmers. Under the Act the qualification boards were first established throughout the various agricultural districts of Canada. There was a qualification board at each district office of the Soldiers' Settlement Board, of which district offices there are altogether eighteen in Canada. These qualification boards received the 50,423 applications that came in up to March 21st last and since that time have accepted a total of 36,830 men. There have also been accepted for training 1,556 men, and the rest have been either not finally disposed of or have been rejected. The work of the boards on the whole, I think, has been carried out with tolerable satisfaction; but as time progressed it was deemed best gradually to do away with the separate institution of qualification boards and to perform the same service through the permanent offices of the department. After the men are passed as fitted to come in under the Act, their selection of land, if they desire land to be purchased, is passed upon by what are known as loan boards, who receive the appraisal of the land at the hands of specially qualified appraisal officers, and upon that appraisal, or after such further inspection as is demanded, they state whether or not, at the price the soldier is prepared to pay for the land, the board should be advised to advance assistance against that land and to what amount. Those loan boards are situate in every district office of the Settlement Board in Canada; that is to say, in eighteen offices altogether. When the loans are passed they have, in the early work of the board, been put through the hands of local solicitors in order that the board's title and security as provided by the Act should be of the character which the aid given requires. We found the operations of the board, from the legal standpoint, to be, as we thought, unnecessarily expensive following that system. No other system was possible in the early stages of the board's work because of the rapid expansion of the organization which the rush of applications demanded. But in later months we have adopted the policy of having a legal branch in each district office of the board, and in the more important offices this policy now obtains. The consequence has been that we have been able to reduce very materially, indeed rather startlingly, the legal costs of the operations under the Act. I can give the committee in detail what has been the result of the adoption of that policy but it may come by question and answer later on.

The board has purchased lands and has also loaned for the purpose of discharging incumbrances on lands already owned; it has purchased stock and equipment and loaned against stock and equipment to the soldier settler and has as well loaned to the soldier settler who locates upon Dominion lands or soldier grants. The operations of the board up to the date I just gave, the 27th March, 1920, entail a financial commitment on the Dominion of $58,741,605. That sum refers to the aggregate amount of the loans approved and passed by the board, and of that total approximately $42,000,000 has been disbursed.

Mr. POWER: Since when?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Since the commencement of the board's operations.

Mr. BELAND: That covers the 36,000 who have been passed?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That covers all of the 36,000 who have been passed and whose loans have been approved. The 36,000 men may be said to be either on the land to-day as a result of the operations of the board or on the way to the land. Some applications for loans are still under consideration, some applicants have not yet selected land that suits them, but 15,234 are actually as of that date on the land and settled there under the operations of the board.

Mr. C. MARCIL: Has the minister the figures by provinces?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I can give the committee the result of the operation of the Act by provinces. The number of settlers in Alberta is the largest. I am giving now by provinces the number of men making up the aggregate of 15,234, who are at the present day upon the land under the Act:

Alberta	4,603
Saskatchewan	3,117
British Columbia	2,555
Manitoba	2,525
Ontario	1,109
Quebec	362
New Brunswick	410
Nova Scotia	319
Prince Edward Island	234

The amount of the commitments by provinces is as follows:

Alberta	$17,059,331
Saskatchewan	12,257,766
British Columbia	10,728,388
Manitoba	9,789,686
Ontario	4,778,736
Quebec	1,573,081
New Brunswick	1,105,325
Prince Edward Island	585,175

In proportion to population, Prince Edward Island stands very high in the list. The number in training at the present time is 674. Of the total number of 36,000 odd who have been accepted as qualified, I stated before that 15,234 had actually had their loans approved and they are disposed of except for subsequent supervision in so far as the board is concerned. But the further fact exists that 6,511 more have, under the Soldier Settlement Act, settled upon soldier grants. Of these only a portion have received loans. There are many who have not received loans, and placing the number who have received loans—2,564—against the total entrants on Dominion lands or soldier grants, there would remain a balance of some 3,000. The total of settlers under the Act aggregates 19,181 at the present time. Of the 15,234 who received loans, 9,981 settled on purchased land; 2,779 received advances on lands they already owned to remove encumbrances and for improvements or for stock; 2,564 received advances on Dominion lands, soldier grants.

Of the total of $58,859,069, the commitments for loans are divided as follows:

Loans against purchased lands	$32,173,776
To remove encumbrances	1,834,157
For permanent improvements	6,502,435
Advances for stock and equipment	18,348,701

The board, as every one understands, advances for the purpose of the purchase of land up to 90 per cent of the purchase price after of course the valuation is approved of by the board's officers, but providing that no single advance exceeds $4,500 for that purpose. Having regard to stock and equipment, the board advances $7,500. The total advance though per capita to all who have received the benefit of the Act averages $3,700.

Mr. PROULX: What are the terms of repayment?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The terms of repayment as respects land and improvement advances are repayment in twenty-five years, with interest at 5 per cent amortised. The terms of repayment of advances for stock and equipment are, I think, six years, with free interest for two years. There is no interest charged on stock and equipment for the first two years. Under the new Act, as amended this year, we will have power to charge interest on stock and equipment for the first two years with respect to those who have settled on improved lands.

Mr. C. MARCIL: Is all this exclusive of the work of the provinces?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. There has been a little settlement under special Act in Ontario and there have been two purchases made by British Columbia, but I do not know whether any permanent settlement has taken place in British Columbia or not. What I speak of is of course solely a Federal work.

Mr. PROULX: Are those who have received aid from the province of Ontario receiving aid from this Government too?

Mr. MEIGHEN: At Kapuskasing?

Mr. PROULX: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, we have nothing to do with that. I stated that the board advance, in respect of land security, up to $4,500, and up to ninety per cent of the appraised value of the land. We have power in certain special cases defined by the Act to advance up to one hundred per cent. We have done that in a limited number of cases. I have before me the exact figures and I think I shall give those figures to the House. The number of cases in which the whole amount has been advanced aggregate 801. I desire here to express the opinion that Parliament was well advised in very strictly limiting the number of cases where the board was empowered to advance up to one hundred per cent.

Mr. NESBITT: May I ask what the exceptions were?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They can only be judged by the proportion of salvage cases that apply to those who got one hundred per cent, who invested nothing themselves, as against the number of salvage cases where they advanced ten per cent.

Mr. NESBITT: I have reference to the exceptions to the one hundred per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The salvage cases so far aggregate 1.71 which is, as all will readily agree, a very small proportion. Of course in those cases it is only as respects some that there is any loss. The board is usually able to turn over the land to another soldier at what may be against the property in the hands of the defaulting man. Now, of that 1.71 per cent—that is to say 261 cases in all—forty of those were of the men who did not put up any advance themselves. In other words five per cent who put up no advance have failed, but of those who did put up an advance, the proportion is only 1.71 per cent. I should say in this connection that of the salvage cases, the larger proportion are of those who settled before the Act of a year ago was passed, and before the system of qualification that now prevails was established. That is to say, when any man was ready to go and get a soldier entry, even when he had no other qualification than the fact that he was a returned man, he was entitled to soldier entry. The proportion of salvage cases among that class has been large, and has enhanced the percentage that is now disclosed as applying to the whole body of the returned men.

Mr. NESBITT: What I asked the minister was, where the exception was made to the one hundred per cent?

Mr. MEIGHEN: In practice we have applied it only to those married men who had long and successful previous farming experience in Canada—that was the definition given in the Act. To that we have restricted ourselves; and I think I might even go further than I went before and say that if we were entering upon the policy again it would be in the interest of the returned man, as well as in the interest of the country, to insist in virtually every case upon a stake being had in the property by the returned man himself.

There are some further details in connection with loans that would be of interest. Notwithstanding the fact that twenty-five years at five per cent is allowed the men for repayment, we have already received repayment in full in no less than sixty-four cases.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): May I ask in what provinces these repayments have been made?

Mr. MEIGHEN: In British Columbia six. In Alberta, twenty-five—most of them are in Alberta.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In Saskatchewan, six; and in Manitoba, three. Alberta is distinctly in the lead.

In the determination of the qualification of applicants, eigthy-three per cent of all those who applied were found to be qualified in the year 1919. In the present year up-to-date, that percentage has been reduced to sixty-five per cent, showing that the standard of the applicant is gradually diminishing, which of course was only to be expected. The better men—the men who had set their heart upon agricultural pursuits—were early on the ground and anxious to take advantage of the Act. Consequently it is only reasonable that we might now look forward to a gradual contraction of the rapidity of the financial commitment involved in the Soldier Settlement policy. We grade the men when they apply. The man who has had ten years' experience, and is otherwise qualified, is graded in Class A; the man with five years' experience, and otherwise qualified, in Class B; the man with two years' experience, and otherwise qualified, in Class C; and the man with one year's experience, and otherwise qualified, in Class D. In every case of a married man, the board insists on a signed consent by his wife that she is herself desirous of taking the responsibility that appertains to the farm—of going upon a farm to live. Everything connected with the prospect of that man's success is canvassed, and upon all the facts taken together the board decides upon his qualification.

Mr. BELAND: The fact that a young man has been on a farm since his youth is a sufficient qualification to place him in the first class, I understand?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, provided he is not physically disabled, or has not since acquired such habits as are foreign to the industry, and that a man must not have if he is ever going to succeed upon a farm. For example, if he has become a loafer or a drunkard, then it will not do for him merely to say, "Well, I was brought up on a farm"; he must otherwise be qualified in the elements that make for success.

Mr. BELAND: Is the applicant subjected to an examination?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. BELAND: In every case?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is not a medical examination in every case.

Mr. BELAND: I mean any examination as to his ability.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, he has to apply personally and answer a series of questions, or a written questionnaire. Then subsequently he must come in person before the qualification board. The plan that he has in mind for farming purposes is reviewed. He is questioned as to what he intends to do, what stock he intends to get, what character of land he intends to procure, and what he expects that land to produce; in general, that man's practical knowledge of farming is thoroughly reviewed by the qualification board.

Now, in connection with the purchase of stock and equipment, and loans against stock and equipment, some interesting facts may be adduced. Before doing so, let me say that the total before mentioned gives an indication of the prices paid for land in the various provinces.

Up to the date of the calculations in this report 108 purchases had been made in Prince Edward Island involving an expenditure of $267,464. The average size of the farms purchased varied, being in Prince Edward Island 110.04 acres, in Nova Scotia 117 acres; in New Brunswick 145.04 acres; in Quebec 129 acres; in Ontario 136.03 acres; in Manitoba 169.06 acres; in Saskatchewan 185 acres; in Alberta 187 acres; in British Columbia 60 acres. The average price per acre was: Prince Edward Island $22.42; Nova Scotia $21.40; New Brunswick $16.69; Quebec $24.42; Ontario $33.02; Manitoba $22.31; Saskatchewan $18; Alberta $18.13; British Columbia $53.80

Now I will give some details of the stock and equipment purchased and the prices paid. The money invested in implements out of loans advanced by the Government aggregates $4,777,418.77,—that, representing the value. The saving to the settler by reason of the arrangements made by the Board with manufacturers has totalled $403,768.52; in other words, the settler would have had to pay that much more had he bought for cash other than through the board. The total investment in clearing and breaking land, drainage, labour, fertilizing, and crops amounts to $273,487.06. The total investment in equipment bought secondhand and not through the board is $1,319,406. The total investment in live stock is $5,747,108.98.

Up to the 31st of March last the board had supervised the purchase, or had purchased direct and turned over to the settler, 20,718 horses, which were bought at an average price per head of $151.65; it bought 20,390 cows at an average price of $80.53; 15,671 other cattle at an average price of $43.62; 5,381 sheep at an average price of $12.58; 7,634 swine at an average price of $14.97; 92,723 poultry at an average price of $1.05.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: How was the saving of $400,000 odd affected on the purchase of implements?

Mr. MEIGHEN: In the case of implements, harness, hardware, lumber, building material, fencing, household equipment, feed, fruit trees and plants, and dairy and poultry supplies, the board effected arrangements with the manufacturers whereby on the order of the board, they would deliver to any settler under the Act any of these articles at a certain specific advance on the cost of manufacture, certain defined rates being arrived at, which of course placed the articles in the hands of the settler at a very much reduced price. The percentage allowed varies in respect to the different articles. The settler places his order, he is charged with the amount, and he knows what he is getting, for he himself chooses the article. The board settles with the company at the end of each period, and so knows exactly what the saving is in respect to each class of article.

Mr. PEDLOW: Does the report indicate the advance allowed to the manufacturers in each case?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not the figures before me now. I gave particulars of the arrangement and the percentage charged a year ago. The percentage is very small indeed. I have not those particulars at hand, but I can readily get them.

Mr. PROULX: Were the horses, cattle and poultry purchased through agents or through officers of the department?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Two methods are followed. The board sometimes buys itself and at other times it buys through the best experts it can secure. If an advance in price is anticipated the policy of the board is to secure a supply so that the settlers whom the board has to take care of will not be caught at the advanced price. The board has bought large numbers of horses and cows in that way. But of course no settler has to buy from the board; he comes and makes his choice. The board sells to the settler at the price it has paid, and all it seeks is that it may come out of the transaction without loss. If, however, the settler chooses to buy for himself, he is at liberty to do so, but the board undertakes, through its field supervisors operating in every district, to see that the settler is not taken advantage of by speculators who know values better than he does. In a word, they not only pass upon the extent of equipment that the settler is to get, but they pass as well on the value; they must be satisfied that he is getting value for his money. Let me emphasize this point, that in every single case the settler's will has to cover the transaction. He is driven into nothing; he decides himself both as to the land and stock. The board never exercises its activity except to reduce the extent of the purchase, but very often it does so, and almost always successfully.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: Then the minister claims a saving to the settler by his purchasing through the board?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly in respect to implements.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: I was speaking of live stock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We rather think so or the settler would not buy through us; but we cannot say, because we simply sell at the price we pay.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's): When you buy through experts do you add a commission?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think any commission has ever been paid. There is certainly none paid in respect to land purchases.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's): But in regard to live stock?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think so. If I am wrong I will advise the hon. gentleman later.

Mr. PROULX: Does the minister know the average age of those horses?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not; but I will guarantee they are a lot younger than the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PROULX: I hope they are younger than those purchased in Nova Scotia in 1914.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Doubtless they are, because I need scarcely intimate to hon. members that the purchase of land, and horses, and cattle in every district in Canada is, politically, a rather perilous enterprise, as well as perilous from the business standpoint. No doubt mistakes would be made, but as respects horses and cattle at all events, the purchases have been of such a minor character that no such case as my hon. friend has referred to has come to my knowledge. The operations have now been proceeding for about fifteen months, so I do not think that any very venerable horses have come into the possession of the board.

Mr. PROULX: I am glad that the board has acted prudently and has not made any such purchases of horses as were made by the Department of Militia in Nova Scotia in 1914.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know about the Militia purchases, but I do know that nobody ever acted more prudently than the board has acted in this regard; and that ought to satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. WHITE (Victoria): A great deal of stock is sometimes lost in the West during a severe winter such as we had last year. Because of a shortage of feed, or for other reasons, a man might find himself in the spring without enough horses to go on with. I am speaking of the man who has received the maximum allowance for equipment. Is any special provision made for such cases?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No special provision is made; the Act does not permit any. Under the Act we cannot advance any man more than $7,500, and we never do. In the early days of the operation of the Act certain of the men in the first instance secured the whole amount, and where they encountered in the first year a total failure—and particularly in Alberta and Southern Saskatchewan, by reason of the drought, there necessarily have been total failures—the board has been powerless to come to their aid in the way of a further loan. The board has, however, kept as closely as possible in touch with all these men, and by means of the promotion of sales of stock and equipment which under the strained circumstances the men could do without, and the application of the proceeds to the purchase of seed or feed, it has managed to carry these men along. Even then there may be some cases of very great hardship, but we have reports from our Edmonton office, which is in the district most liable at present to cases of distress, to the effect that only a very small number indeed will not be able in some way to pull through. It would be a help to these men, of course, to extend the maximum, but no matter what the extent of the loan may be, you are bound to have still other cases for extension. On the whole, the scale of the systems that this Parliament determined upon in respect of the returned soldier farmer was a generous scale and I have not felt like recommending that in any case the maximum should be exceeded.

Mr. WHITE (Victoria): When I inquired whether any provision was made for the relief of these people I had in mind action taken by the department, particularly in the way of permitting a reduction of stock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh yes, we do that and have done it. I have stated that there are now 674 men in actual training. Many, of course, have taken their training and are now upon the land. The course pursued is this: training centres have been established at several points in Canada: at Kentville, N.S., Fredericton, N.B., Lennoxville, P.Q., Elkhorn, Man., Red Deer, and Crossfield, Alta., Agassiz and Matsqui, B.C. At these farms men who are otherwise qualified but who lack experience are first given a month's training in actual farm work. These are not experimental or fancy farms; they are simply operated in the way that the soldier is expected to operate his land after he gets it. He gets the rudiments of farm work in order that he may be of some use when hired to work on land. He is then told to go out and find a place on a farm. He is assisted to get a suitable location and he is expected to put in approximately a year's work. After that, if he so desires and if it is felt he needs it, he may get two months' special training in an agricultural college. For this purpose we utilize five of the provincial colleges: one at Winnipeg, the Agricultural College at Guelph, and the agricultural colleges at Saskatoon, Fort William, and Matsqui, B.C. That constitutes the entire range of training that the men secure. While they are taking this training they are entitled to assistance to enable them to conserve the money they have saved against the purchase of their land later. Single men are allowed $10 a month, with free tuition and board, and married men are allowed $35 a month, free tuition and board, and, if they have children, $6 for one child and $5 for each subsequent child, with an aggregate maximum of $80. When the men go upon the farm, they get, of course, farm wages. At this stage single men get no further assistance, but married men are allowed $20 per month while they are working on a farm, and, if they have children, $6 for the first child, and $5 for each other child. The committee will observe that the scale of assistance is considerably lower than the scale which obtains in the case of civil re-establishment, for the very obvious reason that men who come in under the soldiers' settlement plan are able-bodied men, and men who later get a very considerable measure of assistance from the State. The man who comes under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment gets more because he is disabled and because he does not get special assistance after he is located in employment.

4 p.m.

Mr. GLASS: The allowance made to men who, after their training, are employed on farms, is not reduced by reason of any amount earned while so employed?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, they get their wages besides, the best they can secure. The country has spent $82,457.01 in respect of allowances to men in training. The estimate for next year looks forward to an expenditure of about the same amount.

Now, there is what is known as the Home Branch of the department. This branch is presided over by Mrs. Muldrew and has to do particularly with the giving of assistance to the wives of settlers. Our women officers do not undertake to visit all the wives of settlers. It is the duty of the field supervisors of the department who are attached to each district office and who are skilled agriculturists, to visit all the men, particularly those who graded low, in D, C, and B grades, and help them by advice and suggestion, report upon their progress and upon the condition of their stock and equipment, and make any other suggestions that will enable the board to be helpful to them. These field supervisors visit the men regularly at least once in six months. As time goes on and the success of each settler becomes assured the supervision need not be so frequent; we are already reducing these visits where we find that the men do not need such close contact on the part of the board's officers. We hope to be able to reduce this service more rapidly as time goes on. But for the present these field supervisors visit and render assistance to every man settled under the board; for the purpose not only of helping them but of protecting the board's security.

Otherwise we would not be able to follow our security and protect ourselves against men who are not making a success. These men, reporting to the various offices, give an account also of the home conditions that prevail in the case of each settler. They frequently come across cases of distress, lack of knowledge of home economics and the management of a house, and in those cases they make it their business by circular and by visits from home counsellors—women under the charge of Mrs. Muldrew—to give help where it is absolutely needed by the wives of these men. They get into touch with women's organizations in the district, Red Cross societies and patriotic organizations, and through those instrumentalities they have been able to render very material help to many a distressed wife of a settler. They also conduct training classes for these women who in the first instance are not making a success of the management of their home. In the province of Saskatchewan 250 women have taken the course in Home Economics that is provided by the Home Branch. There are 20 at present attending the school for that purpose in Prince Edward Island. We purpose doing this work in all the provinces.

I have followed the operations of the board pretty completely so far as they have proceeded. Last year in many parts of the West, and that is where the great body of our settlers are, there were areas where, owing to the accumulated blights of different kinds that all seemed to come at once, it was impossible to raise any crop at all. As a consequence, the proportion of collections was not as good as it would have been in a normal year. Last year, of course, was the first that any payments became due, and of the money that became due, $34,307 in all, $11,911.71 was paid, and extensions were granted and rearrangements made covering $12,623. At the present time there remains only $7,693 not taken care of. It was not anticipated that we would secure in the very first year any larger proportion of our payments than we did. Indeed, if the Act were to be drawn again, I would be disposed to postpone for a little longer period all payments other than interest. However, this sum has been returned and some have met with such conspicuous success that they were able to pay up in full at once. Others have paid more than they were called upon to pay. Of the number who paid up in full something over half, by reason of one accident or another, had sold their land, but at prices which fully discharged their obligation to the board. The estimate for the year to come is fixed at $50,000,000. That is less than the commitments of last year. It is, however, more than the actual money disbursed last year. We hope with this provision to settle next year between 15,000 and 16,000 persons. Furthermore, we hope to get along with $2,000,000, outside of the money we lend, it being intended to invest $48,000,000 in loans. We hope that $2,000,000 will take care of all the training undertaken by the board, take care of the staff of the board situate in every part of Canada, take care also of the cost of supervision and the cost of the loans, because the board in every case pay the appraisal costs and all legal costs that ordinarily are charged against a borrower. Everything but the $2,000,000 will be actually invested in returnable money, and the $2,000,000 itself is invested in advantages which the soldier receives.

The cost to the Government for soldier land settlement for the last fiscal year will amount to approximately $5,000,000. The country loses two years' interest on the stock and equipment, loses also the margin of interest between the rate at which the board loans the money and the rate the Government pays to secure it, loses also the cost of training and of administration. On the amount of money expended last year, this would mean a net unreturnable outlay of about $5,000,000. For next year it will be about the same. There is no possibility of this money being returned to the treasury of Canada. There is, indeed, no possibility, in view of what we know of human nature and of business generally, of the return of all the money that is loaned. There will undoubtedly be losses; there has been a small amount of loss already, and there will be more; but a survey of the operations of the year and an estimate of the lessons learned by the year's operations and the improvements we can make as a result, lead me to the opinion that the proportion of losses will not in the aggregate be a serious one, that it will be, at all events, very much smaller than the great advantages which the country undoubtedly will secure, not only by the increase in the production of these first essentials, but by the addition to the stable unwavering section of our population of so large a proportion of the returned men of Canada.

The Act in its first drafting, and as it stands to-day, admitted to its benefits returned soldiers in England of the army of Great Britain, as well as the army of France, of the United States, and our other Allies. We have sought first, however, to take care so far as we could of the unexpected avalanche of applications that came from our own men. The difficulty of extending the organization rapidly enough and yet at the same time maintain such a degree of efficiency that there might not be disappointment and undue delay to our own men, was such that the doors were opened very gradually and very slowly to the admission of any others. Last year, however, we established in England a board of two, whose duties were to select from applicants of the British army those who had sufficient money and sufficient stamina, so far as that could be gauged, and the right kind of experience that would make them the best prospects at least, of success in Canada. The instructions given to that board were to exercise the greatest care and caution, to err on that side, if any, so that the doors of the system in Canada would not be flooded with those who ultimately had to be denied, because of lack of experience in this country—a primary and indispensable necessity— and perhaps turned back again to their native land. We have sought to let these men know right at their homes before they start what is required in money and experience, the type and class of man that is required, and the training that is required, for we fix a period of two years in the case of all outside inexperienced men. We sought to bring home to them all these requirements at home, so that they would not launch upon journeys and expenses that would land them nowhere in the end. There are innumerable details to which I might allude, but already I have detained the committee and I reserve the rest for such questions as hon. members may see fit to ask.

Mr. GLASS: I understood the minister to say that the loan was on a 5 per cent basis, amortising in twenty-five years, and that 64 of the loans had already been repaid in full. I assume the department has no objection to the loan being repaid in full at any time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all.

Mr. GLASS: Suppose a soldier has occupied his farm for one, two, or three years and made all the payments required by the regulations—If he wishes to sell his farm, is there any provision by which he can do so and have the purchaser assume the obligation he is under.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He can with the approval of the board. I may say that the total number of employees of the board is 1,321. Of these, 962 are males, of whom 876 are returned soldiers, or a total of 91 per cent of the male officials of the board. We have sought to confine ourselves to the utmost of our powers to returned soldiers, except in the case of appraisers. In connection with appraisers we find it impossible to follow the rules to the same extent, for reasons which are no discredit to the returned soldiers, but which are obvious. We had to get men of long experience in actual farming work, and as a general rule it was impossible to secure that class among the returned men, although we did in many instances. But apart from appraisers, 91 per cent are returned men. We have been assisted in every possible way by the Civil Service Commission, and as time went on we were able to co-operate more efficiently and expeditiously with them. Long delays took place at first and we had to dispense rather ruthlessly with the services of many. The operations of the board have suffered at various points by reason of the inefficiency of some men secured, but by adopting a policy that perhaps appeared harsh at the time we believe we have been able to evolve an organization which is now as nearly efficient as possible. It is not 100 per cent efficient, for nothing can be that; but at least it possesses more than average efficiency as a government organization, and at the same time it is predominantly composed of the returned men themselves.

Mr. PROULX: Are the valuators paid by salary or commission?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are paid by salary; we pay no commissions. I can scarcely conceive of anything that would more strikingly manifest folly than to pay valuators on a commission basis.

Mr. PROULX: I have been informed that they were being paid on commission. I was told that in certain places the prices that were paid were exorbitant, and my information is that in one place the Settlement Board paid $7,000 for a farm valued at $3,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Can the hon. gentleman favour me with the names of the place and of the parties??

Mr. PROULX: It does not happen to be in my county. I got the information from a colleague and I shall ask him to give me the particulars. He is not in the House at present.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A great many cases have been presented to me of just such definiteness as the one mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. ANDREWS: I desire to congratulate the minister on his very clear presentment of a most remarkable achievement. One hears very often at the present time that the Union Government is reactionary and that it is working in behalf of the big interests, and so forth; but in this case at least I think that the Liberal members of this House as well as the country at large may congratulate the Government on having enacted the most advanced legislation that has ever been put on the statute book in this country since Confederation. For the first time in the history of Canada the funds of the State have been loaned to individuals for the development of the resources of the country. The machinery and everything in connection with this work are absolutely new. Everything had to be created to meet the new conditions, and of course under the circumstances there was no past experience that could serve as a guide. That necessarily had to be learned. While the Soldiers' Settlement Board has been operating in every province in Canada, indeed almost in every constituency, I imagine that its shortcomings and its mistakes must be very well known to the members of this House, and those who know of any mistakes should avail themselves of the present opportunity to bring them to the attention of the minister. So far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to be critical but rather the reverse. At our convention recently we drew up a long list of suggestions, very few of which are concerned with the general principle of the work, being almost entirely devoted to matters of detail. I think that these suggestions might well go before the committee on Re-establishment which is now in session, rather than before this committee. There is one suggestion in particular, however, which I would direct to the attention of the minister, and that is in regard to the advantage of insuring the men so that there might be no possibility of failure on their part to repay the money loaned them. The suggestion reads:

> That the board insure every married settler, who borrows from the Soldiers' Settlement Board, in an amount equal to his loan and thus secure itself against loss, and, at the same time, provide the dependents of the deceased soldier with an equity for their maintenance.

This suggestion, I think, is one that should be given careful consideration, and I therefore bring it to the attention of the minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The suggestion, I presume, relates to life insurance.

Mr. ANDREWS: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Representations have been made to me from other sources that it would be advantageous to have a system of life insurance established for the protection of the board, and while I have not yet discussed the subject with the board, I intend to do so.

Mr. CALDWELL: I desire to make a few remarks on this subject, especially in view of the fact that I was very closely connected with the operation of the Soldiers' Settlement Act in the province from which I come. I was Chairman of the Qualification Board before whom the soldiers in my part of the country came for examination in regard to their fitness as settlers, and shortly after the work began I was made a member of the Loan Committee. I want to speak particularly in regard to the price per acre of land in the different provinces. I observed that some hon. members smiled when they heard what the price per acre was in New Brunswick, and I am inclined to think they got a wrong impression in that respect. Perhaps no one realizes better than I that the statement is correct, because I was one of the board who decided what should be paid. I realize this probably more than anybody else because I was one of the board who decided what farms should be bought and what we should pay for them. The soldier selected a farm and the inspector inspected it and put a valuation upon it. We did not in every case pay what the valuator said it was worth. We even turned down a number of farms that the farm inspector said were good value at the price asked for them. That is the reason why the prices were less per acre in New Brunswick than in some other provinces. But we estimated the value of these farms on the production basis. If a farm would not produce enough to enable the settler to sustain his family and to give him a pretty fair chance of making his payments the board asked the soldier to select another farm. In a great many cases the farms were good but were top heavy with buildings. We realized that the soldier could not make any money out of the buildings and while they would be a good investment for the man who had the money to pay for them we did not encourage soldiers to burden themselves with such farms. We refused different farms that were top heavy with buildings. That is another reason why our price per acre is smaller than in other provinces where they purchased farms with better buildings. I know that farms were sold to private individuals, cash down for a price that we said the soldier could not pay and still I believe we were right. When the purchase was made by a man who had the money to pay for the farm and the buildings, there is no doubt that he made a good trade but there is a great difference between a man going on a farm and going into debt for it and a man who has money to pay for it.

I had hoped that a Bill would have been brought down by the minister to extend the time for repayment of the advance on stock and equipment for a longer period. I think the period should be longer. However, I suppose we should be grateful for small favours. I understand you extend the time for two years?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not think that is sufficient but still there is nothing to prevent this House from extending the time further if it is found necessary, and I think it will be found necessary. I think the payment per year that the soldier will have to make on $2,000 worth of stock and equipment will be $380?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I think so.

Mr. CALDWELL: The payment on the farm would be $850 or $875 a year. It will be upwards of ten per cent on the whole investment of $8,000. I believe the minister said they would only advance $7,500 although the maximum is $8,500 if the settler wants $1,000 more for permanent improvements.

In regard to the payment for both farm and the stock and equipment, I believe they have a pretty good plan worked out and that it is being well carried out. I do not think they could have devised a better method. I heard an hon. gentleman while the minister was speaking, say that it would be a peculiar thing if there were no graft in connection with buying so much loose stuff. I do not think there is any possibility of graft in this respect. The inspector goes out to inspect the stock and to say whether it is worth what the soldier pays for it. The cheque in payment of the purchase price is made payable directly from the board to the person that the stock is purchased from. The man who does the buying does not handle any of the money. I believe that is a wise method.

I, like the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Andrews), feel like giving the Government every credit for this Act. I believe that it is a good thing and that it serves a good purpose. I believe that it will put returned soldiers into civil life who otherwise would not be able to establish themselves under such favourable conditions. I hope the time for repayment will be extended if necessary and I feel sure it will be. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Andrews) made a suggestion with regard to insuring the settlers and I think that would be a wise provision. However, I do not believe that the board or the Government or the country takes any risk of losing anything by this transaction. The settler pays ten per cent of the purchase price down. He must do that. If he dies next year the Government has the property absolutely together with the ten per cent of the price which the settler has paid down. If he makes his payment for five years he will have paid approximately one-third of the purchase price and the Government still absolutely own the property because the soldier has no claim against it until it is fully paid for. I think there is very little chance of the Government losing through this scheme but I think that as an extra safeguard and as a protection to the settler's family he should be insured. If the settler dies the board will have to take the farm over and it may not be able to realize as much at forced sale as it otherwise would. You cannot sell a property at forced sale for all it is worth. In that case the family might be destitute and if the Government should insure the settler it would be a protection to themselves as well as to the soldier's family.

The method of paying for the farm is the same as the method for paying for the stock and machinery. Ordinarily you cannot buy a farm or anything else without paying a commission to somebody but the Government brought in an Act which was passed by Parliament making it a criminal offence to accept a commission on any property sold to a returned soldier. That was a wise provision. We had a case in New Brunswick where a real estate man tried to sell a farm to a returned soldier. He had asked the soldier to make a deposit of $300. Our committee turned down the sale, we did not buy the farm and we had some trouble to get the money back from the real estate man. If we had not read the Act to him and shown him that it was a criminal offence it is doubtful if the man would have got his money back. I believe that the real estate men undertook to corner the farms that we offered for sale in order that they might get their commission when these farms were sold. This Act headed them off and it was very necessary to have such a protection. The tendency of the time is to make all you can out of every opportunity that presents itself, these real estate men were legitimately in the business to sell farms and while it is legitimate under ordinary circumstances to sell real estate for a commission I think it was a wise thing to make it an offence to collect a commission on farms sold to returned soldiers.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks on this very important matter. I am sure that every member of the House was pleased when the minister told us that in many cases the soldier made a ten per cent deposit when his farm was purchased. I gather from that that it is partly on account of the excellent work done by the qualification board. I believe they have been hand picked.

The explanation of that is this: the soldier farmer who managed to get through without putting down his ten per cent perhaps worked a little on the sympathies of the qualification board, because after all we are all human.

I want to make this further remark: If I caught the minister's words aright he spoke about doing away with the qualification board. If I am wrong in that understanding I want to be corrected.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We are, where we have found it possible to use the services of our own officers. We are not doing that everywhere; it all depends on circumstances. I would be compelled to mention instances to make clear what I say. We have had difficulties in connection with the working together of the board and the committe in certain points; and we have found we can work more economically through our own officers who have proven at that particular point to be thoroughly qualified as qualification men, and not have any qualification committe at all. We save a lot of expense that way, a very great deal of expense. But we never do it unless our men at that point have been tried by the test of experience and have proven true. We could not move very rapidly in that direction, but wherever we know that our men who are on our regular staff are qualified then we rely on that staff alone. It is a proper principle if we can get to it, but we will have to get to it slowly.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): It is not my intention to debate this point with the minister, but the success that has been achieved in the past up to the present time, is, I think, greatly to the credit of the qualification board; and it may be a "penny wise and pound foolish" policy to do away with a part of the machine which has been so very instrumental in attaining that success.

I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Caldwell) that the Act is a good one, and has worked out well; but there is an old saying that very often the man behind the gun is the best part of it, and I am of opinion that a great deal of credit is due to the worthy chairman of the Soldiers' Settlement Board. I believe that he has slept with the Act and thereby has made its administration a success. It is not a very easy matter to hand pick men and loan money belonging to the State, and to say to them—as an individual would in the case of an ordinary business transaction—"You must make a success of this." The common tendency in the case of a transaction such as this, where money is being borrowed from the State, is to say: "It does not matter much whether it is a failure or not—the Government has to pay the expense."

I am very glad to know that such a large percentage of our men have made good. I would ask the minister now to give the committee this information: What is the number of soldier farmers who were on the land, say on the 1st November, who have wintered on that land?

Mr. NESBITT: The number who have gone through the winter on the land?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member mean the number of men who have gone on the land up to November last?

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): The number of soldier farmers who went on to the land and who have wintered on the land.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is practically the same as the figures I gave, 15,234 up to the 21st March. Very few have gone on since November. They start in the spring, in the month of April, and from that time until the fall they go out on the land and stay there over the winter. They do not, however, go on the land between November and March.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: As the one who gave his benediction to this scheme last year, perhaps the committee will permit me a word or two in hearty appreciation of the most satisfactory and lucid statement which we have just had from the minister. As years advance on one, one naturally becomes of a more pacific and less militant type, and I find more interest in constructive politics of this kind than in the fierce clashes of party warfare. So that it is a personal pleasure to me to hear a statement from a minister who I cannot—not now—always support, in which I find everything to commend and nothing to criticise.

I am naturally, Mr. Chairman, and the committee will pardon me, if I say it, proud of the province from which I come. The figures about that province, good as I know it to be, astonish me though I do not know why they should. Alberta led in recruiting in war; she leads in soldier settlement on the land in peace; and she leads in hustlers who pay the money back first. That province must, at some time or another, have had a good education in patriotism, in agriculture, and in hustling. The members from other provinces will pardon me for drawing attention to these facts: It is not by way of pride, but by way of trying to induce emulation in others and bringing other provinces up to the splendid position in which we find the good little province of Alberta.

The statement of the minister is a splendid advertisement of the magnificent resources of this great country. I was astounded myself to find that so many as sixty-four men had actually now paid back all they borrowed. It was rather a swift and staggering reply to some one who tauntingly said—when the minister was asked a few minutes ago how many years were to be given to the paying back—"Never." "Never," as I told a member the other day, is a long time; and it so happens that some people have already paid back all that they got. I repeat that is a splendid advertisement of this magnificent country. It is an advertisement which should be used in other countries of the earth to let them know what sort of a country Canada really is.

I want to say also that the statement of the minister is a high tribute to the way in which the work of the Interior Department in its administrative capacity is carried on, and it is a tribute to the splendid qualities of the members of the Soldiers' Land Settlement Board. I have had considerable dealings—as I suppose all members of the House have had—with these gentlemen, and it is a pleasure to me to testify that they have the utmost capacity for hard work, they are extremely courteous in the reception of any suggestion, anxious to help and anxious to be helped; and they have, above all things, that enthusiasm which is always followed by hard work. And, the minister would be the first to agree with me that they have been of very great assistance to him in carrying out this Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: There are just one or two points that the minister mentioned which I should like to confirm his opinion upon. The board have got the right idea when they send men to work first on a farm. The way to learn to play cricket is to play it under a man who has played cricket before and who knows the game well; and the way to learn farming is to do actual farming and actual settlement work in Western Canada. It is the way I began myself eighteen and a half years ago; and I remember the pride with which at the end of my first day I received the congratulations of the somewhat waggish old lady at the head of the family with whom I was staying, when she congratulated me that I at least knew the end of a cow by which it took its hay, and the end from which the milk was got. It was with very great pride that I achieved that distinction. I have done a little better since that time.

Another point upon which I think the minister is to be congratulated is the fact that he and the board are giving a predominant chance to the citizens of our own country. I think there is a double reason, which will occur to the members of the committee, why that should be done. In the first place, our primary duty, as every one of us will agree—it is commonplace almost to say it—is to our own citizens; but in the second place, and perhaps more important it is along that line that we shall achieve the greatest success, because men who know something of Canada will naturally make better Canadian farmers; although I do hope that in time with the extension of its operations an increasing number of British and French citizens from the Old Lands will be found working under this board.

Before I sit down I should like to give two warnings which may prove useful. There will be a great temptation to take a lenient view of applications for extra loans. We all feel very favourably towards the returned soldier, and when one receives a letter from a returned soldier asking for an increase in his loan, one's heart naturally goes out to him. But I should like to advise the board to look very carefully into such applications. After all, it is no misfortune to the man himself,—and the public interest has to be guarded,—to have "to face it stiffly" in the first years of his operations. Any one who has settled on the land in the West—and I am sure those hon. gentlemen opposite to me know that it is equally true of their forefathers who first settled in Ontario—had a stiff row to hoe in the early years, and it is because they had that the sons of Canada are the men they are to-day. I would therefore advise the minister to look carefully into these applications for extra loans, and not to let his heart run away with his head—always a very dangerous proceeding in matters relating to money.

Another warning I should like to make in this regard,—and it emphasizes the warning I have just uttered,—is that the success of this board in its speed will perhaps be greater in the early years than at any other period. I think the men whom one would most trust anticipate that agricultural prices will keep at the present height for at least a couple of years yet. No one can tell exactly what the truth is on that subject; but what we want to keep in mind is that agricultural prices will not remain forever at their present level. Therefore while that would emphasize the warning I have just uttered about not giving more loans than are necessary in response to the promptings of the heart, it would also tend, in my mind, to the thought that we ought not to let our enthusiasm for this work—and it is a splendid work—run with us any further than is absolutely necessary to deal with men who really need occupation. In other words, we must spread our returned soldiers over as many operations of our country as possible—industrial, agricultural, lumbering and fishing. Therefore I would advise the board to moderate their zeal, so to speak, and not let the work run away with them. I do not think the warning is really needed, for I am sure they will be cautious, but it is well to bear in mind that the prices of agricultural produce cannot remain where they are and that hard times will come, and consequently my warning may well be heeded.

Of course, we shall be able to meet the worst years if the Government, and the board, and the rest of Canada will emulate the people of Alberta not only in their hustling, fighting and agricultural qualities, but also in their fiscal qualities. I will not tell the committee what those fiscal qualities are.

Mr. NESBITT: Mr. Chairman, I think the country is to be congratulated on the choice of the chairman of this board; and I also think that the chairman is to be congratulated on the choice of his assistants. He has, I think, used every precaution that it was possible for him to use and still endeavour to carry out the intention of the Act.

My experience is that there have been greater and more numerous failures among men going on farms without any knowledge of farming than among men entering any other line of business—and we all know there have been more failures in this country than in any other by reason of men taking up work that they had no knowledge of and in which they had to buy their experience. This particularly is the case in regard to farming.

I would like to give to the chairman one or two thoughts that have occurred to me in connection with this report. I am going to confine my remarks to Ontario. The average price of land I see was $33. Unless most of these settlers were put in the far north or in the uncultivated regions, the average price of land would denote that they had bought run-down farms. It is absolutely impossible for a man without means to settle on such a farm and build it up inside of two or three years, and therefore he must have means enough to carry him over that period. I have no doubt that the farms were purchased for real value, but it would be a great mistake to purchase a farm because it is a cheap farm. It is far easier for a man to go on a farm in first-class condition, so far as buildings, fences, and fertility are concerned and make money from the start than to build up a run-down farm.

With reference to the purchase of cows, I notice that the average price paid in Ontario was $80. I am afraid that those cows could never be made to pay. In my judgment you cannot make a cow pay in Ontario at the present time unless she yields 6,000 pounds of milk a year; and certainly such a cow cannot be bought for $80. It costs nearly as much to keep a poor cow as it does to keep the cow that is putting her feed into the pail, and this is the type of cow that is needed on the average dairy farm in this province. Of course, if a man is buying a cow for beef purposes it is not material whether she is a good milker or not; but if he is buying her for dairy purposes, which is the principal business for which cows are kept in Ontario, then he needs a cow that will give 6,000 pounds of milk a year rather than a yield of only 3,000 or 4,000 pounds. In my section of the country for the last three years, speaking roughly, good registered cows have sold at an average price of from $120 to $180. If I were going to buy a cow to-morrow I would rather pay $200 for it than $80—that is, of course, provided I was satisfied as to the quality of the cow and her record. It is the poor cows that we are constantly turning out of our herds. Every year those who keep tab on what they are doing turn their poor cows over to the butcher, if they are straight, or sell them to their neighbours at the best price they can get for them, if they are not straight. I repeat that the country is to be congratulated upon having at the head of this board a man who has done such admirable work and who, considering the probable applicants who might apply to go on the land for the purpose of getting the loan, has so wonderfully well protected the interests of the country. I hope that he will continue in the same prudent, careful, cautious manner which has characterized his work in the past. If he does, I have no doubt that the scheme will be an entire success. I offer these remarks not by way of criticism, but simply because I think that the suggestions which I have made ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. STACEY: Perhaps it would not be out of place for a representative of another province which has received a large number of returned soldiers as settlers to say a word or two. I join most heartily with those hon. members who have extended hearty congratulations to the chairman of this board for the able and efficient manner in which this work has been conducted during the past two or three years. I would like to mention two points which, I think, have not been dealt with by hon. members who have spoken. First, with regard to the attitude of the returned soldier settler himself, I would not presume to speak for any other province than my own, but so far as my knowledge goes there is general satisfaction—I do not say universal satisfaction, because that would be impossible—but there is satisfaction on the part of the returned soldier, who now feels that he has a chance, and that, just as he made good overseas, it is now up to him to make good here. Generally speaking, I say, they are satisfied with their position and with the treatment accorded to them by the Government. A large number—it would be futile to make an estimate, nor is it within my province to do so—have good hope of success, and from all appearances a very large percentage of those who have settled upon the land will make good.

I wish to direct attention also to the work which has been carried on by Mrs. Muldrew, who is in charge of the home branch, and to the tact and wisdom manifested by her in soliciting and securing the co-operation of other women's organizations. The task which has been committed to Mrs. Muldrew is a difficult and sometimes a very delicate one, but certainly it has been carried out with marked success, and as a result of wise and diplomatic management, the co-operation of individuals and organizations has been secured. On the whole, I think there is good ground for believing that this scheme will be highly successful from the standpoint not only of the country but also of the returned soldier; and that it will bring about increased production and general prosperity. If the scheme is as successful in the future as it has been in the past, it will prove to have been the finest of its kind that has been initiated and carried out in any country affected by the war.

Mr. POWER: Together with some of the hon. gentlemen of the Farmers' party with whom I sit this afternoon—temporarily only, I assure the minister—I congratulate the minister on his clear, lucid and interesting statement with regard to his policy and what I might call his very interesting experiment. I have a few criticisms to offer on behalf of myself and others, and I make them in spite of the fact that the only criticism so far offered has been met by the minister with a reply which shows that he does not believe in the adage, "A soft answer turneth away wrath." I may also be excused, as my hon. friend (Mr. Proulx) has been, if I am somewhat indefinite in my statement. However, I conceive it to be my duty to make these few remarks and to offer a few criticisms.

5 p.m.

To begin with, I suppose I should congratulate the chairman of the board, whose efforts have apparently met with satisfaction throughout the country. But I have this criticism to offer—and I am sure that the committee must be weary of hearing me offer this criticism in all departments—that unfortunately, so far as my knowledge goes, the chairman of this board, a board entrusted with the task of looking after returned soldiers and placing them on the land, is not himself a returned soldier. I do not need to elaborate this point; the principle that returned soldiers should be looked after by returned soldiers has been generally admitted by ministers and by members on both sides. I simply give it as my opinion that within the ranks of the Canadian Expeditionary Force it would have been quite possible to find a man as competent—though I do not doubt the high competence and managerial ability of the chairman—as the chairman himself.

Mr. NESBITT: Possible; but do you think it would have been probable?

Mr. POWER: Quite possible; even probable. I have heard the minister complimented on his report in that a certain number of these returned soldiers have been able to repay the money lent to them. I also congratulate the minister in that the money has been returned to him. But it would appear from the remarks made by two hon. gentlemen that these moneys were returned because the soldiers in question were enabled, through obtaining a loan from the Government, to make a fortunate and lucky speculation. Now, if we are allowed to do that off the land, why should the Government not lend any of us city dwellers sufficient money to gamble on the stock exchange? We might make a fortune out of speculation and so be enabled to return the money to the Government.

Mr. NESBITT: You might not, though.

Mr. POWER: To my mind, the facts stated by some of my hon. friends are the best arguments I have yet heard in favour of the famous Harry J. Flynn gratuity scheme. That is to say, lend a certain amount of money to a returned soldier and shortly afterwards he will be able to pay you back. The Government, having done that, congratulates itself on being the means of enabling certain soldiers to speculate on land and return the money which they had borrowed.

From what I have heard here this afternoon apparently a large number of soldiers have settled on land that had previously been occupied, I understand from my hon. friend (Mr. Caldwell) that in New Brunswick at any rate the farms purchased were as a rule farms that had already been occupied. Now if this scheme of land settlement is to be of any permanent use to the country, in my opinion we should make it a colonization scheme, not a scheme for placing soldiers on the land in order that other people occupying that land may come to the cities. That is how it would appear to have worked out in New Brunswick at any rate, and from the little knowledge I have of the scheme in Quebec I would think the same condition exists there. If this is not a colonization scheme, but simply a scheme for the advantage of certain returned soldiers, I say that all returned soldiers should be entitled to equal benefits under it—another argument in favour of the gratuity. In passing I might say that I have never been in favour of the gratuity, and I am not now, but the very reasons which the Government gives for congratulating itself might be used by those who do not favour its policy in urging their own claim.

I should also like to call the attention of the Government to some criticisms by a certain body favourably and generally known as the Great War Veterans' Association. This body is a very large and representative one, and its members are the people who are supposed to be benefited under this scheme. It is all very well for members of the House representing the agricultural classes to state that the scheme as a whole has worked well, and I am glad that the minister has been fortunate enough to receive their congratulations, as I am sure he is glad, but if this scheme does not meet with the approval of those presumed to be benefited under it, I think it must lack something, and it is the duty of the minister and of the Government to see whether any remedy suggested cannot be applied. I had here a few moments ago, until my desk mate disappeared, a number of resolutions passed by the Great War Veterans' Association. However, I have in my hand a newspaper report quoting certain of these resolutions, as to which I think the minister should make some statement. The text of the resolution adopted by the Great War Veterans' Association in convention assembled reads in part as follows:

> And whereas the present Soldiers' Settlement Act gives wide latitude in the promulgation of regulations to the Soldiers' Settlement Board;
> And whereas said regulations have been, in many instances, unnecessarily rigorous and designed for idealistic conditions which do not exist;
> And whereas, in many instances, hardship has ensued to our comrades by reason of the administration and general inefficiency of the Soldiers' Settlement Board;
> And whereas said regulations, in many instances, break the pledges made to the soldier, while in the trenches, in regard to land settlement;
> Therefore be it resolved that the Great War Veterans' Association of Canada memorialize Parliament to entirely reorganize, after investigation, the present administration of the Soldiers' Settlement Board.

Before proceeding to the other resolutions I would ask the minister to tell the committee whether he has taken any steps to meet the wishes of the organized veterans with respect to reorganizing the Soldiers' Settlement Board, and if not, why.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have listened to the hon. member (Mr. Power) and particularly to his quotation from the resolution passed at a Great War Veterans' Association meeting demanding reorganization of the land settlement work. If my memory serves me correctly the resolution was moved by Mr. Dace, was it not?

Mr. POWER: Mr. Dace moved one of the clauses of it at any rate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was moved by Mr. Dace, was it not?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Shortly before it was moved, reorganization was already under way, and one of the first steps in that reorganization was the removal of Mr. Dace. Mr. Dace had been associated with, and I think he had been the head of, a real estate firm that had done a somewhat flourishing business selling land to the returned men. That was in the days before the Act was passed preventing commissions. His activities were somewhat contracted when commissions were denied, but he still was in the insurance business, and being in that business and also in the soldiers' settlement organization, being a returned man, and being taken on chiefly for that reason, he managed to turn a lot of the insurance to the firm of Dace & Company, or at least to the firm of which he was the head. Indeed, so anxious was he to do business that in some cases he placed insurance for soldiers on buildings where there were no buildings at all. So we considered that about the first step in reorganization was to dispense with the services of Mr. Dace, and the resolution which the hon. member gives so much attention to followed very closely upon that dispensation.

An investigation, if I remember correctly, was also contemplated by the resolution. I might say that an investigation was proceeding at the time the resolution was moved, and we expect a report after no great length of time more fully disclosing just what activities were being carried on —activities that certainly were not in the interests of the returned soldiers, though possibly they were in the interest of Mr. Dace. I am afraid that some of the men present at that meeting whose motives were of the best, and who had no disposition to be unfair, were very much misled by speeches on the part of those who were most anxious to complain of a board that had not appreciated their services. Only for those speeches I do not think any such action would have been taken. I am very much of opinion that many of those present now believe that the resolution did not do very much credit to the association, and that it would have been better not to have passed it.

Referring to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Nesbitt) it is true that the average price per animal for cows purchased does seem low, but that was not the average price in Ontario, but the average for Canada, and particularly as regards the West, where largely because of the failure of crops and the lack of feed cows went down to a pretty low figure.

Mr. NESBITT: I understood you to say "Ontario."

Mr. MEIGHEN: If I said "Ontario" it was a mistake. There is the further factor that included in the term "cows" are heifers, which are not properly in that category. The chairman of the board tells me, however, that they are embraced in that designation. As to prices in Ontario the average for the week ending 31st March was $106.26.

Mr. NESBITT: I may say that two-year-olds often sell at higher prices than cows somewhat older, especially when they are in calf. It depends on the breeding; and three-year-olds, I think, are certainly counted valuable cows.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly, the breeding will make up for years very often. But of the same breeding, a three-year-old is not so valuable as a four or five or six-year-old.

Mr. NESBITT: They do not bring the same money, whether they are counted more valuable or not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Conditions may have changed, but that was the case some years ago. I wish to acknowledge on behalf of the chairman of the board, the well deserved marks of appreciation on the part of hon. members. The success of the soldiers' settlement work —and I think it has been a real success, though certainly not unqualified—is due to the chairman more than to any other man. The chairman and members of the board have all worked together well and efficiently, showing conspicuous ability and devotion to duty, which only a minister, I think, knows how fully to recognize. I ought to say here that the board has been very much assisted in various parts of Canada by hon. members of the House, and particularly by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Stacey), who spoke just a few moments ago. At a time when the mind of the soldier in this country was so agitated that anything like satisfaction to him was utterly out of the question, that hon. gentleman in his own province, where an abnormal number of soldiers had collected, rendered very great assistance in the way of explaining to the soldiers the plans and operations of the board, and generally helping the organization of the board in serving the returned men in that province.

Mr. POWER: With reference to Mr. Dace, who as a matter of fact did move an amendment to the resolution referred to, I hardly think it is fair for the minister to dismiss, as he has a resolution passed by a body such as the Great War Veterans' Association at a meeting at which there were delegates from all over Canada. To say that because a man named Dace, of whose action the Government did not perhaps approve, had something to do with the consideration of a resolution passed by this association, the resolution should not be deemed worthy of attention, is something I cannot understand. Let the minister remember that at that meeting there were representatives of some two or three thousand returned soldiers, and these men were not of such a character that they could be swayed by the speeches of one or two or three persons. As a returned soldier myself, I protest that the minister has no right to make the statement, or at least to insinuate, that because two or three men had personal grievances they were able, so to speak, to dragoon a convention such as this into accepting a resolution for which, according to the minister, they are sorry. I have been perhaps in as close touch as the minister with the returned soldiers' organization and I have not yet heard any member of that association express any sorrow in connection with the matter. The minister may probably have friends who are more closely connected with this great body than I am and he may have heard from them, but I can assure him that I have a large number of friends in the rank and file of the association and not one of them has as yet attributed to those who had anything to do with the passing of the resolutions the motives which the minister seeks to attribute to them. I will go further. I do not know whether Comrade Drennan of British Columbia has had any trouble with the Soldiers' Settlement Board—he may have had—but he says that the Land Settlement scheme was merely a scheme whereby the returned soldier must pay a stated amount to take up land. Comrade Mills of Winnipeg advocated a thorough investigation into the administration of the board, asserting that the local representative of the board in Winnipeg, paid by the Government, was charging irregular fees. I have not the pleasure of knowing the other comrades whom I have mentioned, but as regards Dr. A. Mackenzie Forbes, of Montreal, who is well known to the majority of hon. members from Quebec, and who has a very high standing in his profession, I hardly think that even the minister himself will attribute to him any ulterior motives. Dr. Forbes made an impassioned address on the subject and concluded that the Government, in spite of the excellent provisions of the Land Settlement Act, had done nothing and that the soldiers had seen that they were not able to avail themselves of the provisions of the Act. The Act itself, he said, was good, but its administration had been an absolute failure. R. L. Calder also supported the plea for an investigation. This gentleman, I may say, is fairly well known in the city of Montreal. He said he had opened a special file in his office which contained nothing but tales of misery caused by the administration of the Land Settlement Act. He cited specific instances, one being that of an applicant for land who had been disqualified on the judgment of a broken-down journalist. I do not think that the minister was quite fair in dismissing the complaints of these men on the ground that the mover of the resolution, or the amendment thereto, was a man who was himself dissatisfied with the administration of the board. It seems to me that these resolutions, coming from a body representative in itself, should have met with better treatment at the hands of the minister, and at the risk of having my hon. friend give me the same answer, I will proceed to read another resolution. I really think the minister should be asked to take these resolutions one by one and explain why they have not been carried, out, but since I do not intend to weary the committee by repeating these one after the other, and since I may possibly expect from the minister some answer when I have got through the first one, perhaps I would do well to confine myself to two or three:

That all soldier settlers should be in possession of a copy of all agreements existing between the Soldiers' Settlement Board and themselves, immediately on the completion of said agreements, and that all such agreements should be completed immediately upon the transfer of title to the Soldiers' Settlement Board.

Again:

That all applicants for loans be supplied at time of qualification with literature giving full particulars of liabilities that may be assumed and outlining the regulations of the Soldiers' Settlement Board.

Has the minister anything to say with reference to these resolutions?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not really intend to cut the hon. gentleman off with a sharp or warm answer. Nor did I have any similar intention in regard to the hon. member for Quebec when he put a question a few minutes before. As to the resolutions, every hon. member of this House must have respect for the returned man though he may have had faults and may have failed in other respects. Nevertheless, he is a returned man. We must have respect particularly for resolutions passed by returned men, but, resolutions are, after all, only resolutions. What counts is facts. I do not see where one can spend any time usefully in meditating upon the terms of a resolution calling for reorganization and for dispensing with the services of the board. It is only a weariness to the flesh to meditate over those things. A resolution of consequence which would appeal to a minister would be one designating cases or phases in respect to which the board have failed.

Mr. POWER: I expected the minister to say that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, you would expect any minister to say that. That is all really that counts. It is not opinions that count; it is work that counts; it is deeds. I am open to receive evidence of misdeeds, but until I receive evidence of misdeeds I would not be worthy of my position or of any position at all if I made people suffer because of opinions unsupported by evidence? Where is the hon. gentleman's evidence? It must still be at the back of his head. He has not even suggested any. He said that somebody made an impassioned speech. I have no doubt that that is true and that it would have been a great pleasure to have heard these gentlemen. But what did they say; what did they find out was wrong? Where is the weakness? Show that it is a weakness. That is all I am waiting for from the hon. member.

Mr. POWER: As I said in the beginning of my remarks, I rather expected the minister to tell me that the criticisms I was about to make would not be definite enough for him to answer. But I thought that perhaps he had given some attention to these resolutions that had been adopted by a body of men such as the Great War Veterans asking for a reorganization. He should have made it his business as the minister in charge of the administration of this department to have given some consideration to the resolutions which he so slightingly refers to here. He should have said to himself: Here is a body of men directly affected by the operation of this Act and they ask for a reorganization by Parliament. It is true the minister did not, in the resolutions themselves, have a recital of the facts, but the minister must have known that in order to pass such resolutions these men must have had some facts in their minds. Surely the minister does not imagine that these men pass resolutions merely for the pleasure of doing it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It looks suspicious.

Mr. POWER: The minister is a little suspicious—I am glad to have that admission from him. The admission will no doubt be received with considerable pleasure by the Great War Veterans in his constituency that he is a little suspicious of the resolutions which they have passed. But the Great War Veterans' Association, suspicious though the minister is of them, must be regarded on the whole as being composed of fairly reasonable men and when they debate, as apparently they debated on this day, resolutions of this kind, they must have some facts with which to back them up. My view of the minister's duty is that he should immediately have taken cognizance of such a complaint and asked his department to investigate in so far as possible to ascertain whether there were or were not any reasonable grounds for complaint. This resolution is only a portion of a long list of resolutions and in the long list of resolutions there are no doubt facts stated which would give the minister some light on the subject. Surely even though the minister does think that his department is absolutely perfect, he might have read these resolutions over. If he had done so he would have come to the conclusion that those who had passed these resolutions were not so full of admiration for his own virtue or that of his department as he may have imagined and that possibly there may be room for improvement. That is the spirit in which I am criticizing the minister. If there is room for improvement in his department it is demonstrated by his failure to listen and pay attention to the criticism that is made of his department. A moment ago I asked the minister what he had to say with reference to the two resolutions one of which distinctly asked for a copy of the agreement and the other that the soldier settler should be able to obtain literature giving full particulars of the liability which he assumes. That is an important point but the minister has not answered it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have answered it. They get it in every case but of course they cannot get it immediately. They get the money because the agreement cannot be fully completed and the amount of the money inserted in it until they get all their advances. The advances are often made progressively. When the loan is closed and the transaction completed every soldier is given a copy of his agreement and that agreement discloses to him all his liabilities to the board, the dates of maturities and all the information that we have or he requires.

Mr. POWER: How long may this progressive borrowing extend?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Until the soldier gets the full amount of his loan.

Mr. POWER: How many years?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would be his own fault if it were at all long. It might run to six weeks. It may not be his fault but it is his choice. He is waiting until he gets goods that suit him but once he gets the loan and the agreement is completed he gets a copy of the agreement.

Mr. POWER: At what date did this system of giving the soldiers a copy of the agreement go into force?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, that has always been in force.

Mr. POWER: Therefore there would be no truth in the allegation contained in this particular resolution?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think there is any allegation. The resolution simply asks that the man be given a copy of the agreement. That has probably arisen from the fact that for quite a period he is without a copy of his agreement, but that is unavoidable until the agreement is completed. That is perhaps not fully understood and therefore there is a misapprehension which has given rise to the resolution.

Mr. POWER: I remember reading in a newspaper, some time in the course of last week, of a case where a settler in the vicinity of Quebec was called before the police magistrate for having sold some of his stock. I am not familiar with the details of the case, but the plan of the defence was that he did not know what his rights were and that he had no agreement. The case occurred within the last ten days, but unfortunately I have not the newspaper clipping before me at the present time. The matter was before the court in the city of Quebec, and I remember that Major John Roy was prosecuting for the board. The defence was that there was no agreement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would presume the deence failed.

Mr. POWER: No, I think the case was adjourned to permit of the production of further evidence on behalf of the Crown.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. POWER: No. I thought some other member might have something to say, and I did not want to take up the time of the committee for the whole afternoon. But really, sitting as I am at the present time, with members of the Progressive party, I am becoming very talkative.

An hon. MEMBER: You never did better.

An hon. MEMBER: I should think they would ask you to move on.

Mr. POWER: There is another resolution to this effect:

That a sufficient staff of veterinary surgeons be employed by the Soldiers' Settlement Board, and that each settler, under the Soldiers' Settlement Board, be visited at least semi-annually by the representative of this veterinary staff, and all stock inspected and treatment administered, where necessary. All expenses in this connection to be borne by the Soldiers' Settlement Board.

May I ask the minister if this is the "home" treatment which we heard about a few minutes ago?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member read a resolution—I never heard of it before—asking us to send out a veterinary surgeon every six months.

Mr. POWER: To inspect the stock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member think that would be wise?

Mr. POWER: I do not know whether it would be wise or not. I am simply calling the minister's attention to the complaint of a large number of men that this is not done. I will not take it upon myself to go into each and every one of these complaints. Some of them may be purely local; some may have reference only to settlers in the Prairie Provinces and to conditions which do not exist in Quebec. I am not in a position here to judge as to these matters; I have not at my disposal the mass of evidence, or the staff at my disposal to collect all these facts, which the minister has. I am bringing this subject to the attention of the minister, and asking him if he has done anything with reference to it, or if he is willing to do anything. If he is not, let him say so, because personally it does not affect me in any way. I am not going on the land; I could not farm if I wanted to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The cost of sending a veterinary surgeon around to each settler every six months would approximate $400,000 a year—that is, if the veterinary surgeons could be secured. As a matter of fact, they could not be secured; we could not get enough veterinary surgeons to do this work. In the next place, these men are visited by Field Supervisors who, being specialists in agriculture—I think practically all, if not all, are graduates of agricultural colleges—know more about farming than merely the care of stock or the condition of stock if the animal should be suffering from any disease. These supervisors have such a general knowledge as renders them able to assist the settler in every particular. Now what would be the common sense of sending a veterinary surgeon around every six months, even assuming there is no information to show he is not needed at all? I do not think the hon. member would need to be classed as a farmer, or need to have any special information of any kind, to bring him, upon reflection, at once to the conclusion that such a suggestion would not appeal to any one; it would be a very great expense and utterly unjustified. I never heard of this resolution before; I did hear of the first one, and it is the only one I know of. I may inform the hon. member that a delegation from the organization in question waited upon the Government and presented certain resolutions, but they never said a word about this particular resolution, and I give them very great credit for the omission.

Mr. POWER: I thank the minister for the answer which he has given; it is a far more reasonable one than the reply he first gave to me. I hope he will continue to answer in the same fashion other questions I put to him along similar lines, and perhaps the Great War Veterans will be more than pleased with him. I am sorry the minister did not make it his business to read these resolutions. For that reason I am all the more convinced that I should make it my business to let him know about them. If the minister has not seen them, I am very glad to be able now to bring them to his attention. He has already spoken with reference to the resolution that returned soldiers should be appointed as valuators, so I do not need to ask him about it again. The next resolution is worded as follows:

That advisory committees be instructed from Ottawa that the Act, as it concerns them, is for guidance in their decisions, and that the head of the Soldiers' Settlement Board should arrange that these advisory committees have sufficient latitude to deal with cases which vary from the ordinary to a degree not provided for in the Act, and further, that they have full power to determine the acreage required by each individual settler for the successful carrying out of his operations.

I think the minister ought to take up a resolution of that kind. I quite understand he may have regulations in his department but perhaps it would be well—though I have not much faith in giving any discretion to any departmental authority—to give instructions to these advisory boards, or to his department, that the absolute regulation may be infringed when by so doing a greater service may be rendered to one of the returned men.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I may say that what is called for in that resolution is already the practice. The boards have discretion within the circumference of the statute; we have no power to give them a discretion beyond the limit of the statute itself.

Mr. HALBERT: If the hon. member (Mr. Power) who has just spoken has run out—

Mr. POWER: Oh, no, I need a rest.

Mr. HALBERT:—I rise at this time to compliment the board on the chairman that they have selected. I want to make this addition to what has been said because the chairman and myself happened to be boys together in Dufferin county; and as I have known him for some years you will realize that we are not boys any longer. The remark has been made that the chairman has not had military experience, but I can testify that he has had farming experience. He has been brought up on and has worked on a farm, and I think that experience well qualifies him for this position. In my opinion the board is extremely fortunate in having as chairman a man with the experience and ability which Mr. Black possesses. Coming as we both do from Dufferin county—which gives three members to this House at the present time, although of course they do not all represent that riding here—I am very glad to bear that testimony to him. I also want to compliment the board on the very efficient way in which they are buying the equipment for the soldiers—the harness and so on. I also wish to compliment them on being successful enough to get manufacturers to sell their goods at a better price than that at which I could buy them. Therefore I think we should not leave all the flowers until after these men are dead and then strew them on their graves.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) drew the attention of the minister to the necessity of acting carefully in granting increased loans. I am not familiar with other farm lands, but those in Ontario are high at the present time. Some fault was found with the board at the commencement of the operations on account of their having bought poor farms, but that may have been when the man was in charge whom the hon. minister says is no longer connected with the board, and practically that trouble has been done away with. I think soldiers should be started on good quality farms. The judges to pick out these lands should be experts, because it would be unfortunate to get our returned men started on poor farms.

The hon. member from Quebec South (Mr. Power) referred to farms being bought from their owners who were retiring from farming. As far as my knowledge goes, it was not farmers who were retiring who were selling their farms, but rather farmers who were on small farms and were desirous of buying larger farms, and therefore they were glad to sell their farms to the board. The reason I draw attention to the price of land being high in Ontario, and to the subject of advancing more money for the purchase of such land, is that I believe we shall find the price of farm lands depreciate, as well as the price of stock, and the depreciation might eventually reach the point that, if the land was bought at too high a price the depreciation would eventually eat up the money the returned man had put into his farm. I agree with the member for Red Deer that although those men may have to work as hard as our fathers did, it will give them a stiff upper lip and no doubt make better men of them.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think we can well leave soldier settlement in the hands of the board when we have as its chairman the capable man who is now occupying that position.

Mr. DAVIS: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that neither the minister nor the chairman of the board need any assurance from me of my interest in the work they are doing, nor of my appreciation of it. But perhaps because of that very interest and appreciation there are a few matters that I would like to ask their special consideration of. First, I am well aware from my personal contact with many of them that a number of settlers at the present time are not in a position to go on. In some cases it is true that is due to their own fault; they did not have means when they went on the land, they exhausted their loans, and the consequence is that unless they can get seed and feed, and, in some cases, even provisions for their household, they are going to have to leave their farms for this season and make a living elsewhere. That is one matter that will require attention in the West this spring. These men in some cases are anxious to secure loans for seed from the municipalities, and generally our western municipalities are ready to make the necessary provision, but it will be understood that if one or two men who are not suitable are among the number of men requiring assistance the municipality is not anxious to risk its money for them, and feels that the burden is on the Federal Government rather than on the local authorities.

Another matter that has in the past caused very considerable criticism throughout the West has been the tardiness with which settlement was made for stock and equipment purchased. I think probably that has largely been corrected, or at any rate it can be corrected by small changes in administration; but it has been quite a grievance both to the settler and to his vendor.

One other matter. I have disagreed with the chairman of the board in his choice of supervisors from amongst college men,—mainly young men. I hold the opinion very strongly that supervisors should be men of considerable age and experience, rather than very young men who have just come out of college, even though they might be able to write a better essay or pass higher in an examination on botany or some other such subject than the older practical men.

Connected with that, too, both in regard to supervisors and to inspectors of land, is what to my mind constitutes a serious weakness—that the pay is not sufficient to hold good men. I understand that the average pay of supervisors is $125 a month, and of land inspectors $150 a month. Furthermore, the latter are not engaged for the whole year, but only for the active season from probably the first of March to the first of December. For $1,300 a year you cannot get the type of man that should be employed by the board. While I mention this criticism, I would also mention this in excuse of the board, that I know they are doing their very best to keep down expenses. But since the success of this work will depend not less upon administration than upon the calibre of the men in the field, it is a poor point at which to attempt economies; and I think that you need rather to employ inspectors the year round at good salaries, and to employ supervisors who have had some experience and who can command better pay because they can give better service.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I rise to make one observation in regard to this matter. Before doing so I wish to endorse what the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Davis) has said in respect to supervisors. I think the board would be well advised to employ older men, for although these young fellows coming out of college may have the technical education, they have not the practical experience.

When the member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) rose to speak this afternoon he drew attention to the fact that he was speaking from this particular end of the Chamber, and he hastened to inform the committee that he was only here for the time being. Now, Sir, I believe if the member for Quebec South were to decide to sit with this group permanently it might be necessary for him to revise his views in some particulars. It is only a few weeks ago that the hon. member in a very able address charged the Agrarians or the farmers of this country with profiteering--at least, he tried to put them in the profiteer class. That is one thing he would have to disabuse his mind of.

When I returned to the West last fall I took occasion to meet the returned men in my constituency at a number of places, and their big criticism was the slowness with which inspections were made in Saskatchewan last year. I was informed by returned men that in some cases options that had been taken upon land expired before inspection and valuation was made. Again, in many cases inspection had not been made before the snow was on the ground, and during the winter the men were in a state of uncertainty as to whether or not they were going to get the lands. I hope the minister will see to it that this year the inspections are cleaned up early in the fall so that the men will not be kept in suspense.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I wish to refer to some remarks made by the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Davis), supplemented and supported by my hon. friend (Mr. Johnston). The criticism was that there should not be such an adherence to young men, particularly agricultural college graduates, in the selection of supervisors. The duty of the field supervisor is to visit and assist the settler periodically after he goes on the land. There would be advantage in securing older men—experienced, successful farmers—but the difficulties are twofold. First, experienced, successful farmers are not available in these times at the prices which the board are able to pay. The conditions under which farming has been carried on during the last eight years have been too favourable to make it pay for a farmer to take a position of this kind for only part of the year at $150 a month. But secondly, and more important, we have been anxious to the utmost of our ability to secure returned men. Now, we cannot as a rule take returned men as appraisers, for the reasons that I have given; consequently we are more than anxious to take them as field supervisors, and we do so take them. It is very hard to get a returned man who is anything but a fairly young man and who at the same time knows agriculture. If you are going to have a returned man, and also an agriculturist, then about the best you can select is the agricultural college graduate who is a returned man. Consequently, our field supervisors are predominatingly of that class.

The hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston) states that he has heard of cases of delay in Saskatchewan in the securing of valuations. There undoubtedly has been delay in winter. We have consistently refused to inspect land when it is under snow; I do not feel that we can do it when the land is under snow, and do it right. Consequently there is delay then, but the settler will simply have to put up with it because we cannot have winter inspections and at the same time protect the interests of the board. I do not think that there has been any general delay in summer. There may have been a few individual cases, but none of them have come to my ears until now, and the settlers are not slow to write me if there is anything wrong. The average time between application and the completion of inspection is between two and three weeks, and that is certainly not long. There were inspected in Saskatchewan last year approximately 5,600 farms, so that with the limited staff at our disposal the hon. member will see that there has been anything but lethargy in the carrying on of the work.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I have passed this information on to the minister as it came to me, but I wish to impress upon the minister that it is imperative that the inspection be cleaned up in the fall so that the men will not have to be in uncertainty during the winter months. As to the employment of returned men, my view is that returned men should be employed wherever possible, other things being equal. But I would not employ a returned man if I thought I could get a better man. I would say that in respect to the chairman of this board; I believe that he is the right man for the position, and from the fact that he is the right man there results a benefit to all returned men.

6 p.m.

Mr. CALDWELL: In New Brunswick we were able to keep up with the inspection branch of the work all right, but our trouble was to get the legal documents made out after the purchase had been made. As a member of the local branch in our province I know that recommendations were made time and again to the chairman of the board that a solicitor should be provided for each county to look up the records and get out the papers without delay after a purchase was made. In a number of cases last summer we had so much delay that we had to get authority to make agreements of sale between the board and the man from whom we were buying, pending the making out of the formal legal documents, and in that way we got the settlers on the land in time to harvest the crops; otherwise, that would have been impossible. In fact, those from whom the lands are purchased do not want to wait three months before the transfer is effected and the money is paid, and they do not feel like giving up the farm to the settler until they have something more reliable than a man's word for it that the price stated will be paid for the property. Our solicitor in New Brunswick had quite a large practice of his own, and he said that he simply did not have time to keep up with all the word. This soldier settlement work had to wait until he got his own work done,—that is, if he did not farm it out to some one else. In that respect I think some improvement might be made.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If we had a solicitor in each county the cost would be utterly indefensible, if not startling. By our system of having a solicitor in the service of the board—I think that is the case in New Brunswick—we get more expeditious results, and we have reduced the legal costs allowed to lawyers in respect of searching titles for the board from an average of $20 to $22 per title to about $4 per title. In Alberta alone we saved by that method $180,000 in eight months. We are extending the system throughout the whole Dominion.

Mr. CALDWELL: My proposal would not be to employ a solicitor in each county to devote his whole time to the work. In our province we had offers from solicitors in the different counties to take up this work at so much per deed, and I believe that the work could have been done just as cheaply in New Brunswick if we had so employed a man in each county. Several lawyers from different counties talked to me about this matter. I am not sure that you could get it done for $4 each. That looks to me very cheap, because my experience with lawyers has been that they will hardly bid you the time of day for less than that.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Soldiers' Land Settlement, $50,017,000.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we had, I believe, just terminated the discussion on this item. Shall the item carry?

Mr. POWER: Before the item carries, Mr. Chairman; I have a large number of resolutions, passed by the Great War Veterans in convention assembled, to bring to the attention of the minister. Some of these resolutions have already been discussed, but I am under the impression that owing to the fact that very important business is to come on later time will perhaps be saved were I to ask the minister to obtain through his very efficient department, copies of these resolutions and see to it that they are placed before the committee now sitting on Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. This committee, I am sure, will be in a position to deal with matters affecting the re-establishment of the soldier, as it has already dealt with the question of pensions. But before asking the minister to do this, I would like to draw his attention particularly to some of the resolutions in the hope that he will be able to settle the grievances complained of, and thus relieve the committee referred to of the necessity of bringing in any recommendations.

One of the resolutions asks that the Settlement Board make arrangements for the breaking of wild lands in any locality where there are large soldier settlements; and another recommends that all leased lands be re-inspected and re-classified immediately, and that such inspection be conducted by experts other than branch inspectors. There are a number of others with reference to waste land; and one in particular with reference to Dominion lands which recommends that service in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces be held equivalent to residence and duty done irrespective of whether the entry was made prior or subsequent to enlistment. As I said before, it may not, perhaps, serve any useful purpose to take up the time of the House with this matter, but there is no doubt that the soldiers appear to have a real grievance, and this grievance should receive a hearing from some authority. The best possible body at present constituted for that purpose is the Committee of Re-establishment.

Before closing, however, I would like to make this statement,—that though it is rather early to unduly criticize the whole policy of re-establishment, it does seem to me that if this is intended to be a policy of colonization, in the old provinces at any rate, it has failed of its purpose, inasmuch as old farms are being taken up by new settlers who may or may not make agricultural experts, and so for the time during which greater production is needed that greater production will not be obtained. If this scheme is intended for re-establishment of our soldiers, it sins in this respect, that we are re-establishing one class of soldiers at the expense of all the other classes. On the principle of giving equal justice to all the Government should make some provision whereby other soldiers will also be enabled to re-establish themselves.

Mr. McISAAC: Mr. Chairman, when we take into account the magnitude of this undertaking, the very large amount of money involved, and the great number of soldiers to be dealt with, and, further, when we consider that the whole matter is new and that the minister and his associates have had nothing to guide them in working out this intricate problem, it appears to me that he and the board of management are entitled to the greatest possible commendation.

From every point of view the report presented to this committee is admirable. I can scarcely permit the occasion to pass without making a brief reference to the province from which I come—Prince Edward Island, and to express my gratification at the excellent showing that this small province—the smallest in Confederation — has made. According to the report 234 settlements were made, which is a very large number in proportion to the total population of the province. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but the high average value per acre of the lands appropriated for settlement in that province, over $22 is most gratifying, it being the third highest, British Columbia coming first and Alberta second. Another very agreeable fact is that among these 234 soldiers who were settled on the Island only one failed to make good, which is a very pleasant feature indeed.

On the whole, then, when we consider this question in all its phases,—the enormous amount of money involved and the magnitude of the work—and when we contrast the intricacy of the problems to be solved with the marked success that has attended the solution of those problems by the minister and his board of management, and especially by the chairman of that board, I say again, Mr. Chairman, that all concerned are deserving of the highest praise.

Mr. MacNUTT: I want to take this opportunity of putting in a good word for the chairman of the Soldiers' Settlement Board, Doctor Black. I have had a good deal of correspondence with him and numerous conversations, and I know him to be perfectly efficient, and that his heart is in the work. Why he was appointed rather than a returned soldier I cannot say, but possibly at the time there was no sufficiently qualified returned soldier available. I can say, however, from my experience of Dr. Black that he was a good choice; he is doing his work well and, I think, in the interests of the soldiers. I understand that about 90 per cent of the officials of the board are returned soldiers, which is a very fair showing.

There have been, however, some defects in local administration. I take a good deal of interest in the work of the board, and last fall I spent several weeks in order to ascertain how the Soldiers' Settlement Act was working out in practice. I found very few complaints of wrong valuations (there were some, of course); but there were numerous complaints of delays in land valuation and stock inspection. Delays in land valuation have already been dealt with this afternoon, and I need only add that I know of cases where the applications were approved in the middle of the summer or even earlier, but inspections were not made, and, of course, when the snow came those inspections were hung up until the following spring. Now, it seems to me that in many cases this delay was entirely inexcusable. A few weeks should be all that is necessary between the time of the application being approved and the inspection being made. Those soldiers whose inspections were delayed have had to wait until spring, not only for the valuation of the land, but if that is approved, for the valuation of the stock, and that means that they are losing a year. I am speaking, of course, of men who want to buy improved farms.

There are two classes of inspection: Land valuating, and stock and implement inspection. A good land man may not be a good stock man; and the converse may be the case. I think, though, that wherever possible the duties should be combined, and that when a man makes a valuation of the land, if he is a capable man, he should also make an inspection of the stock and implements. But in any event, there is no reason why stock and implement inspection should be delayed on account of the snow. I found a large number of men whose land had been inspected did not know what to do—they were losing options in stock and good markets, and were very much discontented. I took the matter up at Regina, and a very good land valuator was authorized, who, however, at that time had no authority to inspect stock and implements, although he was a first-class man at this work. He was called into Regina and given instructions to go over the district I am speaking about—my own constituency—and as I kept in touch with him and also with the returned men by phone and otherwise, I found that he was doing good work. He had had sixty or seventy cases to start with. The men were waiting for an inspection which could have been made considerably earlier. However, most of these cases have been dealt with, and there has been a great improvement along this line which I hope will continue. This plan for the settlement of soldiers upon the land is a good one if you get the right men on the right kind of land and deal with them in a proper way. But you must give them a good start; if they get a bad start it will be hard for them to make up. They have a good deal on their shoulders, but after all they are called upon to pay an interest rate of only a little more than seven per cent on the cost of the land which covers principal as well. If a man went to a loan company he would probably have to pay eight per cent or thereabouts simply for the use of the money. I do think, however, that in the matter of repayment, the amounts allowed for stock and implements should, if possible, be put on the same basis as amounts allowed for land. Of course, the amount is amortized for four years, the first two years without interest. But even so, the first few years are going to be most difficult for the settler. I know that the whole thing has to be done on business lines, but in any case the land is responsible for the whole debt incurred by the settler when he takes advantage of this loan together with the stock and implements. Moreover, the land would increase in value as time went on, and the Government would still have good security. The suggestion that the amounts which are expended upon the purchase of stock and implements should be included with the land payments is one which I think is well worthy of consideration, in the general interests of soldier settlement. As to the defects of local administration to which I have referred, I believe that the machinery is now runing more smoothly under the chairmanship of Dr. Black, who has kept in touch with matters of this kind, and I am satisfied that the plan will work well in the future.

Mr. MORPHY: So many uniformly delightful things have been said to-day about the administration of this department that a changed condition has been brought about in this Chamber. It is rather pleasing to me, as one who has had a good deal to do with individual cases before the Soldiers' Settlement Board, to find that my experience has been the general experience of all those who have spoken and who have had dealings with the board. It is true that the encomiums have come largely from friends of the third or Agrarian party, and from this side of the House. Whether it is because these hon. gentlemen have taken a keener interest in the welfare of the soldier than hon. gentlemen opposite, I do not know; but it struck me as rather peculiar that all the commendatory remarks had come from these two sides of the House. They have come, I believe, from the sincerity of the hearts of those who have had to do with the board. My mind reverts to the time when this board was being formed. All kinds of predictions of disaster were made; the Government were entering it was said, upon a ruinous undertaking the end of which no man knew. The country would be impoverished; the soldier would fall down in the undertaking and leave his debts unpaid; there would be a great financial loss all round. It is rather pleasing to know now from the minister that the scheme has been well thought out and that to-day we have fifteen or sixteen thousand returned soldiers on the land, practically all making good—so good that already some of them have been able to pay back to the Government, long before the repayment was required, the money that was advanced to them. This is a hopeful sign, because it will operate as an incentive to those who have yet to take up land under the soldier settlement scheme. So that we have launched upon the sea of Canadian life a scheme which goes to re-establish the soldier, to put him upon his feet, to enable him to make a first-class living for himself, and which also ensures to the consumers of the country a vastly greater production than would have been the case had this plan not been adopted. In this early period of reconstruction it is pleasing to find this branch of soldier settlement and re-establishment meeting with a great measure of success. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) who would have had to take the responsibility for failure, is entitled to the credit for the success of the scheme, and so far as it has been a success I join with other hon. gentlemen who have congratulated him. But the thing that struck me more than anything else in my dealing with the board was the manner in which the service outside of Ottawa—in Toronto, for instance—was carried on. A great deal of credit is due to Dr. Black for having followed the example of the minister in getting round him a good staff and in prosecuting the work outside of what we might call headquarters. The executive in Toronto are up-to-date, business-like, prompt, courteous, and altogether alive to the work that they have to do. I congratulate Dr. Black on his services and on the services of those whom he has seen fit to bring into the country's service under him. I have great pleasure in giving this testimony, based, as it is, upon my own personal experience.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I desire to make some remarks later anent the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Power) and also as to some suggestions made by the member for Saltcoats (Mr. MacNutt), but as the House expects another matter of importance to go on to-night which cannot be deferred much longer, I beg to move, in accordance with the suggestion of the Acting Prime Minister, that the committee rise, report progress and beg leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to; progress reported.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

On the motion of Sir George Foster the House returned to the order of motions.

Mr. HUME CRONYN (London): I beg to move:

That the first report of the Special Committee appointed to enquire into the matter of the development in Canada of scientific research be now considered and that the recommendations thereof be commended to the consideration of the Government.

It is not uncommon when a member of the House rises to introduce a resolution of this type to hear him state that the matter is one of prime importance, nor is it hard to understand such a declaration, because if the matter at issue did not in the mind of the mover seem to be important he doubtless would have hesitated to bring it to the attention of the House. When, therefore, by way of introduction, I assert my belief that the resolution and the report it seeks to confirm are of importance to the country, I am but affirming my pronounced conviction on that point. Doubtless matters already debated in the House, and to be debated, are rightly classed as important, but I doubt if there be one whose influence, if carried to conclusion, would be as widespread and enduring, at least to the material prosperity of Canada, as that dealing with scientific industrial research. I therefore crave a hearing and consideration from the members to the remarks that may follow in this debate, as I am above all anxious that Parliament and the country shall understand the recommendations of the committee. My part of the task will be to co-ordinate the report made at the spring session of last year with the present report, as the latter is the logical outcome of what previously occurred.

Let me go back for a moment to review what has happened. Some three years ago under the terms of an Act passed by this Parliament an Honourary Advisory Council was appointed to survey the present situation in this respect and to report thereon. After very carefully considering the matter and making numerous and widespread inquiries, consulting those both here and abroad best fitted to express an opinion, the council reached the conclusion that scientific industrial research was worthy of support by this Dominion, and that such support could most effectively be applied by the foundation of a central research institute in or near the capital of the country. For more extended reference to these reports I would direct the House to the reports of the administrative chairman of the council which have from time to time been laid on the Table. During the spring session of last year a Select Parliamentary Committee was appointed to inquire into the whole matter and I would ask leave to read one or two extracts from their report:

Upon consideration of the whole question, your committee beg to report that scientific research in Canada requires and deserves generous encouragement and financial support from the Dominion Government. In no better way can the natural resources of our country be made available with the same degree of celerity and certainty, nor can our native industries achieve their proper position in the markets of the world unless given the advantages accruing from scientific research and discovery.

Your committee feel that the time has arrived when further steps must be taken and additional financial support be available if this country desires to make a proper use of its potential assets and to attain or maintain its standing in the commonwealth of nations.

The attention of your committee has been directed to the fact that there does not exist in this country any institution corresponding to the Bureau of Standards at Washington. As a result, Canada is dependent on the neighbouring republic or on other countries for information and guidance in matters which vitally concern her industries. A study of the evidence submitted will convince any impartial student of the weakness of our position in this regard and of the need for a speedy remedy. Your committee, therefore, recommend to the consideration of the Government the establishment of a Dominion Bureau of Standards.

While your committee, as above stated, are unanimous as to the need of co-operation and national support of scientific research, yet a majority of its members, owing to the lack of time and pressure of other parliamentary duties, feel they have been unable to so consider and digest the evidence adduced and the other material brought to their attention as to advise the House at this time what may be the best method of aiding and encouraging scientific research throughout Canada.

These extracts are from the report of the committee of a year ago. The committee appointed this session has given consideration to the question raised by the former committee, and the report which has just been tabled shows the findings of the committee in that respect. As, possibly, that report has not been read by most of the members present I might make a short review of its contents.

After reciting the situation in somewhat the same language that I have just used the report goes on record as follows:

The urgency of action to be taken to establish a National Research Institute to promote scientific and industrial research in Canada is patent to all who know what is being done abroad in this line.

There is in Canada no organization which even distantly approaches the character of any of the research institutes established abroad or now being established.

The report then states what is being done, what has been done, and what is about to be done, in this matter, by countries like Great Britain, the United States, Japan, and other overseas Dominions. It goes on:

It is evident, therefore, that Canada, to meet the international competition which the work of these laboratories will serve to accentuate very greatly, must have a National Research Institute, which will place at the command of the country all the resources of science and further the development of the natural wealth of the country to meet the huge burden of debt imposed by the war. The developed wealth of Canada as compared with that of the United States is small. If the natural resources of the Dominions were appropriately utilized, its developed wealth might readily be as much as ten times what it is now. The conversion of our natural resources into developed wealth, however, can only be accomplished through the application to them of science of the most highly advanced type.

One example is given, among many, of what it is hoped may be accomplished by scientific research, and it would be easy to instance others of equal importance. The report then states:

Your Committee believe the first step towards providing for the research required is the establishment of a National Research Institute whose functions will be to carry on researches, not only parallel to those of the Bureau of Standards at Washington, but such also as will assist in the development of the natural resources of the country and will promote the application of the most advanced scientific knowledge to all lines of industrial production in Canada.

The report then sets forth just what work such an institution would undertake. I do not propose to read that portion of the report verbatim, but in general terms I might explain that the functions of such an institute will be in the main of two kinds. In the first place it will be charged with the standardization of measures throughout the country, including in that term (a) standards of length, volume, weight, etc., of heat, light, electricity and other forms of energy; (b) of scientific and technical apparatus whether used in the public service or in the industries of the country; and (c) of the quality of the materials required in the construction of public works and of the supplies needed in the various branches of the Government service.

The second function of the institute will be to direct and supervise researches into technical processes and methods so as to assist, first, in the development of the natural resources of Canada; second, in the expansion of existing industries or the furthering of new industries; third, in utilization of those materials which have hitherto been discarded as waste products. To put it shortly, the institute is not only to be a bureau of standards in the narrower significance of the term, but it will as well undertake the supervision of scientific industrial research for the benefit of the country at large.

The methods to be followed in the fulfilment of the latter part of the programme will be in the main those already adopted by Great Britain and the United States. An endeavour will be made—nor do I see any reason why it should fail—to form in this country trade associations or, as it is proposed to call them, trade guilds, for research. That is to say, the industries scattered throughout the land that are interested in some form of activity will be brought together, and through their joint efforts and subscription a competent scientific investigator or research expert will be selected and his salary paid by the guild. This man and his assistants will be allotted a properly equipped laboratory in the governmental central research institute where he will find at his disposal not merely the various mechanical and physical appliances with which the institute will be furnished, but as well the skilled experience and advice of the Government experts in charge of the institute. As I have stated, the plan outlined is that already followed in Great Britain and the United States. In the former country indeed the government is inclined to deal more liberally with the industries than our plan suggests because under the plan adopted by Great Britain, there is supplied out of the public funds to trade associations for research an equal amount to any sum which these associations can themselves raise. The report concludes with the following recommendation:

Your Committee accordingly recommend:

(1) that a National Research Institute for Canada, endowed with the function and of the character indicated in the foregoing, be established in the vicinity of Ottawa on a site fifty acres in area of easy access and conveniently located for water, gas and electric power supply.

(2) that the first building to be erected for the Institute should be of the best modern construction suitable for laboratory work and of such dimensions as to provide accommodation for some years to come.

(3) that there be appropriated by Parliament $500,000 for the purchase of the site and the construction of the building, $100,000 for the scientific equipment of the Institute, and $50,000 for salaries and maintenance during the first year of operation.

(4) that legislation be enacted at this session to provide for the establishment of this National Research Institute and the government of the same.

I do not propose to discuss clause by clause these recommendations, but lest the sums mentioned might at first blush appear large, let us say to our Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), particularly in view of the need for stringent economy recognised and adopted by the Government, permit me to say that these figures were not reached without mature consideration. They are based in the first place on the information given to the committee last year by the director of the Bureau of Standards in the United States, and, taking into account the increased cost of building material, they practically agree with the initial expenditure made in Washington some twenty years ago for the same purpose. The figures are further confirmed by the plans and estimates prepared by a competent architect and by the judgment of those whose knowledge of such matters can be relied upon. It may be pointed out that the expenditure of the amounts mentioned must of necessity be spread over a term of years. It will be quite impossible to erect the building required and instal the equipment within the present financial year. So far as the item for salaries and maintenance is concerned, the greater part of it must remain in abeyance until the institute is completed and is actually in operation. It is believed by the committee that the expenditure proposed will provide for the requirements of scientific research in Canada for some years to come, and it is our opinion that it would be shortsighted to make the common mistake of failing to recognize the inevitable expansion which must take place in a movement of this kind.

May I note in passing that one of the distinguished witnesses who appeared before the committee last year namely, Professor McLennan of Toronto, expressed disappointment at the meagreness of the budget which this committee has suggested and contrasted it disadvantageously with the infinitely more liberal provisions which the British Government has made for the same purpose since the war.

I do not propose to discuss at this stage any of the alternative suggestions which have come before the committee. They were earnestly considered and much of the testimony introduced last year bore directly on the point. The conclusion of the committee was definite, that the plan now recommended is undoubtedly the best; but I do not wish to be understood as saying that in future some qualifications of this plan may not be wise. So far as one can see, a central research institute will always be a necessity, although as in other departments there must, and I should think would be, a natural growth. If in the course of the debate questions arise in regard to alternative proposals, doubtless they can be dealt with by other speakers, or I shall be happy to take them up when I have an opportunity of closing the debate.

As before stated, the committee during last session heard evidence of a number of expert witnesses both from this country and from the neighbouring republic. These men were experts, some of whom had spent their entire lives in scientific research. While that testimony and reference to such works as are available on the subject convinced me personally of the wisdom of the proposal, it seemed wise to make a personal investigation so that I could look more closely into the actual working of institutions similar to the one proposed. With that end in view I took advantage of the late Easter vacation to pay a visit to Washington to see the Bureau of Standards, and to Pittsburgh to examine the Mellon Institute; and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like briefly to repeat the impressions gained by that visit, impressions which have already been conveyed to the committee.

The Bureau of Standards is situated a few miles out of Washington close to the electric line, in the centre of what has become a well-settled residential district. The purchase made twenty years ago was of eight acres. Since that time other portions surrounding the original area have been bought and the total holding is now 36 acres. This area is considered too small for the needs of the bureau, but unfortunately the territory surrounding it has been largely built up and the price of land has reached an extraordinarily high level. The original building is encircled by others of larger dimensions which are devoted to the ever-growing needs of the Bureau, and during the war the United States Government erected a building larger than any of those that had previously gone up. This was intended to be used for some specific war purpose but it had not been occupied at the time the Armistice was signed and the President of the United States thereupon handed it over to the Bureau. The building is of the finest factory construction, of steel and reinforced concrete and with maximum window space. It cost in the neighbourhood of $1,000,000. It has been dedicated by the Bureau of Standards to Scientific Industrial Research and the greater part of it is already occupied by various industries or associations with a view to solving their problems—problems which constantly confront all those in the modern industrial world.

The annual estimates of the Bureau, which were considered a few weeks ago, are over $2,000,000 a year. It is true that there is some disposition this year on the part of the Houses of Congress, owing to the nearness of the presidential election, to exercise a sporadic economy by lopping off a certain amount of these estimates, but it is not thought that the activities of the Bureau will be seriously prejudiced by what, after all, is a temporary political movement. The original function of the Bureau was to determine standards throughout the United States. If we change but one word in the report now before the House—that is delete the word "Canada"—we have a complete description of the activities of the Bureau on its standards side. I do not propose to read a list of these activities to you. I think I have discussed them in speaking of our own institute, but among them I might mention that the Bureau tests everything purchased by the Government; indeed, it goes farther and at the request of the various departments, it prepares specifications of all important materials which are to be purchased for the use of the public service. One or two instances of this kind might be illuminating. The American Government desired to purchase incandescent lamps. Upon investigation by the Bureau it was found that the lamp supplied by the lowest tenderer was deficient in certain qualities. As a result of this inquiry the Bureau definitely established a type of lamp which would give the maximum of light and the greatest length of service. What happened? The wide-awake manufacturers in the United States were only too glad to supply that type of lamp and to secure from the Bureau a certificate as to their quality.

Again, the Government there required, as we do in this country, vast quantities of paper for use in the public service. The usual specification set out the materials that the paper should consist of. But when the first shipment came in the Bureau found that the paper supplied lacked entirely one of the necessary ingredients. In this case the manufacturer candidly admitted that he had not tried to live up to the specification because he never dreamed that such a test would be made. He prepared himself at once to give exactly what the Government needed and called for.

The Bureau of Standards investigated on behalf of the Government, the question of storage batteries. They found, as a result of their scientific research into the question, that without expense the ordinary type of battery could be improved by at least ten per cent. The manufacturers, of course, were glad to adopt that improvement and it is now general throughout the whole country. When we consider that $100,000,000 worth of these batteries are each year sold throughout the country, it is perhaps not unfair to credit the Bureau of Standards with a saving to the country of something akin to $10,000,000. As a matter of record that research is still going on in the Bureau and the expert in charge is reasonably hopeful that he may improve the ordinary storage battery by at least 25 per cent over the one found on the commercial market.

With reference to the matter of testing materials supplied to the Government, one can understand the vast quantity of articles like cement, steel, brick and so forth that are used in that country and the statement is made by the officers of the Bureau that the saving of the Government on that one item alone is sufficient to pay the entire cost of the maintenance of the Bureau. Any manufacturer in the United States is at liberty to submit his wares to be tested at the Bureau of Standards and to receive an official certificate as to their quality. I think we can understand how rapidly improvements along many lines must follow because of this rule. Indeed, some Canadian firms are alive to the advantage and so far have been permitted to submit their goods to the tests of the Bureau of Standards at Washington.

Let me revert for a moment again to the question of paper. The Bureau has installed in one of the buildings a small paper mill and there it manufactures paper for all ordinary uses from the most unpromising material. The Bureau tests the ropes used in the navy, and it also tests the twine used in the various departments. It accumulates thus a great quantity of samples, and instead of throwing these away or selling them to the ragman it converts them into paper. I have a sample of the wrapping paper used by the Government and made from manila rope. Certainly, to any one handling it, it seems to be a first-class article of its kind. They have also made paper out of stranger material than that, because I have a sample of paper made from the banana stalks of plants grown in Siam, made at the request of the representative of Siam. That paper might be very well used for various purposes, such as wrapping fruit, as it has a silky quality. There is also a paper made from a wild grass that grows in that same country—grass which to my mind is precisely like that which grows very freely in the marshes of our western provinces.

There is even a further extension of the standard side of this Bureau because the acceptance of the word "standard" has been enlarged to include standards of practice, and, following that line, standards of safety have been developed, and in co-operation with various states of the Union and municipalities these have been largely accepted throughout the whole Republic. I have under my hand one of the safety codes of standards adopted by the Bureau. It is dated 1916, and is called "The National Electric Safety Code." Now it is said, but I cannot vouch for it, that each year in the United States approximately 1,000 people meet their death by accident with electric appliances. If the use of this code, which sets out in great detail all the necessary precautions which should be taken, is adopted by the States in framing their legislation, or by the municipalities in framing their regulations, so wanton a loss of life may largely be avoided. I note that in the introduction of this code the following paragraph appears:

> The bureau has had the cordial co-operation and assistance of many state industrial and public-service commissions, municipal electrical inspectors, engineers of operating and manufacturing companies, committees of engineering societies, and representatives of the fire and casualty insurance interests, and of the electrical workers. Without such co-operation the work would have been impossible.

Similar codes dealing with the various uses of gas, with fire prevention and fire-resisting construction have been published and many others are under way. So much for the standard side of the Bureau.

Last year when Dr. Stratton, director of the Bureau, appeared before our committee, he told us something of the industrial research which was carried on in that institution. I must confess, I was greatly impressed by the very active development which has occurred along that line. This, in part, is due to the acquisition of the new building to which reference has already been made, but also in part it is due to the general recognition throughout the United States of the immense value to the country of concerted effort in scientific research. There is established at Washington a National Research Council, which, although not a governmental institution, acts in close co-operation with the various scientific departments of the government. One of its main activities is to educate industries throughout the country as to what may be accomplished by scientific research, and to counsel, by personal addresses and printed matter, through its energetic secretary and other officers, all those who might be interested. As a result there is brought prominently before the public the full meaning and significance of the movement. It should not be surprising, therefore, that full advantage has been taken of the facilities offered by the Bureau of Standards, as the industries are free to bring their problems to the Bureau and to have them investigated with the aid of the best material, both physical and mental, which the country can supply. Experience has shown that even bitter rivals in their particular line find the value of co-operation; and we were given ocular demonstration of tests being made of various methods to demonstrate which was the most effective and economical.

The Mellon Institute of Pittsburg is a pioneer institution in purely industrial scientific research. While its building was erected and its overhead expense of $60,000 a year is supplied through the munificence of the Mellon Bros., the institution itself is conducted on a commercial basis, i.e., the parties desirous of taking advantage of its facilities must pay a fixed sum for a year or term of years. The discoveries made by means of the research accrue to the subscriber—or donor as he is termed—although as a rule liberal rewards by way of bonus are granted to the investigator who produces the result. The most striking testimony to the success of the institution is found in the fact that not only is every square foot of their large building occupied, but there is a waiting list of considerable length of those who are desirous of taking advantage of the institution. The institution has published a list of the researches undertaken by it during the past year. These are forty-eight in number, and I would like to mention a few of them to show how varied are the matters inquired into. The first one mentioned is window-glass, the next soap, then dental products, copper, oil, yeast—for which $15,000 is paid for investigation and there is a separate one for bread involving a payment of $10,000 per annum—household utilities, fuel, by-products recovery, insecticides—which has been in existence for some years—fertilizer, laundry—in connection with this we met two young lady scientists who had been in charge of the work for some time—and the last on the list is fruit beverages—hon. gentlemen will see they were anticipating the arid spell which has fallen on the United States. I have quoted at some length from the results of this visit, not because the institutions are American, but because they are nearby and are in line with those we desire to adopt.

It seemed well to give to the House the above sketch of the result of a trip taken with the sole view of ascertaining what could be learned of the actual operation and results of institutions similar to the one suggested for Canada. Many of us, Mr. Speaker, possess in imagination, far up the broad river of Time, an Island of Long Ago. To us it appears a delectable land where life had more of content and leisure than we can expect to gain this side of the grave. I suspect, however, that the mists of the past hide from us most of what was objectionable in that far-off region. H G. Wells may well be right when he exclaims:

> "That large, naked, virtuous, pink natural man, drinking pure spring water, eating the fruits of the earth, and living to 90 in the open air, is a fantasy; he never was nor will be. . . . The real savage is a nest of parasites within and without; he smells, he rots, he starves."

Whatever may be the truth in this respect is but a matter of academic interest, for the world has definitely turned its steps into the highway of national progress. As this morning's paper puts it:

> Do you really want the "good old days" when there were no Pullmans, fast trains, anaesthetics, telephones, bicycles, automobiles, moving pictures, self-binders, hay-loaders, cream-separators, phonographs, cold storage, plate glass, gas cooking ranges, incandescent lights, aeroplanes, elevators, fast ocean liners, X-ray photography, typewriters, adding machines, cash registers, asphalt, microscopes, telescopes, linotypes, high-speed presses, and automatic machines in almost every branch of endeavour? Think it over. Have these things not added something to the measure of human happiness?

If we were to examine the above heterogeneous list or any other which might be compiled we would discover that without science not a single one of the many articles mentioned would be in existence. The world, as I say, has determined on "Progress," as its motto. Other nations are moving forward. Can we in Canada afford to neglect the systematic study of the greatest aid to advancement? Assuredly unless we make the effort we shall be left behind.

I am glad to believe that neither business life nor, what is perhaps more trying, political experience, has wholly atrophied my faculty of imagination—one need not, in a country such as ours, give even free rein to this faculty to visualize the possibilities which may be disclosed by concerted effort in scientific research. While, however, I may have exercised my imagination I have, nevertheless, endeavoured throughout the inquiry to look at this matter from a cold-blooded business point of view. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that from that point alone the establishment of a Central Research Institute will be a paying venture. Had I the resources at my disposal I would conceive it to be a thoroughly sound and profitable investment, provided the value of the discoveries and improvements made by means of such an institute could accrue to my personal advantage.

I have attempted, Mr. Speaker, to refrain from repetition of what I said on this subject nearly a year ago. On that occasion I made the endeavour to cover a wider field; but while the temptation was pressing, I hoped that those hon. members who are interested in the subject might remember something of what was then said and would quite properly resent the threshing of old straw. I do venture, however, once more, to repeat that the need of such an institute is pressing, that the rewards to the country will be great, and that the expenditure proposed is, in my opinion, amply justified.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of seconding the motion which has been so well proposed by the chairman of this Research Committee, my hon. friend from London (Mr. Cronyn). I think you will agree with me after hearing what he has said that the committee appointed by the House has not followed this inquiry in any haphazard way. Both last session and this session, but particularly last session, the committee had the privilege of hearing distinguished scientists on various questions which it desired to consider in connection with the Institute of Research.

Pioneering is, of course, expensive in all industries, and the committee has had the benefit of the experience gained in European countries and in the United States with regard to the Bureau of Standards and the Institute of Research. I am satisfied that if our country is to take its proper place in the industrial world both of these institutions are necessities for Canada in an industrial sense.

Probably at no period in the history of man has it been easier to demonstrate the value of applied science than it is to-day. The late war has amply shown us what science can do in the field; and the industrial progress of the great nations to-day shows us what the application of science is doing in connection with the industries of the world. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that that nation which is best equipped with scientific knowledge, scientific apparatus, and scientific institutions will, in the future, have the best chance in the race for industrial supremacy or, indeed, in that of war.

Canada is rich in natural resources—immensely rich; but in order to transmute these resources into commodities which the world needs one thing particularly is required, and that is applied science. Industry you must have—you must have the intelligent artisan; you must have people in the country who have faith enough in its future to put their capital into manufacturing enterprises; but without science that labour and those manufacturing enterprises would not go very far.

My hon. friend (Mr. Cronyn) has given you very clearly the objects which the committee had in mind in recommending that a Bureau of Standards be established, and in conjunction with it an Institute for Scientific Research. I shall not traverse again the ground that he so well covered, but I would like to refer to just one or two items, particularly in connection with the Bureau of Standards. Take for instance, Mr. Speaker, our unit of measurement, the yard. It had its origin in the mists of antiquity, came across the Channel with the Anglo-Saxons, and now the representative of that system is lying somewhere in the archives of the city of London in the shape of a metal bar of a certain length. In 1870 the French people decided to create a new unit of measurement, and they took a section of a quadrant of the circumference of the earth and called it a metre. It was not very many years before the scientific men of their country discovered that the metre was not scientifically accurate. Since then scientists have discovered a means whereby a measurement can be adopted which is universal and never-changing—the wave of light; and I have no doubt that within the next few years that will be the standard of measurement for length. So I might refer to the unit for the measure of volume and other units of measurement, but I will not detain the House in regard to them.

My hon. friend has referred to the testing of building material—a very excellent thing for us to have to-day—in connection with our public works—in order to ascertain the strength and quality of such materials. I do not think our Government have any means at the present time of making such tests.

With regard to research, it is well known that we have huge areas of tar sands in the northern and western portions of our Prairie Provinces. They have been there for millions of years; they will be there for millions of years longer unless we can discover some means of taking from them their asphaltic products and transferring them to the markets of the world. There is therefore a great field for research in relation to those tar sands. So too with iron ore. We were told here the other day that the higher grades of iron ores are being depleted and that soon we shall have to depend on the low grade ores of Canada—another field for scientific research.

We are about to enter the world as an exporting trade nation, and it is absolutely necessary that our goods when exported should bear the hallmark of quality; otherwise these three transcontinental roads we have built and these great merchant ships we are putting on the oceans of the world will not carry the cargoes from our shores that they should carry. Therefore I hope that when this Bureau of Standards is established in Ottawa every ton of goods leaving Canada will bear the stamp of that Bureau which will mean Canadian quality of the first class.

I was interested a few days ago to meet a man who told me that our greatest competitors in the sale of wheat in the Liverpool market were the Russians. He informed me that the Russian wheat was sold in Liverpool by sample; the Canadian wheat was sold by standard. And it was easier to sell the Canadian wheat, and it brought a little better price.

In this great province of Ontario, Mr. Speaker, there is not one ton of coal—hard coal, soft coal or lignites; and to-day when coal prices are pressing so heavily upon us it is very important, and it will become increasingly important, to find relief from this burden. We have billions of tons of coal east of us, and we have billions of tons of coal west of us, but in this the greatest province, the richest province, the most populous province, there is not one ton of coal. Now, underlying the western provinces there are billions of tons of lignite, which, our scientists tell us, can be transformed into coal almost equal to the Pennsylvania anthracite coal,—and that coal is within our own country. What an excellent thing it would be if the money that we are now sending, and will send, to the United States for hard coal could be kept within Canada; could be used in the purchase of the anthracite which now lies beneath our western prairies. I have no doubt that within a few years this will take place, because its practicability has already been demonstrated.

Potash is one of the things which we must have if we are to continue as an agricultural nation. Potash is one of the great things which made it possible for Germany to raise the field products which she raised. Immense salt deposits have recently been discovered in Nova Scotia, and there are other salt deposits throughout Canada. There is some potash in these salt deposits. It is possible, therefore, that we shall be able to develop the potash industry within our own country.

Electric smelting is only in its infancy. If it were possible to harness the great water-powers of our country and smelt the iron ores to which I referred a few minutes ago, we would keep more than one hundred million dollars of good Canadian money within Canada. Go down to the lumber sections of our country and you will see thousands upon thousands of tons of sawdust banked in the river valleys and wherever saw mills have been or are situated—absolutely going to waste. Now, any scientific man will tell you that that sawdust is a great potential asset; all that is required is the scientific knowledge to tackle the problem and to take from that material some of the commodities which it contains and which we could use. If we had a research institute in this country, with men, with money, and with the necessary apparatus, we could accomplish great work along this line.

The explosive engine has revolutionized traffic. Without the explosive engine you could not have automobiles; without it you could have no aerial navigation; without it no aeroplane could rise into space. But the explosive engine is almost altogether, if not entirely, dependent upon gasoline. Any person who has studied this question will tell you that, according to the opinion of scientific men of the United States, the end of the deposits of petroleum in that country is already in sight. I have not a doubt in my mind that within the lifetime of men who are now within the sound of my voice, the petroleum deposits of the United States will have become exhausted. What then? Some other fuel will have to take the place of petroleum, or gasoline, one of its products. What fuel is most likely to do that? Industrial alcohol. Here is a great field for our research institute.

The oil shales of Canada offer another field for research and experiment. Billions of tons of oil shale from which petroleum can be extracted may be found in the Maritime Provinces. Or, we have still another resource—straw, which is now being burned every year on our prairies, can be transmuted into gas which can be used for power.

We are trying to establish in this country the flax industry. Science, applied to that industry, by cultivating germs which will be placed in tanks with the flax fibre may hasten the retting process and make it possible to produce flax more cheaply, as we must do if we are to compete with the Irish and Belgian products. So with fish refuse —and I might go on indefinitely, but I shall not do so.

I wish to refer, before closing, to a few things that science has done. I shall not elaborate upon what Watt did in the development of steam; Farraday in the development of electricity; Pasteur in the application of science to the development of the silkworm industry in France, and to the destroying of a disease which killed the sheep of France many years ago. Then we have Graham Bell with the telephone and Kelvin with the compass; and we have wireless telegraphy. Not long ago an American magazine asked its readers to give them a synopsis of what they considered to be the seven wonders of the modern world. From the replies to these inquiries the following were selected as the seven wonders of the modern world: Wireless telegraphy, the telephone, the aeroplane, radium, antiseptics, antitoxins, and the seventh was divided between spectrum analysis and X-rays. All of these, Mr. Speaker, with the exception of antiseptics—even that was introduced not many decades ago—have come into being within our own lifetime.

We have heard a great deal about the paper industry; about what a wonderful thing the pulp industry is in our own country. Do you know how that industry originated? A French naturalist named Réamur was one day walking through the fields of France when he observed a wasp's nest constructed of paper and like material produced by the insects by the mastication of wood fibre and other substances. The naturalist had the imagination to see that this material could be used as paper, and from that simple observation has arisen the whole pulp industry of the world. This gives you a slight idea, Mr. Speaker, of the possibilities of science.

Then, take calcium carbide, the discoverer of which, Mr. Wilson, lived for years in our city. Calcium carbide produces acetylene gas. Many parts of our coasts are lighted with acetylene gas; the miners use acetylene gas in the lamps which they carry in their hats.

A few years ago a girl in Colorado was washing some ore sacks in which ore belonging to her brother had been carried. She noticed in the soap suds some small particles of metal floating on the bubbles. She told that to a scientist; the scientist developed the idea, and to-day you have the flotation process throughout the length and breadth of this land and in the United States as well.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, permit me to quote from Buckle as to the value of science, scientific men and scientific ideas:

> The discoveries of great men never leave us; they are immortal. They contain those eternal truths which survive the shock of empires, outlive rival creeds and witness the decay of successive religions. To the discoveries of genius we owe all that we now have; they are for all ages and all times; never young, never old, they bear the seeds of their own life; they flow on in a perennial stream; they are essentially cumulative and thus influence posterity and after the lapse of centuries produce more effect than they were able to do even at the moment of their promulgation.

[Mr. A. Thompson.]

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am fully sensible of the difficulties which the subject now under discussion presents, and were it not for my desire, as a member of the committee which is now reporting to the House, to contribute in my humble way to the discussion, I should certainly have abstained from adressing the House on this occasion.

I offer my compliments to the chairman of the committee for the splendid work which he has accomplished in connection with the subject of the resolution now before the House, which, if adopted, will result in the carrying on of a work of great benefit to the country. This is a question into which politics do not enter at all. It is a question upon which every member can feel perfectly free to express his opinion. What is asked is that a national research institute be established in Canada in order to promote scientific and industrial research generally, which includes a great many subjects, as has been pointed out by the mover of the resolution (Mr. Cronyn). To the casual observer it might appear that this project is a luxury, a sport, something of purely academic interest; but such is not the case. Now the war is over we have to cope with the after-war conditions, and we must not lose sight of the fact that since the war, and even during the war, the different nations of the world have entered upon a wild race to capture the trade of the world and the predominant position in commerce. Even while the war was on and the battlefields of Europe were soaked with blood, the nations had the foresight to appreciate that immediately the war was over this race for the world's trade would be begun. The United States were in a peculiarly advantageous position in this respect, because they only entered the war in its last year practically, and thus were enabled to make preparations which the other nations that had been engaged in the war from the beginning were unable to make. From the report of the Special Committee on Scientific Research we see that Great Britain, France, Italy, the Commonwealth of Australia, New Zealand, the United States, Germany, and Japan, in fact practically all the civilized nations of the world, have recognized since the war is over, or had recognized before the war, the necessity of scientific research in promoting the trade and commerce of their respective countries. Before the war Germany perhaps more than any other nation had travelled in the fields of scientific research, and that is one of the reasons why, rightly or wrongly, she was looked upon as the land of culture. Germany had astonished the world with her marvellous inventions, and it is not too much to say that through her many inventions she had achieved the prosperity through which she was passing when she declared war on the world. Her success in invention continued through the early stages of the war, and in fact all through it. We all remember how, in the month of April, 1915, suddenly and without warning, Germany developed that great gas attack which heralded a new phase in the war. Of course, the use of gas was strictly forbidden by all the rules of war, and no civilized nation had ever attempted to use it up to that time, but the fact remains that Germany had in her possession secrets which the other nations did not possess, or at all events, not to the same extent. We all remember how when these poisonous gases were let loose on our armies, the Allies could not find out their exact composition, but immediately scientists began investigating and determined their composition, and in order to offset the unlawful advantage which Germany had thereby gained the Allies in turn were compelled to invent and manufacture new gases to be used against the German armies. They had also to invent appliances to resist the gases by which they were attacked. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where would the Allies have been at that time of perplexity if they had not had in their midst scientists and scientific institutions that could devote themselves at once to a study of these gases and devise a protection against them? Germany did other things. We know that before the war she had practically a monopoly of the incomparable dyes which she was selling to the whole civilized world. That is surprising, because one would naturally have expected England to be the place where these dyes were manufactured. In the field of war Germany also had her Zeppelins, her submarines, and that wonderful cannon with a range of 75 miles with which she bombarded Paris in the forever-famous offensive of March, 1918. All through the war Germany brought out new inventions from time to time, and these inventions were so numerous and called into being so many devices on our side in order to counteract them that General Joffre is reported to have said after leaving his army for three or six months he would not be able to lead them any more because he had not kept abreast of the many new developments in warfare.

Germany not only had marvellous inventions of destruction, but her scientific institutions were so advanced that she would have been able to capture the trade of the world had she not committed the blunder of declaring war and trying to subdue mankind by force of arms. The civilized world to-day is determined that no nation shall be allowed to repeat the attempt which Germany launched in 1914, and it is generally recognized now that if trade is to be gained it must be not through war but through peaceful methods, by the development of industries, the intensive prosecution of agriculture, and the exploitation of every resource which a progressive nation can make use of.

And this is just where the question of scientific research becomes important. We are not asking for the establishment of an institution to destroy humanity as the Germans did; we are trying to produce wealth for the benefit of the nation. I hope there will be no serious objection to the proposal now before us, but if there is it can only be in relation to the financial considerations involved. It might be argued that while the proposal is one that is well worthy of consideration there is not sufficient means to take any practical steps in the matter. Well, so far as this objection is concerned, I think every hon. member will realize that scientific research is neither a luxury nor a sport; nor is it a subject of purely academic interest. As was said a moment ago by the mover of the resolution, scientific research is a cold-blooded business proposition, and the motion which is under consideration is nothing if not extremely practical. Our public debt is enormous and we say that we do not know how we shall make ends meet; and some hon. members might conclude that as our expenditures are so high at the present time it is not advisable to give effect to the recommendations which have been made in this matter. Well, Sir, I say that the public debt is certainly enormous, and we are confronted with a great problem to provide the necessary revenue. But from the premises I draw an altogether different conclusion. If we are ever going to discharge the public debt of this country our only hope lies in the development of our natural resources This is the only way in which we shall be able to pay the huge debt we incurred during the war, and this proposed institute for scientific research, far from adding to the burdens which we already have to bear, will, I am sure, prove a valuable asset, and the benefits that will accrue from its operation will more than offset the expenditures that may be made in connection with it. The Government has recently undertaken a shipbuilding programme which is costing us something like $60,000,000. Whatever objections there may be to this undertaking, a majority of the members of this House have expressed their belief that the expenditure of this $60,000,000 on ships will be a benefit to the country. We have also acquired the property of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The debate on that subject was long, and although we on this side of the House pronounced against the transaction, nevertheless a majority of the members regarded this matter also as beneficial to the Canadian nation, and evidently they believe that the expenditure of $500,000,000 will prove a very wise one. A year or two ago Canada lent considerable sums of money to Roumania, Greece and other foreign states, and this is a matter that is open to very much debate; very diverse views may be held in regard to it; but the fact remains that the Government considered it a sound policy and one that would be advantageous to the people of Canada to lend money to those countries. I cite these stupendous undertakings in order to show that the question of money is not the most serious obstacle. The question is not: What expenses will be involved in the new institution?—but: What revenue will the country derive from its operation? A convincing answer to this question was given in the eloquent speech made by the mover of the resolution, and no one who heard that speech could fail to realize what an enormous advantage the establishment of a Scientific Research Institute must be. I shall not attempt to go into details; one could only touch a few of the multitude of questions that would arise in the consideration of this subject. This proposed institution could deal with an infinitude of matters. As an example we might take the exploitation of our coal fields, as mentioned a moment ago. At this time, when we are paying $1.10 for every dollar's worth of goods we buy in the United States, we are actually buying from that country coal to the amount of $70,000,000 a year. If through the process of scientific research we could find a way by which our soft coal in canada, of which we have an immeasureable quantity, could be utilized, if but partly, in place of the coal which we now import from the United States, through this item alone the expenditure which this new bureau might involve would be repaid tenfold.

I wish once more to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for London for the magnificent work he has done. I would not take the responsibility of saying that he has been the only man in this country who ever thought of having a Bureau of Scientific Research. Others probably have had the same idea, but he has the merit—the great merit—of being the first member of this House to take this question into his own hands, to follow it up, and to give his whole time to it. I am aware that he even went to the United States to make a personal study of the matter. The hon. member, with the knowledge and accomplishments that we all know him to possess, was convinced from the outset that such a scheme could only be beneficial to the country, and, being anxious to serve his country, he has spared neither time nor effort to accomplish what is now before the House.

I say therefore, Sir, that I hope this House will find itself unanimous on this point. I am only speaking for myself, but from what I can see my friends on this side of the House are warm on this subject and are ready to endorse it. From what I can see members on the other side of the House are ready to support the motion, and it would be a great satisfaction, I am sure, for my hon. friend from London, this House, and the country generally, if we could say to-night that the House had accepted unanimously the motion which is now under consideration.

Mr. P. McGIBBON (Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you it is not my intention to occupy the time of the House at any great length. I do think, however, that this subject is of such great importance, having occupied the time of a committee of the House for two sessions, that it might have been given a little more prominence than to be put on at an hour when the House and the galleries are practically empty. I say this in justice to a subject which has such great possibilities, when applied to the industries of the country and the country itself.

I think it is quite evident to every person that at this stage of the world's history we cannot go on as we have done in the past. We must utilize to a greater extent than ever before new methods in the application of science to the industries of this country if this country is going to prosper and carry on, with the great debt it has at the present time. If there is one thing more than another that the last few years has demonstrated it is the fact that we are living in a new age, that old methods are sent to the scrap heap, that new, better and more efficient ones have to be devised, and that in this great undertaking it is the duty of Canada to look after itself. The object of all science is the preservation and betterment of human life and fundamental science as applied to industry bears indirectly towards that end. Applying that to conditions in Canada today, if we are to provide for the enormous debt and to develop the great resources which we have in this country, it is absolutely essential that we should devise better means of manufacturing and marketing different products.

It is my intention to take up only for a few minutes some of the methods and some of the ways by which science, as applied to industry, can be beneficial. I think probably that at the outset I might not go farther afield than simply to call your attention to the invention, as a result of scientific discovery, by which this House is lighted at the present time. Today houses are lighted and heated more or less by electricity and electricity also supplies the motive power to the great industries of this country. This is but one illustration of the many ways in which our industries have been helped by the great discoveries of science.

But, as I have said, the object of all science is the preservation of human life. There is probably not a man here whose days have not been extended as a result of scientific discovery. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Thompson) has referred to the discoveries of Pasteur. He mentioned particularly the great discovery which now forms the basis of all surgery. But more than that, at the request of the French Government, Pasteur was invited to apply his knowledge to the great industries of France. The world is familiar with the services which he rendered in connection with the silk-worm industries; the perfecting of yeast by which he prevented the wines of France from becoming sour; and the eradication of splenic fever, which was depleting the sheep flocks of France. As a result of work in his laboratory he discovered remedies for every one of these troubles. The monetary result to the French nation has been estimated by a man of no less prominence than Professor Huxley as being equal to the whole indemnity that France had to pay Germany after the war of 1870. Here we have three instances of the application of scientific discoveries adding to the riches of the country.

Coming down to more recent times let us see what steps were taken to apply the inventions of science to the activities and necessities of war. It is within the knowledge of every man here that one of the great obstacles which Germany had to contend against during the early part of the war was the restricted imports of cotton and nitrates. We were told by scientists that if the British Government would stop the importation of cotton the war would end within six months. After some little time pressure was brought to bear upon the British Government and that was done, then importation of cotton was stopped. But what was the result? Germany set her scientists to work and from the pulp mills of that country they developed out of cellulose a substitute which was almost equally good and which enabled them to carry on. The same thing applies to the nitrates, which as you know, are not only useful for producing fertilizers but very useful for making explosives. After the importation of these nitrates—which came mostly from Chili—was stopped, the scientists were set to work again and they utilized the discovery made some years ago by a great scientist named Cavendish, who found that by the passing of an electrical spark through the air ammonia was formed, and by means of the application of nitric acid nitrates were obtained. No less than 600,000 horse power being developed in Norway alone was utilized for that purpose. We see at once the great results that would come from the application of this discovery to this great country of Canada, in which the demand for fertilizers is very great. We have as has been pointed out, enormous water powers in the northern parts of Ontario and Quebec and by the application of this discovery large quantities of fertilizers, could be turned out.

We also see a possible application of science to the great fishing industry in this country. Great quantities of fish offal are produced every year, and this material is practically thrown away. In that offal, it has been estimated, there are no less than $10,000,000 worth of proteid matter and oils. These waste products could be extracted and form the basis of a great industry which might be cultivated and developed in Canada. When you consider that the whole fishing industry of the Dominion only represents a value of about $40,000,000, and that the value of the waste products alone is $10,000,000, you can see how science applied to an industry of that kind may have very profitable results.

I might also instance the baking industry to show the value of scientific research. A scientist in the United States, in seeking substitutes for sugar in the yeast, made a discovery which nets one firm over there no less than half a million dollars a year, and they were so appreciative of the fact that they gave the discoverer a gratuity of no less than $35,000.

We are also told that in the perfecting of what is called the tungsten lamp we have an annual saving in electrical power of over $2,000,000,000. These are instances of discoveries which, when applied to the great industries of this country, or any country, may produce a great monetary reward.

Another example I might mention is that of the great glass industry of the United States. Potash salts were used in connection with this industry, supplies of which were obtained from Germany. When war broke out that source of supply was cut off and it was thought for a time that the industry would be paralysed. However, they got their scientists to work and very shortly they produced a substitute and the industry was able to carry on its operations.

I might go on enumerating case after case where the application of science has been, and is to-day, of very great material value to the industries of this country. Up to the present time, Canada has no research institutions—we have practically been living off the brains of the world. I hope the Government will take this fact very seriously into consideration and give to our industries the advantages that they should have in order to enable them to compete with the other industries of the world. We have great natural resources in Canada with almost unlimited possibilities. We have, for example, as has been referred to already to-night, the important pulp industry, from which has been developed your great cellulose industry. Cellulose, I might say, is the basic product in the cell structure of all vegetable life, and without it you would have no food for either animal or man. Now, it has been found that by treating our pulpwood with caustic soda, pulp is produced. That treated with sulphates and sulphites under pressure produces other material. For example, the artificial silk industry has its basis there. We find that industry producing an article which takes on very intensive dyes, and this artificial silk industry in the United States was worth last year no less than $35,000,000. The treating of cellulose with nitric acid produce nitro-cellulose compounds, which were so important to us during the war. One could go on endlessly with the discoveries in connection with different industries—discoveries which may possibly result in increasing our wealth almost beyond our dreams.

Another example I might mention is the treatment of the waste products of the sawmill and the pulp mill by utilizing an experiment which was made by a scientist many years ago. This scientist found that by treating some old linen with sulphuric acid he produced a species of sugar, and by the fermentation of that sugar we get ethyl alcohol. By using the liquor from the pulp mills and the sawdust from the sawmills, we get ethyl alcohol which sells to-day at $7 a gallon. A load of sawdust, worth only 50 or 75 cents, will yield 10 gallons of ethyl alcohol, 95 per cent in strength, and a bushel of grain,—worth, roughly speaking, $1.50—will produce about two and a quarter gallons. Hon. gentlemen will therefore see the possibilities of science when applied to any industry. I could go on for an hour giving examples of how science applied to one industry and another will produce untold wealth.

I hope that the Government will delay no longer in establishing this Research Council and providing it with thoroughly equipped buildings and adequate help. I am glad to bear witness to-night to the efficiency of the gentleman at the head of the council, who has made a world-wide reputation through research. I know personally that he has refused the presidency of no less than five universities, and was asked to put in an application for the Chair of Physiology in the great University of Glasgow. I think we are fortunate indeed in having a man of his calibre to organize and direct this Research Council. I hope the Government will support him and accord that support at once. It is only by making practical application of the discoveries made by scientists that the industries of Canada can reap the benefit of them and the country can attain its proper status among the commercial nations of the world.

Mr. H. P. WHIDDEN (Brandon): It ought not to be hard for any hon. gentleman here to support the motion for the adoption of this report. Time will not permit the mention of more than one or two of the many reasons why one is particularly interested in the proposed establishment of a Bureau of Standards and a Research Institute for the Dominion of Canada at the present time. Some Canadian people may think that the greater universities in our country should care for this work. It is not their function to do this form of work. They are not financially conditioned to provide the equipment. It is for them to furnish the researchers who will be selected, if an institute of this kind is established by the Government, and who will bring to their respective university mothers fame and distinction because of the further work which they carry on—not to show their scholastic attainments and their ability as discoverers but to show their capacity for furthering the development of the great natural resources of our country of which so much is being said in these days but for the scientific development of which so little is being done.

We are not trespassing in any way upon the field of university educational endeavour; we are doing that which Canada should do in its own interests. May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Canada will need in the next generation enough researchers to introduce the great principles of conservation in connection with the carrying out of purpose (f) as contained in the report submitted by the chairman of the committee (Mr. Cronyn). That purpose is described to be:

> Researches undertaken to promote the utilization of the waste products of industry.

Our wealth will be greatly increased if we are prepared to convert the millions of dollars' worth of waste now unreclaimed and unconserved.

The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) has said that we have been too long trusting the brains of other parts of the world for leadership in research. And yet, Mr. Speaker, Professor McLennan—a most distinguished witness before the Special Committee of last session—told us of the magnificent qualifications of graduates of our Canadian universities who assisted him, an employee of the British Government, on the war-time research work of a most important character; and as a result of the work done by him, assisted by these young researchers, practical scientific young men, the enemy was handled in a way that otherwise would have been impossible for months. It is even more important in times of peace that we should make provision for our sons, and our daughters, too, —who will be ready to become researchers and so aid the great industrial concerns of our country—to develop those resources and to conserve to the very best end possible those interests and that wealth which are within our reach and possession.

It may be that the day of the production of the outstanding and conspicuous genius is past; the discoverers, the releasers of new found principles may not be increased in numbers in the coming generation; but Canada has already demonstrated that she is capable of producing young men and women who, if given the opportunity, are abundantly able to make use of the discoveries already at hand and so to recombine them that practical results will easily be within the range of attainment.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker that we all hope that the Government will very favourably consider the report that has been submitted to us by this committee for adoption.

Mr. W. D. COWAN (Regina): Mr. Speaker, I promise you that I will be exceedingly brief—in fact, at this time of night I would not say anything at all after the very conclusive speech made by the hon. member for London (Mr. Cronyn), were it not that I feel it is advisable in the interests of our country that we rally all the support possible to the hon. member and his committee in their efforts to improve conditions in Canada.

As I see this report of the Committee of Scientific and Industrial Research, the adoption of which is moved by the member for London, the recommendation can be reduced to a very small compass indeed. They simply recommend that this Parliament establish a national brain for advising and directing that industrial expansion which we have all been so long wanting and clamouring for; they recommend that we establish a national brain for advising and directing that greater agricultural development which is so desirable; they recommend that we establish a national brain for advising and directing the development of our national resources which have been so much discussed. We have the brain power; there is no question about that. Individually we possess it; but collectively—well, we have absolutely nothing. And the purport of the proposal now is that we shall unite our people in one great national movement to secure the advantage of the brain power which our own people possess.

For the last two years particularly we have been clamouring for the development of our national resources and for the expansion of our great industries. Wherever you go you hear the same thing—on our railway trains, in our hotels, in our clubs,—no matter where it is, you hear that one demand, that we develop our national resources, and that it is absolutely necessary that we increase our foreign trade if we are to retain our economic position. But up to the present time it has always been a general demand—and that will never get us anywhere. We must get down to basic business principles; we must know what we can do, and how we are going to do it. This proposal is to reduce this one question to the concrete. This Bureau to be established will show us what we can do, and how we can do it, and will give us a means of doing it.

Now, is it necessary for us to do that? It has been suggested to-night that we cannot afford the expense; and that is probably the only objection advanced. My opinion is that we cannot afford to do without this Bureau. What are the other nations doing? As has been stated to-night, Great Britain has embarked upon this work to a very large extent, and the United States is making very great strides in the same direction. What is going to be the effect on Canadian industry? Can we afford to lag behind our competitors? That is the important question. In business matters, in production, in quality of articles produced, can we afford to lag behind our competitors? Most emphatically I say we cannot afford to do so, and if we are to be in the race at all we must provide all the latest methods available in order that we may successfully compete with the other great nations of the world.

As I said a few minutes ago, the American nation is embarking upon this work to a very large extent. They have one great National Bureau, they have one or two other Bureaus of semi-public nature, and a great many of their industries have established research departments in connection with their various businesses. What does it mean? It means that all of those industrial establishments not only are going to be our most active competitors, but are going to have an effect upon Canada to a much greater extent than the industries of the United States have ever had before. One of the greatest complaints that we Canadians have is that the American industries, by reason of their excellence and their magnitude, have drained our country of our best men. American ingenuity today is largely Canadian ingenuity; American enterprise is largely Canadian enterprise. Young men who have left our farms —not driven off the farms, because no young man was ever driven off a Canadian farm—have been lured off the farms and to the country to the south by exceptional opportunities, high wages, and the chance of more congenial employment. That condition will increase as the sphere of activity in the United States increases; and unless we get busy and establish more favourable conditions in our own country, our young men will be taken away in larger numbers than heretofore. In my opinion the best kind of man who ever came into Canada was the man who was born in Canada. What we ought to do is to create conditions in Canada which will keep these young men in our own country.

In reply to any suggestion which may be made that we cannot afford to establish such an institute as is proposed, I repeat that we cannot afford to do without it. A number of instances have been given of what scientific research has accomplished in the way of producing wealth in Canada. Take one case which was spoken of in this House not very long ago, the case of Professor Saunders, who discovered a new grade of wheat. Would anybody dare to say that Professor Saunders just happened upon this new kind of wheat; that he dreamed about it one night and when he got up the next day discovered a field of wheat of a new variety? Not at all; it was the result of research and the work of his own brain. The consequence was an addition of millions of dollars to the wealth of the farmers of Canada, while he himself got practically nothing but honour. These instances could be multiplied by thousands. If such results can be accomplished individually, what would be the result of collective effort along the same line? We are simply asking that we unite these activities; that we concentrate them into one collective body; that we do as a nation what heretofore has been accomplished in the most haphazard way by individuals. We cannot afford to continue haphazard methods.

Let me give just one illustration of what is going on to-day. The member for London (Mr. Cronyn) recently conveyed to the Bureau of Standards at Washington a message which I had given him. The message was to the effect: According to reports of the Regina Board of Trade, every year millions of tons of flax are burned in our western country. You can go out in the autumn and see the flames rising up here and there all over the prairie where the farmers have set fire to their stacks of straw, including flax straw. The question was, is that flax straw of any value? My hon. friend asked the Bureau of Standards at Washington if anything could be done with it. They said to us: Send us a ton of that straw and we will see whether or not we can manufacture paper or something else out of it. Now, I like their generosity; I like their friendship; I like the spirit which prompted their suggestion. But are we Canadians to be dependent upon a foreign nation for advice and direction in such matters as that? I do not believe in depending upon my competitors for anything, no matter how friendly they may be. I am a politician, they say—a mere politician, and a mighty poor one at that—but I tell you that I would hate like sixty to depend on the ex-leader of the Opposition for such political advice as I should wish to obtain. I like him, but when it comes to that kind of advice, I do not want it from him. So we should not depend upon the United States for advice and direction in these matters. No individual ever succeeded who depended upon others for his success, and the same may be said of a nation. I sincerely hope that this House will adopt the report of the Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research and as soon as possible establish the bureau which they are asking for.

Hon. A K. MACLEAN (Halifax): After the very comprehensive and informative address made this evening by the Chairman of the Committee (Mr. Cronyn) and the several very excellent addresses given by other gentlemen who are members of the committee, little or nothing remains to be said on this subject, and I intervene for a moment simply to express my cordial support of the recommendations of the committee.

Scientific research merely means the application of intelligence to industry. If that is correct, there should be no hesitation on the part of the Government and of Parliament in accepting the recommendations of the committee. Canada is a new country. Our industries are not too firmly established; they are generally not too well-off in a financial sense, and it is only natural that they should have devoted little time and little money to scientific research or the application of science to industry. As has been stated by several hon. members, the leading countries of the world today are exceedingly aggressive in extending the application of scientific research to industry; it is eminently desirable and necessary that they should do so in order to render themselves strong competitors among the nations of the world. If Canada is to maintain the splendid position which she won during the war as a competitor in international trade, it is necessary that we make a commencement in industrial and scientific research. That start, I submit, should be made at once. While one hesitates to make any recommendation to the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) for further expenditures; still I think that hon. members need not hesitate to support the recommendation of the committee, which involves a very substantial expenditure.

The question is, by what method are we to embark upon scientific research work in Canada? This work can only be advanced in one of three ways: by private industry, by our universities, or by a central laboratory supported by the state. As has been stated by one hon. gentleman, this is hardly a field for our universities to enter into at the present time. They are not equipped for it, and any plan of that kind would probably involve the Government in the disagreeable duty of assisting a great number of universities to carry on work which might well be done by a few of them. It is too much to expect that our industries, which are relatively small and still in their formative stages, should embark in any subtantial way upon research work; so we cannot look to that source for a comprehensive and aggressive campaign. We are brought, therefore to the suggestion of the committee, namely, the creation of a central state-owned and state-operated laboratory for the carrying on of research work. In my judgment the recommendations of the committee are worthy of approval and should receive the support of the House. I do trust that the Government will see fit during the present session to ask Parliament to vote the sum of money mentioned in the committee's report. I am sure that if they do so, they will be supported by the best judgment and intelligence of this country.

Mr. MICHAEL STEELE (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, only the very great importance of this subject would seem to justify me in taking up a few minutes of the time of the House at this late hour, but at the risk of interfering with the comfort of members I wish to add to what has already been said, a few words in support of the adoption of the report of the committee which has been so ably presided over by the hon. member for London (Mr. Cronyn), and which report has been supported tonight by a number of very excellent addresses.

One of the most urgent calls to Canada to-day is to develop its vast natural resources, to reach out for the most scientific methods of using those resources in industry, and to further the utilization of the vast amount of waste products of our industries. When we begin to feel, as we have scarcely yet felt, the keen pressure of the great economic burden imposed on this young country by our participation in the great war, Canadians will have a sharp awakening and will shake off the lethargy and apathy regarding this great question. We must see that that awakening does not come too late. The world to-day is calling for our foodstuffs, our minerals and their products, our timber, and for numerous other articles which are the product of this country.

Never in past history has such a favourable time been offered for the development of our resources. The demand is urgent, prices are high. The door of national opportunity is ajar. The chance now offers for Canada to enter. We have the resources, the energy, the capital, the labour. We need science applied to the untouched stores of our national and natural wealth to transform these vast resources into actual values in order that we may the more easily bear our war burden.

The war has opened a new era, and Canada, whose day is just beginning, has more to expect from the auspicious age that is dawning for the world than almost any other nation. To achieve great things in the new peace it is as necessary to be in the highest state of preparedness as it was for achieving great things in the war.

The recent great war has been followed by a trade war. As far as possible every country is putting its industrial house in order with a view to holding its place in the coming commercial struggle. In many countries increased attention is being devoted to scientific research as an instrument of enhanced industrial power. To-day modern methods are essential to success in industry. The manufacturer rapidly recognized that pure science is a practical thing, and that science and industry are complements of each other. To the scientist at least it is very apparent that the enormously rich undeveloped resources of Canada cannot be utilized to the best advantage of the Canadian people unless our industries have the assistance of thoroughly trained scientific experts.

While the war illustrated that scientific research was of vital concern, so it will demonstrate that it is in peace just as vital to the national safety. Let us for a moment look at some of the things science did for us in this war—and I wish to add my word of praise for the splendid part played by the scientists of Canada. It is probably unknown to the Canadian people what an important part was played in the successful scientific operations of the war by the men of scientific training who went from Canada to Great Britain. Prior to the recent conflict, America and Canada were supplied almost entirely by Germany with synthetic drugs and chemicals, with dye stuffs and with potash. That is all changed, and we through the efforts of our scientific experts, are now quite independent of Germany for all these products.

Take potash, for example. Until 1915, when Germany placed an embargo on potash export, the whole world was supplied from the mines in Saxony, and after the supply from Germany was stopped the price rose from $40 per ton to from $350 to $500 per ton, making it practically impossible for the Canadian or American farmer to utilize it. This created a great need, and scientists set to work. A certain scientific man undertook to preserve the orange groves of Southern California from destruction by dust from cement plants, and during his experiments discovered that cement dust contained large quantities of potash which could be extracted in quantities as great as 1¾ lb. per barrel of cement, or a total possible of 75,000 tons per year from United States and Canadian plants; thus discovering a new source of potash which supplied some of the lack. Blast furnaces also show large quantities of potash salts in the waste gas from the furnaces. This is estimated to produce 500,000 tons per year. Potash is also obtained from kelp on the Pacific coast. There are large quantities of feldspar in Canada, which also contains more or less potash. All these sources, practically utilized, have provided the means of supplying the needs of Canada with all the potash that is at present required. In that way men of science overcame the need for German potash.

To illustrate in a more practical way the value of scientific research, perhaps I can choose no better method than to give some examples of what has been done, and if I quote American examples it is because they provide better illustrations than any in Canada. We can often learn from the operations of private enterprise, and these illustrations which I intend to give to the House to-night are the efforts of private enterprise to improve their conditions through the utilization of science.

Prior to the war America produced none of the finest optical glass; that all came from Germany. When the supply was cut off the research men of Bausch and Lomb of Rochester went to work and produced a glass equal to the best previously imported.

The General Electric Company of Schenectady keeps a laboratory at an annual cost of $500,000, and employs 75 investigators, all experts. One product of this laboratory was the tungsten lamp, the general use of which effects a saving of probably several hundred millions of dollars every year in the cost of our electric lighting. To show what value this company places on scientific research, let me say that in 1918 this company expended $2,000,000 on research work.

Let us see what some other concerns are doing in this line of work. The Dupont Company, of Wilmington, Delaware, established a research laboratory in 1908, and in that year expended $200,000 on research work. In 1918, a war year, the company spent $2,000,000; from 1912 to 1915 they expended $1,200,000, in research; and by so doing they claim they effected a saving of $14,000,000. They now employ 1,100 chemists.

The Eastman Kodak Co. employs 40 research workers at an annual cost of $150,000.

The Western Electric Company, of New York, spent in 1918, a war year, $2,500,000 in research work.

A well known chemist in the United States was approached by a group of firms who had spent $100,000 on a problem without results. They told him they were willing to spend $100,000 more and to wait five years for a solution of the problem. Three research men were put to work and solved the problem at a cost of only $2,000.

Forty years ago cotton seed by-products were a dead waste. To-day they are worth over $300,000,000 per year. The research worker did it. Now, if any private enterprise feels justified in spending large sums because returns are being obtained that warrant these expenditures and if private concerns obtain such results from their investments and their efforts I see no reason why Canada should hesitate in embarking on work of this kind.

Let me quote Dr. Stratton of the United States Bureau of Standards for further illustrations. He says:

> If there is any one good which has come to the United States out of the war it is their scientific industrial development.

And further he says:

> One of the problems of builders and architects has been to know the strength of steel required for structural work. The Bureau of Standards by actual tests established standards upon which all buildings, bridges, shipbuilding, etc., can be carried on with safety. It is estimated that in this connection the amount saved to the industries in one year by preventing faulty construction will pay for all the experimental work of the whole Bureau many times over.

Let us look at Canada for a moment in connection with the fuel question of this country. At this time of our country's history, when the fuel problem is becoming acute and when a substitute for American coal is eagerly sought, it is most gratifying to know that our own Canadian scientific workers have made very satisfactory progress in so modifying our lignites of the western provinces as to make them available for heating the homes of Western Canada. There is every prospect that in the near future the immense fields of lignite in the West will be commercially available; and thus will be solved one of the great problems of that western country at an immense industrial advantage to Canada and a vast saving to our people.

The problem in Canada to-day is very different from what it was ten years ago. There is a great deal of difference in conditions when coal is sold at $15 a ton from the conditions that existed when it was sold at $6 a ton, and this one question alone, it seems to me, is sufficient to warrant the Government in going any length and in making any expenditure in order to make available the western coal for the people of that great and growing country. Let me quote the opinion of another man on this subject. I quote him because he represents that great body of citizens of Great Britain, the Labour Unions. About one year after the beginning of the war there was issued a white paper signed by Arthur Henderson, then a member of the British Cabinet. In that is found the following:

> It is impossible to contemplate without considerable apprehension the situation that will arise at the end of the war unless our scientific resources have previously been enlarged and organized to meet it.
> It appears incontrovertible that if we are to advance or even maintain our industrial position we must as a nation aim at such a development of scientific and industrial research as will place us in a position to expand and strengthen our industries and to compete successfully with the most highly organized of our rivals.

I advocate the establishment in Canada of a Scientific Research Institute for two chief general reasons:

First: We need it for the development of our vast natural resources. Nature has been most lavish with her gifts to Canada. She makes no mistakes, but having given unto us so bountifully she expects us to utilize what she has bestowed upon us. Many of our natural resources are not easily made available for the use of our people, but one of the most powerful weapons available to man for the solution of Nature's problems is scientific research. As I said before, we require the development and large utilization of our natural resources to enable us to more easily carry our war burden, and for that reason research has become to us a fundamental and patriotic duty which can neither be ignored nor neglected without imperilling our national welfare. It will better enable us to increase production and eliminate waste.

Second: We require such an Institute as an aid to Canadian industry. Efficiency and science must go hand in hand if industry is to attain its best place. Just as science forged the most effective weapons of the late war so she must forge the weapons of industry. Without proper means for research our industries will be heavily handicapped in their endeavours to compete with their foreign rivals. If an American farmer reaped his crop with a self-binder and the Canadian farmer with the old-fashioned sickle the Canadian would be inviting economic death. Science is the self-binder of the crop of industry. Let us make use of it.

There is much talk of Capital and Labour these days in connection with industry. It is gradually dawning on men's minds that there is a third force in making industry successful, viz: management.

But there is a fourth:

To these three, Capital, Labour and Management, we must now add Science.

I desire to congratulate the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) on the very excellent remarks he made to-night on this subject. As a representative of that great province, which is so rapidly advancing in industry, I believe he has given a lead to his fellow-members from Quebec on this question. It almost seems that he has a vision of the future greatness of that province as one of the large industrial centres of this country. That position can be attained effectively and satisfactorily only through the agency of science. I am very much pleased to have heard the hon. member add his word of commendation of this plan now proposed.

[Mr. Steele.]

In conclusion, let me say that one of the most urgent duties of the Canadian people to-day is the application of science to the development of our natural resources and to the building up of our industries. These will bring to this country a new era of progress and prosperity. I therefore join with those who have already spoken in urging upon the Government as strongly as I can the necessity and advisability of adopting the report and carrying out the recommendations which it has laid before the House. It is not a matter of expenditure; this is an investment which will return to the country a hundredfold all that is invested.

Mr. T. M. M. TWEEDIE (West Calgary): One of the greatest of the many problems that confront Canada to-day is the burden of debt that has been incurred by reason of the war, and the necessity that exists for making some provision in future, from the point of view of trade, to take care of our obligations. It has been well emphasized to-night that science and industry at the present time throughout the civilized world go hand in hand. We will be able to discharge our obligation according as we can develop our industries, our trade and our natural resources. It seems rather difficult to incur at the present time an obligation that involves an expenditure of $500,000 in connection with the establishment of a national institute of research such as has been suggested by the report which was submitted to the House, but I submit that this House should look upon the expenditure as an investment from which there will be large return and which will be for the general benefit and advancement of the country.

It is true that there is a world-wide agitation in all civilized countries in connection with the movement for scientific research. It is also true that Germany was in pre-war days probably one of the most progressive countries that we had along that line and that there was no country which was more negligent in that respect, until five years ago, than Great Britain. There was, I understand, no public appropriation to any extent except the sums which were given to the Royal Society and the National Research Institute. But when the war broke on the world, Great Britain suddenly realized the position in which she found herself in so far as scientific research in the Empire were concerned, and I believe that had it not been for the inherent knowledge, ability and versatility of the scientists of the Anglo-Saxon race, the British people would not have been able to cope, along scientific lines, with the German Empire so successfully as they did.

Five years ago Great Britain realized the position in which she was placed and an organization was started which was known as the Honorary Advisory Council for Scientific and Industrial Research, and as a result of the inquiries they made and the information they gathered there was subsequently formed the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research. The Imperial Government appropriated at that time £1,000,000 to be expended in the next five years, or approximately $1,000,000 a year, and they have made an annual appropriation of $200,000 for the purpose of carrying on scientific research work. They were alive to the situation. They realized the necessity for the establishment of such a department of the Government and of such research work if they were to regain and retain the share of the world's trade which they had enjoyed prior to the war. In addition to that they are establishing in the various industries in England what are known as trade associations. The manufacturers in the various industries, in their respective lines, unite together for the purpose of forming these associations, establishing their laboratories and arranging for their own private subscriptions. They receive a grant of pound for pound from the Imperial Government. There are in existence in Great Britain some twenty of these associations and there are some fifteen more being formed.

In the United States we find that they have their national Bureau of Chemistry on which they spend $700,000 annually. They also have their Bureau of Standards upon which they spend $2,000,000 annually. To that Bureau they have recently attached a laboratory which will be devoted to industrial research on most comprehensive lines at an expense of $1,000,000. There are also a large number of laboratories established throughout the United States in connection with individual plants some of which have been referred to by the last speaker. The Western Electric Company expend for this purpose $2,000,000 annually, the General Electric Company $500,000, the National Electric Company $2,000,000, and the Dupont Company $2,000,000. The United States had over 2,000 research laboratories attached to various industries. As new industries arise they form their own associations somewhat along the lines of the trade associations that have been established in Great Britain. Recently the oil interests have united and raised $1,000,000 for the purpose of carrying on industrial research work in connection with their business.

We also find that in Japan the national research laboratory is being established and that they have received from the Imperial Government for that purpose an appropriation of $4,000,000 which it is expected will be increased to $8,000,000. In Australia they are establishing an institute for scientific research through the generosity of Mr. Thomas Cawthron, who left a large legacy for that purpose. In New Zealand they are establishing an organization somewhat along the lines of our Advisory Council. France and Italy are contemplating the establishment of national institutes for research. The lesson that these figures teach to us is that all these countries in the world are alive to the actual necessity of undertaking scientific research for the purpose of developing their industries, protecting their trade and putting their finances on a sound basis.

We have had, year after year since 1916, an agitation for the establishment of a research institute in the Dominion of Canada, and I believe that this Government can ill afford not to yield to the recommendations of the committee and to the calls which are coming from the various parts of this country and various industries for the establishment of an institution of this kind, at the earliest possible moment.

In 1916, by Order in Council, an honorary Advisory Council for Scientific and Industrial Research in Canada was established, and it is certainly very interesting and illuminating to note the various committees connected with it. We have the honorary Advisory Council for Scientific and Industrial Research, the Associate Committee on Chemistry, the Associate Committee on Mining and Metallurgy, the British Columbia Honorary Advisory Committee, and other branches. If we look through the list the of members of these various committees we find men standing high in the intellectual, scientific, agricultural and commercial life of this country These men have been gathering information and data from time to time, and if we look through the reports for 1918 and 1919 we will find that in each of these years they have submitted to them problems dealing with 45 or 50 different subjects which require the attention of skilled, trained scientists. We must realize that the men who are represented on these committees, while they are eminent in the various professions, and occupations in which they are engaged, are men who have been serving this country in that capacity for the last five years free of charge. They are men who have other duties to perform, they are men who cannot be expected to go into detail, and deal with each of these questions which are submitted; they can only advise the Government and, to a very limited extent, those who are engaged in these industries. I submit that, as an appreciation of the work which these men have done during the past five years, and in view of the necessities of the time, the Government should at once proceed with the establishment of this Bureau of National Research in the Dominion, and place at its disposal an appropriation which would at least enable the work to be started this year.

Mr. W. K. BALDWIN (Stanstead): Inasmuch as on a former occasion, when blaming the Government for the vast expenditure of money, I advocated the creation of a Department of Scientific and Industrial Research, I think I should be guilty of negligence to-night if I allowed the opportunity to pass without saying a few words in support of the present proposition. We know that this country is a land of most wonderful resources, the fringe of which we have scarcely more than touched. Iron is an article for which there is no substitute—which is used by everybody throughout the wide world—yet we know that we are importing ninety-five per cent of the supplies we need from foreign countries. The states of Minnesota and Michigan, and I believe Alabama, are rich in iron deposits; but in our opinion there is untold wealth in the iron ores of Ontario and Quebec as well as of the Maritime Provinces. We have schools of science to which our young men resort but to perfect themselves they go to the Massachusetts Technical School. We have in Canada enormous water-powers and great mineral and agricultural wealth. Reference has been made to the by-products of our industries and to the fact that many sources of potential wealth are at present not utilized. We need in this country a Department of Scientific Research that will minister to the needs of our young men and keep them at home. We know that during the past two months several of our brainy men have left this country—men whom we could ill afford to lose—because we could not give them adequate salaries. I believe the patriotism and love of country which exists among our young men is such that, after they have received scientific and technical training we could retain their services could we only provide them with two-thirds of the stipend they would derive in the United States.

Attention has been drawn to-night to the use that is being made of sawdust, an article that formerly was dumped into our rivers and constituted a menace to navigation. I believe there is at present being organized in Montreal a company to work up the by-products of pulp-mills. That company, I understand, are already at work with their suction pumps and turning out a valuable commodity.

The establishment of this Bureau is a splendid move, and as a business man I shall support the measure. To many of us the subjects relating to science are extremely technical in their nature. For example, even in the case of well-informed men, it is easy to puzzle them by asking them to define electricity. We have no satisfactory definition of what it is; we know that it is a manifestation of nature. I have been able to puzzle pretty brilliant men who have spent two or three years in scientific study, some of whom have graduated in science, by asking them what a kilowatt is.

In establishing this department let us go cautiously. Do not let us squander money, but let us start by building upon a firm foundation. Then we can afford the aid that will be necessary to a growing department to assist in developing the great resources of this country and the tremendous possibilities that are within our reach. I am very pleased to support the measure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: After a week of political controversy it is a somewhat pleasing experience to be able to speak, even at this late hour, upon a great national problem as to which there appears to be unanimity of thought and feeling. Having begun the week by making a special plea to my right hon. friend (Sir George Foster) to permit us to adjourn at a reasonable hour each night, I shall on the present occasion make my remarks very brief. My reason for rising is that I do not wish to let this opportunity go by without in the first place extending my congratulations to the hon. member for London (Mr. Cronyn) for his very lucid and eloquent exposition of the report of the committee, and the exceedingly industrious and earnest manner in which he has sought to further the committee's work, and to bring to the attention of the Government and of Parliament the significance of the establishment of a National Research Institute for Canada. I desire also, Mr. Speaker, to lend to that project such support as a word from this side of the House may afford. One is greatly tempted—if one has any appreciation of the importance of scientific research in its relation not only to production in industry, but also to the advancement of human well-being—to speak at considerable length upon a subject such as this; but I shall resist the temptation except to the extent of one reference to what seems to me the significance in a large way of our consideration of this project at this particular moment. Two or three of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken this evening have referred to the great scientist, Pasteur, of the contribution which he made to industry and of how illuminating his work and his life have been in revealing, not only the service that science can render to industry, but, as I have already remarked, the service which it also renders to the advancement of human well-being. At the time of the foundation of the Pasteur Institute, in commemoration of his work, in Paris—I think it was in 1888—this great scientist was so overcome with the reception tendered him by the statesmen and scientists of France, that he gave to his son a document which he had previously prepared to read to the gathering, and in that document there appeared the following paragraph which I think, in a way, is epoch-marking in its significance:

"Two contrary laws seem to be wrestling with each other nowadays: the one, a law of blood and of death, ever imagining new means of destruction, and forcing nations to be constantly ready for the battlefield—the other, a law of peace, work, and health, ever evolving new means of delivering man from the scourges which beset him. The one seeks violent conquests, the other the relief of humanity. The latter places one human above any victory; while the former would sacrifice hundreds of thousands of lives to the ambition of one. Which of these two laws shall ultimately prevail, God alone knows."

Since Pasteur uttered those words, we have seen something of the operation of the law of blood and of death. We have seen something of the ambitions of a single individual which have resulted in the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of lives. Clearly, we have now come to a time when we begin to see again the furthering in a large way of the operation of the law of peace, work and health, which seeks to relieve mankind of the burdens which oppress it and to advance human well-being and human progress.

Scientific research can be employed as the handmaid either of the forces of destruction or of those of creation and advancement, and in this particular proposal which is being considered at the moment in the report which the committee has brought down there is presented to this country a project which will go far, I believe, towards a realization of the application of the law of peace, work, and health in all that pertains to our social, industrial, and commercial life. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I should be sorry to let this occasion go by without expressing the hope that the report of the committee will not only be accepted unanimously—as it is certain to be—but also that it will be carried out as speedily as possible once it is accepted by the Government.

There is another reason why I find particular pleasure in supporting this recommendation. When I had the privilege of being Minister of Labour it was my good fortune to have the opportunity of recommending to my colleagues the appointment of a royal commission on industrial training and technical education. That commission was appointed, and as hon. members know, a very valuable report was prepared by it, one section of which is devoted to this important question of industrial research. Were one anxious to supplement what has been said this evening in support of the importance of an Industrial Research Institute one might quote at great length from this document issued by the Government, and which has recommended the very same kind of project so well emphasized by the committee that have given this matter such careful consideration.

Therefore, with the report of the Royal Commission and with the unanimous finding of a select committee of this House, it seems to me that there is little left for the members of this House to do but to express appreciation to the gentlemen who have worked so industriously, so carefully, and so thoughtfully in regard to this important subject, and to assure the Government that if the recommendations of the committee are carried out they will meet with the approval of every one.

One further thought occurs to me, speaking of industrial research in particular, and that is that this is a day when a great deal is being said about the importance of increased production. Men are too apt to think of production as being dependent wholly upon what economists used to speak of as land, labour and capital, or natural resources, labour and capital, forgetting altogether the enormous significance, as regards production, of scientific research. And it is to emphasize what scientific research means, not in one direction only, but in all directions, that I am taking just a moment longer to refer to that point.

All of the work of labour is vastly enhanced and increased in its opportunity and in its rewards by the extent to which scientific research is applied to the problems of industry. The return to capital, and the possibility of greatly increased returns, is similarly enhanced; and so far as the community is concerned its well-being is also enhanced in the same way. I think in our discussion of commercial and industrial problems we are too much inclined to forget the work carried on in the libraries and laboratories by men who are little heard of in public, but who, after all, perhaps, more than any other class in society, are responsible for the progress of mankind. If the Government by establishing an institute of the kind suggested here can in this Dominion help to promote scientific research in ways which I hope will not only parallel and rival, but will in some respects possibly outrun, what has been done in other countries, we shall not only contribute to our own industrial, social and commercial well-being, but we shall help, I believe in the advancement of other nations as well.

Let me say also that scientific reseach in industry is not only the handmaid of these different factors of production; it seems to me it is not less the handmaid, and the necessary handmaid, of governmental policies in such matters as transportation, commerce, immigration, colonization, or any other particular policy which relates to the commercial and industrial life of the country. Unless scientific research is applied in all of these particular branches, the outcome of any policy adopted by a government will never be what it should be in the development of the country's welfare.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I particularly welcome what this report seems to suggest in the way of closer co-operation between the universities of our country and governmental administration. I think that everything is to be gained by having the universities and the government brought into close touch with each other. University men should take as large a part as possible in the affairs of their country, in its government and in the administration of its departments, and our governments should, I think, do as much as they reasonably can to encourage and make possible the work of our universities on a scale which is befitting the great opportunities confronting them—and as one hon. member said this evening, there is no doubt whatever that our universities are not in a position to cope single-handed with the great needs of scientific research. In promoting scientific research, the Government must co-operate with the universities, and I was glad to hear my hon. friend from London emphasize as clearly as he did, and in that fine, eloquent and, if I may so describe it, imaginative way he has of expressing himself, that the universities would receive a greater assistance through an Industrial Research Institute of this kind than could be possible without such an undertaking.

I have great pleasure indeed as a member of this House in supporting most heartily the recommendations of the committee. It is gratifying to see that those recommendations are unanimous. I think we owe a word of thanks to all the members of the committee, and especially to the chairman who has given so much of his time and thought to the work of that committee.

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): What I have to say to-night will be exceedingly short.

Mr. BELAND: And sweet.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I wish I could in the brevity of my remarks make them as pithy in one direction as I am sure the Chairman of the Committee would wish; but there are limitations of course which we find ourselves in contact with, and which, whether we wish it or not, restrain in many ways the practical embodiment of the sympathies and goodwill of the Government.

I have been particularly pleased with the tone of the debate—not speaking of tone in the usual way, but in regard to the line of intelligent appreciation and presentation of the subject itself. Not merely a sentimental support has been given, but a support of insight and of real connection between the mind and the heart of the speaker and the principles of the subject under discussion.

As one heard successive speakers talking of the marvellous things which had been done by science, and which we ourselves had forgotten in a good many respects until they were brought to our attention to-night, one wondered why people run into other channels for the wonders of romance. Really the greatest romances, particularly of the last centuries, have been found in the development of scientific thought and in the scientific research carried on by the quiet workers of the world. They come upon us one after the other; the story passes, and then we are apt to forget. When we have a summing up, such as we have had to-night, we are impressed with the wonderful phases of the development of humanity which has taken place during the last fifty, sixty or one hundred years.

As to the matter which is directly before us, I will spare the blushes of the member for London (Mr. Cronyn) by not reiterating what has already been said by many of those who have spoken. But while sparing his blushes, I do not want him to think that I do not in my heart thank him for the work which he and his willing and efficient committee have performed in connection with this matter and for the way in which they have presented the subject to us to-night. We must not forget, either, that during the last five years, as was mentioned by the member for Calgary West (Mr. Tweedie) we have been doing a little towards maintaining and extending the interest in this matter through the Advisory Research Council. Things of this kind proceed step by step,—here a little, and there a little. Without a doubt we are working up to the point where we shall have in Canada some such efficient mechanism as has been described here to-night. I wish we could work it out now, but there are considerations which make that difficult. I am not, however, without hope that we may, even this year, make a beginning in the direction of carrying out the report—something, at least, which will be an earnest of the completion of the project as soon as possible. In a way, it is a kind of irony that the very thing which has made it particularly necessary that an impetus should be given to scientific research and the alliance of scientific effort with industrial development, the war, has so crippled us that we cannot do what we would like to do in this respect. Science does two things: it puts within the power of the destructive elements of war vast enginery and machinery for completing the destruction upon which it is bent, and almost at the same time it stretches out the hand of solace, comfort, help to the victims of the destruction which it has thus helped to create. If the war has made wounds, deep and gaping, and broad, and if science has helped to make those wounds, science to-day is putting all its resources and its effort into the healing of those wounds, into the bringing of a normal period and, subsequently, a more progressive period of development in all these matters, not leaving out that which is probably the greatest good that can come from the development of science,—the betterment of the world and the greater wellbeing of all those who live in it. For after all, science is to be judged, not by the material development which it first brings about, but by the extent to which it promotes the comfort, happiness and uplift of the people; by the general good which it accomplishes for the world.

I want to reiterate my thanks and the thanks of the Government for the good work which has been done by the member for London and his committee, and to assure them that it will not be allowed to pass without fruit. I hope that something may be done at an early day; that if all we would like to do cannot be accomplished, at least a beginning may be made. I shall bring the matter to the attention of my colleagues, and I know that I shall have a sympathetic set of colleagues, whether or not we shall be able to cross all the ditches and make all the progress we would like to make at this particular time.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Right Hon. Sir George Foster the House adjourned at twelve o'clock (midnight).

Monday, May 10, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

BATTLEFIELDS MEMORIAL.

Hon. S. C. MEWBURN (East Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, I move, seconded by Mr. McCurdy:

That the first Report of the Special Committee appointed to consider and report upon the question of what Memorials, if any, should be erected on the battlefields of the late war, be commended to the consideration of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the customary notice this motion can, of course, be entertained only by unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY AT WASHINGTON.

ANNOUNCEMENT THAT HIS MAJESTY WILL ACCREDIT A CANADIAN PLENIPOTENTIARY TO THE UNITED STATES.

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement which, from the importance of its character, I shall read, with the permission of the House. It has reference to negotiations which have for some time been going on between the British and the Canadian Governments in respect of Canadian representation at Washington. The negotiations have been concluded, and to-day a statement will have been made in the House of Commons in London, and I desire that the House of Commons here shall have cognizance of the matter at the same time.

As a result of recent discussions an arrangement has been concluded between the British and Canadian Governments to provide more complete representation at Washington of Canadian interests than has hitherto existed. Accordingly, it has been agreed that His Majesty, on advice of his Canadian ministers, shall appoint a Minister Plenipotentiary who will have charge of Canadian affairs and will at all times be the ordinary channel of communication with the United States Government in matters of purely Canadian concern, acting upon instructions from and reporting direct to the Canadian Government. In the absence of the Ambassador the Canadian minister will take charge of the whole Embassy and of the representation of Imperial as well as Canadian interests. He will be accredited by His Majesty to the President with the necessary powers for the purpose.

This new arrangement will not denote any departure either on the part of the British Government or of the Canadian Government from the principle of the diplomatic unity of the British Empire.

The need for this important step has been fully realized by both Governments for some time. For a good many years there has been direct communication between Washington and Ottawa, but the constantly increasing importance of Canadian interests in the United States has made it apparent that Canada should be represented there in some distinctive manner, for this would doubtless tend to expedite negotiations, and naturally first-hand acquaintance with Canadian conditions would promote good understanding. In view of the peculiarly close relations that have always existed between the people of Canada and those of the United States, it is confidently expected as well that this new step will have the very desirable result of maintaining and strengthening the friendly relations and co-operation between the British Empire and the United States.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): Inasmuch as the right hon. Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster) has asked the permission of the House to make a statement, I should like to ask the House to give me permission to say a word with reference thereto, if not now, then on the first appropriate occasion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I feel sure that the House would be only too happy to give the hon. the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) an opportunity to give expression to his views on the memorandum just read, but I do not think it is desirable that there should be any general debate on the subject unless there is some specific motion before the House. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. the leader of the Opposition shall have liberty to speak.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried, carried.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to ask my right hon. friend if he will be good enough to see that all the correspondence in reference to this matter is laid on the Table at the earliest possible moment. My purpose in rising now is not to refer at the moment particularly to the far-reaching and important step the Government has taken but rather to express surprise that Parliament has not been acquainted with the correspondence in reference to this matter before the whole matter was finally concluded. If I understand the announcement which my right hon. friend has just made, it is to the effect that the whole transaction is finally settled as between the Government of Great Britain, the Canadian Government and the United States Government, and Parliament has had no opportunity whatever of giving any consideration to the matter in its far-reaching inter-Imperial and international bearings. I think that is not the course which the Government should have taken. Parliament should have been fully apprised of and given opportunity to discuss the essential matters relating to this far-reaching step before the Government came to any final decision in connection with it.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: As this is not the time for discussion I do not propose to enter into the second part of the question raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King). I would merely say that all the available papers in connection with the negotiations will be brought down as quickly as possible and presented to the House.

RETIREMENT OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

Hon. J. A. CALDER (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 120 to provide for the retirement of certain members of the public service.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. CALDER: This Bill is very similar to one which was introduced, if I am not mistaken, at the session before last. Its purpose is to provide a plan or scheme whereby certain members of the public service who, on account of old age or disability or for other cause, should be retired from the service. The Bill contains two methods whereby that may be done. In the case of those who are retired at or over sixty years of age the Bill provides for an annuity. In the case of those who are retired under sixty years of age the Bill provides for a lump sum gratuity. The details can be discussed on the second reading of the Bill or in the committee stage.

Mr. BELAND: That does not refer at all to the retirement of members of the Government?

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SENATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 118, for the relief of James Lewis Price.—Mr. MacNutt.

Bill No. 119, for the relief of Frederick Tristram Clark.—Mr. Burnham.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. CAHILL: I wish to ask the Government when we may expect the fourth volume of the Auditor General's report.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Has not that blessed fourth volume come down yet?

Mr. CAHILL: Not that I have seen.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I promised it two or three times and now I think I will have to hand that responsibility over to some of my colleagues.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have been waiting for it just as impatiently as the hon. gentleman has. I know that all the proofs have been read and I am told it is coming down any day. However I have not seen it yet. The moment it comes down it will be laid on the table of the House.

Mr. CAHILL: I would like to ask the Government seriously if they would bring down the Auditor General's report at as early a date as possible.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It will be brought down at the earliest possible moment.

MENNONITES LEAVING FOR THE UNITED STATES.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. PEDLOW: I would like to repeat the question asked by me on Friday last and which, the right hon. the Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster) informed me could not be answered because the hon. the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder) was not in the House at the time. My question was based upon press reports which appeared in the Friday morning papers to the effect that the Mennonites of Manitoba——

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. gentleman would serve his purpose quite as well by simply asking an answer to the question he submitted on Friday last.

Mr. PEDLOW: In deference to the wish of the Chair I would ask the Minister of Immigration and Colonization to answer the question asked by me in the House on Friday afternoon last.

Hon. J. A. CALDER (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): As the hon. gentleman's question was not brought to my attention I have not had an opportunity of reading it. I shall read it in Hansard and give a reply to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Bill No. 114, for the relief of William Edward Vinall.—Mr. MacNutt.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADA GAZETTE.

Mr. TOBIN:

1. Is there any law or rule or regulation under which all Government notices must be published three times at least in the Canada Gazette?
2. Must these notices be published accordingly in both French and English?
3. If so, is that practice followed in every case for Government notices?
4. If not, did it ever exist?

5. If it did exist, when was it changed, and why?

6. Did the Editor of the Canada Gazette receive orders from some authority, on the 17th October, 1919, to publish Government notices only once in the said Canada Gazette, except notices from the Interior Department for Dominion Lands?

7. Did the Board of Commerce protest against this practice because none of their notices were legal if not thrice published in the Canada Gazette?

Rt. Hon. ARTHUR SIFTON:

1. The general law regulating insertions in the Canada Gazette is contained in Chap. 80, R.S.C., Section 33, which prescribes that "All Proclamations issued by the Governor General or under the authority of the Governor in Council, and all official notices, Orders in Council, Regulations, advertisements and documents relating to the Dominion of Canada, or matters under the control of the Parliament thereof, and requiring publication, shall be published in the Canada Gazette, unless some other mode of publication thereof is required by law."

There are variations in the prescriptions of the several departmental acts, and of the rules and regulations of departments, boards and commissions, as to the number of insertions of documents and notices in the Canada Gazette. This department is not aware that under any law, rule or regulation all Government notices must be published three times at least in the Canada Gazette.

2. There does not seem to exist any general definite rule under which Government notices must be published in both French and English.

3. 4 and 5. Answered by No. 2.

6. No.

7. The Board of Commerce was created by legislation passed the 7th of July, 1919. When the Board of Commerce sent their first notice for publication in the Canada Gazette, it asked for three insertions, but in subsequent requests no mention was made of the provision in the law that three insertions were required, and it was not until February 26, 1920, that the Department of Public Printing was advised that three insertions were called for by the Board of Commerce Act for all the notices of that organization, since which time the rule has been observed.

GOVERNMENT SHIPYARD AT SOREL.

Mr. CARDIN:

1. Is the Government shipyard at St. Joseph de Sorel included in the assets of Canada?

2. If so, for what amount?

[Mr. Tobin.]

3. What is the total amount invested and chargeable to capital on said shipyard since its establishment?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. Yes. Expenditures on the shipyard at St. Joseph de Sorel are included in the item "Improvements to St. Lawrence," set out on the assets side of the balance sheet of the Dominion as published in the Public Accounts. These capital charges, however, are not taken into consideration in determining the net debt of Canada.

2 and 3. Summary of expenditure in connection with "Improvements to St. Lawrence" including shipyard and dredging fleet is, as follows:—

	Cost of Dredging	Expenditure for plant, shops, survey, etc.
Montreal Harbour Commissioners 1851-1888	$ 3,402,494.35	$ 535,869.65
Department of Public Works 1889-1904..	1,784,579.86	2,105,483.02
Department of Marine 1904-1920...	10,621,831.60	4,583,747.54
Totals.. ...	15,808,905.81	7,225,100.21

C.N.R. BONDS GUARANTEED BY ALBERTA.

Mr. SHAW:

1. Did the Government take over all the lines of the Canadian Northern Railway whose bonds have been guaranteed by the Alberta Government?

2. Did the Alberta Government guarantee the bonds of a line of the Canadian Northern Railway from Calgary south to Macleod and from Macleod west to Pincher Creek?

3. Were these bonds disposed of? If so, what was the amount raised?

4. Is it the intention to use this money for the construction of the said line?

4. Can this money be used for any other purpose than the construction of the line for which the guarantee was given?

6. What is the policy in regard to the construction of this line?

Hon. J. D. REID:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. The two lines referred to are included in the total of 955 miles guaranteed by the province of Alberta, of this guarantee, bonds of 675 miles amounting to $9,726,-364.26 were either sold or pledged and total proceeds from same were $8,860,048.09.

4. Under the provisions of the Trust Deed the moneys cannot be used for any purpose other than the construction of the railway lines mentioned in the schedule to the Trust Deed.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. Construction of these lines cannot be proceeded with this year owing to financial, labour and other conditions.

TORONTO HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. THOMAS FOSTER:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to contribute to the improvements in the Harbour of Toronto in the same proportion as in the other large harbours of the Dominion?
2. If not, why not?

Hon. J. D. REID:

1 and 2. Up to the commencement of the Canadian Stewart Co. contract for Toronto Harbour improvements which was the portion of the comprehensive scheme of development to be done at the direct cost of the Government, there has been expended by the Department of Public Works in the improvement of Toronto Harbour the sum of $2,323,191.75.

Since that date, there has been expended on the harbour by the Department of Public Works, the sum of $3,691,068.01, and further work, estimated to cost $1,500,000, is to be proceeded with during construction season of 1920 and 1921.

TRIAL OF WINNIPEG STRIKERS.

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Was the Dominion Government represented by cousel at the recent trials of A. A. Heaps, Reverend W. Ivens, W. A. Pritchard, R. J. Johns, George Armstrong, John Queen and R. E. Bray, before the Court of King's Bench, Criminal Side, of the Province of Manitoba?
2. Did the Dominion Government, or any official thereof, retain or appoint any of the counsel representing the Crown at said trials?
3. If so, who were advocates who were so retained and appointed by the Dominion Government or any of its officials?
4. What amount of costs has the Government paid, or will be called upon to pay in the said trials?

Rt. Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Messrs. Andrews, Andrews, Burbidge and Bastedo, J. B. Coyne, K.C., Travers Sweatman, I. Pitblado and W. W. Richardson.

4. Amount paid to date $104,271.09. Further accounts amounting to nearly $50,000 are before the department for taxation.

INCOME TAX INSPECTOR, KINGSTON.

Mr. EDWARDS:

1. Who is the Dominion Income Tax Inspector at Kingston, when was he appointed, and what salary does he receive?
2. What territory is included in his district?
3. How many persons are employed on the staff of the said inspector and what is the total rate per month of salary paid to them?
4. How much has been paid in salaries and other expenses to the said inspector and his staff from the opening of said office to March 31, 1920?
5. What amounts have been collected in income taxes at the Kingston office for each year since the appointment of the inspector?
6. What amounts have been collected from rural and urban sources respectively in the Kingston district?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. George A. Macdonald; 1st March, 1918; $200 per month.

2. Fiscal year, 1919, the counties of Leeds, Frontenac, Lennox and Addington, Hastings, Prince Edward, Northumberland and Peterborough. Fiscal year, 1920, Leeds, Frontenac, Lennox and Addington.

3. Fiscal year, 1920: Kingston, 18; Brockville, 3. Kingston, $1,438.66; Brockville, $300.

4. $28,763.26.

5. Fiscal year, 1919: $151,863.12; fiscal year, 1920; $274,387.97.

6. Urban tax collected, $421,957.07; rural tax collected, $4,294.02; total, $426,251.09.

CIVIL SERVICE CLASSIFICATION.

*Mr. BROUILLARD:

1. Referring to the classification of the Civil Service of Canada of September, 1919, why did the commission discriminate in classifying the position of "Secretary to Executive"?
2. What secretaries to deputy heads have been classified as "Secretary to Executive"?
3. Why was the title of "Secretary Stenographer" in the official classification list of July, 1919, omitted in that of September, 1919?
4. Is it the intention of the commission to rectify the omission?

Rt. Hon. ARTHUR SIFTON:

1. The Government is not aware that any discrimination was shown in classifying positions in the class "Secretary to Executive." Positions were classified by the Civil Service Commission on the basis of the duties and responsibilities exercised by the incumbents of the positions.

2. It has been found advisable to discontinue the class "Secretary to Executive" as appearing in the September issue of the classification and it is replaced by a class "Secretary to Executive" with lower qualification requirements and a salary range of $1,500, $1,620, $1,740, $1,860. Positions previously classified as "Secretary to Executive" are now under review by the commission and the incumbents of these positions will be classified as principal clerk, head clerk or in other appropriate classes.

3. The class "secretary-stenographer" was omitted from the September edition of the classification because of its great similarity to the class senior clerk stenographer but it has since been combined with the lowered class secretary to executive.

4. Answered by No. 3.

CANADA WHEAT BOARD.

Mr. ANDREWS:

1. When does the term of the present Wheat Board expire?
2. Does the Government contemplate renewing its term of office?
3. When will the participation certificates be issued?
4. Does the Government expect that the farmers will get any cash payment for these certificates?

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER:

1. The Wheat Board was constituted to market the wheat crop of 1919, and its term of office will expire when that has in effect been accomplished, probably about September 1.

2. The Government has not so far contemplated doing so.

3. Participation certificates are issued as wheat is sold by the owners, but full payment of participation certificates cannot be made until all the crop has been marketed, and payments therefor, and expenses connected therewith, have been adjusted.

4. Certainly. The Wheat Board has already notified the holders that they may reasonably count on receiving at least 40 cents per bushel.

IMPORTS INTO CANADA.

Mr. RINFRET:

1. What was the amount of imports, during 1919, from United States, England, France, Italy and Belgium?
2. What was the amount of imports from the same countries during the first three months of 1920?

Hon. Mr. BURRELL:

1. Value of imports entered for consumption during 1919:

From United States	$740,114,584
" England	87,530,259

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH OPERATORS.

Mr. SAVARD:

1. Have the Government telegraph operators received the bonus granted to other civil servants?
2. Is it the intention of the Government to grant them the bonus in the future?
3. If not, what is the reason these employees, who give their whole time to the service of the Government, are not given the benefit of the bonus the same as other Government employees?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. No.
2. No.
3. Standard rates of pay, corresponding to those of the commercial telegraph companies, are paid Government telegraph employees, and being in receipt of prevailing wages they are not entitled, under the regulations, to receive any bonus.

FEDERAL EMERGENCY FUND.

Mr. BOYCE:

1. What amount of the Federal Emergency Fund of $40,000,000 for the relief of returned soldiers, voted at last session, has been expended?
2. What amount was expended in each province?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: 1 and 2. The total expenditure by the Federal Emergency Appropriation Department out of the $40,000,000 voted last session will run between $5,000,000 and $5,500,000. The branches of the fund in the western provinces have until May 15 to pay Soldiers' Settlement cases, claims for which originated prior to April 24. These payments were authorized under Order in Council passed May 4 and the branches have until May 15 to complete their payments. The official returns from the western branches will, therefore, not be received in full until some time after that date.

Advances to Branches in the Respective Provinces to 24th April, 1920, less Refunds to date.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

SIR DONALD MANN'S PRIVATE CAR.

1. Did Sir Donald Mann have a private car?
2. If so, was it taken over by the Government when they bought the Canadian Northern railway?
3. If not, why?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. No.
2 Answered by No. 1.
3. Answered by No. 1.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie):

1. What was the total amount of drawback for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920, paid to textile manufacturers on (a) raw cotton, and (b) cotton yarns?
2. What was the total amount of drawback for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920, paid to textile manufacturers on (a) raw wool, and (b) woollen yarns?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Do the inspectors in charge of terminal elevators, under the Board of Grain Commissioners, have full authority to inspect grain, as provided for in the Canada Grain Act?
2. If not, why not?
3. If so, do the inspectors issue the requisite inspection certificates, with their signatures attached thereto, as evidence of such inspection?
4. Has the Chief Inspector or his immediate assistant, in charge of terminal elevators, authority to change such inspection, without consent of the inspector directly in charge of a terminal elevator?
5. If so, is this practice provided for in the Canada Grain Act?
6. Are inspection certificates, either inwards or outwards, signed in blank by an officer under the Board of Grain Commissioners, and then filled in afterwards by a clerk?
7. Are western inspection certificates signed in blank by the Chief Inspector or one of his officers, and then filled in by an officer in the Eastern Inspection District?
8. Is the inward and outward inspection at terminal elevators identically the same?
9. Does the Canada Grain Act provide for the inspection of grain into terminal elevators, from steamers and barges?
10. If so, does the inward or outward inspection govern?
11. How much grain has the Government elevator, Port Arthur, handled since September 1, 1919, to May 1, 1920?
12. How much grain did the above elevator handle during the following crop years: 1913-14, 1914-15, 1915-16, 1916-17, 1917-18, 1918-19?
13. What was the cost per bushel in handling grain in the Government elevator, Port Arthur, for the above crop years, and for the period, September 1, 1919, to May 1, 1920?
14. Does the above cost include any provision for interest on investment and management?
15. What was the revenue per bushel for the above period: (a) including as revenue, money derived from the sale of overages, screenings and scalpings; (b) excluding as revenue, money derived from the sale of overages, screenings and scalpings?
16. How many employees were engaged in the above elevator during the above periods?
17. What is the name of the senior officer or manager who superintended the operations of the Government elevatoras under the Department of Trade and Commerce for the above periods?
18. Do all the Government elevators carry insurance on grain stored therein, in accordance with law?
19. If not, why the discrimination against the other commercially-owned elevators, and on whose authority is the law broken?
20. Section 95, subsection 7, of the Canada Grain Act provides for the confiscation of overages over one-quarter of one per cent to the Government. Are the Board of Grain Commissioners keeping strict accounting of all grain going into and out of terminal elevators, including screenings and scalpings, so as to arrive at the above figures?
21. Has the Registration Department, under the Board of Grain Commissioners, full information tabulated showing the gross weight in and gross weight out of terminal elevators?
22. What change was made by the Board of Grain Commissioners in the wording of the outward weight certificates?
23. When was the change made?
24. Was the weight certificate, as worded, considered faulty up to the time of the change?
25. If not, why was the change in the wording made?
26. Has the Canada Wheat Board an officer at Fort William, whose duty it is to check the grades given by the inspection department under the Department of Trade and Commerce, on all grain shipped for and on account of the Canada Wheat Board?
27. If so, how many officers are engaged in this office, their names and salaries?
28. If so, what is the necessity of two Government officials doing the one task?
29. If so, are the expenses incidental to this office deducted from the money, which ought rightly be given to the farmers, for the participation certificates issued?

30. Does the Canada Wheat Board accept the inspection certificates as issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce, without reservation?

31. Did the Canada Wheat Board always avail itself of the highest market for all wheat sold for and on account of the producers?

32. Since the Government has taken over the control of the wheat business, has this had a tendency to reduce the work of the Board of Grain Commissioners?

33. If so, have the number of employees under the Board of Grain Commissioners been reduced, for the purposes of economical administration?

34. Is the administration of the Canada Grain Act self-sustaining?

35. If not, how are the deficits made up from year to year and on whose authority?

36. What salaries are paid to the secretary of the Board of Grain Commissioners and the secretary of the Canada Wheat Board?

37. Do the public terminal elevators at Fort William or Port Arthur purchase and sell grain from time to time, contrary to the Canada Grain Act?

38. If so, on whose authority?

39. Section 48 of the Canada Grain Act provided for the fixing of grades other than statutory grades, by the Grain Standards Board. Has this board fixed the composition and grades of: (a) screenings, (b) scalpings?

40. If not, why not?

41. If not, who has fixed the composition and grades up to the present time, and on what authority?

42. If fixed, what are they?

43. Are the original dockages taken from the grain returned to the producer or the buyer of the warehouse receipt covering the specific parcel?

44. If not, why not?

45. How long has the Government, through the Department of Agriculture, handled standard stock food ex terminal elevators?

46. Has the venture been profitable?

47. What is the surplus or deficit for each year?

COMMERCIAL FEEDING STUFFS.

On the motion of Hon. S. F. Tolmie (Minister of Agriculture) it was resolved that to-morrow the House do consider in Committee of the Whole a resolution declaring it expedient to bring in a measure to regulate the sale and inspection of commercial feeding stuffs, bran, shorts, middlings, and chop feeds.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

On the motion of Hon. Martin Burrell (Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue) it was resolved that to-morrow the House do consider in Committee of the Whole a resolution to amend the Inland Revenue Act, Chapter 51 of the revised statutes of 1906, with respect to chemical stills, standard leaf tobacco, distilling without a license, excise duty on spirits, etc.

[Mr. Stevens.]

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Burrell it was resolved that to-morrow the House consider in Committee of the Whole a resolution to amend the Post Office Act, Chapter 56 of the revised statutes, 1906, with respect to the registration fee on letters, the postage rate on newspapers and periodical publications, etc.

TRANSFER OF PICTOU HARBOUR.

On the motion of Hon. C. C. Ballantyne (Minister of Marine) the House went into Committee of the Whole on the following proposed resolution.

Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal the Acts relating to the Harbour of Pictou, in the province of Nova Scotia, and to transfer the property, rights and assets now held by the Harbour Commissioners to His Majesty in the right of Canada, and to provide that His Majesty shall assume and discharge all the obligations and liabilities of the said commissioners.

Mr. DUFF: Will the minister kindly explain the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Its object is to permit of the introduction of a Bill to permit of the transfer of the Harbour of Pictou, Nova Scotia, from the Department of Marine to the Department of Public Works. The reason for the transfer is that the revenue of Pictou Harbour is less than the expenditures in connection with it. The revenue for the seven years from 1913 to 1919, inclusive, amounted to $3,388, whereas the expenditure was $3,840. While the harbour is under a Harbour Commission, no moneys can be spent to repair the wharfs there unless the revenue permits of that being done; but the committee will notice that according to the figures I have given the expenditure during the period referred to has been greater than the revenue. The commission is unable to make the necessary repairs to the wharf as matters stand, and therefore it is proposed—if hon. gentlemen agree to the present resolution and to the Bill which is to be based upon it—that the harbour shall be transferred from the Department of Marine to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. DUFF: What has been the yearly revenue from the wharfs in question and what property is it proposed to repair?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The revenue is derived from what is known as wharfage dues and the revenue for the past seven years has been as follows: 1913, $678; 1914, $789; 1915, $999; 1916, $356; 1917, $253; 1918, $151; 1919, $162. Hon. members will notice that there has been a gradual decrease in the receipts year by year and that in 1919 the revenue amounted to only $162, and in 1918 to $151. Under present conditions there is no opportunity to repair any of the Government wharfs at Pictou. If the hon. member for that constituency (Mr. McGregor) is in the House he will be in a position to give more detailed information upon the subject.

Mr. DUFF: I would like to know if the wharfs from which this revenue is derived are Government wharfs or private wharfs; also what liabilities the Government have to assume in connection with this transfer?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Department of Public works built the wharfs many years ago. I find that the first Harbour Commission was appointed in the year 1873. The commission is composed of Mr. D. Sutherland, chairman, (appointed October 19, 1912), and Messrs. Thomas Canlie, Hugh Murray, William Fraser and George H. Macdonald.

Wharves are usually built by the Department of Public Works and then transferred to the Department of Marine. In this case the local board has been collecting the dues and doing the necessary repairs since 1873. Owing to the decline of business the revenue has been decreasing, and I am informed that the necessary repairs cannot now be taken care of by the revenue. The Department of Marine has not the necessary authority to attend to the work, but the Department of Public Works could do so if the committee passes this resolution.

Mr. COPP: What is the cause of the decline in revenue from year to year?

Mr. McGREGOR: It will be noticed by the figures given by the minister that the revenue collected previous to the war was quite considerable, but during recent years it has fallen off to practically nothing, and consequently the Harbour Commission is not able to maintain the three wharves in repair. These wharves will come under the control of the Public Works Department if this Bill passes. I may say that the commissioners have always given their services gratuitously, being public-spirited citizens. The expenditure in future will be greater by reason of the fact that a large amount of money has been spent by the Public Works Department in deepening and straightening the channel of the East river to Trenton and New Glasgow and constructing locks, and it is in the public interest that this work should be taken care of by the Public Works Department.

Mr. DUFF: Were these wharves built by the Government?

Mr. McGREGOR: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: What are the liabilities that the Government have to take over?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: So far as I know the Public Works Department will not take over any liabilities. The sole object of the resolution and of the Bill based upon it is that the necessary repairs may be made by the Public Works Department. If the Marine Department had the necessary authority to do these repairs, of course, I would not be asking hon. members to pass this resolution. But I think the committee will agree that an important habour like Pictou must be kept up, and it cannot be unless the proposed transfer is made.

Mr. DUFF: My only reason for asking is that the resolution states:

> —and to provide that His Majesty shall assume and discharge all the obligations and liabilities of the said commissioners.

As regards the Government taking over the property, I think it is the right and proper thing to do, and I have no objection to this course being taken; all I am asking for is information before the resolution is passed, and I think I am entitled to such information.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member has all the information that the Government is in possession of. This is simply a transfer of the harbour to the Public Works Department, and I am not aware that there are any liabilities to be assumed.

Mr. LEMIEUX: While I do not object to this resolution, I must say that there are other wharves, and piers, and docks in the Dominion which have been absolutely ignored for the last eight or ten years. I refer particularly to such works built on the Baie de Chaleur and on the St. Lawrence; many of such wharves and piers have been damaged by storms and not one dollar's worth of repairs made. Speaking for my own constituency, I for one do not ask the Government to spend any money on those works, for I realize that the country is passing through a great financial crisis, and in view of the heavy taxation which is impending it is the desire of every man and woman that any heavy commitments should be very seriously considered by the Government before they are undertaken. Since the beginning of the war public works from Halifax to Vancouver have been built which, having regard to our tremendous financial obligations, might well have been delayed. I need not name any of those public works, but they are to be found in every province. With the very heavy tax bills which await them the electors will not stand for any but absolutely urgent expenditure on piers, wharves or docks for the next few years, and I hope when those expenditures are proposed to the Minister of Finance in council that he will blue-pencil any which are not absolutely necessary. I could give a long list of public wharves built by the Government which were very useful to our fishing population, but which have been completely abandoned,—particularly when they were situated in constituencies represented by members of the Opposition. But under the circumstances I do not begrudge the refusal of the Government to meet our requests for repairs to those public works. However, I appeal to my hon. friend the Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster) not to commit the country to any non-urgent expenditure while every elector is expecting the visit of the tax collector with heavy demands to meet the huge debt which confronts this country.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I wish to assure the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux) that the Government have no intention of constructing new wharves or of spending large sums of money at the harbour of Pictou. In proof of that I might say that the new Estimates do not contain one single dollar for this harbour. The Government would be at perfect liberty to repair the harbours to which my hon. friend refers, but so far as Pictou is concerned, even if the wharves were falling to pieces the Pictou Harbour Commissioners have not the necessary revenue which would enable them to effect repairs, and the Department of Marine have no authority to spend money other than what is derived from the harbour dues, and so on. I am merely asking that this transfer be made; I want to make it plain that it is not the intention of the Government to spend any large sum of money on Pictou harbour.

Mr. CANNON: The minister says that no liabilities are being assumed by the Government in this respect. If there are obligations or liabilities, why say in the resolution:

> And to provide that His Majesty shall assume and discharge all the obligations and liabilities of the said commissioners.

[Mr. Lemieux.]

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This is merely legal phraseology; the transfer is provided of the liabilities from the local harbour board to His Majesty. I have been informed by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McGregor) that there are no current liabilities.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What amounts are paid out by the Harbour Commission for salaries?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The only money that is expended is $200 a year to the harbour master. The harbour commissioners give their services gratuitously.

Mr. PEDLOW: I would suggest that the liabilities referred to in this resolution include liabilities incurred through neglect on the part of the Government to keep the harbour in a proper state of repair.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am glad that the harbour of Pictou is so fully qualified to become Government property. The wharves are falling to pieces; the revenue is not nearly equal to the expenditure, and the minister evidently has found the conditions to be such that the property should be acquired by the Government. I would like to know whether a report has been made with regard to this matter, either to the minister or to the Department of Public Works. Let me tell the minister at once that I am in favour of the public ownership of harbours. The harbours of Sydney and North Sydney are now free ports; ships coming in have nothing to pay; no harbour dues are collected. When the transfer which this resolution proposes has been effected, will the harbour dues no longer be payable in the harbour of Pictou? I should like to know also whether this change has been made at the request of the Harbour Commissioners. In connection with the harbour of North Sydney the authority of the commission was simply cancelled and in that way the properties were vested in the Government. The harbour master at that port is a Government official; he looks after ships which do business in the harbour. But at North Sydney any obligation of the commision was looked after by themselves; no obligations were assumed by the Government except the future obligation of effecting the necessary improvements and repairs. If similar conditions are to apply to the harbour of Pictou and the property is transferred to the Government free from obligation, I have no objection to the proposal; I think it is a step in advance.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We want to do the same with Pictou as was done with North Sydney. The port is now in possession of His Majesty, the Harbour Commissioners being merely trustees or managers. The object of the resolution is to do away with the commission and to make Pictou a free harbour. The Harbour Commissioners waited upon the Government some time ago and urged that this be done.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Are any bonds or other liabilities outstanding against the harbour?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I had a careful investigation made before proposing the resolution. There are no liabilities whatever.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: When the minister says that it is proposed to make Pictou a free harbour, does he mean that wharfage dues will no longer be collected, that sick mariners' dues will not be charged, and that the ordinary expenses of shipping which apply at other ports will not apply at Pictou?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: As soon as this transfer is made, no wharfage dues will be charged at Pictou. Sick mariners' dues, which are separately covered by statute, will still be charged.

Mr. CAHILL: Why make a difference between Pictou harbour and other harbours and wharves? As I understand the matter, when the Public Works Department builds a wharf at any point, that wharf is handed over for management and collection of dues to the Department of Marine, and apparently that has been done in this case. When, however the question of expenditure is involved or when it is proposed to make a wharf free, it is handed back to the Department of Public Works. What led the Government to come to the conclusion that this wharf in preference to others should be free and should be handed back to the Department of Public Works for maintenance when other wharves have to pay wharfage dues?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Generally speaking, wharves throughout Canada are not only constructed by the Department of Public Works but maintained under that department except where there is a good deal of shipping. The large ports of Montreal, Vancouver, Quebec, have, of course harbour commissions which administer the ports for the Crown. Then there are smaller ports similar to Pictou, at which there has been a good deal of shipping, and it has been the custom for many years for the Department of Public Works to transfer such wharves to the Department of Marine. Had the shipping at Pictou harbour kept up and the revenue likewise kept up, I would not be asking hon. members now to pass this resolution. I would not want to convey to the committee the impression that the wharves at Pictou harbour are in a dilapidated condition. They are, I am informed, in very good condition but some repairs will have to be made probably next year, and the revenue has not been sufficient to pay even the harbourmaster who draws a salary of $200 a year. There would not be a twenty-five cent piece left out of revenue for repairs, and in the public interest, if repairs are necessary, they ought to be done at the expense of the public. There is nothing now in the Estimates for repairs to this harbour, but next year or some other year there may be, and, therefore, I am asking the transfer to be made now.

Mr. CAHILL: I have in mind some wharves on the Timiskaming lakes, which wharves are in charge of the Marine Department which collects wharfage dues there. I want to know why this particular dock is picked out as one for special treatment as against wharves on smaller lakes and inland waters where the farmers have to pay charges for the privileges of taking their goods over the docks both in shipping the goods out and in shipping them in. For instance, at Haileybury and Ville Marie the farmers have to pay dues for the privilege of shipping their hay over the docks to the market; they have no railroad, and they tell me that in the last few years they have been suffering quite a hardship in having to pay what they consider very high wharfage charges at those points.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: If the condition of the wharf to which my hon. friend refers is such that it needs repairs and the revenue is not sufficient to cover the cost of making those repairs, then it would be quite in order for the hon. member to ask whatever Government happened to be in power at the time, to make a transfer, the same as I am asking now. There is, however, a difference between local wharves as compared with an important harbour such as Pictou. I have been informed that $1,000,000 has been spent on Pictou harbour; that there are large and important locks there, to look after which engineers are required, and the revenue does not permit of that. I am quite sure the hon. member would not want an expenditure that has been made, amounting now to $1,000,000, not to be properly looked after. The harbour commissioners have not revenue enough to do the work; the Department of Marine has not the authority to do it, and I hope hon. members will agree with me that this transfer is not going to mean any very heavy additional expense to the country.

Mr. CAHILL: The wharf to which I refer has a larger revenue than the wharf about which the minister is speaking, and I am sure the people there deserve just the same treatment as the people at Pictou or at any other place. In fact, they deserve perhaps a little better treatment because they are pioneers opening up a new country. Has the Government any set plan as to how these different wharves throughout the country are administered and why should they select one particular wharf for special treatment? Is it the policy of the Government that when a wharf becomes dilapidated under the administration of the Marine Department to transfer it back to the Public Works Department, and then when repairs are made, to transfer it back again to the Marine Department?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The general policy is that wharves at which there is any large quantity of shipping, are transferred to the Department of Marine. In the case of Haileybury wharf, I should understand from the remarks of my hon. friend that the revenue is quite sufficient to keep that wharf in a proper state of repair. But supposing, for argument's sake, that were not so, it would be quite in order for the Minister of Marine to ask that that wharf be transferred from the Marine Department to the Public Works Department. If the revenue had kept up at Pictou harbour the same as it has apparently kept up at Haileybury harbour, I should not be asking that this resolution pass.

Mr. BUREAU: How many harbour commissioners are there at Pictou and by whom are they appointed?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Governor in Council appoints the harbour commissioners. The following harbour commissioners were appointed on October 19, 1912; Mr. D. Sutherland, chairman; Mr. Thomas Cantley, Mr. Hugh Murray, Captain William Fraser and George H. Macdonald. None of these five commissioners receive any remuneration.

Mr. BUREAU: According to the wording of this resolution, I understand this commission exists by virtue of a statute and that the minister is now asking for the repeal of that statute. These commissioners who administer the harbour of Pictou are appointed under this particular law which created the harbour of Pictou. Is it the intention of the minister hereafter to have some employees of his department or another commission or somebody else look after the harbour, because after this commission goes out of existence, there will be nobody to look after the harbour except the Department of Marine.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: When this resolution and the Bill founded on it are passed, the responsibility of the harbour of Pictou is transferred from the Marine Department to the Public Works Department, and the Public Works Department, I am informed, already have engineers at Pictou who would have to take on the additional duty of looking after the locks and wharves there. This is simply a transfer of responsibility from one department of the Government to another.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The resolution does not seem to be very well worded. It reads:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to repeal the Acts relating to the harbour of Pictou, in the province of Nova Scotia, and to transfer the property, rights and assets now held by the harbour commissioners to His Majesty in the right of Canada, and to provide that His Majesty shall assume and discharge all the obligations and liabilities of the said commissioners.

Does that mean, according to my hon. friend, that after the transfer of the property to the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Public Works will simply carry on the usual work of administering that property and repairing it, or does it mean something more, namely, that according to the language used in the resolution, there are really liabilities? If not, why use the words:

> And to provide that His Majesty shall assume and discharge all the obligations and liabilities of the said commissioners.

The minister, of course, states that a rigid inspection has taken place under the direction of some officer of his department, and that he has personal knowledge that there are no liabilities at all to be assumed by the Government.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This resolution has been passed upon by parliamentary counsel, and I must accept his phraseology and defer to his knowledge in the matter. The commissioners are going to be relieved of all their authority and henceforth the responsibility will be vested in the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. LEMIEUX: According to the inspection of the books made by my hon. friend's officers there are no liabilities as implied in the words of the resolution. The meaning of the word "liabilities" is generally understood.

Mr. DUFF: Before the resolution carries I should like to have it distinctly understood in what sense the harbour of Pictou will be free when the Bill which is to be based upon the resolution becomes law. I should not like the plain unqualified statement to reach the shipping men that the harbour is going to be free. In my opinion, if the resolution and the subsequent Bill are passed, the shippers of goods in Pictou harbour will have to pay the same wharfage dues as do people who use any other public wharves in Canada. The same applies to ships going in or out of Pictou harbour. They will have to pay the same pilotage dues as ships in other parts of the country, so the same harbour dues and all other fees so that in these respects Pictou harbour will not be any different from other ports in Canada.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is right

Mr. LEMIEUX: I wonder if my hon. friend would submit the report which the accountant made in regard to the books of the Harbour Commission of Pictou. I am always afraid of assuming new liabilities. I have recently passed St. John, N.B., which is a great city that I much admire. I remember some years ago the Government assumed the liabilities and obligations of the harbour of St. John, and they proved very heavy indeed; and although I do not imagine that the same huge expenditure will be made in the harbour of Pictou, yet I am always suspicious of any future or past liabilities assumed by the Government in regard to harbours. As I say, I have just seen St. John and I can guess how many millions were sunk in the Bay of Fundy, and I should not like to assume responsibilities of the same proportions in connection with any other harbour in Canada.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: If it is the pleasure of the committee to pass this resolution, I shall be very glad, when we are in committee on the Bill, to give all the assets and liabilities in detail.

Mr. BUREAU: As I understand any schedule of tolls for the harbour, and all dues, dockage, moorage, etc., are to be submitted to the Minister of Marine, and these are to be subject to his approval. I understand from the minister that the Harbour Commission is to go out of existence and that the harbour will come under the control of the Department of Public Works. How is it to be administered? Is the Department of Public Works going to be the supreme authority to regulate tolls and charges and to appoint those whom it pleases the minister or the deputy minister to put in charge of the department, or is it the intention to have some commission or other to supervise the harbour?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is not the intention to re-appoint the commission there. The harbour at Pictou will be under the Department of Public Works just like hundreds of other harbours throughout Canada. The only important change that will be made will be in regard to wharfage dues, or, as some people call them, "top" wharfage dues, which will disappear with the local harbour commission itself. The responsibility for the harbour and the property of the Crown in connection therewith will rest entirely with the Minister of Public Works, and as the Department of Public Works has local engineers down there now no additional expenditures will be entailed. It will simply mean a little more work for the engineers of the Department of Public Works located at Pictou; they, instead of the local harbour board, will have to look after the harbour, the locks and piers.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand that there will be no more harbour dues on steamers going to Pictou and that the port will be free.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It will be a free port in the sense indicated my the hon. member (Mr. Duff). The pilotage dues and sick mariners' dues will be charged, but the small fees levied on the cargoes of ships inbound and outbound will be abolished.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does the minister say that in future his policy will be to hand over to the Public Works Department the properties of any harbours which are in financial difficulties?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That will be the policy of the Government.

Mr. McKENZIE: I think the minister will wisely come to the conclusion that it is small business to collect dues from these wharves in different parts of the country. I remember well, many years before the minister came into the House, when a Bill was passed by which these wharves were to be taken over by the Marine Department and dues were to be charged. There was a vigorous opposition to the Bill and it was only by reason of the fact that it was a Government measure under a minister who is now a judge of the Supreme Court, the Hon. Mr. Brodeur, that it was passed. But there was never any other opinion than that these wharves were built for the public convenience of people who as a rule are located in isolated places where, unless there were wharves, they could not get any benefit from passing ships. For many years the Government had no intention whatever of making any charge. It is quite proper of course that there should be a man to look after the wharves and to see that they do not fall into disrepair, but it is not worth while for any Government to collect these small fees that are charged. The minister is going to abolish the system in Pictou, and the sooner he applies it to the other harbours of the same class the better. Pictou harbour is an important one. In my own county there are many harbours that are not under the control of the board but they have Government wharves which are indispensable; and the policy inaugurated within the last few years of collecting wharfage in these places is in my opinion highly undesirable. I trust that the policy to be established in regard to Pictou harbour will extend to every other place in Nova Scotia where there are public wharves on which fees are now collected.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Hon. Mr. BALLANTYNE thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 121 respecting the harbour of Pictou in Nova Scotia.

Motion agreed to and Bill read a first time.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT, 1907, AMENDMENT.

The House resumed from May 4 consideration in committee of Bill No. 57 (from the Senate) to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907—Hon. Mr. Meighen—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 2—signatures requisite for applications to refer disputes to boards and for statutory declarations accompanying them:

Mr. MEIGHEN: The reason for the adjournment of this clause was the calling the attention of the committee by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the amendment of 1910 and to the fact that that evidently was overlooked in the preparation of this Bill. That is quite correct and it should not have been overlooked. It is the intention of the Minister of Labour that clause 3 of the amendment of 1910, which is the clause referred to by the leader of the Opposition, shall still be law. I therefore beg to move:

That clause 2 be amended by adding thereto the following after the word "Act" in the first line thereof the following:

"As amended by section 3 of chapter 29 of the statutes of 1910."

That is the part that repeals section 3 of the statutes of 1910.

And by changing the semicolon at the end of subclause (b) thereof to a period; and by adding to paragraph (d) of the new section 16 the following words:

"Where a dispute directly affects employees in more than one province, and such employees are members of a trade union having a general committee authorized to carry on negotiations in disputes between employers and employees, and so recognized by the employers, may be signed by the chairman or president, and by the secretary of the said committee."

These words sought to be added by the amendment are the exact words that are inserted by section 3 of the amendment of 1910.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before this clause as amended carries I should like once again to direct the minister's attention to the effect of the changes he is proposing as to the manner in which the application shall be made for a board of conciliation and investigation under this Act. The minister has made a change, at the suggestion of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. McDonald) in regard to subsection (d). If he is to be logical and consistent he will have to make a similar change when he comes to subsection (e), which is part of the same section, and such a change is certain to occasion some discussion. If he does not make it there will be discussion just the same because of the amendment he is now proposing. In order to make clear the significance of what is being done, and which I think should not be done, let me state the purpose of the original sections.

The existing sections are to provide a method by which an application for a board of conciliation and investigation is to be made. There are two kinds of situations to be taken into account. One is where an application is to be made by a union, or by men who are members of a union, and the other is where the application comes from those who are not members of a union. The law as it exists requires that before an application can be made to the Government for the appointment of a board of conciliation and investigation where it affects union members there shall be a majority vote of those who are members of the union. That is to say that if a meeting of the union is being held and if members wish to make application for a board a vote of the members present will have to be taken so that there will be something of record to show that the matter has been considered and that there was an actual majority in favour of making the application. There is a further provision as regards special meetings, that a notice shall be posted stating the object for which the meeting is called and that a ballot shall be taken at the meeting in reference to the particular subject in dispute. The minister is doing away with any necessity of calling any special meeting of the union to consider the matter, and is proposing to do away altogether with the necessity of taking any vote, with the result that if an application is made to the department a dispute may arise on the question as to whether a majority of those who belong to the union really made an application. Some employer might take exception to a board being granted on the ground that the majority required by the Act did not vote in favour of the application. There is, under the amendment proposed, no means of deciding that fact other than by taking the word of the particular persons who put in the application. As the Act stands to-day there is a recorded vote to which reference can be made and which is all sufficient to satisfy the minister as to the application having been made in the right way.

Now we come to the application to be made by any group of men who are not members of a trade union in regard to a dispute that arises. The Act at present requires that three days' notice shall be posted and that a vote shall be taken of the men who attend a meeting to discuss the question of an application to the Government for a board of conciliation and investigation. All parties know about it, those that are interested attend. If the majority decide in favour of an application for a board, they have a right to obtain a board in that way; a record of the vote on the application has been made, and it is beyond dispute. This has worked out, as far as I know, perfectly satisfactorily. It has occasioned trouble or embarrassment to no one. The minister now proposes to do away with that precaution and to say that there shall be no vote taken, he proposes to do away with the necessity of posting a three days' notice in regard to the calling of a meeting and simply to permit any group of men, without a vote and without a meeting, without any reference to any special matter in dispute, to make application to the Government for a board. I think the effect of it will be to create all kinds of difficulties for the minister in granting, or in determining whether he has the right or not to grant, a board, and I think it will, in many cases, act prejudicially to the interests of all concerned. I also think that it may lead to an undue interference with an established business by enabling any two men where it suits particular individuals, to go around with a sheet of paper and solicit the names of different men who may or may not belong to a union, and, obtaining the required number of names, to secure from the Government the right to have the whole machinery of the Act set in motion.

In this connection I must point out the bearing of another amendment which the minister has suggested—which I think is entirely wrong. Under the law as it stood, witness fees were based on the rates allowed in the different provinces. But the minister has changed that provision so as to allow the payment of a minimum of $4 a day to witnesses, although when the Minister of Labour introduced the measure in the other House he asked that the minimum should be only $2 a day. Some discussion took place there as to the $2 not being a sufficient amount for experts, and the figure was changed to $4 so as to arrive at an all round figure which may apply to all classes of witnesses. The effect of bringing in this amendment along with the permission to allow payment of $4 to all witnesses will be simply this: In regard to a large number of disputes that will be dealt with under this law, any two individuals in a mining camp, or anywhere else, who think that they would like to start an investigation into a business of a particular concern will go around among the members of a camp, tell them that if they so wish they will be called as witnesses in regard to a particular investigation and that they will get $4 a day as witnesses; and if these two persons get a majority, without any vote, without any meeting, without any discussion on the question one way or the other,—if the law is carried out, the Government will have to grant a board for such investigation. Now opening the door to possible proceedings of that kind is mischievous. It will only help, I think, in some quarters to bring the Act into question in a way it has not been brought into question in the past. I would therefore like to make this last appeal to the minister—before he changes a section of the law which has not, so far as I am aware been embarrassing to any of the parties concerned—that he leave well enough alone and not make these unnecessary amendments.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The leader of the Opposition should remember that the author of this Bill is not myself but the Minister of Labour who administers the Act. The committee, of course, is well aware of that. The leader of the Opposition has before argued the point that he now re-introduces. It is a fact that the Minister of Labour contemplates by this amendment that a board may be requested in any single case (1) either by the calling of a meeting and the securing of a majority of all the members affected at that meeting, or (2) by securing a majority without calling a meeting, and saying to the minister that such majority duly authorizing two of the officers to ask for the board has been secured. The minister is of opinion that if over one-half want the board, that should be sufficient evidence to him of the desire of the men at least. Though that half may not have voted at a meeting, if they make the request by petition he thinks that should be sufficient and he thinks it is a much better safeguard against abuse—the requirement of the majority imperatively in every case—than was the provision of the old law that in many cases enabled a very small minority to act simply because that small minority happened to be the majority present at a meeting. That is his opinion, and I must say it does seem most reasonable. I do not for a moment think the leader of the Opposition has anything but the good of the Act in view, but he will recognize that what he suggests would be a restriction on the men. If time shows that that restriction is requisite the Minister of Labour may come back with an amendment to that end; but I would be very much surprised if time should show it to be requisite. Now that is the sum and substance of the whole matter. To repeat in one sentence: The minister is of the opinion, and I commend his view to the committee, that a majority of the men should have the right to ask a board if that majority is certain, though not evidenced by a vote at a meeting duly called. So long as there is a majority he does not want to restrict the right; but there must be a majority as distinct from the old prerequisite which required nothing more than a majority present at a meeting though that might not be more than 10 per cent of the men affected.

The Minister of Labour intends by the amendment of clause 4, which has already been passed, that $4 should be the minimum for an allowance to witnesses inclusive of expenses, believing that all witnesses should get the same throughout Canada. I would not apprehend that men should be anxious for a board in order that they might substitute $4, inclusive of expenses, for the wages they were drawing. It would seem to me that they would be paying quite a heavy penalty for the board if that were their only object in asking for it.

Mr. CROTHERS: I am sorry I was not present when these amendments were before the committee a few days ago, but I desire to say a word or two with respect to them even at this late stage.

I think that the provision in subsection D of section 16 is entirely too loose. It reads:

> by employees who are members of a trade union, by two of its officers duly authorized by a majority of the members of the union.

What does the word "duly" mean? It will cause any amount of dispute and confusion to arise. I would suggest that the word "duly" be stricken out entirely and that the paragraph should read:

> "By two of its officers authorized in writing."

It would be well to have the authority given in writing otherwise you will find a man saying: "You told me on the street corner to do so and so" and the response being made "No, I never told you anything of the sort." Whereas if the request received from the man on the street corner were signed by him it would be much better. As I see it the provision in its present form is useless.

Then take the provision that there shall be a minimum sum of $4 allowed for witness fees. The provision should not be in that form because a "minimum" of $4 means that the payments may be a great deal more than that amount. I have no objection whatever to the provision going through if the word "minimum" is stricken out. If the provision is left in its present form you will have people in one province claiming that they ought to get $6 or $8 a day because the Act only mentions a minimum. If the sum is fixed at $4 without any reference to minimum I have no objection to it. Then the witness will get $4 whether it is in the province of Prince Edward Island or the province of British Columbia. Leave the provision as it is and it will result in all sorts of disputes because I know the kind of claims that are put forth for witness fees and allowances of that kind.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I share the views which have been expressed by the ex-Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) I think the $4 well represents what may be due a witness for spending his day in the interest of social justice, and no encouragement to demands for a greater amount should be given by allowing the word "minimum" to remain. On the other hand, I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) that in these days of labour unrest no encouragement should be given to agitators or ill-advised persons who by their simple whim might direct a strike to take place unless a board is granted. I think that evidence of the desire of the men to have a board appointed should be very clearly demonstrated, not by mere word of mouth but in writing, as my hon. friend the ex-minister says—at all events it should be a document authenticated by the signatures of responsible people holding an official position in the union or in the local organization of the employees.

We must not do anything to bring this legislation into contempt. Let me say to my hon. friend who is now piloting the Bill through the House (Mr. Meighen) that this legislation—the credit for the drafting of which, I need not say, must be given to my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition—enjoys to-day a world reputation. As my hon. friend knows, it has been adopted by several states of the Union, by some of the British dominions, and now there is before the French Parliament legislation based on our Industrial Disputes Act. Before I left France a few months ago it was my pleasure and my pride to hand over to the President of the Council, M. Millerand, all data, statistics and literature on what is generally called the Lemieux Act. He was preparing legislation for compulsory investigation and arbitration in certain cases of industrial disputes, and he repeated to me what he had said on previous occasions, that he knew of no better legislation to settle industrial troubles than the Canadian legislation. I would ask my hon. friend who is piloting the amendments to this legislation through the House to be very careful not to "denature" the spirit of this legislation—not to so amend it as to bring it into contempt by the people. Therefore I would ask him not to press the amendment which he has just moved whereby some employees might at any given moment by a mere whim ask for a board when no board was really needed. The desirability of putting the machinery of the Act into motion is always a very delicate question for the Minister of Labour to decide, and it must be known throughout the land that the machinery is put into motion only on a real stated case when there is autenticated evidence that a grievance exists and that a board is needed.

Mr. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): It seems to me that there is a misapprehension in the minds of both the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) with regard to the intent of the amendments of this Act. The original clause provides:

> If made by employees members of a trade union shall be signed by two of its officers duly authorized by a majority vote of the members of the union, or by a vote taken by ballot of the members of the union present at a meeting called on not less than three days' notice for the purpose of discussing the question.

The amendment provides:

> That if by its employees members of a union authority shall be by a majority vote of all the members of that particular union, and not by a majority at any particular meeting.

That is, the majority of the members present at any particular meeting as provided for in the original clause. So that instead of making it easier, the amendment is simply providing that the request shall represent the desire of a majority of the members of the union affected, employing the words introduced by the minister on the suggestion of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. McDonald).

With regard to the second objection raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I am not going to be dogmatic in regard to it, but I think if you read clause (e) you will find that provision is clearly made for calling a meeting on three days' notice and taking a vote where the men affected are not members of a union.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is that my hon. friend's impression of the amendment?

Mr. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): I would say so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend will read the amendment he will find he is quite mistaken.

Mr. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): The amendment reads:

> By employees some or all of whom are not members of a trade union, by two of their number duly uthorized by a majority of such employees. If such authorization is obtained in whole or in part by a vote at a meeting, such meeting shall be called on not less than three days' notice and the vote shall be by ballot.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The amendment now means that if by any chance they should take a vote and decide to make application they cannot take a vote unless there has been three days' notice of the meeting given. The old law said that there must be three days' notice given, and then a vote at the meeting would decide whether or not an application would be made. The amendment is quite different and changes the whole effect of the clause. As it is now the amendment proposed leaves it open to any two men to go around in any camp or community that is unorganized, get a certain number of names, and thereby compel the granting of a board. I am sure that my hon. friend the present Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) and his predecessor (Mr. Crothers) will agree with me that that is not a wise change in the Act. I believe that the intent of the Minister of Labour is thoroughly good, but as given expression to in these amendments it is thoroughly bad, and I hope that the amendments will not be persisted in.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I should make reference to the new suggestion that has been made and which has been supplemented by the remarks of the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux). I would feel like taking the responsibility of accepting an amendment, moving it myself for that matter, to make it clearer that the authorization must be in writing, because I feel that that is the intention of the minister, following the expression used as the Bill was submitted to this House. If that is done in clause (d), it would require also to be done in clause (e); so I move:

—to further amend clause 2 by striking out the word "duly" where it appears in the twenty-third and twenty-ninth lines of the first page of the Bill and by adding after the word "authorized" where it appears in both of the said lines, the words "in writing."

The remarks I made before, of course, apply to the request of the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux). It is one of the infirmities under which our system suffers that in one House the minister responsible, and who has the actual administration, cannot be present. That is inevitable, either in the House or in the Senate, and it happens now that we suffer under that in the House of Commons The minister in charge of this Bill undoubtedly believes in the Act and in the principle underlying it. He has had to do with the administration of the Act for many years in his capacity as member and officer of the trade union, and for some considerable time in his capacity as Minister of Labour. He thinks the Act is to be improved by enabling a majority to express itself in any way. It is conceivable, of course, that the provisions of the Act may be abused even now, but he is removing one source of abuse, the case where a mere minority may put the whole Act into operation,—because even if three days' notice is given, members of a trade union may find it difficult to attend a meeting. He is removing that, and having removed it he does not feel like going further and hampering further the employees. He thinks that if it is difficult to hold a meeting the men ought to be allowed to express themselves by petition in writing. That being his deliberate view, and that view being not open, in my humble judgment,—which, I admit, is not worth very much—to serious objection, I do not feel like taking the responsibility of going further in the way of amendment to the clause.

Mr. CROTHERS: The amendment proposed by the minister does not sufficiently safeguard the interests of all parties concerned. I am inclined to the belief that the workingmen ought to have an opportunity of discussing matters of so much importance. If this amendment carries, any individual can go round and get Tom, Dick and Harry to sign this paper asking for a board. On the other hand, if the men gathered together in a meeting they would have full opportunity of discussing the situation, pro and con, and it might be found that few were in favour of asking for a board. I believe that the interests of the workingmen, the employer and the public will be best served if the men have an opportunity of discussing the matter before a board is asked for. Much difficulty may be created if the principle of the amendment is adopted.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Crothers). Hon. members on both sides should regard favourably the presentation of any just grievance by the workingmen. But on the other hand, we must not allow the workingmen to be worked by some ingenious agitator who may easily go from one mine to another, from one establishment to another, and endeavour to create trouble between capital and labour. I want to give this legislation a proper working basis and to see that when put into motion the machinery of the law shall not be hampered. But let us not forget that there are in all countries people who are attempting to create—the word may seem to be a little strong—revolution. The workingmen are amply protected by this legislation; my hon. friend should not insist upon affording a weapon which agitators may use to bring the legislation into contempt. Has there been any petition from any labour organization asking for this amendment?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I could not say as to that, but I stated when the Bill was here before that the amendment in its present form was approved by the Trades and Labour Congress through its executive. That is my information from the Minister of Labour.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I travelled lately with Mr. Tom Moore, and we discussed this legislation. He did not suggest any such amendment as this, but he did suggest, as the leader of the Opposition did when the matter was previously discussed, that a provision making the legislation applicable to constables should be inserted in the Act. I would like to have the views of Mr. Moore with regard to this proposed amendment, because he is a level-headed labour man; he is not an agitator.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know anything about Mr. Moore's opinion; I stated exactly what the Minister of Labour told me,—that the executive of the Trades and Labour Congress had approved of the Bill—and in this respect it has not been altered since that approval. Now, I realize that the remarks of hon. gentlemen on this question are not without some force, but this must be kept in mind; the Bill as now recommended to the committee provides that application for a board must be authorized by a majority of the men affected if a meeting is called. That is a considerable restriction, but it is necessary in order that men may not suffer through the action of a mere minority. The meeting may have been held a long way off and it may have been very difficult for many of the men to attend, and if they do not attend they may be precipitated by a mere minority into a situation of which they do not approve. Consequently it has been thought wise to say that there must be a majority. That being the case, it does seem to me that it is going too far to say that the expression of the majority must be made at a meeting. surely if a meeting is very inconvenient; if, for example, men are separated and a long way from each other, they ought to be allowed to express their will, the mere desire for a board, by another method, so long as you insist that the majority shall sign. It seems to me that they should not be denied that privilege and that convenience so long as the majority insistence is there. It is adding a very serious restriction to say that there must be a majority of all the members affected and that they must so express themselves at a meeting. That is the deliberate opinion of the Minister of Labour, and that being the case I do not feel that I would be justified in doing anything other than what I have done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: For many years the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress, through their executive, have waited on the Government once a year. I have looked at the proceedings as reported and I have found nothing in any representations which they have made through the executive at that meeting which pertains at all to the changes now proposed. I am perfectly sure that such representations have not been made as coming from any discussions or resolutions of the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress. What I think has probably happened is that, as regards paragraph (d) one or two members of the executive have expressed to the minister the opinion that where there is a trade union, they would prefer to leave to the trade union leaders the matter of getting a majority of the union to ask for a board instead of having a meeting. I can understand their wishes in that matter. The minister, however, has gone further than that; he has added paragraph (e) to some extent paralleling paragraph (d). Paragraph (e) deals with men who are not organized at all or some of whom are organized, and in seeking to meet the wishes of others in regard to paragraph (d) he has got into a difficulty, he never foresaw as regards paragraph (e). According to the Bill as it stands now, any two men can go around and secure signatures, and even if the minister puts in the amendment of the hon. member for Elgin West (Mr. Crothers), that is, to add the words " in writing," that will not alter matters for they will get the signatures in writing. Therefore, notwithstanding what the motives of those two men may be, the Government will be compelled to grant a board and to allow the company's business to be examined by the different representatives who would be put on that board. If the door is left open in that way, opportunity is going to be given for all kinds of mischievous proceedings, and inasmuch as this paragraph is the one that relates simply to proceedings asking for a board, the minister would be well advised to leave this section alone for the present. If the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress, through their executive, ask for this change at a subsequent session, we shall then be justified in considering the matter further. But in the absence of any representations in writing which the minister can present to Parliament, I do not think that simply for the sake of forcing this through, he ought to go contrary to what I believe would be the wish of the Minister of Labour himself if he were in a position to be in this House and to see the effect of the amendment as it is pointed out at the present time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister has read the arguments presented by the hon. member including the ones bearing on this very point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I laid them before the minister separately at the time, and he told me that this Bill had been laid before the executive of the Congress and had been approved. I did not say that the Congress had, either in writing or in any other way, requested this change, and I do not know whether they did or not. I merely know that it is the opinion of the minister—and as to its correctness I have not the faintest doubt in the world—that this change has been approved by the Congress.

There is something to which the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) referred to which I did not refer. I think if my memory serves me right, the Bill as introduced provided a uniform allowance of $4 a day, but objection was raised in the other House—we are all abandoning the rule now, so I shall have to follow suit—that there would be no provision at all for two cases. I am not sure whether the two cases were mentioned, but one was, and the one that was mentioned was that there was no provision that would enable the board to rely upon the attendance of expert witnesses. Consequently, a minimum was fixed. The other case is this.

5 p.m. Very often boards are held at points where it is impossible that $4 will be sufficient to cover anything like remuneration and expense, or even expenses alone. Usually, this fee will do so, and the minister feels that $4 will be virtually the uniform charge everywhere, but he submitted to the argument that it would not cover every case and consequently, he yielded the point and had the fee of $4 fixed as the minimum.

Mr. CROTHERS: In Ontario, I understand expert witnesses are paid a very much larger fee than the ordinary witness fee.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Section 34 of the Act reads:

> Every person who is summoned and duly attends as a witness shall be entitled to an allowance for expenses according to the scale for the time being in force with respect to witnesses in civil suits in the superior courts in the province where the inquiry is being conducted.

I understand now that we fix the amount of the witness fee at $4.

Mr. MEIGHEN: As a minimum.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend says that this word "minimum" is to protect the case of an expert.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what was urged in the Senate.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is not necessary. In the Quebec courts an expert is entitled to a larger fee than an ordinary witness receives. Of course, it has to be established that he is an expert. In my own practice I have seen quite often—and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) knows it too—that such expert witnesses as architects, doctors or civil engineers appearing before a court are entitled by the laws of the province to a special fee. Therefore, my hon. friend is opening a dangerous ground for fees which, under ordinary circumstances, might be quite satisfactory at the fixed sum of $4.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was the minister's intention to fix the fee at $4.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Why say "minimum"?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I must admit I do not see much force in the objection to which I referred and which was raised in the Senate. It would seem to me the objection was covered, but it is easy to conceive of cases where, for example, if the inquiry were held, say in Ottawa and men were brought here, it would take $4 a day to pay their expenses; they would be getting less than they were getting before. This is an allowance to cover expenses and fees. The section does not refer to fees at all. It reads:

> Every person who is summoned and duly attends as a witness shall be entitled to an allowance for expenses according to the scale for the time being in force—

Mr. LEMIEUX: "With respect to witnesses in civil suits."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, the allowance is to witnesses in civil suits; it is an allowance for expenses. As I understand it, the whole allowance they will get now is $4.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A minimum of $4.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I mean. But the minimum of $4 is to cover everything the witness gets, because everything he gets is an expense allowance. That is what I am arguing.

Mr. CROTHERS: A man's transportation is over and above the amount he gets per day?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, he gets transportation.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The Minister of Justice knows that after a case is finished, the witnesses will go before a registrar of the court or the prothonotary and have their fees taxed. Those fees include their travelling allowance and expenses for being called as witnesses in the case. If they stay one day, two days, three days, a week they are paid so much per day in addition to their travelling expenses.

Mr. MORPHY: The question raised by this section involves an addition to the rights and powers of the workman, making it easier for him to obtain a board under the Act, and in that sense, I think the change is to be commended. There may be, although such have not been clearly pointed out within my hearing, special cases where it is difficult to obtain a meeting, but I would understand that in 99 cases out of 100, a meeting of the men belonging to a union could easily be convened because they will more or less live in the same neighbourhood. As regards the form of the section, I think it is rather left-handedly drawn, and I would suggest that it would be much clearer, no matter what principle is to be adopted if it read in this way:

> The application and the declaration accompanying it shall be signed, if made, by two officers of any trade union so appearing who have been authorised in writing by a majority of the members thereof.

At present it reads:

> The application and the declaration accompanying it shall be signed, if made by employees who are members of a trade union, by two of its officers duly authorised by a majority of the members of the union.

I do not like that word "duly." I agree with my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) and my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) that it does not leave the form of authorization sufficiently clear in the public mind. One union might consider that it was duly authorized by one course of procedure, while another union might adopt an altogether different course, also under the conviction that it was duly authorized. The authorization should be clear and beyond dispute. I think that the section as it is proposed is undoubtedly adding to rather than taking from the powers of workmen to obtain boards, and in that respect it should be commended.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think that the explanation of the difficulties we are having at the moment arises from the fact that while there are two clauses which we have been discussing, some of us have had our minds fixed only on subsection (d) while others have been speaking in reference to subsection (e). The minister just a moment ago said that he had acquainted the Minister of Labour with what I had said and that that hon. gentleman was quite aware of the points I had raised. May I mention the fact that up to to-day I have not discussed subsection (e) at all. The point I am raising in regard to subsection (e) I was reserving until we had reached that subsection, and in discussing subsection (d) I pointed out at the time these objections: first of all, of departing from the requirement that a vote be taken and registered in a record, and secondly, that some notice of the meeting be made compulsory so that those interested should be present. These sections were in the previous Act in the provisions corresponding with subsection (d) of this Act, and it would have been well to retain them in that subsection. However, they have been stricken out; and while I can quite understand that officers of unions may have made representations to the minister that they preferred to have subsection (d) in the form in which he now proposes it, I will venture the opinion that no representative of any union ever asked the minister to change subsection (e) to the form in which it now stands, and I am perfectly sure the Minister of Labour does not yet perceive the full significance of this subsection as it now stands or he would not permit it to come before this committee. May I suggest to my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Morphy) a concrete case and leave it to his own judgment as to whether he thinks it wise that the change proposed should be made? Let us assume that the street railway system of Stratford is operated by men, none of whom are members of a trade union. The men that work on that railway may or may not be organized; I am not sure; but I am assuming for the sake of argument that none of them are members of a trade union. Under the amendment now being introduced, any person who has a grievance against the railway system of Stratford can go to any two men employed on that railway and persuade them to circulate a petition among their fellow-workers asking for a board of investigation into the operations of that railway system. They may say: "There are certain things which we desire to bring out in regard to this company's business, and we can bring them out if we obtain a board, because we can put on that board any person we please and so bring the company into court, so to speak." They can investigate the books of the company, compel the production of documents, examine witnesses under oath, and drag the business of that transportation system into a court of investigation and have its affairs inquired into at the expense of the Government, all at the instance of any two men who, for any consideration that may be offered them, can contrive to secure enough names to a petition asking for a board. Would my hon. friend from North Perth wish to have the great public utilities of this country—the street railways, the railway systems of Canada, the coal mines, the metalliferous mines, the telegraphs, the telephones, and all other great public service utilities—would my hon. friend, I say, desire to have these large and important enterprises subjected to interference of that kind on the part of people who may happen to be nothing but mischief makers? If he would not, he cannot support the amendment, which reads:

by two of their number duly authorized by a majority of such employees.

The old Act required that there should be a majority vote, and further, that there should be a notice of three days so that every one likely to be affected could attend the meeting and say whether or not the application should be put in. I am as sure as that I am standing here that the Minister of Labour would not for one moment bring in the amendment if he saw its significance. I am sure he has not seen it, and I therefore again ask my hon. friend not to press it at this time.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (Algoma): The leader of the Opposition apparently desires what I was asking for when the Bill was before the House a few evenings ago, and that is, that before a board shall be asked for there shall have been an expression of opinion by a very substantial number of those who were interested and not at the instance of two or three sore heads, if I may use that expression. Under the law as is has hitherto stood, all that was necessary was for two agitators to arrange to call a meeting by giving three days' notice. There might be half a dozen men or so at the meeting, which might be called at such time and in such manner as might not meet the convenience of the employees generally. But if a majority of the men present at that meeting voted in favour of the application then they had the right to demand a board. Under the amendment as it has been introduced there must be a majority of all the men. Now, the assumption of my hon. friend that agitators can go around and get a written authorization asking for a board simply at the request of some who might desire to embarrass the company for which they were working, must be based on the previous assumption that the men, to say the very least, have very little sense of responsibility in regard to their work or in regard to what they owe the public; and if that is the case, surely it is a safeguard to provide that the board shall be granted only at the demand of a majority of all the men and not because a very limited minority, as would undoubtedly happen in many instances, might ask for it. Under the Act as it stands at pr s-ent all that is required is that there shall be a majority of those present. I am not betraying any confidence when I say that I have discussed this subject personally with members of trades unions and also with the Minister of Labour, and I think that this provision is a wise one. It provides that there shall be a responsible body of employees behind any application for a Board of Conciliation. As stated by my hon. friend from Maisonneuve, there are agitators throughout the length and breadth of this country who are ready to take advantage of any opportunity which may be inadvertently afforded them to create disturbance. It would be unwise to leave the door open for them to call meetings recklessly:

Mr. LEMIEUX: And take a surprise vote:

Mr. NICHOLSON (Algoma): Yes. Yet, if it were possible for a small number of men to convene a meeting and call for a board, just such conditions as are apprehended might be brought about.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the committee will readily concede that I have not tried to push this Bill unduly either in the House or in Committee. This is the third period to which it has been postponed, and if I had any doubt as to the Minister of Labour properly apprehending the clause I would ask that the committee rise again. But I have no doubt in the matter, because I know that the minister understands that he is here giving power to a majority to express itself by petition without a meeting, as well as power to a majority to express itself by petition at a meeting. He is giving that power to the majority whether they are all members of a trade union and likewise giving it to a majority whether they are not all members of a trade union but he feels that he can rely on the sense of responsibility of the majority, and, insisting on the majority, he does not feel like adding any other restrictions.

Mr. LEMIEUX: We are experiencing this afternoon one of the inconveniences of our constitution or of the rules of the House. Ingenious, able, persuasive and eloquent as my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior is, yet everybody feels that there is a strong doubt running through his mind as to whether this amendment is a wise one. He himself expresses quite cautiously, of course, regret that the minister in charge of the Department of Labour, one of the most important, if not the most important, during the present crisis, is not allowed to come and explain his legislation before this House as he has explained it before the other House. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) is about to present amendments to the British North America Act. Has not the time come for some amendment which will enable ministers of the Crown to appear in each Chamber as their presence is needed according to the requirements of the legislation promoted in Parliament? We have an example this afternoon, because we must all realize that, notwithstanding the great ability of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, it would be a great advantage if the Minister of Labour were allowed to come on the floor of this House and explain why this amendment is proposed. We have an illustration this afternoon of the illogical position in which ministers are placed. In a few days legislation will be brought into this House which would require under ordinary circumstances the presence of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General is asking Parliament to increase his right of taxing the people of Canada. He will not be on the floor of this House to explain his legislation. Why not have here what they have in other countries—responsible ministers passing from one Chamber to another and explaining their legislation? There is nothing contrary to common sense in that, it is pure logic, and as the British constitution is the result of precedent coming slowly down from one generation to another, why not in this House, where progress is the banner word upon every one's lips, amend the constitution so as to permit a minister of the Crown to appear in each Chamber? Perhaps the Minister of Labour would be able to convince us that this amendment is wise, but apparently it is not a wise amendment since we find objection to it on both sides of the House.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE: I noticed in the public press that the president of the labour organization of the province of Nova Scotia was on his way from Sydney to Ottawa about this Bill. Has there been any communication between that official and the department in reference to the Bill? If he is coming here for that purpose I would be sorry if he should find the door shut and that nothing could be done.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know anything about the incident that the hon. gentleman refers to. I would really in all kindness though suggest that as the Bill was before the Senate for several weeks, he started a little late to come all the way from Sydney.

Mr. McKENZIE: It only takes two days.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They have their representatives here in the officers of the Department of Trades and Labour Congress. I feel sure that if the Minister of Labour had had any knowledge of this gentleman coming and had felt that it was worth while to ask that this Bill be deferred, he would have indicated that fact to me. He has not done so.

Mr. McKENZIE: Coming from a very large labour centre, I know something of the opinions of the labour men and I am not afraid to allow them to decide any business they may have before them. I think the minister will search in vain for any trouble resulting from the right which they enjoy of calling a meeting and deciding what shall be done. It is a time-honoured custom before a meeting is held to call their lodge together. Everybody interested attends and at that lodge meeting they decide to call this meeting of which three days' notice is required to be given. It is not called in a haphazard manner, the business is prepared beforehand and at that meeting the attendance is generally pretty large indeed, and there is a great deal of deliberation as to whether or not they will ask for a board. I would not like to see that right taken away.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not.

Mr. McKENZIE: It is to a certain extent. Now a majority can be obtained without a meeting at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is an added right.

Mr. McKENZIE: Once that is done they will never come together at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes.

Mr. McKENZIE: Does the minister say that under this provision they can get a majority by signing a petition and that after that is done they can have a meeting? I do not understand that to be the meaning of it; I understand that they must either accept one alternative or the other. The better way is to leave it to themselves to decide whether they want a board or not. We have had this system in practice for many years and I have never heard of any of those snap verdicts to which reference has been made this afternoon. In a mining camps or mining centres, when there is a possibility of a strike in the air a snap verdict is impossible. The people are all together, they are on the qui vive as to what is going on, and if a meeting is properly advertised for three days, I can assure the minister that the difficulty would be to find a place large enough to hold those who would attend. I would be sorry to see that right taken away or any curtailment of the benefit that comes from open discussion of what is really being asked for and what the requirements are. We are doing away with a very salutary remedy. The desire is in every one's mind to tell what his grievances are. Conclusions may be reached at that meeting quite different from the ideas they entertain when they get together. The minister knows the proverbial notion about signing a petition, and that in olden times the view as to petitions was "I will get enough men to sign a petition to behead the King if you give me permission to go around." Almost everybody will sign a petition; it is not like passing a vote at a public meeting. Coming as I do from a large labour centre and having been all my life in close touch with labour men I cannot allow this provision to pass without protesting against taking away any of the methods by which these men are now transacting their business, and substituting for it something that, to say the least, is not as democratic as the present system.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have only one word to say in reply to my hon. friend. I would suggest that the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) transfer the adjective "ingenious" which he applied to me to his friend to his right (Mr. McKenzie) who seeks to oppose this amendment on the ground that it takes something away from the working man, namely the right to discuss his grievance at a meeting. That right is preserved to him intact and I think he will exercise it in virtually every case. But he has the added right if he chooses, to express his will by writing; no right is taken away.

Clause approved of on vote; Yeas 36, Nays, 29.

Bill reported and amendments read the first and second time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: When shall the Bill be read a third time?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suppose as the minister is determined to force the Bill through in its present form he might as well do so now as later on.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is it the unanimous consent of the House that the Bill be read a third time.

Mr. CANNON: I do not consent to the third reading of the Bill now. It is an important measure and we should follow the parliamentary rule with respect to it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The motion for third reading stands.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

On the motion of Rt. Hon. Mr. Doherty Bill No. 108 to amend the Exchequer Court Act was read a second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—constitution of the court.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the minister please explain the object of this section.

Mr. DOHERTY: The present section modifies the existing law only to the extent of designating the judges as the president and one puisne judge. At present under the Exchequer Court Act the court is constituted of a judge and an assistant. Last session the Judges' Act—which provides for the salaries of the judges of the Exchequer Court (it apparently then being in contemplation to add a third judge) made provision for the salaries of the president of the court and two judges. Now we find ourselves in the anomalous position, that whereas under the Exchequer Court Act the court was declared to be composed of a judge and an assistant judge, in the Act providing for salaries, provision is made for salaries for the president and two puisne judges. One object of this Bill is to bring these two Acts into agreement. I was not present last year when the legislation providing salaries for two puisne judges went through, but apparently at that time it was in contemplation that the court should consist of two puisne judges in addition to the president. On reflection it has been thought that that is not necessary at the present time, and that by making a provision—which will be found in a subsequent section of the Bill—conferring certain powers to deal with matters of practice upon the Registrar, we would be able to get along very nicely with the president and one puisne judge. Of course an amendment to the Judges' Act will be necessary to make that Act correspond with the present Bill. At present we have one judge of the Exchequer Court and an assistant judge, in the future we will have a president and one puisne judge.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the Government contemplate making any new appointments?

Mr. DOHERTY: This Bill does not involve any new appointments for the present. The court now consists of the judge who will be the president and an assistant judge, and the latter will naturally be the new puisne judge.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I certainly favour the change making the assistant judge a puisne judge, especially in view of the fact that he is so efficient a judge and possesses the confidence of all litigants in the country. I do not know why an exception is made in regard to the power to make general rules. Why should this power be confined to the president of the court? The rules of any other court are generally adopted by the judges of that court, the puisne judges acting in common with the president.

Mr. DOHERTY: That is the law as it stands at the present time. But here, I might point out, you have a court composed of two judges, and supposing those two judges did not agree on a particular rule, it would not be possible to make that rule. I think that is a sufficient reason why we should designate the president.

Mr. FORTIER: I think it would be more regular to call the president the "chief justice," following the practice in our Superior Courts.

Mr. DOHERTY: Parliament at the session of 1919 decided that question, when some understanding was come to in regard to it with the members of the court: While there may be some advantages in uniformity, still I do not know that any evil is done by using this designation, "President of the Exchequer Court," and it being already on the statute book I did not see any sufficient reason to change it.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Power to appoint a deputy judge.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: This is rather an extraordinary section. I would like the minister to explain it.

Mr. DOHERTY: Under section 140 of the Exchequer Court Act any person may be appointed a judge of the court who is or has been judge of a superior court or of a county court or who is a barrister of ten years' standing at the bar of any of the provinces. This section merely refers to those qualifications.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Is it not an innovation to appoint a judge temporarily?

Mr. DOHERTY: To make such an appointment would be an innovation; but to make a provision for deputy judges is not at all an innovation. For instance, there is provision in our law for the appointment of deputy judges in the county court under similar circumstances; and under the law as it stands there is provision for the appointment of a deputy judge for the Exchequer Court. That provision required modification because there was only one judge and—

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I quite understand that there are temporary appointments, but what I want to direct the attention of the minister to is that under this amendment a temporary judge appointed at the pleasure of the Governor in Council might be appointed to try one particular case. I think that is objectionable, and that it would be better legislation to select a temporary judge from members of the bench.

Mr. DOHERTY: There is perhaps ground for objection on that account. This particular wording has been adopted because in the past it was found that if you appoint a deputy judge to act during the absence or illness of a judge, you have no definite thing that settles the moment when such absence or illness ceases. Therefore it was thought that the Governor in Council might be trusted to terminate the office of a deputy judge when the purpose of his appointment has been served. However, I would have no objection to make that read:

or upon a certificate of the President of the Court that the purpose to be served had been accomplished.—

or something like that, so that we would have an official declaration of when the powers terminated. Before making that amendment, however, there is another amendment which occurs to me, and which I think will commend itself to the committee. It seems to me that perhaps it is objectionable that the Governor in Council should have, as under the present terms of the section, general power to appoint a deputy judge for any reason which he deems sufficient. I think there should be some check on that power. Therefore I desire to move that the section be amended by inserting in line twenty-two between the words "or" and "for" the words "at the request of the President." The section would then read:

The Governor in Council may, in the case of the sickness or absence from Canada or engagement upon other duty of the President or the Puisne Judge, or, at the request of the President, for any other reason which he deems sufficient,— and so on. The effect of that will be to limit the power of the Governor in Council to the three specified cases: Sickness, absence from Canada, or engagement upon other duties, of the president or of the puisne judge. I would be quite happy, however, if the hon. gentleman can suggest the language, to meet the objection which has been made.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is this not new legislation? I cannot recall a case where power has been vested in a judge to ask for the appointment, or practically to make the appointment, of a deputy judge.

Mr. DOHERTY: He will not appoint the deputy judge; he will simply request an appointment. If the President of the Court exposes the necessity for there being a deputy judge, then the Governor in Council is empowered to appoint one, but the President of the Court does not designate the man who shall be appointed, nor is the Governor in Council bound to make the appointment. There is analagous power in the case of the Superior Courts of the province of Quebec and the Court of Appeal. If the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal represents that by reason of illness or some other impediment preventing one of the judges from carrying out his duties there is occasion for such an appointment, there is power to appoint an assistant judge. So with the Superior Court, and my impression is, with other provincial courts. Quite recently we made a similar provision for the purpose of providing an acting judge in the Supreme Court in cases where there might be occasion for doing so. This power to appoint a deputy judge has always existed in regard to the Exchequer Court. The difference is that we have to provide not merely for cases of absence or illness of the president or of the puisne judge, but also for absence through other causes which we cannot at the moment specify. For instance, the parties interested might be close relatives of the president of the court or of the puisne judge; there are many cases where a judge might find himself disqualified. These general terms were adopted to avoid the necessity for foreseeing all these cases. At the same time we are putting such a check upon the exercise of the power that there need be no apprehension that it will be unduly exercised. It cannot be exercised unless the President of the Court asks for it, and if the reasons given are deemed insufficient there is no obligation on the Governor in Council to exercise it.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not object to the authority being in the Governor in Council to appoint an assistant or deputy judge for the time being and for special cause. If the minister will provide that the selection shall be made from among the judges of the Superior Court in the province where the action arises, I shall have no objection.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is not proposed that the selection should be limited to judges of the Superior Court, because if you did that you might be taking away from his own work a man who could not very well be spared. The qualifications required in the man to be appointed are exactly the same as will be required of a man to be appointed as judge, that is, he should be a judge of a Superior or County court, or a barrister of ten years' standing in the province. I do not think that the deputy judge should be required to possess greater qualifications than the judge himself.

Mr. McKENZIE: A barrister of ten years' standing does not become a competent judge all at once. We have seven Supreme Court judges in Nova Scotia, and I do not think that any occasion would arise to prevent any one of them from stepping outside his usual work to try a special case. I assume that conditions in other provinces are the same. There should be some provision to secure for the purposes of this provision an experienced man who is in the public eye and against whose appointment there could be no reasonable objection.

Mr. DOHERTY: This is only to provide for possible cases, which will be very few and far between. If one of these judges dies, the public will have to accept a barrister of ten years' standing as the permanent judge. Is there any very great danger that that barrister of ten years' standing would not be competent to act as deputy judge? The qualifications sufficient to justify a man's selection as permanent head of the court ought to be sufficient to justify his employment as deputy judge. Under this Bill, you may appoint as deputy judge a judge of another court if he be available, but to make it essential that you should take him away creates a situation where you may be embarrassed because there are courts and judges who have all the work they can do.

Mr. FORTIER: As these extraordinary powers are being asked for probably on account of increased business before that tribunal, instead of appointing a temporary judge, why not have a third judge appointed permanently?

Mr. DOHERTY: That has been considered, and we have given to the registrar certain powers contained in a subsequent section of this Bill, thus providing ample man-power, if I may use that expression, to carry on all the work of the court so long as that man-power is available. But it is to be foreseen that you may have accidents when your actual men are not all available, and this is merely to provide that when that accident happens, we shall be able to call somebody in to do the work. The hon. gentleman's remedy would be to provide more men than are necessary to do the work, as a rule, because occassionally you may require, not an additional judge, but just somebody to take the place of a man who drops out on account of illness or some other cause of that kind. We have, as I have said, satisfied ourselves with conferring on the registrar the powers contained in a subsequent section, so that we shall have quite sufficient to attend to this work, with the presiding and the puisne judges as long as they are both available. But in the uncertainty of human events, we have to provide for the accidental cases where one of them might not be available, and we take the means of providing a temporary person instead of loading the country with a permanent judge at a permanent salary so as to have somebody, perhaps, for one week in the year, when he may be required to take the place of a judge who is ill.

Mr. FORTIER: What salary will you give to this temporary judge?

Mr. DOHERTY: No provision is made in this Bill for a special salary to this deputy judge, because we cannot tell for how long we may want him. We may want him only for a week. We shall not give him a permanent salary because he will not be a permanent judge; he will be appointed when occasion requires, and his powers will terminate when the occasion for them terminates and just as is done with deputy judges provided for in the county courts, no provision is made for a salary. In most instances deputy judges who have been appointed in connection with county courts have worked without salary. In some exceptional cases where a long period of time is involved or some exceptional heavy work has been put upon them, power has been asked to provide for remuneration for this temporary work. This is not a permanent position in any sense of the word at all; it is making provision for a possible occasional, temporary need.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This power conferred on the Governor in Council by this clause may not be used very frequently, but it creates a precedent. I think it is the first time we give the Governor in Council power to appoint temporary judges.

Mr. DOHERTY: The power already exists with regard to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is the change then?

Mr. DOHERTY: The change as I pointed out is that in the present legislation, we are not limiting the power to specified cases of necessity.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

After Recess.

The committee resumed at Eight o'clock.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—registrar, appointment and salary:

Mr. McMASTER: I would draw the attention of the minister to tthe expression "reside and keep an office at the city of Ottawa, and be paid a salary." This might be interpreted to mean—what I do not believe to be the meaning intended—that out of his salary of $5,000 the person appointed must maintain an office. I presume that is not the intention, but I would suggest that the phraseology is somewhat unhappy

Mr. DOHERTY: The phraseology in that respect is that of the Act that is being amended. However, if my hon. friend thinks that the language is at all ambiguous I move to amend clause 3 by striking out the words "keep an" in the seventh line on page 2 of the Bill and replacing them with the words "have his," so that the clause will read:

—who shall hold office during pleasure, reside and have his office at the city of Ottawa, and be paid a salary of five thousand dollars per annum.

Amendment agreed to and clause as amended agreed to.

On the title:

Mr. McKENZIE: May I ask the minister a question in regard to clause 2 amending section 8 of the old Act?

The CHAIRMAN: That clause has been carried and only by unanimous consent can consideration of it be reopened. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the hon. member have leave to revert to clause 2?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE: I was going to ask the minister what changes had been made.

Mr. DOHERTY: In the third line after the the word "or" and before the word "for" there were inserted the words "at the request of the president." There was some question as to the advisability of vesting in the Governor in Council the power of terminating at pleasure the office of the deputy judge appointed under this section, but I do not think it is reposing a very great deal of confidence in the Government to give them that power.

Mr. McKENZIE: What about the qualifications of the men appointed?

Mr. DOHERTY: The deputy must be absolutely the same class of man as the man who is eligible for appointment to the permanent office.

Bill as amended reported.

Mr. DOHERTY: If there is no objection I should like to have it read the third time now.

Mr. SPEAKER: It can, of course, be read the third time now only by unanimous consent.

Bill read the third time and passed.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT.

The House resumed from May 6, consideration in committee of Bill No. 12 (Hon. Mr. Guthrie) respecting the election of members of the House of Commons and the electoral franchise—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When progress was last reported upon this Bill, all of the clauses and schedules had been read and considered. Paragraph (k) of clause 2; clauses 29, 32, 37, 44, 45, 63 and 101; the amendmets proposed by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) to clause 37 and by the hon. the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) to clauses 29, 44 and 101, were allowed to stand for further consideration. Clauses 19 and 76, which provide for the expenditure of money, cannot be adopted until the House has concurred in the required resolution. The other clauses have been adopted. Clause 29 is under consideration. Mr. Guthrie has moved to amend clause 29 by adding to subclause 2 the following words:

Provided that no disability imposed by paragraph (b) of subsection four of section eight of "The Naturalization Act," chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1919 (first session) shall disentitle a person on that ground alone to the said Certificate.

Mr. Euler has moved in amendment to the amendment to strike out in its entirely subclause 2 of clause 29 of the Bill. The question is on the sub-amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE: When this committee rose the other evening I was dealing with the amendment of the hon. member of South Waterloo (Mr. Euler) striking subclause 2 of section 29 out of the Act. The contention is that all the purpose of a franchise Act of a liberal and proper kind can be served by the enactment of the first paragraph of clause 29 and that the second paragraph is not necessary and is merely making it difficult for a certain class of people who are entitled to vote to exercise the right of the franchise. The first part of section 29 reads as follows:

> Save as in this Act otherwise provided, every person, male or female, shall be qualified to vote at the election of a member, who, not being an Indian ordinarily resident on an Indian reservation,
> (a) is a British subject by birth or naturalization; and,
>
> (b) is of the full age of twenty-one years; and,
> (c) has ordinarily resided in Canada for at least twelve months and in the electoral district wherein such person seeks to vote for at least two months immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election.

The contention is that all that is necessary to provide for the qualification of everyone is to stipulate that he is a Briish subject, is twenty-one years of age, has resided in Canada for twelve months and has resided in the district in which he seeks to vote for two months. That has been the rule since Confederation. I was saying, the other evening when we ended the day's debate, that, if that is not the intention of the Government and if they are determined to put this Act through, it should be made as easy as possible for applicants who must apply for the certificate provided for under subsection 2 of section 29 to get that certificate. As it is now, there is only one class of officials to whom applicants can apply, that is judges of the Supreme and County Courts. I think that both these classes of judges are entitled to hear applications for naturalization under the present Naturalization Act. The subsection says that applications shall be heard before the people who are authorized to hear applications under the Naturalization Act. I would also point out that women, young men or old men, who may need these certificates, are just as important and deserving a class as men who were seeking to get away from service under the Military Service Act and that the same facilities for application should be given to these men and women who will seek these certificates that were given to men who were applying for exemption. Under the law providing for exemption there were thirty courts in the three counties of Cape Breton, Richmond and Victoria. In that large district there is only one judge residing at Sydney and if this Act goes through any person looking for a certificate and residing in the counties of Richmond, Cape Breton or Victoria must go to that one judge in order to make application. I submit this is an extraordinary measure as some will be 150 miles away from this judge's office in the city of Sydney, and it is practically impossible for people at the extreme ends of these districts, or for that matter in other parts of the districts, except in Syndey, to apply for the certificate. I further said to the minister—and I wish to receive some attention in connection with this matter—that there are not sufficient grounds given for the application. The specific grounds upon which one applies for this certificate are not set out at all. On page 83 of the Bill itself there are certain classes of questions prescribed in connection with Form K 2, as follows:

> Interrogatories to be administered orally, under oath or affirmation, to applicants in person for registration as voters.

The questions that shall be asked of the applicant are made perfectly clear. He will be asked:

> 1. What is your surname?
> 2. What is your full Christian name or names?
> 3. Where is your ordinary place of residence and what is your post office address?
> 4. What is your occupation?
> 5. Do you now reside in polling division No. ..... (or as the case may be) of the electoral district of..... for which you now apply to be registered?
> 6. Are you of the full age of twenty-one years?
> 7. Are you a British subject?
> 8. Are you such by birth or by naturalization? State which.
> 9. If by naturalization when and how were you naturalized?
> 10. Have you a certificate from a judge entitling you to be registered as a voter?

These questions—there are some more—make it perfectly clear to the applicant for registration what he has to answer, and if any person feels that he cannot answer them he need not go to the trouble of applying. I submit that when a person has to go a long distance, perhaps 150 or 200 miles, to a judge for the certificate which will be required under subsection 2, he at least should have some conception of the questions that he would be required to answer when he comes before the judge. I presume that an application can be made on behalf of the applicant by a lawyer or some other person who is entitled to appear before the court. A lawyer preparing a case under subclause 2 of section 29 has very little intimation of the kind of material in the shape of evidence that he will be expected to put before the judge. If this Bill must pass and this requirement is to be exacted from people before they can vote, the least that can be done is to give those people some idea of what they will have to answer. Under the Naturalization Act it is well laid down what the applicant has to do, what he has to know, what he must provide for; and if he cannot comply with those requisites it will be absolutely unnecessary for him to apply.

On another occasion I pointed out the rights of the men and the women who will be disfranchised by section 2 unless they get a certificate. I think it was the minister himself who pointed out that these people never had the right to vote, and consequently are not suffering any loss; that the granting of the franchise is a privilege that must, in some special way, be conferred upon an individual. I do not think that that argument is as strong as it might appear. Even if it were all right and worthy of its full face value, the Act of 1918 which conferred the right to vote upon women in Canada explicitly gave them the franchise. I am only dealing with women who were British subjects on the 24th of May, 1918. The Act referred to gave votes to women in express terms; and if they are to be deprived—in an indirect way by the words of subsection 2 of section 29 of the Franchise Act—of the right to vote, we are depriving them of a right which they now hold and can exercise until this Bill goes into force. I need not tell the minister or this committee that the right to vote is a property right. It is regarded not only in this country, but in Great Britain and in other countries of equal civilization, absolutely as a property right, and interference with it is regarded as an interference with a property right. Thus if a man is deprived of his vote by any individual putting obstacles in his way he can go into the courts of the country and sue for damages. That is not anything new, it has been done over and over again, showing conclusively that the exercise of the right to the franchise is tangible absolute property, and the taking of it away from a man is taking away his property. I submit, therefore, that if the minister insists upon passing subclause 2 now before the committee, he will be passing a law that takes away from thousands of women in Canada a right which they now possess and which may be called their tangible and absolute property. Now let me deal with the other point, that unless the right to vote is conferred upon a British subject he does not possess it. The old Act says:

> An Alien to whom a certificate of naturalization is granted shall, within Canada be entitled to all political and other rights, powers and privileges, and be subject to all obligations to which a natural born British subject is entitled.

I am sure that no person possessing ordinary common sense would for one moment argue that does not imply the right to vote. Such a person has got to have all political and other rights, powers and privileges of a British subject born on British soil. Will any person say that a British subject, born on British soil, is not entitled to vote if he is otherwise qualified? I submit that he is so entitled and that this was the purpose of the old Naturalization Act, chapter 77 of the Revised Statutes. The present Act, which was passed after the war began, and after we were given every opportunity of fully considering its effects provides as follows:

> A person to whom a certificate of Naturalization is granted by the Secretary of State of Canada shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be entitled to all political and other rights, powers and privileges, and be subject to all obligations, duties and liabilities, to which a natural-born British subject is entitled or subject, and as from the date of his naturalization have to all intents and purposes the status of a natural-born British subject.

That is the Act we passed in 1919, and that is the law to-day without any amendment or interference of any kind. I submit again that there is no question as to what is implied in the statement "entitled to all political and other rights, powers and privileges;" it means of course that a man has the right to vote. Take the case of a Belgian woman who before the war came to this country and married a Canadian. Under our law she became a British subject. Such a woman, let us say, has remained in this country, has made the Dominion her own country, so to speak. She has been standing by us and has continued on the most friendly terms; but when we come to give the vote we say to that Belgian woman, a British subject and a citizen of this country: You cannot vote; because of a disturbance in this country, when we got into a bad humour, we are going to visit the sins and iniquities of another country upon you; and although you have for years been a British subject, although you have given birth to and brought up children in this country, although you have worshipped at the shrines where Canadian men and women worship, although you have fulfilled all the obligations of British citizenship and we have nothing to say against you—nevertheless when you come to the poll on election day we must refuse you the right to British citizenship. We ask hon. gentlemen opposite, why? I do not wish to use any strong language here, but I do not think there is a man living within the four corners of Canada who can give a satisfactory answer as to why a woman of that class should be deprived of the right of exercising the franchise in common with her husband.

I have already pointed out that I would not have so much fault to find with the Government in this connection if they had limited themselves to the disabilities which they have enforced in paragraph (b) of subsection 4, of clause 8 of the Naturalization Act—chapter 38 of the statutes of last year—and deprived aliens from enemy countries of the right to become naturalized for ten years. There would at least be some consistency about such action; they would be meting out the same treatment to those people when it came to naturalization as in the case of the exercise of the franchise. But we have widened the application of the proposed law altogether and made it apply to everybody who crosses the Atlantic to Canada unless they come from a British country. A German woman who went to the United States some years ago, became an American citizen there, and then located in Canada, or a Turkish woman who became naturalized in the United States and then came to this country, would have a right to vote; but a refined woman who came from France, or other friendly country in Europe, and passed all the educational tests of the class to which she belongs, would have no such right. Even a coloured woman, as has already been pointed out, or some other woman of no refinement at all, belonging to Mexico or some country of Central America, who marries a man and comes to Canada, has the right to the franchise. Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that we are here sowing the seeds of difficulties and differences which the youngest member of this Chamber will not live to see the end of.

Why, Sir, we are teaching foreigners to respect our flag—and that is a proper thing to do; we are teaching foreigners young and old to sing "God save the King"; we are telling them that they are entitled to all the rights and privileges which we possess. On our days of celebration, on the Queen's birthday and Dominion Day, we gather the children together and ask them to salute the flag, to sing "God save the King," to be loyal to our King and country; and the little ones of foreign extraction are glad to join our own children, and their parents are proud to see them participating in those exercises. But when on election day those little foreigners find that the mothers of other children go to the polls to exercise that great right of British subjects—the right to choose their rulers, and they come home full of pride in their adopted country and say, "Mother, everybody is going to vote to-day. In the country we came from we had very little to do with anything like this, but here everybody has the right to say who shall govern. Mother, have you been down to vote?" And that poor mother will have to say, "I am not allowed to vote. This flag which we are so proud to salute, this King whose life you are singing that God may prolong so he may, through this Parliament, continue to reign over us—that flag, that King and that Parliament have disfranchised me and I have no right to vote like other British subjects."

Mr. BUREAU: Shame!

Mr. LAPOINTE: Three times shame!

Mr. McKENZIE: Let me tell you, Sir, that we are bringing humiliation to the hearts and minds of those youngsters that they will never forget and never forgive, and we are bringing humiliation to the parents that they will never forget and never forgive. And what is it all for? I would like to be able to answer that question, but I cannot.

The policy of this great country should be, as we have been taught often during this session, to make the most of the foreigner in our midst, to confer upon him the right to vote, to exact from him all the duties of a citizen, so that we may have a better and a more united country. Not very long ago the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) quite properly initiated a discussion as to what we were doing for the children of our foreigners to put them on the same footing educationally with our own children; and every one was anxious that ways and means should be found to educate not only those children but the parents themselves in the principles of our Government and the ideals of our nation. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Steele) recently proposed a resolution calling upon all of us to get together and see what we could do for our foreign population, and he said that we were too slow in bringnig them into proper line with our national ideals and principles of government and were not making the most of their talents. Well, we were all willing to fall in line with the hon. member, and also with the hon. member for Frontenac, in doing whatever was possible to advance the interests of these foreigners, and so advance our own. But when, immediately after those fervent speeches, it comes down to the first practical test, we say to these foreigners, "Away with you! We know you not. No privilege is coming to you so long as we can keep it from you.

I submit, Sir, that it is not worth while for the minister and the Government to take those drastic steps for any results that they expect to get therefrom. I hope that their better judgment will prevail, and that the minister in charge of this Bill will withdraw this objectionable clause, so that every British subject in this country may be in a position on election day to exercise his God-given right to say who shall rule over him for the next five years.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the committee at any great length, but I feel that it is my duty to supplement the powerful appeal we have just had from the hon. member for Cape Breton North (Mr. McKenzie), succeeding, as it does, to many others. I feel it is my duty to emphasize the central anomaly of this clause. I have neither the legal knowledge nor the desire to go into any detail on the matter. But it has been stated again and again that the ministry and their supporters are proposing to pass a clause whereby a negress married to a Mexican shall be able to vote in this British country under the British flag, while by the same clause that right will be denied to numerous women coming from the countries of Europe, whether those countries are inhabited by our Allies or by those who were recently our enemies. And this is the twentieth year of the twentieth century!

It is an anachronism, it is an injustice, it is an absurdity; and with all the power of voice and thought I protest against such legislation going on the statute book of a British country. It is a disgrace. If I had my way this session would last a good deal longer while every member who feels this in his blood made his protest, as we have tried to make it.

I endorse the first remarks which fell from my hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) last Thursday, when he said that it is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this question. It is important because it goes to the very fundamentals of the differences which have divided parties throughout the British Empire ever since franchise reform was spoken of. It goes to the very root of the matter, and it raises in acute form the difference between reaction or toryism on the one hand and progressive, democratic or liberal views upon the other. For my part, I am proud to be associated with those who stand on this matter for the progressive and the broad view as against the reactionary and restricted view. That is the question regarded from the political standpoint as a matter of justice and decency.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Now, one cannot be surprised at an honest Tory like my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie supporting a clause like this, because he has told us whence he derives his information on electoral matters. He says that in matters of franchise and things relating to the constitution he would rather follow Edmund Burke than the humble individual now addressing this committee. But that was a very poor way to put the point. What he should have said was that he would rather follow Edmund Burke than the general opinion, as we had thought it was, of the whole of the electorate of Canada. I thought it was understood that we lived in a democratic country where Edmund Burke's views had long been forgotten. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if my hon. friend has really studied Mr. Burke or whether the particular quotation on which he based himself the other night was given to him by some one. I am not going into this question at length; I do not want to go into it, because I should be very sorry to be called to order four times by the Chairman or to be called to order at all. But I think it is perfectly germane to the argument that I am trying to present and perfectly germane to the discussion of this clause to show how it is perfectly natural for a hoary-headed Tory to vote for the narrow and restricted view upon this question, especially when he derives his inspiration from Edmund Burke.

Now, Edmund Burke was one of the most colossal figures that ever sat in the British House of Commons. But after all, he lived one hundred and forty years ago. While other persons referred to in the debate the other night lived a great deal longer time ago and were good instructors on morals, I have never heard that we went to either the New or the Old Testament for instruction on the electoral franchise. I do not know how elections were conducted in Judaea, but we do not go there for our inspiration on the franchise. However, let us see the kind of inspiration we should get by going to Edmund Burke. Mr. Burke made a famous speech upon this very question of the representation of the people in the House of Commons. I do not propose to read the speech, I need not say; but I will read two or three extracts from it. He said:

> The reason for the Crown as it is, for the lords as they are, is my reason for the Commons as they are, the electors as they are.

And what is the fact about the Commons and the electors when Edmund Burk lived?

There were hardly any electors. The House of Commons was elected on a very narrow and restricted franchise under the dictation of the House of Lords. That is the condition under which Mr. Edmund Burke lived, and he argued for a continuance of that condition by saying he would have the Commons and the electors kept as they are, just as he wanted to keep the lords and the Crown as they were. I say that any one who derives his inspiration from that source would naturally vote for any clause restricting the franchise in any way imaginable. So Tories have always been; every successive extension of the suffrage has had to be wrung from them; has had to be beaten out of them. Now, let me give my hon. friend another quotation from his favourite and inspirer. Burke says again:

> Now, I ask, what advantage do you find that the places which abound in representation possess over others in which it is more scanty, in security for freedom, in security for justice, or in any one of those means of procuring temporal prosperity and eternal happiness, the ends for which society was formed?

That is a beautiful passage to guide the deliberations of a democratic assembly in what we suppose to be the democratic country of Canada! And yet Edmund Burke is the inspirer of at least some of the thought on the other side of the House. Well, I repeat, it is no wonder that votes from that source will go to restricted franchise. Then, he ended that speech with the famous passage which begins:

> I look with filial reverence on the constitution of my country.

The constitution was The King, to whom we are still all loyal; it was the House of Lords, and it was the House of Commons, created under a very narrow, restricted franchise, and unequal distribution, and at the bidding in many cases of the House of Lords. It was the day of rotten boroughs, the classes ruling and the people being told to be thankful that their temporal affairs and their eternal salvation were being looked after by their betters. That is the inspiration of my hon. friend from West Calgary, and it would be the inspiration of any one who had similar Tory proclivities coming down from so long ago.

But I am free to confess that I do not believe there are many Tories who would defend such a speech as that from which I have just quoted as applicable to present-day conditions. They ought to dissociate themselves, therefore, from the support of this clause, because after all, Mr. Chairman, for the last generation of men in this country there has been no difference, practically speaking, on questions of franchise between the different sides of politics.

But if it be true that not many Tories would derive their inspiration from that source, what am I to say of my Liberal-Unionist friends? Are they going to vote under the inspiration of Edmund Burke? Are they going to vote for giving to a negress a right which they refuse to French women? Are they going to vote for that, and then go back to the broad prairies and the clear air and the broader thoughts of Western Canada and expect their views to be accepted by the electorate? I see my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Halladay) in his place. I see my hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. J. M. Douglas). There are very few Liberal Unionists in the Chamber. I see my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Henders), and I see my hon. friend from Fraser Valley (Mr. Stacey). I cannot count any other Liberal Unionists on that side. But I should like to appeal to these hon. gentlemen, who have been influenced by Liberal traditions and who have Liberal views. I put it to them plainly, and to those who act with them; are they going to vote for a clause which confers electoral rights upon negresses married to Mexicans in this broad, free, democratic country and in this twentieth century, which rights they refuse alike to alien women and to women of our allies coming from Europe? That is the simple question. I repeat that to vote for the clause is to vote for the enactment of an anachronism, an injustice and an absurdity.

There is no need to threaten the Government over the business; it will be very simple to have the clause dropped. We know that from what we have seen happen in the House in recent times. The other day, under the guidance of the minister, my hon. friend (Mr. Tweedie) wasted nearly a day of the time of this House when everybody who has the real interests of Canada at heart is trying to get to the end of the session—wasted it over an amendment. You know what happened to the amendment. At least, I do not think anybody does quite know—it disappeared; it is gone. All that happened was that my hon. friend from Neepawa (Mr. Davis), whom I should like to have had the honour of addressing on this question, rose and said: Now, you had better drop this thing—and dropped it was. They say that on the field of battle when men are in the moment of defeat and panic they sometimes roar before they run. However that may be, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Tweedie) the other day made a brave showing for sixty minutes; then he wandered out of the Chamber with the amendment which he had wasted a day over, in his back-tail pocket. There the amendment disappeared. They laughed best who laughed last in a matter of that kind. All that is necessary for any of my Liberal-Unionist friends who insist here that they should not support this thing, is not to vote against the Government—they will never get the chance of killing the Government in that way if I can trust recent experiences—but to tell the Government to kill the clause, and that will be done. The responsibility is a tremendous one. There is an old saying: "If you scratch a Russian, you will find a Tartar." Well, we have come to the time in this country when the people are asking: If you scratch a Unionist, do you find a Tory? That is a very serious question for my Liberal-Unionist friends to consider. I am very much afraid that this Government, having lost, one by one, their Liberal-Unionist representatives —to my great sorrow, we have a minister introducing this Franchise Act who has in his veins as good Liberal blood as ever flowed in Ontario—are bringing us to the position when the Unionism of the Government and the Liberalism of the Government will need a microscope to discover them and the broad reactionary Toryism of the aggregation will stand out in bold relief. The country will make no mistake about what it is dealing with; it will say: This Government formed upon a fifty-fifty basis has lost the red political blood; it has passed into a state of anaemic and degraded Edmund Burke Toryism, and the country will put it where it belongs.

I should like, if it be not too late, to appeal to the minister and to the other members of the Government. What is going to be gained by insisting upon a piece of legislation such as this? Why not drop the clause? From the party point of view, whom do hon. gentlemen think they are going to gain? I do not care to go behind the motives of those who support this monstrosity, for monstrosity it is tried by the single principle that I have endeavoured to lay down and emphasize. I found in the 1917 election that it was very doubtful, in many parts of the West at any rate, whether any party advantage was derived from the partial enfranchisement of women, that we had in that election. Men came to me and they said: "Do you mean to tell me it is true that Mrs. So-and-So has a vote and my wife has not?" I had to answer: "Yes, that is so." Then I knew what happened. Men who otherwise would have voted for me went straight to the ballot box and voted against me. From the party point of view, the proceeding is a very doubtful one. And the reason is not far to seek. The sense of justice and fairplay is so strongly ingrained in British peoples—I mean people under British institutions—that when an injustice is done, they will mark their reprobation of it by the first instrument that comes their way to handle, and I venture to think that though you debar women under this infamous clause, and those women possibly would vote against you, you will raise such a feeling amongst large numbers of your own supporters, male and female, that they will, by voting in another way, more than make up 9 p.m. for any gain you think you make —if you do think you make gain —by debarring certain women. But it is from the national point of view which has been so well put by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria that I plead with the Government. I was very much pleased with a remark the hon. member made the other day. He said: The war is over; eighteen months have elapsed since the Armistice was signed; it is our sacred duty, a duty to which I would fain believe that every one of us in this chamber is anxious to contribute his quota, to reconstruct this country, not only in its financial affairs, in its industrial life, in its economic life, but in what is far more important than that, by healing the mental wounds of war, by giving our people no grievance, by leaving them no sense of wrong, by establishing conditions under which we shall know that we are in a democratic country because every one of us has equal rights and democratic privileges. That is the ground upon which I would make my chief appeal to the ministry to drop this clause even at this period.

My hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie), in his concluding words, did, far better than I could, that which I rose to my feet with the intention of doing. He pleaded with the Government not to give growing children a grievance, to leave no sense of grievance nor injustice, after all the harrowing times of war, in the minds of any of our people. The Government are making a distinction in favour of the women of Mexico and Negresses as against women coming from France, Belgium and other European countries. The Government are inflicting an injury upon the fair name of Canada; they are inflicting a wrong upon certain people; they are creating a feeling of injustice; they are disgracing the statute book of this realm. I plead with the Government even now to see the error of their way and to drop this most iniquitous proposition. I shall have no hesitation whatever, but very great pleasure and pride, in voting with the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Euler).

Mr. BURNHAM: Just for a few minutes I should like to protest against the extraordinary position taken by my hon. friend (Mr. M. Clark). He would sacrifice, as I understand it, those people who came under this provision, provided, however, that the subclause shall not apply to any person born upon the continent of North America. In order that he should carry his point with regard to the others, he would sacrifice these people. As a matter of expediency or otherwise, or compliance with the Naturalization Act, we understand that those bringing in this Bill have found it necessary or advisable, for this occasion only, to make this limitation with a proviso, however, which attaches to itself a very great deal of importance and which the liberal-minded gentleman who has just sat down argues against in a most extraordinary way. He would have these people, to whom this franchise is extended, cut out rather than that those mentioned in the first part of the subclause should not be provided for as he has seen fit to assert they should be. This argument, therefore, of my hon. friend—I say this with all respect—nullifies itself. He has argued for the principle of the extension in the first part of the clause and absolutely and completely denied it in the second. I must confess that I am unable to comprehend such reasoning. It would have been far better not to have ridiculed the Mexican and the Negress, but, if you like, to have said that the Government were going too far in extending the franchise to the Mexicans and the Negresses, although I do not agree with him in that, provided they are intelligent people. But he has seen fit to ridicule their position and to say that the extension of the franchise to the Mexicans and Negresses is an absurdity in view of the first part of the clause. These pretty little jibes about scratching a Unionist and finding a Tory, and so forth, are very nice. But we do not have to scratch the farmers; they do that for themselves. I must confess that I think such remarks to be far from conducive to sane and reasonable discussion of the subject. It is not very dignified to quote the great Burke in one breath and try to throw contempt and ridicule upon this side of the House in the next. We know that Burke was a reactionary. We know of course that he stood for everything that was against the French revolution and seemed to be carried away by the Austrian princess who occupied the French throne at the time. But Burke nevertheless was an honourable man; he was a great man. Like others, he made his mistakes, and it is for us to sift the grain from the chaff and to appreciate and profit by whatever was right in that which he proclaimed. The great lesson of Burke to posterity, as I understand it, is the fact that his eminently philosophical mind clarified the situation and was above all things absolutely honest. He took some most extraordinary positions no doubt and was assailed by such men as Fox. But what he wrote regarding the sublime and beautiful will always appeal to us for the extraordinary and noble character of his mind and the loftiness of his conception, But I am well satisfied that the ministry, and the minister who is in charge of the Bill and who, as an hon. gentleman has well said, is a man of lofty and noble characteristics, have no personal motives in permitting the provision which this clause contains. And when the clause has served its purpose I am sure it will be repealed or amended.

Mr. BUREAU: After the next election.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BURNHAM: Honi soit qui mal y pense—evil be to him who evil thinks. If I made a statement that hon. gentlemen opposite construe as in the nature of an admission, I confess that I did so in the innocence of my mind. The unworthy meaning which hon. gentlemen opposite take pleasure in attaching to that statement certainly did not occur to me nor, I believe, to any other hon. member on this side.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. BURNHAM: Some people judge others according to their own standards.

Mr. BUREAU: To the pure all things are pure.

Mr. BURNHAM: Hon. gentlemen opposite ascribe to us motives the imputation of which, were they circumstanced as we are, they would no doubt resent. Let not hon. gentlemen judge others by themselves unless their standards are a little higher than those of the persons whom they judge. The very strong indictment made by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) undoubtedly sounds well enough, but I must repeat that it carries with it its own condemnation and does not indicate, if it is examined closely enough, that the clause before the committee and the following out of the Naturalization Act are not well advised and proper.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is that the answer of the Government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, if the minister and the Government will not be moved by the justice of the situation in regard to the amendment which is before the committee, I hope they will have regard for what should be owing their own sense of honour and obligation. When the minister who has charge of the Bill introduced it in this House he made a speech which called forth from different parts of the Chamber expressions of opinion more or less laudatory of the fair intention which the Government professed in regard to this legislation. The minister set forth what he claimed were the principles on which this legislation should proceed at the time of the introduction of the Bill, and on his subsequent address on the second reading, and when he had concluded the latter many of us on this side rose to express our appreciation of the spirit in which the Government proposed to deal with this all important legislation. I went out of my way to congratulate the minister on what I thought was his fair intent. I regret that it is now necessary to withdraw my words. In order that there may be no doubt about the matter I shall read to the committee the words which were spoken by the minister at the time and my own words in referring to the manner in which the hon. gentleman had introduced the measure. When he came before the House with the Bill on March 11 the minister said, as will be found in unrevised Hansard at page 353:

> Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to explain briefly the Bill which I have just asked the leave of the House to introduce. The purpose of the Bill is threefold: In the first place, to fix a uniform franchise throughout the Dominion; in the second place, to provide a uniform method for the preparation of voters' lists; and, in the third place, to provide a simple and satisfactory method for the conduct of elections.
> The franchise is to be established upon very broad principles.

Now, I would ask hon. members to listen to what the minister says were the principles on which the franchise were to be founded:

> The only requirements will be those of British citizenship, residence in Canada for one year and in the particular constituency for two months, and the attainment of the age of twenty-one years; these requirements will apply in the case of male and female voters alike.

That was the statement which the minister gave to Parliament and to the country and which has occasioned, from one end of Canada to the other, expressions of opinion favourable to the Government regarding the manner in which they avowedly professed to deal with this all-important question. On March 25 the minister spoke in almost identical language on the second reading of the Bill, and after my hon. friend had taken his seat, in replying to him—having been impressed by the eloquence of his remarks and what seemed to me to be the fairness of them—I spoke as follows:

> Let me take the features of the Bill as my hon. friend has stated them. He points out, in the first place, that the purpose of the Bill is to fix a uniform franchise throughout the Dominion. With that purpose we are in entire accord.

A little further down:

> The franchise, my hon. friend says, is to be established upon very broad principles. The only requirements in regard to qualifications will be, he informs us, those of British citizenship, residence in Canada for one year, and in the particular constituency for two months, and attainment of the age of twenty-one years; these requirements to apply in the cases of male and female voters alike. Now, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be fairer than that, and all that we ask, as respects the qualifications there set out, is that the Government shall not profess one thing and do another; that it shall not give with one hand and withhold with the other as respects the provisions of this enactment, or their relation to any other statutes which have been passed in the past or which may be passed in the future by this Parliament.
> Is not that exactly the effect of this proposed legislation? When I had uttered those words I heard my right hon. friend the Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster) say under his breath, but loud enough for me to hear, "Oh ye of little faith." The remark was not caught by the Hansard reporter, but when I heard these words of my right hon. friend I said to myself, thinking of the Government, "By their fruits ye shall know them." And it is by their fruits that we are judging them to-day, and that this country will judge them. I call upon hon. gentlemen opposite to comply with the pledge which they have given to this country. I ask them not to profess one thing before this Parliament at one time and then come along with legislation which takes away rights which they profess they are giving. This is the kind of thing that creates dissatisfaction from one end of the country to the other, that produces unrest, and that shakes the very foundations of government itself. Either the minister should have come before this Parliament and said that the Government were going to give, as they did under the War-time Elections Act, certain rights to certain British subjects and withhold those rights from others, or he should not have made any professions of fair play. When he comes now and says the Government are going to take away from some certain rights which are given to others, the country will judge him as he deserves to be judged. When a minister with the approval of his fellow-ministers, professing British justice for all British subjects, comes here and seeks to withhold from thousands of men and women the same British rights which are being given to other British subjects, neither he nor those behind him are entitled to the slightest measure of support.

Let me contrast if you will with the kind of precedent which this Government is setting up at the present moment British ideas with respect to the rights of British subjects as we have been taught to uphold them from British precedent. Reference was made in this debate a day or two ago to the case of Don Pacifico, a Portuguese Jew, who happened to be in Greece at the time riots occurred there. What was the incident referred to? The house of this man was ransacked, papers were stolen and some articles of furniture were destroyed. When he could get no redress from the Government of Greece he appealed to the British Government for redress. On what ground was his plea based? On the ground that he was a naturalized British subject. How was that plea met by the British Foreign minister? Did he meet it as my hon. friend proposes to deal with the Jews of this country who will be affected by this measure? Did he say, "We have nothing to do with you?" Or, did he say that Great Britain would watch over the rights of British subjects, whoever or whenever they might be? Lord Palmerston ordered the British fleet into the Piræus; the British Ambassador left Greece and went aboard one of the British ships; the fleet took possession of the harbour and of Greek ships and held them until justice was done to this Portuguese Jew. Later on Lord Palmerston was taken to task in the House of Commons by the Opposition because he had nearly involved Britain and Europe in a war through an action that seemed arbitrary and high-handed. What did Lord Palmerston do? He addressed the House of Commons on the rights of British subjects. Let me read to the members of this House Lord Palmerston's words on that occasion. His utterance comes with striking appropriateness to the situation with which we are confronted at the present moment. Here are the words of Britain's Foreign Minister at that time when he was defending his action in sending the British fleet into the harbour of Piræus to see that justice was done to one Portuguese Jew:

> The government of a great country like this is undoubtedly an object for fair and legitimate ambition among men of all shades of opinion. It is a noble thing to be allowed to guide the policy and destinies of such a country; and if ever it were an object of honourable ambition, it must be more than ever so at the moment at which I am speaking.

That was in 1850, and the reference which follows is to the revolutions which shortly before had spread throughout Europe. How infinitely more applicable is the reference to Europe of the last few years?

> Whilst we have seen, as has been stated, Europe rocking from side to side, thrones shattered, institutions overthrown and destroyed—when almost every country in Europe has been the scene of conflict, which has deluged the land with blood, from the Atlantic to the Black Sea, from the Baltic to the Mediterranean—this country has presented a spectacle honourable to the people of England, and worthy of the admiration of the world. We have shown that liberty is compatible with order; we have shown that individual freedom is reconcilable with obedience to law; we have shown the example of a nation in which every class of society accepts with cheerfulness the lot which Providence has assigned it; whilst, at the same time, every individual is constantly striving to raise himself in the social scale, not by violence and illegality, but by persevering good conduct, and unremitting application of those moral and intellectual faculties with which his Creator has endowed him. I say, to govern such a people as this, is indeed an object worthy of the ambition of the noblest man who lives in the land; and therefore I find no fault with those who may have endeavoured to place themselves in so distinguished a position.
> We have not done anything in our foreign policy to forfeit the confidence of the country. * * * I fearlessly challenge the verdict which the House may give on the question now before it—whether the principles which have governed the foreign policy of the government, whose duty it was to afford protection to our subjects abroad, which we have considered the guide of our conduct, are proper and fitting; and whether, as in the days of the Roman, who held himself to be free from indignity when he called out 'Civis Romanus Sum', an Englishman shall be considered protected by the vigilant eye and strong arm of his government, against injustice and wrong?

That was the declaration of Lord Palmerston in regard to Britain's foreign policy as to the significance of being a British subject. We have exactly the same considerations to take account of here to-day; the only difference is that we are dealing not with foreign policy but with our policy at home. We have even an identical case as respects every naturalized Jew affected by this legislation, the only possible difference is that instead of the rights of one Portuguese Jew as a British subject being affected the rights of many naturalized Jews and thousands of other British subjects in this country are being invaded by the legislation which the Government itself is seeking to force through. It cannot be denied that this section of the Bill subjects to a measure of indignity and thereby may deprive thousands of women, and many men of alien or foreign origin but who are British subjects, of rights which are given to others on the ground of their British citizenship. The section even takes away from thousands rights which have been already given to them as British subjects by the Government. Let the committee understand that clearly. This Parliament, through its naturalization law, gives to these men and women, who to all intents and purposes are being disfranchised by subsection 2, the right to be considered as British subjects. Parliament went farther than that, it passed an Act only two years ago giving every British subject, male or female, the right to the franchise. Why then does the Government at the present time deny to large numbers of persons a right which they have already given and which they profess to be willing to continue. I contend there is something here which all must stand up and contend for at the present time who are interested in British justice, in British fair play, and in maintaining in this Dominion and especially throughout the British Empire principles of justice and all that we should wish to imply when we use the term "British subject." I make this further appeal to the Government either to give us substantial reasons why we should destroy the traditions which have led us to consider that being a British subject, implies the same treatment for one and all, or to listen to the plea that is now being made on behalf of those British subjects who will suffer indignity as a result of the Government's proposed action.

Let me again, Mr. Chairman, plead with the Government, and with the minister, for the sake of their own honour as well as for the sake of justice in this matter, to do what at the outset they promised they would do, and what they are on record in Hansard as having said would be the guiding principle of this Bill. If the Government fails to do that, then we might just as well understand at the moment that in this Bill, from one end to the other, we may expect evidences of the same kind of manoeuvres and of the same kind of deception—because that is what it is—as we have found in this particular instance. Every member of this House is interested in giving to the people of Canada a franchise in which they will have confidence. This Government has tampered with the franchise in the last five years as no Government under the sun has ever tampered with a franchise, and they have got so into the habit of passing laws interfering with the rights of the people in the matter of their votes that it now seems but a relatively small thing to deny to thousands of people a fundamental right which, in the Government's own words, they profess to be giving to every one.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I have heretofore, during the progress of this debate in committee discussed this clause at considerable length and I do not know that I could, at this late date, afford any more information upon the subject than is now in possession of hon. gentlemen. I must say, however, that I think it rather a late hour for my hon. friend from Red Deer, and also my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, to come forward with a display of indignation, which I am satisfied is but a mockery of their real feelings, in an attempt to show that the Government, in the clause now under discussion, has in any way endeavoured to deceive either the House or the public in regard to the proposals contained in this Bill. Personally I do not think I ever heard my hon. friend from Red Deer labour over a question as hard as he laboured to-night. He certainly spoke under great excitement and with great force; but the indignation which he was able to command in regard to what he called the quadroon vote and the Mexican vote, that was going to come into this country from the United States on more favourable terms than should be applied to the women of other countries was, in my judgment, the height of absurdity. My hon. friend from Red Deer knows, or should know—because he has lived long enough in Canada to know,—that this country is not favoured with any emigration of the negro population of the South, nor yet of the state of Mexico farther to the South—we have practically no residents of that part of the globe in this country. It is true that in former days we had a considerable southern population who came into Canada to escape slavery and to choose freedom. But that population has been decreasing year by year in every riding in Canada where it existed, and within measurable distance, in all likelihood we shall have none of it, climatic conditions being the chief reason for this; and there is no Mexican population in Canada. So that when my hon. friend says that one reason why he will oppose this clause is because we are going to permit the quadroon and the Mexican woman to come here on better conditions than women from Europe, the matter to my mind resolves into an absolute absurdity quite unworthy of my hon. friend.

Now, with regard to the statement of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). Why, my hon. friend would have the House believe that in something I said on behalf of the Government I misled the House. My hon. friend knew every line in the Bill before it was introduced into this House at all. I especially requested a conference with him, and that conference was held several days before the Bill was introduced. That very question in section 29 was discussed between us, and I tell the House my hon. friend took no exception to the clause. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, on the day upon which the Bill obtained its first reading—the first day upon which the Bill came from the printer—I myself gave him a copy of the measure. Many days elapsed before the second reading of the measure; from time to time that step was put off at the request of my hon. friend in order that he and his friends might have a chance of studying the Bill. He knew every line and every clause of it, and so far as my knowledge goes he has taken no exception to it until this late date.

Now, how about the attitude of the House in regard to this matter? This very Parliament, elected in 1917, has on two occasions affirmed the principle and affirmed it unanimously, what does my hon. friend from Red Deer think of that statement? He was a member of the House in 1918, and I say he affirmed that principle—at all events he did not divide the House or vote or speak against it. He was a member of the House in 1919 when the By-Elections Act was passed which contained that very same clause. I say again that he affirmed the measure because he did not vote against or speak against it on either occasion, and that the Bill received the unanimous approval of the House. Therefore, I repeat, the same clause was unanimously affirmed twice, once in 1918, and once in 1919—although I may say that in 1918 that special clause—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: —as to the women born in North America was not included, but was subsequently included. Hon. members opposite know why. Ask my hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. Kennedy) or my hon. friend from George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). At their request the clause was inserted. I think it is a fair and reasonable clause; I think it is a good clause and that it ought to be put there. But at all events we affirmed the principle in 1918 unanimously; we affirmed it in 1919 unanimously. It comes up in the House again, and after weeks of discussion and knowing full well the entire meaning and import of the section, my hon. friend waits until this late date before he utters a word in protest against it.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: Does the minister mean to say that there was no protest made against that clause in 1919?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I say there was comment, but nobody divided the House on it, and I have the right to assume that it passed the House unanimously, otherwise the House would have divided on it. What did the Farmers' party, the Farmers' Government, in the province of Ontario do at the present session? They took that clause line by line and put it in the Ontario Act. Now my hon. friend from Red Deer is supposed to be very close to the United Farmer Government of the province of Ontario. When his speech appears in Hansard to-morrow will he send a copy of it to the Prime Minister of Ontario? Will he point out to that gentleman the tremendous outrage that the Ontario Government is going to perpetrate by allowing the quadron and the Mexican woman to come into this country and vote upon more advantageous terms than the woman of Europe? The whole thing is an absurdity. The clause is a fair and reasonable one; it does not create discrimination and is not a hardship. Oh, my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition says, we brought these people to the country, we made them British subjects, and then we broke faith with them. Does he not know that the fact that a man is a British subject does not carry the franchise? Does he not know that the franchise in every civilized country of the world is a conferred right? It is so in Canada and in every other country so far as I know.

Mr. CAHILL: Who confers the right?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The government of the country confers the right upon terms that the Parliament shall agree upon—

Mr. CAHILL: No, the people.

Mr. GUTHRIE: —and Parliament so far has not conferred the franchise upon these women. Now we do not disfranchise them by this clause. We make a special provision that they shall be enfranchised and entitled to vote. If the clause was a disfranchising clause, as it appeared in the Bill when first introduced, there would be some solid foundation for the arguments of hon. members opposite; but it is not a disfranchising clause; it is an enabling clause under certain wise restrictions, so that any woman who by operation of law is considered to be a British subject shall still be entitled to vote. All she has to do is to go through the simple process of obtaining that certificate.

Now, why all the fuss? There is no disfranchisement; at the very most there may be a very slight inconvenience. I believe that it is a proper safeguard. I do not believe that the doors should be thrown wide open at the present time. I do not believe that women from certain countries in Europe should come here and vote a year after their arrival, simply by reason of their marriage, without any inquiry with practically no opportunity for inquiry; while at the same moment an unmarried woman from the United States coming into Canada would have to wait five years before she could vote. There would be real discrimination. The Act provides against such discrimination, and simply at the cost of a little inconvenience proposes to allow these persons who are British subjects by operation of law to exercise their franchise to the fullest extent, but asks them to prove their right to it by showing their qualification upon a short inquiry before a judge.

I see nothing unreasonable in the section, and I must ask the committee to vote down the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler).

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I simply rise to ask the minister a question on a concrete case that was brought to my attention recently. Thirty years ago a gentleman came here from France with his wife and his seven-year-old son. After a while he applied for naturalization papers; he received them; and therefore according to the Naturalization Act his wife and his son became British subjects. When the war broke out the son took the first boat for France and engaged in the war; he was decorated with the Military Medal and the Legion of Honour. His mother was at the head of all the war charities in Montreal, and she also was decorated by the Government of France. Now, the question I wish to ask is this: Does subsection 2 of section 29 apply to the son; will he have to go before a judge before he can vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. He is a British subject by operation of law, so is his mother, and both of them under this section will have to get certificates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister mentioned having conferred with me in regard to this Bill before it was brought into the House. In virtue of the statement the minister has made, I think it is only fair for me to say that he did ask me to come to his room the day before he introduced the Bill; that he then outlined to me its principal features, and in explaining the part which dealt with the principle of the qualifications for the franchise he gave, as far as I remember, the same statement which he gave in speaking to the House on the first reading and which will be found in Hansard as follows:

> The only requirements will be those of British citizenship, residence in Canada for one year and in the particular constituency for two months, and the attainment of the age of twenty-one years; these requirements will apply in the case of male and female voters alike.

At the time of our interview I asked whether there were any exceptions to those requirements and the minister mentioned that in the case of British Columbia, where the provincial laws do not recognize the right of certain Asiatics to vote, this law took cognizance of the situation there to that extent. That was the only exception that the minister mentioned to me. When the minister introduced the Bill at the first reading, recalling this exception I put the question to him and his answer will be found in Hansard of that same day.

> Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King (Leader of the Opposition): My hon. friend has said that the basis of the franchise under the proposed Act is citizenship. Is there any exception to that rule?
> Mr. Guthrie: Yes, there is an exception which was provided under the Act of last session. It provides that where any person is disqualified by reason of race under the laws of any province from voting at any election in the province, the disqualification is continued for the purpose of Dominion elections.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was I not asked immediately afterwards a question on this very point?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will complete the quotation:

> Mr. Mackenzie King: May I inquire when copies of the Bill will be available?
> Mr. Guthrie: I expect that it will be printed in two or three days.
> Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It was on the second reading that my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) put the question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is absolutely all that took place at our interview and on the first reading. That is the statement that went out to the country, and it was because of that statement that the country got the impression that those were the only requirements for the franchise and that the Bill was a fair one. Therefore I am asking the Government to have regard for their honourable obligation as given to Parliament and to the country.

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Chairman, I entertain no hope that any words I may utter will induce the Government to withdraw this clause after the emphatic declaration made by the minister (Mr. Guthrie). And yet it does seem to me that this clause throws a very grave discrimination against certain citizens of this country who have claimed to be, and who in their inmost hearts consider themselves to be citizens of Canada.

My hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) who has charge of this Bill rather developped some heat in his reply to the remarks made by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) and of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). I could wish that he had displayed as much logic as heat in his reply. It is well known that the By-Elections Act of the first session of 1918 was passed in the closing days of the session for the specific purpose of caring for certain by-elections which should have been held months before, and, in some cases, years before. It is scarcely fair, I submit, on the part of the hon. minister to charge those of us who desire to see this section withdrawn with inconsistency in that regard. The circumstances under which the special By-Elections Act was passed are well known to the House and, I believe, to the country.

My hon. friend the minister argues that the fact that no Mexican, no quadroon, no negress, will come to Canada is a sufficient reason why the discrimination in this clause should be made. But I put the question to my hon. friend: Supposing a negress does come to Canada under the circumstances stated by my hon. friend from Red Deer, will she, or will she not, be entitled to vote and claim citizenship? That is the question. It simply begs the question to state that because none of those people may come to Canada the clause should stand as it is. The fact remains, whatever arguments the minister and those behind him may advance to the contrary, this discrimination lies in this clause, and nothing that he or any of those behind him may say will read it out as long as the clause stands in its present form. Why should that anomaly exist? Is it a fair and sound principle to lay down in our franchise law? I submit, it is not, and I would ask the minister and the Government to have regard to that consideration. Our Franchise Act is fundamental to our whole system of government, because by it is determined who shall have the right to a say in the election of representatives in the House of Commons. We cannot continue these discriminations in our Franchise Act and keep the honour of our country free before the world. That is the point I make, and I appeal to the Government, not because of the honour of the Government, but for the sake of the honour of Canada, to consent to the withdrawal of this amendment.

Mr. BUREAU: I have listened with interest to the speeches delivered to-night asking that this clause be struck from the Bill. When I saw the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) get up I thought that he would give some reason why the amendment should be withdrawn and the clause should stand. But I find it very hard to get accustomed to the answers of the Government to hon. members. The Acting Solicitor General said that what hon. gentlemen had represented was a display of indignation which was but a mockery. When I made some representations to the minister the other day to the effect that the poor were discriminated against, that also was a mockery according to the minister. When we submitted an amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne asking that the Government go before the people, hon. gentlemen on the other side replied by saying that we were not serious. But the country expects an answer from the Government. To say that our contentions are mockery and simulation is simply to use words; it is not giving an answer. The Acting Solicitor General himself may say that we are putting on mock indignation, but he does not seem to travel very easily when he tries to answer the arguments which are put forward why this clause should be struck out. He tells my leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) that he should not complain. He says: I had an interview with you before the Bill was brought down; I mentioned this clause 29; why did you not object? Why, Mr. Chairman, how could you expect the leader of the Opposition to discuss a measure which he had not had time to read or to analyse, when the minister himself confesses, with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen), that if the words as printed in the Bill conveyed the meaning attributed to them by my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), that had not been the intention of the Government and they would have to be changed? I want to quote my hon. friend's words to show what was the position of the Government when this Bill was being discussed, because with all the strength of the opinion of officers of the House behind them and all the legal talent that they could muster on the other side, evidently the Bill as brought down did not convey exactly what the Government had in mind. On May 5, my hon. friend from North Waterloo having pointed out that this clause was not a fair clause and that it would disfranchise certain people, the Acting Solicitor General as reported on page 2126 of unrevised Hansard, said:

> The question raised by my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) is not without some complexity. Under the Bill as originally introduced—clause 29, subclause 2—the intention of the Government in framing the clause was hardly expressed by the language used, as was pointed out on the second reading of the Bill by the Minister of the Interior.

Now, it does not behoove the Acting Solicitor General to reproach my leader with not having jumped at the meaning of the clause when the Government itself could not express its view in the legislation which they were submitting. The proof of the pudding is in the eating; the Acting Solicitor General has since brought down an amendment with a view to correcting the clause. He went on to say:

> The effect of the clause as originally drawn, and now printed in the Bill, would be to disqualify a certain number of people in this country who had heretofore become British subjects by operation of law. The people who would have been thus disqualified, were the section allowed to remain in its present condition, were the wives and children of those who had come to this country from foreign countries and obtained naturalization in Canada during their minority. As the committee is well aware, the wife of an alien who becomes naturalized in this country, under our law, becomes a British subject. The wife did not have to appear and obtain the certificate of naturalization—she became a British subject by operation of law by the fact of her marriage. Under the old common law idea she merged her existence, her identity became merged in her husband, and by operation of law she became a British subject. So it was also with the children who were minors at the time the parent became a British subject. Not so with the children who had come to the age of twenty-one years. They retained their original citizenship until they should themselves apply for naturalization in this country. My hon. friend from North Waterloo was, I think, the first to point out, during the debate on the second reading of this Bill, that the clause as drawn, had the effect of depriving a certain number of British subjects of the right to the franchise. The Minister of the Interior very promptly informed the House that such was not intended—that if that were the interpretation of the language of the section it did not convey the intention of the Government—and he promised the House that when the Bill came up again an amendment would be introduced to give effect to the intention of the Government, which was to maintain the right of those persons who had become naturalized by operation of law to all their rights, including the right of the franchise.

That is plain English; it could not be plainer. Yet the Acting Solicitor General now reproaches my leader because he did not, before the Bill was submitted to the House, find out that this clause disfranchised a certain number of persons. He says further:

> Now the amendment which I have just had the honour of moving is intended to cure that defect in the section as it is printed in the present Bill, and I would ask the committee to examine the language of that amendment. In my humble opinion the language of the amendment does cure the defect; but if there be any doubt on that point I have no hesitation in saying the Government has no desire to create a doubt on the subject, and we will employ any language that may be necessary to make the matter plain and free from doubt.

What do we ask, Sir? We ask that this subsection be struck out. The Acting Solicitor General answers by saying that there are hardly any negroes in this country. Well, that is not the point; it is the principle that counts. Let me give an example. Suppose an ignorant negro woman comes from the South. She is the wife of a man who is a British subject. A refined woman, highly educated, comes to Canada from France or Belgium. She speaks the language of the country. She employs this negro woman as a servant. People of high standing in the community entrust to this French woman the training and instruction of their children. Election day comes, and this French woman, trained in literature, well versed in sciences, her husband a British subject, is deprived of her right to vote because she was born in France; and the negro wench who scrubs her floors goes down to the poll and has a voice in saying what shall be the fate of this country. Is there any sense in that? I say, no.

When people who come to this country want to analyse what rights they are going to get, they are not going to take the census to find out how many women of any given national origin there are in this country; but they are going to take the law and proceed by comparison, and they will find out the injustice—yes, I say further, the iniquity—of this legislation on the continent of North America. Hon. gentlemen opposite jeer at the fact that my friends bring up the case of the Mexicans. These people, however few or many come here, do not speak the language of the country, while the French and the Belgians do; but the former can go to the poll and vote, while these women of higher education, more refinement, speaking the language of this country, are going to be deprived of the right to vote. What answer do we receive? "Pretended indignation." "Mockery." I do not think that is fair. If the Government are sincere when they call upon us to discuss this question, or if they are sincere when they say they find any good purpose in inserting this provision, let them give us reasons, not words, not opinions. This clause must have something behind it. The answer is: There are very few of these people. Well, if few, why disfranchise them? If there are a large number of them, then you are committing an injustice on those people and you ought not to disfranchise them. My opinion—I expressed it before— is this: I think there are a great number of these women who ought to have the right to vote. But the Government fear less the judgment of a Nigger or a Mexican than they fear the judgment of educated, refined and cultured women. The feelings of those women, who come from France, Belgium or any other of the Allied countries, are such that any acts of autocracy as are being committed daily they would fear more than the other women would. This is an additional method of endeavouring to make votes as the cost of an injustice. My hon. friends opposite claim that they want to give a fair franchise; but if we make any suggestion or point out anything that we think unfair, we are jeered and laughed at. The only reason I can think of for the way in which they dismiss our arguments and our appeals to cut out this clause is that they fear that some votes may go against them. My hon. friends might just as well come out boldly and in a manly way. Why do you not disfranchise every man and every woman in this country who will not vote for the Union Government—or what used to be a Union Government? Then, possibly we would not have to scratch in order to find out what you want? You dare not do this openly; but you want, by small cuts here and there to try to disfranchise as many open-minded, patriotic people as you dare, in order to gain a political advantage; you are depriving these people of the most sacred right vested in a subject, namely, the right to vote.

Some of my friends argue that this is a privilege. It is not a privilege; it is a right. When I come here and acquire British citizenship, the only way in which I can exercise my right as a citizen is by going to the polls and saying in what way my country shall be run. I want to have a vote and a voice in the legislation of this country and to be able to say who shall be my representative, who shall voice my views in the Parliament of Canada. The time when the franchise is being exercised is the only time in a man's existence when every man is equal before the law; that is the only time when the poor man can walk up to the poll alongside of the millionaire and say: "For once you have not the best of me; my vote is the same value as yours." Now you are going to deprive these people of the most sacred right they have. You say: That is a privilege we give them. I say: It is a right to which they are entitled, and it is a crime to deprive them of that right.

10 p.m.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have already expressed my opinion on the amendment and on this clause, but I wish only to state the facts as they are with regard to a statement of the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie). If there is one thing to which this House and the country are entitled, it is to have the facts as they are, and we should not be deceived,—I understand my hon. friend did not do this intentionally—as to the facts of the case. No statement of my hon. friend was received with so many cheers and so much enthusiasm by hon. gentlemen on the other side as his statement that when this clause was proposed to be inserted in the law of last year, there was no protest from this side of the House.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not say that there was no protest.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend said that in the first instance, and then he said: You did not divide the House, and I take that as if there was no protest, as if it were unanimous; there was no protest. Does my hon. friend say that again?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I said that it was commented on.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Did my hon. friend say that there was no division of the House?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, I think I did.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, I have Hansard of last year, 1919, when this clause was being discussed by the committee of the House, and at the end of the discussion, the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) said, as reported on page 4650:

Mr. JACOBS: I move in sub-amendment that subclause 2 be struck out.

Amendment negatived.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Take it back.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was there a division in the House on it? I do not remember.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my hon. friend wants more than that, I am going to give him more. As reported on page 4659, on the motion of Mr. Carvell for the third reading of the Bill, Mr. Jacobs said:

I move, in amendment, that this Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of striking out subsection (2) of section 5 in clause 2 of the Bill.

Amendment negatived on division.

My only comment is that I ask that my hon. friends on the other side withdraw their cheers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I sincerely regret if I made a slip in regard to a division on that question. I remember the discussion, and I must apologise if I made a slip in regard to the matter.

Mr. ROWELL: Just to complete the record, as my hon. friend (Mr. Lapointe) has said it is desirable to have a complete statement on record, I have here Hansard of 1918, when the Bill granting the franchise to women was submitted to the House. That Bill contained a provision that all women who became British subjects by operation of law must, in order to exercise the franchise, establish their qualifications for naturalization and obtain a certificate.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What section?

[Mr. E. Lapointe.]

Mr. ROWELL: Subsection 2. My hon. friend will find this in Hansard of 1918, page 90, and on this occasion the Prime Minister in moving the second reading of the Bill, explained its purport.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Will the minister read the section?

Mr. ROWELL: (Reading):

If, being a married woman and previously an alien, she has become a British subject by marriage, or by the naturalization as a British subject of her father while she was a minor, and in either case has done nothing (other than in the second case by marriage) to forfeit or lose her status as a British subject, and obtain and present to the official in charge of the preparation or revision of the voters' lists of the said constituency a certificate, under the signature of a judge or any court of record or of any superior court, under the seal of the said court, certifying that such female person is of the full age of twenty-one years, has resided in Canada a sufficient length of time, and is possessed of all requirements necessary to entitle her, if unmarried, to become naturalized as a British subject, and that she has taken the oath of allegiance to His Majesty.

The Prime Minister in explaining the effect of the clause stated:

The meaning of that is practically this: to be entitled to vote, a woman who has become a British subject by marriage, or through the naturalization, while she was a minor, of her father, who was previously an alien, must have lived in this country the necessary length of time and must in every way fulfil the qualifications which would be necessary in case she were applying as an unmarried woman for naturalization.

Sir Robert Borden said further, as reported on page 91:

She must fulfil the qualifications required by paragraph (c) of subsection (2). Subsection (2) makes it necessary that she shall have resided in Canada a sufficient length of time and be possessed of all requirements necessary to entitle her, if unmarried, to become naturalized as a British subject. She must reside in Canada for at least a year, and must reside within the Empire for at least five years.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Did my hon. friend read the whole section?

Mr. ROWELL: No.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Was this part in it: "Provided however that this subsection shall not apply to any person born on the continent of North America"?

Mr. ROWELL: That was not in the Act of 1918. My hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) has repeatedly said that it was inserted in the Act of 1919, the By-Elections Act.

Mr. BUREAU: That Act was passed during the war.

Mr. ROWELL: The ground of protest urged by the leader of the Opposition and other hon. members on the other side against this clause is that a woman, naturalized by operation of law, must apply for and obtain a certificate before she can vote. That is the ground of protest; that is the ground upon which it is said we are disfranchising thousands of women; that is the ground upon which the motion is made to strike out the clause. Now, what is the basis of this clause? It is: that a woman, if of alien birth, shall not be entitled to exercise the franchise unless she possesses the same qualifications as a man must possess in order that he may have the right to vote. Before a man of alien birth can exercise the franchise he must secure his certificate of naturalization, and to obtain that certificate he must show that he has resided in the country for the necessary period; that he has a knowledge of English or French and that he possesses the other necessary qualifications for naturalization; and when he establishes his qualification for naturalization, then, under the Act, he becomes entitled to vote. The Act extending the franchise to women provided that we should require of them exactly the same qualifications as we require for men, and no more. They must show that they have resided in the country for five years; they must show that they possess a knowledge of English or French; and they must show that they possess the other necessary qualifications. That Act was before the House in 1918.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: During the war.

Mr. ROWELL: This question had nothing to do with the war. No hon. member on the other side questioned it because of the war. This clause was not challenged on the other side of the House, the only criticism on the part of the Opposition was of the principle of extending the franchise to women at all. That was the only criticism. My hon. friend says that the franchise is an inherent right of British citizenship. If so, why have one-half of the British citizens of this country, the women, been denied the franchise up to this time? The truth is, the franchise has never necessarily followed citizenship. It is a conferred right, and the only opposition in 1918 was directed against extending the franchise to women. As the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) has referred to the statements made by the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) I desire to turn to the report of his address as it appears in Hansard in connection with this Bill in 1918. My hon. friend, if he looks it up, will see that he supported the Bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In 1918?

Mr. ROWELL: While he had some doubts about the wisdom of extending the franchise to women, on the whole he was prepared to support the measure. He gave his reasons for supporting the Bill, and he is reported as having said:

> The second reason I have for supporting the Bill is that it may prevent the recurrence of what took place at the last election—when the franchise was given to a certain class of women.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. BUREAU: Give it to all.

Mr. ROWELL. My hon. friend and other hon. members of the House in 1918 when the clause was discussed at length, and with a full knowledge of the terms of the Bill, did not dissent from it so far as my recollection goes and so far as I have been able to briefly review Hansard to-night. It was not dissented from except as regards the principle of extending the franchise to women, and an appeal was made that we should leave it to the different provinces to deal with the matter. Certain hon. gentlemen argued in favour of that proposition, and it was said that we should not extend the franchise to women in Quebec if they did not wish it. But this particular section was not criticised, and certainly there was no division in regard to it in the year 1918. Is it conceivable, then, that if every hon. member thought it was all right in the year 1918 it should become such an outrage in 1920? I have before me the new Bill introduced into the Ontario legislature by the present Farmer-Labour Government.

Mr. CAHILL: Is it passed?

Mr. ROWELL: I do not know whether it has been passed yet, but it is a Government Bill, and if it is not passed it undoubtedly shows the view of the Government as to what the legislation should be.

Mr. CANNON: Does the minister wish to quote the Drury Government as an authority?

Mr. ROWELL: I think that on the whole the Drury Government has done very well in a great many matters, and I believe they have done perfectly right in reference to the franchise. I think therefore I may quote them, at least where I agree with them. The second section of the Ontario Election Act provides the conditions upon which a woman shall be deemed a British subject and entitled to vote. Subsection (c) of section 2 reads:

> If she has become a British subject by marriage, or by the naturalization as a British subject of her parent while she was a minor, and in either case has done nothing to forfeit or lose her status as a British subject, and has obtained a certificate (Form 13) under signature of a judge of the Supreme Court, or of a county or district court under the seal of the court, certifying that she has personally appeared and has satisfied him that she is of the full age of twenty-one years, has resided in Canada a sufficient length of time, and is possessed of all requirements as would be necessary to entitle her, if unmarried, to become naturalized as a British subject, and that she has taken the oath of allegiance to His Majesty, and no woman shall be entitled to be entered on the list of voters or to vote unless so qualified.

Mr. ROSS: What section is that?

Mr. ROWELL: Subsection (2) of section (2) of the new Ontario Act introduced into the House.

Mr. ROSS: What is the number of the Bill?

Mr. ROWELL: I am in error as to the Bill. It was brought to me as the Ontario Act of 1920, but it is the Act of 1919. However this provision is in the new Bill.

Mr. ROSS: I cannot find it.

Mr. ROWELL: I had a copy of the new Bill.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The hon. member is not quoting from the new Bill.

Mr. ROWELL: This was brought to me and I was under the impression that it was the Bill of 1920, but I find that it is the Bill of 1919. I did have a copy of the new Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWELL: I asked for a copy of the Bill of 1920 to be sent to me.

Mr. CAHILL: Where is it?

Mr. ROWELL: This provision is in the Bill of 1920.

Mr. ROSS: I cannot find it.

Mr. ROWELL: I was under the impression, when this Bill was handed to me, that it was the Bill of 1920. A request was sent to the Library for it. But it is in the Ontario law and was in the Act as introduced in the House in 1920. It was in the copy of the Bill as received by me from the Attorney General's office of Ontario.

Mr. ROSS: It was not section 2 in the Bill of 1920.

Mr. ROWELL: It was in the copy sent to me. If it is not in the Bill the hon. member now has the Bill has been amended. I will be glad if my hon. friend will send the Bill across to me so that I may have an opportunity of looking at it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. ROWELL: Again I ask my hon. friend if he will let me look over his copy of the Bill of 1920?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Why did you say you had it?

Mr. ROWELL: Because I had it and I loaned it to an hon. member of this House. I understood that it was the 1920 Bill that was handed to me to-night.

Mr. GAUVREAU: You are going from bad to worse.

Mr. ROWELL: Well, I will produce a copy of the Bill which had it in, but I believe if my hon. friend (Mr. D. C. Ross) would send it across I could still find it, although it may have been changed. I cannot force my hon. friend to send it over, but, certainly, if I had a copy of a Bill, I would pass it over to an hon. gentleman and give him an opportunity of seeing it.

Mr. McKENZIE: Was the Bill of which the hon. member read the draft introduced by the Hearst Government?

Mr. ROWELL: The 1919 Bill was introduced by the Hearst Government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWELL: It was passed in 1919, and therefore it must have been introduced by the Hearst Government. If my hon. friend (Mr. D. C. Ross) will pass over the Bill—

Mr. BUREAU: I thought you were supporting the Drury Government.

Mr. ROWELL: The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) has the Drury Government Bill, so he says.

Mr. BELAND: How do you know?

Mr. ROWELL: My hon. friend said he had it.

Mr. ROSS: My hon. friend (Mr. Rowell) said he was quoting from it.

Mr. ROWELL: Does my hon. friend say that there is no such clause in the Bill?

Mr. ROSS: Would my hon. friend say what the clause was? If he will read the clause—

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I would like to ask you, Sir, if an hon. member is in order in discussing a Bill of the Drury Government in relation to a clause before the Federal House. If that is in order, I would like to move that we adjourn until the Government get reasonably posted on the question before the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried, carried.

Mr. ROWELL: I just want to answer my hon. friend's question.

The CHAIRMAN: A point of order has been raised by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark). I would certainly agree with the hon. member that the House of Commons would not be in order in discussing a Bill introduced into the Ontario Legislature by any Government, but I think it is in order for the hon. minister (Mr. Rowell) to refer to one of these Bills by way of comparison.

Mr. ROWELL: In answer to my hon. friend, the clause which I understood was in the Bill was one which provided that a woman who was naturalized by operation of law was required to apply for and obtain a certificate that she possessed the qualifications necessary for naturalization before she became entitled to vote.

Mr. ROSS: That is not what my hon. friend said at all. My hon. friend quoted a section of the Bill, which he said was section 2, and which he also said was contained in the Drury Bill of 1920. The Drury Bill of 1920 does not contain any such section as section 2, so that my hon. friend is absolutely wrong in quoting that as section 2 of the Drury Bill?

Mr. ROWELL: Will my hon. friend tell me if there is such a clause in the Drury Bill?

Mr. ROSS: As what?

Mr. ROWELL: Which requires that a woman, naturalized by operation of law, must apply for and obtain a certificate to show that she is possessed of the qualifications necessary for naturalization before she becomes entitled to vote.

Mr. ROSS: I cannot say it is in this Bill at all. It may be there—I want to be fair to this discussion. My hon. friend quoted a section which he said was a section of the Drury Bill but which was not a section of the Drury Bill. I do not deny that a section in these terms is there.

Mr. ARTHURS: Read the Bill.

Mr. D. C. ROSS: There are sections within the Bill referring to former sections and former Acts and I do not know positively if they contain the restrictions which my hon. friend says they do, but I know certainly that the sections which he calls the sections of the Bill of 1920 are not the sections of the Drury Act of 1920.

Mr. CRERAR: I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) a question. He has referred to the Franchise Act that the Drury Government has introduced into the Ontario Legislature. Can he tell the committee if that Act contains a clause of the discriminatory character of this subsection 2 of section 29?

Mr. ROWELL: I am very glad to answer my hon. friend's question. It does not contain the provision relating to North American women, and the reason why that clause was put in, as my hon. friend will know, was to meet the case of the wives of American settlers in Western Canada, whereby women from the United States brought up under similar institutions, many of them having exercised the franchise and being accustomed to vote, and who are naturalized by operation of law, are not required to obtain a certificate. It was put in to meet the condition of the wives of American settlers in Western Canada. I am sure my hon. friend would not like to strike it out upon that ground.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I wish to take exception to the rather sarcastic way in which the Acting Solicitor General treated the committee this evening as regards declarations made by members in the debates which took place during the two sessions on this question while the franchise was discussed. My hon. friend said that it was an absurdity to discuss this question as we are discussing it this evening when as a matter of fact it was never challenged by a vote in the House. Now it has been fairly established, much to the discomfiture of my hon. friend the Acting Solicitor General, that the provision was challenged upon two occasions. On the first occasion a vote, not a division, was taken in the House.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a very nice distinction there.

Mr. LEMIEUX: On the third reading of the Bill a division was taken and recorded in the journals of the House. But my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) went a little further. He said that the member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) supported the principle of this clause in former debates. Now it is very easy to take up Hansard and to show that most of the members of His Majesty's loyal Opposition protested against that very principle on two different occasions, and notably my hon. friend from Quebec East and my hon. friend from Red Deer. My hon. friend from Quebec East has always been consistent with himself on this question whenever it has been debated in the House, and this is not his first protest, but in order to be just to him let me state his exact words. By reference to Volume 5 of Hansard 1919, page 4626, it will be seen that my hon. friend from Quebec East far from supporting this principle placed himself in opposition to it. He said:

I wish also to criticize that part of the Bill which discriminates against certain naturalized British women. It is a discrimination absolutely contrary to the ordinary law.

I find on the same page a protest by my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) who sits on my right. I will quote his words:

With these observations, and with the distinct understanding that we on this side of the House are not committing ourselves to any principle that may be involved in this Bill, or favouring any change in the system of franchise which was in vogue in Canada from the early days of Confederation down to 1885, and from 1908 to 1917, which we believe affords the simplest, fairest, and the greatest possible opportunity for the people of this country to express their opinion freely at the polls, I have no objection to agreeing to the second reading of this Bill. I do not think there will be any division upon it, but it is to be distinctly understood that we on this side of the House hold ourselves absolutely free to deal with any franchise measure that may be introduced at another session of Parliament.

Mr. Chairman, there is more than this. On this very principle of the alien woman marrying a British subject and being entitled to the franchise, my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) has committed himself very clearly. During the session of 1919, on the Amendment of the Dominion Elections' Act debated on June 30th 1919, as reported at page 4399, my hon. friend was being taken to task by my good friend from Quebec East, and here is the little dialogue exchanged across the floor between these honourable gentlemen. You will see, Mr. Chairman, that consistency is indeed a jewel—when there is consistency:

Mr. E. Lapointe: It has already been suggested that to exercise the franchise a woman must be personally naturalized, and not only be a British subject by reason of the fact that she is the wife of a naturalized citizen.

Mr. Guthrie: Under this Act it is most clear that the wife of a British subject, whenever she came from, shall be deemed to be a British subject, and that the wife of an alien shall be an alien. The declaration is quite plain. Even if a woman is Canadian-born, she is an alien if she is the wife of an alien.

Mr. E. Lapointe: According to my hon. friend the wife of a naturalized British subject shall be entitled to vote as well as her husband under any franchise law?

That is putting the question very plainly. (reading):

Mr. Guthrie: There is no doubt about that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And that was an actual statement of the law as it stood on the day that statement was made.

Mr. LEMIEUX: We are discussing the same principle.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was asked the law as it stood, and I answered the question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I must say to my hon. friend that was in 1919—

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —one year after the law of 1918. So that when my hon. friend says it was an accurate statement of the law as it was he gives away the whole case.

Amendment to the amendment of Mr. Euler negatived: yeas, 59; nays, 79.

On the amendment (Mr. Guthrie):

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I informed the House, and particularly my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), to set at rest any doubt which he or others might have in regard to the form of the certificate that I was willing to add the language suggested by Mr. Mulvey, Under-Secretary of State. I therefore, propose the following amendment:

That the form set out in clause 29 be amended by inserting after the word "naturalization" in line twenty-eight, of page twelve, the following words: "or for any disability contained in "The Naturalization Act."

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment, already before the committee will have to be disposed of before this new amendment can be proposed.—Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I now move the amendment I have just read.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. PARDEE: I desire that the amendment shall not carry, Mr. Chairman, because I have another amendment to move as an amendment to the Acting Solicitor General's.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendments have already been agreed to. The amendment of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Pardee) will now be in order.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Guthrie's) amendment has not been put.

The CHAIRMAN: It has been declared carried.

Mr. BUREAU: Mr. Chairman, the acoustics of this House must be very bad, indeed, because I am not deaf yet, old as I may be, and I did not hear the question put.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out to the committee that although the amendments have been agreed to the clause itself has not been carried. Any amendment to the original clause, or to the clause as it now stands in amended form is perfectly in order.

Mr. PARDEE: Mr. Chairman, continuing the discussion regarding clause 29, I can add but very little to what I said the other night regarding my idea of who should and who should not vote, and I do not propose to weary the House by again going over it. My idea is simply this, in short, that it will be far better for this country to drop the war and the war spirit and get back to normal just as quickly as possible. For that reason, therefore, I think it is not good legislation that we are endeavouring to enact by this clause. And I am somewhat fortified in that opinion by these reasons. The other night, if I mistake not, whether he said it or whether I read it, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell)—and if I am wrong I am willing to stand corrected—brought to my mind that one or two things had slipped into this Bill along the line of the Naturalization Act and the right to vote that had not been intended to appear. I am further fortified by the language of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) himself, who the other night practically admitted that negotiations were going on now with the Home Government whereby just such a clause as this might be amended so as to get back to the old Naturalization law, and apparently it was thought best by this Government and by the Home Government that we should get back to that position. Therefore, with those two expressions of opinion it would appear to me that all those who think about this matter seriously, and are not taking it in a purely political sense, have come to the conclusion that the best thing Parliament can do to-day is to legislate in such a way that we can heal the wounds that have been created and get back to what was our Naturalization Law prior to the passing of the 1919 Act and of the Elections Act. I submit to this House, as I said before, very sincerely that that is the basis that we should get back to.

The hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. G. R. Nicholson) was very much disturbed the other night by reason of the fact that he did not want people of all nationalities rushing in to secure the right to vote. No such idea has ever been contemplated by us on this side of the House. The Acting Solicitor General asked to-night, "Why should women from Europe vote one year after arrival?" That is beside the question so far as my amendment is concerned. Shortly it amounts to this. In 1919 we passed a Franchise Act,—and we were all somewhat sub-normal at that time; everyone was going a little bit further than perhaps he would have gone had conditions been normal, and we passed that 1919 Franchise Act, which said that no person of alien birth residing in the Dominion should vote until ten years had expired from the declaration of peace.

Now, it is patent to every hon. member that there are many people in the Dominion who have resided here for many years who, even although they have not become naturalized, have voted, they have taken upon themselves as British subjects to exercise the franchise, they have done their share in upbuilding the country, they have paid their taxes, and in every way both they and we have considered that they had an absolute right to exercise the franchise. I am not going to repeat it again, but if there is one thing that is most sacred to the people of this country, if there is one thing that is most sacred to hon. members, it is the fact that each shall have the right to exercise the franchise. It is practically being in No-Man's-Land to say that although you live in a country, although you exercise the functions of citizenship, although you pay your taxes, and although you are liable to the laws of the country,—laws which are made by representatives elected from the great mass of the people,—yet you shall not have a voice in the government of the country or in the selection of your representatives. It is not an enviable position; it is a position that ought to be done away with, in my humble opinion, just as soon as possible.

Now, I grant this to the Acting Solicitor General so far as the Franchise Act is concerned; in order that no ultra-loyal members may be heard complaining here or to his constituents that I moved an amendment which is going to let these people in, that the floodgates are to be opened for their admission, I am content, so far as this amendment is concerned, as are hon. members on this side of the House, that the ten-year clause should be lived up to. But I and my colleagues are desirous that those who have been here for ten years should at least have the right to go before a judge and obtain a certificate to secure naturalization for the purposes of this Act, so that under that Canadian naturalization they may be granted the right to the franchise.

Therefore, I beg to move an amendment to clause 29 by adding at the end thereof the following words:

> And it is provided that no disability imposed by the said paragraph (B) shall prevent any person, possessed of the qualifications which would have entitled such person to naturalization prior to the year 1914, applying to a judge for a certificate that he was so qualified,—which certificate the judge shall grant upon proper proof,—and on production of said certificate the said person shall be deemed a British subject for the purposes of this Act and shall be entitled to be entered on the list of voters and to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: As the discussion has proceeded on clause 29 I think the committee has been incidentally entertained with a general discussion of the amendment now moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) in concrete form. I think that the amendment is objectionable; first, because it is really an amendment to the Naturalization Act, or ought to be, rather than an attempt to amend the Franchise Act. What is sought by the amendment now before the committee is a change in our present naturalization law which will permit of a dual system of naturalization in the country, first, in part, the Naturalization Act, which has special requirements enacted by this House in 1919, and, second, a naturalization law limited in its operation to the Dominion of Canada, practically putting back the law so far as the franchise is concerned to the law as we found it in Canada prior to 1914.

Mr. PARDEE: Are you not, in this Bill, changing the Naturalization Act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I do not think we are changing it.

[Mr. Pardee.]

Mr. PARDEE: Certainly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What we are doing is recognizing its full force and application.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Not by the amendment which the minister (Mr. Guthrie) moved.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, for this reason; the people with whom subsection 2 would deal were British subjects by operation of law, and were people who were not affected by the Naturalization Act. But the object of the present amendment is to void the plain enactment which this House made in 1919, and on that ground it is objectionable. If my hon. friend deems that our Naturalization Act is improper or that it should be amended, he should bring forward a Bill to amend the Naturalization Act—and I doubt very much whether after its solemn pronouncement on the question one year ago, the House would feel inclined to amend the Naturalization Act.

Now, the amendment is objectionable in form and would likewise be objectionable in its operation and in its result. I am free to speak for myself on this subject, and I say that my experience of people I know in Ontario of German nationality who have lived in this country thirty, forty or fifty years has not been such as to lead me to believe that these people are entitled to the franchise, particularly at the present time. I would not be in favour of the proposal on that ground. I state the result of my own personal experience in regard to the matter. I am satisfied that the Imperial Naturalization Act was passed with a ten-year limitation against persons of alien enemy countries and adopted in Canada, Australia and the other dominions only after the fullest consideration and for the express purpose of seeing to it that people of enemy nationality should not, for a period of at least ten years succeeding the war, be treated as other subjects. I do not believe that the amendment moved by my hon. friend meets the situation in Canada. I grant that there may be many worthy people who have resided in this country for many years and who under normal conditions might be entitled to the franchise or to have exceptions made of their cases. But this also must be remembered; these people have been pretty careless in the past; they have been negligent of their rights. If citizenship is the great boon which we believe it to be—and British citizenship is certainly a great boon—these people have been hopelessly careless in that they did not see to it that they became British citizens during these thirty, forty or fifty years. They have waited a long time. They have enjoyed all the protection given to British subjects upon the assumption that they had become such. If they have waited twenty, thirty or forty years in that condition, I think no great injustice will be done to them if they are allowed to remain ten years longer in order that they may comply with the law which this Parliament and the Parliaments of the other dominions saw fit so recently to pass. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman—and these are broad, general principles I am stating —and for the reasons which I stated on another occasion during the course of the discussion on this Bill, on behalf of the Government I ask the committee to reject this amendment.

Mr. EULER: It had not been my intention to make any remarks on this amendment, but I do so now, in order to take issue with one or two statements made by the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie). But before I do that, I think it would be fair, although the question has been discussed before by myself and others, to review the situation exactly as it exists so that members of the committee may vote with at least a fair measure of information on the question.

There are, as has been stated, in my constituency as well as in many others, a great many people of what may now be known as former enemy alien birth, who have lived in Canada for many years—many more years than the ten years now spoken of in the Naturalization Act—men who have lived here for twenty, thirty, fifty, sixty and in one case that I know of, seventy years, who are not to-day in a position to prove that they are British subjects and who may perhaps, technically not be British subjects. I want to make this perfectly plain: you are in this particular case not only dealing with people who are not British subjects; you are dealing with some people who are British subjects but have no means of proving that they are such. We have men in my riding who were in this country before Confederation and who took the oath of allegiance. They came from Germany. They are to-day, in my opinion, British subjects, perhaps even in law, but they have absolutely nothing to show that they are British subjects. They have no naturalization papers, and unfortunately there appears to be no record anywhere of the fact that they did take the oath of allegiance.

Mr. ARTHURS: Does the taking of the oath of allegiance make a man a British subject?

Mr. EULER: It does not now, but I think it did before Confederation.

Mr. ARTHURS: Did it ever make a man a British subject?

Mr. EULER: I am not certain, but I believe it did before Confederation.

Mr. BUREAU: What makes him a British subject, then?

Mr. EULER: Now, we have those who thought themselves British subjects; we have those who, I believe, are British subjects but who are unable to show that they are such, and we have others who, whether you call it negligence or something else, never did become naturalized. I do not want to dwell on this, but I do want to say in reply to what the Acting Solicitor General has just said, that his experience has been unfortunate; he does not believe that these people should be allowed to become naturalized until the lapse of another ten years. In that statement my hon. friend is in direct issue with his leader, the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden). I have not the words of the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) before me, but I can give them in effect. He stated at the Peace Conference, and he stated in this House, that there were a great many people in this country who were born in enemy alien countries who were worthy of naturalization, and he, together with the President of the Council (Mr. Rowell) placed himself on record at the Peace Conference as declining to support a suggestion made by representatives of other parts of the Empire that people of enemy alien birth should not be allowed naturalization for another ten years after the conclusion of the war. Those were the sentiments of the Prime Minister of Canada, and in order to prove that those were his sentiments, we need simply go to his acts in 1917. I have said this before, but I will say it again, because I think it ought to be said, that it is fair to consider the fact that in the year 1917, when, perhaps, we may say that the war was at its worst phase, the Government of this country passed, under powers given by Parliament, Orders in Council under which it was possible to make Canadian citizens of those people who are now under discussion under the amendment of the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Pardee).

Mr. ARTHURS: In what way?

Mr. EULER: If the hon. member will have patience, I will come to that now. This was the method that was to be followed: These men could go to a judge in the ordinary way; they could prove to his satisfaction, or not, as the case might be, that they were worthy of being naturalized. In my particular constituency, in the city of Kitchener, some 93 of them went to the judge, were approved as being worthy of naturalization, and then their applications were forwarded to the Secretary of State in order that the process of naturalization might be completed. There certainly was no object in passing those Orders in Council if it was never intended that any use should be made of them. I cannot for the life of me, see why those Orders in Council were passed before the elections of 1917 if it was not the intention that the powers under those Orders in Council should be exercised. Yet, when the applications of those 93 people were sent to the Secretary of State, for some reason or other, although the machinery was there to make them Canadian citizens, British subjects, they were not given that naturalization. I say that to prove that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, provision should be made for the naturalization of such people, and such provision was made which was afterwards nullified by the Act which was passed by the British Government and which was followed by the Naturalization Act of 1919 which was passed with the "ten-year" clause in order to meet the wishes of the British people, but not the wishes of the Prime Minister of Canada.

The Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) said that if those people did not obtain naturalization in the long period of time during which they were in Canada, they were guilty of negligence, and he assumed from that, that because those people were negligent, they did not deserve to obtain naturalization now. I do not see much force in that argument, for this reason amongst others. The minister will know, because he has some of these people in his riding, that in former years, matters of naturalization were not considered of as much importance as they are now, and it was perfectly natural that such should be the case. Those people had lived there for many years; they had had their names on the voters' lists from year to year; they had served on municipal councils; some of them, so far as I know, may have stood for Parliament; I do not know that for certain, but it would not have been thought out of place if they had done so, because it was felt amongst all classes of people, including those born in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, that those people were just the same as any other people in the county of Waterloo. They discharged their duties as citizens just the same as anybody else; there was no difference; and to show that such was the case, there was an understanding between the two parties, the Liberal and the Conservative parties, that when election time came, no man was ever to be challenged on the score of his nationality. It was taken for granted that if a man's name was on the voters' list, he was a citizen properly qualified to vote. So the matter went on. Under those conditions, it was surely not to be wondered at, especially when many of those men had taken the oath of allegiance, that they did not know the law so fully as to know that they must complete the operation by obtaining their papers. It was not be wondered at that they did not do anything further when they were enjoying all the rights of citizenship and when nobody was making any objection of any kind. It is those people who are included under the amendment, and it is to those people that we feel naturalization should be given. You are now willing to give men naturalization who came from former alien enemy countries if they live here for another ten years. Why in the name of reason and ordinary common sense should it not be counted to the credit of those men that they have already lived here ten years, or three or four or even five times ten years? If it is going to be right to give naturalization ten years from now to men who, perhaps, came to this country in 1913 directly from Germany, are you going to make any exception against the man who has lived here thirty or forty years?

While I do not want to appeal to sentiment at all, it is a fact that amongst those men to whom you now refuse the franchise for another ten years, although they have lived in this country so many years already, were men who had sons in this war. The Acting Solicitor General has made some rather strong statements that I resent; he has practically said that he would trust very few of those men who came here from Germany many years ago. I take issue with him on that, and while this is not altogether pertinent to the discussion, I want to say this on behalf of many of the people whom I consider I represent, although today they are not technically British subjects. We had in the riding of North Waterloo a very difficult situation which some hon. members may realize. There were men there who, if they did not enlist, were criticised as slackers or worse than that, and some hon. members who served in the war probably know this to be the case, that if a man who bore a German name went overseas, he was under a certain degree of suspicion until he proved undeniably that he was all right. Those men were, if I may use the expression, in many cases between the devil and the deep sea. If they did not enlist, they were slackers or worse than that, and if they enlisted they were spies. This Parliament could now take a step that would restore, at least to some extent, a feeling of confidence that has disappeared in some parts of this country because of unjust suspicion and Acts by previous Parliaments. I am not going to make recriminations with regard to the War-time Elections Act. I have done that before, I think very moderately. That Act was wrong; it deprived honest British subjects of the franchise; but I want to say this to the Government, that the war is over, and surely you could do 11 p.m. no better service to this country than to try to heal the wounds of war and to unite together into one people all Canadian citizens, no matter whether they come from England, Ireland, Scotland, or even from Germany, as long as they show they are worthy of being Canadian citizens.

Mr. ROWELL: It is not my intention to undertake to reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Euler). I have only two observations to make. The first is that up to date, neither this Parliament nor, do I believe, any legislative assembly has in a general Franchise Act conferred the franchise upon others than British subjects. This Act deals only with the franchise, and if my hon. friend's amendment is germane to this Act, it would mean in effect that we were conferring the franchise upon those who were not British subjects; that is a proposal we cannot accept. If the effect of the amendment is to naturalize these men then it must pertain to the Naturalization law, and that is a question which should be dealt with under the Naturalization Act.

I rose to say that I have now a copy of the Drury Bill of 1920 which I did not have before me when I last spoke, and my hon. friend would not accommodate me with a copy.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who?

Mr. ROWELL: The hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Ross). I had a copy of the Bill; I received it from the office of the Attorney General of the province; I knew what it contained. I loaned it to an hon. member of the House, and when the discussion came up to-night, I asked that the Bill should be returned to me. It turns out that the Bills of 1919 and 1920 are identical so far as this provision is concerned. There was a Bill in 1919, and the hon. member in handing it to me assumed that he was handing me the Bill of 1920. I have now a copy of the Bill of 1920, and the particular clause in question is the same as the clause in the Bill of 1919. I must say therefore that it was at least regrettable that my hon. friend opposite, when he had the right Bill before him, had not the courtesy to send it across the floor.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He denied that it contained the clause.

Mr. ROSS: No, I did not.

Mr. ROWELL: What this House wishes or should wish to get at is the facts, and if the clause was in the Bill which the hon. member had in his possession the committee was entitled to have that information. The hon. member might very well, therefore, have extended the courtesy of sending his copy across the floor of the House when the copy from which I was quoting proved to be the wrong one. The clause which I quoted appears in the new "Act Respecting Elections and the Preparation of Provincial Voters' Lists," introduced into the Ontario legislature on the 22nd of March, 1920, by Hon. Mr. Drury, the Prime Minister. For the information of the committee I shall read it. It is in section 9 of this Bill, subsection (2), clause (c). It so happens that it was also clause (c) in the other Bill.

If she has become a British subject by marriage or by the naturalization as a British subject of her parent while she was a minor and in either case has done nothing to forfeit or lose her status as a British subject, and has obtained a certificate (form 3) under the signature of a judge of the Supreme Court or of a county or district court, and the seal of the court certifying that she has personally appeared and has satisfied him that she is of the full age of twenty-one years, has resided in Canada a sufficient length of time and possesses all such requirements as would be necessary to entitle her, if unmarried, to become naturalized as a British subject, and that she has taken the oath of allegiance to His Majesty, and no woman shall be entitled to be entered on the list of voters or to vote unless so qualified.

Mr PARDEE: Would the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) say that the Naturalization Act of 1919 covers the provision in regard to a woman's voting under that Act?

Mr. ROWELL: The Naturalization Act would, I believe, cover the provisions under this Bill, and unless this Bill is amended it is much more drastic than our Bill in the sense in which my hon. friend is objecting to it. Now, so as to be technically accurate I may say that the form is Form 3 in the Act of 1919 and Form 13 in the Act of 1920; or rather, it is Form 3 in the Act of 1920.

Mr. ROSS: That is not right either.

An hon. MEMBER: Be careful.

Mr. ROWELL: It is Form 3 in the 1920 Act. My hon. friend has the section before him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He has had it all evening.

Mr. ROSS: I said I had it.

Mr. ROWELL: I want to draw the attention of the House to a change in the Act as actually adopted in 1919 and the Act as introduced in 1920. As introduced in 1920 it contained these words:

—and that she has personally appeared and satisfied me—making it clear beyond question that before any woman naturalized by operation of law can cast a vote she must personally appear before the judge and satisfy him of her qualifications to become naturalized and to obtain the necessary certificate and take the oath of allegiance.

Mr. ROSS: What is the section?

Mr. ROWELL: Subsection (c) requires that she should personally appear and satisfy the judge. These words are stronger than in the clause of the Act of 1919 as actually adopted. I want to go a step further and point out Form 3, the certificate which the female voter must obtain under the Ontario Act. Form 3 will be found on page 44, and is as follows:

ELECTION LAWS AMENDMENT ACT, 1920.

(Referred to in section 9, subs. 2.)

Form of certificate for women of Foreign Birth.

I, a Judge of the Court, hereby certify that of the of in the county of not being a British subject by virtue of her birth in Canada or some other part of the British Empire, or by reason of her marriage to a British subject, has personally appeared before me and has satisfied me that she,—

1. Is of the full age of twenty-one years;

2. Has resided in Canada a sufficient length of time;

3. Is possessed of all the qualifications necessary to enable her, if unmarried, to become naturalized as a British subject; and

That she has taken the oath of Allegiance to His Majesty.

She must obtain that certificate before she is enabled to vote. Now, my hon. friend would have expedited the business of the House if he had sent the Bill across the floor so that I might have stated the situation precisely, instead of denying, as I understood him to do, that there was such a provision in the Bill. The clause is in the new Bill practically word for word in the form in which I read it from the Bill of 1919, except that it is contained in section 9 of the Bill of 1920 whereas in the Bill of 1919 it was in section 2.

Mr. ROSS: I do not know that my hon. friend has expedited the business of the House very much by this long harangue in regard to the point at issue. I had made it clear to the hon. gentleman and to the House as to what was the question at issue, and my hon. friend got up and said that he was quoting from the Drury Bill of 1920. He quoted section 2 of what he said was the Drury Bill of 1920, whereas as a matter of fact he was quoting from the Bill of 1919; and all that I denied was that he was quoting from the 1920 Bill. That was the whole of my denial, and I repeat it now.

I went on further and said that he did not have the Drury Bill before him although he said he was quoting from it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: You had it.

Mr. ROSS: Certainly I had it, and I said there were sections in the Drury Bill —does my hon. friend deny it?

Mr. EDWARDS: Will my hon. friend allow me?

Mr. ROSS: Just wait. My hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) takes up more of the time of the House than I do.

Mr. EDWARDS: And he takes it up to much better purpose than the hon. gentleman does.

Mr. ROSS: I said that the clauses in the Drury Bill referred to former Acts under the Hearst Government, and I did not know—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why did you not send it across?

Mr. ROSS: You are awfully wise, but you are not as wise in regard to this Bill as you thought you were.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, I am.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I must remind hon. gentlemen who desire to be heard that they should do the committee the honour of rising in their places and addressing the Chair. I must also remind the hon. member (Mr. Ross), who is addressing the committee, that his remarks should be addressed to the Chairman and not to hon. members on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. ROSS: I must apologize for referring to the hon. the Acting Solicitor General as I have done, and I shall, in deference to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, address the Chair. The hon. gentleman said that if I had sent the Bill across he would have told me what it meant. He introduced section 29 and he did not know what it meant. It was admitted by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) that it did not express the intention, and they had to ask for an amendment. I am not disputing what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) said in regard to the points he raised in reference to the two Bills, but if he will go back and refer to the Bills of 1918 and 1919 he may find that what he said is practically correct. In the draft Bill of the Drury Government it will be found that former sections have been enacted in an obscure way and you would have to refer to the laws of 1918 and 1919 to see what the effect of some of these sections was. I did not have those laws before me. What the hon. gentleman said was, that he was quoting from a definite Bill when in fact he was not quoting from it and that was what I rose to point out.

Mr. EDWARDS: The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. D. C. Ross) has told us that he was discussing this matter frankly. The hon. member neglected to refer to the fact that he repeatedly said that he had the Drury Bill of 1920 before him and that he could not see the clause in question.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I must ask hon. members to refrain from any further discussion of the Drury Bill. The amendment which was under discussion when this subject was introduced has been adopted. We are now considering another amendment and I would request hon. members to bring their remarks to bear on the amendment before the committee.

Mr. EDWARDS: Well, Mr. Chairman, I shall certainly bow to your ruling. A comparison was made between a bill introduced in the Ontario Legislature and a certain portion of the clause under discussion and I presume that was why the reference to that Bill was regarded as pertinent. However, I shall bow to your ruling and not discuss that any further. I will merely say that I hope that the eyesight of my hon. friend from West Middlesex has improved in the last half or three-quarters of an hour and that he is now able to see what he was before unable to see.

Mr. ROSS: I thank you.

Mr. ARTHURS: I have every sympathy with the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) along certain lines. I have a great many German-born people in my riding who were misled by friends of the hon. member and who for many years, and perhaps up to the present time, or certainly until the beginning of the war, thought they were British subjects. In my riding these men were led as lambs to the slaughter, and were sworn by the ordinary oath of allegiance by magistrates appointed by the province of Ontario under the old regime. They were told they were British subjects and they in many cases believed it and continued to believe it up to the present time. But that does not make them British subjects in any sense of the word, and that is the only class of men to whom the hon. member's remarks would have any reference to at all. I have them in my riding as well as he has, and I have every sympathy with the men who were misled. The great majority of these people many years ago learned that this did not constitute the ordinary form of naturalization. They knew what the hon. member for North Waterloo knew, that every man who was naturalized under the Act before the beginning of the war could have obtained, as he can obtain to-day, a certificate that he was properly naturalized. My hon. friend can apply to the Secretary of State and obtain for the county of Waterloo the name of every German, Turk, or native of any country who has been naturalized within that county. He knows that as well as I do.

Mr. EULER: Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Arthurs) trying to give the impression that I said anything to the contrary?

Mr. ARTHURS: Yes, the hon. gentleman did give me that impression. He said that many men could not find out whether or not they were naturalized.

Mr. EULER: I said they had no proof.

Mr. ARTHURS: The hon. gentleman said that many men in his county could not find out whether they were or were not naturalized. Now he takes the apposite side and says that he did not intend to give the impression to this House that they could not find out whether they were properly naturalized or not. I make the assertion now that any German or foreigner in Canada can very easily find out whether he has or has not been naturalized. It is open to any member of this House or to any person in Canada to find out whether he has been naturalized or not.

Mr. EULER: Will the hon. gentleman say that they could do that if they were naturalized before Confederation?

Mr. ARTHURS: There was no naturalization before Confederation.

Mr. EULER: Will tney be recognized as British subjects if they were here before Confederation, or will they have any difficulty in proving it in order that they may vote?

Mr. ARTHURS: My hon. friend was not referring to men who are long since dead. He was referring to men who were in Canada and whose naturalization should or could have been conferred upon them since Confederation. The number of people who were here before Confederation would be so small as to be absolutely negligible in the argument. As I said before, as far as these men were concerned, I have a great deal of sympathy with them. Not long ago one of these men wrote to me saying that he had the naturalization papers issued by the province of Ontario and this man believed until the beginning of the war that he was a British citizen. But the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee)—and hon. members on this side had no means of knowing what it was excepting by hearing it read by the hon. member—would have conferred upon the wives of all men who believe themselves to be citizens of Canada before or since the war the privilege of voting. It would not only have conferred that right upon the wives but would have conferred it upon the men themselves. In other words the amendment of the hon. member (Mr. Pardee) if adopted would allow these men—who before the war made no serious attempt to become British subjects—to have the privilege of voting. I do not think that is my hon. friend's intention, but that is the practical effect of the amendment he has moved.

Mr. EULER: I would like to correct what the hon. member for Parry Sound says by quoting from the Order in Council itself:

[Mr. Arthurs.]

The minister observes further that many persons of alien enemy origin who came to Canada many years ago, during infancy, and have grown up believing themselves to be British subjects, now that questions of nationality are being carefully scrutinized, find it impossible to show that they have become British subjects, although they have voted and held municipal positions for many years. Many others believe that they became British subjects through the naturalization of their parents, but they are unable to prove it because the records are not available.

That is from the Order in Council itself.

Mr. ARTHURS: In reply to that I would repeat what I said before, that the records are available to any member of this House.

Mr. PARDEE: The Government do not know that.

Mr. ARTHURS: The Government does know it.

Mr. PARDEE: Why did they make that statement in the Order in Council, if such is the case??

Mr. ARTHURS: These records are available to members of Parliament. I know that in my riding I asked for the returns showing the number of alien persons who have been naturalized in the district of Parry Sound, and the records as far back as the year 1867, which I believe to be complete, were produced. I believe that on any similar question any hon. gentleman could obtain exactly the same records. So far as the children are concerned, it is a very minor matter; the trouble is with these cases with which I sympathize myself. I have a great deal of sympathy with the class of men who have been unwittingly misled; but the adoption of the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Lambton will include a lot of men who never had any desire at all to become British citizens.

Mr. CANNON: To read clause 29 intelligently we must bear in mind that up to now the discussion has been carried on in connection with two different classes of electors. The first class are the women and children who have become naturalized British subjects by operation of law; and the second class are the men who have received the privileges of British subjects in Canada for a certain period of years, but who, owing to certain particular or special reasons, have not in hand to-day certificates of naturalization and therefore are not to be considered as British subjects. These men—according to the naturalization law as it stands and reads to-day—would not be in a position to be naturalized for a period of ten years to come. The first class of people —that is the women and children—were disposed of by the amendment proposed by the member for North Waterloo which was voted down by the committee.

We are now dealing with the second class of people. The member for West Lambton proposed an amendment whereby any citizen of this country who has been living in Canada for at least ten years, and would be entitled to naturalization, would have the power, when an election takes place, to go before a judge and secure from that judge a certificate and, having done so, be entitled to cast his ballot. The amendment is to cover the case of the men to whom I referred at the beginning of my remarks. The Acting Solicitor General very briefly answered the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pardee) by saying that it was absolutely impossible for the Government to accept that amendment because it meant an amendment to the Naturalization Act itself. We have heard, since the discussion of clause 29 began in this House several ministers telling us that it was absolutely impossible to touch the Naturalization Act because that Act was a piece of legislation passed by the Imperial Parliament, and adopted by the various Dominions giving the right to every British subject within the Empire the privileges of British citizenship throughout that Empire. The Acting Solicitor General says that what the hon. member (Mr. Pardee) proposes is absolutely unacceptable because it means laying our hands on this Naturalization law, and when the Minister refers to the Naturalization law he has in mind, if I understand him correctly, the law of 1919. The argument of the minister is either good or bad. If that argument is good it ought to cover all cases; if it is bad it ought to be rejected by the committee. I claim, Mr. Chairman that that argument is unsound, because this committe, led by him as adopted the second paragraph of clause 29 and that is a direct amendment to, and an express alteration of, the Naturalization Law of our country. According to the Naturalization Act of 1919 the wives of British subjects in this country are British subjects. Furthermore the minor children were naturalized by the fact that their father was naturalized, and when they become of age are British subjects possessing all the rights of British subjects. I say that if the naturalization law of our country remains as it reads to-day, and if no other law was introduced into this Parliament, these women and these children would be entitled to vote. This is not only my personnel interpretation but it is, I think, that of the highest authority in this House as far as Parliamentary procedure and Parliamentary precedents are concerned, I mean the Minister of Justice. (Mr. Doherty). The Minister of Justice has discussed this question before the committee, and if you refer to unrevised Hansard, page 2136, you will find that, speaking on this subject, in answer to a question he spoke, he said:

> Mr. Doherty: There are a class of people from whom the vote to which they would otherwise be entitled is taken by this Act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

> Mr. Cannon: And from the wives and the children?
> Mr. Doherty: If this Act had not stepped in, these women having become British subjects by marriage, or the children having become British subjects by the naturalization of their fathers would have had a vote.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. CANNON: This is the declaration of the Minister of Justice who is the highest legal official in this House, a colleague of the Minister of Militia, (Mr. Guthrie) and that declaration is a contradiction as flagrant as possible of the declaration just made by the Minister of Militia. On the one side here is a minister who said: If there was no Franchise Act these women and these children would have a right to vote. On the other hand, when the hon. member for Lambton wishes to give at least some portion of justice to a class of our population the Minister of Militia replies: I refuse to accept that amendment, because by accepting it I would alter the Naturalization Act. This House is entitled to better treatment from the Government. The Minister of Militia has no right to amend the Naturalization Act to suit his own purposes and the purposes of the Government on the one hand, and, on the other hand, to refuse the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lambton because it does not suit his or their purposes any further. We have already amended the Naturalization Act, and in saying that I base myself on the declaration made in this House by the Minister of Justice; and he cannot deny it.

Mr. DOHERTY: Will my hon. friend allow me? There is nothing in what he quoted as having been said by me which involves that there is any amendment to the Naturalization Act in the fact that these women and children were refused the vote. I did say that if that provision had not withdrawn their right to vote they would have had it. Why? Because if that right had not been withdrawn from them, this present Act would simply have said that every British subject had such a right. But the class that he is now discussing is a class of people who are not British subjects. The distinction seems to me to be perfectly clear.

Mr. CANNON: The Minister of Justice says that the distinction is perfectly clear. Well, he may be very grateful that his sight is as good as that; mine is not. I say that the Minister of Justice declared in this House that if paragraph 2 of clause 29 had not been introduced these women and children would have had the right to vote; and to take away that right to vote that they had as British subjects—and they were British subjects according to our Naturalization law as it existed—the Government had to change the existing law.

Mr. DOHERTY: I never said that.

Mr. CANNON: That inference, I can logically draw from the remarks made by him.

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. gentleman can draw that inference, but whether he can do so logically is another question.

Mr. CANNON: Therefore I say that the Minister of Militia has no right to bring before this committee as a sound argument the fact that if the amendment brought in by the hon. member for Lambton was adopted it would in a way alter the provisions of the Naturalization Act. That Act, when it did not suit their purpose has been put aside already by the Government. I think this matter is very clear and there cannot be any discussion on it. The Minister of Justice gets up and says: I did not express any opinion that these opinion were given the vote by the Naturalization Act. I know they are not. The Naturalization Act does not give the vote; but it does give British citizenship. And the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) as a Minister of the Crown gave his pledge before this House and before the country that the qualifications to be an elector under this new Franchise Act would be British citizenship within certain limitations as to residence and age.

Since last Thursday when we discussed this clause I have studied clause 29, I have read several books and I have tried to find parallel legislation—legislation which would mean that in this country side by side we will have British subjects entitled to vote, and also British subjects who will be denied the right to vote. Nowhere can I find such legislation. Although, Mr. Chairman, I am sure you have read a good deal of history I do not think that you have ever encountered an instance of such legislation in any history of the world. The only instance which comes anywhere near this piece of legislation is the laws passed under the Roman Empire, when the people were distributed into three classes: The Roman citizens, the slaves, and the foreigners. The foreigners, if you refer to that legislation, you will find included not only people but also animals not indigenous to Italy. When, for instance, elephants were introduced during the first battles against Pyrrhus they were immediately designated by the legislature of the Roman Empire as foreigners, when strange birds from Asia were introduced into Italy they were classed as foreigners; when wild beasts from Africa were brought back to Rome by pro-consuls they also were classified as foreigners. Is this Government going to carry us back to the time of the Roman Empire? Are we in the country, which is supposed to have a progressive and democratic policy, going back to the policy which has been rejected by every other country in the world? I do not believe that our people will endorse such a policy.

Now, one word and I will conclude. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) made a very strong appeal to this committee to-night, and he based it on legislation introduced by the Hearst Government. I have only this to say in reply. The Hearst Government after introducing that legislation went to the people—and the President of the Privy Council knows what happend to that government. If he takes his precedent from the Hearst Government, he may at the next election meet the same fate as the ministers of that government did when they appealed to the people of the province. We do not want as a precedent for legislation in this House legislation passed by defunct governments; we want live legislation; we want legislation that secures the rights of the people. And I think the amendment brought in by the hon. member from Lambton is an amendment that ought to be adopted by the majority of this committee.

Mr. FIELDING: Subject to the insertion of a few words, to which I shall refer in a moment, I desire to endorse the amendment of the hon. member for West Lambton, and I think that strong reasons can be given in support of it. The Minister of Militia in opposing the amendment based his case upon, shall I say the sacred character of the Naturalization Act? He said that this amendment was an attempt virtually to amend the Naturalization Act; thereupon he proceeded in the very warmest manner to defend the ten-year clause in that Act. He said that ten years was not too long; it was a perfectly good clause; it was all right. But he forgot something. He forgot that his two colleagues, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) and the President of the Council (Mr. Rowell) said that it was all wrong. The other evening these hon. gentlemen told us that they were instituting negotiations with the British Government with a view to trying to get that provision changed. I put the question directly to the Minister of Justice when he was speaking of the negotiations in general terms. I said: tell us what was the object of these negotiations; what was it you wanted? Well, he said, the ten-year clause is capable of alteration. I said: then you want to reduce that period? Yes, that was it. So they are negotiating—and the Minister of Militia is a party to it—to get a change in the Naturalization Act as respects the ten-year clause. Yet the Minister of Militia bases his whole objection to the amendment on the ground that the ten-year clause is absolutely correct and proper. Now, that clause has caused a grievance. The Minister of Justice admitted that it was a grievance; the President of the Council admitted that it was a grievance. If it was not a grievance, why were these hon. gentlemen trying to get the clause changed? There is, then, according to their statement, not mine, a grievance existing under that ten-year clause. The Minister of Militia does not see it. He says it is a splendid clause; ten years is not too long; he almost talked as if he would like to make it twenty. But while he says ten years is not too long, the Minister of Justice and the President of the Council say that it is too long, and that they are doing their best to have it changed. Well now, the Minister of Justice, the President of the Council and myself had a little friendly conversation as to the possibilities of getting that provision changed by negotiation. The Minister of Justice and the President of the Council, admitting the grievance, thought we should endeavour by negotiation with the British Government to obtain a reduction of the ten-year term which my hon. friend, the Minister of Militia says is admirable. Well, I did not think that the prospect of getting it changed was a bright one. It is important to bear in mind that both the Minister of Justice and the President of the Council considered that there was a grievance in the present condition of affairs; the Minister of Militia took the opposite view; and I have to make up my mind as to which of these views is correct. If they are entering upon negotiation with the British Government in order to remove this grievance, I am bound to believe that the Minister of Militia has been away for a while and is not informed of what is going on in the Government of which he is a member.

I do not see any prospect of remedying this grievance in the way that the Minister of Justice and the President of the Council have suggested. I know the delay that takes place in connection with such negotiations. It is hard to get decisions from a Government; then after you get your decision you have to introduce an Act of Parliament. As I said in the previous discussion, the Naturalization Act is virtually a treaty between the Imperial Government and the Governments of the overseas dominions, and it is not likely that you can bring about any change until negotiations have been had between the parties. We all know how slow things of that kind are in coming to a finality; months, probably years, will pass before you can get a remedy for the grievance which the Minister of Justice and the President of the Council say exists. Then my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) comes in and says: since we are not likely to get the remedy for that grievance in the way these Ministers suggest, why can we not remedy it ourselves? We do not need to amend the Naturalization Act. We cannot by any Act of our own create an Imperial citizenship. but we can create a Canadian citizenship for the purposes of this Act. If there are honest people in this country who ought to have a vote but who are disqualified from voting by reason of that ten-year provision, thent I say that while we cannot alter the Act as respects Imperial citizenship we can by our own Act declare the terms and conditions upon which we will apply a remedy of our own. And the remedy is this; that for the purposes of this Act, that is, for the purpose of voting and for no other purpose, these persons shall be qualified to be naturalized upon the terms and conditions which existed in Canada before the passing of this Imperial Naturalization Act. What is wrong about that? That is not an amendment to the Naturalization Act. An amendment to the Naturalization Act would affect the question of Imperial citizenship.

Mr. ARTHURS: Will the hon. member say that a man who was in Canada for twenty or thirty years prior to 1914 but made no attempt to become a British citizen should be placed on the same footing with regard to the franchise as the man who became a British citizen during that period?

Mr. FIELDING: Well, I am afraid that my hon. friend is luring me into a broader discussion than I desire to undertake.

Mr. ARTHURS: The amendment proposed by the member for West Lambton is that any man who has been in Canada and who has the qualifications, whether or not he ever applied for British citizenship, should be a voter under this Act.

Mr. FIELDING: Well, I do not think that the question whether one has applied or not makes very much difference. If my hon. friend wants a general declaration of my views on the franchise, while I do not want to go into such a broad question, let me say this: there is a troublesome and embarrassing question out in British Columbia regarding Asiatics. I confess that it is an embarrassing situation, and I do not wish at the moment to express any opinion about it. But subject to that, and expressing no opinion about that, I say I believe that every person who is prepared to take the oath of allegiance, who has lived in Canada the necessary time, who has acted the part of a good citizen, and who wants to become naturalized, to become a citizen of Canada, by all means should be allowed to do so. As for disfranchising those who have been British subjects, that is another feature of the Act; the terms that have been used by various speakers in condemnation of it are not too strong. But that is getting away from the amedment, to which I wish to confine myself.

First, I say, there is a grievance. We will put aside what the Minister of Militia said. He was away; he did not know what was going on; he did not know these negotiation about which the Minister of Justice ad the President of the Privy Council have told us. These hon. gentleme say that there is undoubtedly a grievance; that many worthy people in this country are going to be deprived of the opportunity to vote because of the misfortune of the Naturalization Act, and they propose to take up negotiations which may occupy some considerable time. Now, my proposal is, not that we shall attempt by any Act of our own to give to these people an Imperial naturalization; that we cannot do. But what I propose and what the member for West Lambton proposes is that for all the purposes of this Act, that is for the purpose of voting, those persons who have a grievance shall, upon going to a judge and taking the oath of allegiance—that is not in the amendment, but these are the words I would like to see inserted; I take it that the member for West Lambton means that —these people, I say, who are disqualified by the operation of the Naturalization Act, shall have the right, upon proving that they are qualified by residence and otherwise to vote as citizens of Canada. That is what the amendment means and that is what I support.

Mr. TWEEDIE: The argument which has been advanced by my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) involves the question of our enabling all people of alien enemy origin who resided in Canada the necessary length of time prior to 1914 to be enfranchised under the present law.

It seems to me that the gist of the whole argument was suggested by the hon. gentleman who asked the question in regard to those people who had resided in this country thirty and forty years. I know of many instances of that throughout Western Canada. The period may not be so long, but there are men there who have lived in the Dominion ten, twelve, twenty-five years, who have never become naturalized. British citizenship, I think, is one of the greatest blessings which any person can enjoy, and if there has been any fault in our country in the past, it has been the fault that all Governments in this country have held the question of citizenship at too slight a value. If those people who have lived in this country refused to make application for their naturalization papers when the required time had elapsed, are we going to set aside the principle of our citizenship simply in order to place those people on the voters' list? If they did not in that period appreciate their citizenship, there is no just ground upon which they can complain of the attitude of the Government if we do not pass some speedy, hasty legislation in order that they may enjoy the franchise at the next election. If they themselves were so inconsiderate of their rights during that long period, why should we now worry over the rights and privileges which they seek to enjoy?

Various matters in connection with the right to exercise the franchise in this country have been discussed, and as was pointed out by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Butts) in connection with the administration of the affairs of the province of Nova Scotia, the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) who stands here to-night and asks us to extend the franchise to the Germans, Austrians, Bulgarians and Turks who have resided in this country three years or more, is the very same hon. gentleman who deprived some twenty-five or thirty or forty thousand good British subjects of the franchise in Nova Scotia while he was premier of that province. Did he manifest any interest in those who were good, true British subjects? I cannot for my part understand the change of heart to which he gives expressions to-night when he deliberately took the franchise from British subjects when they were enjoying it, because they were working for a Government which was of a different political faith from his own.

As regards the amendment of the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Pardee), any man who has any pride in British citizenship and in his country should vote down that amendment, and let those people abide their time subject to the laws of this country.

Mr. FIELDING: I am going to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Tweedie) a question. Supposing that all he has said regarding my action in the matter of a franchise in Nova Scotia were as true as it is untrue, what bearing would it have on the discussion? What reason does it give for anything that is said here to-night?

Mr. TWEEDIE: The bearing which it has is what I pointed out, namely, that I cannot understand the attitude of any hon. gentleman who will deprive any British subject of the franchise, and who will at this time manifest such great distress on account of Germans, Austrians, Bulgarians, Turks or any other alien enemy who resides in this country. The point which I wish to make is, that he wishes to set at naught or treat lightly the great benefits of British citizenship in this country, and on that point I take issue with the hon. gentleman. I have no doubt that he is sincere in the views which he sets forth. I am equally sincere in the views I set forth; and I believe the great mass of the people of this country who enjoy the franchise do not want alien enemies rushed in so that they may enjoy those privileges simply because they have resided in this country for a period of three years.

Mr. FIELDING: Much of the discussion to-night has not been about alien enemies; it has been about the disfranchisement by this legislation of British subjects, persons declared by the law of the Empire, by the law of Canada, to be British subjects.

Mr. TWEEDIE: The hon. member (Mr. Fielding) knows perfectly well that the Minister of Militia, who is in charge of this Bill, pointed out, clearly and in a manner which is beyond contradiction, that this is not a Bill for the disfranchisement of any person who enjoys the franchise of this country; it simply does not include a certain class of people to whom he referred. But the hon. member (Mr. Fielding) now endeavours to divert the issue from this amendment, and the point of this amendment is that it intends to naturalize Austrians and Germans and others, who have lived in this country for a period of three years before the year 1914, some of whom perhaps have lived in this country for thirty or forty years. I am not entering into the general discussion as regards the clause, but I say that I am absolutely opposed to giving those people the right to exercise the franchise at the next election in this country simply because they lived in this country three years.

Mr. FIELDING: I have only one other question. I am assuming now that my hon. friend is a rational being.

Mr. TWEEDIE: I am.

Mr. FIELDING: I am speaking courteously. Will he tell me why he supposes that these people who for forty years have been in Canada with no desire to have the vote, are suddenly going to be seized with a desire to vote?

Mr. TWEEDIE: I do not know. It was the hon. gentleman who was asked before distinctly if he divided them into two classes, those who had resided here for a period of three years and those who had resided here for ten, twelve, twenty-five or forty years. As to the first, if they came to this country from Germany, or Austria, or Bulgaria, or Turkey, or any other alien enemy country, he must know just as well as I do that after such a short period of separation from their mother country, when the war broke out, they must have had an attachment for their mother country, and that during the period of the war, if they ever had any slight attachment for Great Britain or the Dominion of Canada, that must have been wiped out by the stand of Germany or their native country in the war. As regards the other class, if they did not respect and value their citizenship in this country enough to apply for and secure naturalization and enjoy the franchise, they are not worthy of consideration at the present time under the circumstances, and in view of the struggle through which this country has passed.

Mr. PARDEE: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tweedie) has become very vehement over this matter. Perhaps he might say what his Government did not very many years ago. May I refer to Orders in Council which have been passed regarding the very subject upon which this amendment is founded? If the hon. member will take the trouble to look up Orders in Council Nos. 2552 and 2948, a portion of which have been quoted here to-night, he will find that the Government, when they passed one of those Orders in Council, had exactly this class of citizens in mind, and they said to themselves: It is not a fair proposition to disfranchise these men who have been many years in this country and believe themselves to be British subjects, but who cannot prove that they have their full naturalization, and we will give them the vote. There is no doubt about that. The letter was quoted here to-night; it has been sent for now, and if I get it will read it. Surely the hon. gentleman cannot deny that if they have resided in Canada for three years prior to 1914 and from 1914 to 1920, they have been here for ten years, which is as much as the Naturalization Act itself calls for. Surely that is sufficient to entitle them to vote under the Act. Order in Council No. 2552 reads in part as follows:

> The minister observes further that many persons of alien enemy origin who came to Canada many years ago, during infancy, and have grown up believing themselves to be British subjects, now that questions of nationality are being carefully scrutinized, find it impossible to show that they have become British subjects, although they have voted and held municipal positions for many years.

That is, they are merely naturalized by reason of the great number of years that they have resided in this country.

> Many others believe that they became British subjects through the naturalization of their parents, but they are unable to prove it because the records are not available.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What does the Order in Council do?

Mr. PARDEE: It simply gives them the right to vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, it gives them naturalization.

Mr. PARDEE: It gives them naturalization, and therefore, they have the right to vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is very different.

Mr. PARDEE: Now you take it away from them. It is given with one hand and pulled back with the other. It is given by the hand that wants to be fair; it is taken back by the hand that wants to act unfairly politically. It is all very well for people to discant on these people in this House. The people who are condemned are some of the best citizens in this Dominion, although I do not say that that is true of all of them. This is being done for a political purpose, and it will have one effect and one only, and that is to keep open a wound that should be healed and that will not make the country united.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If this amendment has done nothing else, it has exposed the pretensions of hon. gentlemen opposite as regards the principle that governs them in matters of the franchise. I have sat in this House for many years and, particularly in recent years, I have heard it urged times without number from across the floor that naturalization and the franchise go hand in hand, and that it is a crime to take away the franchise from any person who enjoys naturalization. They have argued that the franchise is founded upon naturalization, rests there, is part and parcel of naturalization, and cannot be divorced therefrom. It is true they carried it too far. There was no truth in the doctrine at all. It is true that while they argued in favour of that doctrine they themselves were parties to the disfranchisement of half the citizens of this country and resisted the enfranchisement of that half. It is true they had no sincerity when they so argued, but at least that was the rock they believed they stood on; and on that they made their fight. Where do they stand now? They look over this country and find a class of our population whom they would like to see given the vote. Why they would like to have those people vote it is for them to say and for us only to conjecture; and I would conjecture that they believe they would get the support of those people. Do they say it is because they are naturalized citizens? Is it because the franchise is necessary, appurtenant to, and cannot be separated from, naturalization? Oh no! They are on other ground altogether. They have forgotten all of their preachings of the last four or five years and now tell us that even though these people are not naturalized it is the duty of the Government to give them the vote. And the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Pardee) reads an Order in Council which he says is being repealed by this Bill and which had the effect of enabling the naturalization of certain people in this country who had lived for many years and who possibly through a technicality were not in a position to comply with the requirements. Any person who came in under that Order in Council had to assume all the obligations of citizenship in this country before he could be naturalized or enjoy any of the benefits of naturalization. Is that the case with this amendment?

Mr. PARDEE: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is? Would any man or woman who came and sought the vote under that amendment be bound by any of the obligations of citizenship?

Mr. PARDEE: I admit that I should have added, "on their taking the oath of allegiance." With the consent of the committee I now desire to do so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What obligations of citizenship would that bind them to?

Mr. PARDEE: Do you not believe in it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No man but a naturalized citizen of Canada is bound by any of the obligations of citizenship. Would the hon. member support the compulsory military service of a man who was not naturalized? If so, would he give him the vote?

Mr. PARDEE: It is a different thing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know it is a different thing. Now let me ask the hon. member again. Would he support a Military Service Act which compelled a non-naturalized citizen to fight in the armies of Canada?

Mr. PARDEE: That is a different proposition.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know it is, but I am asking you the question.

Mr. PARDEE: Draw your own conclusions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why does not the hon. member answer?

Mr. PARDEE: Never mind, the two things are different.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know why the hon. member will not answer; he is perfectly aware that his answer would convict him. Would he answer, Yes? If he did, he knows he would put himself in a position that would make him ridiculous before the world.

Mr. PARDEE: In your opinion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why does the hon. member not answer?

Mr. PARDEE: Go on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He is like the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross).

Mr. PARDEE: No, he is not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, I commend the hon. member's discretion in repudiating the comparison.

Mr. PARDEE: Not in the way you imply.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly no country in the world ever called upon any but its own citizens to defend it, and no country in the world ever gave the franchise to any one who was not a citizen; and in no Parliament that I ever heard of, was it ever suggested that the franchise should be given to any but citizens.

Mr. POWER: Does my hon. friend not know that we allowed American citizens in the Canadian army to vote in the last election?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not a man.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Do you remember the election at St. Johns, Quebec?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do, and I remember the investigation which the hon. member called for and which completely exploded the charges made.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Does the hon. gentleman believe in the decisions of Judge Maclennan?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly I believe in Judge Maclennan?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I knew the answer I would get.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I trust that hon. members will not enter into a discussion of the election at St. Johns, Quebec.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly not, Mr. Chairman. You know as well as I do, Sir, that as soon as hon. gentlemen call for an investigation and it turns out against them they at once malign the judge.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: However, what I am discussing is the Act itself. I say that under the War-time Elections Act no citizen of any country but Canada had the right to vote.

Mr. POWER: But they did vote.

Mr. DUFF: They voted in Amherst.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not discussing whether they did vote or not.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: Back water.

Mr. DUFF: American citizens voted in Amherst.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If hon. members desire to raise any question regarding the way in which the Act was carried out they may do so, as they did before, and again they will be beaten. But if they are capable of turning their minds to the point at issue I shall address them. The War-time Elections Act gave the franchise to British subjects and to no man or woman who was not a British subject. Citizens of the United States came to Canada and enlisted here; the War-time Elections Act was passed, and not one of these men was given the vote.

An hon. MEMBER: They did vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not an hon. member on the other side—and they are sitting in this House tonight—rose in his place and suggested that any American citizen or the citizen of any other country should have the vote by that Act, even though they were at the time fighting in the defence of this country. Now, Sir, let me ask you: Does it not occur to you as rather curious than hon. gentlemen opposite should see an Act passed, at a time when the citizens of another country had enlisted to serve this country in its defence in Europe, and never suggest that those men should have the vote? They never suggested that those men should be enfranchised, because they were not our citizens; but now they look abroad and see Germans Austrians, Bulgars and others who are not our citizens, and they are most solicitous in their behalf, being exceedingly anxious that they should be given the vote. Surely, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CANNON: That is Toryism.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I put my Toryism against the Liberalism of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You will have to come to it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I address this particularly to the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), because none needs it more. Surely if there ever was a time when the doors of the franchise could be opened to the citizens of a country other than our own it was the time when this country in its peril was being defended by citizens of other countries who had sworn allegiance for that purpose. Surely they might have been admitted to the franchise. That was never asked for, that was never included in our law. But now hon. gentlemen rise in the House and ask that men who have never sought citizenship in Canada, who, for all we know do not want citizenship in the British Empire and who have not been burdened with a single obligation of citizenship, be granted the rights of citizenship—that the doors be thrown wide open and that these people may be given the ballot the same as citizens of this country. In what position are hon. gentlemen placed? For years they have sought to malign the election laws of Canada on the ground that you never could divorce citizenship from the ballot. If this amendment has done nothing more it has shown that there has been no principle inspiring the Opposition in their antagonism to former election laws any more than there has been in their antagonism to this; and if this discussion has done nothing more it at least has served a purpose in one respect: it has shown that the only rule which governs hon. gentlemen opposite in matters of franchise is a pretty shrewd conjecture as to what class of people in this country is likely to support themselves.

Mr. EULER: If the Government is really sincere in desiring to implement the promise made by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) it would be quite possible for them to ensure that the people under discussion to-night should be given the vote and proper naturalization. I am one of those who argued, and argued very sincerely, that the vote ought to go with citizenship. I believe that yet. I am going to support the amendment of my hon. friend from West Lambton, and I shall do it for this reason: If it is logical for this Government to take the vote away from British subjects in one case, it is just as logical to give it to people who are not technically British subjects. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) states that there is a grievance. That there is a grievance is, I think, admitted by responsible members of the Government. That is amply proven. The Prime Minister himself has said that he considers these people have a grievance. That is proven in different ways. It was proven by making provision in 1917 by means of Orders in Council which were designed to provide for the naturalization of these people in a proper way. It was proven by the Prime Minister's speeches at the Peace Conference and it was proven by the attitude of the President of the Privy Council when he backed up the Prime Minister in that matter. It was proven the other night by the Minister of Justice when he admitted there was a grievance. It was even proven by the Acting Solicitor General although he takes a different attitude to-night. To-night he is willing to withdraw what he said in the debate in 1919. To-night he thinks that these people who have been here longer than ten years should not be given the vote; and yet in the debate of 1919 after I had made an argument to the effect that we should have made it possible for these people to become technically Canadians by giving them naturalization the Acting Solicitor General made some observations. I should add that I had moved an amendment to the effect that the clause should be amended as follows:

> That such person is the subject of a country which at the passing of this Act was at war with His Majesty, provided that such subject was permanently resident in Canada on the 4th day of August in the year one thousand nine hundred and nine.

The effect of that was that a person who had lived in Canada for ten years should be given the right of securing naturalization. I thought that amendment was reasonable and it was reasonable at that time to the Acting Solicitor General, because he said:

> I confess that the amendment does not appear to be unreasonable but I would like to have an opportunity of considering whether or not it would be deemed a radical change from the provisions of the Imperial Act, and as there are several other elements in the proposal which I shall have to consider, I would ask that the matter stand over until some future occasion in order that I might look into it.

He based his objection not upon the same ground as he has to-night but merely upon the fact that the amendment might conflict with the Imperial Naturalization Act. We have this expression of opinion from the Prime Minister, the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Justice, that there is a grievance here to be remedied. If this amendment cannot be accepted, and if the Government is sincere in all it has said, I would like to make the suggestion that I made the other night and that is that this House re-enact the old Canadian Naturalization law and that it have force until such time as the Imperial Naturalization law may be altered. That is surely a fair suggestion. It conforms entirely to the views of the Government if they desire to give these people the franchise and naturalization. The answer made to that the other night was that they did not wish to have a dual naturalization law. But you have that in effect now. You had it for some time in the past and you actually have it to-day. As a matter of fact, while you speak of giving these people of enemy alien origin the Imperial naturalization, after you have successfully completed your negotiations with the British Government, they will not get Imperial naturalization any way. Take men who came from Germany, Bulgaria, Austria or Turkey; if they have Canadian naturalization to-day that is all they can get. The members of the Government know that to be the fact because we know that some of these men have made application for an Imperial naturalization certificate and they have been refused. If they are refused that now, what chance have others of getting the Imperial Naturalization certificate?

I say, none at all. Then, under the circumstances, if it is conceded that these men are worthy of naturalization—and I am not asking on behalf of anybody else—they still have to come before the judge. If you enact the old Canadian naturalization law it is not a matter of throwing the doors wide open to everybody in the country; it means that they still have to go before the judge and prove that they are worthy of naturalization. If they prove that they should be given Canadian naturalization—and as I said the other night that would serve the purpose in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand—give them Canadian naturalization. That is what they want; they are Canadians first, last, and all the time; and it is no reflection upon their patriotism to say that Canadian citizenship probably appeals much more to them than Imperial citizenship—I should think it would to everybody in this country. As far as I am concerned I would like to make that suggestion in all sincerity and good faith to the Government. Why could it not be possible, at this very session of the House—because it need not be debated at length—to re-enact that Canadian naturalization law. Under that Act these men can become naturalized and the vote will necessarily flow from such naturalization. I should like to know from the Government what possible objection there can be to that? I think that would be the preferable and the better way, because then they would be British subjects and the franchise will flow out of that fact. I ask again what objection can there be to it? That is the best way, but if that way cannot be followed I assuredly will vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Lambton in order to do justice to these people.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question, question.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment (Mr. Pardee) carry?

Mr. EULER: I would like to get a reply if possible from the Government or from the minister. That is only fair.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The rule is that when the committee has declared itself ready to vote upon a question, no hon. member has a right to speak. The hon. member can, however, speak again, after the amendment has been disposed of, and before the clause is adopted.

Mr. EULER: I was merely desirous of obtaining an answer to my question from the Government.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon member is certainly out of order in repeating his question. The question is now on the amendment. All those in favour please say aye.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

The CHAIRMAN: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

The CHAIRMAN: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. BUREAU: Yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out to hon. gentlemen on both sides that the time for members to rise in order to exercise their right to demand a vote is when the Speaker, or the Chairman, states that in his opinion the ayes or the nays have it. After the presiding officer has declared the amendment carried or lost it is too late to rise for the purpose of demanding a vote. Owing to the fact that this rule has heretofore been misunderstood I would suggest that by unanimous consent a vote be taken.

Amendment negatived: Yeas 44, nays 76.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand that the amendment submitted by the hon. Acting Solicitor General has been carried?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: Now the clause stands as amended?

The CHAIRMAN: As amended by the Acting Solicitor General. The following words have been added to the clause:

[Mr. Euler.]

Provided that no disability provided by paragraph B of subsection 4 of section 8 of the Naturalization Act, chapter 38 of the statutes of 1919 (second session), shall disentitle a person on that ground alone to the said certificate.

Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. CAHILL: I want to enter my protest against the clause passing as it stands at the present time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No doubt that will help the clause.

Mr. CAHILL: Has some hon. gentleman anything he wishes to draw my attention to? If so, I will take my seat and listen to him.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is all they can say.

Mr. BUREAU: Those who cannot speak cannot hear. That is why they are shouting "louder."

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. CAHILL: No.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out to the hon. member (Mr. Cahill) that it is not sufficient for him to rise and remain standing. If he desires to prevent or delay the putting of the question, he must continue the debate.

Mr. CAHILL: I thought it was customary for the chair to ask for order, and I was waiting for order to be restored. It may be the rule that you must do more than stand on your feet and wait for order to be restored.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. CAHILL: I doubt very much, Mr. Chairman, if there is any rule defining how fast a man shall speak or how much time he shall occupy in debate. If hon. members opposite are not anxious to get away from here in a great hurry, they can very well continue as they are doing now and they will get all the entertainment they are looking for.

Before the clause carries I want to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that this country at the present time is in worse need of people than of anything else. I think the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder) will agree with me on that. And yet this clause will work directly against immigration. When people come to a country they come to make new homes, to better their condition, and to become citizens. But after men and women have been in this contry for forty, fifty and in some cases sixty years enjoying the rights of citizenship, and find that by an Act of this Government they are precluded from exercising the franchise, I submit that the Government of the day could do nothing better calculated to work a great hardship on our taxpayers than by passing this Act, which will exclude for the future not only Germans, Bulgarians, and Turks, but American and British subjects—the very people that we want; because if the Government juggle with them as they did last year by passing legislation under which they can send British subjects out of the country—a piece of legislation that was rushed through this House without any consideration—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CAHILL: There seem to be several chairmen calling for order, Mr. Chairman. I do not know whether they are assuming to undertake the duties of the Chair or not. This very measure juggling with the franchise will be the means of keeping good prospective citizens out of this country. There is no question about that. When my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie) says that a man who has been in this country for twenty-five or thirty years without asking for naturalization should not have it, the reflection is not on the alien, it is on the Canadian people. There must be something radically wrong with Canadianism when men and women will live in this country for thirty years and fail to ask for citizenship. When my hon. friends the other day introduced the question of education and urged that we do something for our foreign immigrants, I thought they were taking the right course, and I think so still. But it is the business of the Government and of every citizen not to attempt to juggle with the votes of these immigrants as has been done in the past.

When it is said that this Act cannot be changed, I would ask my hon. friend the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) what course are the Ontario Government adopting in this matter? Are they being guided by the Naturalization Act? Not at all. Every province makes its own franchise; and surely the Dominion Government, has no less power than the governments of the provinces. We have a much greater responsibility than the provinces—a responsibility to every immigrant, and it is a responsibility that we should not treat as lightly as it is being treated here tonight by hon. Ministers of the Crown in trying to pass this legislation. One minister stated that the franchise had been passed last year without opposition. In 1918, my first session, the first measure I spoke on was the Franchise Bill. I was in favour of woman suffrage, but I was opposed to having it tied up to the War Time Elections Act. It was explained that it could not be done in any other way, and I accepted it for that reason because I wanted women to have the vote. Hon. members get up and say that everyone on this side of the House was opposed to woman suffrage. One minister says there was no opposition. Well, he has apologized for telling an untruth. Another minister says he was reading from an Act submitted to the legislature of Ontario; and he must admit that he is stating an untruth. They treat this matter in that way, they pay no attention to it any further than to get this Act in such shape that they can carry off another election. They have no more regard for the country, they have no more regard for citizenship, they have no more regard for what is decent and honest than to simply say: Give us this Franchise Act, we will force it through anyway, so that we may have a chance to get back again to the Treasury benches. The attention seems to be so good that I think I will desist; otherwise if my hon. friends want to prolong the discussion I am quite willing that they should do so. However, I just rose to go on record as protesting against this Act going through in this manner. So perhaps in future my hon. friends will have a little more patience.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Before the clause carries I wish to emphasize again the situation created by the answer given to me tonight by the Acting solicitor General regarding the case I brought before the House. It was the case of a gentleman who came to this country from France thirty years ago, with his wife and his son who was seven years old. After a while he got his naturalization papers, and, of course, by the operation of the law his wife and son became British subjects. When the war broke out in August, 1914, the son took the first boat for France, he fought for five years, and he was decorated with the Military Medal and the Legion of Honour. His mother, who resided in Montreal, took part in all the war charities; that is she was practically the head of the charity organizations in that city, and she did such good work that she also was decorated by the Government of France. The mother and the son had both voted in the election of 1917; they had the right to vote. Now, according to the interpretation given by the Acting Solicitor General, this woman, who during five years cared for the relatives of those who went to the front, and her son who during five years risked his life and was wounded for the cause of civilization, will be deprived of their votes unless they will submit to the humiliation—I insist on this word—the humiliation of going before a judge and submitting to an inquiry regarding their loyalty and probably being cross-examined by one of the government officials; and yet if the husband of this woman and the father of this boy had come from the slums of Chicago or had been a Mexican desperado they would not be obliged to submit to this humiliation. I appeal to the fairness of members of the committee. Is it fair that this woman and this boy who did more than their duty during the war should not be entitled to vote without going through this procedure, while the son of a man from Mexico or of a man from the slums of Chicago, who probably did nothing during the war, is entitled to vote without going through it. I submit that any member who does not realize the unfairness of this situation is either blinded by political eagerness, or, non compos mentis.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I wish to protest against this clause being carried in its present form. On Thursday last I put the following question to the minister in charge of the Bill:

> Will the minister be kind enough to tell me what good reason there is and what good purpose will be served by compelling these British subjects to travel miles from their homes to obtain certificates?

The minister answered, if answer it can be termed:

> Under this Bill as drawn it is provided that a person who has become a British subject by operation of law, in order to vote, shall obtain a certificate from a judge. That certificate is not for the purpose of identity, as my hon. friend from George Etienne Cartier suggested a few moments ago; it is for the purpose of satisfying the judge that the woman has such qualifications that in any event, though she may be a British subject by operation of law, she would be entitled to naturalization.

He admits that these people who are compelled to make applications are British subjects. Clause 29 says, in respect of the qualification of a voter:

> A voter is one who
> (a) is a British subject by birth or naturalization; and,
> (b) is of the full age of twenty-one years; and,
> (c) has ordinarily resided in Canada for at least twelve months and in the electoral district wherein such person seeks to vote for at least two months immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election.

Under this clause it is not claimed that these people who are compelled to travel many miles at inconvenience to themselves and their families to appear before a judge and obtain this certificate are not British subjects. The law says that to have a vote you must be a British subject. Why, then, are these people compelled to go to this unnecessary trouble to obtain a certificate? If the reason is good, why did the minister not tell the committee what that reason was? Later, the minister said:

> The amendment I have submitted meets with the approval of the Government and it is the desire that it be passed.

It seems to me that the Government should be in a position to tell the committee and the country what reason they have for insisting that these people who are British subjects should be compelled to obtain these certificates. It has been suggested that the reason is political; that the motive is not what it should be. If that is the case, I will make my remarks very brief. I am sorry that the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Calder) is not in his seat, because he knows the conditions in Saskatchewan even better than I do. He must know that if this provision is carried into the law thousands of people in the western provinces will, in effect, at any rate, be disfranchised. If that is the intention of the Government, then this proposed legislation is worse than the War-time Elections Act. Under the War-time Elections Act the Government went out and disfranchised people by what I would term front-door methods, but in this case, they give the franchise with one hand and take it away with the other; instead of using front door methods they are going in the back door and depriving these people of the right to the franchise.

I have nothing to say on behalf of the newcomers to this country or against the ten-year residence clause as contained in the Naturalization Act. Taking into consideration the promise made by the Prime Minister, I have, however, something to say on behalf of the people who are already in this country, who came here at our invitation. We went so far as to send our immigration officers into their country to invite them to come here and it seems to me that if we want to build up in this country a united citizenship, that is a mighty poor way to go about it. I think that every hon. member looked upon the resolution introduced a few days ago by the member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) in respect to the education of the foreign-born in this country as a good resolution. You can say all you like along the lines suggested in that resolution, but if you treat newcomers to this country as we propose to treat them under the terms of this Bill, you will undo everything you do in every other way. I dissociate myself from anything that may have been said on behalf of foreigners in this country. No one from this group has been making a plea for foreigners. These people are Canadian citizens, British subjects in this country, but for some reason this Government has seen fit to bring down a Bill that will in effect disfranchise subjects who are entitled to the vote.

Mr. EDWARDS: Mr. Chairman, if I wanted any confirmation of the view which I hold that we have held the franchise too cheaply in the past, I have had that confirmation in the discussion which has taken place here to-night. The hon. member (Mr. Johnston) has spoken of the inconvenience to which certain people will be put in obtaining the right to vote. Well, the man who does not see fit to put himself out to the extent of travelling a few miles in order to get the necesary papers to entitle him to vote cannot be regarded as a man who values his citizenship very highly. I do not think that we need waste any sympathy on persons of that kind. The Bill makes provision for certain safeguards to enable certain people-in this country to vote. Hon. gentlemen complain that they will be put to inconvenience because of their having to travel several miles to get the necessary papers. The hon. member for Chambley and Vercheres (Mr. Archambault) recited what he wishes us to regard as the very pathetic case of a young man who had gone to the war and had done distinguished service, being decorated for his services. The hon. gentleman, it seems to me, is making a great mistake in concluding that the mother of that boy would regard the provisions of this Bill as a hardship. I do not think that person would look upon it in that light at all. Any woman whose son was of the calibre to get on board the first ship and go over to France, any woman whose son could come back and tell her of the terrible war in which the country was engaged and in which he bore such a part, will be impressed with the necessity of placing certain safeguards around our franchise and will appreciate those safeguards as something in the interest of the country as a protection for people who have done their duty.

I am struck, as most hon. members must be, with the great concern of certain hon. gentlemen opposite that certain people in this country should have the franchise. I have a recollection, when the War-time Elections Act was going through, that certain hon. gentlemen opposite objected very strongly to certain British subjects resident in the United States who came over here and joined the forces, being willing to risk their lives for this country, having a vote, and stated that these men did not have a dollar's worth of interest in this country. Yet these hon. gentlemen are very solicitous of certain others upon whom we think it necessary to place certain restrictions. It is all very well for the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Pardee) to say that the war is over and that we should forget all about it; that we should get down to a cordial feeling. Certain hon. gentlemen opposite have no intention of allowing the people of this country to forget the war. I will venture to prophesy that when the next election comes around, these same hon. gentlemen will make it their chief stock-in-trade in certain parts of Canada not to permit the people to forget there was a war; that they will use conscription in certain parts of the country to influence certain electors to vote against the Government which enforced conscription in this country; that they will use the War-time Elections Act and the fact that certain people were allowed the franchise and certain others were not, to influence certain votes. Yet these hon. gentlemen are very quick in getting up now and asking the Government to forget all that took place during the four or five years the war was on. They would have the people forget anything the Government has done that might redound to its credit, but for the political reasons they will not allow certain people in this country to forget certain things the Government did which certain classes of the people did not like, as for instance, not granting the franchise to certain women and granting it to other women. That calls to mind the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite, especially from Quebec, who, when the matter of giving the franchise to women was before the House—

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: It had to come out.

Mr. EDWARDS: Well, I hope it does not make my hon. friend sick; it has not had that effect on me. When the question of extending the franchise to women was before the House, my friend will admit, certain hon. gentlemen opposite from Quebec objected to the extension of the franchise to women, and that, I believe is the attitude generally of that province. I am not going to quarrel with the people of Quebec for taking that attitude if they choose to take it. A great deal can be said both for and against the extension of the franchise to women, but I think I am stating what is correct when I say that a strong feeling was manifested in this House by certain members from Quebec against extending the franchise to women, which feeling was not manifested, at least to the same extent, by members from any other province. It was their privilege to express that disapproval if they wished to do so, but it seems slightly inconsistent on the part of those hon. gentlemen who objected generally to the extension of the franchise to women to show now such solicitude on behalf of women of alien enemy origin who happen to reside in this country. Those who give this bill careful study and consideration will see in this clause certain safeguards which we should have in this legislation in order to protect those people who are entitled to the franchise. We have been entirely too slack in that regard in times past; we have held our franchise entirely too cheaply, and the safeguards which are inserted are no more than are right under existing circumstances. True, the war is over, but the people of this country have not yet forgotten and will not forget for many years to come that there was a war. They are still suffering from the losses which many of them have sustained in that war, and it is in the interest of all concerned that there should be a period of probation, so to speak, before certain people are taken into full citizenship.

Section 29, as amended, agreed to on division.

Progress reported.

On the motion of Right Hon. Mr. Doherty the House adjourned at 1.05 a.m. (Tuesday.)

Tuesday, May 11, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE.

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House I move:

That the name of Mr. Rinfret be placed on the following Select Standing Committees of this House: Debates and Mines and Minerals; that the name of Mr. Stein be placed on Forests, Waterways and Water Powers and Private Bills; that the name of Mr. McDonald be placed on Mines and Minerals, Forests, Waterways and Water Powers and Agriculture, and that the name of Mr. McKenzie be substituted for that of Mr. Duff on the Public Accounts Committee.

[Mr. Edwards.]

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Acting Solicitor General) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 126 to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Bankruptcy Act that was passed last session will come into force on the first of July next under a proclamation in that behalf which was issued, I think, in the month of January. It is now intended to amend the Act. I think there are about twenty amendments proposed. They are not very radical in their nature but it is thought that they will simplify the Act and make it more workable. I will take the opportunity when the Bill comes to its second reading or is in the committee stage to more fully explain the nature of these amendments.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

SENATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 113, for the relief of Jessie Elizabeth Hudgin.—Mr. Mowat.

Bill No. 115, for the relief of Caroline Ewing Gudewill.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 116, to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the Western Assurance Company.—Mr. Mowat.

Bill No. 117, for the relief of Charles Lindsay Keys.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 122, to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the British American Assurance Company.—Mr.——

Bill No. 125, for the relief of Irene Martin Chapman.—Mr. Hocken.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Mewburn, Bill No. 23 respecting the Hamilton, Provident and Loan Society, to increase the amount that it is authorized to receive by way of deposit, and to change its name to the Hamilton Provident and Loan Corporation, was withdrawn.

THE BUDGET SPEECH TO BE DELIVERED MONDAY NEXT.

On the Orders of the Day:,

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): May I ask the right hon. the Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster) if the rumour is correct that we are to be disappointed in our expectation that the Budget will come down to-morrow. If it is not coming down to-morrow, can he inform us when we may expect it?

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Acting Prime Minister): I do not know whether my hon. friend is disappointed or not but circumstances have intervened which make it undesirable that the Budget Speech should be delivered to-morrow as was anticipated. One of the considerations in the matter is the pleasurable circumstance that the Prime Minister of the Dominion (Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden) is expected to take his place in the House to-morrow, and on account of his return just previous to the time that the Budget was to have been delivered it was not considered advisable to go on with the Budget without giving the Prime Minister an opportunity of looking over it. Secondly, we shall not sit on Thursday but shall sit on Friday. The Budget might have been delivered on Thursday if we had sat on that day, and it does not seem advisable to start the debate on Friday. The Budget will, however, be delivered on Monday next which must not be, for that week, considered as a dies non, as it very frequently is. It being Budget day I hope all the members will make it a point to be in their places.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING: Monday is not usually Budget day. While I must not say that there has been no such case I have no recollection of a Budget ever having been delivered on Monday. It is usually considered desirable that the Budget should be delivered on a day when there is a pretty good attendance. Of course my right hon. friend will say that there should be a good attendance every day. Perhaps Monday is being chosen for some special reason that my right hon. friend has not given. He informs us that we are to have the pleasure of the presence of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) and he immediately proceeds to say that is the reason why we should not have the Budget on Wednesday, implying that it will not be a pleasant thing and that he does not want to mix a pleasant and an unpleasant thing. I think my hon. friend might take into consideration the fact that Monday is not a Budget day, and it would be a wise thing to say Tuesday. If, however, the Government insists on Monday, we will have to agree to it.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I do not know upon what grounds my hon. friend says that Monday is not a Budget day.

Mr. BUREAU: Custom.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Monday has as many hours in it as any other day, and after the rest of Sunday it ought to be a good day for the Budget.

Mr. BUREAU: The shock would be too great.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is the duty, and I think the pleasure, of members to be present on that day, but the main object is this: We do not want to lose any more time in getting the Budget down and proceeding with the important business of the House.

Mr. FIELDING: No time would be lost if the Budget were brought down on Friday next.

Mr. BELAND: The session might come to an end before it is delivered.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I do not think so.

EXPLOSIVE WORKS AT BELOEIL.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOSEPH ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Vercheres): I wish to call the attention of the House to a very important matter. In my constituency there is a placed called McMasterville—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: —where the Canadian Explosives Company have a very large plant.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BUREAU: That is awful.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The plant is situated on the river Richelieu, about a mile from the village of Beloeil, where, in addition to quite a considerable population, there are some very beautiful summer residences. Now—

Mr. SPEAKER: I hope the hon. member will come to the point of his question.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I will, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask the hon. member to remember the nature of the questions which may be asked on the Orders of the Day.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: In the last fifteen days four explosions occurred at that point which resulted in considerable damage to property and even loss of life. I have already drawn the attention of the Government to the danger which exists from the presence of this plant and the necessity that an inspection should be made. The answer I received was that the Government had no jurisdiction and could not name an inspector or make an inquiry. I wish to inform the Government that chapter 31 of 4 and 5 George V—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member is making an argument upon the Orders of the Day and, under no circumstances, can he do that. If he desires to ask a question perhaps the matter is of sufficient importance to permit him to do so, but he should not, under the guise of a question, submit what is in effect an argument.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to make an argument but simply to point out to the Government that according to sections 15 and 17 of the Act referred to—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must ask the hon. member to submit his question.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I am coming to that, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Government will order an inquiry and name an inspector under the terms of sections 15 and 17 of this Act, because it is most important. Otherwise there may be a catastrophe impending.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: To-morrow I will give my hon. friend an answer. In the meantime if he would direct a note to me detailing briefly what the trouble is which he has been trying to expose this afternoon it will help in coming to a decision.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I had the same answer from my right hon. friend two years ago.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Two years is so long a period that I have forgotten.

Mr. SPEAKER: The very circumstance that this matter originated two years ago is sufficient evidence that the question is one that ought not to be submitted on the Orders of the Day.

[Mr. Archambault.]

REPORTED MIGRATION OF MENNONITES FROM CANADA.

Hon. J. A. CALDER (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow) a day or so ago made inquiry as to whether or not the Government had any official information respecting the migration of a large number of Mennonites from Manitoba and Alberta to the United States, and if so, if the Government was taking any steps to induce the people to remain in Canada?

In reply I beg to state that the Government has no official information of any such movement. During the course of the past two or three years the press has on several occasions contained announcements of the possibility of the emigration from Canada of a large number of Mennonites because the Governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta,—under the administration of their school laws, were insisting that the children of these people should be required to acquire a proper and efficient common school education.

If the contemplated movement referred to by the hon. gentleman is due to the fact that there are large numbers of Mennonites who will not observe the school laws of these provinces the Government considers that it would be most unwise to interfere in the matter in any way.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT, 1907. AMENDMENT.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior) moved the third reading of Bill No. 57 to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: I was not aware from the order of business given to the House last night that the third reading of this measure was to be moved this afternoon. However, I think it would be inadvisable to allow the Bill to pass its third reading without once again referring to features of the measure which seem to afford reasons why it should not pass in its present form. There has been a great deal of discussion on this Bill in committee and it is therefore unnecessary again to review in detail the different points that have already been mentioned. It will be sufficient to draw the attention of the House to significant features of these amendments.

The first amendment changes the method of making application for boards of conciliation and investigation. As I pointed out in committee the change in this regard has not, so far as the Government has shown, been requested in any general way. The minister has intimated that members of the executive of the Trades and Labour Congress have asked for the change, but he has brought before the House no evidence in corroboration of his statement. He has not presented to the House any communications from the Trades and Labour Congress, and if he has them in his possession I would ask him to read them to the House before the Bill is passed. In the absence of any request for a change in the method of proceeding under the existing Act, I think it is obviously desirable that a method which has stood without criticism for thirteen or more years should be permitted to stand, and that the effectiveness of the Act should not be jeopardized by an amendment of the kind suggested which can do no good and may lead to a great deal of harm.

Then another amendment changes the allowance to witnesses from what in the Act at the present time makes it accord with the allowance to witnesses in the courts of the different provinces and establishes instead a minimum of $4 a day. The effect of that amendment, as was pointed out in committee, will simply be to encourage large numbers of witnesses to be called before these boards, and will greatly increase the cost of administration. When this objection was pointed out to the minister, he made the somewhat popular reply that the Minister of Labour was anxious that workingmen should not be taken away from their work as witnesses and paid meagre witness fees. I might point out that many of these boards hold their proceedings after the day's work is over, and that the attendance of witnesses may be for only ten or fifteen minutes. If the law is not left as it is, it is certainly going vastly to increase the number of witnesses called and correspondingly increase the expenses of administration.

In considering the amount to be paid witnesses under the proposed amendment, we must also consider the effect of the previous amendment, which the Government has introduced, and which permits any two individuals connected with an industry to which the Act applies to go around with a memorial and upon securing signatures of a majority of the employees to become entitled to have a board of investigation granted. I believe that the two amendments taken together are going to have the effect of leading to a considerable interference with many of these large industries which are among the most important to the country, and that they will prove prejudicial to capital and labour alike.

A further amendment gives to the Minister of Labour the power, before a strike or lockout has taken place, of his own initiative, and without request from any of the parties, to appoint a board of investigation under the Act. That, I believe, is going to work prejudicially to the Government, and to the parties whose interest it was intended to serve. The Act is intended as a means of investigating existing disputes, and provision is made whereby any of the parties interested may make application to the Government in a regular way for the appointment of a board. In the past that provision has worked very well. Interested parties have been able to get a board when it was needed. More than that, where a dispute in any case has assumed the proportions of a strike without a board having investigated its merits, the law, as amended two years ago, gives the right to the minister to step in at that stage and appoint a board on his own initiative. But here is an entirely new departure in the nature of interference by the Government of its own will with private business, and that I think is a principle which the House should not endorse.

These are the essential features of the outstanding amendments made by this Bill to the existing legislation. All of them are doubtful, some of them are thoroughly bad. Other amendments were asked for by labour and by the public for the protection of public interests, namely, that public services and industries in the nature of public utilities operated by municipalities or provincial governments should be brought under this law. The minister says that the Department of Justice has given some ruling in regard to the application of the Act to municipal enterprises, and in virtue of that ruling he does not propose to alter the measure one way or the other; he proposes to leave these important matters in a condition of doubt. My view is that if instead of bringing in amendments altogether doubtful in their effect, the Minister of Labour had introduced amendments that are desired and have been requested for the protection of communities and of employees in these large public utilities, he would be rendering a service that would be worth while. There are these objections, it seems to me, to the amendments proposed to the Act, and, as already pointed out, they cover pretty much all that the amendments pertain to.

Let me say that I think the discussion on these amendments has shown the necessity of having the Minister of Labour in this House. I wish to pass no reflection whatever on my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) who has been piloting the Bill through the House. He has handled the measure with that skill which all are prepared to concede he possesses in very large measure. But I am sure he will be the first to admit that he has repeatedly felt the difficulty of appreciating the amendments which he was asking the House to accept. These industrial matters affect all classes, and if there is one place above another where a Minister of Labour should be it is in the House of Commons, where from day to day he can answer urgent questions on existing industrial situations.

It is a serious reflection upon the Government's appreciation of what is owing the public that as regards the two departments of government which have the most to do with questions of greatest concern to-day, namely, matters pertaining to labour and capital, and matters affecting returned soldiers, the ministers of those departments should be in the Senate where it is not possible for members of this House of Commons to ask them questions or to get the benefit of their views.

May I point out in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that the action of the Government in keeping the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment in the Senate amounts really to a form of closure so far as concerns the securing of information on vital questions or the discussion of them. We are by the rules of Parliament precluded from making any reference to what has taken place in the Senate. When those amendments to the Industrial Disputes Act were introduced in the Senate the Minister of Labour made certain representations concerning them. I have read the debate in the Senate. May I say that my hon. friend who has been piloting the Bill through this House gave us, in regard to this particular matter of witnesses' fees reasons for adopting the amendment, entirely different from those given by the Minister of Labour in the Senate. There the proposal originally was that the minimum should be $2 a day. In the discussion yesterday my hon. friend who sits to my right (Mr. Lemieux), an ex-Minister of Labour and the member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) also an ex-Minister of Labour, and the immediate predecessor of the present minister and myself—three of us who have had to do with the administration of this Act, were all united as to the folly of making the suggested change, and yet there was no opportunity for the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Robertson) to give his views to the House, and under the rules we were precluded from referring to the debate in the Senate.

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (West Peterborough): I want to ask the leader of the Opposition in view of what he has said, if, after all, he does not think it is desirable when a person or persons has or have a complaint to make that he or they should be in the position of an ordinary litigant, who upon issuing a writ is able to cite the defendant to appear before the court and have the whole case dealt with on its merits. In that way not only private interests but public interests are protected. Does the hon. gentleman not think that some such course as that should be taken?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to answer my hon. friend's question, but I am sorry to say that I do not quite see the point of it; I do not see that it has any bearing upon what I have just been saying with regard to the importance of having the Minister of Labour in this House. I should be glad to have my hon. friend repeat his question if he cares to do so.

Mr. BURNHAM: The hon. gentleman has just said that he thinks it is unfair.

Mr. McMASTER: What? Louder.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) is referring to remarks which I made some little time ago, whereas I have in mind what I have just been saying.

Mr. BURNHAM: Two minutes ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps a little later I can go over the ground again, if my hon. friend wishes it. In the meantime, perhaps he will permit me to finish my remarks on this point of having the Minister of Labour in the House of Commons.

It is very opportune, Mr. Speaker, that reference should be made to this matter on this particular measure, because there is no doubt that the House has been detained longer in dealing with this measure than it would have been had the Minister of Labour been here to explain the features of his own Bill. We had to have two or three adjournments in order to find out what the minister really meant. Lest it might be said by my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) that these adjournments were unnecessary, I should like to direct the attention of the House to the circumstance that I pointed out to the minister (Mr. Meighen) that one of the amendments which he brought in did away altogether with a very important amendment to this law which was passed in 1910. I asked him if he were aware that that was the effect of his amendment, and he replied that he was not, and he adjourned the House to ask the Minister of Labour about it. Yesterday he came and frankly admitted that the amendment as brought in had that effect; that it was never intended as it dropped a very important amendment to the Act made in 1910 at the instance of the railway employees and railway companies. That, I think, is quite sufficient to show the unwisdom of having legislation promoted in this House by ministers who know nothing whatever in a detailed way about the legislation which they are promoting. But I come back to what is fundamental under the British system as respects a ministry and that is that it should be where at all times and on all occasions it can be questioned upon important matters of public concern. As I have said, the matters of greatest concern to the future prosperity and present contentment of our country, are those which relate to industry and to the well-being of returned soldiers.

The course of this legislation helps us to appreciate, I think, just why this session has lasted so long and why so little has been accomplished during the time we have been here. If any one looks over the legislation which the Government have introduced, he will find that almost the whole of it amounts to bringing into this House Bills which have previously been brought in and passed, brought in again and amended, and then brought in once more for further amendment. I have not at the moment a list of the Bills which have been before the House; if I had I could show that with the exception of half a dozen measures, they are mostly in the nature simply either of a consolidation of former legislation or of a chopping up of existing laws into different Acts and the assignment of parts to one minister and parts to another, and the bringing in of little amendments, some of which may be necessary, but many of which, like the amendments to which I have directed attention, are mischievous and bad. Now, that is the reason why we have been taking up so much time during this session to so little account. There has been very little legislation of what one could call an original or constructive nature. The Government have brought forward practically nothing of that kind; if they think they have, I should like the minister to cite instances. Take the Grand Trunk Bill. At the last session that measure was introduced. We complained that it was being rushed through; that errors would creep in; that it would have to be amended on a subsequent occasion. This session the Government brings down a measure to correct errors in the hasty legislation put through last session, and two or three days are occupied in the consideration of that measure. Take the Opium and Drug Bill. What was that measure but a measure that the Minister of Health (Hon. Mr. Rowell) had amended a year or two ago and which he brought back this session for further amendments—amendments so extensive that the whole Bill had to be reprinted? I might mention other legislation, but the facts are familiar to every hon. member. I submit that instead of tinkering and tampering with existing legislation to no effect, the time of this Parliament should be taken up, at this time of all times in the country's history, with constructive legislation along lines that are in accordance with the country's needs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must point out that the minister, in moving the motion for the third reading, has exhausted his right to speak.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Except in reply.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no reply on the third reading

Mr. BUREAU: Stung.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion for the third reading of the Bill?

Motion agreed to, on division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS.

On the motion of Hon. N. W. Rowell (Minister of Health), the House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Canada Shipping Act, chapter one hundred and thirteen of the Revised Statutes, 1906, and to provide:—

1. That Part V of the said Act, relating to Sick and Distressed Mariners, be repealed, and in lieu thereof it be enacted,—

(a) That the Minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may rent and equip and maintain premises for hospitals for the care and treatment of sick mariners, and may, with the consent of the person having the control and management of any hospital, designate such hospital to be, during his pleasure, a hospital for the care and treatment of sick mariners, and contract with such persons for the care and treatment of sick mariners, and may discontinue the use of any such hospital for the purposes aforesaid; and that the minister may make regulations for the government of any such hospital, and prescribe the duties and powers of the medical and other officers and employees of such hospitals, and of the port physician and of all other officers required to perform any services in carrying out the provisions of this legislation or of any regulation made hereunder; and all hospitals devoted exclusively to the treatment of sick mariners shall be under the exclusive control and management of the minister; and that any shipwrecked, destitute or otherwise distressed seamen may, by authority from the minister, be temporarily boarded and lodged and taken care of at any marine or seamen's hospital devoted exclusively to the reception, care and treatment of sick mariners;

(b) That there shall be levied and collected on every ship arriving in any port in Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island or British Columbia, hereinafter called "the provinces," a duty of two cents for every ton which such ship measures, registered tonnage, but in no case shall the duty payable by any ship be less than two dollars in any year; that such duty shall be payable on each ship three times during each calendar year by the master or person in command of such ship, or by some person on his behalf, to the collector or other chief customs officer at the port at which such ship is entered, at the time of making such entry, and such entry shall contain on its face the tonnage of such ship, and no entry shall be made and no clearance shall be granted unless such duty is paid;

(c) That no ship otherwise liable to pay the duty shall be exempt from the payment of the said duty by reason of her voyage being one not requiring entry or clearance at the custom house. If the ship does not require entry, the duty shall be paid immediately on her arrival

(d) That no ship engaged in the coasting trade of Canada and arriving at any port in any of the said provinces from any other port in the same province, or arriving at any port in the province of Quebec from any port in the province of Ontario, shall be subject to the payment of the duty; Provided that no ship arriving at any port in Canada from any place out of Canada, and afterwards continuing her voyage to another port in Canada, shall be exempt from the payment of the duty at the last mentioned port, unless she has paid it at the first mentioned or some other port on the same voyage;

(e) That as regards fishing vessels, the duty shall not be payable on ships employed exclusively in fishing or arriving at a port in the provinces when on a fishing voyage, but the master or person in command of a ship registered in Canada used exclusively in fishing or to be employed on a fishing voyage, may, if he so desires, pay the said duty of two cents for each registered ton before the said ship makes its first fishing voyage in any year, at the first port at which the ship receives any part of her outfit for the said voyage, and thereafter before each subsequent voyage during the year, but not exceeding three payments in all in any calendar year;

(f) That every collector or other chief officer of the customs shall account for the sums received by him under these provisions in such manner as the minister may from time to time direct;

(g) That sick mariners on ships paying duty shall be received and treated in any hospital for sick mariners as heretofore, and receive the care of a collector or other chief officer of customs where there is no marine hospital; but no sick mariner taken ill or injured outside of Canada, and arriving in any of the said provinces otherwise than in a ship to which he belongs, shall be entitled to the benefits conferred by these provisions, nor for a period longer than one year without written authority from the minister nor shall he be entitled to treatment or care thereunder when suffering from permanent insanity, and no sick mariners belonging to ships exempted from or not paying the duty levied under these provisions shall be entitled to the rights or benefits of sick mariners hereunder;

(h) That all expenditures made under these provisions shall be paid out of such moneys as Parliament may appropriate for the purpose; and be accounted for, with attested vouchers, as the minister may direct; and an annual report thereof, with a statement of receipts and expenditures shall be laid before Parliament.

2. That section two hundred and seven of the said Act be repealed, and in lieu thereof it be enacted that the minister may whenever he deems it necessary pay out of any moneys applicable to the relief of distressed seamen and appropriated by the Parliament of Canada for that purpose, such sums as he deems requisite for the temporary relief in such manner as he deems advisable, of shipwrecked, destitute or otherwise distressed seamen not entitled to relief under any of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894; and may also on the production of the bills of the disbursements with the proper vouchers and such other evidence as the minister requires, pay out of such moneys any reasonable expenses incurred by the Board of Trade of the United Kingdom or by any officers of His Majesty in any British possession other than Canada or in any foreign country, on account of subsistence or transport back to Canada of any seamen or apprentices who have been domiciled in Canada for twelve months and who have been found in distress either on account of shipwreck or otherwise in any place out of Canada; and persons serving in ships registered in Canada shall for this purpose be deemed to be domiciled in Canada while so serving.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the minister please explain how this changes the existing law as regards sick mariners?

Mr. ROWELL: This does not change the existing law as regards provision for the care and treatment of sick mariners; it rather changes in some aspects the administration of the law, as I shall explain in a moment, and it increases slightly the charges upon the vessels. Under the law as it stood up to the year 1908-09, the charge on vessels that came under the provisions of the Act was two cents per ton, in order to provide the money necessary for the care and treatment of sick mariners. In the year 1908-09, the charge was reduced to one and one-half cents per ton, and the amount thus realized was sufficient during the years between 1908 and the present year to provide all moneys necessary for carrying on this branch of the Government service. But owing to the very substantial increase in the cost of hospital care, the revenue under the existing Act will not be sufficient to cover that cost. It is estimated, that the revenue this year will be approximately $75,000, and the expenditure this year will be something over $90,000. The change proposed by this resolution, viz.: to increase the charge from one and one-half cents to two cents per ton will it is estimated bring our revenue up to $90,000, or a little over which will be sufficient to provide the moneys necessary for the care and treatment of these sick mariners. The change in the amount of the fee is the most important change involved.

Then there is a change in administration. At the last session of Parliament, the administration of marine hospitals was transferred to the Department of Health. We had at one time ten marine hospitals; of these, four have been disposed of; two are not now in use; and at present only four are in operation. A change of policy has taken place in recent years in the administration of this branch of the service. In view of the limited number of patients to be treated at any given port, it has been found more economical to make arrangements with the local hospital authorities for their care and treatment on a certain per diem basis. The result has been that in a number of places the maintenance of these marine hospitals has been discontinued and satisfactory arrangements have been made with the local hospital authorities for the treatment of the patients. The bulk of the work, therefore, is now covered by arrangement with the local hospital authorities, and in dealing with the matter, it was the view of the two departments that it was more convenient, expeditious and satisfactory to administer the Government hospitals in association with the work which is carried on in hospitals with which the Government have agreements for treatment of patients. Therefore, it was decided that the whole work should be carried on under the Department of Health, and the necessary changes to make that administration effective are provided for in the proposed legislation. The result is a revision of the clauses of Part V of the Act, which simplifies the procedure for carrying on the work and puts under the Health Department, not only the management of the marine hospitals, but the care of the sailors who come into our ports and who are provided for in hospitals in Canada under agreement with the department at so much per diem.

Mr. STEVENS: I think the minister should give careful consideration to this phase of the proposed change, namely, that we are increasing rather than decreasing, as it appears to me, the cost of administration. By subclause (a) the minister is given authority, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to rent and equip and maintain premises for hospitals for the care and treatment of sick mariners. While I do not object for a moment to any provision for giving proper care to sick mariners, I submit to the minister and the House that this is rather a wide provision. I think it would be exceedingly unwise to provide a method whereby at any chosen point hospitals could be opened up and maintained by the Government, when we know that in nearly every port affected by this legislation there already exists one or more properly equipped hospitals. I think the most effective and most economical way would be for the Government to make an arrangement with the hospital authorities to take care of sick mariners at these hospitals. We should avoid as far as we can, increasing the cost of administration of this particular branch of the public service.

There is another point I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. Subclause (b) provides that there shall be levied and collected on every ship arriving in any port in Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, or British Columbia, a duty of 2 cents per ton. Why exempt Ontario? I am not offering this in any way as a criticism of Ontario, but the point I am making is that there must surely be occasions when there are sick mariners in Ontario, and if the country is to assume the responsibility of looking after sick mariners, I think the cost should be distributed as widely as possible. Why should vessels arriving at a port in Quebec, Nova Scotia or British Columbia be taxed, and ships arriving at ports on the Great Lakes in Ontario not taxed at all? I submit in support of that argument that there is in existence to-day a very large unexpended sum from the fees which have been collected over many years. In other words, the cost of maintaining and caring for the sick mariners approximates less than one-half of the fees collected. I am not sure whether the fee is being increased by this measure.

I think this should be the course the Government should pursue. First of all, the fees should be reduced against shipping. I think that is of importance because after years of experience in caring for sick mariners we now have in hand a very large sum unexpended.

Another point I would bring to the attention of the minister is this. It is alleged —I am not sure whether the statement is accurate, and I would ask the minister to inform the House— that a large portion of the funds collected against shipping for the maintainence and care of sick mariners has been spent in other ways and for other purposes, purposes of relief and so forth, having no relation whatever to sick mariners. That is not fair. We must remember that this is a direct tax against shipping and in so far as it is a tax against shipping, it is handicapping the shipping of this country.

Another important point is this: The sick mariners' dues imposed in Canada have in the past been seized upon by the American Government as a ground for imposing a retaliatory tax against Canadian shipping entering their ports. In British Columbia, for instance, and I presume the same thing applies to the Maritime Provinces as against the ports of Maine and other states, our ships going to Seattle are now taxed very much more heavily than we tax American ships. The Americans imposed that tax because we imposed a tax on American ships entering our ports under this provision for sick mariner's dues. In my opinion it would be better if, instead of imposing a tax against all shipping, thereby inviting these retaliatory taxes against our shipping, we provided that where seamen are taken from a ship ill, the shipowner or company should maintain and care for that seaman. I do not think the shipping concerns of Canada are opposed to caring for sick mariners under Government control and direction, but to have a large fund created that is not used in anything like its entirety, and then under this legislation to increase the tax, is in my estimation bad policy for Canada, because this is a time above all others when we should encourage the development of Canadian shipping.

[Mr. Stevens.]

There is another point. Subclause (a) provides for the establishment of hospitals devoted exclusively to the treatment of sick mariners under the exclusive control and management of the minister. Supplementing what I said at the outset, I am afraid the minister will find, as the new Department of Health becomes established, that it is going to get far beyond anything that was anticipated by this House when it created that department. The care of sick mariners has been most admirably looked after by the Marine Department. The sick mariners have been well cared for in the past, as is proven by the fact that a large sum, amounting, I think, to several hundred thousand dollars for the care of sick mariners remains unexpended. Now we cannot create new paraphernalia and new officials, and as this legislation suggests, possibly the establishment of Government hospitals in different parts of the country, without enormously increasing the expense. I assume that the minister has considered this but I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that in the brief time I have had to peruse the resolution it appears to me that we are establishing a very dangerous precedent which if extended and perpetuated will result in a tremendously increased cost to the country with no vital advantage to the sick mariner. After all it is merely the care of the sick mariner that we are interested in and not the establishment of an expensive institution in the country. I want the minister to understand that I am not approaching this question with the idea of embarrassing him at all but there is a very widespread feeling amongst the shipping people that the cost to shipping should not be increased. One thing above all others that we should avoid is increasing taxes in any way unless we are going to get a very decided and advantageous return from the same. I bring these matters to the attention of the minister and I request not only an answer but if possible a careful reconsideration of his own views as expressed in the resolution.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: This is largely a question of administration. The Marine Department have been collecting large sums of money from the ships of this country but they have not been using that money for the treatment of sick sailors. They have been placing the money in the consolidated revenue fund and using it for other purposes. I went through the blue book a few days ago and discovered that they have between $150,000 and $200,000 still to the good.

They have collected over $150,000 from the shipping interests of this country for the purpose of treating sick sailors but they have not spent the money and they have not treated the sick sailors in very many cases. They have not undertaken the responsibility of looking after the sailors. There are places along the coast of Nova Scotia where the department have not made the necessary provision for attending to sick sailors. I drew the attention of the minister to one very urgent case in my own constituency. I do not know whether it is wise to transfer the treatment of sailors from the Marine Department to the Health Department. It would seem at first blush that it was the proper thing to do. If we are to have an efficient Health Department it should look after the health of the people in all respects, but at the same time I fear that the Health Department, being situated at Ottawa and knowing so little about our sailors a thousand miles away, the sailors may not receive any better treatment than they have been receiving in the past. I agree with the policy of the Government, wherever it is possible to carry it out, that sailors should be treated at existing hospitals. Wherever there is an efficient hospital in the place where the sick sailor happens to be, it is the proper policy to make arrangement with the hospital to treat that sick sailor but I think that the department must also take the responsibility at places where there are no hospitals and that is the main difficulty along the Eastern coast of Canada. There are places so far distant from hospitals that it is very difficult to deal with cases of this kind. Take, for example, the town of Canso, which is situated some ninety miles away from the hospital at Louisburg which is the nearest hospital that is sufficiently equipped to treat a sick man. The hospital at Louisburg is one of the four hospitals that the Department has been maintaining. We have about five thousand miles of coast line on the Eastern coast of Canada and you can understand that with only four marine hospitals these must be distant from any points where sailors may become ill. The policy of sending sailors to existing hospitals where there is sufficient equipment is the proper one.

I would like to see something done which will enable the minister to use the money that has been collected from these ships to equip hospitals or to assist in equipping hospitals at points like Canso where no hospital exists. Canso is the headquarters of the fishing fleet of Eastern Canada. It is the nearest point to the Banks and hundreds of vessels come in there every year and there are many cases of hardship arising from the fact that there is no place there in which to treat sick sailors. The French Government have provided a hospital ship to look after the fishermen who have their headquarters at St. Pierre and it frequently happens, I understand, that the Canadian sailors are treated in the hospital ship belonging to France and treated free. Not having taken the same interest in our sailors, we have not made any provision of that kind at sea, and we have also failed to make provision on shore for those who come in. The minister should go a little further than he proposes. He has collected a very large sum of money from the shipping industry for the purpose of defraying expenses connected with this service. I think that he should make provision that in places like Canso—and there must be other places of the same kind—where no hospital exists some capital expenditure should be provided to assist in building and equipping a hospital. I understand from the citizens of Canso that they are willing to do their best to maintain an efficient hospital at that place and in addition to treating their own sick they will be pleased to treat the sailors who ought to be treated by the department. They are not able to do that under present conditions. They have no hospital and in order to procure the money to build and equip a hospital it will be necessary to give them some assistance. I would like to ask the minister if he would agree to some policy whereby capital assistance could be given, or a yearly amount could be provided for a sufficient number of years, to enable a small town like Canso to build and maintain an efficient hospital.

Mr. CURRIE: I observe in the resolution that there is an exception made in the case of the province of Ontario. Am I right in believing that the province of Ontario is exempt from this resolution? I understand that the Government has been collecting fees for sick sailors for many years. In the province of Ontario we have as many sick sailors proportionately as there are on the sea coast. If there is a sick sailor in Ontario he is taken off the ship and sent to a local hospital where he is attended to. The expense is not charged against the ship; it is charged against the municipality. In the largest town in my riding, Collingwood, they have a marine and general hospital where they treat sailors who come from various places to that port. They are sent to the port and treated in the hospital, and the municipality invariably has to pay all the charges as these sailors have very little money. In many instances they are suffering from contagious diseases, such as smallpox, and they are sent to the hospital and quarantined and some are treated for five or six months. In typhoid fever cases they are taken care of for two or three months. Whilst the Dominion Government assesses shipping and receives a large mount annually from that source for the purpose of attending sick sailors, not one dollar have I ever been able to get out of the Marine Department for a hospital. The minister might take notice of that. Not only is that the case in Collingwood but it is equally true in respect to Midland, Fort William, Port Arthur, Goderich, Kincardine, St. Catharines, Toronto and all those points on the Great Lakes. There are over four thousand sailors under ordinary circumstances on Canadian ships on the Great Lakes who need this attention. Not only do we have to attend to the Canadian sailors but a great deal of the traffic goes by American ships and we have to attend to the crews of those vessels as well. The American vessels come to our great lake ports with corn, iron ore, and other products. Many of them are allowed to engage in the coasting trade in Canada and they come to Fort William, Midland, St. Catharines, Port Colborne, and other places with grain. Their sick men have to be attended to and why should Canadian municipalities have to meet the expense? That is something I cannot understand and I would like to know from the minister when he makes his reply whether it is a fact that this money tax has been collected from the shipowners on the Great Lakes in recent years and if so why it has not been paid over to these hospitals for the work they have done. I think that in the case of the hospital in Collingwood it will be found that there has been some seven or eight thousand dollars of charges against sailors who entered that hospital in the last four or five years. The money was handed over by the ships for the maintenance of these hospitals but the municipality has been unable to collect a cent of it and the reason assigned is that the municipalities are attending to the matter. For the reasons I have given I cannot understand what induced the minister to insert a clause in the Act exempting Ontario from the operation of this law. The Department of Marine for years has known that we have been making a claim for this money. The hon. member (Mr. Duff) shakes his head.

Mr. DUFF: The shipowners in Ontario have not paid these dues before.

Mr. CURRIE: I would like to know why they have not been made to pay the dues the same as the ships in the other provinces?

Mr. CHISHOLM: They claim the charges are too high.

Mr. CURRIE: The charges are not too high for other purposes. A charge is made by the Federal Department, for example, for inspection. Shipowners have to pay a fee for inspection to the province as well and they even have to pay an inspection fee to some foreign association; they pay to that association $35 or $40 for certificates of that character. There is no reason in the world why the shipowners on the Great Lakes—and they are not all Canadians, some are Americans, because there are foreign vessels trading on the Great Lakes—should not be charged the necessary fees to maintain hospitals for sick sailors. Those sailors are very subject, for instance, to typhoid fever. They are more subject to that disease than are the sailors on the ocean; and most of these cases in the Lake hospitals will be found to be typhoid fever cases. Up to a few years ago—I do not know whether there is any stringent rule against it now—these ships used to pump the water for drinking purposes on board from the slips at Toronto and various other ports which they entered, and by reason of the fact that sewage was discharged there instead of being carried a long distance out, that drinking water very often was contaminated. The same difficulty does not exist on ocean vessels because they either get pure water from the land before they start on their voyages, or else use salt water which has been condensed. As a result of these outbreaks of typhoid, the Department of Marine was compelled to order the installation of systems whereby the drinking water was disinfected before it was supplied to the sailors. The outbreaks of disease became so bad at one time that about 15 or 20 per cent of sailors on board the ships were suffering from typhoid fever because of the conditions which I have mentioned. I have every sympathy with the shipowner, but I have more sympathy with the poor sailor who never gets much of a deal from anybody, even from the Government. He is asked to pass examinations but the Government does not provide any education for him. Take the man who has to undergo an examination for the position of marine engineer. He is required to take a very high standing in mathematics and thermodynamics but no government in this country is giving men an education along such lines or conducting schools where these men might receive a training for their calling. It is like pulling hen's teeth to get a dollar out of the Government for assistance towards any of these purposes. Now this legislation gives the last blow—this is the blow that killed father. None of this money is to go to the province of Ontario but it is to be left to the farmers in the rural districts and the artisans in the towns to bear the expense of ministering to our Lake sailors whenever they fall sick. I hope the minister will see that the clause is amended so that the cities of Toronto, Hamilton, St. Catharines, Kingston, and others along the Great Lakes that have been maintaining hospitals for sick sailors and saying very little about it are properly compensated for the services they render. It should not be a case of charity at all to have to attend the sick sailors. The shipowners are very wealthy. Some of these shipping companies are paying as high as 80 per cent per annum since the beginning of the war. Talk about profiteering! Therefore to continue to exempt them from the payment of $35 or $40 per ship per year is to my mind a great mistake. I hope the minister will take that into consideration and will amend the clause so as to bring all the provinces under the same regulation and see that the sailors on the Great Lakes get just as good and fair a chance as the sailors on the ocean.

Mr. DUFF: I have listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Currie) and I cordially agree with a great many of them. But the trouble of which he complains is due to the fact that the sailors on the Great Lakes are not looked after by the Department of Marine or the Department of Health, because there is no provision for that purpose.

Mr. CURRIE: Under what?

Mr. DUFF: There is no provision under the existing law.

Mr. CURRIE: American sailors who are taken sick are looked after by the United States.

Mr. DUFF: I am not discussing what the United States Government are doing, I am referring to what we do in Canada. As I said a moment ago I am in perfect agreement with many of the hon. gentleman's remarks and am only trying to get this matter straightened out. If the hon. gentlemen will look at clause 384 of the Shipping Act he will see that it reads:

> There shall be levied and collected on every ship arriving in any port in the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island or British Columbia, a duty of two cents for every ton which such ship measures, registered tonnage.

It will be seen that the province of Ontario is omitted from the operation of the Act. As far as I am concerned I will be quite satisfied to have the Act made applicable to that province. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman says: There is no reason why sick sailors in the province of Ontario should not be treated in exactly the same manner as are the sailors on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and on the gulf of St. Lawrence. I feel quite confident that ship owners on the great lakes will not object to paying the small amount of dues which the Government asks in connection with the Sick Mariners Fund. Two cents per ton on a ship of 10,000 tons means $200. That has to be paid three times a year so that in the case of a vessel of that tonnage the ship owner would only have to pay $600 to ensure that sick sailors shall be properly looked after in the hospital. If the province of Ontario comes under this Act the department will arrange either that the local hospitals shall care for the sick sailors on the Great Lakes, or else will maintain hospitals of their own where the men can be treated.

Looking over this resolution and comparing it with the old Act, part V, chapter 113 of the Shipping Act, I really cannot see that there is very much difference between them except that the wording of the resolution is much longer than the part V referred to. If the Government finds it necessary to put the care of sick mariners under the Department of Health instead of under the Department of Marine, the wording of the Act will require to be changed and "Minister of Health" substituted for "Minister of Marine" in clause 5. Personally I am opposed to the care of sick sailors going under the Health Department; I am firmly convinced that it is purely a marine matter and should be left in the hands of the Marine Department. In the last fifty years the department has built up a good branch in connection with this work, and the officials appointed to look after the marine hospitals are well qualified and capable men, and give satisfaction not only to the general public and the shipowners but to the sailors themselves. It seems to me therefore that to transfer the care of the marine hospitals to the Department of Health would be a mistake. The Department of Health will, in a few years, have sufficient work to do without bothering in any way with the sailors who come under this Act.

I also notice that in subsection (e) it is provided:

> That as regards fishing vessels, the duty shall not be payable on ships employed exclusively in fishing or arriving at a port in the provinces when on a fishing voyage, but the master or person in command of a ship registered in Canada used exclusively in fishing or to be employed on a fishing voyage, may, if he so desires, pay the said duty of two cents for each registered ton before the said ship makes its first fishing voyage in any year, at the first port at which the ship receives any part of her outfit for the said voyage, and thereafter before each subsequent voyage during the year, but not exceeding three payments in all in any calendar year.

In my opinion this clause ought to be changed so that there would be no discrimination against fishing vessels as compared with coasting or foreign-going vessels. Of course under the clause the fees may be paid if the captain or owner so desires; but it seems to me better to have the fishing vessel treated in the same manner as the coasting or foreign-going vessel, and there is no reason why this should not be done. As I said a moment ago the owners of fishing vessels have paid these fees willingly because they realized the benefits which the Marine Department have been able to give sick mariners. I suggest that the clause be changed so that fishing vessels be treated in exactly the same manner as other vessels.

I was very much interested in what the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) said as to what is going on on the Nova Scotia coast. I do not wish to say anything about the county of Guysborough, but I do say there is pressing necessity for a marine hospital at the Port of Canso—not so much perhaps for the fishermen of Guysborough county as for the fishermen and sailors on the Atlantic coast. As the hon. member for Guysborough well said, Canso is the half-way house for fishing and coasting vessels going from the different parts of Nova Scotia to Newfoundland or the gulf of St. Lawrence. There is hardly a day in the shipping season when there are not from ten to twenty-five vessels either anchored in the Port of Canso or passing up the strait of Canso, and those vesels sometimes have to land sick men at this port. It has been a great inconvenience to those sick men to have to be sent all the way to the Hospital at Halifax or to their homes. Some one has said that the Government has on hand $150,000 collected from ship-owners of this country which has been paid into this fund. It seems to me that Parliament should immediately take steps to erect a marine hospital at Canso for the treatment of sick mariners. Therefore I would strongly urge on my hon. friend who is in charge of this Bill (Mr. Rowell) that immediate steps be taken to that end. If there is one port in Canada where something should be done for sick mariners it is at the port of Canso.

The department should also arrange to have a hospital ship. If I may be allowed to refer to what I said some time ago on a resolution before the House. I then suggested that one of the things the Government should do to encourage our fishing industry was to have hospital ships stationed at different ports on the Nova Scotia coast or on the Banks to look after sick mariners. It seems to me that the Government might very well arrange to have a hospital ship placed at the disposal of sick mariners on the Atlantic coast, and also, if necessary, on the Pacific coast, where there is also a great fishing industry.

Suggestions have been made to close the present hospitals and arrange with local hospitals to look after sick mariners. While there may be some advantages in such an arrangement, I am not very strongly in favour of it. In my opinion it will very greatly increase the expenditure of the department, and I feel that sick mariners require rather different treatment, perhaps, than other sick people. Usually they are landed from their ship, and they will very likely be—

Mr. CURRIE: What would the hon. member do in case of contagious disease? Supposing two or three men are taken off a ship suffering from plague or small-pox, should not the department have power to equip a place in which to take care of those men? Some one has to do that.

Mr. DUFF: Men suffering from a contagious disease are not taken off their ship.

Mr. ROWELL: I am advised that His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency will attend at four-thirty to assent to Government Bills, and in order that we may receive the report from the Senate on some Bills already sent it, I move that the committee rise and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Sitting suspended for Royal assent to Bills.

A mesage was delivered by Colonel Ernest J. Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Deputy of the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable Senate.

Accordingly, the House went up to the Senate.

And having returned,

The Speaker informed the House that His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the Royal assent to the following Bills:

Bills passed session 1920.

An Act to amend the Currency Act, 1910.

An Act for granting to His Majesty a certain sum of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1921.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS.

The House resumed in committee on a certain resolution—Mr. Rowell—respecting sick and distressed mariners, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member (Mr. Currie) asked me what would happen in the case of sailors on an incoming ship who were suffering from some infectious disease. In cases of this kind the ship is quarantined for twenty-one days or longer and the sailors are treated on board ship or sometimes taken ashore and put in what is known as the pest house. They are not put in the ordinary marine hospital. That practice has worked out very well. The sailors are treated by doctors and are taken care of until they are cured.

Now, Sir, clause (d) of this resolution reads:

> That no ship engaged in the coasting trade of Canada and arriving at any port in any of the said provinces from any other port in the same province, or arriving at any port in the province of Quebec from any port in the province of Ontario, shall be subject to the payment of the duty.

In addition to what the member for North Simcoe has said there is another aspect of this clause which, I think, should be discussed with a view to the clause being amended.

Mr. ROWELL: All these clauses will appear in the Bill and can be separately discussed and dealt with. Quite apart from any discussion of a general principle, I suggest that we leave the details until we get into committee on the Bill.

Mr. DUFF: There is something in what my hon. friend says, but when members on this side make suggestions, the Government usually answer that they have to give them their most serious consideration. If I leave what I intend to say on this provision until we are in committee on the Bill, I may be given that answer, so that if the committee will bear with me for a moment, I shall bring the minister's attention to this matter so that he may consult his officials and propose a change in conformity with my views and the views of a number of ship owners in different parts of the country.

Under the present Act a vessel which is chartered to go to North Sydney or Sydney and load coal for St. Johns, Newfoundland, and then to proceed to Europe, the West Indies or South America, may not participate in the sick mariner's fund or the benefits of the marine hospital if a sailor on that ship gets sick, say, at North Sydney—that is to say, while the vessel is on a voyage from one port in Nova Scotia to another port in Nova Scotia. I respectfully suggest that a change be made in clause (d) with a view to providing that when a vessel is not on what is known as a local voyage but is chartered to go to a foreign port and calls at a local port for cargo, that vessel may participate in the benefits provided by the Act.

There is another clause which, I think, should not be in the Bill to be founded on the resolution, that is, section 2 of the resolution. Clause 2 repeals section 207 of the present Shipping Act, which section deals entirely with payment of expenses in connection with shipwrecked or distressed mariners who may find themselves in foreign ports and has nothing to do with sick mariners. The minister no doubt knows that, under the present Shipping Act, owners of vessels have to pay the expenses of shipwrecked or distressed steamers. For instance, supposing a vessel is wrecked off the Atlantic coast and the crew are taken to Portugal or Spain, immediately on their arrival at any port, the crew go to the British Consul who arranges to send them home. An account of all expenses incurred in sending them home is sent to the Marine Department at Ottawa, which collects the amount from the owners of the vessel that was wrecked. Therefore, this clause has nothing to do with sick mariners, and should not come under the Department of Health, but should be left as it was before under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I suggest to the minister that he take that clause into consideration, drop it from the resolution, and arrange that the matter be left in the hands of the Marine Department, where it has been for many years.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not wish to delay the passage of the resolution, but I think it my duty, at the present stage of the proceedings, to call the attention of the minister to the very strong protest which he has received from the Shipping Federation. This protest is headed "Sick Mariners' Dues." Reference was made to this protest this afternoon by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), and as I am one of the representatives of the city of Montreal, I think it is only due to the Shipping Federation that I should bring their protest to the attention of the House and to the country. This imposition of a tax upon vessels for the 5 p.m. Sick Mariner's Fund has caused a retaliatory measure to be passed by the United States, and it is very striking that whilst in Canada American vessels are taxed for that fund to the extent of only four and one-half cents per annum, our vessels, as a result of this tax, when they reach any of the United States ports, are taxed to the extent of 37 cents per ton per annum. Therefore, it is, I believe, in the interest of all, if we wish to help our merchant marine and to develop our Canadian trade abroad, that consideration be given to the protest of the Shipping Federation against that taxation. The minister received on May 7 a memorandum from the manager and secretary of the Shipping Federation, Mr. Thomas Robb, and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall read just the principal paragraphs which deal with this question. Mr. Robb says:

I am directed on behalf of the members of the Shipping Federation of Canada (Incorporated) who represent 900,882 tons of shipping trading to the St. Lawrence to respectfully protest against the proposed amendment you intend making to the Canada Shipping Act under Part V thereof covering sick and distressed mariners, particularly in reference to increasing the duty from 1½ cents to 2 cents per ton per voyage.

The Federation for years past have been striving to have this unjust tax removed which has proved a discrimination not only against the St. Lawrence route, but also against the trade and commerce of the Dominion, and as a result of these protests, the Government reduced the duty from 2 cents to 1½ cents per ton. From your notice of motion, the Federation presume it is the Government's intention to increase this tax to 2 cents per ton, and I have the honour of submitting herewith the views of the Federation why this tax should not be further increased, but also why it should be abolished in its entirety:

1. The tax now imposed is 1½ cents per ton registered restricted to three voyages in one year. The accumulated surplus of the fund from figures taken from Government returns amounts to $294,996.08, while the surplus for the year 1917 amounted to $12,011.81.

2. The tax is an unjust impost in itself and is unknown in other countries with the exception of Turkey and Peru, which in itself shows a sufficient reason for the Canadian Government abolishing the tax.

3. The levying of this tax on the Province of Quebec, Maritime Provinces and British Columbia, is the cause of a retaliatory tonnage tax being imposed against tonnage hauling from these provinces by the United States. Moreover, sick mariners' dues are not levied in the Province of Ontario. Tonnage from that province goes free both in home ports and in the United States which is an unfair discrimination against the other provinces.

4. Shipowners are liable for hospital or funeral expenses for seamen injured or killed in service, and for medical attendance, medicine and wages while incapacitated from duty by sickness during the voyage, and the Canadian Government is fully protected by sections 207 and 208 of the Merchants Shipping Act, which are to be found in the Statutes of Canada, 58 and 59 Victoria, volumes 1 and 2, pages 116 and 117, and being already provided for it is unfair and unjust that vessels trading to Canadian ports should be further taxed to supply funds for other purposes, and further, there is no just reason why one vessel should be taxed to support the sick of another.

The Federation understand that one of the difficulties the Government have had in dealing with this matter is in regard to sick seamen on transient vessels. This we respectfully point out to you can be easily overcome by you instructing the collectors of Customs that when any seamen may require to be cared for in Canadian hospitals, the master of any transient vessel shall be required to give a bond for an amount to cover any expenses that may be incurred in connection with the sick seamen who may be left in hospital. This can be required of the captain or the owners' responsible representatives before clearance is granted to the vessel by the customs authorities, and if this was carried out it would entail little or no extra duty to the collectors of Customs.

5. The moneys collected from this tax have not been applied for the purposes for which it was collected. A return made to Parliament in 1888 shows that since Confederation, the sum of $236,500 had been applied to other purposes, chiefly for the relief of the sick poor in the cities of Quebec, Kingston and St. Catharines.

6. The Federation do not wish to avoid or saddle the Government in any way with the cost of providing for the sick mariner, but say that each vessel should be required to pay and look after her own sick in the same manner as is done in other countries, thus relieving the Dominion Government of any legal or moral responsibility to care for the sick seamen any more than for other sick people.

The seventh paragraph deals with British Columbia, and as my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) has explained the situation as regards that province, I shall not quote this paragraph.

The members of the Shipping Federation of Canada, being the largest payers of these dues, trust that this just grievance of theirs will receive full and fair consideration, and that the minister will introduce an Act during the present session of Parliament abolishing this unfair tax, which will be another step in the direction of freeing the Canadian tonnage from the retaliatory tonnage dues in the United States.

Such is the protest of the Shipping Federation, one of the largest corporations in Canada, and one whose interests are welded to the general trade of this Dominion.

There are two or three essential facts which, in my humble judgment, should not be lost sight of by my hon. friend when we consider the Bill. It should strike the members of the committee, on general principles, that the law as it stands to-day concerning the sick mariners' fund is antiquated, and requires to be radically changed. It is not fair, for instance, that these dues should be collected from the ships in one province and not from the ships in another province. I always understood my hon. friend the Minister of Health and hon. gentlemen opposite to be in favour of uniformity in the laws of this Dominion. Now, if there is one law which should be uniform throughout this country, it is this law concerning the dues collected for the sick mariners' fund. There should not be one mode of taxation in one province, and another in another.

A second consideration which strikes me as very important indeed, is the fact that we are all willing that in the years to come great efforts should be made to develop our trade abroad and to seek wider markets for our products. Now it seems to me, as Mr. Robb states in this correspondence, that if we are charging 4½ per cent per ton on foreign ships, while we are met by a retaliatory tax of 30 cents per ton per annum by our greatest trade rival, the United States, we are defeating the end we have in view, because this will tend to restrict rather than to expand our trade. It is a restriction of trade, and I call my hon. friend's attention to the seriousness of the matter. I have no special brief for the Shipping Federation, but as my hon. friend the Minister of Marine knows, its members are all working hard to develop the trade of this Dominion. I know nearly all the members of the federation, and I know they do not wish to be debarred from the privilege of paying taxes. Far from it; they pay their full share of the taxes of this country. They are willing to help the Government in developing and expanding the trade of this Dominion, but they call the attention of the Government to the injustice of this particular tax, and it seems to me it is only wise on the part of the Government to do away with this antiquated legislation, and to establish a uniform system throughout all the provinces. It is not fair that ships in the Maritime Provinces, in the neighbouring province of Quebec, and in British Columbia should be taxed, while ships in Ontario are exempt. It gives the ships from Ontario an unfair advantage over the ships from other provinces when they reach American ports. I hope, therefore, when we consider the Bill the minister will take into serious consideration the protests which he has received. I am very anxious to know what are his views on this question.

[Mr. Lemieux.]

Mr. ROWELL: As I have already intimated, when the Bill is in committee there will be the fullest possible opportunity of discussing its provisions in detail. I shall not this afternoon therefore take up the time of the committee with going into the matter in detail, but shall only briefly refer to some of the observations and suggestions made by the hon. members of the House.

Dealing with them in order, with reference to the point made by my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) as to the position of Ontario under the Bill, the explanation is that this has been the law ever since Confederation. I think the reason why Ontario is exempt is the distinction drawn in our Shipping Act, and in the American Shipping Act, between ships sailing on purely inland water and ocean-going vessels. As the ships sailing purely on inland lakes are carrying on a traffic on the inland lakes alone, they are not brought within the provisions of this part of the Shipping Act. They are neither taxed, nor are the sick mariners on these ships on the inland lakes of Ontario entitled to be provided for out of the fund. Neither the shippers nor the mariners come within the scope of the Act, and they have not done so since Confederation. The Act in that respect is just the same as it has been ever since we have had a Shipping Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend will understand that I do not begrudge Ontario her good fortune in not being taxed. I am simply asking that the province of Quebec and the Maritime Provinces and British Columbia be put on a footing of equality with Ontario so far as this exemption is concerned. I want the system to be uniform throughout all the provinces.

Mr. ROWELL: All I have been doing is endeavouring to make clear to the House the reason why the provision is as it is. One further remark in reference to it. My hon. friend's suggestion that vessels going from Ontario to maritime ports or American ports on the sea coast will be exempt from these dues, is due to a misapprehension. That is not the case. It is only vessels plying on these inland waters, and not those that pass out of these inland waters to the ports of Quebec or to ocean ports that are exempt. I am quite prepared to say that when the Bill comes into committee this matter may receive further consideration.

It may be that the change could not be made without some consequential amendments to the general Shipping Act. It is a matter that would have to be very carefully considered in all its bearings before an important departure of that kind could be made. I recognize that mariners sailing upon the inland lakes are entitled to the fullest protection and I am anxious to see that they get it. Then, in reference to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), and also contained in the memorandum from the Shipping Federation that there is a large accumulated surplus to the credit of the "Sick Mariners' Fund," I beg now to say that there is no such surplus standing to the credit of this fund. The monies collected have been paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, they have been expended from year to year and the way the figures which my hon. friend has read, or any figures showing a surplus, is arrived at is by taking the actual disbursements in connection with the marine hospitals and the payments to other hospitals on the one hand and subtracting those from the receipts on the other. But I would like to point out to my hon. friend that that method of computation does not take into consideration at all the cost of administering this fund by the staff which has existed in the Marine Department and which has now bee ntransferred to the Department of Health. If the actual cost of administration was charged up against the fund, my information is that there would be no surplus whatever to its credit. The fact is that at the present time there is no fund and that in order to discharge the obligations which accrue on account of these sick mariners at the different hospitals where they are being treated it is necessary that we should have more money than we are now receiving. That is the reason for asking for the increased grant.

Mr. STEVENS: Is it not true that for many years past the revenues of this fund have far exceeded the expenditure?

Mr. ROWELL: As I intimated to my hon. friend, if you leave out all cost of administration—yes. The figure which has been used has not taken into consideration the cost of administration and I am not sure that it takes into consideration the money spent on capital account. My information is that if you charged against this so-called fund—there is no fund in fact existing—it is a name rather than a fact—the amounts that might properly be charged against it, there would be no surplus. There is no surplus to-day. This year we will run behind some thousands of dollars by reason of the increased amounts we must pay the hospitals for the treatment of these patients and I am assured that the rates in the new schedule are simply equal to the cost of carrying on the work. My hon. friend suggested the possibility of increased expenses of administration. There is absolutely no change as far as that is concerned by way of additions to the staff. The staff which has been administering this branch of the service in the Department of Marine and Fisheries has been transferred to the Department of Health and this same staff is carrying on the work and there is no thought or intention of increasing it. As I have already intimated, the policy of the Government is not to construct new hospitals but rather to take advantage of existing hospitals and make a suitable arrangement for the treatment of patients. I am glad to say that the hospitals of the country have been reasonable and that we have been able to come to a reasonable arrangement with them for the treatment of these sick mariners.

The provision in the Bill in reference to maintaining hospitals but carries forward in substance the provisions of the old law which permits us to carry on the hospitals which we own. The details of that can be explained when we go into Committee on the Bill. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) referred to the situation in Ontario and the monies charged against the municipalities for the maintenance of these sick mariners. I shall be glad to inquire into that matter and ascertain what the position is. The situation in Ontario however differs in one respect from that with regard to seamen upon the high seas. I believe that these ships upon our inland lakes come under the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Act, that is a matter which I shall be glad to look into. I should think that they would come under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. CURRIE: No American ships come in, they have men hurt and they do not come under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. ROWELL: No. But our ships do, I understand, in British Columbia. However that is a matter that I will look into before the Bill goes into committee with a view to considering that aspect of it. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) has suggested that fishing vessels be brought under the operation of the Act and required to make the payment and become entitled to the benefits the same as the merchant vessels. As far as the department is concerned, if that is the view of the House, we have not the least objection to it. When the matter goes into committee I shall be glad to know what the view of the House is in that respect.

In reference to the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver and also referred to by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) in connection with the memorandum from the Shipping Federation, that the result of our imposing this tax upon ships is that there is a retaliatory charge against our ships in American ports, may I say that the first I knew of that fact, if it be a fact, was when I read the memorandum from the Secretary of the Shipping Federation. It is my intention to look into that matter and see upon what foundation the statement rests. It does not appear to be reasonable to suppose that because we impose this very limited tonnage tax for the purpose of looking after sick mariners there should be a retaliatory charge of some thirty cents per ton. That is a matter that I shall carefully look into with a view to ascertaining what the situation is and it can be considered when the Bill goes into committee.

Mr. STEVENS: For the benefit of the minister I might point out that if a ship leaves Vancouver and goes to Seattle and a sailor falls sick in Seattle the ship has to pay the cost of the sailor's treatment in Seattle although it paid the sick mariner's dues in Vancouver. The ship can get no return from the department. I think there might be some provision to meet a case of that kind.

Mr. CURRIE: There should be a reciprocal arrangement in a matter of that kind.

Mr. ROWELL: I am afraid the matter which my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) has mentioned could not be dealt with by our legislation. If some reciprocal arrangement could be established, the situation might be relieved in that way. We would be glad to give the matter consideration. In reference to the observations of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), I would suggest that the question of how any particular amount should be expended is more properly a question for the Estimates rather than in connection with this proposed legislation. My hon. friend has brought the question to my attention and I am having a report made on the local situation. When we go into committee on the Estimates, the matter may be further discussed. I shall ask that the committee report the resolution and further discussion can take place upon the Estimates.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I desire to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that there is no provision in this Bill for any capital expenditure. There is a provision here for treating sick sailors and even for renting buildings for hospitals; but what is needed in the case of Canso is some provision for capital expenditure for an hospital. I would therefore suggest that the expenditure by the Government be made conditional—I see no reason why that should not be done. So that the town of Canso, or any other town similarly circumstanced that will give a certain amount per year might then be entitled to receive something from this fund. I know pretty well that if you assist hospitals indiscriminately from the fund you will have no end of trouble, and I do not want to put the department in that position. I would suggest that where there is a small town at some distant point on the coast that will contribute an amount say $500 per year, out of its own taxes for the purpose of maintaining and establishing a marine hospital for the treatment of their own sailors that we should give a similar sum. I would like to see the minister amend the resolution so as to make provision for capital expenditure in that way at a place where no hospital at present exists.

In regard to the situation at Washington, and the possibility of a retaliatory tax, has the minister heard anything from our Trade Commission on the question of retaliation? That is a matter that would properly come within the province of the commission, and if its members were alive to their duties I would think the minister would have some report from them on the subject, because a realiatory tax of thirty cents per ton on our shipping would be a very heavy tax.

I would again ask the minister to consider whether he will not amend his resolution in such a way as to enable something to be done towards establishing a hospital in places where there is no hospital at present. For many years the custom has been for the captain of a ship to put his sick sailors ashore at Canso but unfortunately there is no one to take the responsibility of providing a place in which those men may be cared for. Sometimes they are treated in a dwelling house where there is no suitable accommodation, and men have lost their lives because in that particular place there was no proper treatment available for them. I think the department ought to find a solution for that problem and that my solution is a reasonable one. Let the Government make a proposal to the town of Canso, or any other town in the same situation, and say: "We will give you for ten years a capital expenditure of so much per year, if you will levy the same amount upon yourselves so as to build and maintain a hospital which will permit of the treatment of your own sick and also any sailors that may require to be treated there."

Mr. WIGMORE: What is the population of the town of Canso?

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: About 2,000.

Mr. CURRIE: If the resolution passes in its present form there is no possible way in which, when the Bill founded upon it comes before the House, the minister can give consideration to the facts which I brought to the attention of the committee this afternoon with reference to the province of Ontario. Because it could be pointed out when the Bill came forward for consideration that there is a distinct clause in the resolution declaring that no money is to be spent on the provinces of Ontario and Quebec for this purpose. I would therefore suggest that clause (d) be struck out, and also that the word "Ontario" be inserted in clause (b) so as to make the Act apply in that province as well as the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia. The old law on this subject passed many years ago with respect to this matter did not apply to the province of Ontario because there was no ships of any size that were owned or operated in that province. I believe that three or four wooden vessels of a comparatively small total tonnage would cover all the shipping in operation in that province in the time to which I refer; but to-day ships of ten and eleven thousand tons are built and big fleets of large vessels employing a great number of men are plying on the Great Lakes. If the resolution is not amended in committee now, it will not be legally possible to do anything in the way of granting relief for the province of Ontario. I would therefore suggest to the minister that the resolution be amended in the way I have suggested. Then if his information is such as to warrant him in bringing the province of Ontario under the provisions of the Act it will not be necessary to come back and introduce another resolution. I would make that suggestion to the minister and I hope the committee will sustain him if he agrees to make the change, because I am satisfied the intention of Parliament is to help our sailors no matter in what province they may be employed.

Mr. ROWELL: If my hon. friend's objection is valid—that is that we could not amend the Bill in the way suggested—the same objection would apply to the resolution. We cannot amend a resolution if that amendment adds to the burden of taxation, it would be necessary to have a supplementary resolution to which His Excellency has assented. I therefore suggest that the resolution should go through in its present form. I am quite willing that this matter, which affects Ontario, should be further discusssed when the Bill is before the House, and if the conclusion is reached that it is proper to make the suggested change I will introduce whatever supplemental resolution may be necessary to carry it into effect. However, we will have to consider that carefully.

Mr. CURRIE: The minister must know that a resolution of this kind when it goes into committee is subject to change and there is no harm in making such a change. Parliament is supreme on a matter of this kind and all that I am asking is that this particular clause (d) be dropped. If we were making any addition to it possibly there might be some force in the suggestion that the resolution involved greater expenditure than was contemplated, and that it had not received the authority of the Governor General. I do not, however, see why the suggestion could not be carried out under the rule. There is nothing wrong with my proposition, it is customary for the House to do as proposed, and it is one of the prerogatives of the House to be able to change money bills. With the consent of the Government the House can at any time advance or reduce any expenditure contemplated in a money bill.

Mr. FIELDING: I think that the point taken by the President of the Privy Council is well taken. There could be no objection to the insertion of the word "Ontario," but that would undoubtedly broaden the taxation power of this resolution which, as proposed does not contemplate levying any taxation on the shipping of Ontario. If, however, you insert the word "Ontario" as the hon. gentleman suggests, you will be levying a tax on the shipping of that province, and I am inclined to think that is beyond our power at the moment. Parliament can make the change in a more roundabout way, but I think the point taken by the President of the Privy Council—that if you insert the word "Ontario" in the resolution you are running up against a well understood usage requiring a recommendation from the Crown—is quite correct.

Leaving that point, however, I want to commend, if I may, to the careful consideration of the Government—if not at this time at a more convenient moment, but at all events for inquiry—the suggestion of my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) in respect to providing a hospital ship. I do not suggest that by any means as a substitute for the usual shore treatment of sailors but as a supplement to it. I think there is such a service established for British seamen in the North Sea; and in recent years we have seen the inauguration of a hospital ship along the Labrador coast by Dr. Grenfell, of whose splendid services we have all heard with very great pleasure,—

Mr. CURRIE: That is a voluntary service.

Mr. FIELDING:—and whose work amongst the fishermen on the Labrador shore has been beyond all praise. It will cost a little money but our fishing business is growing—the industry is bound to develop to a much greater extent than it has reached at the present time—and if the minister will make inquiry into the matter, that is all I urge at present. He will find it quite expedient to provide a hospital ship which could spend her time amongst our fishing fleet. At present when a man is taken ill on board a fishing vessel, that ship sacrifices time and money in making for port in order to land the sufferer for treatment. All these things cost money, and this is not the best moment to recommend the minister to expend larger sums, but I think that in this respect the suggestion of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) is a particularly good one, and I would ask the Government not to lose sight of it in the general consideration of this question.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would ask the minister whether the statement made by the Shipping Federation is true or not, namely, that in some of the other ports named, the Sick Mariners' Fund has been utilized for the sick poor?

Mr. ROWELL: My information from the officers of the department is that that statement is not correct, but I shall have it looked into carefully.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): The suggestion I would make to the hon. minister to cover the case which I have been pressing on his attention would be to amend subsection (a) to make it read:

[Mr. Fielding.]

That the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may subsidize, build, rent and equip and maintain premises for hospitals for the care and treatment of sick mariners,— and so on. That would enable the minister to expend the money collected from ships for the purpose of providing a hospital where no hospital exists at the moment, and to my mind that is one of the prime needs in connection with this matter.

I do not sympathize very much with the proposal of the Shipping Federation. I think a tax ought to be paid by shipowners for looking after sick mariners, and I think the large ships ought to bear the largest share of the tax because they can better afford to do so. One and one-half cents a ton is a mere bagatelle on the tonnage of even a large ship, and it is so insignificant in the case of the smaller ships that it is hardly worth collecting. Why should not fishing vessels pay a tax; why should it be optional in their case? I think their owners should take the same responsibility with regard to their seamen as do the owners of other vessels, and I am quite sure that they are willing to bear their share. A fishing vessel of 100 tons—and that is the average size—would have to pay only $2 for one assessment, and if it paid that assessment three times a year the total sum represents very cheap insurance. A fishing vessel of that size has probably 15 to 18 sailors aboard, and by the payment of that small premium of $6 the owners have the assurance that their men will be treated in the ports where they happen to fall sick, and altogether it is a very favourable arrangement. I think the minister would be well-advised if he so amended the Bill that fishing vessels would have to pay this duty. Then of course it would be necessary to make reasonable provision for the sailors. I wish to assist the minister if I can, in making this Bill a good Bill and in improving the service; therefore I would ask him to take these suggestions under favourable consideration.

Mr. ROWELL: My present impression is that the Bill which will be introduced following the adoption of this resolution is broad enough to cover the matter which my hon. friend has mentioned. But the whole scope of the clause can be considered when we get in committee on the Bill.

Mr. McKENZIE: One matter was mentioned by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) which pertains to the Department of Health more particularly than anything else touched upon in connection with this resolution, and that is the quality of the drinking water supplied to sailors. He has told us that epidemics of typhoid have occurred among our seamen when as many as 75 per cent were incapacitated, due entirely to drinking contaminated water. I would ask the minister to inquire into this matter and punish people for supplying such contaminated water.

Mr. ROWELL: We already have that power under the Health Act passed last session, and that particular matter is now engaging the attention of the officers of the department. There is no doubt as to the importance of insuring a supply of pure water to our sailors.

Resolution reported.

Hon. NEWTON W. ROWELL (Minister of Health) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 127 to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Sick and Distressed Mariners).

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT.

The House resumed from May 10 consideration in committee of Bill No. 12 (Hon. Mr. Guthrie) respecting the election of members of the House of Commons and the electoral franchise.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When progress was last reported upon this Bill, all of the clauses and schedules had been read and considered. Paragraph (k) of clause 2, clauses 32, 37, 44, 45, 63, 101 and the amendments proposed to clauses 37, 44 and 101 have been allowed to stand for further consideration. Clauses 19 and 76 which provide for the expenditure of money cannot be adopted until the House has concurred in the required resolution. The other clauses have been agreed to. We have now reached clause 32. Shall the clause carry?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have been requested to let clause 32 stand. I am still considering some amendments to it which have not yet been put in definite shape. I therefore move that the clause stand and that the committee proceed to the consideration of clause 37.

Mr. FIELDING: Is clause 32 to be taken up later in the day?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If we have time.

Motion agreed to.

On section 37—Proclamation by returning officer.

The CHAIRMAN: When this clause was last before the committee it had been considerably amended; several amendments had been adopted, and one amendment moved by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) was under consideration. He had moved to strike out in lines 26, 27 and 28 on page 26 of the Bill the following words: "In every electoral district in the province of Quebec and Manitoba and in the English language only in other electoral districts."

Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. LOGGIE: In view of the situation as presented when the matter was previously under discussion, it seems to me that it would be fair to provide that in electoral districts where a considerable proportion of the electors cannot read English the proclamation should be published both in English and the language which these people can read and understand.

Mr. PROULX: I am glad to hear the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Loggie). When this matter was last under consideration I suggested that the Chief Electoral Officer could instruct the returning officers in all districts where there is a considerable French population to have the proclamations and notices in those districts issued in both languages. I hope that the Acting Solicitor General has given consideration to this suggestion. In this respect the Chief Electoral Officer could be guided by this last decennial census.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Would my hon. friend (Mr. Turgeon) explain the purpose of his proposed amendment? There would seem to be some mistake in the drafting of it.

Mr. TURGEON: My intention in moving the amendment was to provide that the notices and proclamations issued under this Act may be printed in French and in English not only in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, but also in all the other provinces. When I made some remarks on this subject on a previous occasion I stated that the publication of these notices in French in districts where there was no French population would not be necessary. In British Columbia, where there is no group of French-speaking people that I know of, it would not be necessary to have these notices issued in the French language. The same applies to Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan; in any parts of these provinces where there are no French people, the French language need not be used. In New Brunswick we have districts which are largely peopled by French Canadians. In the northern part of the province there are five large counties the majority of the people in which are French. According to the census of 1911, twenty-five per cent of the population of Northumberland county was made up of French-speaking people. The French population in that county is increasing more than the English population. In such districts as these I would require that both languages be employed. French people are sentimental; they appreciate anything that is done in their behalf, and nothing but good can result from a provision that these notices and proclamations may be printed in the French language. During the course of the discussion on this clause the member for Neepawa (Mr. Davis) expressed his approval of the request which I was making. I hope, for the reasons which I have given, that the minister will be inclined to favour my amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The effect of my hon. friend's amendment will be to strike out the words:

> In every electoral district in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba and in the English language only in the other electoral districts.

If these words were struck out the clause would then read:

> Within two days after the receipt of the writ of election the returning officer shall, by a proclamation in form L, issue under his hand in the English and French languages, and shall mail one copy at least to the various postmasters of the post offices within his electoral district.

That would mean, of course, that that system would prevail throughout all the electoral districts in Canada. Now, if I understand aright the remarks of my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) he does not intend that his amendment shall have such a wide application. When this clause was before the House on a previous occasion I was very much impressed by arguments which were presented in favour of some relaxation, at all events in the law as respects the printing of proclamations in the French and English languages. But practically all the arguments that can be used in favour of the printing of proclamations in French are equally applicable to the question of other languages in other parts of Canada.

Mr. d'ANJOU: No.

[Mr. Turgeon.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend says no. But I am informed that in the northwestern portions of Canada we have large territories where no French is spoken but where many other European languages are spoken. I know that in the portion of Canada where I reside it would be a convenience to a large number of people if the proclamations were issued in Italian; very few people there would be accommodated if the proclamations were issued in French. Unfortunately, very few of the people in my constituency can either speak or read the French language. That is to be regretted, but it would be a convenience to a good many people if these proclamations were issued in Italian, and to a number if they were issued in German. Therefore, my hon. friend will see that we are opening up a pretty wide subject if we depart from the old established section which has been in the statute book for many years. The provision of our law for many years has been the provision which appears in the clause as drafted in the Bill, namely, that in the province of Quebec and in the province of Manitoba proclamations shall be issued in both languages. After having given this matter the very best consideration that I can bestow upon it, I think at the present time it would be unwise to extend the scope of this section. Personally, this is not a matter which appeals to me very strongly; I am in no way prejudiced against the extension of the proclamation in the French language, but I know other people are; I know there are people who look upon the matter as a matter of constitutional right. Consequently the law that has been efficient and satisfactory during the past thirty or forty years should not be interfered with unless for very grave reasons, unless some very serious injustice or inconvenience has resulted from it. If a case of that kind were made out, speaking for myself, I would not hesitate to make the change; but after considering the matter for several days and discussing it pretty generally, I think the committee would do well to allow the clause to remain as it is. There is a legal right; there is, I believe, a constitutional authority for the language of the present clause. I do not say that we have not constitutional authority to extend it, but I know we raise serious constitutional questions when we attempt to extend it. I see no great points to be gained by interfering with the present clause, and a good deal of difficulty may arise if we make the attempt. For these reasons I prefer to stand by the section under which we have had many years of experience and which has not, so far as I know, resulted in any great inconvenience. I therefore think the amendment, while in form it is objectionable in any case and does not carry out the intention of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon), should be rejected by the committee.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 118 (from the Senate) for the relief of James Lewis Price.—Mr. MacNutt.

Bill No. 119 (from the Senate) for the relief of Frederick Tristram Clark.—Mr. Burnham.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT.

The House again resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 12 (Hon. Mr. Guthrie) respecting the election of members of the House of Commons and the electoral franchise—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering clause 37, to which Mr. Turgeon had moved an amendment to strike out the following words in lines 26, 27 and 28 of page 26 of the Bill, "in every electoral district in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, and in the English language only in other electoral districts."

Mr. TURGEON: I took the floor before six, after the Acting Solicitor General had explained that it was impossible from his point of view to accept my amendment, with the intention of giving a further explanation as to my attitude in this matter. I admit that opinion may be divided as to the French language having equal rights with the English in Canada. I am not a lawyer—

Mr. McMASTER: The father of a lawyer.

Mr. TURGEON: I am the father of a lawyer, it is true. Though I am not a constitutional authority, I have my convictions on matters affecting the constitution. I was born into life, I might say, on the discussion of a constitutional point. I came into New Brunswick at the time of the school troubles and the assertion by a portion of the people of that province of what they believed to be their constitutional rights. After the Privy Council had declared that New Brunswick had no constitutional right to separate schools, I was the first to call on my people in the northern part of the province not to press the agitation further, but to accept any amendment which might be granted by the Provincial Government, rather than cause the least trouble. My admiration for the constitution has not decreased since then. I admire the constitution, because I have suffered for it. I would be the last man in Canada to ask for an amendment to the constitution, believing that one amendment might weaken the whole structure. The British North America Act is a tree, carrying in its growth the elements of the bounteous soil, and the tree has grown as the country has grown in population and developed. The Act itself carries an acknowledgment of what I am saying, because French was conceded in the province of Manitoba when at that time there was a certain French population as a result of an exodus from the province of Quebec. There were no French at all, however, at that time in Saskatchewan and Alberta. In New Brunswick the increase of population since Confederation is due to the French who have remained at home cherishing the soil of their forefathers.

I am asking by this amendment that the French language be recognized in every Federal record, as has been so eloquently and clearly demonstrated by hon. members on this side of the House particularly my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) and my hon. friend (Mr. Beland) who have spoken on the amendment. The Acting Solicitor General says that if he accepted the amendment, he would have to accede also to requests for the same privileges in regard to other languages spoken in this country. Personally I would not object to any group of people in this country speaking neither English or French, being given the privilege of having these documents printed in their own language, in order that they might better be able to comprehend them and make themselves acquainted with the principles upon which they are to pronounce themselves. In a mixed country like Canada we should be ready to grant concessions to accommodate our peoples. We know that there are languages in this country which have not the rights which the French language has in Canada, and I leave it to the Government or the minister who is in charge of this Bill to introduce such an amendment if he so desires.

As I said before six o'clock, I want to be practical. I am not moving my amendment as a matter of pride or jealousy. I want these documents to be published only in districts where there is a group of French people to read and ponder over them. I do not see why any hon. member on the other side of the House should not accede to this amendment. I am glad to see the Acting Prime Minister in his seat. He was not present when I spoke on this question a few days ago, and again this afternoon. I believe that if there is one Canadian who has given authority to my understanding of the rights of the French language in Canada, and has contributed to the harmonious feeling which such recognition may create, more particularly under present conditions, it is my right hon. friend, the Acting Prime Minister. At the opening of the session he delivered a most eloquent speech in French, delivered it more eloquently than could I. He spoke like a master of the language. He has given an example of admiration of the rights of the constitution, and his action tends effectively to create further harmony in the country. I believe that if I had not been prompted by the effect that speech of the right hon. gentleman created upon my mind I would not have brought in this amendment. The Confederation has grown in fifty years, it has developed, and its privileges have been extended to every territory it covers. Therefore, I believe that the House will be prepared to accept my amendment. But, I want to be practical in this matter. I would be willing that my amendment, as worded, should be altered in a certain way to meet all practical needs while at the same time maintaining the principle upon which it is based. In that case I might suggest a change in the phraseology to the Acting Solicitor General instead of insisting upon the wording as it is there. I do not withdraw my amendment, but I would be willing to change it so that it would read in this way:

> Within two days after the receipt of the writ of election the returning officer shall, by proclamation, in form L, issued under his hand in the English and French languages, in every electoral district in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba and in such other electoral districts of other provinces as the Chief Electoral Officer will deem it advisable to so direct, and in the English language only in the other electoral districts, and mailed one copy of each to the various postmasters of the post offices within his electoral district.

And so on. I move my amendment with the explanation which I gave this afternoon. I believe that this House will have no good ground to refuse to accept the amendment which, under the circumstances, can only bring about good in the future.

The CHAIRMAN: Do I understand the hon. member to say that he withdraws his amendment and that he substitutes this amendment for it?

Mr. TURGEON: I do not intend to withdraw it yet, but I want to substitute these words. The effect will be that the proclamation will be issued in the French language in any district where the Electoral Officer himself considers that it would be warranted by the number of French people in that district. I do not say where these districts should be; I leave that to the judgment of the electoral officer.

Mr. LEGER: Mr. Chairman, I felt very sorry when I heard the hon. the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) before dinner state that it would be impossible for him to consent to this amendment to the Act. The reasons which he advanced were not acceptable to me and in reply to the hon. gentleman I will give a few reasons why this amendment should be accepted. The law has been such that during the last thirty or forty years there has been only two provinces in which regulations and proclamations have of necessity been printed in the English and French languages. The Fathers of Confederation agreed that both the English and French languages should be official languages in this country. The use of either language has been the right of any member in the House of Commons since Confederation. In the Senate Chamber to-day we witnessed the ceremony of assenting to Bills which had been passed by this House, and before the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General these Bills were assented to in both the French and English languages. The minister said that he could not see his way clear to the acceptance of this amendment, that it would open the door to lots of trouble, but I would say to him that I can foresee no trouble that would be caused by the use of these two official languages in carrying on elections in this country. I am not speaking about any other language; I am only speaking about the two official languages. Therefore, I cannot agree with him when he says that the adoption of this proposition will open the door to trouble in the future. Another argument that has been advanced is that this has never been done before. If it has never been done before it is no reason why it should not be done now. We are making a new Act and we are only asking for what is within our rights.

We are not asking for any favours, only our rights, and therefore I cannot see why the minister should not accept the amendment and allow the minority the right which was granted to them by the Fathers of Confederation. The fact is that the recognition of these two official languages was one of the foundation stones of Confederation. There must be some reason with which we have not been acquainted that prevents the acceptance of this proposition. We have no claim from any other nationality to have these proclamations published in their language. We have only two official languages and it is only these languages that are referred to in this amendment. I ask that the Maritime Provinces be placed on the same footing as any other province in Canada, that recognition be given to their rights, and in doing that I feel that I am only asking something which they should receive at the hands of this Government.

Mr. BURNHAM: Is the hon. member trying—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BURNHAM: Is the hon. gentleman claiming that the law should be changed?

Mr. VIEN: We are making the law now.

Mr. LEGER: We are not asking that the law be changed at all; we are only asking that the law enacted at the time of Confederation be continued. The question may be asked: "Why did you not ask this before?" Well, there are many things as to which the same question might be asked. The country is growing and the French population is growing in numbers also—the French population throughout the Maritime Provinces has been considerably augmented. There is nothing wrong about the request we are making; it is simply that the election proclamation and the various election documents be printed in French. I do not consider that we are making any extraordinary request in asking for that and I shall be pleased at any time to meet my constituents and justify the stand I am taking to-night. I believe they will endorse that stand because I know them and they know me. The majority in my province are generous and I am asking the majority in this House to be equally so. When the English people in my county ask for anything that is reasonable the French people cheerfully grant it. I am now making a reasonable request to hon. members who form the majority in this House and who represent the majority in the country at large. The request that I make is that the two official languages shall be on the same footing as they are in our schools and in other institutions in that part of the country from which I come. I ask the supporters of the Government to join with us in seeing that our application is acceded to. Why not permit the French people in my province to more accurately grasp what is going on at election time when they could do that better through the medium of their own language? The franchise has been granted to women, but some of the women of my nationality in New Brunswick have not had the advantage of an English education and unless these documents are printed in French they will be handicapped to a certain extent in following the course of the elections. Let the Government grant this right and they will receive every credit from the people who will benefit by it. I again appeal to the Government to give us that justice and fair play to which we are entitled.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If I understood my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) aright he asked that the French language be used throughout certain electoral districts in Canada to the extent of printing the proclamation and election papers in French rather as a privilege than as a right; but I gather from what the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Leger) has said that he made the claim as a right—

Mr. VIEN: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE:—as a right given to the people at Confederation under the British North America Act. I am not going to labour the point, but I think it just as well to have a clear statement of the law as far as I know it, because there are provisions in the Act which will clear up any misunderstanding which may exist. The only clause in the British North America Act, to my knowledge, that bears upon the question is section 133 which reads as follows:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the Debates of the Houses of the Parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the Legislature of Quebec,—

I think the committee will agree with me that that clause does not refer to these election documents or proclamations. The next clause is:

> —and both those languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses;

Now I sbumit that the election proclamations are neither "records" nor "journals"

"of these Houses". The third clause is worded thus:

—and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec.

That is the third clause and I think it is clear beyond doubt that it could have no application to the question under discussion. The next and last clause is:

The Acts of the Parliament of Canada and of the Legislature of Quebec shall be printed and published in both those languages.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it is equally clear that the last clause has no application whatever to the subject under discussion, viz: The right that was granted to the people of the country under the British North America Act; and I merely point out to my hon. friend from Kent, N.B. (Mr. Leger) that in my humble opinion that does not include the election documents as set out in clause 37 of the Bill under discussion. There is another enactment, relating to the province of Manitoba, which I had better put on Hansard at the same time. That is to be found in the Manitoba Act, passed in the year 1870 when Manitoba entered Confederation. Paragraph 23 of that Act provides as follows:

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the Debates of the Houses of the Legislature, and both those languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses.

That is the first clause of the section of the Manitoba Act bearing upon the question.

That paragraph can have no application to the section under discussion.

The next paragraph is:

And either of those languages may be used by any person, or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under the British North America Act, 1867, or in or from all or any of the courts of the province.

The second paragraph, you will see, Mr. Chairman, can have no application to the subject under discussion.

The last paragraph of the section is:

The Acts of the Legislature shall be printed and published in both of these languages.

Now, I submit that under a strict reading of the Manitoba Act it is very doubtful if there is any obligation upon this Parliament to print in the French language in the Province of Manitoba any documents relating to elections. That, however, has been established through long years of practice, and the Government has no intention of departing from what we look upon as an established practice—whether established strictly in accordance with law or for what other reason I cannot say at this time. I am pointing this out for the purpose of showing my hon. friend from Kent, N.B. (Mr. Leger) that so far as I am aware the request that he makes is not founded in right; it must be viewed as a matter of privilege. He is quite within his right in asking for it, and I am quite sure that this Parliament has full power and authority to grant it if it sees fit. But in the present Bill we do not go as far as that, we are merely leaving the law and practice where it has been for many years, and I have yet to hear that it has caused any great degree of inconvenience in any part of the country.

Mr. BELAND: May I ask my hon. friend a question before he proceeds further? What kind of a document in his opinion is the Canada Gazette? Is it a "Journal" of the House; is it a "record" of the House; is it an Act of Parliament? Still, it is published in both languages all over the Dominion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think that when we come down to examine that question strictly, it may be found that the Canada Gazette is published in both languages as a matter of convenience. It is nearer an approach to a record of the House or to a statute, because it does contain all our Orders in Council, which have the same force and effect as statutes of this Parliament. In a word, in my humble opinion, it is a nearer approach to the records of the House than any election document.

Mr. BELAND: In what way may I ask?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Simply because it is a record of the legislative enactments of this House, whether carried out by statute or by Order in Council. It is a resume of the powers this Parliament has exercised, whether sitting as Parliament or whether sitting as the executive authority, as the Governor in Council. Therefore I say it more nearly approaches the language of the British North America Act than any election document could. I think that perhaps on a strict examination of the section it might fairly be held that the Canada Gazette need not be published in the French language. I would not advocate such a thing; I would advocate its continued publication in both languages. But when one interprets a statute one is bound to interpret it strictly, and I doubt very much whether on a strict interpretation the Canada Gazette would be held to be a record or "journal" of this House, although it very nearly approaches it.

Mr. LEGER: The British North America Act as explained by the minister does not mention a word in reference to the proclamation for elections being printed in both languages either in Manitoba or in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. LEGER: Now, is not the law of this House the law which was established after Confederation, and which law was made to meet the requirements of that day? The official languages were established by the British North America Act, and then this House has gone so far as to say: We are going to allow proclamations for elections in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba to be printed in the two languages. If such be the case, and the two official languages were established by the Confederation Act, we are only asking now for an extension of the Act wherever it is needed, whether in the province of New Brunswick, of Nova Scotia, of Prince Edward Island or of Ontario. I never contended that the British North America Act went so far as to say that these proclamations should be printed in French and in English in Quebec and Manitoba; that is not what I meant. But I believe I am right in my contention that the law in regard to the use of the two official languages as laid down in the British North America Act may be extended when it is deemed desirable to do so. I would like to have an explanation from the hon. minister as to that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It may be that I misunderstood my hon. friend from Kent, N.B. (Mr. Leger) because I certainly heard him repeat on two or three occasions that the use of the French language as described by him was a matter of right established by the Constitution at the time of Confederation, and my only object in rising was to point out to him the exact terms of the section.

Mr. BELAND: Does the Bill provide for the text of the proclamation to be issued?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. BELAND: It does. This Bill could not be read a second time before it was printed in both languages?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the fact.

Mr. BELAND: Then why should not the proclamation be published all over Canada in both languages, if it is part of a Bill adopted by this House?

Mr. GUTHRIE: A Bill is published in both languages in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution and as an act of this House, and this Bill will be published in both languages. There our duty ceases. There is no requirement outside the province of Quebec that election documents shall be printed in French. Now, I may not know all the legislation dealing with this subject, and I want to guard myself to this extent, that there may be some other Act of which I am not aware with regard to the printing in French of the Canada Gazette or some other document. I am referring only to the law that was passed at the time of Confederation, because that was the point raised by my hon. friend from Kent, N.B. (Mr. Leger). I am not expressing my own opinion as to the propriety of using the French language more freely than we have used it in the past. What I say is, that, viewing the matter from all points, having regard to the records of the past, and having regard also to the fact that no great inconvenience has ever been suffered, I think our safest, wisest and fairest course is to adopt the clause as printed in the Bill.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not share the views of my friend from Kent, N.B. (Mr. Leger) and I take issue with the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie). I claim that the word "records" used in section 133 includes everything that is kept in the custody of any official of this House. I go further and say that when I ask for a return in this House, that return is a "record" of the House, and if I wanted to insist on the strict interpretation of clause 133 I would have a right to see that that record was deposited on the table of the House in both languages. Section 133 does not say "may," it says "shall;" it is not permissive, it is imperative.

Now, Sir, what is a "record?" A record, according to Murray's New English Dictionary, is:

> The fact or attribute of being so; having been committed by writing as authentic evidence of a matter having a legal importance;—

Now, where is the evidence that the election was held, that is, that the proclamation was issued therefor?

> —as evidence of the proceedings or verdict of a court of justice; evidence which is thus preserved and may be appealed to in case of dispute.

What are these election papers, and what does the Act say about them? These election papers are issued under the order of the highest court in this country, the Parliament of Canada; and for the purpose of making sure that they shall be issued Parliament appoints a Chief Electoral Officer. The Chief Electoral Officer is vested with quasi-judicial powers; he has to see that this law is carried out according to the terms which Parliament has enacted. The definition of "record" as given by Murray is this: "Evidence which is preserved and may be appealed to in case of dispute." Section 75 of this Bill provides:

The Chief Electoral Officer shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, retain in his possession the papers transmitted to him by any returning officer,—

These papers are the election papers, and they are defined in the Interpretation Act. The section continues:

—with the return, for at least one year—

Nobody will dispute that for that year these papers which are in the custody of the Chief Electoral Officer are "records" of this House. If they are not, I do not know what they are.

—if the election is not contested during that time, and, if the election is contested, then for one year after the termination of such contestation.

If the election is contested there is the evidence, which is kept to be used before the court in a determination of the case. The only evidence that the election has been held is the proclamation which says that on such a day, by order of the Governor in Council, an election shall be held. I submit, therefore, that all these papers become records of this House and ought to be kept as such. If you want evidence of the fact that those who first drafted this law had the same idea as I have, take the wording of this Bill. Section 37 reads:

Within two days after the receipt of the writ of election the returning officer shall, by a proclamation in form L, issued under his hand in the English and French languages in every electoral district in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, and in the English language only—

What is the word "only" there for? If the contention of my hon. friends is right that the only official language in which this proclamation should be issued is the English language, why use the word "only?" That word was put in because those who were drafting the clause were giving to section 133 of the British North America Act the same interpretation that I am giving to it to-night. If what my hon. friends contend was so clear in the minds of those who drafted the clause, all they had to say was that the proclamation should be issued in both the French and the English languages in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, and stop there. But, as I say, their interpretation of section 133 was the same as mine.

Now, my hon. friend says that "record" does not mean these election papers; that what is and what is not to be considered a record is a matter to be interpreted by the courts. I contend that all papers which come into the custody or under the care of any officer of this House become "records" of the House if they are kept for a purpose. When these election papers go into the custody of the Chief Electoral Officer they are records in the custody of an officer of this House. If the election is contested he has to keep these papers one year after the proceedings in the contestation are ended. Why? Because these documents are to be used as evidence before a court of justice. I refer again to Murray's definition of "record" as "evidence which is preserved and may be appealed to in case of dispute." If these papers are not to be "appealed to in case of dispute," why preserve them? The only use to which they can be put is to determine whether or not, when the election took place, everything was properly done. When there is a recount, from whom do you get the ballots and the papers? From the same officer. "Election papers" means all those documents which were used in an election. The strict interpretation of this clause, therefore, being that all documents used in a federal election become records of this House, it is imperative that they be printed in the official language of this country, which is a dual language, English and French, and they stand on a par. Statutes are not enacted for the purpose of throwing ink on a sheet of paper; they are supposed to mean something. If publication of these papers has been restricted in the other provinces to the English language, that restriction is an infringement of existing rights. According to the Interpretation Act, Revised Statutes, the word "shall" is used—it is not permissive; it is imperative. In section 37, therefore, there is a command to print these notices in both languages in the two provinces mentioned and in English only in the other provinces.

Mr. MORPHY: The hon. gentleman says that the Chief Electoral Officer is bound under section 75 to keep the election papers in his possession for a year, and in case of contested election for a further year from the termination of the contestation. Now, what does the Chief Electoral Officer do with them after that?

Mr. BUREAU: Does my hon. friend mean to say that the question whether a paper is a "record" depends upon whether it is preserved in perpetuity?

Mr. MORPHY: I simply ask the question.

Mr. BUREAU: He destroys them, I suppose. Does my hon. friend contend that a printed Bill used in this House is not a "record," even though it is of no further use when it is merged into a statute? I say that the question whether a paper is a "record" does not depend on how long it is preserved. If a paper comes into the possession of an officer of this House for a purpose, in order that it may be used as evidence in a court of justice or anywhere else, it becomes a "record" of this House, and under section 133 of the British North America Act it is imperative that it be printed in both languages. I make this point, not for the purpose of claiming anything, but for the purpose of showing my hon. friends opposite, who think they are always giving us privileges when under the constitution we have rights, that we are not here asking for privileges. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) has been moved in the best interest of the people of Canada. I understand my hon. friends to answer our argument by saying: Why not print the proclamation in Russian, in Polish? I have more respect for the constitution than that. When the constitution states that the official language of this country shall be dual, that does not mean a dozen or eighteen languages. It is no use trying to get out of the difficulty in that way. The language of Canada is dual; I do not say which language is "the" language. There is but one official language in this country, and it is English and French, or if you like to reverse the two, French and English,—because the French language was here before the English language was. I say this, because the other night the hon. member for Perth North (Mr. Morphy) said: When you give an inch to those fellows, they want an ell.

Mr. MORPHY: No, a mile.

Mr. BUREAU: Well, that is just like my hon. friend. That was beyond his vision, and he always looks beyond his vision when he makes rash statements like that. We are not asking for any privileges; we have always been giving in, giving in, and giving in. As I said just now, according to this section, there are many documents that come down to this House, and if we were to sit—

An hon. MEMBER: Tight.

Mr. BUREAU: No, but to sit still on our rights, we could delay the proceedings of this House. There is a rule in this House that says that before a Bill can be read the second time, it shall be printed in both French and English. Time and again, we have refrained from insisting on that, because every hon. member on this side understands English, and when it came to a matter of expediting business we all agreed not to insist on a Bill being printed in French. But I do not want the country to remain under the impression that the statement made in this House by my hon. friend (Mr. Morphy) is true. There is not a discussion in this House on which we do not hold different opinions because "tot capita, tot sensus." There may be a thousand different interpretations that can be given to that section of the statute. But if my hon. friends opposite are sincere, I will make a proposition to them, and we shall settle the question once and for all. If my hon. friends opposite think that they are right and that this means that the proclamations and other documents should be printed in the English language only, I will ask them to accept this amendment. Let the clause read as follows:

> Within two days after the receipt of the writ of election the returning officer shall, by a proclamation in form L, issued under his hand, and mailed one copy at least to the various postmasters of the post offices within his electoral district, indicate—

Drop out the words "in the English and French languages in every electoral district in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, and in the English language only in other electoral districts," and we shall go to the highest tribunal in the land and find out what section 133 of the constitution means. If my hon. friends opposite are willing to accept that amendment, I think the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) and the hon. member for Kent, N.B., (Mr. Leger) will be satisfied. There is the test.

Mr. GLASS: Does the hon. member take the ground that it is necessary, according to the constitution, that these proclamations shall—he laid great emphasis on the word "shall"—be published in the English and French languages in all parts of this country?

Mr. BUREAU: The section as it stands says in so many words that the proclamations shall be printed in English and French in two provinces, namely, in Quebec and Manitoba, and then it says "and in English only in the other provinces." No other interpretation can be given to that than that Quebec and Manitoba are the only two provinces under the Act as it stands in which the proclamations have to be printed in English and French, because we have a right to determine these things. We may legislate ourselves out of certain rights if we want to do so; that is the privilege of a Parliament. But what I say is this. Drop out the words "in English and French in Quebec and Manitoba and in English only in the other provinces," and let the clause go at that, and publish the proclamations in English only. Then the courts will determine the matter.

Mr. GLASS: I think my hon. friend misunderstood my question. I asked him if he takes the ground that, according to the British North America Act, it is absolutely necessary that these proclamations in all parts of the Dominion shall be published in both languages.

Mr. BUREAU: I say that the British North America Act uses the word "shall." These election papers are a "record" of this House when they are returned to the Chief Electoral Officer, and the word "shall," according to the Interpretation Act, is imperative and not permissive. In other words, I say that if a man wanted to insist, if this clause did not read as it does to-day—if the words "in English and French in Manitoba and Quebec and in English only in the other provinces" were left out—he could compel the Chief Electoral Officer to print in every part of Canada, these proclamations in both the English and the French languages.

Mr. GLASS: My hon. friend's position is entirely illogical.

Mr. BUREAU: Oh, no.

Mr. GLASS: I say that it is, if he takes the ground that the proclamation must be published in both languages throughout the Dominion.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend does not understand me.

Mr. GLASS: Probably not.

Mr. BUREAU: I am not discussing the clause as it stands to-day before the House. Clause 37 is a re-enactment of the section as it existed before—so I am informed by the Acting Solicitor General. That clause determines in what provinces the proclamation shall be printed in both languages. There are two such provinces in the Dominion of Canada—Quebec and Manitoba. The clause goes further. I will read it to my hon. friend.

Mr. GLASS: I want what the British North America Act says.

Mr. BUREAU: I told my hon. friend that we could legislate ourselves out of certain rights and privileges if we wanted to. Parliament is free to say that those proclamations shall be printed in English or in French only in any part of Canada. But I say: If you are sincere, if you want to test the matter, drop out those words entirely from the clause, and then if anybody is dissatisfied, we shall go before the courts and have the matter determined and an interpretation given to this clause. My hon. friend need not laugh and shrug his shoulders. He knows very well, if we came to argue that point and have it determined by the court, what election papers constitute when they are in the hands of the Chief Electoral Officer. I could have the court determine that they become "records" when they are in the hands of the Chief Electoral Officer for a month or a year; and as long as they are "records" for any time at all they must follow the general rule to which records are submitted when they are records of this House. I said that I wanted to make myself clear on this point, because I do not want the hon. member for Perth North (Mr. Morphy) and some of his confreres to believe we are begging favours from them and to let the country believe they are unwilling to grant favours. This is a right, and there is a way of testing that. Leave those words out of the clause; then let the proclamation be published in the French language only, if you like, or in the English language only, if you like, and let the people who feel aggrieved on account of such proclamation go before the courts and have the matter determined once and for all.

9 p.m.

Mr. FIELDING: I realize that the question under discussion is not only one of great importance but one of a very delicate character, which we should all approach with a most sincere desire to find a ground of agreement. It is a question upon which many of our people hold very strong convictions. It is a question upon which perhaps a great many of our people have very strong prejudices, and these convictions and these prejudices do often come into conflict. Just how far the French language is an official language in Canada is unhappily the subject of debate. Up to a certain point there is no question whatever. My hon. friends who have spoken before have indicated the point up to which there is no debate. There is no question that the French language is the language of this Parliament on equal terms with the English language. It is so in the Senate, it is so in the House of Commons, it is so in the province of Quebec, it is so, as the Acts have indicated, in the province of Manitoba. Up to that point there is no dispute. We all agree that as respects this Parliament and the legislature of Quebec and the legislature of Manitoba, the French and English languages stand on equal terms. The moment you pass beyond that, you get into the field of debate, and when hon. gentlemen who feel strongly on what I might call the French side assert that the French language stands equal with the English throughout the Dominion, they run to a point which is immediately resisted by a great many people. I am not trying to determine the question myself, but I do want us to clearly understand that beyond that certain point, beyond the point of the legislatures of Quebec and Manitoba, and this Parliament, it is not a clear question. At all events, it is a question that always has been and I suppose always will be, in dispute. The records of this Parliament, we are told, are to be printed in French. The hon. member for Three Rivers has just put up what seems to me, as a layman, to be a pretty good interpretation of what the "records" should mean. It is a new view of the matter to me. I do not know whether it has been presented before. It is rather a curious fact that for fifty-odd years we have been viewing it in another way. If the question came before the Supreme Court, it is possible the view of my hon. friend would prevail, but that is a purely legal question on which I as a layman would not presume to express an opinion.

I prefer to consider the matter from the point of view of what I might call public convenience, mutual convenience, a desire to meet each other, if we can, on all these matters, to respect each other's convictions—aye, and sometimes to respect each other's prejudices when they are based upon convictions. If I look upon this matter entirely from the point of view of my constituents and my province, I want no change in the law as it now stands. So far as they are concerned, I am content with the clause as it stands in the Act. But if in another province some of my brother members find themselves embarrassed and in difficulty, I would like to be mindful of their troubles and not be so selfish as to think of only my own. Down in Nova Scotia we have a large French population, and I am glad to say that we have practically no language trouble whatever. We have adapted our school system, as far as possible, to the needs of our French-speaking people, and the result is that every Frenchman, I believe, in the whole province of Nova Scotia understands and speaks both languages. We rejoice that it is so, and on behalf of the French-speaking people of Nova Scotia I would not desire any change whatever.

But my hon. friend from New Brunswick (Mr. Turgeon) says that they have difficulties in his province and he would like to meet them. If the object of his amendment is simply to provide a proclamation in French for those who cannot read English, if it is a practical question, then I am heartily with him. I sympathize largely with his object, but I do not quite like the words in which he has drawn his amendment. He proposes to leave it to be determined by the Chief Electoral Officer sitting in Ottawa as to the cases, other than those specified in the Act, in which a proclamation in French shall be issued. I do not like that provision. I do not think the Chief Electoral Officer sitting here in Ottawa is the officer best qualified to know the conditions with regard to language in all parts of Canada. I do not think it is very practical. I am not going to move any amendment, because it is too delicate and serious a matter to plunge into amendments. I am simply going to offer a suggestion to the minister which is in line with that of the hon. member for Gloucester to a certain extent and in line with what I understood my hon. friend from Northumberland to suggest, although he made no motion. My point is that if there is any community in Canada where the people do not understand the English language, I do not care in what province it is, I am willing to give them a proclamation in French. I am not willing to give it to them in Italian, I am not willing to give it to them in German. I am not scared by this idea that if we do this for our French friends we must do it for all other nations; the French language does not stand in Canada on an equal footing with the Italian or the German, it has, within certain limits, a clear and distinct position, and within those limits I would like to stand by and support my hon. friends—when they go beyond that and want something else, perhaps I cannot agree with them. I am not prepared to say that the Italian, or the German, or the Scandinavian, or any other man of foreign birth who comes to Canada has the same language rights in Canada as our French friends. The French language has a certain established right in Canada, and I am willing that that be recognized and given even beyond strictly what the law proposes.

I have said that in the province of Nova Scotia we have a large French population. In the western part of Nova Scotia, in Yarmouth county, and in the neighbouring county of Digby, there is a large French population. Coming east to Halifax county, in the eastern part, there is a considerable French population. Passing further east, in the county of Antigonish, in the county of Inverness, in the county of Richmond, and in fact in quite a number of the districts of Nova Scotia, there is a large French-speaking population. But inasmuch as they all understand and speak the English language, as they have never made any demand whatever to have these documents published in French, I do not want any proceedings to be taken to publish the proclamation in French with the view of obliging anybody down there. The French-speaking people of Nova Scotia do not need it, they do not want it, they have never asked for it. But if there are in New Brunswick or any other province substantial groups of people speaking the French language and not understanding English, I say that in that case I would give the returning officer the right to decide to publish the proclamation there in French;—no, not the right to decide: if he has knowledge that there is a substantial group of French-speaking people in an electoral district who do not understand English, and will not understand the proclamation if published in English, then it should be his duty to publish the proclamation both in French and in English. With that object in view I am going, not to make a motion, for the matter is too serious to rush into motions, but to offer this for the consideration of my hon. friend from Gloucester, because I think it is his idea, and to ask the minister to give it due consideration. I would not alter the clause as it stands, but I would put in this proviso at the end: "Provided, however, that in any electoral district in which, to the knowledge of the returning officer, there is a considerable number of electors who are familiar with the French language but do not understand the English language, the proclamation shall be issued in both languages."

Mr. RINFRET: In offering a few remarks on this clause I may say that in clear recognition of the principle involved in it, my first intention was to speak in French, but I realize that by so doing I would place some of my hon. friends opposite in precisely the same position in which they want to place the French-speaking electors of New Brunswick. For this reason, therefore, and for the cause of good understanding, I will strive to offer my remarks in English. The minister asked a moment ago if we were asking for the recognition of a right. I must say that personally I have been very much impressed by the case made by my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau). I listened to the reading of the clause by the minister and I think he has well demonstrated that election documents constitute properly "records" of the House and as such come within clause 133. If you turn to page 86 of this Bill you will find Form L which is a:

> Proclamation of the returning officer declaring time and place fixed for the nomination of candidates, and the day for opening the poll.

I understand this form has been translated and constitutes a part of the French translation of the Bill. I submit that these same proclamations come within clause 133 for these reasons: First, because they are records of Parliament and also because they are part of an Act of Parliament. I would go further. I think that we on this side of the House have shown large tolerance. We have been suggesting different ways out of the difficulty. My hon. friend from Gloucester was ready to leave it to the Chief Electoral Officer to decide in which constituencies these proclamations should be translated. My hon. friend from Three Rivers was perfectly willing to leave it to the courts to decide. And now we have another suggestion from my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) who, if I understand him aright, wants merely to put a proviso at the end of the clause in order to cover the case of constituencies where a large portion of the population is French. Any of these suggestions, if the minister will accept it, will meet with our views.

What we do object to is to leave in an Act of the Parliament of Canada a provision that these proclamations may be issued in English only in other electoral districts which means all electoral districts outside of Quebec and Manitoba leaving out those portions of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and some parts of Ontario where a large portion of the population is French. It has been shown that in New Brunswick one-third of the population is French; it has been shown that in Ontario you have three hundred thousand people who speak French; and it has been shown that in the Maritime Provinces one hundred and eighty thousand people speak French. Under these circumstances, I submit, a large portion of the population would be deprived of the right of reading these proclamations in their own language.

I would go further and say that what we ask for is not at all cumbersome. To issue these proclamations in the two languages would not be expensive and it would be very useful. This matter receives added importance by reason of the fact that we now have the woman vote. There is a large number of cases where a man will speak both languages whereas his wife and some of his children will not because they have lived within the more restricted area of the family circle. By reason of the increased French population in some of the counties, and also by reason of the fact that women have been given the vote, it is more necessary than ever that the proclamations should be issued in these counties in both languages. It is not only a matter of dealing with the law but it is also a matter of carrying out the spirit of the law. This clause 133 has often come up for consideration in this House. I remember that when it was my pride to be a member of the press gallery I listened very often to the discussion of that clause. There are two classes of opinion as to the meaning of the clause. One is the broad school, the school of broad-minded men, who consider that the recognition of the bilingual principle will be beneficial to this country and who are quite willing to apply it every time that occasion arises. There is another school of opinion, a school—I will say without hesitation—of narrow-minded men who consider the fact that we should have two official languages in this country as a near-calamity and every time an opportunity presents itself for the application of the principle to the French language they are trying to restrict the sense of the clause to their own narrow interpretation of it. I should think that my hon. friend the minister is inclined to be of the former school because when my hon. friend from Gloucester first presented his case the minister admitted that he sympathized with the proposition and said that he would take it into consideration, and that he hoped he would be able to come back with some amendment meeting our views. We went to bed that night with the vain hope that it would materialize. Unfortunately this clause was left over for a few days, and this afternoon the minister makes the statement that he can do nothing. He went as far as to say—I hope I am not misquoting him—I took down his words:

> I am not personally prejudiced against the extension of the French language in this respect, but I know that other people are prejudiced against it.

I think that is what the minister said this afternoon. I would like to ask him: who are those men, who are those members of the House who are prejudiced against the French language to such an extent that they have prevented him against his inclination, from yielding to our demand and forced him to come back here and make the statement that he could not do anything? The other day the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) put a question in this House, as follows:

> Would my hon. friend raise any objection to changing this clause so as to make it compulsory for the proclamation to be printed in forty or fifty languages throughout the Western part of the country?

My hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) has just dealt with that side of the matter, but I would like to add this to what has been said: I understand that we have before us an electoral Bill and that in order that a man shall have the right to vote in this country he must first be naturalized. If I turn to the Naturalization Act of 1919 I find in clause 2 subsection (3) that one of the essentials to naturalization is that he is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of either the English or French language. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is not one elector in this country who can vote unless he has been naturalized, and that there is not one elector who has been naturalized without being able to speak either French or English. Therefore, I think that the question put by my hon. friend was altogether irrelevant.

I have much respect for the people of this country who speak Italian or any other language that it pleases them to speak, but I think that if they are electors they are in good standing with our Constitution only if they speak either French or English. I do not wish to extend the discussion any further, but before I take my seat I would like to put on Hansard a few lines from an editorial in the Montreal Star of yesterday on the bilingual question generally:

The Bilingual Canadian.

A knowledge of French—by which is not meant merely a bowing acquaintance—is a very valuable asset throughout the world. In Canada it is naturally of peculiar value. Ninety per cent of the suspicion and misunderstanding between the two groups that make up this country's population and that retard the progress and well-being of Canada is due to the inability of these groups to understand each other's mother tongue.

Whether or not compulsory French or English in our schools and universities is a wise policy, there is certainly no doubt about the wisdom of the French or English student who determines to learn the other language. He is the master of an asset which will serve and—sooner or later—pay him well. More than that, he is a better Canadian.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these are not my words, they are the words of a newspaper that we have no reason to suspect of any partiality towards us. Yet it says that giving due regard and justice to both languages in this country makes one a better Canadian. I hope the minister will resist the opposition to this clause being changed—a change which is likely to have the effect of making many of our people better Canadians—and will yield to our demand that the clause be properly amended.

Mr. EDWARDS: The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's said this was a very delicate question, and I think he repeated the word "delicate" several times, so impressed was he with the delicacy of the subject which he was discussing. The hon. gentleman to-day finds this question delicate as he found it in the past. It was too delicate a question for the hon. gentleman to deal with at all, previous to the elections of 1900, 1904, 1908, or 1911 when he was a member of the Government of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier. And, for part of that time at least, the member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) was a member of that administration as Solicitor General. A great wrong was being inflicted upon certain classes of people in this country then, and there was a great opportunity for those hon. gentlemen who were members of the Government of the day to take the necessary steps to remove these wrongs. Now, as illustrating the wrongs that were being inflicted during all those years upon certain groups of French Canadians who were settled in different parts of the country, I wish to place on record a statement made by the late right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier in this House on the 23rd February, 1910:

To-day the sun in his daily career does not shed his light upon any people on the face of the earth enjoying more liberty than my fellow-countrymen of French extraction.

That was an expression of opinion from the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier one year prior to the election of 1911, and in view of that statement there could not have been any outcry at that time from the hon. member for Three Rivers, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Beland), the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, nor the present leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), who were all members of the Liberal Government. Not one of these gentlemen at that time raised the cry that the French settlers grouped in different parts of the country were being imposed upon or were being deprived of their rights. But my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's now says it is a delicate question. Yes, too delicate for him to touch and too delicate it has been for him to touch in the past. During all the time he had the power, and the right, and the opportunity to afford redress, it was too delicate a question for him and his colleagues to have anything to do with.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this matter may be considered from two standpoints. When it was up in the House a few days ago hon. gentlemen opposite took a somewhat different ground from what they are taking to-day. I do not think that the hon. member for Kent, N.B., took any different ground; but other hon. gentlemen on that occasion rather emphasized this point, that there were in certain parts of the country—in the constituencies of Gloucester and Kent, N.B., and other ridings down there, as well as in certain constituencies in Ontario and other provinces—groups of French Candians who suffered inconvenience or were placed at a disadvantage because they were unable to read the election proclamation as it was printed in English. The other night it was a question of inconvenience or inability on the part of these people to read the proclamation. To-night they have somewhat departed from that attitude. Now if you take the ground that the election proclamation should be printed in another language than English because of the inability of certain portions of the people to read it in English, then I contend that you must open the door to the people of other nationalities who are resident in various parts of this country, because I find that in the province of Manitoba the Germans and the Austrians are each more numerous than the French Canadians in that province. I also find that in the province of Saskatchewan and in the province of Alberta likewise, the Germans, Austrians and Scandinavians are much more numerous than the French Canadians. If then it is right to claim that the proclamation should be printed so that all the people of the country may be able to read it and thereby inform themselves as to the instructions to be given to the electors—if that is the ground you are to take, then I say your argument for having it printed in French will apply with equal force to having that document printed in German, Austrian, Scandinavian, and a great many other languages. But hon. gentlemen took a different position to-day. They assumed the position that the proclamations should be printed in the French as well as in English because the constitution conferred that right. In that connection my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's was very emphatic in stating that he would not print the proclamation in Italian, or in Austrian, or in Scandinavian, or in any of these other languages. One part of my hon. friend's argument was that there are certain French Canadians who are unable to inform themselves as to this proclamation because it is printed in a language they cannot understand; and at the same time the hon. gentleman says he will let thousands and tens of thousands of people of other nationalities remain in ignorance so far as the election proclamation is concerned. That is the attitude which these hon. gentlemen have taken.

Mr. BUREAU: If my hon. friend will allow me a correction, I think he is not fair to me; I never took that attitude.

Mr. EDWARDS: I was referring to the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend spoke of hon. members on this side. If the hon. gentleman will refer to Hansard he will find that I took the very same position on the occasion to which he alludes that I have taken to-night.

Mr. EDWARDS: My remarks—and I applied them correctly—had reference to the attitude taken by certain hon. gentlemen opposite. I said that they were taking a somewhat different position from the one they took the other night. Possibly I may not have done justice to my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) in that respect; but my impression of the discussion the other night was that the claim was put forward principally on the ground that there were a number of people—residents of certain constituencies in New Brunswick and elsewhere—who were unable to inform themselves in regard to the proclamation and instructions issued at election time because they could not read the English language. I repeat again that so far as my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's is concerned he is perfectly willing for all other people to remain in that condition of ignorance excepting those of French origin. In that respect I might point out that in so far as hon. gentlemen opposite agree to the position taken by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, they are not quite so kindly disposed towards the people in this country of alien enemy birth as they were yesterday when another matter was in question. They were very solicitous in regard to certain people in this country when discussing another clause of this Franchise Act; they are not so solicitous in regard to those people when it comes to discussing this particular matter.

Now, I want for a few moments to discuss the question from the other standpoint—and the only other standpoint from which, it seems to me, it should be discussed. Is this a question of constitutional right? My hon. friend from Three Rivers is very emphatic in declaring that in his opinion it is. I think I am stating that correctly.

Mr. BUREAU: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS: Well, my hon. friend has a perfect right to that opinion, and I am sure that he will concede to me the right to differ from him. And, Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say to my hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Rinfret) that if I choose to hold a different opinion in regard to this matter, I do not think he should accuse me of being narrow-minded and arrogate to himself great breadth of vision. Because in this regard I am in very distinguished company—I cannot help but think that I am in the company of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who in his long parliamentary career evidently did not take the view which hon. gentlemen opposite have taken; because had he done so I think he would have adopted measures to give to his French-Canadian compatriots the rights which these hon. gentlemen claim they have under the constitution.

I want to quote an expression of opinion by Senator Belcourt in regard to this very matter, and it seems to me that his opinion has all the greater weight because evidently it was voiced by him with considerable regret. He said:

> The true fact, regrettable as it may be, is that for the federal domain and the provincial domain of Quebec there is but the constitution which defines equality of both languages at the Dominion Parliament, at the Quebec Parliament, before the federal tribunal or courts; and also before the courts of the province of Quebec is the French language on an equal footing with the English language.

Section 133 of the British North America Act—which has been referred to here by several hon. members to-night——

—which proclaims equal rights of the French and English before the federal House, the federal courts and before the provincial House of Quebec and the provincial courts, and in section 93 of the same Act, which gives to each province the exclusive power to legislate in matters of education, constitute the sum total of the rights officially recognized in favour of the French-Canadian people of the Dominion of Canada; these are the only rights recognized in favour of our race; they are the only rights which cannot be stripped from us without the intervention of the Imperial Parliament; they are the only rights which the constitution and the law formally guaranteed to us; they are the only rights which the law will permit us to exact and about which it gives us the means whereby to exact the same.

I am giving the words of Senator Belcourt whose position and attitude in regard to the bilingual question no person can question—and a similar interpretation has already been given very clearly by the hon. minister (Mr. Guthrie). As far as I can see, at all events, there is no manner of doubt as regards the constitutional rights of French Canadians to the use of their language in the province of Quebec as laid down by the constitution. No person has thought of depriving them of those rights. In my judgment, hon. members are seeking to read into that constitution words which I cannot see there—and my eyesight to-night is better than the eyesight of my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) was last night.

It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to say that the French language stands on a different footing in this country from any other language except English. That I am quite willing to concede. The manner in which, and the degree to which, the French language stands on that different footing is very clearly laid down in the constitution; and I want to be distinctly understood as expressing my opinion that outside of those constitutional provisions the French language, as such, has no more right to be used, we will say, in the province of Saskatchewan, or the province of Alberta, or the province of Ontario, than has any other language. I ask my hon. friends not to put words in my mouth which I do not use; I say there is no constitutional right—if this is to be argued from the sentimental standpoint, that is another matter entirely, and everybody has a right to his opinion.

[Mr. Edwards.]

But I am challenging the position taken by the hon. members from Kent, N.B., Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), and St. James (Mr. Rinfret) who have argued that the French language has a constitutional right equal to that of the English language in any province of the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not want to be misquoted. I never argued that the French language was on a par with the English language in every province. I argued that every document of this House should be printed in French as well as in English, and I claim that electoral documents are documents of record. It turns on the word "record".

Mr. EDWARDS: Then I say that a proclamation is not a "record" of this House. It may be presumptuous for me to advance my opinion against that of a lawyer, but I have done so before and escaped with my life, and I shall do so again. I do not regard a proclamation as a record of this House; my hon. friend does. Very well, we must agree to differ. I hope that my hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Rinfret) will not charge me with narrow-mindedness because I do not agree with my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau). It is quite natural for my hon. friend from St. James to consider that all the breadth of vision is to be found on his side of the House, as it is also quite natural for him to think that only those who agree with the hon. member for St. James are to be included in the class of broad-minded men, while those who differ from him belong to the class called narrow-minded. My hon. friend may entertain that opinion if he chooses. I understand that he is a very able lawyer, but if I, as a layman, might venture to say so, he is not very logical in putting forth his claim along that line.

Mr. RINFRET: I understand that my hon. friend has referred to me as a lawyer. I am proud to say that I am a newspaper man.

Mr. EDWARDS: I am very glad indeed to hear my hon. friend say that he is not a lawyer.

Mr. BELAND: So are we.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What have they done to you?

Mr. EDWARDS: I think my hon. friend would be quite justified in rising to a question of privilege when I said he was a lawyer. However, I was under the impression that he was a lawyer. There are many in the House who would think that my hon. friend ought to take that as a very great compliment.

If we are to consider this matter from the standpoint of convenience, there are in the western provinces thousands of people of different nationalities who have proved themselves to be first-class citizens, who have endeavoured to do their part since coming to this country. Not all have done this, but many have. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) would have the proclamation issued in French in Alberta where, according to the last census, there were some 19,000 French people, but he would not have it printed in Scandinavian, although there are 28,000 Scandinavians in that province. Nor would he permit it to the Austrians and Germans, who number 26,000 and 36,000 respectively. In Saskatchewan there are 68,000 Germans, 41,000 Austrians, 33,000 Scandinavians and only 33,000 French Canadians, but my hon. friend says most emphatically that he would not consent to the printing of the proclamation in Scandinavian, Austrian or any other than the French language. Mr. Chairman, it does not make for unity in this country to have these proclamations printed in these several languages. I venture to say that the proposing of this amendment will have served the purpose of hon. gentlemen opposite, broad-minded though they be, if it has given them for the next election something in the nature of a grievance to parade before their electors. I venture to say that some of them have that in mind, just as it was a part of a well-laid plan when the present member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) in 1916 moved his bilingual resolution in this House—he was paving the way for something that he could present to the electors of the province of Quebec in order to solidify them and hold them together. So that, if hon. gentlemen are thinking along that line, why, the purpose of their resolution will be served.

Now, I recognize the value of being able to speak more than one language. But I want to tell my hon. friends that one difficulty standing in the way of just such moves as the move they are making here to-day is found in the fact that they couple their language and their religion together in such a way as to deprive certain people from living in certain parts of this country. Let me repeat, that, so that my words will be distinctly understood. There are certain places in the province of Ontario; there are certain places in other portions of this Dominion, where English-speaking people cannot live, because conditions make it impossible for them to live there.

Mr. PROULX: What does my hon. friend mean?

Mr. EDWARDS: My hon. friend should be the last one to ask that; he knows perfectly well what I mean.

Mr. PROULX: I do not know.

Mr. EDWARDS: I mean simply this: that in certain sections of the county of Prescott, represented by my hon. friend, it is impossible for an English-speaking Protestant to live and raise his children, because of the fact that there is only one school for those children to go to, and that is a school in which the French language predominates and in which the Roman Catholic catechism is taught. I am not criticizing or saying anything in regard to any man's religion,—

Mr. CANNON: I rise to a point of order. I would like to know if under this clause the hon. member is allowed to discuss the school system in Ontario or in any other province. If he is, I will speak after he finishes.

The CHAIRMAN: I did not understand that the member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) had entered into a discussion of that subject. I understood his remark to be a reply to a question put by the member for Prescott (Mr. Proulx). If, however, there is any intention of entering into a discussion of this nature, the point of order would be well taken.

Mr. EDWARDS: I was endeavouring to make clear my opposition to the amendment proposed by the member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon). I am stating candidly and honestly what I believe to be a serious objection to just such movements as this movement which is being made here to-day. I do not want any person to misinterpret anything I say; I do not want any person to be in doubt as to what I say. I was answering my hon. friend (Mr. Proulx) by saying that in certain sections of the country where you have a separate school system and certain church dogma taught, and where you have a certain language as the language of communication and instruction, you make it impossible for English-speaking persons to live in that section of the country. We have had numerous examples throughout Canada; because of the conditions I have indicated persons have been obliged to leave sections of the country and seek homes elsewhere. That is what I say; my hon. friend understands perfectly the point that I am making. I am not making it in any spirit of harshness at all; I am using it as I believe I am entitled to use it.

Mr. PROULX: But the English language is taught in all those schools.

Mr. EDWARDS: There is no use in discussing this point further, Mr. Chairman. I was using it merely as an argument. I thought I had made myself perfectly clear in regard to it. There does seem to me to be a very great difference, I may tell my hon. friend, in that matter. A person may go into an English section and there is nothing to interfere; the children will hear nothing from morning till night which will cause offence. I think I have made my point clear. But I will say this in regard to this matter of the French language and its use and its recognition: if my hon. friends opposite who are concerned in regard to the use of this language will use their influence to dissociate their language from the prevailing religion of their province so that we can have non-sectarian schools, then they will very largely remove any opposition there would be to the extension and the general use of the French language throughout this country. I leave that with my hon. friends in order that they may consider and weigh it well.

I want to point out to the Government that there is no use in shutting our eyes to certain definite and well-known facts. There is a feeling in Ontario—whether that feeling is rightly or wrongly founded—against bilingualism. There is a feeling in the western provinces somewhat along the same line. In Manitoba it has manifested itself. There they have a one-language school; that represents public opinion in Manitoba. In Saskatchewan and Alberta they have been and are making strenuous efforts to bring the foreign population there to the point of recognizing the public school and the English language.

As a matter of constitutional right, my hon. friend's contention is not well founded, that the French language should have a recognition ahead of all other languages in other parts of the country than the provinces named in the constitution. I cannot conceive of such a thing as this House of Commons, this Parliament, deliberately agreeing to placard the Dominion of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific with proclamations in half a dozen or a dozen different languages at every election. That would be giving a certain amount of encouragement to certain people who are coming to this country to make their homes here, and I do not think that would be in the interest of Canada, nor would it help in unifying the people of this country. Therefore, I am opposed to the amendment. The people of New Brunswick may be put to a certain inconvenience, but I cannot think, according to all I have heard with regard to that province, there is much difference in the population now from what it was at the last election or in the election of 1911. Somehow or another they got along with the proclamation as it was at those times and we heard nothing in the way of complaint. If those hon. gentlemen are so much concerned about people of different nationalities being unable to read the proclamation in English, it will not cost them very much to put their hands into their own pockets and they themselves defray the cost of having the proclamation printed in half a dozen different languages. But it is another matter when you recognize this as a constitutional right, and I am not prepared to accept the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, namely, that they are merely asking for what is their right under the constitution. Let them convince me of that and I will fall in line at once without any further word. I am not convinced of that, and I maintain, although I am not a lawyer, that my argument in this regard is sound, that you cannot give to different races in this country certain privileges which they ask, without, to a certain extent, depriving others of constitutional rights which they enjoy under the British North America Act. My rights and theirs are, to a certain extent, relative, one to the other, and if, on sentimental or any other grounds, you give to any group, certain privileges to which they are not entitled under the constitution, by doing so you are depriving me of some of the rights which I hold under the constitution.

10 p.m.

Mr. A. R. McMASTER (Brome): (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I hope you will overlook the many errors I am liable to make when I rise to address this House in a language which is not my mother tongue. I intend adding my feeble voice in support of the request made by the revered member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon).

Mr. Chairman, in addressing the House in a tongue which is not my own, I am in the first place encouraged by the example given by the Acting or Outgoing—I do not know which—Prime Minister, who has of late, on many occasions, expressed his mind in the language of Molière. I am further encouraged to do so by the example given by my French-speaking colleagues on this side of the House, who use the language of Shakespeare with a fluency which all the members of the House of Commons of Canada envy them.

I do not to-night propose to present a very technical argument upon the constitutionality of the question now before the House. I intend to appeal to my fellow-members' spirit of justice and generosity. We live in a bilingual country. In federal matters both languages are on the same footing. As Sir John A. Macdonald once said, "In Canada we have no dominant race," and, in consequence, we have no dominant language. If we consider such a condition as admitted, what is the inference? We have two official languages. The proclamation is an official document which is published in order that every subject, every citizen, may understand it. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) says: "If you take that ground, then you will have to print this document in German and all the languages of the different nationalities, of the different races who live in Canada." Not at all, Mr. Chairman, not at all. The French people hold in this country a position very different from that of the Germans, the Austrians, the Italians and others. I appeal to the history of my country; I appeal to the leading men of the 17th century who are called Champlain, Maisonneuve, La Salle. After all, the inhabitants of the province of Quebec were the foremost pioneers of the land; they have in this country a right which the other new-comers do not possess. That was admitted when the country was transferred over to England; it was admitted at Confederation, and the two races, the French Canadian race and the English or Scotch or Irish-Canadian race are on the same footing, both languages are on the same footing in federal matters.

It is a pleasure for me to point out Quebec as an example. I dare mention the name of Quebec! A few years ago the name of Quebec was spurned throughout the whole Dominion, but to-day it is said to be the last fortress of liberty and civilization. In the province of Quebec we have municipalities where you can find Frenchmen, or rather Canadians, who speak French and Canadians who speak English. In these municipalities all notices are printed in both languages; but where the population is entirely of either language, in such municipalities the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may enact that only one language can be used. That is common sense; this practice is consistent with good sense. We ask for the enforcement of that practice in the present case.

We have in this country of ours some people who are beset, if I am allowed to use that expression, with the fear that the English language may suffer. Mr. Chairman, I am a Canadian of Scotch descent; the English language is my mother-tongue, and notwithstanding the fact that the French language is as beautiful and clear as spring water, the tongue of Molière is not superior in my estimation to the tongue of Shakespeare or Milton. Even if there should be a certain amount of rivalry between the two forms of speech, my mother-tongue has nothing to fear.

Mr. MORPHY (Translation): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. McMASTER (Translation): Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. MORPHY (Translation): Does the hon. member agree with my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), as to the interpretation to be given to the word "only" in the section under discussion?

Mr. McMASTER (Translation): I think I have somewhat wasted my oratorical effort on the hon. member from Perth (Mr. Morphy) for I said at the beginning of my remarks that I did not intend to bring forward technical arguments in this discussion. I believe that the hon. member for Three Rivers is right as usual, yet I want to say this: I am not here to follow the example of the Scribes and Pharisees of old, who scrutinized only the letter of the law; I want to appeal to-day to the spirit of the law, to the sense of justice and to the sense of fairness of my fellow-citizens.

The opponents of the French language in Canada to-day, bring forward especially two arguments in every discussion that arises. The first argument is founded on apprehension. Some people are afraid that the English language may lose some ground in this country through the spread of the French language in this country. If I be permitted, let me call the attention of this House to the fact that the people in the province of Quebec are endeavouring to learn the English language. A lot of my French-speaking friends, in the city of Montreal, see to it that their children are taught in English, even at the same time or even before they are taught their mother tongue. In the province of Quebec, we are anxious to speak English. Such apprehensions as were mentioned a moment ago are absolutely groundless. The other argument brought forward by the opponents of the French language is founded upon hope. Those people entertain the view that a wider and stouter national spirit will be fostered with only one rather than two languages in this country. Permit me, Mr. Chairman, to give the House two illustrations in this regard. You have only one language in Ireland; I believe that is the Connaught and Ulster provinces, only the English language is spoken. But notwithstanding the fact the population of the whole of Ireland speaks one language only, have they succeeded in creating a feeling of harmony between the various nationalities living in that country? Unfortunately, no. I shall give you another illustration: Take Switzerland, that magnificent little republic of Switzerland. Three official languages thrive in that country: German, French and Italian, and I think that republic of Switzerland is fired by a national spirit as vigorous as that existing in any country in the world.

I am very grateful to you, Mr. Chairman, for the kindly attention you have given to my remarks. I beg those of my hon. friends who noticed my too numerous mistakes to excuse me, and I thank the others who did not understand my remarks for the patience they have shown.

Mr. BOYCE: Would the hon. member be good enough to repeat that speech in English? I am sure it must be very good.

Mr. McMASTER: I would be very glad to repeat it, except that it would be an imposition on those members who have so kindly listened to me in French.

Mr. BUREAU: Mr. Chairman, is it not against the rules to repeat the same thing in the House of Commons?

The CHAIRMAN: There is a rule of the House which declares that an hon. member must not repeat his own arguments or the arguments of any other member. The hon. member for Brome very politely declined to repeat his speech in English, and therefore followed very closely the rule of the House.

Mr. BUREAU: The question of the hon. member for Carleton was out of order.

Mr. BURNHAM: This question which has aroused so much antipathy between the French and English in this country ought surely some day to be treated seriously. As hinted by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) it has been used largely in the past as election ammunition. It is too serious a matter for that. The English regard the French with too much affection and respect to treat it otherwise than seriously.

Mr. VIEN: Do you think so?

Mr. BURNHAM: And I hope the French will treat the English a little more seriously. So far the only hon. member who has endeavoured to put this question upon firm ground is the hon. member for Three Rivers. He argues the question as a matter of constitutional right, a right which the French Canadian has had created for him. He has had no other rights created for him than laid down in the law. The hon. member for St. James, and, I am sorry to say, my old friend the hon. member for Gloucester, the hon. member for Kent, N.B., and others, have persisted in dragging in sentiment—they are asking to have this right extended as one of privilege or favour. But the hon. member for Three Rivers repudiates it as a favour, and stands upon his legal right, and with that course I agree. Far be it from me or any other man who has any respect for justice to wish to see the French Canadians or anybody else rifled of their rights under the constitution. When they think those rights are being taken from them, let them appeal to the proper tribunal and have an interpretation given, and the rights restored, if necessary. But this perennial course of insinuation, this everlasting innuendo, this effort to widen the cleavage between the two races, is absolutely wrong and absolutely unjust. We want to give the French their rights. I cannot repeat too often, we insist upon giving the French their rights.

Mr. CANNON: We can look after that all right.

Mr. BEST: The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) was able to take care of himself during the war.

Mr. BURNHAM: Possibly, but my hon. friend prides himself on being an Irishman, not a Frenchman. I am talking to the French Canadians.

Mr. VIEN: All oppressed people sympathize with each other.

Mr. BURNHAM: If hon. gentlemen are going to interrupt in this way, let them carry on the debate. I wish to say further that when we have reached this firm ground of constitutional right, we must continue to respect it. It is set out in detail, and if it is not clear, it is capable of being made clear by the proper tribunal. To introduce therefore, an amendment at the present time which directly purposes to extend rights, really means that the rights do not exist, and, therefore, on behalf of the French Canadians I repudiate the amendment. If you try to extend rights and admit that you are trying to extend them, as this hon. member who has interrupted so frequently has said—he said that the law was being made here to-night—

Mr. VIEN: Undoubtedly.

Mr. BURNHAM: —I say it is not being made here to-night. That is how this whole question is being bedevilled by people insisting on jumping up and interjecting new laws into the constitution every little while with respect to things which can only be—

Mr. VIEN: I wish to correct the statement of my hon. friend. I did not say that we were initiating a right; I only said that we were at present working on an electoral act, that that is the law we are now making. I did not express any opinion as to whether we had this right previously or not. I only said we were making an electoral act.

Mr. BURNHAM: Then I do not understand, as you will readily see, Mr. Chairman, the purport of his previous interruption, or interjection, or intervention, or whatever you choose to call it. I say further, it is high time that the French-Canadians rested upon the letter of the law and stood upon their rights. If they think they are not obtaining those rights, let them ask for an interpretation and insist on getting them, and we will back them up. But they are placing us in a position where they charge us with being narrow-minded and prejudiced, when as a matter of fact we are here charged with the responsibility of maintaining the law as it stands. That law is well defined. It has been admirably set out by the hon. member for Three Rivers. It is this idea of bringing in all sorts of little sentimental appeals to our sympathy and indulgence, to our generosity, broad-mindedness and liberal-spiritedness, that makes the question not one of law, not one of right, but one of sympathy. It then becomes a political football, to be used at election time, or any other time, throughout this country. Just so sure as those gentlemen insist on making this a matter of sympathy, a matter of natural right, and not of legal right, just so sure as they succeed in establishing that, I, for my part, will vote the Norwegian, and the Scandinavian, and the Italian, and everybody else the same natural rights, because natural rights are not legal rights, but rights that belong by the very nature of the case. These other people have the same natural rights as the French-Canadian or the English-Canadian, but they have not the legal rights that the French-Canadians or the English-Canadians have. Let the French-Canadians therefore insist upon their legal right. Let them stick to that, and not endeavour, as in this case, to introduce amendments that may go very far in the direction of impairing the very rights which they at present enjoy.

Mr. CANNON: In dealing with this clause, I think the members of the committee ought to bear in mind that this is a federal, and not a provincial matter, and secondly, that we are actually engaged in framing a new electoral law for Canada. This House and this committee are therefore perfectly free to insert in this new electoral law whatever clauses they deem fit.

The hon. member for Frontenac founded the main argument of his speech on the basis of what might have happened in previous years in several provinces of Canada. He spoke of the province of Manitoba and the province of Ontario. I say that this House and this committee are not concerned with what might have happened in the province of Manitoba or the province of Ontario, because we are dealing with the French language as it should be dealt with by the House of Commons of Canada, and there is a wide distinction to be observed.

The hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham), with great generosity, which we certainly will not forget, speaking, as he said, on behalf of and in the name of the French-Canadians, said that he repudiated the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Gloucester, who wishes to amend the clause now under consideration to protect the rights of some of his constituents. I may say to the hon. member for West Peterborough that we on this side of the House are better qualified and better posted to speak on behalf and in the name of the French-Canadians, not only of Quebec, but of all Canada. We do not repudiate the amendment, we stand by it, by every word that it contains. As far as I am concerned, I would go further than the hon. member for Gloucester. I would ask this House, as the hon. member for Three Rivers has asked, to say, not simply that the proclamation by the returning officer shall be printed in English and French in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba and in certain other sections of the country where the French population is large enough, but my contention is that according to the constitution as it reads to-day, and as it has been since Confederation, from the Pacific to the Atlantic ocean the French and English languages are on an equal footing in federal matters. Let us have a clause in accordance with the provisions of the existing law, not mentioning the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba at all, or the languages in which the proclamation is to be printed, but simply say that the Chief Electoral Officer shall issue a proclamation in the various constituencies of Canada. I am not aware of any law which exists to-day which says that the proclamations ought to be printed in both languages in the nine provinces of Canada.

Before I discuss this proposition on its merits I wish to preface my argument with another remark. The Acting Solicitor General and other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House talked about privileges and favours. We stand in this House not asking for favours or privileges; we are only seeking the legal recognition of our actual rights. The French minority in Canada is a minority that has an historical past. Our forefathers have written in the history of Canada pages that are beautiful enough to justify their children when they rise in the House of Commons not to seek favours but simply to urge their rights, and that is what we are doing. When I heard hon. members on the other side of the House saying that if the French language is to be used in proclamations in other provinces than Quebec and Manitoba, the proclamations would also have to be printed in Italian, German or Austrian, I felt that those who presented such an argument offered an insult to French Canadians and had forgotten the achievements of the French-Canadian people ever since Canada was discovered. We do not stand on the same level as the foreigner who has emigrated within the last fifty or one hundred years. Our forefathers came here when Canada was nothing but a wilderness, and if to-day Canada is a great and prosperous country the English as well as the French people of Canada owe it to those French pioneers who were the first to have the courage to explore its forests and change the wilderness that then existed into the beautiful cities and country districts that we now see. We have had enough of this argument. I do not know whether it is due to the ignorance of hon. members on the other side, I do not say that it is due to their bad faith; but I do say that any man who dares in the House of Commons or anywhere else to pretend that the French Canadians are an inferior race, no matter what position he occupies, is entirely ignorant of the history of this country. We are here, at home. We have been at home in Canada for the last four centuries, and we will remain here, at home, no matter what people in other provinces want or wish. The province of Quebec is to-day setting an example to the rest of the country. For three years insults were hurled in the face of the French-Canadian people. To-day we hear from every side, from every direction, from every lip, compliments to the French Canadian race. Compliments or insults will not disturb our equanimity of mind. We have our rights, and we will stand by them, and insist on them.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that constitutionally speaking the French language in Canada had rights, and rights superior to those of any other nation, and I will prove it. Look up the treaty, which was signed on the battlefield of Montreal, when that city was handed to the British troops; look up the treaty which was further signed at Paris; look up the Act of Quebec which was guaranteed by the British authorities in 1775; look up these documents and in each of them it will be found that the French population of Canada are guaranteed the enjoyment of their language.

Mr. EDWARDS: That is not right.

Mr. CANNON: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon?

Mr. EDWARDS: I say that is not right.

Mr. CANNON: If the hon. gentleman is not of my opinion I would be very grateful if, instead of saying I am not right, he would support his statement with facts; I am perfectly willing to hear him.

Mr. EDWARDS: I am prepared to do so. I merely dissent from the hon. gentleman's very explicit and emphatic statement. He makes a most emphatic statement, which I most emphatically deny, I say that in the Quebec Act of 1774, and in the other Acts to which he refers, there is no mention of language. I have read those Acts as well as my hon. friend.

Mr. CANNON: When the hon. member read those Acts he may have read them in the same way as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) read the Ontario Act which was referred to in the discussion last night. I have read those documents, Mr. Chairman, and I say that from e very moment that the British troops were in this country victorious conventions or agreements were signed in the city of Montreal by the general commanding the British army and the general commanding the French army by which the rights of the French population were guaranteed from that very moment.

Mr. MORPHY: The hon. gentleman does not say that "language" was mentioned.

Mr. CANNON: I say that at that time there was a mention of our laws, our religious customs and our language.

Mr. MORPHY: No, sir.

Mr. VIEN: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: At Paris the same thing was done. In 1774 when the Quebec Act was passed—my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Morphy) will not deny it—the customs existing in Lower Canada at that time as to laws, as to religion, and as to language, were secured by that Act. Let us go further, Mr. Chairman, in the history of our country; let us go to 1791 when the first Legislative Assembly was convened in Lower Canada. At that time—just as upon the present occasion in this Parliament—though nearly 150 years have elapsed—in the Legislative Assembly of Quebec in 1791 there were members like the hon. members for Frontenac, North Perth, and West Peterborough here, who thought that the rights of the French language should not exist. A gentleman by the name Eichardson got up and made a speech in which my hon. friend from Frontenac may have found all his arguments, the arguments he gave us to-night. This gentleman, Mr. Chairman, in 1791, wanted to treat the French people as an inferior race in their own country. But the question was settled in that year. I would ask the hon. members of this House to read the speeches delivered at that time when it was decided that the French language and the English language should be used in the Legislative Assembly as guaranteed by the existing laws.

The year 1840 gave us our next constitutional enactment. Lord Durham had come to Canada, and he thought that a good method of unifying Canada was to force the two races in this country to speak but one language. The recommendations of his report are well known; I will not take up the time of the House in enumerating them. Under the Union Act as passed the French language was excluded from the House of Parliament. What happened? The French people protested, and when Lafontaine, that great patriot from Quebec, became the Premier of Canada, and when the province of Ontario gave a real Liberal whose name was Baldwin—when Baldwin and Lafontaine formed the great ministry of the Union party, for in those days men came from Ontario who were not afraid of standing for equal rights and equal privileges for both races in this country, and when Baldwin supported Lafontaine, the Union Act was changed and the French language was restored to its former position in Canada. Ever since that day, Mr. Chairman, the beautiful and magnificent language of Racine, Corneille, and Molière has been heard, and heard legally, in our Houses of Parliament.

We now come to Confederation. We have had the British North America Act quoted in this House to-night by hon. gentlemen on both sides. The British North America Act, as you, Mr. Chairman, know, is the reproduction of the resolutions passed by the conference at Quebec in 1864, resolutions agreed to by the representatives of the provinces of Canada then convened in the city of Quebec—that is the provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Ontario—resolutions which were reconsidered at another conference held at Westminster Hotel in London; and finally these resolutions, after having been considered by the Canadian Parliament, were enacted and embodied in what is called to-day the British North America Act. There was one man in Canada who worked—and worked his very hardest—for the achievement of this great thing which we call Confederation, and that man was Sir John A. Macdonald, who had as his right hand man, as everybody knows, Sir George Etienne Cartier. In the House of Parliament at that time this question of language was raised. If hon. gentlemen will refer to the Confederation debates they will see that Hon. Mr. Evanturel rose in the House and asked what about the rights of the French language. "According to these resolutions, and according to the Act which will be passed by the Imperial Parliament, will the rights of the French language be secured and guaranteed?" These are the words spoken in reply by Sir John A. Macdonald, Father of Confederation, and the promoter of the British North America Act:

Hon. Attorney General Macdonald: I desire to say that I agree with my hon. friend that as it stands just now the majority governs; but in order to cure this, it was agreed at the conference to embody the provision in the Imperial Act. (Hear, hear.) This was proposed by the Canadian Government, for fear an accident might arise subsequently, and it was assented to by the deputation from each province that the use of the French language should form one of the principles upon which the Confederation should be established, and that its use, as at present, should be guaranteed by the Imperial Act. (Hear, hear.)

We have here, Mr. Chairman, an express declaration from the then Premier of our country to the effect that the Imperial Act, and the resolutions on which the Imperial Act is based, recognized as a fundamental principle of Confederation the privileges of the French language as they existed at the time of Confederation. For, at the time of Confederation, as no hon. member will deny, the French and English languages were the official languages in both Lower and Upper Canada.

The Bill now before us provides that the Chief Electoral Officer will receive the documents and papers from the returning officer presiding at an election in each constituency. These papers are to be kept of record and will remain in the hands of the Chief Electoral Officer for two years. The argument advanced by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) is that according to the British North America Act every parliamentary record has to be in French and in English; that this proclamation being a parliamentary record, should therefore be in English and French; and the clause as he said, should read simply that the proclamation will be issued, without mentioning in which language; then, according to the law it would mean that the proclamation would be printed both in English and in French.

I do not wish to detain the House much longer, but Mr. Chairman, I have heard arguments to-night which really astonished me. For instance, if I am not wrong, I heard an hon. gentleman say that if in other provinces the proclamations were issued in more than one language racial disunion would be promoted. During the recent war if any country gave to the rest of the world an example of national honour and of patriotic heroism that country was Belgium. In Belgium there are two official languages. When Belgium fought the invading Germans did the fact that she had two official languages prevent her soldiers from giving an example to the rest of the world which will never be forgotten? I think if Canada can do as well as Belgium in so far as national unity is concerned we can rest well satisfied.

As I said before, we are asking, not for privileges or for favours, but for rights. But, even though we were asking for favours or privileges, I think hon. gentlemen on the other side ought to be more generous than the Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) seems to be. The French language is not a barbarian tongue. The fact that proclamations were printed in French in British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, New Brunswick and the other provinces would not have a tendency to adversely affect the education of our population. Every man in Canada, if he wishes to be completely educated, ought, like the English people who are highly and completely educated to know both languages. In England no gentleman claims to be completely educated unless he speaks French. And every hon. member knows that most of the difficulties at the Peace Conferene arose from the fact that Mr. Wilson did not understand French.

The time has gone by when we should continue to fight over this language question. We have two races speaking two different languages. Let us admit the fact and let us legislate so as to meet the needs of these two races. Let us have laws that will promote the welfare of our people, and let us forget the past fights over these language and racial questions. The language which was good enough to serve Marshal Foch in the war to give the final orders which meant the victory of the Allies is good enough for any part of this country. I say that a language which is used on every official escutcheon of Canada or of England to show the national motto, Dieu et mon Droit, is good enough for every Canadian. Would the hon. member for Frontenac pretend that we ought to translate Dieu et mon Droit into English, or Honi soit qui mal y pense?

I think that the amendment as presented by my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) is fair and ought to carry, for it would be a good piece of legislation—legislation of a character to appease the agitation that now exists in certain sections of this Dominion.

Mr. EDWARDS: Mr. Chairman, I crave the indulgence of the House to make one statement as a matter of record since the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Cannon) and I very distinctly differ on one point. I make this statement, and I am prepared to submit to the humiliation of being shown I am wrong—if I am wrong, —that in the terms of capitulation after the Battle of the Plains of Abraham; in the terms of capitulation one year later after the fall of Montreal; in the Peace of Paris of 1763; in the Quebec Act of 1774; in the Constitutional Act of 1791 there is not one single word in regard to language or language rights. Ample and generous provisions were made in some of those documents for safeguarding the interests of the Roman Catholic religion, but I repeat that not one word is to be found in any of those documents relative to language rights. I wish to add this further statement, that in the Act of Union of 1840, not only was there no mention of the French language or of the rights of that language, but that Act made distinct and specific provision that the records of the House should be printed in the English language, and the English language only; and that custom prevailed till several years after the Act of Union was passed.

Mr. BUREAU: May I ask the hon. member from Frontenac: Does he think my offer is a fair one? Since we cannot agree on the interpretation of that section, let us strike out the words in section 37 as I have suggested, and if the proclamation is published in English only, then we have a grievance, which we will bring before the courts, and the courts will give us an interpretation of the British North America Act.

Mr. EDWARDS: It is not necessary to adopt the hon. member's suggestion. I maintain that the clause as it is now and as it has existed for the last thirty or forty years is satisfactory to me, and I see no reason to change it. I do not believe it is in the best interests of the country to change it. If the hon. gentleman has a constitutional grievance, he has a constitutional remedy for the redress of that grievance.

Mr. VIEN: Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the clause as drafted is satisfactory to the hon. gentleman from Frontenac. As was so eloquently put by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) there are two classes of people and two schools of thought in this House and in Canada—one broad-minded and the other narrow-minded. The minister said that some influence had been brought to bear upon him, and of such a nature that he was not able to bring about this amendment which would allow the Chief Electoral Officer to publish the proclamations in both languages. He did not say what this influence was. The hon. member for St. James—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is my hon. friend referring to remarks of mine when he says that some influence was brought to bear upon me?

Mr. VIEN: I understand from what the member for St. James said that pressure was brought to bear upon the minister by some people who had prejudices against the French language, or some words to that effect.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not say so, and I said nothing to that effect.

Mr. RINFRET: May I offer an explanation, Mr. Chairman? What I said was this: The other day the minister sympathized with our proposal; he said he had some sympathy with it and would take it into consideration. This afternoon when he came back he had nothing to offer, but he said: I am not prejudiced on this point, but other people are; therefore I am not disposed to amend the clause.

Mr. VIEN: I accept with pleasure the correction of the hon. member for St. James, but I think that it is to the same effect, if not technically in the same words. Now, Sir, the minister did not take the House into his confidence. He did not tell us who were the gentlemen in this House who were prejudiced against the use of the French language.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Now, Mr. Chairman, I must rise again. I never said that any members of this House were prejudiced. I distinctly deny it.

Mr. VIEN: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) said, if I take the words from my hon. friend (Mr. Rinfret)—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I rise to another point of order.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Order. I must point out to the hon. member (Mr. Vien) that under our rules he is obliged to accept the statement of the minister, not that of any other hon. member.

Mr. VIEN: I will abide by your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman. If he did not say that other people were prejudiced, he said that he was not himself prejudiced, but notwithstanding that fact he could not stand by the amendment that he was so inclined to accept the other night. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if not expressly, at least impliedly, he admitted that some other people were so prejudiced against the French language that he could not see his way clear to have such an amendment accepted by his followers.

Mr. EDWARDS: He never said that he was inclined to accept the amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps I had better read the exact language that I used; I have it here from Hansard.

Mr. VIEN: That will make it clearer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: You will see that I made no reference to any member of this House. I quote:

> I am in no way prejudiced against the extension of the proclamation in the French language, but I know other people are. I know there are people who look upon the matter as a matter of constitutional right.

That is exactly the language I used.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: To whom was the minister referring?

Mr. GUTHRIE: To a large body of people in this country who think they have constitutional rights, just as my hon. friend thinks he has.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Was the minister not referring to some of the members?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, most distinctly not.

Mr. RINFRET: May I ask the minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I most distinctly say that I charged no hon. member of this House with prejudice.

Mr. RINFRET: May I ask the minister whether these people that he mentions are represented in the House?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I cannot say whether they are or are not represented in the House. But I charged no member of this House with being prejudiced. I think I am entitled to have my language 11 p.m. taken as I used it. I most certainly object to the statement made by my hon. friend that I was brought under some influence. It is a miserable statement to make about any man.

Mr. VIEN: Will the minister let me have the exact words that he used? He states that the statement that I have made is a miserable one.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. VIEN: Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear." The committee will compare what I have said with the satement made by the minister:

> Personally this is not a matter which appeals to me very strongly I am in no way prejudiced against the extension of the proclamation in the French language, but I know other people are.

An hon. MEMBER: Who are the "other people"?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. VIEN: Hon. gentlemen opposite are very anxious to know who these other gentlemen are. So are we. So were we, rather,—

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: We are not; we know.

Mr. VIEN: —because we know now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read on.

Mr. RINFRET: We have found out.

Mr. VIEN: The minister says further:

> I know there are people who look upon the matter as a matter of constitutional right. Consequently the law that has been efficient and satisfactory during the past thirty or forty years should not be interfered with.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. VIEN: Hon. gentlemen give applause.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We know who they are.

Mr. VIEN: We know who they are. More than that, we do not find in that which I have read, Sir, any correction or contradiction of the statement that I made a minute ago. And if somebody made a miserable—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. VIEN: If somebody made a miserable statement, it was not I in stating, as I did, that the hon. gentleman said that there was somebody who was prejudiced.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Now, Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend is persisting in making his statement over again and in justifying language which he was ordered to withdraw. What I object to in his statement is that he charged me with having said that members of this House were prejudiced. I denied that. He said also that I had been brought under some influence in regard to this matter, and I denied that.

Mr. VIEN: The hon. minister said that he did not say that somebody was prejudiced. I say that from his own words—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He had better be honest about it.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister has just declared for the third time that he denies absolutely having said that any hon. member of this House was prejudiced against the publication of the proclamation in the French language. That statement the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Vien) must accept.

Mr. VIEN: I accept the declaration of the hon. gentleman so far as members of this House are concerned.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is all I object to.

Mr. VIEN: But I contend that so far as the rest of my statement is concerned the declaration of the minister is no correction or contradiction of my statement. I take his very words and I say you can draw from them no other inference than that somebody is prejudiced against the use of the French language in this country. But, Sir, this is no surprise to us.

This is not the first time that we have heard in this House and outside of it of gentlemen endeavouring to restrict the use of the French language as it has hitherto been in use. We have had, in many instances, outspoken declarations from hon. gentlemen opposite as well as from people in various parts of this country, endeavouring to liken the French-Canadian group to some kind of Indian, the Six Nations, or the Hurons, or the Crees of the western provinces.

Mr. BURNHAM: That is not correct.

Mr. VIEN: The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy) says that is not correct.

Mr. MORPHY: No, the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham). The hon. gentleman is a little narrow tonight.

Mr. VIEN: In many sections of this country there are schools of thought which hold that the use of the French language should not only not be extended, but should be restricted, and that the rights which have been enjoyed by the French-Canadian population should be taken away from them, or at least that those rights should be confined to the province of Quebec, just as reserves are set aside for the Indian tribes of this country. Some hon. gentlemen contend that what I say is not true; that no members of this House are opposed to the exercise of those rights; that no section of this country has a tendency to restrict the rights which have been enjoyed by the French-Canadian population hitherto. We have seen some of those hon. gentlemen, the very hon. gentlemen who tried to restrict such use, declare themselves to be the defenders of the French-Canadian students who could not get a sufficient education. May I be permitted to cite, for instance, a declaration by the hon. member for Toronto West (Mr. Hocken), as cited in the Citizen of the 6th March? The hon. gentleman said:

> We are fighting the battles of the French-Canadian boy and girl.

The hon. member at that time was fighting the battles of the French-Canadian boy and girl. What did this hon. gentleman say under his signature in a document which has been, to his knowledge or not, widely circulated?—a document which is headed: "(Strictly confidential.) To be referred to or read only within the tiled doors of lodge, chapter or preceptory. Report of the Joint Legislation Committee of the Orange Order." This is signed by two members of the House, amongst others and it deals with the very question now under consideration, the use of the French language in the various provinces. The document reads:

> Acting in hearty co-operation, as we always do, our own order, through its M.W. Grand Master, Dr. Ellis, and the Royal Black Knights, through their Grand Master, Bro. A. A. Gray, issued an appeal to both memberships to use every legitimate means to secure the support of the members of Parliament in every constituency for the Military Service Act and the War-time Elections Act. We must see to it that the safeguards of this Election Act are not thrown away when the war is over.
> We are urging the Government to see to it that people who, by reason of peace treaties at the close of the war may be entitled to come here from alien countries, should not be enfranchised at all, until they can read and write in the English language and until they sign a document agreeing to obey our laws, learn the English language, have it efficiently taught in their schools, and to forfeit all their property and civil rights and be liable to deportation on conviction of failure in these matters.

Further on the document says:

> We have, at the request of our Prince Edward Island brethren, secured the legal opinion of two eminent lawyers on the question of the right to use French in the schools of that province. We believe the opinion will greatly help out Island brethren in their fight against French aggression.
>
> It has become quite apparent that the school situation in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Alberta must be thoroughly investigated, and our brethren in each of these provinces, assisted by legal advice, organization and investigation, so that effective steps may be taken to put an end to Rome's tactics in using French in schools wherever she can.
> No doubt you have all read how at the Saskatchewan School Trustees' Convention the tactics of Rome to secure separate schools, bilingual teaching, and other special favours, was triumphantly defeated by the union of the Orangemen, the Sons of England and other loyalists.

This document is absolutely the exposition of the policies of the Orange Order as regards the use of the French language. It says further:

We have notified the Government that the 446 French signs on post offices outside of Quebec, and the 859 bilingual post office signs, also outside of Quebec, must all be removed, as we believe such signs, with any other language on them,—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I must call my hon. friend to order on two grounds. The first ground is that the document which he is now reading to the committee is not strictly relevant to the clause under consideration. If I were wrong in that, however, there is a rule which prohibits absolutely the reading of any lengthy document twice during the same session. The House has already been favoured with a complete reading of the document which the hon. member holds in his hand. It will be found complete in Hansard at page 262 (unrevised edition.) I shall, therefore, have to ask the hon. member to desist from repeating it.

Mr. BOYCE: Let him read it.

Mr. VIEN: I will abide by your ruling, Sir, but if this document was read during this session, I will make use of it to illustrate the fact that there is a class of gentlemen in this country, and there are some hon. members in this House, who believe that the use of the French language should be restricted. In answer to the hon. member for West Peterborough, who said it was not true that the French Canadians were considered as Indians in some parts of this country, and that the province of Quebec was not looked upon as a reserve for them, let me quote from this document with which the committee is cognizant, these words:

Permit us to remark here that every French Canadian who comes to Ontario to take the place of the "White Men"—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member should not attempt to defy the Chair. He should submit to it or appeal from the ruling.

Mr. VIEN: I do not intend either to defy the Chair or to appeal from the ruling, but I think I am quite within the rules of the House in citing in support of my contention a line or two from a document which has been read. The line which I intended to cite—

The CHAIRMAN: I asked the hon. member to desist from repeating what has already been discussed in the House during a previous debate of the same session, and I must insist upon that ruling.

Mr. VIEN: Is it the ruling of the Chair that I cannot quote from this document for the purpose of supporting my argument?

The CHAIRMAN: The ruling of the Chair is that the hon. member cannot refer to anything said or done in a previous debate during the same session; a rule necessary to economize the time of the committee and a restraint upon members to prevent them from reviving a debate when already concluded.

Mr. VIEN: I shall abide by your ruling, Sir, but I might refer hon. gentlemen to the document to establish the fact that French Canadians were accused of taking the place of white men in Ontario and it was declared they should be sent back to Quebec. If we take the place of white men, that implies that we are not white men, and if we are not white men, we are Indians. That is the argument that I wanted to make on this point—that some gentlemen not only wish to restrict the use of the French language, but to assimilate us to the Indians in this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. VIEN: Does not this document say that we have taken the place of white men in Ontario and that we should be sent back to Quebec?

Mr. DAVIDSON: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member's remarks are not relevant to the clause under discussion.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That is a fine speech.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order just raised is that the remarks of the hon. member are not relevant to the clause under discussion. I have already drawn the attention of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Vien) to that point. I understand that he has accepted the ruling and is coming back to the subject under discussion.

Mr. VIEN: I made the statement that the French Canadians were in some sections of this country assimilated to Indians, and I referred to the document which you, Sir, prevented me from reading. If I cannot read it I can at all events refer hon. gentlemen opposite to that document in which they will find that the French Canadians are accused of taking the place of white men in Ontario, and it says that we should be sent back to our Indian reserve, that is to say, the province of Quebec.

Mr. EDWARDS: Is it not true also that in certain sections of the country some English Canadians were referred to as worse than Huns? I do not think either one was taken very seriously, but is it not a fact?

Mr. VIEN: If I entered upon the ground on which the hon. member is trying to draw me, I would be called to order by the Chair for irrelevancy.

Mr. EDWARDS: I think you would.

Mr. VIEN: If the hon. member admits that, surely his question must have been irrelevant and out of order?

Mr. EDWARDS: Out of order, but not irrelevant.

Mr. VIEN: We are just emerging from a great war, and we are facing almost absolutely new conditions. We are trying in many parts of this country to develop this great Canada of ours to the best of our ability. Who will say that the population of the province of Quebec under 150 years of British rule has not done its share in the development of the natural resources of this country? We had an immense section of this country left to us. We tried to develop it. We tried to imbue our children with respect for law and order, and I think we have been successful in obtaining results. I think there is no section of this country which has done more for the development of Canada than the province of Quebec. It is now for us to decide whether we intend to live in harmony and in co-partnership, on an equal footing with our brothers and co-citizens of the other provinces. The people of the other provinces do not fully understand the mentality and the mind of the French Canadians. If we are willing to work for the development of this country in harmony with our co-citizens of other provinces, at the same time we absolutely refuse to be absorbed or to receive the stamp of any other character than we now possess. We consider that we are true Canadians. If we are true Canadians we should be Canadians not only in the province of Quebec but outside of the province of Quebec. We should not be received in other provinces as foreigners or as chasers of white men. We should be received as partners, and co-workers in the development of this country no matter where we come from, and the rights and privileges which were granted by Confederation should not be restricted, but the constitution should be carried on in spirit and in letter. How can hon. gentlemen from other provinces expect that we shall harmoniously work in sympathy with them when every time any one of our fellow-citizens of French origin goes beyond the limits of the province of Quebec he is treated as an alien, an undesirable, the enemy of the white man and as one who should be sent back to the reserve in the province of Quebec? Every time a group of Canadians of French origin go beyond the limits and boundaries of the province of Quebec and wish to develop the teaching of their maternal tongue, not at the expense of other people but at their own expense, they are restricted by that very narrow-minded class of people to which my hon. friend the Acting Solicitor General was referring when he said that some people in this country were prejudiced against the French language.

We must not be considered an inferior race, because we are not an inferior race. We must not be considered as being here by favouritism, because we are here by right. If others want our co-operation they must cater to our sympathy, they must treat us as we treat others,—they must apply to us the same methods that we use towards the English-speaking minority of the province of Quebec. We are ready to co-operate to make of this Canada of ours a great and prosperous country, but it seems to me that it is not the true patriotic spirit which inspires hon. gentlemen when they attempt to prevent 150,000 French-Canadians in the Maritime Provinces from having the proclamations under this Act published in their own maternal tongue. What would be the objection, what harm could be done, by publishing them in French and English? None. Only this system of restriction, this spirit of antagonism to the French language could inspire the refusal from the treasury benches to accept the amendment. Those who inspire such restrictions are not the best of Canadians.

Mr. MORPHY: I have heard the hon. gentleman state several times that some one has referred to the French Canadians as being Indians who should be sent back to the reserve, but I did catch the authority that the hon. gentleman had for making that statement. Who said it? When? And where?

Mr. VIEN: The chairman of this committee prevented me from reading the document. I will refer the hon. gentleman for my authority to a document already on record in this House and which was put on Hansard at the very opening of this session.

Mr. MORPHY: What were the words, please?

Mr. VIEN: The words were that French Canadians who went to Ontario to take the places of the white men should be sent back to the province of Quebec. I said that these words, that French Canadians had taken the places of white men, impliedly meant that the French Canadians who went to Ontario were not white men and that consequently, if they were not white men, they were Indians.

Mr. MORPHY: That is your inference.

Mr. VIEN: I admit, that was an inference.

Mr. MORPHY: They might have been of some other colour than that of Indians.

Mr. VIEN: The hon. gentleman may draw his inference for himself, but I think that common sense and the meaning of plain English will show that a native of this country who is not a white man is a red man and is an Indian by birth. I do not think there is any other imputation that could be made or any other inference that could be drawn from this statement. I consequently say, Sir, that to my mind the minister should accept one or other of the remedies which were proposed to him. I fail to see how any serious objection can be raised to the use of the French language in the proclamations that are going to be issued under this Act except those which might be urged by that narrow-minded view which inspires some sections of this country and the adoption of which surely will not be beneficial to Canada. Therefore I think the minister should accept one or other of these amendments.

Mr. HOCKEN: I hope to be able to make a few remarks without you, Mr. Chairman, being under the necessity of calling me to order. I had no intention of speaking to the question, and I would not have done so but for the reference of the last speaker (Mr. Vien) to myself and his remarkable straining and effort to read into the reasonable opposition to the unlimited extension of the French language over Canada a hatred of the French race. I want to say to my hon. friend that there has never been any effort made in this House, from Confederation until the present day, by any person, to restrict the use of the French language to any narrower bounds than those which were set forth by the Constitution of this country. I submit that if my hon. friend and those who sit with him have any desire to promote harmony they will be willing to observe the Constitution in that regard. If they had any larger rights than those which they possess there would be no objection from any province in Canada to going to the full limit that was permitted to them under the Constitution. There is no hatred of the French language, and there is no hatred of the French race. On the contrary, we of the province of Ontario have the very kindliest feelings for the French, but we say that their leaders, one of whom we have listened to to-night, are in the habit of doing—what the hon. gentleman has been doing for the last half hour—their very best to provoke discord between the two races. He has strained and stretched every argument that he could imagine or think of, even charging us with calling the French people Indians, something I never heard of in my life, something I have absolutely no sympathy with and something that I would have resented if I had heard it; but he would put such a phrase as that into the mouths of the people of Ontario. Why? Surely not for the purpose of promoting harmony in this country. If that is his idea of harmony I must say that his education has been seriously neglected on that point.

Mr. VIEN: Will the hon. gentleman tell me what meaning he put upon that phrase which he signed to the effect that French Canadians who took the places of white men in Ontario should be sent back to Quebec?

Mr. HOCKEN: I dealt with that when it was introduced into this House and I do not propose to deal with it again. But I want to repeat my statement that I have no sympathy with any such suggestions as he made in this House, that French Canadians should be regarded—

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOCKEN: No. He seems to object that we should have any regard for the young boys and girls of French Canada. If we have anything that we think is better than they have why should we not give it to them? Why should we not desire above everything else that in Quebec and in every other province of Canada a high type of civilization should prevail and if we have something that is better than what they have why should we not offer it to them?

We have contended at times, Mr. Chairman, that the educational system of Quebec is not such as the French boys and girls should have, that it did not fit them, or rather fit the masses of the people for the higher employments of life. Now if we were antagonistic, and had any feeling of hatred to the French race we would not take any action at all; we would let the French race be the hewers of wood and the drawers of water. But we take the ground that this can never be a great and powerful country unless education is widely diffused, and that every boy and girl—no matter where they are or what language they speak—shall have a complete education that will fit them to take high places in this country. If my hon. friend objects to that, then I submit he is objecting to the very kindliest instincts that to-day are entertained with regard to his race. It is not, as my hon. friend suggests, that we object to French Canadians coming into the province of Ontario; but it is that we object to them coming in and bringing certain peculiar customs that, among the provinces of Canada, prevail only in the province of Quebec, and seeking to establish in those other provinces institutions that are foreign to the temper of the people, and—I want to say to him—institutions that they will resist as long as they have any power to do so. The province of Quebec is large enough, Mr. Chairman, to comfortably contain three or four times the population that it accommodates to-day. If my hon. friend desires for his people that they shall carry their customs with them wherever they go, then I say the only way to do that is for them to fill up the unsettled areas of their own province. Then they can live under their parish system, then they can enjoy all these peculiar laws which seem to please them, and there will be no word of protest uttered from any quarter whatever. No man has ever proposed that the people of the other provinces should go down into Quebec and alter the laws of that province —the educational law or any other. There has never been any attack made upon the province of Quebec since Confederation; it has always been in the other direction; there has been one constant agitation in this country for fifty years to get additional privileges for the French language, and for the establishment of these customs to which we object.

Now my hon. friend wants these proclamations printed all over Canada in French as well as in English. Let me point out a most serious objection to that which I have not yet heard mentioned. In every western province there is to-day the very strongest sentiment against bilingualism whether it has reference to Polish, German, Austrian or French. The people of Western Canada want to speak one language from the Great Lakes to the Pacific ocean. They have made great headway in teaching the Polish, the Ruthenian, and the children of other nationalities, the English language which is the language of this country, especially of that part of Canada. Now let it be said, Sir, by federal enactment, that there is another language than English which has a special provilege or a special standing in this country, and you strengthen and encourage all the racial agitations that have been carried on in the western provinces for the last fifteen or twenty years, and you nullify the effects of the splendid work that has been done by the Government of Hon. T. C. Norris in Manitoba, where they have established a system of schools by which every child—whether Austrian, German, or any other nationality learns the English language and upon attaining the age of twelve can go out into the market place and do business in the language of this country. I want to tell the hon. gentleman the moment he introduces another language into Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia he only gives encouragement to that multitude of foreigners of various languages to carry on their agitation. They will say: "Aha, there is another language that is recognized. All we have to do is to keep fighting and we will get that privilege for ourselves." The most natural thing in the world, Mr. Chairman, for them to say. And, instead of promoting harmony in the West, it would set up a state of discord that would be very difficult to allay or remove. That, in my judgment, is one of the cardinal reasons for objecting to the use of the French or any other language than English in these proclamations. Not only that, but go down into the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. There, in spite of the law, French schools are being operated; the law is openly defied by the operation of bilingual schools. A very large part of the population object to that, but this kind of a proclamation would only give those schools additional standing.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that a clause in the Franchise Act that was good enough for Sir Wilfrid Laurier ought to be good enough for my hon. friends opposite. Sir Wilfrid Laurier did not put the French language on an equality with the English language in the election proclamations. Why did he not do that? There are only two reasons that I can think of: One was he knew it would be an unconstitutional act, and the other was that he feared, or hesitated, to antagonize that sentiment which would be offended by the spreading of French proclamations all over the province of Ontario. But my hon. friends opposite want that done, knowing full well that this Government could not do any one thing that would so incense the people of the province of Ontario against them as to spread French proclamations all over that province.

Mr. VIEN: Why would they be incensed?

Mr. HOCKEN: For this reason: We know in the province of Ontario that for fifty years the French leaders have been trying to get exactly what they are trying to get here to-night—further official recognition for their language beyond the limits of the constitution,—and the people of the provinces outside of Quebec will not have that if they can prevent it. They want the French language to stand where it is under the British North America Act. They will not endeavour to curtail it any more than it is curtailed by that Act, but they say they are not going to permit if they can prevent it, any further extensions in the other provinces. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was not prepared to face the probable loss of votes that would certainly have taken place in Ontario if he had spread French proclamations over the country. It was either that, Sir, or because he knew that to do so would be absolutely unconstitutional.

It is quite true, as my hon. friends opposite say, that we have two races in this country, which races they tell us must live together. If that is so, Mr. Chairman, it can only be by each respecting the rights of the other. Neither can deprive the other of any rights that they have under the constitution; and when one race gets special privileges that infringes upon the rights of the other race, then I say they are taking sure and certain steps to create discord in this Dominion. There is a way that my hon. friends can promote harmony in this country: It is by standing upon those guarantees for their language, for their customs, and for the protection of their religion—for everything that they have in Quebec—standing right where they were put in 1867. I want to tell my hon. friends that Confederation could never have been formed unless the leaders in the province of Quebec had consented to the terms that are embodied in the Confederation Act to-day. The representatives from the other parts of this country would not have conceded anything more than they did concede,—and he knows that as well as I do. It was not Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir George Cartier who together brought about Confederation: the late George Brown and other men had something to do with it, and they exercised their influence, which influence was all exerted to restrict the use of the French language to where it is to-day; and where it is to-day, Mr. Chairman, is where it ought to stay—it is where it must stay unless my hon. friends opposite intend to cause more serious disruption in this country.

They talk about us people in Ontario being prejudiced against the French language. I resent that statement; we have no prejudice against the French language. But I do not think we need more than the exhibition we have had to-night to prove, Sir, that there is a very distinct prejudice on the other side in favour of the French language. Its supporters are trying to push it in where it has no right to be. They are trying, as did the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), to strain language to prove that this election proclamation is a "record" of the House. A more absurd argument I think I never heard. An election proclamation is a record of an election, but it is not a record of this House, and could not be construed in that way. But it is that everlasting straining of every point that comes up, to force further language concessions, that creates all the difficulty between the two races. I appeal to my hon. friends to accept the Act of Confederation as it stands. Let them be as loyal to it as we are in Ontario, and there will be no trouble between these two provinces.

The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) made a proposition that we should leave out all mention of languages so that he could have a grievance. Why is he looking for a grievance? No one over here has been asking for a grievance—something to be done that would give us a chance to go to the courts. I think that we on this side of the House have shown an entirely different spirit. Besides, if my hon. friend wants to go to the courts, and if, as he argues, an election proclamation is a record of this House, then he can go to the courts and have it so declared; and having it so declared he will get what he wants. The way is open for him to take some particular action to get what he wants under circumstances that would be more profitable to him and some of his friends in their election contests.

Someone said that a great many women could not read the English language although their husbands could. Well, their husbands can tell them what is in the proclamation. And if those women are living in an English-speaking province they ought to learn to speak English, it ought to be part of their education, if they are ever to be in a position to deal with the people of the province in which they live. I know very well that if I were living in the province of Quebec I would learn to speak the French language. I know that any of my friends who go down to Quebec for any length of time soon learn French, for they must be able to speak and write it in order to do business. Those who come to our province ought to learn our language, and it is no excuse to say that they cannot learn it, and that therefore they must have proclamations of this kind printed in their mother tongue.

I submit that not a single argument has been advanced to-night as to why this clause should not stand exactly as it is. If anything, the use of the French language should be prohibited in Manitoba. We have not argued that; we might have done so. I submit that point to prove that we are not looking for a grievance, we are not looking for a quarrel; all the grievances have been sought on the other side, and all the quarrels are being started there. Then some over-zealous gentleman will stand up and declaim against us for making inroads upon their rights because we are merely refusing to grant them privileges beyond those which their leaders in the most solemn manner fixed in the constitution. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the clause should carry.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My only regret is, Mr. Chairman, that on this vexed question of language one should have to rely upon treaties or statutory enactments in order to give the minority what it claims is but a natural right. The committee will understand that a minority is always jealous, as might be expected, of the rights it enjoys. And when one listens to such arguments as that which we have just been privileged to hear, it is quite natural that the minority would feel somewhat nervous and anxious if it were left to the tender mercies of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hocken). Why, my hon. friend has just exhibited the spirit which animates him in this discussion by stating very coolly that the section should remain as it is, but that if it were amended he might only amend it in such a way as to eliminate the Manitoba law.

My hon. friend says: But the section has been on the statute books for thirty years and has never been challenged; therefore you should be satisfied with it. Sir, I have yet to learn that there is any statute of Limitations against a natural right—because I am not advocating at the present moment a statutory enactment, nor am I advocating rights which one would enjoy by virtue of a treaty. I know by experience what I can expect from certain people when my treaty rights are at stake.

My hon. friend, lording it over us with a superior air, has condescended to lecture the minority. He has compared the respective educational systems of the great province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. I shall not, Mr. Chairman, attempt to answer the arguments of the hon. gentleman, for I know it would be a hopeless task to convince him that at least—at least we are not his inferiors, that at least we should be on a footing of equality.

Mr. HOCKEN: Quite right.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I shall not for one moment argue that my fellowmen are better than the hon. gentleman's electors; or that the province of Quebec has any educational system superior to that in vogue in the province of Ontario. But would my hon. friend accept the testimony, not of a French Canadian, nor of a Roman Catholic, but the statement of a sturdy Scotch Canadian—and Presbyterian, I suppose? I refer to Sir Andrew MacPhail.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Am I right in saying that he is a good Scotch Canadian?

Mr. McMASTER: You could not speak and give him higher praise.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Not long ago Sir Andrew MacPhail addressed a letter to the London Spectator in answer to such statements as have been made this afternoon—statements made in a letter written by a Mr. Stutfield to the London Spectator. I will quote a few sentences of Sir Andrew MacPhail's letter. Remember, Sir Andrew MacPhail is a Professor of McGill University. He hails from the Maritime Provinces; yes he is a son of little Prince Edward Island. In answering the slanderous statement made by Mr. Stutfield he said:

The percentage of school attendance in Quebec is the highest in Canada; crime is the least prevalent. The allegation that "the 'habitant' of Quebec is hopelessly outclassed by Protestant Canadians in trades and professions" is exactly wrong. Quebec has the most productive farms, the most thrifty and contented workmen, the most successful industries, the most efficient public services in America. Quebec professional men have dominated the Government ever since Confederation by reason of their superior education alone. Within the present month a sum of five million dollars has been raised by voluntary subscriptions for the new French University. By an appeal to the documents all these facts have been verified. The provincial treasurer, himself an English Protestant, will supply them. Of the less specific charges against Quebec I can offer only an opinion, but it is based upon observations extending over a period of thirty years. The people of Quebec—

Will my hon. friend listen to this?

The people of Quebec are most tolerant of all kinds of education and forms of religion, the least tolerant of fanaticism; they are the best-tempered and the most mannered; the least disposed to interfere with personal liberty; the most stalwart and independent in politics; the most careful in administering justice to rich as well as poor. Quebec is the only place in America which has successfully resisted the emissaries of evil from the labour world of Europe and United States. Quebec is the last refuge in America of good order and political sense. Lastly, the only two churches in Canada which do not "interfere in politics" are the Catholic Church and the Church of Scotland.

I shall not delay the committee by commenting upon this opinion expressed by Sir Andrew MacPhail, but it is a good answer to the rather sneering remarks made by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Hocken). My hon. friend claims that he is a promoter of harmony in this country. I wish my hon. friend, in seeking to attain his end, would adopt different means. As one who reads the Orange Sentinel from week to week all the year round, I say, Sir, that my hon. friend is one of the most notorious, one of the most dangerous firebrands that this country has ever known. Yet he is all courtesy; he is all fine manners in the House; he always speaks with a smile on his face. But the moment he dips his pen into the ink bottle, why, the Roman Catholic church, the French-Canadian population, the province of Quebec, all ought to be wiped out from the Dominion of Canada. Is he a promoter of harmony and of good will? My hon. friend ought to reside for a few months, perhaps for a few years, in the good old province of Quebec; there he would learn what is tolerance, what is concord, what is harmony. We have no difficulties with our English-speaking friends. My hon. friend has only one objective with his paper, that is, to promote disunion and discord in Canada; in other words, to make of Ontario the Ulster of Canada. Why should we import into Canada the troubles, the ills, the miseries and the woes of the Old World? You shall not make an Ireland of Canada. Now, let us come to the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have answered the arguments of my hon. friend from West Toronto and I think I have been fair with him. The arguments that I have used are not mine; I have quoted from the letter of a fellow-Canadian of a different race and creed from mine.

Now, the amendment which has been proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Turgeon) is, I contend, a most reasonable one, and it has been presented in a moderate way. If the committee does not think that it should accept this amendment in its present form, I for one, although I think that it smacks to much of a concession, would be ready to accept, for the sake of harmony, the proviso suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding). And the committee should, I think, respond to the noble appeal made in such a moderate way by my hon. friend. Is it possible that in a British legislature any one should question the common sense interpretation of section 133 of the British North America Act? My hon. friend says that the proclamation fixing the day of the election, fixing the place where the polls are to be located, is not a "record;" it is only part of the record of the election. I contend that the spirit of section 133 is that any federal document must be printed in both languages. The language spoken in this House, the language printed in the statute books, in the Canada Gazette, in the journals and in the records of this House, must be French and English alike. Any member elected to this House may be challenged to appear before a committee of the House if it should appear that gross irregularities or frauds have been committed in that election. I have in mind the Elgin election case, and if I delve into past history, I have in mind the Kamouraska election case, where the returning officer, and other officers who had attended to the elections in those particular cases were summoned before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and there the documents of the elections were filed, the proclamation was filed—

Mr. GUTHRIE: That surely proves nothing. Any other document may be filed in this House. Any committee that has power, may call for documents.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It proves that they are part of the records of the House, so much so that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is obliged by law to keep under his control during a certain period of time, I forget how long, perhaps a year, or at least six months,—

Mr. MORPHY: One year, two years.

Mr. LEMIEUX: —the election records. They are part of the archives, the records, of the House.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery who has hitherto been required to keep these documents was never an officer of this House.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is he not a federal officer?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, a federal officer of the Crown, not of the House of Commons.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Hair-splitting.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I know this is a legal point, but the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was always, from the days of Cromwell down to the present, an officer apart from the House; he was the Clerk of the Crown as opposed to the Clerk of the Houses of Parliament. I point this out because technically documents in his custody would not be documents of the House.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who appoints the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Governor in Council.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That is, the Dominion Government appoints the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and if he had to be appointed by the Civil Service Commission, he would have to know one of the two languages.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My point is only that, strictly speaking, he is not an officer of this House, if my hon. friend is arguing that point.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend will allow me to say that I take this in argument as a mere quibble. It is unworthy of the minister and of the traditions of the great party to which he once belonged.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member cannot laugh an argument down in that way. There is the fact, if my hon. friend is going to argue upon the point of custody. That is the fact; let my hon. friend argue on that point. To attempt to laugh down the argument will not affect it in any way.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Any document from the Dominion Government—when I say Dominion Government, I speak of officers appointed by the Dominion Government—must be printed in both languages, the Canada Gazette just as well as any other document.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Why, as a minister of the Crown, did the hon. member not insist on this being done before?

Mr. LEMIEUX: There is no statute of limitations against natural rights. If this clause passed unnoticed before my eyes during the last twenty-five years that I have been a member of this House, I plead guilty to that; but is that a reason or an argument why I should not plead that the clause should be amended in order to make it constitutional? The question was never raised before, it is true; but the question being raised to-night, and this being a right, why should I be prevented from advocating the restitution of that right, especially when it is demonstrated that in many constituencies there is a grievance and in many others there is the possibility of a grievance? Would my hon. friend refuse to that minority which is under a grievance the remedy which is at hand by amending this section? Surely my hon. friend has a more tender heart than that. What can he gain by refusing to give back to the minority what has not been claimed during the past twenty-five years? My hon. friend is interested in having a clean election; we are all interested in having the people of this country understand the meaning of the election, the whys and the wherefores of the election. We are only asking Parliament to enlighten the minority which does not understand one language. Oh, but, we are told, foreigners, immigrants who have come to Canada, might just as well claim the same privilege. That is a very poor argument,—if it be intended as argument. The Galicians, the Germans—who by the way are better treated in Ontario than are the French Canadians—the Austrians, the Russians, were all immigrants who came to this country, knowing full well that their language had here, no special status. They knew the law of the land, and in the immigration leaflets issued by the Department of Immigration, those immigrants were told that English and French were the only two official languages of the land. Therefore, when they reached Canada and accepted the bounty of the Government in the form of thousands of acres of land in the western prairies, they knew full well that their language had no special status. The case is surely different with your fellow-members of French descent.

I said a moment ago that I regret the spirit which was evinced this evening on the part of some hon. gentlemen as they approached this question. I know this is a vexed and delicate problem. No one cares to discuss those awkward questions. But, Sir, as I said a moment ago, the minority is always jealous of its rights and of its privileges, and it has reason to be nervous when we hear language such as we have heard this evening. Do you believe, Mr. Chairman, that this country can strive for peace and harmony, and therefore for progress and success from a national point of view, if at every moment the constitutional rights of the minority are challenged as they are being challenged by some members of this House. If that system prevails, you will not succeed in restoring harmony in this country, and God knows it needs harmony and concord. I have been in England, and not very long ago I was asked to speak of Canada from the French-Canadian point of view by the President of the Empire Parliamentary Association. I said, "I have no mandate. I occupy no official position in my country which justifies your invitation, but if you insist I will accept. I will not distribute flowers and laurels. I will speak the truth." I was answered, "Sir, we expect you to speak the truth, and we are anxious to know the truth about Canada."

Mr. HOCKEN: And did you?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes, Sir, I spoke the truth; and let me tell my hon. friend I would repeat here what I said in London in the hearing of the Speaker. Speaking in St. Stephen's Hall in London I gave an outline of the treatment which for the last twenty-five years has been meted out to the French-Canadian minority in the province of Ontario and in the province of Manitoba. And, Sir, next morning, to my surprise, I found that the great organ of public opinion in Great Britain, the London Times, approved with one reservation only, every word that I had said, and expressed regret, if not shame, that fellow-members of the British Empire were treated as they were in the province represented by my hon. friend from West Toronto. The press of Great Britain re-echoed the comments of the London Times, and statesmen of all parties, Whigs and Tories, Unionists and Coalitionists, all approved of my language. I can give a list of the guests who were present at that dinner. Mr. Chairman, when, during that address, I stated, for instance, that just prior to the war the French-Canadian minority in the province of Ontario had been deprived of a privilege enjoyed since time immemorial—a privilege that was maintained in favour of the German minority—I was interrupted by this exclamation, "Is that possible in the province of Ontario?" I said "It is a fact."

Mr. HOCKEN: They did not know conditions as well as we know them.

Mr. CASGRAIN: You know too much.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Ignorance, thou art bliss! I shall at any time of the year and at any hour of the day take the judgment of plain John Bull of England in preference to the judgment of my hon. friend.

My hon. friend the Acting Solicitor General a moment ago questioned my statement as to the status of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Here is what I find in Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, page 188:

> The Office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, consisting of three permanent officers and such temporary clerks as may be required from time to time. The clerk of the Crown in chancery is always present at the table of the House of Commons, at the commencement of a new parliament, and hands to the clerk the roll, or return book, which contains the list of members elected to serve in the parliament. In conformity with law he issues writs for elections, makes certificates to the house, in due form, of the return of members. and performs other functions relating to elections. He attends the house with election returns, and amends the same, when so ordered. The various proclamations, summoning, proroguing, and dissolving parliament, are issued by command out of chancery. He is also required to attend in the Senate Chamber at the close of a session, or whenever his Excellency the governor general gives the royal assent to bills, the titles of which it is the duty of this officer to read. From the foregoing summary of this officer's duties it will be seen that, while he is appointed by the Crown to perform certain duties by its command in connection with elections, and also to attend in the upper house on the occasion of the exercise of certain royal prerogatives, he is also an officer of the House of Commons. He must obey its orders to lay on the Table election returns in his possession and even alter them at its direction. The office was formerly specially attached to the privy council, but is now directly under the jurisdiction of the House of Commons.

That disposes of the argument of my hon. friend of a moment ago.

One word more and I am done. I am too old in public life to raise any racial, sentimental, or religious issue, but I feel too much the dignity of my race to tolerate any slurs against it, especially when I know its history. I know too much of politics to be wedded in any slavish fashion to any party.

I am more of a Canadian than I am a Liberal, although I believe, Mr. Chairman, that being a good Liberal means being a good Canadian. I appeal to my fellow-members as fellow-Canadians to stop listening to such arguments as we have heard this evening from my hon. friend from West Toronto, my hon. friend from Frontenac, and my hon. friend from North Perth. Will the Government of Canada, if they want to be strong, accept at any little breeze the dictation of a few firebrands? Surely the Government of Canada has more dignity and more moral courage than that! Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from West Toronto expresses the hope that Quebec and the French Canadians and their institutions, educational and otherwise, may improve in the years to come—no doubt by contact with him and the institutions he represents. I believe, Sir, that a great deal can be done by daily contact between the two great races of this Dominion. I believe—and this has always been the ideal of my life; it has been my guiding star—that we have to learn one from the other. We must respect each other's virtues, we must respect, as stated this afternoon so wisely by my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), even our respective failings and prejudices. But, above all, we must be Canadians. No one should hope that the minority in this country shall learn it all from the other. Surely that is not a healthy sentiment, and if perchance the hon. member for West Toronto believes that, with his narrow views and bigoted policies, as expressed in his paper, he can dispose of the so-called French-Canadian peril, he is completely at sea. Forgetting the intellectual point of view, forgetting the history of the French-Canadians, forgetting their natural aptitudes to be something and somebody in this Canada of ours, let him remember these essential facts. At the time of the conquest in 1763 there were 65,000 French Canadians in Canada; at the time of the Union in 1840 there were about 500,000; in 1867 at the time of Confederation a little over 1,000,000; Sir, at the next census there will be at least 2,500,000 sturdy Canadians of French descent from one end of the country to the other, and there are over 1,000,000 of the same stock in the United States of America. If it be true that a healthy, law-abiding and God-fearing people can double its numbers every thirty years, I predict to the hon. member for West Toronto and to his compeers in Toronto that in thirty years from 1921 his sons, or his grandsons, will awaken to find that there are 5,000,000 French-Canadian people. In sixty years his grandsons will find, by the same process of the doubling of population every thirty years, that there are in Canada 10,000,000 French-Canadians, faithful to their Church, to their institutions, aye faithful to their language, assuredly because they thrive on persecution. Therefore it is useless, it is in vain, for my hon. friend by his campaign of vilification, to dream of wiping out that old and respectable population of 2,500,000 which, without any capital from abroad, without any aid from the ancient Mother country, relying only on its own courage, its own stability, its own love of the land of its ancestors, has maintained itself and progressed in such a remarkable way.

Sir, I appeal to the common sense, to the spirit of fair play which is in every British breast. I will say, in the words which were heard as a last command from the old captain of the "Titanic," addressing himself to his crew and the passengers as his ship was foundering, "Be British; be British!"

Mr. BOYCE: I look upon this as quite a pleasant evening—

An hon. MEMBER: Or morning.

Mr. BOYCE: —Morning. I have got more information than I ever got before. We have heard about this proclamation. I have voted a good many times, I have been all over this province, and I have yet to find the man who lost his vote because the proclamation was not in French. If there was a constituency in which there were French people who could not speak English, you would be very anxious to go there to inform them that there was a proclamation out and that there was going to be an election. You only seek to have this amendment adopted because you are in opposition now and it will be twenty years before you ever get in, and if I got my wish it would be a little longer still. You are in opposition because you are against everything no matter whether it is good or bad. You have been that ever since I have been a member of this House. I think we can hardly give praise enough to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) for the way that he started our hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) to speak. That hon. gentleman commenced with a great deal of wrath directed at the hon. member for West Toronto. He could hardly say anything bad enough about the hon. member. Hon. members find it necessary to pursue that line of argument because they have not very much else to say on that side of the House. I think the hon. member for West Toronto deserves a great deal of credit for telling us exactly where you (Mr. Lemieux) stand and what you are. You said that you were in Britain. I suppose you were in the House of Commons. You said that you were requested to speak, that you did speak and that the public applauded you. You made a great mistake when you did not stay there, because I do not think you will ever be applauded to any great extent in this country. Another thing that I took in a very good-natured way was the speech of the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Vien). He went out of his way a good deal, and I never thought that one man could get down as low as he did. There is only one in this House who could have done what he did in reading documents in regard to the Orange Lodge. There is one thing I would tell you, and that is that the great principle of the Orange Lodge is civil and religious liberty for all men. I want you to take note of that. I would hardly think it worth while to reply to the hon. member (Mr. Vien) because what he said came from so low a source that it is beneath me to pay any attention to it. The hon. gentleman talked in such a way that he could not get any reply to it. I want to tell my hon. friend when he talks about the smallness of the people on this side of the House and the bigotry of a certain class that I am an Orangeman,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

An hon. MEMBER: We know it.

Mr. BOYCE: —and that the principles of Orangemen are far above those held by my hon. friend. His principles are far to small to even measurably approach those of the members of the Orange body.

Mr. TOBIN: How many of them are there?

Mr. BOYCE: I expected to have heard better things from some hon. gentlemen opposite. There is a little instrument over there that they call a "cannon." I have listened to it with a great deal of pleasure very often but there is no harm in it. It only gives utterance to bombast, and we do not pay any attention to it. What the "cannon" says would not hurt one anyway because it does not amount to very much. But there is one thing I do object to. I had a great deal of respect for my hon. friend over there, but I shall never have the same respect for him again because he has done his best to create hard feeling in this Canada of ours. As a resident of this country, who knows the French fairly well, I have a very good opinion of them. But for that hon. gentleman to stand up in this House and try to create divisions between the two races is something I never expected him to do. Something has been said about the late Sir John Macdonald. I knew Sir John Macdonald very well, and I used to hear him on the hustings talking about the French. I heard him say that they had a lot of good habits "but," he says, "you cannot trust them."

Mr. MORPHY: I would not rise at this late hour to say even a word or two had it not been for some remarks made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux).

Mr. TOBIN: Parlez Francais.

Mr. MORPHY: Non, monsieur. The remarks of that hon. gentleman led me to the thought that he has put the proposition on a totally different ground from that on which it was put by all the other members on that side who have spoken. We have been listening to what has been practically a bombardment by many hon. gentlemen opposite based on what they conceive to be the right which exists under the constitution. The hon. gentleman has waived that entirely to one side by claiming that the principle upon which he advocated that the proclamations should be published in French was following what he conceived to be a natural right that was implied, under all the legislation of the past from the Treaty of Paris down. Now in that way the hon. gentleman has really fallen in line with the argument—cited by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards)—laid down by Mr. Belcourt, a member I think of the Senate, and a prominent lawyer who has delivered himself at length upon that subject and in no unmistakable way. I only deal with that argument in the hope that it may do some good in the case of the younger members of the House who take issue with constitutional lawyers, men of long experience, and who set up a different construction of the law from what these men of experience adopt. Hon. gentlemen opposite outside of the argument as to the constitutional right have tried to put an interpretation upon section 133 which I do not think the section is capable of bearing. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) particularly, and I think the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Vien) and others, have tried to interpret section 133 in their own way so far as regards the words:

—and both languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve followed that argument to some extent; but none of these gentlemen have tried for a moment to put what would be the reasonable meaning upon these words. Now that seems to be the crux of the point and the only argument that is left to hon. gentlemen opposite, because it is conceded here that there is no legal right outside of the limits of section 133, and I think the House is pretty well agreed upon the territorial limits within which that territorial right can be exercised. There only remains then the question of the meaning of these words "Records and Journals of the House." I hold in my hand one of the Journals of this House, the official volume 55 for the year 1919—taken at random—which bears the caption "Journals of the House of Commons of Canada." That is what is intended to be meant by the words of the section "Journals of the House of Commons of Canada" This Journal has been printed since Confederation, and every copy can be found in the custody of the proper official of the House printed in both French and English. That is the Journal of the House of Commons.

Now the other question to be ascertained is what constitutes a "Record." We know what the Journal contains. It contains the minutiae of the daily proceedings of the House, everything that takes place from prayers at the opening right through the sitting, and everything that is tabled, is set forth in the Journals of the House.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend knows that there are certain things in the form of returns that are tabled and that are not included in the Journals of the House. Does he claim that these do not form part of the records of the House?

Mr. MORPHY: There is nothing that is tabled that is not noted in the Journals of the House as having been laid upon the Table.

Mr. BUREAU: Even when it is not printed?

Mr. MORPHY: There is a complete daily record in the Journals of the House of what takes place in the House.

Mr. BUREAU: But they are not printed.

Mr. MORPHY: They are printed.

Mr. BUREAU: Not all—

Mr. MORPHY: Absolutely.

Mr. BUREAU: Except by order of the House.

Mr. MORPHY: Everything is printed especially when ordered by the House to be printed. When printed they form part of the records of the House, to a certain extent, and are shown in the Journals. The records consist of the sessional papers laid on the Table and these are most important. If ordered to be printed they are to be printed in French and English. The Hansard is also part of the records of the House being a record of everything that takes place viva voce in the Chamber. The stenographic notes are taken and then transcribed in French and English and are published through the medium of Hansard. The Bills are also part of the records of the House. The Bills that are introduced and passed, together with all their respective changes—from the time of introduction to the final reading; to the stage when they receive their final assent in the Senate—are all noted and form part of the records of the House; and any hon. gentleman, if he desires, can go back to the earliest times—so far as this House is concerned—and in half an hour he can get any original document that is filed as of record in this Parliament from the custodian of those papers. These are the records.

Now the peculiarity is that the original of every Bill that gets the assent is engrossed on parchment in duplicate, one part in French and the other in English, and signed by the Governor in Council or the official acting for him in absentia; these are records also. And if we take the language of the section we shall find that the records and journals of the House are limited to what takes place in this House in the regular parliamentary way under parliamentary practice as detailed in the journals and files of record.

Let us look at the proclamation. The form, as far as the printed bill is concerned, becomes a record because it is in the Bill in draft form with blanks; but the proclamation that is issued by the electoral officer—under the old Act by the returning officer—never was in this Chamber, and under the election law as set forth in this Act never will be in this Chamber unless under some remarkable and unusual circumstances, in which event it would be tabled and in the custody of the House. Then it would become a record of the House and would be printed in French and English because it was a record long after the election based on the proclamation had been held.

Let us see how far a little further argument along that line will bring us. Hon. gentlemen opposite argue that because it is ordered by the House therefore it is a record of the House. As I have already shown, it never was in the House, it never had an entity, it never was a paper tabled, it never had any meaning as being in the House in the form published. The returning officer has to keep the results of his election after sending in his return, and the only thing that is of record in the House is the return sent in by that officer of the election or of the return of a member. That is read by the Speaker from the Chair, it is taken down by Hansard, and the return is taken note of for the daily journal of the House. But the returning officer has to keep all the papers—I am speaking in a general way and from memory—for one year, and in the case of a contested election as I read the Act for another year if that year be about expired, or for a year from the time the protest was lodged. I asked the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) to-night what would become of those papers then? He replied: Why, he could destroy them if he liked. Is the hon. gentleman serious in suggesting that an official authorized to perform certain functions can of his own will destroy records of this House? No! He destroys them because they never were records of this House and never were intended to be; they are in his custody to do what he likes with after the statutory period has expired.

Mr. BUREAU: What about during the statutory period?

Mr. MORPHY: During the statutory period the returning officer is to keep possession of these papers—that is what the law says. That is long after the election is held, long after the publication of the proclamation, and the operations of the Act have been fulfilled by the publication of the proclamation followed by the election of the returned member. So it is absolutely futile to argue that a mere proclamation is a part of the journals or records of this House.

Let me go a step further. There is a protest, and incidental to the protest, we will assume for the moment, the returning officer was compelled under a subpœna duces tecem to produce the proclamation to the rota of judges trying the election petition. Being so produced it becomes a part of the records of the court. Since when has it been recognized that the records of Parliament may be handled under a subpœna duces tecem through the medium of a man who is not appointed as an official of this House to take under his control documents of that kind? The returning officer producing that paper, the moment that the trial is over, may by virtue of his right say to the court: The exhibit I filed belongs to me. I have a statutory duty to keep it for a year. He may make application for the return of the exhibit, which the court may or may not grant according to the circumstances. But assuming he is allowed to take it off the files of the court, he takes that paper back, and probably there may be some reason why in the strict observance of his duties he must keep it a still longer time until the statutory period is ended.

Mr. CANNON: May I be permitted a remark? I do not know what the practice of the Ontario Courts is, but before our courts in Quebec never in my experience has the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery parted with the possession of the documents in connection with an election. He produces them before the court, but he keeps them in his possession.

Mr. MORPHY: It just makes my argument that much stronger, that neither the court nor any other authority has any right to the papers since there is a statutory obligation upon that man to keep them and, as my hon. friend from Three Rivers says, to destroy them after the statutory period is ended. To argue that they are records of the House is absolutely beside the question.

Mr. JACOBS: I approach this matter without any prejudice whatever, inasmuch as I do not belong to the Orange Order, nor yet have I been taken into the fold of the Roman Catholic Church. Consequently anything I may say will be entirely free from bias, and as such I think ought to be listened to by the committee with a willing ear.

If I may be permitted to give some advice to the Government, I would suggest that in this matter, assuming that there is no right whatever with regard to the use of the French language, the Government ought for political and diplomatic reasons to go a little distance with the province of Quebec. The Government is woefully weak in Quebec representation—that is, numerically. Practically the entire contingent from Quebec has received seats in the Cabinet—or something just as good. I refer to the position which is now being occupied by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Sir Herbert Ames). Nohting was too good for Quebec. Three seats are held by supporters of the Government from Quebec, and these gentlemen were considered so worthy that two of them are now numbered among the advisers of the King and the other gentleman is in Geneva.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the Postmaster General?

Mr. JACOBS: I did not say anything about the Postmaster General because he is not a member of this House, and I cannot refer to the other House. What I wish to say is that if the Government desires to strengthen its position in Quebec it is certainly not taking the proper course. This by way of a bit of advice to the Government.

The name of Sir John Macdonald was used here to night by the member for Carleton (Mr. Boyce) and I am sorry that he is not in his seat at the present moment. He made the statement that Sir John Macdonald confided to him that "he could not trust the French of Quebec."

Sir John may or may not have made that statement; he is not here to deny it. Perhaps the statement was made such a long time ago that the memory of my hon. friend from Carleton is a little hazy about it. But Sir John Macdonald never had any reason to make a statement of that kind, because he trusted Quebec, and that trust was returned a hundredfold. He held office for many years because he was able to control the province of Quebec, and, at the same time, the Orange Order of Ontario. Now, that was quite a feat. Inasmuch as my hon. friends opposite find that they have practically no representation from Quebec, may I suggest, in spite of the statement made by the member for Carleton, that it would be wise for the Government to see to it that the Quebec representation is strengthened on their side of the House? At present the Government is what I would call a jug-handled government. One-third of the population of this country is not represented on the other side of the House. How is it possible for a government to govern under such conditions? As a matter of politics I suggest to to the minister that even at the last moment he might very well consider the remarks which were made on this side and go a certain length in order to see to it that these—I will not call them rights; call them privileges if you like—are granted to our friends of the province of Quebec.

Now, after all, what is it that is asked? We say that if it is impossible for the people living in a certain community to understand the language of the proclamation, that proclamation ought to be published in the language which they understand. Is that an unreasonable request? I say it is not. Why, if you buy a bottle of patent medicine you will find that the directions for use are published in about fifteen different languages, whereas in the matter of a proclamation under the Franchise Act, a matter which vitally affects the people, this right to read in a language which they understand is denied to the people.

Efforts have been made during the last year or two to conciliate the province of Quebec in a number of ways. The newspapers of the Government of late, instead of roaring like lions, have been roaring as gently as sucking doves, about Quebec. Now, what is the object? The object is to conciliate Quebec and attempt to obtain some representation without which this Government can not live. We heard about the little excursion which was made down the St. Lawrence by the Prime Minister and one or two of his friends in search of some new cabinet material. Many of us were on our guard; we were afraid that the hen roost was going to be robbed. Some people thought that the Prime Minister was aiming at no less a person than Sir Lomer Gouin, and other names were mentioned later when it was found that Sir Lomer was not to be attracted by the offers of the Prime Minister. Now, this goes to show that a determined effort is being made to secure representation for the province of Quebec. Yet when an opportunity is given of in some way conciliating the province of Quebec the Acting Solicitor General refuses pointblank to take advantage of it. He said that his views were rather in favour of the suggested amendment, but that there were others who were against it. Perhaps I may be permitted to use the language which has been made current in this House by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) when speaking on another matter he said that it was a case of "passing the buck," whatever that means. The Canada Gazette is published in two languages, English and French. The Canada Gazette is not a document of the House or a journal of the House. It circulates from Prince Edward Island to Vancouver Island. The Acting Solicitor General, I understand, has told us that there is nothing in the law which makes it necessary to publish these things in the two languages; that that has only been done as a matter of convenience,—purely by complaisance. If that is the case, he has a precedent for saying to-day that these proclamations are published as a matter of convenience and in that way giving satisfaction to everyone. Had I my way I would be in favour of publishing that proclamation in every language spoken within the confines of this Dominion. I would publish it in Scandinavian, in German, even in Yiddish; I would publish it in every language known, because after all the object of the proclamation is to give the citizens of this country information as to what they are to do and where they are to vote. What is there wrong about that? If it is a matter of convenience; if it is essential that we should have reflected in this House the opinion of everyone in this community no matter what language he speaks, why is it that we restrict the publication of the proclamation to the English language and in certain particular places allow its publication also in French? There is no reason in the wide world, for instance, why the county of Glengarry, where nearly fifty per cent of the people are French Canadian, should not have these proclamations published in French. There is no reason why in the counties of Prescott, Russell and others, the proclamations should not be in French as well as in English. No valid reason has been urged by the Acting Solicitor General why this should not be done. Speaking for myself, as I say, without any prejudice whatever, I think that the Government is making a serious mistake, for diplomatic and political reasons if for no higher object, in denying the rights which are asked for by members on this side.

Mr. BUREAU: In reply to the member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy), I think I can throw some light on the situation if I quote from the French version of the British North America Act. Section 133 says:

(Translation):

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the Debates of the Houses of the Parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the Legislature of Quebec, and both those languages shall be used in the respective Records. . . .

And this is the point, Mr. Chairman, that I wish to emphasize:

[Mr. Jacobs.]

. . . And both those languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is it that constitutes records? These records are documents which are intrusted to an officer of the House of Commons, under an Act of Parliament, in order that they become part of the records of this House, so that subsequently they can be used for some purpose. This Bill provides that an officer of this House, appointed under the law, shall keep those documents during a fixed period. If the man is not obliged to keep those papers indefinitely, it is because we allow him, under the law or implicitly, the privilege to destroy them as soon as the period during which he is bound to preserve them has come to an end. Consequently, the word "used" applies to the papers which are intrusted to an officer of the House of Commons in order that they may be used subsequently for some purpose. Now, Mr. Chairman, according to the definition which I have given to-day, the English word "records" means all the documents which might subsequently be used as evidence when an election is contested before the courts of justice. You cannot give another interpretation to section 75 of this Bill.

To prevent the accumulation of records in the House and to make their destruction a matter of course, once their usefulness is gone, they are given into the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery during a certain period. I submit that our election documents are not records of the House because of the duration of this custody but because of the fact itself that they are given into the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; because of the fact that it is precisely this officer who has charge of them, and because of the fact that the law requires this very thing.

We have appointed an officer who, under the law, must keep certain documents that have to do with an election. The proof of an election is the proclamation stating that the election is to take place. Without such a proclamation there can be no proof that an election has been held. The first thing that must be established to the satisfaction of the court, in an election dispute, is the fact that an election has been held, and since this evidence is necessary and must be submitted before the proceedings can continue, the proclamation belongs with the other documents that, according to the interpretation clause just quoted, are styled election documents. I claim that, according to the French version of the constitution, all election documents are records of the House and must be printed in the two official languages, French and English. I fail to see how we can possibly escape from the horns of that dilemma and say that, for the purposes of this Act, the records shall not be records, so as to allow of these gentlemen accomplishing whatever objects they may have in view.

Mr. d'ANJOU (Rimouski). (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the committee very long at this late hour, but I cannot let the debate come to a close without saying a few words. After listening with attention to the speeches made in the House, particularly to those of my hon. friends on this side, I have come to the conclusion that the election proclamations which we are discussing are just as much a part of the records of the House as are the Votes and Proceedings, the Debates, etc., and consequently that they should be printed in both the official languages of this country.

The hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) in the magnificent speech he delivered to the committee introduced a new argument into the discussion, an argument which, it seems to me, deserves consideration. The hon. member from St. James, speaking of the Naturalization Act of 1919, demonstrated to the House that every alien desirous of becoming naturalized must, besides being otherwise qualified, possess a satisfactory knowledge of either the French or the English tongue.

Now, since to vote at a federal election one must be naturalized and since one of the requisites of naturalization is a knowledge of either the French or English, I cannot understand why the Government of Canada should not publish the election proclamations in both the official languages of this country. The Naturalization Act states that in order to be admitted to citizenship one must have a knowledge of either the English or French language; there is no mention of German, nor of any other foreign tongue. The law thus acknowledges the rights of the French tongue in this country.

I shall give my utmost support to the amendment of the hon. member from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon). If I were to offer any word of criticism it would be that his motion is altogether too tame. In so far as I, personally, am concerned, what I am asking the Parliament of Canada for is not a favour, neither is it a privilege; I am demanding the recognition of a right granted our language by the Constitution of this country. I cannot understand why the Government refuses to accept this motion, so eloquently seconded by all the hon. members on this side of the House who spoke here to-day.

Mr. Chairman, in order to strengthen my argument, I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the following resolution which has been on the Order Paper for some time under the name of the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Griesbach):

> That, in the opinion of this House, all newspapers, pamphlets, advertisements, political campaign literature, and publications of like nature, printed and published in Canada, or distributed or circulated in Canada, in a language other than the English or French language, should not be permitted to be circulated or distributed unless such publications bear, in parallel columns, a translation of the same in the English or French language.

That only goes to show Mr. Chairman, that there is no question in Canada of the German, or any other tongue and that the equality of rights between the French and English languages in this country is not only acknowledged in an official way, but that it is admitted even by those who dispute our right to speak the French tongue. The argument, it seems to me, is not without worth since it shows that those who pretend to ignore it are forced to recognize the fact that, in Canada, French and English are equal before the law.

If the English language were the only official language used in this country, why should the hon. member for Edmonton not have mentioned the fact that those printed documents and advertisements should be translated into English only, and why should he not have asked that they be translated into German or into any other language?

Mr. Chairman, this shows that the French language as well as the English language, is here to stay, no matter what may be done against it. I do not intend to retain the attention of the House for any further length of time. I considered it my duty, before the debate was at an end, to say a few words in support of this amendment. Unfortunately, the question had been decided beforehand; it is obvious that the Government has yielded to the Orange pack, and eager as it is to please those gentlemen under any circumstances, it has made up its mind not to grant this request submitted by hon. members in the name of the French speaking population of this country towards securing the recognition of a certain right. It seems to me that to speak French when vindicating this right is an excellent means of showing that we are entitled to use that language in Canada, in this House and out of it as well, and that the best means of preserving a right is to make use of it. Wherefore I have spoken in French, to-night, as I usually do, and it was only natural that I should have done so, because I had risen to vindicate the rights of Her Majesty the French tongue.

Mr. TURGEON: I did not expect that the amendment which I moved would have raised such a debate in this House of Commons of Canada. The debate which has taken place this evening has certainly won my admiration, and although once in a while the discussion may have waxed a little strong between a couple of members on either side of the House, I must say that the lesson taught the country by the speeches which have been delivered on both sides will convince the people of Canada, as it has strengthened me in my conviction, of the truth of the principle that a bilingual Parliament can exist only in a bilingual country. If the members of the House had not felt that we were living in a bilingual country, this House would have adjourned before twelve o'clock. I am confirmed in my conviction, in spite of what has been said by some hon. gentlemen opposite, that seventy-five per cent of the English population of the Dominion are in favour of the amendment which I have moved, and will consider that this is merely an acknowledgement of a right acquired, a privilege which everybody is willing to give to a minority which is willing to accept with such pleasure and gratitude every possible privilege accorded to it. I have been castigated by some hon. members opposite because some years have elapsed and because a similar amendment was not brought in in the election of 1911, or of 1908, or of 1904. The old law, which has been on the statute book for many years, was framed in accordance with the mentality of the people at that time, and no opportune time arose for any member of Parliament, who wished to maintain the prevailing spirit of harmony, to move the amendment which I am moving to-day. Now when the Government is introducing a new franchise law, which will be on the statute book for future elections, which may come in three months or three years, and which law will remain on the statute book for years to come it is an opportune time for any hon. member who desires to have the law amended, to bring in his amendment. The war is over and we are now engaged on the work of reconstruction, and I think reconstruction in matters of harmony and concord should be the first consideration. As I said before, in the twenty years I have been in Parliament I have never advocated extreme measures. I have, however, always expressed my views, and if at times they may have been stronger than at others my actions have always been dictated by a sense of duty and conviction. There is to-day greater proportion of the French element in the Dominion of Canada than existed thirty or forty years ago, and these people have, according to my conviction, the same rights in the matter of language in matters of Federal concern as the English-speaking people. It has been stated that some English-speaking people in the province of Ontario might be offended to have to read a proclamation in French. I do not see why they should be any more offended at that, than at receiving a postal order, which is invariably printed in both languages;—the only offence they could take would be that it was too small in amount. I do not wish at this time to do anything to create disunion, and I am prepared to withdraw the amendment which I have placed on Hansard and which has been debated to-night. I have listened with great pleasure to one of my old leadrs of the Liberal party, whom it has been my pleasure to follow for years in this House, just as I followed him with pleasure in his past career in the Maritime Provinces, where he had been a figure long before he entered this Parliament in 1896. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, ex-Minister of Finance in the Laurier Government, while not finding fault with my amendment, recognizes, however, that there are two views in this country as to the rights of the French language, and in order not to offend one school of thought he has suggested an amendment which might possibly be more acceptable to hon. gentlemen opposite. He has read his suggestion, and I am willing to withdraw my amendment and substitute for it the suggested amendment of my hon. friend for Shelburne and Queen's.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the hon. gentleman have leave to withdraw his amendment?

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. TURGEON: I beg to move to amend clause 37 by adding at the end of subclause (1) the following words:

Provided however that in any electoral district in which, to the knowledge of the returning officer, there is a considerable number of electors who are familiar with the French language but do not understand the English language, the proclamation shall be issued in both languages.

Amendment negatived; yeas 38, nays 63.

Section agreed to, on the same division reversed.

Progress reported.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Rowell the House adjourned at 1.25 a.m. Wednesday.

Wednesday, May 12, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

ADJOURNMENT OVER ASCENSION DAY.

On the motion of the Right Hon. Sir George Foster (Acting Prime Minister) it was resolved that when the House adjourns this day it stand adjourned until Friday, the fourteenth instant.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. Michael Steele presented the fourth report of the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Return tabled.

Return showing the institutions under the jurisdiction and management of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, the number of patients and employees of each institution and the cost.—Mr. Hugh Clark (Parliamentary Secretary.)

CANADIAN NORTHERN SYSTEM—CANADIAN GOVERNMENT MERCHANT MARINE.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Railways): I lay on the Table three copies of the fifth annual report of the Canadian Northern Railway system and the annual report of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. Other copies are being printed and probably to-morrow, or next day, one will be mailed to each member of the House. If further copies are required they will be available at the department.

WATER CARRIAGE OF GOODS ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order being called for the introduction of a Bill to amend the Water Carriage of Goods Act.

Mr. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I wish the order to be dropped.

Order dropped.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions to be answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. What is the total yearly amount of salary paid to those who are to receive bonuses of $12,500,000?
2. What will be the average percentage per $1,000 of salary?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This question has already been answered.

SALARIES OF MEMBERS' STENOGRAPHERS.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Is it true that the salary of the messengers and other attendants of the House of Commons has been increased to $4 per diem from the 1st of April, 1919?
2. Is it true that the salary of the male stenographers on the members' stenographers' staff is $3.50 per diem?
3. If so, what is the reason for this difference?
4. Is it the intention of the Government to increase the salary of the stenographers on the members' stenographers staff this session?
5. If so, to what extent? If not, why?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER:

1. Yes.
2. From $3.25 to $3.50 per day.
3. The rate of pay has been regulated by the amount paid for similar work in commercial and business establishments.
4. A proposal to effect a further increase in the maximum daily allowance to both female and male stenographers, has been under consideration and it is expected an announcement in this connection will be made in the near future.
5. Answered by number 4.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. POWER:

1. Did any of the officials of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment travel to Europe at the public expense during the years 1919 and 1920?
2. If so, what are their names and what positions do or did they occupy?
3. What was the reason for these trips?
4. What expenses for travelling and entertainment were charged to the department in each case?

Mr. HUGH CLARK (Parliamentary Secretary):

1. Yes.

2. (a) It having been reported to the department that successful methods in the retraining of disabled soldiers had been adopted in England the introduction of which was being advocated in Canada, W. E. Segsworth, previously Director of Vocational Training and T. A. Stevenson, Assistant Director Information and Service Branch (who also represents the Trades and Labour Council of Canada with regard to the industrial retraining of ex-members of the Forces) were sent to England in April 1919, their instructions being to investigate the methods of industrial retraining applied in England; the relationship between organized labour and the Governmental agencies conducting such retraining, and the relationship between organized labour and ex-members of the Forces undergoing such retraining, particularly with respect to the permanent reabsorption of trainees into commercial or industrial life as civilians.

Mr. Segsworth was also appointed to proceed as the representative of the department to the Inter-Allied Conference at Rome which was convened for the purpose of discussing the problem of the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers. It was considered that advantage might be taken of methods which had proven successful in other countries. It was also the desire of those responsible for the conference that definite records of the work conducted by the department in Canada be made available to representatives of other countries confronted with similar problems.

The expenses of Messrs. Segsworth and Stevenson amounted to $3,603.36.

(b) For the purpose of negotiating arrangements whereby former members of the Imperial Forces resident in Canada (numbering about 50,000) would receive at the expense of the Imperial Government post war benefits administered by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and whereby ex-members of the Canadian Forces resident in the United Kingdom (numbering about 20,000) would receive at the expense of the Canadian Government post war benefits made available in England by the Imperial Government, E. H. Scammell, Assistant Deputy Minister, was instructed to proceed to England in May 1919. As a result of the arrangements he made ex-members of the Forces in both countries now obtain benefits with greater convenience than would otherwise have been the case, and considerable savings have been effected in administrative expenses.

The expenses of Mr. E. H. Scammell amounted to $1,148.51.

(c) It having been represented to the department that owing to the heavy demands on the British Government in providing artificial limbs, orthopædic boots and other orthopædic appliances for former members of the Imperial Forces, discharged Canadian soldiers resident in the United Kingdom were not being furnished with such appliances as rapidly as might be desired, F. G. Robinson, Deputy Minister and R. W. Coulthard, Director of Orthopædic and Surgical Appliances, were sent to England in January, 1920, for the purpose of investigating the desirability of operating in England a Branch Orthopædic Fitting Depot, similar to those operated by the department throughout Canada for the issue of artificial limbs, orthopædic boots and other orthopædic appliances. They were also instructed thoroughly to investigate the methods adopted by the British and French Governments in connection with the supply and maintenance of artificial limbs and the design thereof, so that advantage might be taken in Canada of any improved methods or designs not previously applied here.

The deputy minister was also instructed to negotiate with officials of the British Government certain adjustments relative to the administration of benefits to ex-members of the Forces by the British and Canadian Governments reciprocally, the desirability of which had arisen, as the work developed out of experience in applying under constantly varying conditions the general principles previously agreed upon. Mr. Robinson was further instructed to arrange with officials of the British Government the rates at which the Canadian Government would be reimbursed by the British Government for services rendered by the department on their behalf to ex-members of the Imperial Forces resident in Canada; and to investigate the conditions under which ex-members of the Canadian Forces, resident in the United Kingdom, who have been disabled by war service, were receiving benefits through the British Government, and to make any necessary recommendations in this respect.

The expenses of Mr. F. G. Robinson and Major Coulthard amounted to $3,371.71.

3 and 4. Answered by No. 2.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—CAR HAULAGE COST.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

How much does it cost per mile to haul a car on the Canadian National railways?

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Railways): The hon. member will appreciate that it would be very difficult to answer this question, for he might know that it would cost a great deal more to haul a car containing 50 or 60 tons of freight than if it were empty. It is a question that I cannot answer in its present form.

Mr. CASGRAIN: How about private cars?

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

MR. F. YOUNG.

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Is F. Young receiving the annual salary of $6,000 from the Canada Wheat Board?
2. Is the Government aware as to whether or not the said F. Young is receiving in addition to the above salary an annual salary of $10,000 from the Lake Shippers' Clearance Association?
3. Are expenditures by the Canada Wheat Board audited by any Government official, or does the said board submit a duly audited detail statement of revenue and expenditure?
4. What sums of public money have been expended in behalf of the Canada Wheat Board?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER:

1 and 2. The department has no information. The board appoints and pays its own working staff.

3. The expenditures of the board are subject to audit by an independent audit company, and they will submit a full statement of their work on its completion.

4. No public moneys have been expended on behalf of the Canada Wheat Board. All costs and charges are defrayed from proceeds of sale, in the hands of the board.

Mr. PACAUD:

1. Has Mr. Joseph Houle still got the contract as rural mail carrier between Pontbriand and Robertsonville?
2. What was the contract price?
3. Was the contract awarded after tenders had been called?
4. Has the contract price been raised in favour of Mr. Houle?
5. If so, when, and for what amount?

Mr. ROWELL:

1. No.
2. $175.
3. No.

4 and 5. On representations of Contractor Houle that $125 per annum—his rate of payment—was so low as to involve him in financial loss in operating the service, and $175 being considered a fair price for this service, a new contract was arranged with him at that rate from the 1st January, 1920.

This contract was, at the request of the contractor, subsequently transferred on the same terms and conditions to another party on the 1st May, 1920.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS.

Mr. McCURDY:

1. Have the Government operations at the Dog Fish Reductions Works at Clark's Harbour, Nova Scotia, been discontinued?
2. If so, what disposition has been made of the property?

Mr. ROSS:

1. What sales of military and other supplies have been made by the War Purchasing Commission in each of the years 1917, 1918 and 1919, and what amount of money was obtained for these supplies in each of the above years?
2. Were these supplies sold by tender, by advertisement, or at public auction?
3. How were military supplies, including rugs, furniture, etc., at Camp Borden sold, who were the purchasers and what prices were received for the various articles?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. CALDWELL:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, documents, and other papers exchanged between the Dominion Government, or any official thereof, or the officials of the Canadian Government Railways and the Government of New Brunswick, or any official of the said Government, or any of the officials of the St. John and Quebec Railway Company with regard to the procuring of running rights for the trains of the St. John and Quebec Railway over the Canadian Pacific Railway between Westfield Beach and St. John. Also of all papers, documents and correspondence exchanged between the Dominion Government or any official thereof or any officials of the Canadian Government Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any official thereof, regarding the securing of the said running rights.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

For a return showing the total amounts paid for advertisements or newspaper articles relating to voluntary enlistment before the Military Service Act of 1917 was in force: (a) to English newspapers in Canada and United States; (b) to French newspapers in Canada and United States; (c) to English newspapers in the province of Quebec; (d) to French newspapers in the province of Quebec.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICES CO-ORDINATION.

On motion of Hon. Arthur Meighen, the House returned to the first reading of Senate Bills.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior) moved that Bill No. 124 (from the Senate) to amend the Employment Offices Co-ordination Act be read the first time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This Bill enables the Department of Labour to make arrangement with municipalities of the same character precisely as under the former Bill it was able to make with provinces for the carrying on of employment offices co-operatively with the provincial authorities.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. S. FIELDING: Before proceeding with the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I desire to put a question and to offer a suggestion to my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster). In the intimation that is given to us of the programme of business for the day there is mention of a motion for Committee of Supply, but it is at the foot of the Order Paper. It has been there on several occasions lately, and the consequence is that the motion is not reached. If it could be reached at all it would be late in the evening when the House is likely to be weary and very thin. One of the objects of the motion to go into Committee of Supply is to afford an opportunity, which does not otherwise arise, for the discussion of public questions of importance. There is a matter which some members on this side desire to bring to the attention of the House, and we hope that an opportunity may be afforded as early as possible. To-morrow will be a holiday; Friday automatically the Speaker leaves the Chair; Monday is Budget day; so there is no prospect of an early opportunity being afforded unless it be to-day. My suggestion is that the right hon. gentleman, after consultation and at his convenience, will fix an hour, either this afternoon or evening, but not late at night, when the motion for Committee of Supply may be moved, in order that an opportunity may be afforded for the exercise of one of the most vital principles of our parliamentary system.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: In answer to my hon. friend, the House will go into Committee of Supply at eight o'clock to-night.

Mr. FIELDING: Thank you.

EXPLOSIVE WORKS AT BELOEIL.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Chambly and Vercheres (Mr. Archambault) asked yesterday a question as to certain explosions that had taken place in his constituency, and desired to know what action had been taken with regard thereto. The Explosives Division of the Department of Mines has record of two explosions, one on the 27th of April and one on the 3rd of May. Following each explosion an officer was sent for the purpose of making an investigation; he has returned, and his report is almost complete.

HONEY ADULTERATION—SENATE AMENDMENT.

Consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 29 respecting Honey.

Hon. NEWTON W. ROWELL (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the Senate has added a section to this Bill, No. 4, the effect of which is to provide that the penalties under the Food and Drugs Act shall apply to the violation of the provisions of this Act in lieu of the penalties under the Criminal Code, which otherwise would be applicable. There is no objection to the change made by the Senate; probably on the whole it is an improvement. The only point is that the Senate has not made the amendment wholly efficacious to accomplish the purpose intended. Therefore I desire to slightly modify the Senate amendment.

Hon. Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. President of the Privy Council to speak in a louder tone of voice? His remarks are quite inaudible at this end of the Chamber, and we do not know what is going on.

Mr. ROWELL: Mr. Speaker, the Senate has amended the Bill by adding a new section, Number 4, the effect of which is to provide that the penalties under the Food and Drugs Act shall apply to violations of this Act in lieu of the penalties which would be applicable under the Criminal Code in the absence of this specific provision. I see no objection to the Senate amendment; it is probably, on the whole, wise that the same penalty should apply to violations of this Act as apply to violations of the Food and Drugs Act. But the form of the amendment made by the Senate is hardly such as to accomplish the purpose in view. I therefore move to vary it by striking out the words "section 2 or" in the first line thereof and inserting in the first line after the word "who," the following:

is guilty of wilful adulteration of honey under section 2, or who—

The effect of the change will be as follows. The clause as amended by the Senate reads:

Every one who violates any provision of section 2 or 3 of this Act is guilty of an offence and liable upon summary conviction to the penalties provided by section 16 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1920.

When amended as now proposed, it will read as follows:

Every one who is guilty of wilful adulteration of honey under section 2 or who violates any provision of section 3 of this Act is guilty of an offence and liable upon summary conviction to the penalties provided by section 16 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1920.

The Department of Justice has advised that this amendment should be made.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: What are the penalties provided by section 16 of the Food and Drugs Act?

Mr. ROWELL: They are as follows: If the adulteration is deemed to be injurious to health within the meaning of the Act, for a first offence, upon summary conviction a fine not exceeding $200 and costs and not less than $50 and costs or imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to both fine and imprisonment; and for each subsequent offence, a fine not exceeding $500 and costs and not less than $50 and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both fine and imprisonment. If the adulteration is not deemed to be injurious to health, the provision is, a fine not exceeding $100 and costs and not less than $25 and costs, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months; and for each subsequent offence a fine not exceeding $200 and costs and not less than $50 and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. KAY: Why is there no provision for penalty in the case of adulteration of honey after it is made by the bees? There is provision here against feeding sugar to the bees, but there is nothing to prevent the beekeeper from adulterating the honey after it is produced.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question submitted by the hon. member (Mr. Kay) is, I think, wide of the motion now before the Chair. I would also direct the attention of the House to the fact that the minister has already spoken. We are not in committee, and there is no right to reply.

Mr. BUREAU: May I ask the minister a question? These amendments have to go back to the Senate, have they not? I have here a letter from a person who is interested in another branch of industry where a food product is produced by animals not out of their own flesh. He suggests that after the word "honey" we should add the word "poultry," and that the following be added as subsection 2A:

Feeding poultry with lard, except for the purpose of being consumed by them as food, or with butter or any oily substance—

Mr. SPEAKER: I doubt very much whether the hon. member is in order. We are limited to a discussion of the amendment which is now before the House.

Mr. BUREAU: The amendments have to go back to the Senate, Mr. Speaker, and we cannot add anything except what the minister says. Do I understand it to be the rule that if the minister submits an amendment I cannot add anything to it?

Mr. SPEAKER: A suggested amendment would have to be germane to the clause under consideration.

Mr. BUREAU: Well, the clause under consideration, as I understand it, deals with penalties imposed upon those who violate the provisions of this Act. The suggestion that I am dealing with is that something else should be added as a protection in the case of food produced by animals not out of their own flesh. But if I am out of order, of course I bow to your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must point out to the hon. member (Mr. Bureau) that this amendment is a consequential amendment, and one, therefore, which can be made on motion put in this manner. Any other amendment, however, would require that the Bill be referred back to the committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Amendment proposed by Hon. Mr. Rowell to the Senate amendment agreed to.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 109, to amend the Supreme Court Act.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few observations to make—

The speech of the hon. member (Mr. McKenzie) was interrupted at this point by the prolonged applause which greeted the entrance into the Chamber to take his seat for the first time this session of the Rt. Hon. Sir R. L. Borden, Prime Minister, who had been absent by reason of illness.

Mr. McKENZIE (Resuming): I am delighted Mr. Speaker, that the good luck has fallen to a member of the Opposition to be in position to welcome the Prime Minister back to the House. Just at that point where we had the delightful experience of welcoming the Prime Minister upon his return, I was addressing you, Sir, upon the Bill now before the House.

What I would like to say—and I direct my remarks particularly to the Minister of Justice, who has charge of this Bill—is that it is not desirable to be amending the constitution and powers of the courts unless it is absolutely necessary to do so. The Supreme Court Act is quite an old enactment. It has been amended a few times, but not very often. The Prime Minister, who is now in his seat, the Minister of Justice, and every lawyer in this House, know that it is exceedingly desirable that the practice and procedure of the courts should continue without very much change. The Supreme Court of Canada is not like a provincial court; it is a court to which all provinces look as an appellate court, and for that reason it is desirable that the practice and procedure and constitution of that court should be well known and well established.

Unless there is most urgent necessity, any change in the constitution of the court, which change would necessarily mean a change in practice, should be avoided and should be indulged in as seldom as possible. Lawyers in this House know that text-books have been written on the Supreme Court Act and that those text-books are in the libraries of lawyers from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Those text-books endeavour to show as clearly as possible the powers and the practice of the court. Several points in regard to the jurisdiction of the court and the scope of it have been settled, upon the old Act, by decisions of the Privy Council. For these reasons it is highly desirable that those text-books which have been written on the old Act and decisions rendered by the Privy Council along those lines should be held as authorities and that nothing should be done by us, unless it is absolutely necessary to do so, which would have the effect of destroying the interpretations which have been given to the Act and also of destroying the usefulness of the text-books I have mentioned.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. There is a volume of conversation going on, not only on the floor of this Chamber, but I regret to say, in other parts of the Chamber. I would ask that more consideration be shown to the business of the House.

Mr. McKENZIE: I have read the Supreme Court Act several times before, but I have read it recently and I have also read the amendments made in different years and the amendments that are now proposed. I am not quite convinced that the amendments now proposed are highly necessary. They may be, and possibly the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) will explain the necessity for them. With these remarks, which will appeal to lawyers, if not to other people, I should like the minister to bear in mind that we should interfere as little as possible with the constitution and the established practice of the court. Every hon. member who is in any particular calling knows that he does not want the tools to which he is accustomed, changed. We have had a good deal of talk about containers of food, of fish, farming implements and all that sort of thing, and a great deal of dissatisfaction is occasioned if there is any undue interference. We are now in the field where we are tampering with the implements of the trade of the much maligned lawyer. I am only anxious that lawyers should be protected as much as is possible by our not interfering with the proper administration of justice as regards this court.

Rt. Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the minister speaks, I must direct the attention of the House to the fact that if the minister exercises his right to reply, the debate is closed. Therefore, if any hon. member desires to speak on this matter, he should do so now.

Mr. DOHERTY: —I fully appreciate and share the views of the hon. gentleman as to the undesirability of unnecessarily modifying the law prescribing the duties, functions and powers of the Supreme Court. I realize also the importance of not making modifications which may render inapplicable decisions which have been made in the past, or possibly the observations of text-books written upon them. But I desire to point out that the purpose of this Bill is one of simplification. It does not affect the constitution of the court; it affects the jurisdiction of the court, and its principal purpose is to make that jurisdiction the same with regard to cases coming from any of the provinces. Its second purpose is to simplify the provisions that now determine that jurisdiction. As the hon. member has said, the Supreme Court Act has, from time to time, been the subject of amendment, and if one looks at it in its present condition, it is evident that some, at all events, of the amendments that have been made, have been made from the point of view of meeting particular cases that have arisen. The result is that you have these provisions for particular cases bearing upon the question of jurisdiction and dealing with that question in that way, producing, I think, a lack of clearness. This Bill is introduced at the suggestion of the judges of the court, and as a result of their experience in the application of the law. As I have said, its principal purpose is to make the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court applicable to the same classes of cases without distinction between the provinces from which those cases come, and that in itself is a desirable thing. Its second purpose is, as I have said, to simplify the form of the sections in which the jurisdiction is defined, so as to reduce the cases down to limited classes which will cover all the cases intended to be covered without the necessity of having specific provisions for particular kinds of cases.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House thereupon went into committee on the Bill, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Mr. DOHERTY: I desire to move to amend subparagraph (a) by striking out the word "and" in the last line thereof and adding the following:

> Provided that except in cases in which such highest court of final resort has concurrent jurisdiction with the court from which it is sought to appeal, special leave shall not be granted in any case which is not appealable to such highest court of last resort and which has not been heretofore appealable to the Supreme Court; and,

The purpose of the amendment is to correct the provision as it stood, which would have produced a result which was not intended. Under the section as it stands in the Bill, cases involving small amounts in the different provinces which are not appealable within the province would have been appealable to the Supreme Court on leave of the court of last resort in the province. There was no intention to produce, and I do not think there would be any justification for producing that result, and it is to prevent that that I am proposing this amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On section 41—leave of provincial court of last resort:

Mr. LEMIEUX: His Majesty enjoys certain privileges before the courts, but I think it is giving him an unfair advantage to grant this privilege which is refused to the ordinary citizen. I have in mind cases of damages against the Crown, for instance.

Mr. DOHERTY: In so far as His Majesty is given any special right here, it is a right he already has. These classes of cases mentioned here are appealable under the law as it stands, without anybody's leave. At the present time for the provinces other than Quebec $1,000 is the amount fixed for the "de plano" right of appeal. This Bill for the "de plano" right as regards all provinces makes it $2,000, but in other cases there may be an appeal by leave of the court of last resort of the provinces. The reason why a special provision is made for all the classes of cases enumerated in the present section is that there was in all these cases a right to appeal "de plano," and it was thought that to subject that absolute right as it now stands to the condition that there should be leave to appeal given by the highest court of last resort in the province might in certain cases be looked upon as depriving those parties of a very substantial right, and upon that consideration we have this provision, that even if the court of last resort in the provinces does not, with regard to that particular class of cases, think an appeal ought to be granted, it is possible for the Supreme Court to grant it. I do not know whether it is very necessary, but it is put there because in the opinion of the judges it would remove any ground for suggesting that the parties to these particular classes of cases who had this exceptional right of appeal "de plano" were being deprived of resort to the Supreme Court.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: May I be permitted to remark that it is only by exercise of the sense of sight that we at this end of the Chamber can have some shrewd suspicion that certain hon. gentlemen at the other end are speaking.

The CHAIRMAN: The remarks of the hon. member are perfectly justified, and I think the position of hon. members at the other end of the Chamber is aggravated by the fact that there is altogether too much conversation in the House. The acoustics of this Chamber are not bad; they are very good, and the conversations carried on by hon. members render it absolutely impossible for those at the other end to hear what is being said at this end. I must request hon. members to refrain from indulging in conversation in the Chamber.

On section 3—when appeal shall be brought.

Mr. JACOBS: This section amends section 69 of the Supreme Court Act by adding the following words to that section:

Provided that the months of July and August shall be excluded in the computation of the said sixty days.

Will the minister be kind enough to explain this section in detail?

Mr. DOHERTY: The delay of sixty days is prescribed for certain classes of cases where an application is necessary, and within which time it must be made. This provision is made to meet the fact that July and August are very generally looked upon in the legal profession as vacation months; and in fact, under the laws of some provinces, these months are not included in the delays prescribed for taking certain steps in procedure. I do not say that this is true in all cases. The hon. member knows there are exceptional cases, but this is the general rule, and it was considered fair to make this provision so that the months of July and August, in regard to the particular delay of sixty days referred to in this section, should not count. Difficulties have arisen and people have found their rights jeopardized, and this provision seems to me but reasonable.

Mr. JACOBS: Does the minister not think that this is adding to the law's delays?

Mr. DOHERTY: So long as the long vacation exists I am afraid it will add to the law's delays. I can say that in the opinion of the judges of the court, as well as in my opinion, this is a desirable provision to meet practical conditions that exist.

BUDGET SPEECH POSTPONED TO TUESDAY NEXT.

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER: In regard to the Budget Speech, I desire to make a final announcement of a decision arrived at by reason of great kindness of heart on my part and insistent persuasion by hon. gentlemen who sit opposite. If the House is agreeable, the Budget Speech will be delivered on Tuesday next and we shall go into Supply on Monday. This will afford my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and his associates an opportunity for some longed-for discussion which they have contemplated for some time.

Mr. FIELDING: May I supplement the observations of my right hon. friend by expressing the assumption that we are to go into Supply on Monday night and not on Monday, as the hon. gentleman says, without qualification. Of course, there is an old proverb that says that one should not look a gift horse in the mouth, and we therefore accept my hon. friend's concession. I may say, however, that there has been a little understanding on both sides, and I hope it is to our mutual convenience.

4 p.m.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT.

The House resumed from May 11, consideration in committee of Bill No. 12 (Hon. Mr. Guthrie) respecting the election of members of the House of Commons and the electoral franchise.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When progress was reported upon this Bill last night, clauses 32, 44, 45, 63 and 101 had been allowed to stand and all of the other clauses had been adopted with the exception of paragraph (k) of clause 2 and clauses 19 and 76 which provide for the expenditure of money and which cannot be adopted until the House has concurred in the required resolution. The last clause adopted was clause 37 and we have now reached clause 44, Mr. Guthrie moves to amend the clause by inserting in line 45 on page 32 of the Bill after the words "in form P" the following words:

—issued under his hand in the English and French languages in every electoral district in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, and in the English language only in other electoral districts.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move to further amend clause 44 by striking out subclause (3) of the said clause and substituting therefor the following:

(3) The returning officer shall at the same time notify in writing each postmaster of the provisions of subsection five of this section.

(4) The returning officer shall, as soon as possible, deliver or send by registered mail ten copies of such notice in form P to each candidate nominated.

(5) Every postmaster shall, forthwith after receipt of such notice in form P, post it up in some conspicuous place within his office to which the public has access and maintain it posted there until the time fixed for polling day has passed, and failure to do so shall be ground for his dismissal from office. For the purposes of this provision such postmaster shall be deemed an election officer and liable as such.

Clauses 44 and 45 as drawn were rather mixed up; some sections of 45 should be in 44, and some in 44 should be in 45. The assistant clerk of the Crown has drawn the sections as they should be. The only important change is that the proclamation setting out the polls should be required to be in English and French in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, a provision similar to that which is contained in the clause which was under discussion yesterday.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 45: Further duty of returning officer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move to amend clause 45 by striking out the word "and" in the fifteenth line of page 33 and by inserting after the words "in voting" in the seventeenth line of the said page the following words:

—and (e) a copy of this Act and of the instructions referred to in section thirty-six.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 32—preparation of lists of voters.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have a number of amendments to propose to this clause. I do not know that they pertain particularly to the first part of the clause and perhaps it would be better for the convenience of the committee if I were to propose them as we went along rather than to give them now.

Mr. FIELDING: I think it might facilitate the progress of business if the minister would state what the amendments are, because some of us may contemplate proposing amendments of a similar character which would then be unnecessary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My amendments are not of a radical nature. They do not change the Act materially, but merely correct clerical errors and computations of time which have not been made to fit in the original draft.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My purpose was to suggest to the Acting Solicitor General to give us any amendments that he has to each subsection as it is read. Then we will have the whole section before us with the proposed amendments.

On subsection (3)—certified copies of voters' lists to be furnished by custodian upon payment of fees.

Mr. POWER: I think perhaps it would be well to make a change in line forty-five of subsection 3. Instead of, as the subsection reads, "to any person," I would suggest to the minister that the wording be, "to any duly authorized person." Otherwise, a certain number of people interested in one trade or another might go to the custodian of the electoral lists and ask for a copy of the lists on payment of a fee. I have no objection to that; my objection is this: There is no reason why the Government should keep, for the convenience of the persons I mentioned, a copy of the number of people on the lists in any particular town or constituency.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend suggests that the words "duly authorized" should be inserted. I do not know what an "authorized" person would be under the Act.

Mr. POWER: He would be a man who needs, for federal purposes, to obtain the lists.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Suppose the lists are required for a referendum?

Mr. POWER: That clause has not yet been passed and as far as I am concerned it will not pass.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not see any objection to anybody who feels interested enough in getting a copy of the voters' lists going and paying the fee and getting those lists; it is sometimes a matter of great convenience to be able to get them. Unless some objection is pointed out, and I do not see any, there is no reason why the change suggested should be made.

Mr. POWER: My objection is simply this: I do not see why the Federal or Provincial Government should pay to have voters' lists in order that any man who wishes to advertise any particular article of trade—it may be hats, coats, or some particular thing; it may be as it is in Ontario, intoxicating liquor—should get these lists. Some people in the province of Quebec get copies of the voters' lists, and send circulars to Ontario people. I do not see why we should pay for that. Therefore I would like the subsection to read that the lists shall be furnished to any "duly authorized man." If a liquor vendor, or any other kind of vendor, wants a list of people in order to circularize them, let him go and get a list of the people himself and not have the Government supply it to him.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If I understand the subsection aright the man who gets the list has to pay for it.

Mr. POWER: He has to pay for it, but I am quite sure the fee he would have to pay would be very small as compared with the cost of making up the list.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is it my hon. friend's idea that such person should not get the list or that the fee should be made larger?

Mr. POWER: My idea is that we should not have such lists at the disposal of people who are not authorized to have them.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The voters' list is more or less a public document, and personally I do not see any objection to making it free and open to anybody who pays the necessary twenty-five cents, or whatever the fee is, for obtaining a copy.

Mr. POWER: I have no objection; I am simply making the statement to the minister, and if he will think it over I am quite sure he will come to the same conclusion as myself.

Mr. BUREAU: There might be a systematic organization to get copies of the voters' lists in order to prevent a man from obtaining a copy who is entitled to do so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There will have to be a certain number of copies prepared, I presume there will not be any more than the number required for the purposes of the election.

Mr. BUREAU: If I make application, for instance, and there is an organization, there might be a certain number of people ahead of me and I might be deprived of my list, although a candidate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That could not interfere with candidates obtaining lists. They have to be provided with lists not later than nomination day. Certain lists have to be used for the purpose of posting up, revision, and the like; they would be the first prepared. If other people want to buy lists, I do not see any objection.

Mr. POWER: Here is another objection. Supposing there has been an election within a short time, and the lists are exhausted, any person may require a list, and on payment of a small fee—the Acting Solicitor General has said 25 cents; we will say $1—he will put the Government to the expense of preparing another list for the whole constituency at a cost of $200 or $300. I do not see why anyone should be given the right to do this; only those duly authorized by law should receive these lists.

Mr. GUTHRIE: You want the word "authorized" inserted?

Mr. POWER: "Duly authorized" would be sufficient for my purposes. There are only two persons duly authorized by this law to receive these lists—the returning officer and the registrar.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is for provincial officials.

Mr. POWER: We are asking the provincial officials to produce lists. First of all, I do not think we have any business to do so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will discuss that again.

Mr. POWER: Secondly, suppose we put this obligation on the provincial authorities, let us put it on them only in so far as we can do so,—not let every one get lists. If you insert "duly authorized" it would mean that only those whose duty it is to receive these lists will get them.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think it would be better if we put in the words "therefor for the purpose of this Act," There are no authorized persons that I know of.

Mr. POWER: I am quite agreeable.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move that we add after the word "applying" in the forty-fifth line the words "therefor for the purpose of this Act."

Amendment agreed to.

On subsection (6)—Power to decide status and population of place.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is another clause, Mr. Chairman, to which I propose to move an amendment and which to some extent affects this clause. It is on the lines suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) a few evenings ago, and it will be to the effect:

That the Chief Electoral Officer shall decide and state at the time of the issue of the election writ what places are and what places are not urban or rural divisions.

It will not conflict, however, with this subsection, in which I do not propose to make any change.

On subsection (8)—Date, etc., when revising officers, etc., sit, to be advertised.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Assistant Clerk of the Crown in Chancery advised that this sub-clause should be amended by adding the following words:

But this subsection shall not apply to the certifying of lists prescribed by rule 16 of schedule A to this section.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the committee desire that the schedule be now read? I may point out to the committee that whether the section is adopted in its present form or not, the schedule, if it is considered separately, can be amended afterwards.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Whichever way the committee finds most convenient is satisfactory to me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Take up the clause first and the schedule afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall clause 32 carry?

Mr. ROSS: I wish to make a few observations in regard to this section, and in doing so I shall apply my remarks largely to the old settled section of the country, the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec, and more particularly Ontario.

This section is an absolute departure from the practice which has prevailed in the preparation of lists in Ontario except as that practice was varied by the War-time Elections Act. It is a decided departure from good and safe principles. It has been recognized in this country for many years that the provincial lists which were in force sixty days before nomination day were the lists used at federal elections. There were some objections taken to these lists being used, because in some cases they were a year or more than a year old and men who were entitled to vote were not on the lists. But there is this to be said: they were prepared by non-partisan men; they were prepared by municipal authorities. Party spirit did not enter into their operation at all. These lists—and this applies also to the preparation of lists in the rural parts of Ontario—were revised by the county judge; no one could say that they were not revised in a fair and upright manner. I do not think that any clause in the Act is more important than this clause, because no matter how broad you make your franchise—and we have made it so broad under our recent laws that it includes every man and every woman twenty-one years of age who is a British subject—no matter how fair you are in the appointment of your returning officers (and I think some improvement could have been made in the Bill in that respect) if your voters' lists are not prepared in a fair and honourable and open manner by non-partisan officials, the very springs of our representative institutions are going to be fouled.

Now, I say that under clause 32 the old principle has been absolutely departed from. In the first place, in the rural parts of Ontario, enumerators—they are called by the more euphonious name of "registrars" in this Bill—are going to be appointed by returning officers who are nominees of this Government or any Government that is in power, which nominees are certain to be partisan officers. The returning officer will be chosen because he is a partisan officer, because he will help the party in power to win the election. I do not say that he is going to do that dishonestly, but I do say that all his sympathies and all his energies will be devoted to doing anything possible within the limits of the law, even with a stretching of the law, sometimes, to see that the party to whom he owes his appointment is returned to power. Under this Bill the returning officer is given the right to name the registrars. As a matter of human nature and as a matter of course, in every riding in this country registrars are going to be appointed who have at heart the interests of the party in power, and who are going to endeavour as far as they can to help advance those interests. As a matter of fact, the registrar is going to become a paid canvasser, I contend, for the Government in power, and his expenses are going to be paid by the people of Canada. I contend that that establishes, so far as the Government are concerned, nothing more or less than practically a large fund that can be improperly used. We heard not so very long ago members on the other side of the House complain about my friends to my left having large campaign funds for the assisting of their candidates at elections. But this provision of the Bill is a far more dangerous provision as a campaign fund to assist the Government than contributions made by individual farmers, as was the case in the constituency of Assiniboia and as may take place in any constituency in which a farmer candidate is running. What does it mean, Mr. Chairman? It means that throughout the Dominion of Canada there will be established under this law—I am making only a rough estimate—about thirty thousand polling subdivisions. Under the Act of 1911, when women had not the vote, there were over thirteen thousand polling subdivisions. Under this Act, with the number of voters doubled and the limit of the number of polls put at 300, I do not think that my estimate of from 25,000 to 30,000 polling subdivisions is out of the way. So we come down to this situation: that the Government starts out in the election with the appointment of 25,000 or 30,000 registrars practically as their agents for the purpose of adding names of voters to the lists. I say again that these men will be paid, under the schedule which is attached to the Act, from $50 to $60 each; they become paid canvassers for the party in power. And that is not all. Under this Act these men are given far more power; they are given a more autocratic power, than they were given under the War-time Elections Act.

For instance, under the old Act, the registrar in the Yukon made changes and added names only on statutory declarations. Under this Bill, the registrar is given power to make changes on the representations of any credible witness. Under the old Act, the War-time Elections Act, bad as it was, in Nova Scotia, if the registrar added or struck off names, there was a right to appeal. Under this Bill, there is no right to appeal whatever as regards the rural parts of a constituency; the registrar has absolute discretion whether a man's name shall be added to the list or not, or whether a man's name shall be struck from the list or not, and it is only known nine or ten days from polling day whether that man's name is on the list or not. There is no opportunity for a man whose name is not on the list to get in his vote except that under clause 63 of the Bill he may get in his vote. But the benefits given by clause 63 in that regard are not by any means as great as the disadvantage that would ensue if clause 63 is allowed to remain as it is.

My first contention is that if we are going to have public faith maintained in our representative institutions, we must start out at the very spring and see what these voters' lists are absolutely fair and that nothing remains in the public mind to make them think that the lists are prepared in a partisan way for the purpose of aiding the Government in power. The preparation of the lists should be done impartially by a judicial authority as it was done in the past, and it should not be left to the mere discretion of a partisan officer.

My second contention is that the expense in connection with the preparation of these lists is going to be very large, and at this time of this country's history when we have to look after every thousand dollars and should look after the millions more particularly and considering the fact that this enumeration will cost in the neighbourhood of a million dollars, we should not encourage any system of preparation of lists which has the disadvantage that I have already pointed out and which has the additional disadvantge of putting a large burden of expense upon this country. I took the trouble of looking into the cost of the enumeration at the last election. In that election we had some 234 constituencies, in thirty-two of which members were elected by acclamation. In the balance of those constituencies contests took place. I find by looking at the Auditor General's Report, that the cost of the enumeration at the election of 1917 was $685,555. If we calculate on that basis the cost of enumeration for the thirty-two constituencies had contests taken place in them, I figure that the cost of enumeration for the 234 constituencies would have been at least $800,000. I have a statement here prepared by the Provincial Auditor of Ontario on behalf of the treasurer of that province from which statement I find that at the last election in Ontario the total expense of enumeration in that province alone was $518,266.77. This is another good and valid reason why the old system should be adopted and we should go back to the preparation of lists by the provincial authorities. If the lists in Ontario cost $518,266.77 for enumeration alone, and you consider Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick as being together equal in population to Ontario, we shall find that the lists in those four provinces will cost at least $1,000,000 for enumeration alone at the next election. But that is not all. If I read the Bill aright and go forward to clause 101 under which lists have to be prepared under the Canada Temperance Act for taking a referendum, and if the lists are prepared by the system which the Acting Solicitor General suggests in this Bill, it is hard to say what expense this country will be put to, because every time a referendum takes place under the Canada Temperance Act, lists will have to be prepared under this Bill and the province which asks for the referendum will not have to pay the expense, but the expense will be borne by the Dominion Government. Therefore, on the ground of expense alone, we should seek some fairer and more economical method of preparing the lists. Affairs in Toronto at the present time are in a condition of flux; but we have before the Ontario Legislature a very fair Bill as regards the preparation of lists. This Bill is in the name of Mr. Drury, and I have no doubt that it will be passed. As an additional argument in support of my contention that we should go back from the system of enumeration to the old system of preparation of lists by local authorities, I need only point out that the Ontario Government, after one experience, has thrown aside the enumeration system and has reverted to the old system. The system adopted in the new Ontario legislation, which I am sure will become the law of Ontario in a few days or a couple of weeks, is simply this, and it will so correspond with our old franchise and will work in so nicely with our Act that I plead with the Acting Solicitor General to adopt it in the preparation of our lists as a matter of fairness and economy. Under the new Ontario legislation, the municipal authorities in preparing the assessment roll, are compelled to put on that assessment roll the name of every man or woman of twenty-one years of age; that roll is then transcribed by the clerk of the municipality and is made into a municipal voters' list for municipal purposes. That list is then subject to revision by the Court of Revision of the municipality, and then it is subject to revision, as in the olden days, as my hon. friend is well aware, by a judge of the county court. In the case of a general election or in the case of a by-election on account of the death or resignation of a member of the Ontario Legislature, under this new provincial legislation, an election board is appointed in each county consisting of officials such as the county judge, and the deputy registrar, five in all. As soon as a dissolution occurs, or a writ is issued on account of a vacancy in the Assembly this board proceeds at once with the municipal lists which have been prepared as I have described, and it prepares the list for the election of members to the legislature. Nothing could be simpler, fairer or more economical as regards this Government, because this will cost them practically nothing the work being all done and paid for by the municipal authorities. The only expense to be incurred would be this, that in the case of a dissolution of this Houe or in the case of the issue of a writ, this Government would have to pay the election board some expenses in connection with the revision of the lists prepared by the municipal authorities. This is a matter which the committee should consider very carefully. The Acting Solicitor General has repeatedly, in the course of this discussion said that he wants these lists to be absolutely fair; that he does not want anything of a partisan nature to enter into this legislation; that he wants, in effect, the people of this country to have confidence in our institutions by knowing that our lists are prepared in a capable, honest and unpartisan fashion. I do not think any amendment can be suggested to this House that will give the public more confidence in this Administration than the suggestion I have made in regard to the preparation of the lists. Without saying more, I will give notice that at some time in the course of the discussion on this Bill, not now unless some other arrangement is made, I shall move an amendment along these lines, though perhaps not in these very words:

That section 32 be amended by the addition of the following subsection, called 32A:

Notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, for the purpose of any Dominion election held within the limits of the province of Ontario, the voters' lists shall, except as hereinafter provided, be those prepared and completed for municipal purposes for the several polling subdivisions under the laws of the province of Ontario, and which were at the date of the issue of the writ for said election under such laws in force for municipal purposes, and all persons named therein as entitled to vote for members of the Legislative Assembly, unless disentitled by the terms of this Act, shall be entitled to vote for members of the House of Commons, provided always that to the said lists there may be added all persons qualified to vote under this Act and there may be subtracted all persons disentitled to vote under this Act, and in revising such lists and making such additions and subtractions, the provisions of the laws of the province of Ontario regulating the revision and bringing into force of the provincial voters' lists in such case shall as far as possible be observed and followed. In such parts of the province of Ontario as are without municipal organization, the voters' lists therefor shall be prepared in accordance with the laws of the province of Ontario in force for the purpose of the election of members to the assembly, but all persons entitled to vote hereunder may be named in said lists and those disentitled to vote shall not be named in said lists.

I trust that the Acting Solicitor General will take the suggestions I have made into his very serious consideration.

Mr. FIELDING: I shall be glad to have the attention of the committee, particularly of the minister in charge of the Bill, while I ask that for a short time consideration be given to the question of the preparation of the voters' lists, from the point of view chiefly of the province of Nova Scotia. I do not rise for the purpose of criticising the Bill or the action of the Government in the matter at all. I am giving my attention entirely to the making of suggestions which I hope may be found so reasonable that the minister can see the propriety of accepting them. At an earlier stage of the discussion of this measure I spoke of the desirability of using the provincial lists as far as possible, and it is along that line that I wish to speak to the committee now. I suppose we can all admit that if the provincial lists are fair and reasonable, it would be well to have them adopted. The preparation of an electoral list is a matter of difficulty, a matter of expense, and a matter of trouble for the men who are interested in politics and sometimes where the political battle wages fiercely, it is a matter of considerable political strife. Now it is not desirable that these troubles and this strife shall be repeated if you can get from the province a fair list as a basis. Why should not that be adopted for Dominion purposes if it is a fair and reasonable list? I do not suppose there would be any dispute on that point.

There is an impression, I have gathered from conversations with some hon. members, and reference has been made to it in the House that the electoral list of Nova Scotia is largely a list based upon property qualifications. I want to point out that that is practically a mistake. There is a property qualification which is taken into consideration in preparing the original list, but it is not a fact that any man in Nova Scotia who ought to be entitled to vote is disqualified for lack of property qualifications. The existing electoral law of Nova Scotia comes so near to the Dominion franchise that even if there were no change to be made in it, there would be no good reason for having separate lists.

I am going to ask the attention of the committee while I give them briefly a little history of the preparation of electoral lists and the creation of the franchise in Nova Scotia. There was a time, very long ago, when there was a property qualification, not a large one, but still a property qualification. Prior to 1863 there had been universal suffrage, what is now called manhood suffrage, but in that year the Government of the day brought in a Bill to adopt a restricted franchise. How that Bill came to be adopted, and what were its consequences on the political history of Nova Scotia, is a very interesting chapter, but does not concern us here. A restricted franchise was adopted in 1863, and that remained the law without any material change until 1885. At that time I had the honour of being Prime Minister of the province, and it fell to my lot and was my privilege to introduce a Bill to widen the franchise by bringing in a very large proportion of the young men of the province. The new Bill proposed that the sons of farmers and sons living with their parents, if their property qualification either as owners or as yearly tenants was sufficient, should be brought in, and under that law the vast majority of the young men of the province were given the franchise in 1885, and that is a long time ago. At a later stage in our history there was added an income franchise, and when that franchise calling for an annual income of $250, I think, was added to the former we had a franchise so near to manhood suffrage that even if we took the provincial lists as they are to-day they would be practically the same as the Dominion lists prepared under this legislation. But there is to-day before the legislature of Nova Scotia a Bill introduced by a member of the Government and supported by the leader of the Opposition, and therefore likely to become law, to make the franchise of Nova Scotia correspond exactly with the Dominion franchise. I have already pointed out that even if there was no change made in the provincial law there would be no material difference, but that there may be no room for difficulty on that score I point out to my hon. friends that this Bill introduced by a member of the Government and supported by the leader of the Opposition is now in process of passing through the legislature of Nova Scotia, and I take it for granted, for the reasons I have mentioned, that it will be enacted. So there will be no difference between the franchise law of the Dominion and the franchise law of Nova Scotia.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are differences in the Bill. I have seen it.

Mr. FIELDING: Material differences?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are differences, but I understand there have been some amendments since I last saw the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING: I read only a newspaper report, and it stated that the object was to bring the Nova Scotia franchise substantially into harmony with the Dominion franchise. I have not had the Bill before me, but I take it for granted, having regard to the object of the legislation, that if there are any material differences, amendments will be made, because I saw it stated by the minister introducing the Bill that the object sought was to conform with the Dominion franchise. Even if it were not so, the franchise law actually existing to-day is so near manhood suffrage that it is not worth while paying much attention to the difference, and I hope the minister will see that there is no reason why we should not adopt the Nova Scotia lists as they stand.

I am not going to move an amendment, but I shall read one which I have drafted, and leave it for the consideration of my hon. friend at a later moment. My object now is only to assist in the discussion of this matter, and to give reasons why I think we ought not to have the two lists. My hon. friend (Mr. Ross) has given figures to show the enormous cost involved in preparing the lists, and I think that must be obvious to all. We will all surely agree that if the provincial lists are fair lists they ought to be adopted. Oot only for the convenience of the public, nor to save expense to the public treasury, but on both these grounds we should guard against having a repetition of the lists.

How are the Nova Scotia lists made up? There is an impression, I find, that there is some partisanship in the making up of the lists. That is not so, as far as I can learn. The lists are prepared by revisers appointed by the municipal councils, and I think it has come to be a very generally understood thing that men of both political parties are appointed to the revising board. The preliminary list is made up and published in all public places, and a day is fixed when those who are interested in the matter can apply to have a name added or a name struck off. On the day appointed they appear, and the lists are revised at that stage. Then there is a final stage; there is a court of appeal in the sheriffs of the province. I have heard it suggested—I will not say argued, because it is no argument—that because the sheriffs are appointed by the Provincial Government, therefore they will be partisans. Let me repeat a suggestion I offered on a previous occasion. This Dominion Franchise Act assigns certain duties to the county judges. They are appointed by the Dominion Government. If I should object to that on the ground that because they are appointed by the Dominion Government they will therefore be partisan, that would be a very foolish argument. It would be no argument at all, nor is it any argument to say that the sheriffs of Nova Scotia because they are appointed by the Provincial Government must be partisan. It so happens that nearly all the sheriffs in Nova Scotia are old and experienced public officials. Most of them are longer in the public service than any judges we have on the bench. There are eighteen sheriffs in Nova Scotia, sixteen of whom have held office for over five years, fifteen have held office for more than ten years, eight have held office for more than twenty years, and in my own constituency, where there are two sheriffs, one has been in office thirty-six years and the other forty-three years. These sheriffs are old and experienced officers, and although they may have had their predilections, as we all have, before appointment, I submit that when men are appointed to public office—and I care not to what side they belong,—in nine cases out of ten they realize a sense of responsibility not to party but to the state in which they are permanent officers. It is therefore but fair to say that men who have held the office of sheriff for all these years I have indicated are just as likely to be just and reasonable and non-partisan as any judge of the Supreme Court or of the County Court of Nova Scotia, or any other province. I think that that is a fair argument, and I can see no answer for it. I urge that the fact that the appeal is to the sheriff of the province should not be regarded for a single moment as an indication that the sheriffs of this country will be partisan in this matter. I for one am confident that they will not be. It so happens that the Government of the province of Nova Scotia for a very long period has been Liberal, and inevitably they have appointed their friends. We do not blame them; we do not blame the Government of the day for appointing their friends to offices. It follows therefore that most of these men I have mentioned are Liberals, although in one case in my own county the sheriff is a Conservative. Whether they are Liberals or Conservatives, however, when such men, being good and worthy citizens, are appointed to responsible offices of this permanent character, they bring to their duties a sense of responsibility and justice and they should not be assumed to be partisans any more than the judges of the country are regarded as partisans because of the fact that at one time before they came to the Bench they had their own political preferences. The question of expense is a considerable one. My hon. friend from Middlesex has dealt with that question and has submitted certain figures. He says that there will not be much expense incurred in Ontario if we adopt this proposal. Well, there will not be a dollar of expense in Nova Scotia if you adopt what I suggest. The lists are always ready; they are revised every year, and you do not want any special lists. You can never have an election there without having a list ready, and if my suggestion were adopted it would not cost the Dominion of Canada one single penny. Why, then, should not lists of that kind be accepted as a finality? Why should lists made up in the way I have described be submitted to any one else in order that they may be added to or subtracted from? I do not discuss the question of motives or party at all in regard to this matter; I am simply stating the case from the point of view of common sense. The motion I am about to read includes the province of New Brunswick, as I am informed by my hon. friend from that province that the situation there is pretty much the same as in Nova Scotia. I will leave them, however, at a later stage to speak on the question from their point of view, but they assure me that the case of New Brunswick is very much like our own. I confine my remarks to Nova Scotia because I am best acquainted with conditions in that province and the suggestion I offer to the minister is that we insert a section 32-A the following:

5 p.m.

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this Act, the lists of voters for the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall be those prepared and completed for the several polling divisions under the laws of the respective provinces for the purposes of provincial elections if they are completed within one year immediately preceding the issue of the writ for such election, and no names shall be added to or subtracted from such lists.

Now, I trust I have given the minister ample reason why he should not ask for any special lists in the province of Nova Scotia. I believe that there is no reason in the world why the lists prepared in the way I have described should not be accepted for Dominion purposes.

Mr. BUTTS: It is only in view of the remarks of my hon. friend that I attempt to speak this afternoon, for I am suffering from hoarseness due to a severe cold.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Will the hon. member please come further to the front? We are anxious to hear what is being said, but we simply cannot.

Mr. BUTTS: Why don't you come up to the front?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is what we did in the old House; we all gathered around.

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. BUTTS: I speak only in view of what has been said by my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) because of all men in this House he is the last who should speak on the franchise. In the year 1882 he became Premier of Nova Scotia. At that time there was on the Statute Book of Nova Scotia a law which provided that no person holding office under the Dominion Government had a right to vote in provincial elections. You were Premier of Nova Scotia for thirteen years, and in 1896 by some freak of fortune, you were taken into the Laurier Cabinet.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out to the hon. member—

Mr. BUTTS: I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman; I perceive my error. My hon. friend was Minister of Finance in the Laurier Cabinet for some time from 1896. Now, a few nights ago when my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Tweedie) was speaking, the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's interrupted to say that he did not believe the statement of my hon. friend to be correct. Had it not been for my hoarseness I would have asked the hon. member to go with me into the library, and if he did not know I would have shown him there that D. C. Fraser, who was member of Parliament for Guysborough and a bosom friend of the hon. member, debated this very question of the franchise against Mr. Black of Cumberland and Mr. Owen, of my hon. friend's own county, when they wanted to amend the franchise law.

In those days, gentlemen of this House will remember—and they can refresh their recollection by a reference to the records to be found in the Parliamentary library—my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's was disfranchising British subjects. To-day he is solicitous about the enfranchising of enemy aliens. Is that not true? Answer me? I wait for an answer. Will you answer?

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. BUTTS: Do not deny it because I will bring the Hansard of Nova Scotia legislature to prove to you that I am right. I ask you for a reply? I ask the hon. gentleman through you, Mr. Chairman, to reply to me, and say whether I am right or wrong. Ah, yes! solicitous for the foreign alien enemy, but not solicitous for the man who was not only a British subject but of British origin. When the Fielding Government came into power in Nova Scotia in 1882, and in that connection my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Davidson) made a mistake the other day—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I must point out to the hon. member that he is out of order.

Mr. BUTTS: I know I am always wrong, but I ask to be granted a little indulgence.

The CHAIRMAN: I call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the question now under discussion is the making of the voters' lists.

Mr. BUTTS: That, Mr. Chairman, is what I am getting at now.

The CHAIRMAN: I hope the hon. member will be good enough to come to the point.

Mr. BUTTS: That is what I am getting at, and I have no doubt in the world that you will recognize that I will come around to it sooner or later. My hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's now seems to be solicitous that every one should have the vote. Would I be out of order if I were to recount, or retell, a little incident that occured in the local legislature between myself and the Premier of Nova Scotia? Perhaps I would not be altogether in order in doing that, but I do not think it would do any harm to tell the story. I and my colleague from Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Douglas) had occasion to complain one time that twenty of our voters —twenty Conservative voters—were struck off the list because there were no Liberal magistrates who would take their oath when they went to swear. You will find all this set fo th in the Hansard of Nova Scotia. I complained about it in the local House. The Hon. George H. Murray, the successor of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's, told me, as to the reason for this, that he knew not why, and I said to him across the floor: "If you know not why, will you give me your promise here this evening that you will appoint two magistrates in Cape Breton county—one to be named by myself and one to be named by Mr. Douglas? He promised me that he would. We submitted those two names but up till to-day neither one of them has ever been appointed, and we could not get a name on the list except by force. Now my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) gets up and swells out his chest and talks about the honour and the honesty of politics. Ah, yes! but when he was in power where was his honesty or integrity?

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I must point out to the hon. member that this committee is not dealing with the honesty and integrity of any member of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

The CHAIRMAN: We are discussing a certain clause, and the rule is clear that the discussion must be strictly relevant to that clause. I do hope that old political sores will not be raked over in the course of this discussion.

An hon. MEMBER: Bravo.

Mr. BUTTS: I know, Mr. Chairman, that you are perfectly right, and you may have noticed that I have always bowed to the decision of the Chair. But let me go one little bit further and, I hope, not in a disorderly manner. Let me say this: That the first election that was run by the Laurier Government after its return to office, took place, if you remember, in 1901.

An hon. MEMBER: No, 1900.

Mr. BUTTS: Very true, 1900. If you make search in the library yonder you will find that the previous year the statutes of Nova Scotia had been revised—and in that revision—one year before the election—entirely to my mind at the suggestion of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's, George Murray, the Premier of Nova Scotia, had dropped from the statutes the Act that disqualified officials that were appointed by the Dominion Government. Now I ask you, gentlemen on both sides of this House, is it possible that sane men are going to take their standards from the member for Shelburne and Queen's? I won't.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I regret that I am not able to agree with all of the statements which have been made by my hon. friend who represents the constituency of Shelburne and Queen's. I do not suppose for a moment that the hon. member intended to mislead the committee, but it really does seem to me that he could hardly have compressed more inaccuracies within the four corners of his speech if he had really set out with that object in view. I think therefore, Mr. Chairman, I will have to ask the committee to bear with me while I go very briefly—if I can—into matters of a somewhat provincial character, in order to show exactly what the conditions in the province of Nova Scotia are as far as the revising of the lists is concerned. I am opposed to the proposition made by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's

(Mr. Fielding) for various reasons. In the first place, the lists in the province of Nova Scotia, are, as he stated, revised by revisers appointed by the municipal councils. But unfortunately, for reasons which I will later explain, in that province the municipal councils are run on strictly party lines. Rural municipal elections—I do not now refer to municipal elections in cities and towns—are quite as partisan as are the Dominion and provincial elections. The result is that in every rural district partisans, or at least very strong party men, are elected to represent the various municipal districts. These men naturally appoint revisers whom they think will prepare lists which will make their re-election easy. I may say, so far as Nova Scotia is concerned, that I think that, with one or two exceptions, the party to which my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) belongs has control of all the municipal councils of the province, which means that they have the appointment of all the revisers.

The councillors who appoint these revisers, as may be expected, are not men of quite the same stamp as members of the Provincial Legislature, and they are not quite as careful in their appointments as members of a larger and more influential body would be. I am speaking now of both Liberals and Conservatives. Consequently the revisers are as a rule intense party men, They are not at all skilled in the construction of statutes, they are just men picked up anywhere, without any particular knowledge of law, without any other qualification than the fact that they are capable supporters of the councillor from their district and may be depended upon to prepare a list favourable to his re-election. Into the hands of these laymen is placed a very complicated piece of legislation. I am not saying that it is designedly ambiguous, but I do say that there is not on the statute books of Nova Scotia a more ambiguous and difficult piece of legislation to construe than is the Franchise Act.

My hon. friend has said that there has been practically manhood suffrage in the province for a number of years. I am obliged to take very decided issue with him on that point. If he refers to the statutes of 1918 he will find two pages are covered in describing the different franchise qualifications. A man may vote: if he owns $150 worth of real estate; if he owns $300 of real estate and personal property combined; if he rents a house or a piece of land worth $150; and there are various other qualifications. If a person owns $150 worth of real estate in the province, whether he is a resident of his district or not, in the past he has been entitled to be registered as a voter. Moreover if a man is assessed for $150 worth of real estate on the municipal assessment roll, whether he is properly assessed or not, whether he owns any property or not, and whether he lives in the province or not, that qualifies him for a vote.

What has been the result of that legislation? It has led to the bedevilment of the assessment rolls. Unscrupulous assessors have in many instances loaded up the municipal assessment rolls with the names of men who are not owners of property, who are not residents in the province, but in many instances reside in the United States. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding), if he will examine the assessment rolls of his own county, will, I am quite sure, find that condition of affairs there. I was unfortunate enough at one time to be connected with a by-election in my hon. friend's constituency, and I remember going very carefully over the lists and finding something like 400 non-resident voters in that county—persons with doubtful or no qualifications whatever, persons who were residing in the United States and who never came to the county except at election time, when they were brought over to deposit their ballots. I say that is a most vicious condition of affairs, and unfortunately that condition exists not only in my hon. friend's constituency but in almost every other constituency in that province.

But while there is no residence qualification in so far as persons who are assessed as property owners are concerned, there is a very rigid residential qualification in so far as persons voting—

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): If my hon. friend will permit me. Does he say there is no residence qualification for voters in the province?

Mr. DAVIDSON: If my hon. friend had possessed his soul in patience a little while longer he would have found his question unnecessary; but I will answer it. I say that so far as persons who are assessed as owners of real estate of the qualifying amount are concerned, no residential qualification is required; but I do say that so far as other persons are concerned, there is a very exacting residential qualification required, and it is this——

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): But my hon. friend is aware that the Dominion Franchise Act requires a man to live in a constituency, and if the oath can be put to him, and he is on the list, that does not affect the question at all, because the law that we are now passing contains a provision whereby that can be checked.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I think my hon. friend misses the point absolutely. The proposition, as I understand it from my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), is that we shall adopt the provincial lists, and that a person who is on the provincial lists shall be eligible to vote on a federal election.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): That is all.

Mr. DAVIDSON: As I said before, if a person does not happen to be assessed for property, if he is obliged to vote on his income qualification, he is surrounded with very strict provisions. Take, for example, the case of a clergyman, of a bank clerk, or of a commercial traveller—men who are changing their residence very frequently; they find under the law of the province that they are debarred from voting. The residential qualification is something like this: A man must be a resident of the county in which he is to vote for one year from the first day of January preceding the day of the revision of the lists. The lists are revised on the fifth of March. If therefore a clergyman moves into my county on the 2nd of January, 1920, he cannot be registered on the 5th March, 1920, because he has not been in the county a year; more than that, he cannot be registered in 1921 because he has not been a resident of the county for a year from the 1st January preceding the date of revision. The list made up in 1921 holds good until the middle of April, 1922. Consequently that clergyman could not vote if an election was held before the middle of April, 1923. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) dwelt very pathetically the other day upon the awful sense of injustice and wrong which would rankle in the heart of the child of a woman who, under the clause that was put through the other night, would, by reason of her alien birth, have to go before a judge to get a certificate in order that she might be enabled to vote. If we were to adopt the proposal of the member for Shelburne and Queen's, what would be the position of the clergyman's child, who, when election day came around, found that all the dishonourable thugs in the community had a vote while he, whose father was a leader in spiritual matters in the community, was debarred? I object to that proposition.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have been told that on the same principle as that which my hon. friend has laid before the committee, a man in Nova Scotia may be required to be twenty-three years of age before he may vote.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A very high authority in this House has demonstrated to me that that is so.

Mr. DUFF: It is not so.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I do not know that he is required to be twenty-three years of age, but I think there are many cases in which he would be required to be twenty-two and a half.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is, perhaps, near enough.

Mr. McKENZIE: The clergyman of which my hon. friend speaks would have sufficient income to enable his name to go on the list, and he would be on the assessment list.

Mr. DAVIDSON: My hon. friend is wrong. He would have the income all right, but according to the law he would have to have more than the income; he would have to have residence qualification. He would have to swear that he had been a resident of the county of which the polling district forms a part for a year from the first day of January preceding the revision. Now, my hon. friend says that he would be on the assessment roll. But under the laws of Nova Scotia a man is exempted from assessment on income up to $1,500.

Mr. McKENZIE: No.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Absolutely.

Mr. McKENZIE: That does not deprive him of his vote. Although he is exempt from taxation, he is qualified to vote.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I have the greatest respect for the legal acumen of my hon. friend, but I am obliged to think that he is absolutely wrong.

Mr. McKENZIE: Not at all.

Mr. DAVIDSON: A man who is exempt from assessment certainly is not assessed, and the law says that a man must be assessed for $250 income before he can vote on that qualification. If he is exempt to the extent of $1,500 in assessment on income, then he must get $1,750 before he can be assessed. Unfortunately in Nova Scotia a great many devout and good men who occupy pulpits do not receive that remuneration, although in almost every case they deserve much more.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is there a special clause in regard to clergymen or ministers, or does the same rule apply to all?

Mr. DAVIDSON: The same rule applies to all; I am just citing the clergymen as an instance. The same applies to a bank manager, to a school teacher, to the hundred and one different occupations engaged in by people who frequently have occasion to change their places of residence. Then, it must be remembered that the list is closed on the tenth day of April and if an election comes say the next February, under the proposal of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) the voter would be voting on lists almost a year old. That would mean that intelligent men, men occupying high positions, who have lived in the district for four years, would be debarred from the right to vote.

Now, my hon. friend said that an appeal to the sheriff makes for a fair list; that a sheriff is just as good a man as a county court judge. I take very decided issue with him there. There is a great difference between a county court judge and a sheriff. For many years the Opposition in Nova Scotia have asked the Government to amend the law so that an appeal would lie to a county court judge. There are seven county court judges in Nova Scotia; four were appointed by the party to which my hon. friend belongs, and three by either the Liberal-Conservative party or the Union Government. The Nova Scotia Government refused point-blank to permit an appeal to the county court judge; they insisted upon an appeal to the sheriff,—who, my hon. friend says, is an absolutely independent, capable officer. My hon. friend will admit that the sheriff is not as well versed in the law as is the county court judge. The minimum salary of a sheriff in Nova Scotia is, I think, $700; you can readily understand that a salary of that kind does not attract the most acute legal minds in the province. An appeal lies from the three laymen revisers to the layman sheriff. The sheriff is in an entirely different position from that of the county court judge. The county court judge has a knowledge of law; the sheriff is usually a man who was acting as constable or something of that kind and, because of his political proclivities, made himself so useful to the party in power that he was appointed to the more remunerative and more honourable position of sheriff. That is the kind of men who were appointed. I admit that the sheriffs in Nova Scotia are of a very much better class than they were when my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) was Premier of that province. But they are far from being men who have judicial minds. They get their inspiration and their advice from the Attorney General of the province. In cases of dispute the sheriffs feel bound to take the advice of the Attorney General,—and right there I want to relate just a little incident which will illustrate my point and give you some insight into the condition of affairs in Nova Scotia.

In 1911, I as prospective candidate for the provincial legislature, took a good deal of interest in the revising of the lists. I organized my county as best I could, and had the interests of my parts fairly represented before the revisers. Following that I fought the thing out before the sheriff of the county; we looked after the technicalities and did the work as well as we could. Under the law the sheriff is obliged to file his list with the county clerk, on the tenth day of April, I think,—anyway, the date is not material. I made a point of being at the municipal clerk's office the day that the sheriff was to file his list. I looked it over and found that apart altogether from appeals, apart altogether from cases which were legally brought before him, the sheriff had, by striking off without cause the names of my friends and putting on the names of political opponents, made a net change in the list to the tune of 193 votes. I called by telephone the Attorney General, who was then the Hon. A. K. Maclean, and explained that this thing was an outrage and that it must be stopped. Mr. Maclean agreed that it must be stopped and finally he promised that he would wire the sheriff to make a correction and to see that this scandal was not carried out.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Will the hon. member state what was the year in which that happened?

Mr. DAVIDSON: In April, 1911. If my hon. friend wants any confirmation of my story, I refer him to the member for Halifax (Hon. A. K. Maclean). Although I have no word from the then Attorney General to substantiate my statement, I believe that he was as good as his word. I did observe afterwards a messenger from the telegraph office deliver a telegram to the sheriff, who was then in the clerk's office. The clerk afterwards informed me that when the sheriff got the message he left the office and went to the office of Hon. O. T. Daniels, then provincial member for the county. After spending a little time with Mr. Daniels the sheriff returned to his office and said: "Mr. Daniels says this thing is all right; I am going to put this list through just as it is."

Mr. Daniels, who was then provincial member for the county and who afterwards became Attorney General for the province of Nova Scotia, is the man who would be the final court of appeal on these federal lists if the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) were agreed to.

Mr. BUTTS: Is this same Mr. O. T. Daniels, Attorney General of Nova Scotia, the man whose picture figured in the Police Gazette in New York?

Mr. DAVIDSON: I am always glad to answer any question of my hon. friend, but perhaps this question is not relevant to the subject under consideration. I can, however, satisfy him outside.

Mr. BUTTS: I am right, am I?

Mr. DAVIDSON: As I said before, I could multiply cases of this character, but I do not think that is necessary. I have dealt so far only with the law as it formerly was. I am now going to deal for a moment or two with the proposition as amended. It is a most extraordinary thing that for years and years the Opposition in the provincial legislature of Nova Scotia has been trying to get the Provincial Government to abolish the fictitious qualifications of the old Act and to adopt manhood suffrage. That was not accomplished until within the last few weeks when a measure was introduced into the provincial legislature, and the hon. member (Mr. Fielding) who is endeavouring to steer this amendment through, seems to know all about the matter. I do not want to be suspicious; but it looks to me almost as though there was a guilty knowledge between these two gentlemen and that the scheme in Nova Scotia was part of the scheme as we have seen it attempted in this House to-day. However that may be, my hon. friend is very much in error in reference to the contents of this Bill and its success in getting through the House. As a matter of fact, the Bill, as introduced into the provincial legislature, is decidedly different in many respects, which I may have occasion to point out later on in this debate, from the Bill which is at present before this House. I am going to point out just one or two striking differences. In the first place, the Bill that we are discussing to-day provides that any person who is a British subject, who is a resident of Canada for one year and a resident of the polling district in which he desires to vote, for two months preceding the election, is qualified to be registered. That is the only qualification. In Nova Scotia, the qualification is very different. The Act as it passed in the provincial legislature requires that the applicant must be a resident of the county of which the polling district forms a part for one year previous to the first day of January last past. Therefore, this is open to exactly the objections I have stated before in reference to the old Act. It is even worse than that, because by the affidavit which the applicant is obliged to take, his residence is confined not only to the county, but to the polling district itself. Let me read the affidavit which it is necessary for a man to make if he wishes to have his name added to the voters' list.

I, solemnly swear:

1. That I am (or he or she is) a British subject by birth or naturalization of the full age of twenty-one years.

2. That I am and have been (or he or she is and has been) a resident of the province of Nova Scotia for at least one year next before the first day of January last and so resided in polling district No. in the county of during said period.

That means that before a man can vote under the Nova Scotia Act as amended, he must actually be a resident of the polling district from one year from the first day of January preceding the date of the revision. That, at one stroke, would practically disqualify, I believe, fully one-quarter of the total electorate of the province of Nova Scotia. That is the kind of a list which my hon. friend suggests that this House should adopt.

My particular reason against this House adopting any municipal or provincial list is this, that I believe it will have a tendency to introduce federal politics into municipal affairs, and that I consider would be an outrage. The criticism is raised and, I fear with too much force, that we residents of Nova Scotia are a bit partisan in our nature. That certainly applies to hon. members opposite from Nova Scotia; I do not know whether it applies to members on this side of the House. It is, to some extent, true that we in Nova Scotia take, perhaps, too extreme political views on public questions. I believe the secret of the whole thing is in the system inaugurated by my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding), which he would try to induce this committee to perpetuate. When my hon. friend became premier of Nova Scotia as a very shrewd and astute politician, he decided that he must have control of the lists. Therefore he went to work to capture every municipal council in Nova Scotia. I do not condemn him for that; I think his action was wise. He said: We must have a list favourable to ourselves and so we must have municipal councils in sympathy with and of the same stripe as the Government. The result was that he introduced a vein of party politics into municipal affairs, and that has been there ever since. That is a curse. When the people of a municipality are called upon to elect a councillor, they should not ask the question whether he be a Unionist or a Liberal; they should inquire only into his personal qualifications. Furthermore, when a municipal council appoints a man to prepare the assessment rolls, it should have no regard whatever for his political proclivities. But if we are going to put the question of revision of the lists for federal purposes into the hands of these men, by that very act we make partisans of them; we introduce the curse of party politics into municipal affairs. I certainly entertain a strong conviction that this House will not consider any proposal such as that.

Mr. LEGER: I should like to say a few words in reference to the electoral list of New Brunswick. I shall certainly ask the Government to adopt this list because I believe, on account of the way in which it is prepared, it is as perfect a list as can be made in the whole Dominion. From what I can understand as regards making up the lists throughout Canada, I believe New Brunswick is, I shall not say ahead of any other province, but equal to any other province. The list is a perfect one because it is acceptable without any complaints from either political party, and if any other hon. member from New Brunswick is present, he will bear me out in that statement. This list is prepared by a very independent board of revisers. This board is composed of one gentleman appointed by the Provincial Government, who is the chairman, and two others who are appointed by the electors of each parish of a county. In this way the councillors when they are elected are revisers. They are the choice of the people from each and every parish. This board of revisers meets in September, I think, of each year and prepares a list of the voters, which is posted up in every public place in the province. A new list is made every year. After making the list, notice is given that the board will sit one month later, before which applicants can be heard as to the adding of names to the list or striking them off. When this has been done by the board in November, the lists are filed with the county secretary, who makes a copy of the lists filed from every parish and every county of the province. He then notifies the sheriffs of the counties who go over the lists with him to see that they are true copies. The sheriff then certifies the list, putting his name on every page. There you have the official list for the county, and on the first of January of each year these lists come into force and are available in case of an election being held throughout the year.

As to qualifications, we have manhood suffrage in New Brunswick. A man twenty-one years of age, whether he owns property or not, has the right to vote. We have also extended the franchise to women on the same basis. I think by the method I have described we get a perfect list. I have handled the lists many times myself, and I have never received a complaint from any candidate or any man belonging to either one party or the other, that the lists were not right. They are as perfect as they can be made, and I would therefore urge the minister to accept these provincial lists as the basis for the Dominion lists. I think every member of this House from the province of New Brunswick, no matter on which side he sits, will admit that the lists are as perfect as they can be made.

Mr. DUFF: I have not taken part in the discussion or any of the clauses of the Franchise Bill, and I would not have done so this afternoon if it had not been for the speeches I have heard to-day from certain hon. members from the province of Nova Scotia. I do not profess to be a politician, but I certainly have some knowledge of the manner in which the provincial lists are made up in the province of Nova Scotia. My hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) smiles. I do not know how much he knows about canned beans, but I do know how the electoral lists are made up in the province of Nova Scotia. I had the honour of being municipal clerk and treasurer for the municipality of Lunenburg for twelve years, during which time I offered to resign on two occasions, but I was presented with a petition signed not only by the Liberal members of the council but also by every Conservative member, asking me to retain the position. While my business affairs would not allow me to devote my whole time and attention to the office, the council, Conservative members as well as Liberals, prevailed on me to stay, and I stayed in that office a number of years longer than I had intended. I had custody of the voters' lists during that time, and was in a position to know how the lists were made up. I had the confidence of both Conservative and Liberal members of the council while I was municipal clerk and treasurer.

The hon. member for Annapolis has told us how the lists are made up in the province of Nova Scotia. In my county we have a number of Conservative assessors and a number of Liberal assessors. We have also a number of Conservative as well as Liberal revisers of the electoral lists, and from my knowledge of the character of these men I would not like to stand up in my place and state, as the hon. member for Annapolis did, that we had unscrupulous assessors and revisers in Nova Scotia I have known Conservative assessors and Conservative revisers to be appointed in my county, and I want to say that they are just as good men as the Liberal assessors and revisers. I think I have some knowledge of every county in Nova Scotia, and I would not dare to say that in any one of those counties there were unscrupulous assessors or revisers. Any hon. member not a resident of the province of Nova Scotia, might think as he listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Annapolis that the municipal councils of Nova Scotia were made up entirely, or practically so, of Liberals. That is not the case. If any hon. member will go to the library of this House and look up the records he will find that about 52 per cent of the municipal councillors in the province of Nova Scotia are Liberals and 48 per cent Conservatives. In the hon. member's own county of Annapolis, in the last twenty-five years there has never been a majority of more than one or two Liberals in that council.

Mr. DAVIDSON: It is quite correct that at the present time the Liberals are in a majority of two, but it is the majority that names the revisers, and the individual councillor has not a chance to name his own officers. The warden in that county is the chairman of the Nova Scotia Highway Board.

Mr. DUFF: I was coming to that. I said a moment ago that in the hon. gentleman's own county there has not been in the last twenty-five years a majority of more than one or two Liberals in that council. The same is true of every other municipality. There are just as many Conservative revisers appointed as Liberal revisers. There are almost as many Conservatives in the council as there are Liberals. In some counties the Liberals have a majority, while in other counties the Conservatives are in the majority. Take my own county, in which there are two municipalities, the municipality of Chester and the municipality of Lunenburg. In the municipality of Chester, until the last election, every councillor elected was a Conservative, and I want to go on record as saying that the revisers of electoral lists and the assessors of the county, appointed by Conservative councillors of Chester, were good citizens; and during twenty-five years that I resided in the county of Lunenburg we never had occasion to go to the sheriff or the deputy sheriff or any one else to complain that any one elector put on the list by the revisers of the electoral lists was not properly put there, nor that any Liberal electors were left off. In the municipality of Chester in twenty-five years neither the Liberal workers nor the candidates made one single complaint, and I say therefore that the way in which the lists were made up was fair. Now, how are the lists made up? The hon. member (Mr. Davidson) with his legal knowledge, endeavoured to show that it was a bad system, but in my poor language I shall try to put the matter before the committee. The municipal councils meet in January and appoint certain officers. This is the case in my county and I think this rule applies in most other counties. Every councillor has the privilege of appointing his own revisers. The hon. member said a moment ago that in his county that was not done. A committee was appointed, and a councillor for one district could appoint a reviser for another district. That may happen in his own county, but I am doubtful.

Mr. DAVIDSON: What does the hon. member say? I did not catch his remarks.

Mr. DUFF: I said I was doubtful.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I desire the hon. gentleman to take that statement back. I can assure him that I have personal knowledge of the matter, and I do not think he has any right to cast aspersion on the veracity of any member of the House.

Mr. DUFF: I will not take back that statement.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I ask that the hon. member withdraw it.

Mr. DUFF: I see no reason to withdraw the statement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Order.

Mr. DUFF: Keep quiet Mr. Solicitor General.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I will not.

Mr. DUFF: We made you keep quiet the other night.

Mr. DAVIDSON: In my county a committee of the council appointed by a majority of the council name the revisers of the lists. The hon. member says that that statement is not correct.

Mr. DUFF: I did not say that at all.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Well the hon. gentleman threw some doubt on my assertion. He said he did not believe it.

Mr. DUFF: My word is as good as that of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Does the hon. gentleman say he did not say that?

The CHAIRMAN: I understood the hon. member to say that that was not what he said. That is why I gave no ruling on the point.

Mr. DUFF: In most counties in the province of Nova Scotia the municipal councillors, whether Conservative or Liberal, appoint the reviser for the electoral district they represent. That is the way in which it is done, and if the hon. member says it is not done that way in his district I am not going to contradict him here; but as I said a moment ago I am doubtful.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I should like to have a ruling on that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think that any hon. member has the right to cast a doubt on the word of any other hon. member. I, therefore, do not think that the expression is quite in order.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman, I simply doubt that the hon. gentleman's information is correct; I do not doubt his word. I have heard something of the way in which the lists are made up in the adjoining county to mine, the county of Annapolis, and I have as much right to express my views in that respect as the hon. member has. In most counties of Nova Scotia the municipal councillors, Conservative or Liberal, have been in the habit of appointing the revisers for their own districts. These men make up the lists and do what they think is right. They put practically every man in the district on the lists. The hon. gentleman has told us about the property qualification and the income qualification, but he certainly knows that in Nova Scotia that is not followed to the strict letter of the law. I know that in my county and several others every man who is entitled to vote votes whether or not—

Mr. DAVIDSON: The Blue Rocks?

Mr. DUFF: You had better not bring up the Blue Rocks or I will show you what the Tories did there, and it is no credit to one of your friends. What about St. Peter's? I was going to say, Mr. Chairman, that although it is quite true that in Nova Scotia the Franchise Act says there must be a property or income qualification, it is a well-known fact that practically every man in the district is placed on the voters' lists by the revisers. The hon. gentleman also told us that clergymen who came to the county could not vote for one or two years.

Mr. COWAN: If these people in Nova Scotia do not live up to the law why do they want us to adopt it?

Mr. DUFF: I cannot catch the hon. gentleman's remark.

Mr. COWAN: Why ask us to adopt a law that you do not live up to?

Mr. DUFF: I do not ask you to adopt anything; you are going to vote for the Solicitor General's Bill.

The CHAIRMAN: I trust that after recess hon. members will confine their remarks to the subject before the committee.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. DUFF: When the committee took recess at six o'clock I was speaking to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), and which had been replied to by the hon. member for Digby and Annapolis (Mr. Davidson). I was endeavouring to answer some of the remarks made by the latter hon. member and was interrupted three times, once by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Cowan)—who asked me a fair question—and on the other two occasions by the hon. member for Digby and Annapolis and the Acting Solicitor General respectively. I was discussing the manner in which the voters' lists were made up for the province of Nova Scotia, and I said whilst it was quite true that either a property qualification or an income qualification was necessary, yet in making up those lists the revisers did not adhere to the strict letter of the law. I do not mean by that that they evaded the law. I mean to say that under the existing law as it stands practically every British subject over twenty-one years of age is entitled to be placed on the voters' list for the simple reason—and I think I am safe in making this statement—that there is not one such man in the province of Nova Scotia who does not possess either of those qualifications. The hon. member for Digby and Annapolis then interrupted me with some remarks about "Blue Rocks." I do not know what the hon. member had reference to, but I wish to say to him that if he wishes to discuss "Blue Rocks," "Black Rocks," or "Back Woods," I am ready to discuss either one of these three matters with him at any time. If the hon. member desires to insinuate anything about "Blue Rocks," or any other place in my riding, let him be man enough to come out and state plainly what he means.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Does the hon. member wish me to explain?

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, it is you, is it?

Mr. DUFF: Yes, I wish the hon. member to explain what he means.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I understand that at the last general election at the Blue Rocks poll, in the county of Lunenburg, there was a great deal of lawlessness and a great deal of confusion. That is what I had reference to.

Mr. DUFF: I am very much obliged for the explanation which the hon. member has given. The conduct of the 1917 election has nothing whatever to do with the matter we are now considering, but in view of what the hon. member has said I think it is only fair to the law-abiding citizens of Blue Rocks to make a short explanation. The hon. member said there was lawlessness at the Blue Rocks poll. Now, if anything of the kind happened at that poll, and I certainly do not admit it, it was caused by an official of the hon. member's own political persuasion—appointed by the returning officer—who was acting as deputy returning officer at that place. What caused the trouble was this: Outside of twelve men, I received every vote that was polled at Blue Rocks, where there are some three hundred voters, and I would have received seventy more votes if the deputy returning officer at Blue Rocks had not deliberately interfered with the conduct at that poll so that those seventy men could not vote before five o'clock. I did not wish to bring this matter up because I have forgiven and forgotten the episode; but if my Conservative friend in the town of Lunenburg who was deputy returning officer at that time finds any fault with what has been said here to-night, the blame rests with his political friend from Digby and Annapolis. Whilst the little altercation was going on between the hon. member (Mr. Davidson and myself, the Acting Solicitor General intervened. I am a compartively new member in the House and for that reason I have carefully watched proceedings so as to ascertain how a new member should comport himself, and during the last three sessions I have observed the course of different members of the Government when introducing legislation, and the manner in which they conducted the proceedings from the time that measures are brought in until they are finally passed. I have watched the Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster), the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell), the Minister of Marine and several other ministers introduce and guide legislation through this House, and I want to say, Sir, that I am surprised at the manner in which the hon. Acting Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie) has treated the measure that we are now considering. This afternoon when I was having an altercation with the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Davidson) the hon. minister deliberately shouted across the Chamber, some fifty feet, about me to the hon. member of Annapolis some unseemly remarks. This is not the first time such an incident has occurred. During the progress of the debate on this measure we on this side of the House, whilst we could not hear what the hon. Acting Solicitor General said, have seen him deliberately turn round and, judging by the expression on his face, make some sneering remark which we on this side could not hear but which was distinctly heard in the galleries. The hon. gentleman ought to have more respect for the dignity of this House and for his position. He ought to watch the proceedings from his place and be ready to answer questions that may be put to him from time to time, and not turn away from the hon. gentlemen speaking on this side.

Before the committee rose at six o'clock I was explaining the manner in which the voters' lists were made up in the province of Nova Scotia, and I said that the municipal councils, which were fairly evenly divided between the two political parties, appointed the revisers of the electoral lists for the various counties. The hon.

member for Digby and Annapolis said that in his county a committee of the council got together and appointed the revisers. Well, I am not going to deny that statement, because under the rules of the House we must accept what an hon. member says. But I think I am making a fair statement when I say that if, for instance, fifteen revisers are appointed by the municipal council of the county of Annapolis, at least 40 or 45 per cent of those revisers will be Conservatives; that is to say, those revisers would not be all Liberals or all Conservatives. That being the condition of things, the hon. gentleman's suggestion that the revisers were all Liberals, and that consequently the list would be affected to the detriment of Conservatives, is not to my mind borne out by the facts.

In a number of counties I know that both Liberal and Conservative revisers are appointed. I am aware that in my own county and in the neighbouring counties not only do Liberal and Conservative councillors not follow strict party lines in making these appointments, but Conservative councillors appoint Liberal revisers and Liberal councillors appoint Conservative revisers. And when we find that the two political parties do not confine the appointments strictly to their own supporters, it may be safely assumed that we are going to have a pretty fair list.

These revisers, as I said, are appointed by the municipal council, they meet on a certain day, and they receive applications for names to be placed on the list. In addition to those applications they examine the assessment roll and place practically every name there on the electoral list. After that work is done there is another safeguard. But before I proceed further I might point out to the committee that the people in Nova Scotia, or in any other part of Canada for that matter, are not as the hon. member for Annapolis charged, unscrupulous. Let us take the oath which these revisers have to swear to before they proceed with their work. It is in this form:

> We, the undersigned revisers for revisal section number.....(or for the town of.....), in the county of.....solemnly swear:
> 1. That we will well and faithfully perform our duties as such revisers without fear, favour or partiality.
>
>
> 4. That we will in all respects, to the best of our ability, comply with the requirements of the Nova Scotia Franchise Act.
> Sworn to by .....and..... at.....

I would not like to get on my feet and say that any man who took that oath would not discharge his duty to the very best of his ability whether he was a Liberal or a Conservative. I am sure he would discharge his duty faithfully and well.

Mr. POWER: Are there Conservatives in Nova Scotia, Mr. Solicitor General?

Mr. DUFF: In addition to these revisers being appointed for every municipal district, there are also what are known as revisal sections. A revisal section is composed of three or five revisers. After the individual reviser makes up the electoral lists this revisal section meets at a certain place on a certain date, and whether the revisal section consists of three or five revisers, as the case may be, those revisers are not all Liberals, nor are they all Conservatives; they are composed of supporters of both parties, sometimes in the proportion of two Liberals to three Conservatives, at other times three Liberals to two Conservatives. Those men meet for a whole day to receive complaints or applications. If any one feels that his name should be placed on the list, or that some other person's name should be taken off, he can go before that revisal board and make complaint, and the board will decide whether or not it is well founded.

These revisal sections afterwards makes up a revised list, and if any one has a complaint to make in regard to that revised list he can appeal to the sheriff of the county. The hon. member for Annapolis said that the Conservative party in Nova Scotia introduced an amendment to the provincial Franchise Act that instead of the complainant going before the sheriff he should go before the county court judge. I have no fault to find with that proposal, but I do say that the records of Nova Scotia will prove that during the last twenty or thirty years very few applications have been made to the sheriffs when they sit on the 5th of April to hear complaints. Now, Sir, if the sheriff was not a fair man, or if the revisers were not fair men and did not make up proper lists it seems to me that we would have had many complaints. In my own county, as I said at the opening of my remarks in one municipality but one at the last election every councillor was a Conservative, and I never heard any of my Liberal friends make a complaint regarding the manner in which the Conservative revisers made up the electoral lists; nor have I ever heard similar complaints from Conservatives regarding the work of the Liberal revisers. So I think we have a fair electoral list in the province, and I am very sorry indeed that any member coming from Nova Scotia should charge either the assessors or the revisers in any part of that province with being unscrupulous in the discharge of their duties. It is quite true that once in a while a reviser for selfish reasons, or for personal spite, may leave a man off the list, or wrongfully put some man on, but I say—and we take our politics very seriously in the province and perhaps adhere more closely to party lines than any other part of the Dominion—but I say without hesitation that I will take the word of my Conservative friends and the word of Conservative people whom I know that the lists are made up as fair as any lists can possibly be prepared.

Now, Sir, with regard to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) I have only to say that if the provincial lists are adopted it will save this country a great deal of money. As I said before recess, I have not been very much interested in this new Franchise Act, for the simple reason—and I do not say it harshly at all—that it does not make much difference in Nova Scotia what kind of electoral law we have at the next election; the Liberals in that province have nothing to fear from any electoral law. But if we can do so we should endeavour to save the large sum which would be involved in the preparation of these lists. Each year from 1908 until 1917 the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery asked the municipal clerk in each county in Nova Scotia to prepare for him a list of municipal voters. The municipal clerk was paid for that service at the rate of one-half cent per name; the list was sent to Ottawa and adopted as the federal list. Now, what will happen if under this law we appoint enumerators? New lists will have to be made, and in very few counties in Nova Scotia will there be less than fifty enumerators; in some counties there will be more. These enumerators will have to make up the voters' lists. They cannot do that work at less than $50 each, which makes at least $2,500 as the cost of the lists in each constituency. As I have indicated, the cost involved in adopting the provincial lists is about $2,500 for each constituency. Now, if we can save $2,450 by using the provincial lists, and if nobody will be hurt thereby, it seems to me that we should do so. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Davidson) has said that many influential men, such as clergymen, were left off the list. Well, if that is the case, and I do not say it is as many Liberal clergymen and school teachers were left off as Conservatives; neither party is hurt. Moreover, assuming the argument of my hon. friend to be correct—and I take issue with him—a clergyman who moves from Lunenburg to Annapolis and finds that his name is not on the Annapolis list may be sure that it is on the Lunenburg list. If certain clergymen, school teachers and so on are not in the county in sufficient time to have had their names placed on the list, their names are usually placed on the list by the reviser, whether he be a Liberal or a Conservative, so that they may have a vote.

Mr. COWAN: But the law has to be broken to do it.

Mr. DUFF: Not broken, exactly—strained a little. Both Conservative revisers and Liberal revisers would want to see that these men got a vote; consequently their names would be put on the list, either by application or otherwise. I repeat, Sir, if we can save a large amount of money by adopting the provincial lists, and if neither party is hurt by the transaction, it is in the interests of this country that we should do so.

Mr. MARTIN: I do not intend to object to what hon. members have said for the different constituencies in Nova Scotia except so far as Halifax is concerned. I wish to take exception to the remarks made on more than one occasion by the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). He praises the provincial lists as highly as he possibly can. But, Sir, he does not know the lists of Nova Scotia; he has lived so long out of the province that it is hard for him to know. I will say this: that in the county of Halifax the list is the best padded list in Canada. I say further, Sir, that is no fault of the reviser, who, to my knowledge, has endeavoured, on more than one occasion to obtain a small grant from the local Government in order that the lists might be thoroughly revised. But they have always turned him down, for reasons best known to themselves. If, then, there is an opportunity to have a fair, honest and above-board list, let us have it.

The CHAIRMAN: Before the discussion goes further on this clause, I feel it my duty to point out to the committee that I am at a loss to understand how electoral matters in Nova Scotia can be discussed on the clause now under consideration. I must remind the committee that while an amendment was suggested this afternoon, there is no amendment before the Chair, and in the absence of any amendment, if the discussion continues along the same line I will be obliged to rule that it is out of order.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I rise to point out that this is not a Nova Scotia question; it is a question that affects other provinces as well. As I understand it, the amendment of the member for Shelburne and Queen's—

The CHAIRMAN: No amendment has been moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: What is before the committee

The CHAIRMAN: Clause 32.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I presume that we are free to discuss the whole clause.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: And incidentally refer to proposals that are made for amending the clause. As I said, this is not a question for Nova Scotia; it applies to any province where there are electoral lists which conform to the requirements of the Dominion franchise, and I would like to see hon. members deal with it on its merits. It is not a new question. The Acting Solicitor General has been pointing out from day to day that certain questions that came up in this franchise legislation were dealt with in the old law. He seems to hold the view that the old law is a very perfect one; that any clause that was in the old law is a pretty good clause and one which merits the consideration of the committee. Now, the principle of using the provincial lists for the purposes of a Dominion election is an old principle; it has prevailed in Canada for twenty years. There is nothing new about it; it has been used for a long time.

Mr. COWAN: When the hon. member says that this principle has prevailed in Canada for twenty years, does he except the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta and the Territories, where the principle was never adopted?

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: If they did not adopt the principle in the western provinces, that was because they did not have regular provincial lists. It would apply to them if they had lists made by municipal councils or the provincial authorities. The principle is one that has existed for a long time in our franchise and it has worked well. No one will deny that it did work well. Did we ever have fairer elections than we had between the time this was introduced in 1897 and the election of 1917? The hon. member for Digby and Annapolis (Mr. Davidson), who found so much fault with this system, was himself elected in 1911 on lists prepared by those very revisers. He is a living example of a member being elected on lists prepared by revisers in Annapolis county. Annapolis for many years was regarded as a Liberal riding. He was elected on lists made up as he says improperly by the revisors of that county.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Excuse me—

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Perhaps I should not use the word "improperly," but that is the inference I drew from the hon. member's statement.

Mr. DAVIDSON:—I said this afternoon that the sheriff made an unjust change of 193 in the lists in 1911. I fought a provincial election a few weeks afterwards, and was defeated by seven, so you can understand that it was the sheriff who defeated me.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I am not acquainted with the circumstances of which the hon. gentleman speaks, but if anything like that happened in the county of Annapolis, I would say to the committee that such an occurrence is very rare in Nova Scotia; I do not think he will find it anywhere else. We pride ourselves in that province on our fairness in matters of this kind. Our people have always been liberal as regards the franchise, and from the earliest history of Nova Scotia that has been the character of our people. Catholic emancipation was adopted in Nova Scotia before it was adopted in Great Britain; Nova Scotia was the first province in the British Dominions which emancipated Roman Catholic citizens and allowed them to vote and qualified them as members. That is one of the chapters of our history that we are proud of, and I am sorry hon. gentlemen in this House should find it necessary to besmirch the province from which they come. I could point out to my hon. friend that, when he says that we are all extreme partisans in Nova Scotia, if he looks back over the history of the province for some years back he will find there are no facts to substantiate that statement. He will find on the contrary that Conservatives have been appointed to high public offices by a Liberal administration. I can give him several examples of that, such an example as the Commissioner of Mines of Nova Scotia who was a leading Conservative but was appointed by a Liberal administration; the Secretary of Agriculture of that province, who still holds that office and who belongs to a well-known Conservative family; the Superintendent of Education, who is also a Conservative and was appointed by my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) when he was Premier of Nova Scotia and who still holds that position; Lieut.-Col. Cantley one of the Provincial Road Commissioners who is a well-known Conservative and was appointed by a Liberal administration. If my hon. friend looks over the list of King's counsel, he will find dozens of them, prominent Conservatives in the province, appointed by a Liberal administration. I do not know whether my hon. friend is one of them or not, but I could point out a large number. I do not want to dwell on this question too much as regards Nova Scotia, because I think my hon. friend, when he reads in Hansard what he has said this afternoon, will be sorry for it himself.

He made one statement which I should like, with the permission of the Chair, to correct. He said that the municipal councils of that province are partisan. I should not like that statement to go on record without being contradicted. I have the honour to represent the county of Antigonish in which the present municipal council is Conservative, and I would have no hesitation in accepting the lists which shall be prepared by that council. I have absolute confidence in their fairness. The statement made by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) was true to my personal knowledge regarding eastern Nova Scotia, that is, that the councillor for the district almost invariably nominates the reviser, and his nomination is accepted by the council. That is the case in the county of Pictou in which I live; it is the case in the county of Antigonish, in the municipality of St. Mary's, in the county of Guysborough. With these four counties I am well acquainted and that is the prevailing practice in them. My hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) tells me that it is the prevailing practice in Cape Breton. Therefore in the eastern part of the province the municipal councillor for the district nominates the reviser, whether he is Liberal or Conservative, and that nomination is accepted by the rest of the council. What could be fairer than that? There is absolutely no complaint. Our franchise is so close to the Dominion franchise that there is very little difference. One might be able to point out some slight differences, but they are very trifling.

There are two principles on which I appeal to the Acting Solicitor General, and I think they are principles which ought to prevail with him. We have abolished patronage in this country. The Prime Minister ran the last election having that plank in his platform, and when the election was over he announced that that was to be the policy of the Government. This is a very important plum in the patronage basket, the appointment of all these registrars. I suppose there are perhaps from fifty to a hundred in each riding. I do not know how many there are in western ridings, but if I am not correct, some one will put me right. If we estimate that there are fifty in each riding throughout the Dominion—and that is not an excessive estimate—if you multiply that by the number of ridings in the Dominion, that means the appointment of over 20,000 men at the time of an election to do the work of enumeration. I put the case on the ground that it is a principle of the present Government to avoid patronage wherever it can be avoided. The Government would avoid patronage by accepting the provincial lists where they conform with the principles of the Dominion franchise. That is one argument that should weigh with the minister.

The question of expense is a very important one. It has also been referred to. In Nova Scotia alone we have sixten ridings, There will be more than fifty registrars in each of those ridings. Let us say, for the sake of argument, that the average will be fifty. If we appoint fifty in each riding and give them a fee of one hundred dollars apiece, which will be the least they can manage the work for, that would mean an expenditure of $5,000. But that is not the whole expense, because typewriting and printing will have to be done, and there will be travelling and various other expenses which will bring the sum up to perhaps $6,000 or $7,000. Then each of the candidates will have to have a staff of men looking after his interests at all the polls in his riding, and we may take the expense of each candidate as at least $1,000. That will bring the expense for each constituency up to at least $8,000, and if you multiply that by sixteen, you get an expenditure of $128,000 for the province. That is a very large sum of money which we can save in one province alone by adopting this proposal. Is not that worth while? What advantage will my hon. friend from Annapolis, or any other hon. member be deprived of that would be equivalent to the expenditure of $128,000 at a time like this when everybody wants to save money? Last night I was asking for a very small sum of money to help build a hospital for sick sailors, and I hope I will get it. I was not asking the Government to assess the taxpayers of this country for the amount required, but to collect it from the ships, but there was hesitation on the part of the Government on the ground that we were spending so much money. Here is a proposal by which we could save $128,000 at each election in one province alone, and no person will be injured by it. I submit, therefore, it should be adopted because, in the first place, it is a fair proposal; secondly, it avoids the exercise of patronage, and thirdly, it is a proposal by which $128,000 can be saved to the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. COWAN: I have learned enough about the introduction of party politics into municipal affairs this afternoon from hon. gentlemen opposite to teach me that I do not want to have anything to do with the system they are advocating. To my mind one of the greatest crimes you could commit in this country would be to do just what hon. gentlemen opposite have told us has already been done in the province of Nova Scotia. I have learned from them and from nobody else that they have adopted provincial lists in that part of the country, and that those provincial lists are made up by municipal officers and revised by them, with the inevitable result that the whole municipal machinery in Nova Scotia is reduced to the ridiculous position of being run on a party basis, for that is what it amounts to. I can quite understand now why the villages and towns and cities of Nova Scotia are so small and unprogressive, because wherever you introduce party politics into municipal affairs you are going to get in the same position as they are in down in Nova Scotia. I do not know what kind of Liberalism we have in this House, but it is a mighty different brand of Liberalism from what we have in Western Canada. If you told the Liberals of the city of Regina that you were going to run the city on a system of party politics, you would be told that you were not going to do it on any account, that the loyalty of the people to their city was far above everything of that kind. The brand of Liberalism we have out there is based on loyalty to our city, loyalty to our country, loyalty to common sense—and there is no common sense in introducing federal party politics into municipal affairs. I have heard some of the strangest things this afternoon from my Liberal friends opposite. Take, for instance, what the hon. member for Lunenburg said. It may be true, he said, that a lot of preachers may be disfranchised under their proposal.

Mr. DUFF: I said, a few.

Mr. COWAN: Say that only one is disfranchised through moving from one constituency to another. He says, what difference does it make, because there will be just as many Liberals disfranchised as Tories? Is that the basis of Liberal enfranchisement, that as long as a certain number of Tories are disfranchised along with a certain number of Grits, it is all right? I thought last week that the whole point they were contending for was that everybody in Canada should have the right to vote, but now, if Tories are disfranchised as well as Liberals, it is all right. Then my hon. friend from Antigonish and Guysborough talks about the expense. He says it will cost an awful lot of money to adopt the minister's proposals. Let us save this money, he says, by adopting the provincial lists. It is all right to save the money, but under that system many of our people would be disfranchised, as has been proven here this afternoon. The fact that under the system which they are advocating a man has to reside in a polling division for one year means that thousands and thousands would be disfranchised; that is bound to be the result. In Regina we have, I think, about one hundred polling divisions, and the same is true of other cities of the same size. About the first of May, about one-fifth of the population in Montreal, Ottawa, and other large cities moves from one polling division to another, and under the system which hon. gentlemen opposite propose every one of these people would be disfranchised. My hon. friend says that his proposal would save $120,000, but I want to lay this down as my principle: the vote of a man is too sacred to be counted in dollars and cents. Hon. gentlemen opposite this afternoon have been valuing the franchise at so many dollars and cents.

I have seen how the system proposed by the Acting Solicitor General here to-night works and I know it is absolutely all right. In the Northwest Territories, where I voted for twenty-odd years, we have exactly the system which the minister now proposes to introduce throughout the Dominion. We had enumerators, and if they failed or refused to put a man's name on the list, that man could go to the polls on election day and insist on being sworn, and then he could vote. If he took a false oath, he could be charged with perjury before the courts. That system has continued out there until the present time, for the Liberal party when they introduced their Franchise Act in 1896 or 1897 exempted the Territories from the operation of that Act, and when the provinces were created they again did the same thing, with the result that this system has continued in Alberta and Saskatchewan up to the present day. I want to say that cleaner or purer elections were never held than under that system. In no elections held in any other part of Canada under any other system have there been as few prosecutions and protests, nor as few complaints, because every man had the right on election day to go to the polls and demand to vote, and he got his vote and was satisfied. If that is what history proves, and it is, why should we not adopt that system for the whole of Canada and give equal satisfaction to the people throughout the whole Dominion? I shall certainly support the proposal of the Acting Solicitor General.

Mr. McKENZIE: I hope we will all be good now, after the speech of my hon. friend.

Mr. COWAN: You should be.

Mr. McKENZIE: This lecturing comes with great force from my hon. friend. I thought he was a Unionist in Regina, but here he is a Tory.

Mr. COWAN: Tory in politics and Christian in religion.

Mr. McKENZIE: He is putting in full time on his Toryism, but I am afraid that on the other side, if his little boy was asked if his father was a Christian he would have to reply: Yes, but he is not doing much at it now. That is the mongrel Christianity of my hon. friend.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am not speaking of the hon. gentlemen himself, but of his style of Christianity—"By their fruits ye shall know them." In spite of my many weaknesses I am perhaps just as strong a believer in the Christian faith as anybody on the other side, but when Christianity does not show any fruit I do not mind calling it mongrel, because it is mixed up with so much dross that it is hard to find the real thing.

If my hon. friend from Regina is perfectly satisfied with the manner of making up the lists in Regina, there is nobody on this side of the House who has suggested for a moment that we should take away from him and the people out West the system they now have. If they are satisfied with that system, let them enjoy it to their hearts' content. My hon. friend must not forget that Nova Scotia was a flourishing province with splendid institutions, both municipal and parliamentary, while the bear and the prairie rabbit occupied the city of which he is so proud, and if we are anxious to hold on to these splendid institutions that we had long ago, while the bear and prairie rabbit were carrying on their municipal business as they thought best in and around the city of Regina, I think we have a perfect right to do so—just as good a right as my hon. friend has to hold on to the system that has proved satisfactory to him and his people. I do not mention the bear and the prairie rabbit with any idea of reflecting on the city of Regina, but I am simply pointing out that the people of the province of Nova Scotia with its splendid institutions are not going to be lectured by people who have not yet attained proper municipal institutions and proper methods of making up the voters' lists.

This is by no means a new question. Since Confederation we have held in Canada some thirteen or fourteen general elections. If my memory serves me well I think we have had thirteen. Ten of those elections were conducted under the system of franchise which we are advocating in regard to the making of lists, and only three were held under the system of registration or revising barristers as the case may be. When the Dominion of Canada came into being as such Sir John Macdonald, who I suppose had most to do with the drafting of the British North America Act, put into that Act the provision that until a franchise was prepared by the Dominion Parliament, the local lists in each province should be used. That arrangement continued absolutely satisfactory, as far as I know, to both Liberals and Conservatives down to the year 1885, when the Revising Barristers Act was put through this Parliament after a very strenuous fight and the crossing of swords by such gladiators as Sir John Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper, Hon. Edward Blake, Sir Richard Cartwright, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and other men of that calibre who debated the question at that time. That franchise came into force in 1885 and the first election that was held under it took place in 1887. That was the first election conducted in Canada on anything but the provincial franchise. The election of 1887, the election of 1891, and the election of 1896 were conducted with lists prepared by revising barristers. Before the election of 1896 Sir John Thompson, who was then Prime Minister of Canada, introduced a Bill for the purpose of readjusting the franchise, and from what we can gather from his speech on that occasion, it is clear that he intended to repeal the Revising Barristers Act and revert to the law as it stood before. In his speech on June 14, 1894, in the House of Commons, when introducing the Bill Sir John Thompson said, as reported in Hansard, at page 4301 of that year:

> The change is also proposed in this Bill which I indicated a few days ago, that the questions upon which so much difference has arisen in the past as to the basis of the franchise, shall be adjusted by adopting the franchises of the several provinces. . . . . The number of differences which exist between the provincial franchises and the Dominion franchise as established by our own Act, are so few as not to be worth the contest and the expense which are involved in keeping them up, and the adoption of a general system, which will apply both to the local and Dominion Legislatures, has recommendations as regards simplicity and facilities for economy which cannot exist under a dual system such as we have been keeping up for the past few years.

Now what we are looking for in regard to the franchise, so eminent a man, so great a jurist and so able a statesman as Sir John Thompson recommended. Among his last utterances in this Parliament he said he intended to go back to the old system of provincial lists in order to avoid the expense and trouble of keeping up a dual system. He made that speech in 1894, and for some reason or other the Bill, although introduced, did not go through the House; but he made the promise that it would be introduced at the next session of Parliament. Unfortunately however Sir John did not return to the House. He died, but he leaves on Hansard clear evidences that he was tired of the revising barristers and of all the trouble and expense connected with the Revising Barristers Act. He wanted us to enjoy the simplicity of one list and one franchise throughout Canada. That idea was carried out when the 9 p.m. Liberals came into power in 1896. Two years after, a Bill passed the House carrying out what Sir John Thompson had had in mind, repealing the Revising Barristers Act and bringing into effect the old system as we had it before that Act was passed in 1885. I was not in the House at the time—I presume there are some hon. gentlemen here who were members of Parliament then—but I imagine that hon. members will search Hansard reports of that day in vain to find one single objection having been raised against the Act of 1898 which abolished the conditions that existed under the Revising Barristers Act. Every one was perfectly satisfied to go back to the old conditions.

The system that was resumed then worked very well until we got the War-time Elections Act of 1917. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House are quite familiar with that Act and they know what criticisms have been showered upon it. I need not say anything about it, for I could not begin to paint it in the lurid language in which it was described by hon. gentlemen who since that time have become members of the Government. Indeed, nothing that I could say would as adequately characterize that legislation as it was described at the time of its enactment by hon. gentlemen who are now supporting the Union Government. So far as I am personally concerned, I am not advocating anything new in urging the preparation of lists locally. Speaking in this House in February, 1919, when I had the honour for the time being of leading the Opposition, and when it was hinted in the speech from the Throne that a franchise Act would be brought down, I had occasion to review the question of the franchise and the express desirability of having a simple system by which every one would get his name on the list; and after describing the way in which we make our lists in Nova Scotia I said, as appears at page 25 of Hansard of 1919, first session:

> Now, if the Government is not satisfied with the work of these boards, if it thinks that the appointment of these boards to revise the lists is too much in the hands of one party, whichever party may be in power, I would suggest that a mixed board be chosen composed of members representing equally the Dominion and local authorities, and let that board compile the voters' list and avoid the duplication of which I have complained.

I think that is perfectly clear and consistent. I said to the Government of that day —which is also the Government of to-day —If you think our revising boards are partisans, place legislation on the statute books by which, by arrangement, the local government should have the appointment of one-half of each board and you appoint the other half. Then that board which is composed of one-half Liberals, if you please, and of one-half Conservatives will deal with the lists, and they certainly ought to give us a fair revision. That was the position I have always taken; that is the position I take to-day. Last year when the By-elections Act was being put through, certain members of the Administration made a proposition to me as to what was going to happen when we came to deal with the new Franchise Act. The idea was that we should put through the By-elections Act with as little trouble as possible, knowing that it was only a temporary measure, and that soon we would come to deal with the fairer and general lists. Now, one of the propositions that two representatives of the Government at that time passed over to me was the following:

> The adoption of existing permanent lists, if any exist, in the respective provinces to which the women's names have been added. This probably applies to Nova Scotia and British Columbia.

That was one of the proposals made to me at that time. Here is another proposition to which I particularly wish to call the attention of the Acting Solicitor General, because it came from two members of the Government to which he belongs.

> Wherever officials, either municipal or provincial, now exist, whose duty it is to prepare provincial voters' lists, these officials should be appointed enumerators for the purpose of making the necessary additions.

That was another proposition which came to me from the Government a little over a year ago, and it would be absolutely fair and would be satisfactory. If in Nova Scotia there must be enumerators to prepare new lists that proposition should be adopted. If it is adopted I have no great fault to find, because these enumerators in my province are appointed by the direct representatives of the people who, at the end of their three years' term of office, must go to the different districts which they represent and account for their stewardship as councillors. If the minister will adopt those boards, adding a member to them of his own choosing if he likes, then he will be carrying out the proposition that was made to me in good faith by the present Government. Surely if there is any consistency at all about the Government, if there is any continuity at all in their ideas, they will be satisfied to carry out the scheme which they submitted to me and which I accepted in good faith. At that time we practically, as the minister must remember, gave no opposition at all to the By-elections Act which was simply a temporary measure, and was not to have any long life in this country being merely intended for the period between the time of its passage and the time with which we are now dealing. I cannot too strongly impress upon the minister the desirability of carrying out the proposition which the Government made themselves. I did not go after them for it; I had no power to compel them to give me any undertaking; it was given to me by members of the Cabinet and I have every reason to believe that the two ministers who did so had full power to act as they did. Now why should the Government go back upon their solemn pledge, an undertaking sent to me upon that occasion? I would think, Sir, that I am on strong ground when I say to the minister that this proposition should be carried out; and that wherever he goes in any of the provinces and finds existing machinery for the purpose of making a list, if he must have enumerators, he will accept those men who have acted in the past, among whom he may find Conservatives as well as Liberals. Then people will say they have been treated fairly and no fault will be found with any such system.

I heard a vigorous attack made upon the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Butts). I am very sorry he thought it necessary to make any such attack upon the venerable and much beloved member from Shelburne and Queen's. Does the hon. member (Mr. Butts) not recall the fact that for the fourteen years the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's was the able and honoured Premier of the province of Nova Scotia he did not have a more enthusiastic supporter during the whole of that period than my hon. friend (Mr. Butts)?—and if anything was done by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's while he was Premier of Nova Scotia which could be criticised he had the faithful support of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Butts), who never for one moment questioned anything that was done by the then Premier of the province. Now I think the hon. member should have explained that he had taken a trip to Damascus and seen a great light, and so wishes to forget those fourteen or twenty years during which he stood so faithfully and strongly behind the then Premier of Nova Scotia. I am not going to say anything further on the subject except that I hold my hon. friend (Mr. Butts) responsible for the doings of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's during the years that the latter was Prime Minister of Nova Scotia because he supported him in his every action.

There has been a great deal of talk to the effect that we are not entitled to have the privilege of preparing those lists because for ninety years we were taking certain officials off the lists in Nova Scotia. That is a matter which dates back earlier than the administration of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's, and since nobody seems to have given light on that point I will touch upon it very briefly, because we are told that because of the facts of history and of the partiality that is alleged to have been displayed in the past we in the province of Nova Scotia should not be given the power to prepare our own lists. It is well known that Nova Scotia was forced into Confederation absolutely against her will. In 1867 there was a general election in the province of Nova Scotia, and out of a Dominion representation of eighteen or twenty members one solitary man, the late Sir Charles Tupper, was returned to this House on the Confederation issue. In the local legislature only two men were returned on that issue, their names being Blanchard and Pineo, and the names of these three men will go down in history. That was the feeling of Nova Scotia in 1867 against Confederation into which the province was forced without the people being consulted. There was such a furore against anything from Ottawa that the Government of that day passed an Act that officials of the Departments of Customs and Railways—those were the only two departments selected, why I do not know—should not be allowed to vote. Of course, that law did not apply to the Dominion franchise. It was allowed to remain on the statute book for years, and the Tory party when in power in 1872 and again in 1882 did not attempt to repeal it. I am proud to be able to say that in 1900 I had the honour of introducing into the legislature of Nova Scotia, for the first time as far as I know, the Bill that repealed this disability. That Bill passed the Legislative Assembly but was defeated in the Council, but later it was re-introduced and passed both Houses. To cast this up to the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) is absurd, for he had nothing whatever to do with that disability. He was not in politics until many years after that Act was put on the statute books.

I have only to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that the exercise of the local franchise for fifty-three years with only one single solitary case of irregularity is a fairly good record. We have 18 counties in the province and several cities and incorporated towns, but the only single report of anything irregular in those fifty-three years is the case that comes to us from the county of Annapolis. I venture to tell my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Davidson) that if he had made complaint to the Premier of Nova Scotia an investigation would have been ordered at once, and the sheriff he speaks of would have been removed if found to have been remiss in his duty.

The extreme partisanship that has been referred to does not exist in Nova Scotia. For fourteen years I was a member of the municipal council of my town; five of those years I was mayor; and all through the fourteen years, although we had a strong Liberal majority in the council, we had three good Tory revisers. Does not that prove to my good friend from Regina that we are not the outlaws he thinks we are, refusing to give any one an appointment unless he pronounces the shibboleth of Liberalism or something akin to it?

With the exception of the interval between 1887 and 1898, for over forty years we have had in Nova Scotia an absolutely local franchise, and nothing can be brought against its administration except one single questionable case. I think that that record justifies us in asking that we be left with a system in which we have absolute confidence. If any other province wants different lists, well and good; we do not want to interfere. All we want is to retain what we were promised by the memorandum that was handed to me and what we are accustomed to. I hope no such mistake will be made as to tear apart every list we have and commence a new list which cannot by any possibility be satisfactory, under a system with which we are not acquainted and for the preparation of which there will not be sufficient time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. McKENZIE: I will gratify my hon. friend in a few minutes. But if any hon. gentleman thinks that we are so kaiserized in this House that it is an offence for me to make these remarks let me assure him that I do not propose to be deprived of the liberty of speaking for my people because some hon. gentleman who has had his mind made up for him shouts "carried." That gentleman will have to settle with the hon.

member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham), who has told us that some hon. members have no minds to make up because everything is settled for them. I shall cling tenaciously to our British parliamentary procedure and put my case before the House. If hon. gentlemen on the other side do not agree with me, that is their privilege under constitutional majority rule; but let me assure them that as there was of old an appeal to Caesar, so there will be an appeal to Caesar in this case.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I have heard for the first time from my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) that some solemn pledge and undertaking was given to him by some members of this Government prior to the passage of the By-Elections Act one or two sessions ago.

Mr. McKENZIE: I have the original document here which I can pass over to my hon. friend.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would like very much to see the document. I must inform the committee that up till the moment my hon. friend spoke I was in entire ignorance of the existence of such a document.

The document has now been handed to me by my hon. friend. It is headed, as I assumed it would be:

> Proposals for the Creation of a Franchise Act for the Purpose of holding By-elections until after the next Session of Parliament.

It does not appear to be dated, but I have no doubt that it was prior to the passage of the By-elections Act. The committee will pardon me if I read it; it is all new to me:

> 1. The proposed legislation is contingent upon a public announcement by the Prime Minister to the House of Commons that he will not advise His Excellency the Governor General to dissolve Parliament until after another session has been held.
>
> 2. Complete demobilization under the War-times Election Act shall be in effect on August 1st, 1919, and the Election Law as it stood prior to the War-times Election Act then to be brought into force with such amendments as may be absolutely necessary to meet changed conditions, including:—
>
> (a) The creation of machinery by which the names of women qualified to vote can be placed upon lists where none such now exist, e.g., New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario.
>
> (b) The adoption of existing permanent lists, if any exist, in the respective provinces to which the women's names have been added. This probably applies to Nova Scotia and British Columbia.
>
> (c) The creation of machinery whereby lists can be created so that an election could be held within thirty days in any province where lists are not now complete, the most outstanding example being the province of Ontario, where no lists exist, as a new law was passed in 1917, and no lists so far have been prepared under the law.
>
> (d) Where it is necessary either to make new lists or to add to the existing lists, that the principles of the local law of the province of Saskatchewan be adopted, which generally are as follows:—
>
> Personal registration in cities and incorporated towns with a right of appeal to the County Court or District Judge and enumeration in rural committees, with the right to any person to swear in his or her vote on election day, in case the name has been omitted from the list made up by the enumerators, no ballots to be tied up.
>
> (e) Wherever officials, either municipal or provincial, now exist whose duty it is to prepare provincial voters' lists these officials should be appointed enumerators for the purpose of making the necessary additions.
>
> (f) No person of foreign birth, male or female, to have the franchise unless personally naturalized.
>
> (g) A Public Prosecutor to be appointed in each constituency whose duty it will be to prosecute all persons who falsely swear their names upon a list or swear in a vote.
>
> (h) This Act to continue for the purpose of by-elections until March 1st, 1920, unless previously superseded by a general franchise Act.

Mr. COWAN: What is wrong with that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, I take it from the heading that it was a proposal; for it is headed "Proposals for the Creation of a Franchise Act for the purpose of holding By-elections until after the next session of Parliament."

Mr. McKENZIE: And to be continued into the new Act. That is not written there, but that is the intent of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McKENZIE: Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but I am not afraid of their laughter. That was the statement that was given to me by two ministers. It would be quite like them not to stand by it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The first observation I have to make is that my hon. friend refers to this as a solemn pledge and undertaking by the Government which he accepted. Well, I think there must be some misunderstanding on the part of my hon. friend if he accepted that proposal, which distinctly says, in paragraph (f):

> No person of foreign birth, male or female, to have the franchise unless personally naturalized.

If my hon. friend accepted that proposal, I cannot understand the speech he made a night or two ago. I think I am right when I say that this was really a proposal; it was to be the basis of a discussion between the Government and my hon. friend, who was then the leader of the Opposition. But it could not in any sense of the word be regarded as a solemn pledge and undertaking which he accepted; otherwise he would never have made the speech he did the other night upon the question of the naturalization of aliens.

Mr. McKENZIE: If the minister will permit me, he may think that clever—

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I do not think it clever.

Mr. McKENZIE: The speech I made in reference to the By-election Act was quoted here the night before last. If my hon. friend will do me the honour of reading the quotation he will see that I said: For the present we will accept this, holding to ourselves absolutely the right to criticize any franchise proposals that may be brought down; preserving all our rights intact. My speech was quoted the other night by the member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) and my hon. friend can see it at any time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That may be all right. The point I make is that the document I have now read must, from its very nature, have been a proposal in regard to the By-elections Act and not in regard to the general Elections Act. If this is a solemn pledge and undertaking by the Government which he accepted—that is his own language—as the basis of a general election Act or as a basis of the present Act, then my hon. friend accepted an agreement in regard to the franchise for aliens entirely contrary to the opinions which he expressed in this House two or three nights ago. I think I am right in assuming that this document which I have just read referred only to the By-elections Act, and formed only what it says it is, "proposals" as to what legislation should be enacted in respect to by-elections. Now, I want to have a chance to confer with my colleagues in regard to the matter. I may be wrong, but from the circumstances and from the language of the document I think I am right in assuming that it was purely and simply a basis of discussion for the then proposed By-election Act and had nothing to do with the permanent Act. But if I find, after discussing the matter with my colleagues, that I am wrong, I shall be quite glad to say so.

My hon. friend also, during the course of his remarks, in discussing the merits of the Voters' Act of Nova Scotia, referred to a statement made in this House in 1894 by the late Sir John Thompson, when he expressed the opinion that the franchises in existence in the various provinces had become so nearly alike that there was not much object in maintaining distinctions as between federal and provincial franchises. Sir John Thompson certainly did make that statement. But he made another statement immediately afterwards which my hon. friend failed to read. Sir John Thompson said we could not continue any distinctions in regard to franchises, but he said also—this is on the same page of Hansard:

> The great principle which underlay the Franchise Act of 1885 was the control by this Parliament over matters connected with the franchise. . . . We adhere to the principle that this House and the electors who return members to this House ought not to be under the control as regards the exercise of their franchise of the officers of any other Government or Legislature whatever in the country.

That is the point that we are trying to maintain in the present Bill. My hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) discussed the question of provincial franchise and provincial voters' lists this afternoon and offered a suggestion which he said he would later in the proceedings move as an amendment. His object in stating the purport of the amendment at this time was that the Government might have an opportunity of considering it before coming to a conclusion. The suggested amendment was long and somewhat involved, and I would like to have an opportunity of giving it careful study before pronouncing upon it. But as I understand from my hon. friend's reading of it, it involves our accepting in Ontario as final and complete the provincial voters' lists of that province provided they are not more than a year old and that any names which might be added to those lists or taken from them should be so added to or taken from them by a board appointed by the Ontario Government for that purpose. That system is not very different from the system laid down in clause 32 of the Bill. Clause 32 provides that provincial lists shall be accepted, shall be the lists, where they are not more than twelve months old. If the provincial lists in Ontario are more than twelve months old, we must have new lists. The Ontario franchise and the Dominion franchise are not exactly alike; there are differences. I was very familiar with these differences a short time ago, but I have had so many franchise Acts in my head lately, that I cannot express a positive opinion at the present time as regards the provincial Act. There were differences between the last provincial Franchise Act and the present proposals of the Government. The differences were not radical, it is true. There were differences in the requirement as to residence and matters of that kind; there were differences, I think, as regards the disqualification of Indians; there was a difference as regards the disqualification of officials. Then the Ontario Voters' List Act which is now in force differs radically from this proposal. There is a proposal before the Ontario legislature at the present time, but I do not know whether it will be carried in the form in which it was introduced or not. I know that in the preparation of that Bill the Ontario Government had the advantage of reading the proposed Dominion Bill and in many instances followed our clauses, but in many other cases they did not follow our clauses. The only practical difference as regards lists between what the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Ross) proposes and what this Bill proposes is this, that provided the Ontario list is not more than twelve months old, under clause 32 of the present Bill names may be added to the list or struck from the list by a court designated by this Parliament, whereas under the provincial law this is done by a board composed of the county judge and some other individuals. I am not sure, for the moment, who compose the board, and I see the hon. member (Mr. Ross) who has a copy of the Bill, is not in his seat. As I have no copy of the Bill, I would like a little more time to consider that matter further. But the difference between the two proposals is not very great.

Mr. McCOIG: Provided that the Ontario lists have been revised in certain counties and not in others, would the lists be used in a Dominion election in counties in which the lists had been revised and would they not be used in counties in which the lists had not been revised?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Clause 32 reads:

> For the purposes of any Dominion election held within the limits of a province the voters' lists shall, except as hereinafter provided, be those prepared and completed for the several polling divisions, under the laws of that province, within one year immediately preceding the issue of the writ for such election.

Yes, I think they would.

Mr. BUREAU: Is there any special reason for making the lists revised within one year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: So many changes take place after a list is one year old that it cannot be relied on; it is considered old or stale, and that is the object of having a one-year limitation. In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. McCoig), I may say that in any riding in Ontario where there is a list which can be legally used for any election in Ontario and which is not more than one year old from the date of revision to the date of the issue of the writ, under this Bill that list will be the list for the Dominion election, and if names are omitted from it which should be added or if names should be stricken from it, the machinery is provided by this clause whereby that end may be attained. The question is—shall that end be attained by the machinery provided by clause 32, or shall it be attained by the procedure provided by the proposal of the Ontario Legislature when that proposal becomes law? It is important, as Sir John Thompson pointed out in 1894, that the House recognize the principle that it should control the individuals who have charge of the revision and completion of these lists. Apart from that single distinction, there is not very much in the proposal of the hon. member (Mr. Ross) which does not appear in clause 32 at the present moment. If we take the case where there is no provincial list that is not more than twelve months old, what does the hon. member propose to do in that case? If our provincial voters' lists are more than a year old, they cannot be used. I assume if such a thing should happen—and it has happened in Ontario—we would then be driven back to the provisions of clause 32 in its entirety.

Just a word now as regards the suggestion of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) regarding the provincial voters' lists of Nova Scotia. There is perhaps greater objection on his side of the House to the proposal to accept as final and complete the lists of the province of Nova Scotia in regard to the lists of the province of Ontario. Rightly or wrongly, I gather only from what I hear from others, there exists on this side of the House a feeling amongst hon. gentlemen who represent constituents in Nova Scotia, that the lists of that province are not as absolutely fair as my hon. friends from that province who sit opposite to me would have the committee believe. This may be a difference of opinion only; but certainly there is a deep-rooted feeling amongst hon. members on this side of the House from Nova Scotia that the provincial lists are not fair to them and are generally unsatisfactory. I state that because it is a feeling that exists and that must be recognized. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) goes further than my hon. friend (Mr. Ross); he says that the Government should accept an amendment which would provide that the lists, as finally revised in Nova Scotia by the provincial authorities, shall be final; in other words, that the Government, in passing its own Franchise Act, its own election law, should be bound by lists prepared by officials of another government, at the present moment not on altogether friendly terms towards this Government. The main objection that has been urged upon me by hon. members with whom I have discussed the question is this, that at the present moment the only valid Voters' List Act in Nova Scotia is one involving a property qualification. There is at the present moment before the legislature of Nova Scotia a proposal to make their franchise generally upon the basis of the proposed Dominion franchise. Whether that Bill will be passed or not and in what form it will be passed, I cannot offer a prediction; but in a copy of the Bill which I had the privilege of reading, I found some distinctions as regards residence, and some as regards other matters which have escaped my mind. But it is purely problematical what the Bill will actually be when it becomes law. The present Voters' List Act of Nova Scotia would not agree with ours at all. The requirements are entirely different. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) minimizes the property requirements under the present law in Nova Scotia but they are there, and they apply to man and to woman. That would not meet our Franchise Act in any respect. When the Act now pending before the legislature becomes law one might be able to form some opinion as to whether they meet us upon common ground in regard to the franchise; perhaps not identically the same ground, but approximately the same ground. We might then discuss whether or not we could to some extent or to any extent adopt the provincial lists in Nova Scotia. For my own part—I cannot speak for my colleagues because I have not had an opportunity of discussing this proposal with them—I would hesitate to adopt those lists as final and complete, and I will give the reasons that strike me. The appeal in the province of Nova Scotia is to the sheriff. Except in Scotland, I never heard of an appeal to the sheriff, and in Scotland the sheriff is a judicial officer. Why the appeal to the sheriff in Nova Scotia, I do not know.

Mr. McKENZIE: Because we have eighteen counties in Nova Scotia and only seventeen county court judges. It was the only alternative. An appeal to the judges would not have met the convenience of the people.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That may be the reason, but it does not strike me as a very good one. Sheriffs in the province of Ontario as far as I know, are not lawyers. I do not know a single sheriff in the province that ever was a lawyer, and I think from what my hon. friend (Mr. Davidson) has said, that it is so in Nova Scotia. I do not know whether they have any qualifications to decide a legal point, and certainly legal judgment is necessary in deciding these appeals. I have been told that time and again it has been urged on the Government of Nova Scotia to allow the appeals to be decided by the county court judges, and time and again that request has been refused. I think it is an objection to the system that the final decision rests with the sheriff.

But there is a far greater objection than that. In Ontario the sheriff is an officer accountable to the Attorney General's department and when the sheriff in Ontario wants advice he communicates with the Attorney General's department. I fancy the same system is in vogue in Nova Scotia. If a sheriff hearing an appeal is in doubt, he calls up the Attorney General. Now the Attorney General is certainly a very much interested individual, and if his voice is to govern, I think it might be termed a partisan voice. I think—this is only my own judgment—that that system is defective, and I would not be disposed to ask the Government to accept a proposal of that kind unless better machinery for the hearing of these appeals was provided for. That would appeal to me to be reasonable, and I trust it strikes the committee as reasonable too.

The only difference, then, between the Bill as drawn and the suggestion of my hon. friend this afternoon is this: The Bill as drawn says that in the province of Nova Scotia we shall accept the provincial lists if they are not more than twelve months old, and there shall be power to add names to the list or strike names off it. In the cities and towns that will be before the judge, and in the rural districts before the rural registrar. If he acts improperly and strikes your name off the list we have put in the safeguard that on polling day you can go and cast your vote upon taking the necessary oath, and you will not be asked to put in what is known as a tied ballot. That proposal always has appeared to me to be a reasonable one. There is no way of depriving a man of a vote under the machinery provided in section 32. If a man wants to vote and is entitled to vote, there is no way of depriving him of his vote. That, I think, is something in advance of any electoral Act we have had in this country before.

When we come to section 63 of this Act, which has been allowed to stand as dependent on section 32, I propose to move an amendment to safeguard the right which we give to an elector to vote on election day. The amendment is to this effect: That the elector must bring forward two resident ratepayers of the polling division who will vouch for him, who will take an oath that they know him and know that he is entitled to vote. I am proposing to add that since the Bill was introduced. It will leave the matter this way: that any man in a rural division who is left off the list through the evil mind or ill disposition of any official of the Government can go to the polls on polling day and claim the right to vote. He must bring with him two resident ratepayers of that division who are willing to swear that he is entitled to vote. He has also to swear it himself. His name is entered in the poll book with the names of his two bondsmen, and I do not think you will find in any rural division of this country three men who will perjure themselves for the sake of a single vote. I think that safeguard is almost absolute. In the city divisions the procedure is different. There we allow an appeal, and the appeal goes to the judge. If in large centres there may be more appeals than a single judge can attend to, we do not appoint an appellate court even, but the judge himself designates other persons, not necessarily judges, to form an appellate court. If my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will reconsider his own suggestion and will take from it those words "final and complete" he will find that my views very largely coincide with his, and I think the section is going to work out very largely as he desires if we leave it just as it is. I understand from hon. members from Nova Scotia that the lists there are prepared annually. We can safely say, then, that an election would fall within that twelve-month limitation, and under section 32 we would then be bound to accept that list. We will be saving the expense of making a new list. Then we provide as simple machinery as possible to allow people to have their names added to the list, and opportunity is given to have names struck off. This is carried on by officers designated in the Act, and I think it is as fair a way as anybody could suggest.

I see the difficulty pointed out by my hon. friend (Mr. Davidson). I have heard it discussed by at least half a dozen members from Nova Scotia. To us in Ontario it seems little short of an outrage that by any possibility a man may have to wait three or four years before he can vote. If it so happens that he moves into a district on the 2nd of January, instead of before the 1st of January, he may be kept there almost indefinitely before he has a legal right to get on the list. My hon. friend from Lunenburg says: We strain the law a little in a case of that kind and we put these people on. But that is not the legal way of doing the thing. I was told by another member, and a high authority too, that on account of these peculiar dates that are adopted in the Nova Scotia law, a man may actually be twenty-three before he can vote, instead of having the right to vote at twenty-one. They may continue these restrictions if they like, but I repeat, we must accept their list if it is not twelve months old. We are not going to allow, however, any class of people to be disqualified on account of difficulties of that kind with regard to duties; these people can have their names added under this section. There is an objection to what my hon. friend speaks of as municipal and provincial lists. We find it every day in the province of Ontario. Every man who is assessed is entitled to have his name on the list, and it is always difficult at election time to strike off the non-residents, and in large cities there are on the voters' lists the names of a great many people who are not legally entitled to vote. Men happen to own property but do not live in the division, and there is a great opportunity in the larger centres for what is known as "plugging." A man comes along whom nobody knows; he says "I am So-and-So," and no one can refute the statement, and he votes in the name of some non-resident. This cannot be done in rural districts and smaller towns where practically everybody knows everybody else. In the larger cities, however, it has been practised extensively in the past, and this is a matter for the consideration of my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Ross).

Mr. McCOIG: May I draw the minister's attention to the fact that non-residents are always put in part 3 of the list?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I can show my hon. friend lists of last year where I can find twenty names of people non-resident in the division.

Mr. McCOIG: Possibly they have moved away.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A man is on the list to-day and he moves away to-morrow and his name remains, and that is what I object to. In a county such as my hon. friend represents, and in my own county, every one knows every one else pretty much, but in such places as London, Hamilton and Toronto we know that plugging has been carried on extensively by reason of the fact that names of non-resident electors appeared on the list. When the plugger comes along no one can dispute his right to vote; he casts his vote and away he goes.

Mr. McCOIG: That would be possible under any circumstances.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not under a list prepared here within forty days of the poll; you can strike off or add to it at any time. One of the chief advantages of this law is the fact that it will give an up-to-date list, and so far as I can see that list will be an absolutely non-partisan one. I do not see any ground for all the fears expressed by my hon. friend from West Middlesex, who must be nervous or must have qualms of conscience. Unless you begin on the assumption that every one is crooked I do not see what objection there can be to the law.

Mr. McCOIG: The minister says that a lot of plugging has been practised. Well, that can go on under any conditions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not under this law.

Mr. McCOIG: This will not prevent personation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Actually the list will not be more than two or three weeks old when it is voted on, and any unknown names will be stricken off. Non-resident voters will go off and the names of those who should be on the list will be added. You will have an up-to-date list, a list prepared almost up to nomination day. It will be a last-minute list. There might be an exceptional case where an unknown man might work in.

Mr. PARDEE: How many cases of plugging does the minister know of in his constituency? As a matter of fact there has been little plugging, and I think that the minister is exaggerating in that respect.

[Mr. McCoig.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: I should not like to give the source of my information, but we have strong reasons for believing that in 1896 we lost the election in my riding through plugging. I will tell my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Pardee), when he puts his innocent question in that bland manner of his, that I could not teach him anything about the matter.

10 p.m.

Mr. PARDEE: Well, I do not know what the minister means by that assertion, I am sure; but if he implies that I have ever been guilty of anything unfair, I desire to inform him that he is absolutely wrong.

Mr. GUTHRIE: You asked me the question.

Mr. PARDEE: I simply asked the minister how much plugging there had been, and when he says that he cannot teach me anything, I can only say that evil minds conceive what ought not to be thought of.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, I do not like any assumption of innocence in this matter.

Mr. PARDEE: Nobody does.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have been long enough in politics to know what the records of the courts are.

Mr. PARDEE: You need not impute any plugging to me; I do not know anything about it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: You know as much as I do.

Mr. PARDEE: Then God knows you know nothing, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, we are on even ground.

Mr. McCOIG: I think it comes with very bad grace from the minister to make such insinuations.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McCOIG: It is in very bad taste.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): Order; I must point out that the minister has the floor.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the discussion in this direction goes any further I can also refer to the instance of the London election when—

Mr. PARDEE: Well?

Mr. GUTHRIE: —an election was stolen from the Liberal party in 1887 by plugging; and I know the experience in South Wellington in 1896. We always thought we lost the election by plugging by reason of the fact that the non-resident vote in those days was allowed, and the voters' list was full of names of non-residents whom we could not locate.

Mr. PARDEE: Does the minister connect me with anything of that kind?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I made my remark in perfect innocence, and thought it would be accepted in that way.

Mr. PARDEE: I take it that way then.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I hope the indignation has passed away.

Mr. PARDEE: Quite so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To get back to the clause, Mr. Chairman, I say that the safeguards provided in this clause are the most complete that I have ever come across in an Election Act. I do not believe that a band of crooked election officials could deprive a man of his vote under this law if he wanted to vote. If he were deprived it would be because of his own carelessness. I do not want to see any objection in either of the proposals that have been suggested. I do not object to them except in regard to the machinery they propose in the way of appeal. I think we should provide for the Appellate Court here. If my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's will think the matter out a little further I think he will agree with me in that respect. Now, we will accept the lists of Nova Scotia provided they are not more than a year old, and I believe they are annually prepared. If the machinery here provided under section 32 is allowed to prevail in regard to appeal, I shall be willing to advise my colleagues to accept the Nova Scotia lists, under the condition, of course, that they are not more than a year old. As I say however, I think they are annually prepared in that province. Then we shall have our own franchise and any one who is disfranchised under the law of Nova Scotia could come to the appellate tribunal and be put on the list in accordance with our franchise. If names are improperly on the list they can be stricken off in accordance with section 32; and voters whose names are left off can on election day bring sureties or vouchers with them and cast their votes. That proposal I could accept. I could not however accept the proposal to make these lists absolute and binding, because I do not believe it is a fair proposal in regard to Ontario. I do not think my hon. friend from West Middlesex and I are so far apart on the general question but I would insist on the appellate machinery provided in this Bill. New Brunswick, I think, probably offers a Franchise Act more nearly coincident with the present Bill than any of the provinces. I have not read that Act for several weeks and possibly I may be confused as regards its provisions; but my recollection is that it is very nearly the same as this Bill. If their lists are annually prepared they will be accepted; I will accept them unhesitatingly; but I would not allow them to be final. I would allow people to get on those lists in the way provided under section 32.

Now we come to other difficulties. There is Prince Edward Island where they have no voters' list; we must prepare them there. Saskatchewan and Alberta have no voters' lists—I know in Saskatchewan they have not; we must prepare them there. Other provinces have varying periods for preparing the lists—not annual preparation but longer periods. There the lists may be too old in every instance and we would have to provide the machinery to prepare lists. But, while personally I have had no experience whatever under the Saskatchewan law—I have never taken any part in an election in the province,—I am assured on all hands and by representatives, I think, of all parties, that in the two elections that have been held under Saskatchewan law, there has been absolutely no complaint—no party has objected. The machinery provided by section 32 is very nearly the Saskatchewan law; it is adapted from the law of that province. If it has worked well there, will it not work well here? We do not want to lose control of the machinery. We are willing to accept your lists where you have lists; and where you have not, we give as fair a method as we know how to provide to get those lists.

I say to my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's—who is now in the House—that as in Nova Scotia they have an annual preparation of provincial voters' lists I accept that part of his proposal, but I cannot say I would accept the proposal to make them absolute and complete. If my hon. friend wants a plain statement in the Act that the provincial lists there shall be accepted, with power to add to them or take from them as provided by section 32, I see no reason why we cannot agree upon that proposal. Similarly in the province of Ontario; and I have had a better opportunity of reading the Bill now before the legislature of that province and a better opportunity of reading the motion and amendment which my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) suggested. I think my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's sees what I am trying to arrive at. It has been pointed out in this House, and has been pointed out to me on other occasions by representatives from Nova Scotia, that under the Nova Scotia lists as framed for provincial purposes two years and even three years may possibly elapse before a man is legally qualified to vote. The dates are so conflicting, or the periods are so tightly drawn, that there is a possibility, they tell me, of a man being twenty-three years of age before he can vote, even if he had only come of age just before the first day after the first of January in any particular year. As the hon. member for Digby and Annapolis (Mr. Davidson) pointed out, some men may be disqualified for two or three years by some residence qualification; under this Act they would not. Now there should be an opportunity to add to the lists the names of these men; the provincial lists should not be accepted as final and complete. All that we ask is that machinery provided for that purpose, or for that adding to, shall be the machinery provided in section 32. But, as against some of the other provinces we will have to provide elaborate machinery because there are no up-to-date lists at all.

However, I am glad the discussion has taken place, and it may be continued for that matter. I cannot give the final decision in regard to the suggestions of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's and my hon. friend from West Middlesex; what I have stated on the matter expresses my own views.

Mr. FIELDING: I did not hear the whole of the minister's statement, but I think that what I did hear is perhaps the essence of the situation with regard to the Nova Scotia lists, and I am very glad that the minister is disposed to receive even in part the suggestions I ventured to offer. With regard to a man being twenty-three or twenty-four years of age before he can vote, I suppose that a man who became twenty-one years of age after the last Dominion election will be twenty-five years before he gets a vote. If you have an annual list I do not see what better you can do; I do not see how you can devise any better system.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under the machinery that we create a man who only became twenty-one about two weeks before the election would get on the list providing he lived in the riding.

Mr. FIELDING: With regard, however, to the more important question I am very glad to have an assurance of the minister's willingness to accept the Nova Scotia lists for a certain purpose; but when he says that he will not accept them as final, and then goes on to remark that they ought to be added to or substracted from by the machinery he has provided here, does he mean that that will be done by the appointment of registrars?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, because in the urban districts the application goes before the judge of the county, or in case more than one judge is necessary, before an appointee of the county judge. In the country districts it would be before the registrar; but in the country districts the matter is not of so much consequence, because a man who is not on the list can on polling day go and vote anyway if he swears himself in. It is in the cities that the matter becomes more important because there is no privilege of going on election day and tendering the oath and getting the ballot. The point is this, as my hon. friend will see: The people of Nova Scotia say they have a grievance in the appointment of a sheriff as the revising officer. Sheriffs are not lawyers—I pointed all this out a minute ago—they have no legal qualifications more than the ordinary qualifications of a sheriff in serving a writ or a subpœna, or something of the kind, or the enforcement of the criminal law of the country; they have no education that will train them to decide a question of law in regard to the franchise. But the judges have. I understand from hon. members on this side of the House that time after time motions have been moved in the legislature to allow the judges to be the final court of revision, but the Provincial Government refuse every time the request is made. They say, "No, we will stick to the sheriff." This Bill proposes that the judges, who are much better qualified to discharge this duty than the sheriff, shall act. Another objection urged upon me is that the sheriff is responsible to the Attorney General. The sheriff is responsible in Ontario. He belongs to the Attorney General's Department, and when the sheriff needs advice he asks the Attorney General for it. They tell me the sheriffs also do so in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. FIELDING: Why not?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then if the case comes up for decision, and the sheriff asks for advice the Government that appointed him may and can remove him.

Mr. FIELDING: They can only remove him for cause.

Mr. GUTHRIE: For partisanship and improper dealing. I do not say that such actually exists, but the system is quite open to the charge that it may be abused. Now that can be removed if the simple procedure of this Bill is adopted. Why does my hon. friend object to this procedure? Why does he object to these appeals being heard by a judge or by some appointee of the judge? I think the judge would appoint a qualified man if more than one person is necessary for the decision of the question. The element of expense is utterly removed because we are going to adopt the provincial lists of Nova Scotia. The question of appeals will often involve some expense but not much expense; there will be a limited number of appeals in every riding. But that is what is urged upon me by hon. members from Nova Scotia, and it is not only urged upon me but it meets with my approval, therefore my judgment agrees with theirs in the matter. I think it most improper to ask an appointee of the Government, such as the sheriff, to decide these appeals when that sheriff knows that if he does wrong in the eyes of the Government they can cut his head off. They not only appoint him but they have the power to remove him. When he gets into a tangle or into a legal difficulty he asks the Attorney General and the Attorney General is the head of the department that is affected in connection with these voters' lists. That leaves the door pretty wide open for the charge that there may be wrong-doing some day and the possibility of that will be removed if the machinery proposed in section thirty-two for appeals or for additions to the list is adopted.

Mr. FIELDING: Of course there are a thousand and one duties for which the county judge, or any judge, is qualified by his legal training, and for which the sheriff will not be qualified. But I believe it to be the experience in Nova Scotia—I understand it is so, I have not been of late years so intimately associated with the province by residence as formerly—that the decisions of the sheriff as a rule are accepted and very little exception is taken to those decisions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is my hon. friend's objection to what is proposed?

Mr. FIELDING: I am coming to that in a moment. While I admit at once that on a thousand and one questions a judge is the more competent man, I do not think the mere deciding of whether Smith or Brown should go on the voter's list is a great legal question at all—it is a question that any honest and intelligent layman can determine. That is why I do not think it is so vital that a judge should do it; that is one point. The next point is that my hon. friend says that the Government appoints him, and the Government can dismiss him. Suppose I were to say that the Government appoints a judge, and the Government can dismiss him?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend overlooks the vital point, that the judge is appointed for life, and no government can dismiss him according to their displeasure. The same condition applies to the appointment of a sheriff. His appointment is permanent in the sense that he holds office during good behaviour. My hon. friend as a lawyer and administrator knows what that means. A sheriff cannot be dismissed because he has displeased the particular government of the day in connection with the electoral lists.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. FIELDING: No, no. I gave an instance of a sheriff who had been in office 43 years, but my hon. friend says the Government can dismiss him. That is not reasonable, for it is neither in accordance with the law nor with the facts. However, I do not want to press that point too far. There is some force in what my hon. friend says, and if there is any sincere belief on the part of any one that the decisions in Nova Scotia are partisan, and he wants an appeal, I will be perfectly content to have it said that in any such case an appeal shall be made to a county judge; but I do not want it to be made to a reviser, to a registrar or to an enumerator. I do not think it is fair that an enumerator appointed by a returning officer, who may be a partisan, and who is going to be appointed perhaps because he is a partisan, should be allowed to say the final word, I would accept that amendment that the lists of Nova Scotia as revised by the sheriffs shall be subject to appeal to the county judge. I do not want any man left off the lists who is entitled to vote. I want to point out to my hon. friend that while he emphasizes the appeal to the judge, as a matter of fact the appeal is going to be largely to the registrar, for there are constituencies in Nova Scotia in which there are no cities at all, practically speaking, and it is only in urban centres that the appeals can be referred to the judge. I would accept with pleasure a provision for appeal from the sheriff to the county judge; but I do not think it is fair to take the appeal from the sheriff to an officer who is appointed mainly because he is a partisan.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think my hon. friend understands the Act. He speaks of an enumerator, but an enumerator has no power to make any final binding judgment in the matter. Let me put the case as it will be. We will assume under this clause as drawn that the lists of Nova Scotia are not a year old, in which case they become the voters' lists. Now, I am going to take a rural division. There may be some people who have come into that riding and lived there the requisite time, which is only 60 days, but although entitled to vote they are not on the list. They go to the registrar and ask to be put on. We will assume that he is a crook and does not want to do his duty, and says, "No, I will not put you on." That is not final. It would be a convenience to have the man's name put on. But supposing the officer is crooked and fails in his duty, all that man has to do on election day is to go to the polling station, take the necessary oath, and he becomes entitled to vote. If there was a final binding decision from the enumerator to the registrar I would oppose it; but we have safeguarded it, and I think it is the best safeguard ever embodied in a Franchise Act. In the urban division, as my hon. friend will see, the appeal is to the judge. I cannot make it any clearer. I could not consent to the sheriff being the final revising officer. What I said when my hon. friend was out I may as well say now, that whether well-founded or ill-founded there is a settled feeling on the part of hon. members from Nova Scotia sitting on this side of the House that they do not get fair treatment under the Provincial Franchise Act. I am told by some of those members that they are under a tremendous handicap at every election, and under the circumstances I cannot accept those lists as final. Those hon. members are convinced that they are right and it seems so eminently proper to adopt the course I suggest of leaving the matter to the judge that I do not feel that I need labour the point any longer.

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. FIELDING: What my hon. friend puts forward as an appeal or remedy does not commend itself to my judgment. Perhaps it was discussed when I was not here, but the idea that a man shall be allowed to go to the poll and swear himself on at the last moment is to my mind a very objectionable feature of the law.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There has been a qualification of that. I propose, when this section is discussed, to add an amendment providing that two resident ratepayers of the polling subdivision will swear that a man is entitled and qualified to vote, and that he himself will swear the same, the names of the three will be entered in the poll book and he will be entitled to vote. I think that is a safeguard.

Mr. FIELDING: The whole idea seems to me to be utterly unsound. However, at the most the hon. gentleman is only interposing an extra cog in the machine. If the sheriff is partisan—and I cannot see any justification for taking that ground because his appointment is made by the local government; however, let us waive that; if there is any suspicion that the decision of the sheriff is partisan—I would welcome any machinery which would take the case direct to the county judge, I do not care in what form, whether you call it an appeal or anything else. But I am afraid any machinery that will allow enumerators or registrars the right to strike off or put on names without the right of appeal to the county judge is not sound. Why not revise the Bill so that in case a man is dissatisfied at being left off the list he can go direct to the county judge and get a decision?

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend objects to a man swearing himseluf on at election day. I am told that under the Nova Scotia Act one man can swear on 500 names.

Mr. McGREGOR: That has been done in New Glasgow.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not know what the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That I can go to some court or tribunal there and on my affidavit I can swear to the qualifications of as long a list of names as I like, and those names will be accepted.

Mr. FIELDING: In the making up of the list.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The only man who can change that is the sheriff. That is a pretty easy way of getting on. That was permitted under the Franchise Act of 1885 and was condemned as the most unholy thing in it. I think that the method adopted by this Bill is much better.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend ignores the most material fact, that he can swear that list only if he can satisfy the tribunal that it is right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And that tribunal is the sheriff.

Mr. FIELDING: He cannot by his own affidavit put men on the list unless he gives good grounds to the revisers, and if the revisers are not satisfied they will not put those men on.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If it is possible for one man to do that, can there be any objection to three men swearing to one vote? That is the proposal of this Bill.

Mr. FIELDING: I want tribunals established by law, not some individual to swear men on the list. The tribunals established in Nova Scotia as far as I know are fair and try to be just, although there are exceptions I have no doubt on one side or the other, human nature being what it is. But I come back to the point. I want to avoid trouble, and if a man is not on the list he should have an opportunity of being put on. My hon. friend can devise any machinery he thinks best to allow a person to go direct from the sheriff to the county judge without the intervention of a partisan registrar.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This Bill permits that.

Mr. FIELDING: It does at a later stage.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. If your provincial list is less than a year old we accept it. Suppose you are not on that list, and suppose you do not go near the registrar, you can go to the county judge. That is provided here. You can go with notice or without notice; you can go without any certificate. That is absolutely provided in the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING: The registrar certainly has the power to add and strike off names.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Suppose he will not do it for you?

Mr. FIELDING: That is another cog in the machine,—that you can go to the county judge. I see no need of that additional piece of machinery.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not want to overload the courts, you know.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I intervene to make a suggestion? The Ontario Government is introducing a Bill which will affect this proposed legislation so far as the preparation of lists is concerned. That circumstance has altered very materially the significance of this section. What the minister said this evening about the willingness of himself and his colleagues to accept as a basis the provincial lists also goes a very considerable way toward removing some of the very serious doubts so many of us entertained about the purpose of the Government in the section as drafted. Now, we have before the Committee different suggestions, one from the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), which the minister is prepared to accept in part and to consider further; one from the member for Middlesex West (Mr. Ross) which also the minister has expressed his approval of in part and his willingness to consider further. I suggest that before we pass this clause the minister might be agreeable to having a short conference with the member for Shelburne and Queen's, the member for Middlesex West, the member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee), with a view to seeing just how far—

An hon. MEMBER: Don't do it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hear my hon. friend say: "Don't do it." I ask him if that is the spirit in which we ought to try to work out a Franchise Act?

Mr. CURRIE: You would not be satisfied anyway.

Mr. BUREAU: What do you know about it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We should all approach a matter of such great consequence as this in the spirit of trying to get an Act which will appeal to the people as being fair and just. A conference might help to remove a great deal of doubt and establish a wider ground of certitude; more could be accomplished in that way than by hours of debate here. What we have heard to-day suggests the possibility of our getting very much closer together on this particular section than I thought was possible when the discussion started. Let me illustrate just what I have to say, because I have Ontario more particularly in mind. When this Bill was introduced we had before us only the Ontario lists as prepared under the late Hearst Government. They were prepared on the system of enumeration, and as this section read at that time it meant that if a general election took place within a year, the lists which we would have to use so far as Ontario was concerned would be the lists that the Hearst Government had prepared for the last election. If it did not take place within a year, or at any time up to November of this year, then we would have no alternative than that of the appointment by the Government of its army of enumerators to prepare the lists in accordance with the machinery provided by this Act. That, we all felt, would be dangerous and anything but satisfactory. Now, what has happened since this Bill was introduced. The Drury Government have come into office; they have thrown the old Hearst legislation to the winds, and are drafting a new law and providing for the preparation of annual lists. The minister tells us to-night that if that law is in force, then these annual lists will be used by the federal Government for the purposes of elections. That is an entirely different situation from that with which we were confronted when the Bill was first brought into the House; and, as I say, for that reason we are very much closer together than I saw any possibility of our being in the early stages of the discussion. In view of the attitude of the minister toward the suggestions that have been made from this side I feel that if he is agreeable to a conference of this kind, simply to smooth out the differences as between the different provinces, we should probably be much closer together at the end of an hour's conference of that kind than we would be at the conclusion of a prolonged discussion here.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No matter which way we decide that point, the clause has to go, because if no lists are made within twelve months by the province, we shall have to prepare new ones. In some provinces they have no lists any way, so we have to go on and consider the clause. But as it affects particularly, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Ontario I quite agree with my hon. friend; we would let that aspect of it stand.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the aspect of it that I would like to have stand. In order to make clear the effect of the law as it would be if we passed this section, let me put a question to the minister. Assuming that an election were to take place in Canada within a year of the time the Drury Government was formed, that is, before November of this year, then that election would be held on the lists used in the last provincial election?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: If they were not more than twelve months old.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If an election came before November of this year, the lists used for federal purposes so far as Ontario is concerned would be the lists that were used in the last provincial election. Now if the general election came in December, before the law now being drafted in Ontario was put into motion, then the lists would be prepared by enumerators in accordance with the provisions of this Act. without any reference whatever to the law that the Ontario Government is putting through at the present time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, unless lists were prepared under that law.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Assuming that the Ontario law were now passed and that lists were prepared under it by November or December of this year then those lists would be used?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They would be valid for twelve months.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But if they were not prepared until say March or April of next year and a general election took place before then, lists would be prepared under the provisions of this Act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, I understand that the proposal is that the Ontario Bill shall be passed and that the provincial lists for this year shall be prepared under it. I understand that they have to be prepared for municipal purposes in any case.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I simply wanted to make the point clear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think that the Ontario law will be in force by December next, anyway. There might be a month or two after November and before the new provincial lists come during which, if a general election were held, we might have to prepare new lists.

Mr. CURRIE: Do I understand that there is no appeal from the lists as prepared by Ontario.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Oh yes, there is.

Mr. CURRIE: Because I would very much object to that. Hon. members know that in the old days it used to cost us anything from $100 to $1,000 a year to look after our lists. Why should members of the federal House have to provide the machinery for the revision of lists for Ontario? When hon. gentlemen opposite were in office and had charge virtually of all the clerks and all the printing shops, when we had our lists revised and fixed up they would go to the printer, and then, when they were there they would be hocus-pocussed and a lot of old Conservatives would find themselves without votes. I would not agree to any such proposal as that there should be a constant revision of lists by members of this House. There must be revision before a general election; that is sufficient. Now hon. gentlemen opposite are asking for a conference. Of course, it is all right enough to ask for a conference; it is all right to compromise.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not asking; I am making a suggestion.

Mr. CURRIE: I have the floor for the moment, if you please. Hon. gentlemen opposite would have a conference and then they would go before the country and say that they forced the minister to give them this fine election law. For it is a fine law. I do not agree with any hon. member who wants to have a special law for his own province. The law should be the same for all provinces. There should be no difference; no distinction. An appeal should be provided for a man at the last moment who has been, by some means, deprived of his vote. I am not going to put confidence in the Government of Ontario. The gentleman who leads it has been looking after voters' lists in my riding, and I know how difficult it is to keep track of him; he is a past master in the art of dropping names from the voters' lists. It may work out to the advantage of the public that there shall be an annual list for which the municipalities pay. The fact of the matter is that the Government at Toronto is unloading the expense of preparing its lists. I cannot see that there is anything to be gained by going into any conference, if this Bill is satisfactory and if hon. gentlemen opposite can bring forward no valid reasons or grounds for complaint. I have listened for hours to hon. gentlemen opposite discussing the matter, and I do not see any valid objection that can be raised. In particular, I see no objection to the way in which the list is handled in Nova Scotia, and I cannot see any reason why the list there should be handled differently from the way in which lists are handled in the other provinces. Moreover, I cannot see why my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) is so anxious that the sheriff should have all the say in regard to this matter; there is something wrong, there is something suspicious in all that clamour to have the sheriff do this work. For that reason I would object to that, and if I were the minister, I would not concede that point. If hon. gentlemen opposite are determined to fight the matter out, let them do so; but as regards holding a conference, the conference might not last five minutes; my hon. friends might say: Change one or two words here and there and then the clause will be all right; and then they would go broadcast over the country and say that they forced the Government to give them this law. The Government is responsible, and if there is anything wrong in this measure, I would say: Let the onus rest upon the Government and let the Opposition assume no responsibility for it.

Mr. BUREAU: It is refreshing to listen to my hon. friend (Mr. Currie) and to size him up by his own opinion of others and how he views questions of this kind in the House. He is responsible for his actions, so let him take the responsibility for it.

Mr. CURRIE: We have responsible Government.

Mr. BUREAU: What I rose to ask is this: The Acting Solicitor General has spoken about every province except Quebec. I asked him why the one-year limitation was inserted, and he replied that the lists might get stale, and there is something in that contention. But this is the position. I understand the first object of the law is to facilitate the franchise to people. In Quebec, we have this condition, that the lists in the large cities are revised only every even-numbered year. Every year in rural municipalities and in towns and villages the lists are made by municipal councils, and the question of plugging could not come up with us, because the lists are made from the assessment roll, and the assessor has to indicate on the assessment roll who is a resident and who is a non-resident. A man who is a non-resident under the Quebec Election Act has no right to vote.

Mr. CURRIE: When did that change take place?

Mr. BUREAU: I think the change was made two years ago.

Mr. DENIS: Four years.

Mr. CURRIE: In every other province dual voting has been abolished for the last twenty years.

Mr. BUREAU: What is the difference?

Mr. CURRIE: This shows how far you are ahead of us.

Mr. BUREAU: Do not think you are virtuous Ontario as against Quebec when you come before the House and accuse one another of plugging and stealing elections and stealing ballot boxes and having to pay money. Why, my hon. friend is a self-confessed man who has to spend money to make his lists.

Mr. CURRIE: I do.

Mr. BUREAU: Why?

Mr. CURRIE: My hon. friend is a lawyer and can look after his lists. I have to hire an attorney to look after mine.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not have to hire an attorney or anything else. The list is passed and the man who finds his name is not on the list goes to the revising officer and asks that his name be put on. In rural municipalities the council sits as a court of revision, if you like, and people appear before that court. I am not put to any expense in the matter except as regards postage for writing to some fellows telling them to look up the lists and see if their names are on. But be that as it may, if you want to facilitate the franchise, you must have something to start on in large cities because, if you have no names on the lists to start with, and you post up notices and tell the people to register, names are going to be left off.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In London, England, in New York and similar places, that is the way in which the lists are made up, namely by personal registration.

Mr. BUREAU: That may be. If you accept the last list in the rural municipalities, why not accept the last list used in a provincial election in the larger cities?

Mr. GUTHRIE: How old might the list be?

Mr. BUREAU: It would not be over two years old. In Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers, Sherbrooke, St. Hyacinthe and Hull, the lists are revised in March or April of every even-numbered year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then you would have to see to it that an election took place every odd-numbered year, and in that case 1923 would be all right because then the list would be only one year old.

Mr. BUREAU: The matter all depends on the month. If you had an election in July, my list would be no good.

[Mr. Bureau.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: Make it September.

Mr. BUREAU: If you have it in February, 1922, I would be in the same position, because the revision is in the even-numbered years. Last year the lists were revised in March or April, I forget which. If you have an election in June, 1921, my list is no good and you have to start with absolutely nothing. It is only fair to make an exception in these cases that the last lists in large cities which have a revision every even-numbered year shall be the list to be used. Then you will have something to start on and names can be added or struck off. I am not objecting to the appeals at all, but I want something to start on; and if you do not accept these lists, you would start without a single name and you would have to bring the people to the registrar and have them register. That is a new departure; we have had no election under that system except the one in Quebec East; and a great many people would lose their votes. I would not ask the minister to accept lists two years old when lists one year old or less than that can be had, but we could make the exception in the case of large cities by adding after the words: "for the purposes of provincial elections" the words "except in such cities where revision of lists is biennial." That would cover Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers, Sherbrooke, St. Hyacinthe and Hull.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Are those the only places?

Mr. BUREAU: Yes, in our province.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member's suggestion is that in those places the last list should be the one to be used with power to add to and strike off as in this clause.

Mr. CURRIE: In Ontario, in a number of cities and towns, as a matter of fact, the list is nearly a year old. The list is prepared from the assessment roll, and the list that is prepared from the assessment roll in Toronto is a year old before it appears before the public. The same thing is true of one of the towns in my riding, and I think the same is true of Guelph, but these lists just form the basis and they are pretty nearly within the year. If we are going to have exceptions made for everywhere we shall never get anywhere. We must have a general law applicable all over the Dominion. As a matter of fact, if I were appointed an enumerator in Montreal I would certainly start with the old list.

Mr. BUREAU: It is easier to start with the old list than to get voters to register.

Mr. CURRIE: You would know the voters who lived in the wards.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not think this is an exception. It is kind of general. Here is a class of cities—

Mr. GUTHRIE: It may be a broad exception, but it is an exception.

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR (Queen's): In discussing the question of accepting provincial lists the minister referred to Prince Edward Island and said we had to make a list for that province as there was no list there. I cannot see why the minister comes to that conclusion. I was rather amused at the controversy between the hon. members (Mr. Currie) and (Mr. Bureau), each claiming that his province was ahead of the other. I think the province of Prince Edward Island is further advanced than any other province, because we did away with lists entirely over twenty years ago. We have, of course, qualifications for voters. I can see no reason why there should not be uniform qualifications all over Canada, but I would ask the minister to follow at Dominion elections the method of voting in force in the different provinces. In Prince Edward Island the voters know their qualifications. They are posted up in the proclamation, and the voters go to the poll and vote. It is true that we have very few of an alien population. About 95 per cent of our electors are residents of many years standing and they are well known. To make a list for Prince Edward Island would simply be doubling or trebling the cost of holding the election there. There are only four constituencies, and I cannot see any purpose in going to an expenditure of $20,000 or $25,000 in making a list that is absolutely of no use so far as the pronvince of Prince Edward Island is concerned. If the minister would look at the qualifications required for the local legislature, and the method of holding provincial elections in the province, I think he would see that nothing could be gained by making a list for our province.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Are there no property qualifications in your franchise?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: I hope the minister has caught my point, which is that the qualifications of voters should be the same all over the Dominion, but that the method of holding the election should be that followed in each of the provinces, so the qualification of voters does not apply to the point I am making. The qualifications are as follows:

> Every person shall be entitled to vote at an election to be held for the election of an Assemblyman to represent in the Legislative Assembly of this province, any Electoral District: If such person
> (a) Is of the full age of twenty-one years on the day of the election, and is not by this Act or any law of the province disqualified or prevented from voting; and
> (b) Is a male British subject; and—

Then follow further qualifications, for instance, if the man has paid his poll tax for the year preceding he is entitled to vote, or if he is the owner of a freehold estate.

Mr. MORPHY: How much is the poll tax?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: Two dollars. He must have his receipt for that poll tax. If he has that, and is a British subject twenty-one years of age, he is entitled to vote.

Mr. MORPHY: Are there any property qualifications?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: That does not matter if he has paid his poll tax. If he is above the age when the poll tax is payable, there are other qualifications. In Prince Edward Island, for instance, where the people are not mixed with aliens, and where everybody is well known, I see no reason why the minister should not follow the method of holding the poll that is to be adopted in the provincial elections. I think the expense of making these lists is not justified so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned. You could have the same qualifications of voters all over Canada, but the method of holding the election should be one used in the different provinces at provincial elections.

Mr. MORPHY: Is there any residence qualification?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: They must reside in the province twelve months and in the district one month.

Mr. MORPHY: There is no list made of those who are entitled to vote?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: None whatever.

Mr. MORPHY: What protection is there against people from other districts coming in to vote?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: The candidate's agents are at the polls and it is their duty to see that nobody votes who is not entitled to vote in that division.

Mr. MORPHY: There are no lists in a city of 20,000?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: We have no cities of that size.

Mr. MORPHY: Has not Charlottetown a population of about 15,000?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: Only 12,000.

Mr. MORPHY: And there is no trouble?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: None whatever. There was more trouble with the lists in 1917, the people not being acquainted with registering themselves, than we had in all previous elections over a number of years.

Mr. MARTIN: What is the time allowed previous to an election for paying the poll tax?

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR: It must be paid the year previous to the election. The poll tax for the year is not due until December, so if an election was held in September they would have to show the receipt for the year previous.

Mr. McISAAC: There is what I might call a double franchise in Prince Edward Island. One half the members of the legislature are called councillors, and the other half are called assemblymen. That arose in this way: We had a legislative council there at one time, and it was a very difficult thing to abolish, because the councillors naturally were reluctant to abolish themselves. The Prime Minister, however of that day, introduced a Bill, and we must assume that he talked nicely to these gentlemen of the legislative council, twelve in number, and told them: You will be councillors still after you have abolished your chamber; you will be elected to the assembly. In that way he managed to persuade these councillors to abolish themselves, and from that day to this we have the peculiar condition of having councillor electors and assemblymen electors. The councillor electors require a property qualification amounting to $325, and those who vote for the assemblymen must have paid their poll tax; it is practically manhood suffrage in their case. When these two classes of members elected to the legislature come into the chamber and take their seat, no one can tell which of them is councillor and which an assemblyman. There are fifteen electoral districts in the province, and each district sends one councillor and one assemblyman to the legislature. A not very strong party man might be disposed to attempt to cross his votes, but he cannot do it very successfully in this case. He has to vote for councillor and for an assemblyman if he polls two votes. He is not allowed to vote for two councillors or two assemblymen, but for one of each. That is the peculiar condition we have in the province so far as elections to the legislature are concerned.

As to the manner of holding the elections and the preparations therefor, there are no lists. The districts are mostly rural and everybody is supposed to know everybody else. Charlottetown has a population of 12,000 and there are incorporated towns and villages, but generally speaking the people know one another pretty well, and the candidate's agents are supposed to know who are entitled to vote. For my part I think it is rather a chaotic and precarious way of carrying on an election and I am in favour of having lists of some description. Every one who is qualified to vote for an assemblyman—that is to say, every one who is twenty-one years of age and has the other necessary qualifications as to residence, poll tax, etc.,—is qualified to vote for members of the House of Commons. As regards women voters, I may say that, so far, women have not been allowed to vote for members of the provincial legislature. In the Dominion elections in 1917, of course, it is well known, certain women were given the vote. Under this Act they will be given the franchise, and that fact of itself, in my opinion, should be a cogent reason why we should have voters' lists. I should not like to see elections carried on in that province, especially for members of the House of Commons, in the rather antiquated way in which they have been conducted for the legislature, without lists. I do not think it is a proper way, and for my part I am quite satisfied to have this clause go through as it is. The Bill generally, I think will meet conditions in Prince Edward Island, so far as I am able to judge; and I think I am safe in saying that it will be generally acceptable to the people of that province. I do not think it would be well to continue, in the election of members for the House of Commons, the practice in vogue in Prince Edward Island in connection with the election of assemblymen, for I think it is very much behind the times.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: I think the minister is putting a little too much stress on the question of residence so far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned. It is not so rigid as he seems to think. In the first place, the assessment roll is the basis of the revision, and every man whose name appears on the roll for $150 of real estate or $300 of personal estate goes on the list automatically, and no question is asked about his residence. He is a voter because he has this property, although he may not live in the district at all. He may live in some other part of the province or in some other province. He may live in New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island, and if he owns property to this extent in the district his name goes on the list automatically, and no question can be raised as to his residence. Now, that provides for the largest number of men and women in the province. Then there is a further provision.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Do I understand that you retain the names of non-residents on your list?

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is objectionable.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: The reviser is instructed to put every man and woman on the reviser's list, if he finds that they are qualified by the assessment roll to the extent of $150 real estate and $300 personal estate. In the case of fishermen it is $150, which represents boats, nets, etc. So that every class of person in the province who has anything in the way of property is covered. There is a provision that absence up to four months in the case of an income voter does not interfere with his qualification. Under our law a student who is in college is regarded as living at home, and provision is made for sailors. When you come to deal with all these cases, therefore, the question of residence does not amount to much.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have been informed that under the system whereby voters' lists in Nova Scotia are prepared, a resident in that province can go to the reviser and by his own affidavit swear on the names of, say, 100 men, and the reviser has no option. He must accept that oath and put those names on. There is an appeal against that to the sheriff, but the difficulty is to find the men. Where they have to be notified and have personally to appear you cannot prosecute an appeal because you 11 p.m. cannot find these men to give them notice. That has been represented to me as one great objection to the system in Nova Scotia and I should like some information.

Mr. J .H. SINCLAIR: Does the minister say that the men must come personally and apply for themselves in every case? If so, it is going to be very difficult to comply with the law.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I asked the question about your law; I do not know anything about it.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR: It is true that one person who knows the facts can apply for another person in the province of Nova Scotia. But when my hon. friend talks about one hundred persons, I must say that I do not know of any such case as that. I might know the qualifications of my brother, say, or any man who works for me, and if he were not able to apply personally I could apply for him. That is reasonable, and there may be cases where one man would be better qualified than any one else to make application for a number of men. Take such a man as the cashier of a coal company, or some man who keeps the books of a company and who knows the incomes of the men and their qualifications. the qualifications for income voters, I may remark, is $250. I see no reason why a man who is, let us say, a paymaster and knows all the facts, should not be allowed to make an affidavit. There may be such cases where one man would apply for a number of other men, but it is only in an exceptional case that a man will not be able to go himself and make application.

Mr. McGREGOR: I would ask the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr Sinclair) if he thinks that any one man would have sufficient knowledge of five hundred individuals to be able to swear to their qualifications? Yet under such affidavit five hundred names would be added to the list, as was done in the towns of New Glasgow and Trenton.

An hon. MEMBER: Five hundred?

Mr. McGREGOR: Yes between the two towns.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the difference between a man swearing for one or for fifty or a hundred, if he has the knowledge? It is admitted all around that it is convenient that one man who has a knowledge of the qualifications of another should make an application for him. We know very well that lots of people are very indifferent as to whether their names are on the list at all, so the poor politician has to look out for himself and see that the names of those perons are put on the list. Our law in Nova Scotia at one time was that each individual had to make application for himself. It was found, however, that the law was not lived up to, that people would not comply with it and it had to be changed. Under the change made one person can make affidavit as to the qualifications of another. But that is not the last word in the matter. All that enables one to do is to give the names to a reviser.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And he is bound to accept them.

Mr. McKENZIE: In the province of Nova Scotia the reviser is not bound to accept the affidavit at all unless it is handed in to him before the twentieth day of January. Very well supposing the names are put in before the twentieth day of January—which very seldom happens because people are not so much on the alert as they should be—the reviser is bound to put those names on his preliminary list. That preliminary list goes through a great many evolutions before it reaches the sheriff. It has to go before a court of three revisers who sit on a certain day and hear evidence as to whether the parties are qualified or not. If I object to anybody who is on the list I can notify him. I am not bound to notify the fellow who made the application for him. I can either notify the man who made the application for him or the man himself by sending him a letter, posted prepaid, to his last known address. Then I can go to the revisers' court and say, "There is a man on the list who should not be on;" and if I can show by evidence that that man is not qualified his name goes off. Now that list which is prepared by the revisers' court must be signed by the three revisers. The three of them sign it and put a certificatae on it that such is their decision as to that list. One-half of those who were on the preliminary list may have been struck off, but if there is anybody dissatisfied with the decision of that board he has the right to appeal to the sheriff. The three revisers are seldom of one political complexion. I do not remember ever seeing a board with three Liberals or three Tories except for the fourteen years I was in our town council when we had a Tory board. But there was never any trouble; they were honest men and they did the right thing. It is a mistake to think that because a man hands in a name to one of the revisers that is the end of it; there are three or four sittings before the list is signed by the three revisers. All three, honest and capable men sitting in that way must be satisfied that the list is all right before they sign it.

Mr. McGREGOR: What would you do in a case where you could not find the man who made the affidavit, where in fact there was no such man in existence? In the case I have referred to the name was John Smith and there was no John Smith.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Mr. McKENZIE: I would not care a button about the man who made the application if I could find the man whose name was on the list—that is all that is necessary for me.

Mr. McGREGOR: Suppose you could not find him either??

Mr. McKENZIE: I could make application to the board and prove that the man's address is unknown—I put my evidence before the board, and if they are honest and capable men they will strike the name off. I can say, "There is no such man in existence, this thing is a bogus application, this man should go off the list.," and surely if I could satisfy a board of three capable, honest men—such as I have no doubt you would find on the board in New Glasgow—that would be all that would be necessary. I cannot conceive of having a revising board, for example in the town of New Glasgow, that would not do the square thing about the voters' list. I appeal to my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) who comes from New Glasgow as to whether that is not the case? I do not know of any town in Nova Scotia, Pictou or anywhere else, where we could get three honest men who would solemnly take their oath and sit down and revise the list, who would do anything that was crooked in the performance of their duty. I put it up to my hon. friend (Mr. Mcgregor) whether he thinks for one moment that Sheriff Harris of the town of Pictou would be party to anything crooked about the list. Now I put it up to him to say whether Sheriff Harris is not square in his dealings?

Mr. McGREGOR: I want to say to the hon. member that the revisers of the town have no option in the matter whatever: they have to take the affidavit. Nobody knows that better than the hon. member who has just taken his seat. As to the sheriff he can only deal with these cases when the men are brought before him. You cannot bring the men before him because in many cases they do not exist. But they turn up at election day, and that is the reason their names are added.

Mr. McKENZIE: The hon. member need not put supposititious cases to me. As to putting on the list the name of a man who was sworn to as having the qualifications and being qualified in every respect, and then not being able to find him, I never heard of such a case. If there is such a case in New Glasgow it stands solitary and alone as far as I have heard.

Mr. CURRIE: For the benefit of the hon. member, let me tell him that the system referred to is a very old form of political corruption that used to have much vogue in the province of Ontario. In so stating I am sorry the member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) is not here—with apologies to him, I may say. What has been complained of is what is known as the colonizing of voters. We have done away with the property qualification. When we had the property qualification in the case of a man who owned a large number of town lots, the system was to put names down as being the owners. Those names would be handed in and would be put on the voters' list the same as they are in Nova Scotia, but that difficulty does not exist and such names will be struck off the list. In the old days a lot of names could be put on the list but you could never find the men although they always turned up on election day. There were a lot of those chaps and they would vote according to the way the man who paid them wished. That is an old form of corruption. Where you have dual voting and property qualifications you are almost sure to have colonization of voters.

Mr. BUREAU: An Ontario virtue.

Mr. CURRIE: Take the city of Montreal. A friend of the hon. gentleman told me the other day that in the good old days he could give as many votes as he wanted in this way for members of Parliament.

Mr. BUREAU: He was boasting.

Mr. CURRIE: He did not have to do much boasting to do that. He could just ride around and if there was property in each riding he could vote in respect of it. That is what we call colonizing. The names of foreigners used to be used for the purpose, and when the foreigners were brought in why, "All coons look alike",—you could not tell whether they were qualified or not.

Mr. BUREAU: Well, the coons are going to get the vote this time.

Mr. CURRIE: Now, in Ontario we have one man one vote, and the individual must be pretty well identified before he can vote for a member of the House of Commons. There is no merit whatever in the claim of the hon. member (Mr. McKenzie) because what he has reference to is an old form that used to be followed in the preparation of the list many years ago, and it was characterized by the most rampant form of corruption that this country had ever seen. What we call the colonizing of voters is not possible under this Bill. That the hon. member should make any such proposition is to my mind very surprising. It shows that he is not familiar with what has been done in various parts of the country if he insists on having such a provision in this legislation.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not understand what the hon. member means, when he suggests that I have any knowledge of any such corrupt system. I never heard of it in the province of Nova Scotia, it does not exist. If there are such things carried on in the province of Ontario I am very sorry for the old, well-settled and reputable province if that is the fruit of their Christianity and civilization. We have no records of such corruption in Nova Scotia. I was simply pointing out the way by which honest men get their names on the list. If my hon friend doubts my word, I challenge him or any other hon. member to produce any statement of mine in this House that was not well founded on fact, for I am too sensitive of my honour to make any statement except what is absolutely true.

Mr. CURRIE: I do not dispute the statement of the hon. member that he is justified in his remarks; but to have a gentleman of his standing propose the insertion of a clause in this Bill that would permit the commonest form of corruption that is known all over the United States and England as "colonizing voters" is to me very surprising. That system has been abolished in every decent community. Why, twenty years ago that is how Tammany Hall used to carry New York.

Mr. BUREAU: Is that where you got your schooling?

Mr. McKENZIE: I know of no corruption. In the town immediately adjoining where I live, Sydney Mines, there are 5,000 or 6,000 men employed, and every dollar of wages paid to those men passes through the hands of a paymaster. He has the list of their earnings and knows what their income is. Those men go down into the mines at seven o'clock in the morning and do not come up until late in the afternoon and probably they would not have time to go before the registrar and make personal application to be put on the list. Supposing they said to their paymaster: You know our qualifications, and the law allows you to make this application for us. Go and make the application. I can see no corruption in that being done; it is only a mere matter of convenience which the statute has allowed for very many years. In Nova Scotia we have a very vigorous and capable opposition, but I never heard any of its members demand that that law should be repealed.

Mr. BUREAU: I would suggest an amendment to the clause by inserting after the word "elections" in the twenty-fifth line the words "in the case of cities where the revision is biennial the last revised list shall be the voters' list." The object, as I was stating just now, is to facilitate voting. In Montreal, Quebec, Sherbrooke, St. Hyacinthe and Hull the revision is only by-annually. Therefore if an election takes place, say, in the month of July, we would have no lists whatever under the Act. This would make it just the same as our provincial law. Unless something like this is incorporated in the Bill I think we shall have confusion in our province, because large numbers of people seeing their names on the list made from the assessment rolls would not think of going near the registrar to be registered. This list, although more than one year old, could be utilized in such a case.

Mr. GUTHRIE: As we will have to pass the clause anyway to apply to all the other provinces, and as there is no objection to the wording of the clause in general, I would suggest that we pass it and to-morrow confer on the proposals that have been made to see if we can arrange anything satisfactory with regard to the suggestions from Ontario, Quebec, and Nova Scotia.

Mr. McKENZIE: Under the Act as it stands and as the minister understands it now, how long before election day will the lists be completed as far as they can be completed?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Candidates should have the unrevised list not later than nomination day. The next five days are taken up with revision. It is provided that the candidates shall get the revised list with the final corrections on the ninth day before polling day.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the reason for granting an appeal to a man who lives in an incorporated town and not to a man who lives in a country district? For instance, a man who lives in North Sydney has the right of appeal to the county court judge if he is dissatisfied with the work of the registrar; but the man who is immediately beyond the town limits has no appeal at all from the action of the registrar in the county. I cannot understand why a man who is in the municipal district if he lives beyond the city or town should not have the same right of appeal as the other man.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a reason founded very largely in convenience. In Saskatchewan, where the system has been tried and found very satisfactory and where the ridings are very large, it is impossible within any reasonable time to provide machinery to permit the hearing of appeals between the time the lists are made and the election. That is the foundation of the difference between the procedure for the rural and the urban polls. If we had more judges, more judicial officers, and disregarded expense, perhaps we could apply the appellate system in all districts. But the argument was taken up in the Saskatchewan legislature—I get my information on this point from the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Calder)—and it was well discussed there. But the actual experience is what we base our judgment on; it has worked out to the satisfaction of everybody. Then, in the country districts throughout Ontario I am satisfied that as a rule each elector knows every other elector in the rural division—not absolutely, but as a rule. There are not nearly so many appeals in the country; there are not such difficult points to decide. A man who has been excluded can completely assert his right on polling day. But the making of a distinction was found an inconvenience and an expense, as I understand my colleague the Minister of Immigration.

Mr. McKENZIE: Why not leave it optional with the man to appeal if he wants to? If persons in rural districts which are close to cities and towns want to have that right, why should it not be given them? Of course, a man living twenty-five or thirty miles away might not wish to do this, and the only thing to do is swear him. But if a man chooses to appeal, that is his own look-out. If it is difficult; if it is expensive, he need not do it, but if he is willing to go to the trouble of appearing before a judge, why not give him the privilege of doing so?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I see a great number of difficulties in imposing territorial limitations. I see the difficulty of complexity. We have tried to have one system for the rural and one for the urban division, and to make for greater certainty we are going to put in an amendment that the Chief Electoral Officer shall at the outset decide what is an urban division and what is a rural division and what parts thereof are such. Then, there is a simple system for the one and a simple system for the other. If you make a dual system for the rural division I do not see where you are going to get any finality. The judge who hears the rural appeals would have to prepare a special list of those appeals. The urban lists are printed at printing offices but the rural lists are not printed, so that the matter might not be concluded before election day. It might be a convenience to people living near a judge to have the advantage of the dual system, but on the whole I think that it cannot work any inconvenience or any injustice to have the provision as it is set forth in the present section.

Mr. FIELDING: Perhaps the point has already been discussed, but I make the suggestion in consequence of what my hon. friend has said; what directions are to be given to the Chief Electoral Officer by which he is to be guided in determining what is urban and what is not?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Just the interpretation of the section of the Act. Then, under another section he is the absolute judge. I assume that he will communicate with the Provincial Governments and have the latest returns; he will find out from the Governments what are the incorporated towns, cities and villages in the various provinces. He will also have if he wishes to avail himself of them, the latest census returns—because we have annual returns in Ontario made up from the assessment rolls. He is at liberty to form his judgment on any data he sees fit. I have no doubt that his first duty will be to gather together that information and decide, and his discretion is absolute. A place which has a thousand people and is incorporated as a city, town or village is an urban division. But these conditions must both exist—the number of people and the incorporation.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. BUREAU: No. If it is carried, and we want to introduce amendments, we shall have to go back to it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not insist upon it, if it is a bona fide effort we are making.

Mr. BUREAU: This clause embraces ten pages of printing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not mean the schedules. We must understand this. I do not propose to consider the amendment of the clause as a general principle for the Dominion of Canada; what we are discussing is the amendment in so far as it pertains to Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. As I have suggested, we must have the clause, no matter what we specially provide for these four places, because there are five other provinces in respect of which the clause must operate.

Mr. BUREAU: My grievance is the biennial revision.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My suggestion was that the clause without the schedules be allowed to carry.

Mr. BUREAU: My amendment would come in the body of the clause.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not necessarily.

Mr. BUREAU: Oh, yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: You could put it in the schedule; you can amend the schedule just as much as the clause. However, I am not going to insist on the point. I wanted to make some progress, that is all.

Mr. BUREAU: We have made a lot of progress. That clause will go through in five minutes next time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, we have your undertaking to that effect; why not do it now?

Mr. BUREAU: I am not an undertaker.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is impossible to carry the clause without carrying it all, and the clause includes the schedules.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understood not.

The CHAIRMAN: The clause does not include the schedule unless the schedule contains an agreement ratified by the clause. If the clause is carried, the next item of business before the committee will be the consideration of the schedules to clause 32.

Mr. BUREAU: If we desire to propose amendments to the clause after it has been adopted we shall have to obtain unanimous consent to open it up again.

The CHAIRMAN: The member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) is quite right in that. If any change is to be made in the clause the clause will have to be reconsidered.

Mr. BUREAU: My amendment comes in the clause. There is no place to work it into the schedule. Let it stand.

The CHAIRMAN: That is for the committee to decide. Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Two amendments are suggested. It may be that at a conference we can reach an understanding. If we can reach an understanding to-morrow, as to-night seems to be probable, we will not bring in these amendments. But if we cannot, we want to bring in the amendments and vote on them.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My fear is that our labour is all going to be in vain. It happens that on Friday we cannot take up consideration of this Bill. Monday will be well taken up, I understand, with a special order, and on Tuesday there is the Budget. I assume that the Budget will continue until it is finished; so I am sure we shall have forgotten most of the Franchise Act in the interval.

Mr. BUREAU: Oh, no; we shall have our amendments written down and agreed upon and it will be all right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: On that understanding I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

MAPLE PRODUCTS ADULTERATION.

SENATE AMENDMENTS NOT CONCURRED IN.

Hon. NEWTON W. ROWELL (Minister of Health) moved:

That the House do not concur in the amendments made to Bill 28, an Act Respecting Maple Products, for the following reasons:—

1. Striking out clause 3 of the Bill removes the penalty for the violation of the provisions of subsection 1 of section 2 of the Bill.

2. The amendment of section 4, which purports to provide a penalty for the violation of subsection 1 of section 2 of the Bill, is not effective to accomplish the purpose.

He said: The Senate has amended the Bill by striking out section 3 which makes specific provision for a penalty for the violation of subsection 1 of section 2, and they have amended section 4 of the Bill with the intention apparently of making its provisions applicable to violations of the provisions of subsection (1) of section 2, but they are not applicable. The penal provisions provided in section 4 are those contained in section 16 of the Food and Drugs Act. That section provides penalties for three classes of offences: (1) adulteration injurious to health, (2) adulteration not deemed injurious to health and mis-branding, and (3) wilful adulteration. As violations of the provisions of subsection (1) of section 2 do not fall within any of those classes, section 16 of the Food and Drugs Act cannot be made to apply, and if it was desired to institute a prosecution for violation of those provisions one would not know which of the offences to charge or what the penalty would be. It is quite clear that the Senate made the amendments under a misapprehension, and I therefore move non-concurrence.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. ROWELL: I now beg to move:

That a message be sent by this House to the Senate to acquaint their Honours with the non-concurrence in the amendments made to Bill 28, an Act respecting Maple Products.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—REVIEW BY THE MINISTER OF THE AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY IN CANADA.

House again in committee of Supply.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Department of Agriculture—Experimental Farms—Maintenance of Central Farm and maintaining of additional branch stations, $1,200,000.

Mr. FIELDING: According to the custom the Speaker automatically leaves the Chair on Friday, but as the Estimates of the Agricultural Department have not yet been considered, my hon. friend (Mr. Tolmie) could not, strictly speaking, proceed to-day. However, we quite understand his good object, and I have no objection to his proceeding on the understanding that at a later stage abundant opportunity shall be afforded for the discussion of these items. Therefore I am very glad to concur so that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) may at once have an opportunity of making a statement.

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, before taking up the Estimates of the Department of Agriculture, I deem it advisable to outline briefly our agricultural development, the improvements that may be made in the industry, the prospects for the future, and the great importance of the development in meeting our financial obligations.

In making a brief survey of the situation, I find that we have invested in agriculture $7,379,299,000; the land under field crop in 1919 was 53,049,640 acres; the value of agricultural products in the same year amounted to $1,975,841,000.

In 1918 the mineral wealth amounted to $396,917,732; timber, $182,254,740; fisheries, $60,221,863. The total manufactures in 1917, which was an exceedingly heavy year, amounted to $2,786,649,727.

In looking over the figures in respect to wheat production, I find that while there has been a marked increase in acreage in the average year there has been a decrease in the yield per acre. In 1911 the average yield per acre was 20.80 bushels; in 1912, 20.38; in 1913, 21.04; in 1914, 15.67; in 1916, 17.10; in 1917, 15.75; in 1918, 11.00; in 1919, 10.25. In 1915, which was an exceptional year and in which the conditions were just about ideal, the average yield per acre was 26.05 bushels. We should not fail to give attention to the gradual reduction of yield in the average year, because this is exactly what has occurred in wheat growing countries which have followed the single crop system.

One of the greatest responsibilities of the Dominion Department of Agriculture as well as of similar departments in all the provinces is to conserve the fertility of our virgin soils to the very best of our ability. If we can do this we will ensure the prosperity of this great country. The best method to follow to bring about this result is that of carrying on mixed farming with livestock as a basis. As a splendid example of what can be done along these lines, let me point to Great Britain, a country very small in area compared with Canada, in which they have created and maintained in a state of perfection more breeds of horses, cattle, sheep and swine than all the rest of the world combined. While breeders from many other parts of the world have gone to Great Britain and made importations of some of their best stock, and on their return have actually taken a Scotchman along so as to ensure good care of them, after a few years they have found it necessary to return to the Old Land and secure new blood to maintain the standard of perfection.

There is great need in this country for a vigorous and continuous campaign of agricultural education, education along the lines of better methods of farming, better livestock, better seeds and better marketing. I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, the possible results that may be achieved through the employing of better methods of agriculture, without turning over a single fresh acre of land. All hon. members who have had experience in farming will agree that an increase of three bushels per acre of wheat is not an extraordinary expectation as the result of better methods. We may assume, therefore, that this is a reasonable figure. In 1919 we had 672,793 acres in fall wheat, giving an average yield of 23.75 bushels per acre, valued at $31,521,000. If we had an increase of three bushels per acre as the result of better methods, the value of that increase in cash would have been $3,976,206. In the same year we had 18,453,175 acres in spring wheat, with an average yield of 9.50 bushels per acre valued at $333,336,000. An increase of three bushels per acre would have given us an increased return of not less than $104,075,907. In the same connection it is fair to assume that we might secure from better cultural methods six additional bushels per acre of oats, four of barley and fifty of potatoes. In 1919 we had 14,952,114 acres in oats with an average yield of 26.25 bushels per acre, valued at $317,097,000. An increase of six bushels per acre would have given us an extra yield worth $71,770,147. In barley we had 2,645,509 acres with a yield of 21.25 bushels per acre, valued at $77,462,700. An increase of four bushels only per acre would have increased the cash value of that crop by $14,497,389. In potatoes we had 818,767 acres with a yield of 153.5 bushels per acre, worth $118,894,200. An increased yield of 50 bushels per acre would have given us an increased cash value of $38,891,433. This makes an estimated annual increase from grain and potatoes alone, as a result of improved methods of agriculture, of $233,211,082 per year.

Now, remember that this is an estimate made on the basis of not turning over one fresh acre of land. Some hon. gentlemen may think that these estimates are unreasonable. But let me point out what the results have been of experiments on our Government farms. It has been shown that as a result of using good seed, that is, of changing from an unsuitable variety to a variety that will suit the location, an increase of not less than from fifty to eighty per cent has been secured. For instance, a variety that is too long in maturing in a certain district where it is liable to frost may be entirely destroyed. Other varieties, again, may mature too quickly in certain districts without filling out and without giving a proper yield. The use of pedigree seed instead of seed of a nondescript variety has given an increase on our Government farms of ten per cent and upwards. The use of clean seed, free from weeds and foreign grain, has given an increase of ten per cent and upwards. Disease-free seed, particularly potatoes, has given most excellent results, in some cases producing an increase of from fifty to one hundred per cent. Rotation of crops—that is, the arrangement of the crops in rotation over periods of three, four or five years so as to retain the fertility of the soil—has given an increase of seven per cent and upwards. Thorough cultivation has given an increase of five per cent and upwards, and, in some dry areas, there was the difference between a fair crop and no crop at all. By the use of commercial and ordinary farm fertilizers, very largely increased production can be secured. These figures, as I have pointed out, are not guess work; they are the result of experiments carried on by the experimental farms from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This indicates, not only the value of the experimental farms, but the results that may be obtained by better farming methods.

I have been pointing out to the committee simply what may be done by a better method of cultivation. There is still another very large field that is practically untouched, and that is in the immense areas of virgin soil in Canada. This can be reached by encouraging agricultural immigration of the right class to take up these lands, and if this be done, satisfactory and immediate results will be obtained. We should not, however, make any of the mistakes we have made in the past in allowing every one to immigrate to this country and giving him the privilege of Canadian citizenship. We should be a little more discriminating and select a better class, bringing in the kind of men who are willing to work and settle on our farms and keeping out the soap-box orator and the man who would rather talk than work.

Agriculture has not escaped entirely from the unrest experienced in other lines of industry. We find our farmers going into certain lines of production for a year or two and then getting out of them in a hurry and leaving the market short. An excellent illustration of that is the hog industry, which requires stabilization to a certain extent. We find that hogs are being brought all the way from the city of Winnipeg to the Pacific coast merely to meet the local requirements, and in addition to that hundreds of carcasses are being imported from the American side. This should not be, and it is largely due to the high price of grain and to the lack of faith on the part of the farmer in present market conditions.

We find that the farming industry has been very slow to go into sheep rearing. In Australia, there are no less than 80,000,000 sheep; in the United States, 40,000,000; in Great Britain, 27,000,000, and in Canada, only 3,500,000. If you ask a farmer why he does not go into these industries, he will tell you that it does not pay; but by actual experiments at our experimental farms, it is clearly shown that in almost every year these two lines, hog raising and sheep raising, have shown a satisfactory profit. This again indicates the need of more education along the line of better farming and better livestock.

Let us look for a moment at what can be done by the use of better animals and by better feeding and finishing of our livestock. Canada has to-day 3,543,600 dairy cows which have an estimated average production of less than 4,000 pounds of milk per year. Any dairyman farmer, who has any ambition, should aim to have his cows average a production of at least 7,000 pounds a year, and some of the herds of this country average over 14,000 pounds per cow. Supposing that we were able to obtain this increase, and we valued the increase at only $2 per hundred pounds, that would mean an increase in the yield of $60 per cow, which would bring us a total increase annually of no less than $212,616,000.

The total number of beef cattle marketed through our inspected abattoirs—and these are not by any means all the beef cattle killed in the country—amounted in 1919 to 1,026,141 head. Many of these were of poor quality and in very poor condition. I visited an abattoir in Toronto, went over the killing floors, where they were putting through some 700 head that day, and some of our western representatives will be surprised to learn that these cattle were passing through with a weight of from 250 to 350 pounds per carcass. Had the animals been in condition and properly grown, they would have weighed at least twice that, and would have sold for a much higher price. It is safe to say that, by better feeding and by keeping our cattle better, we could secure an increase of weight of 300 pounds per head which would mean an increase of $36 in cash per head, or an annual increase of $36,941,076.

The hogs slaughtered at our inspected establishments, that is the packing houses where they kill hogs for export and for interprovincial trade and where we maintain a staff of inspectors, number 2,373,810 head with an average weight of 189 pounds in 1919. They should have averaged, had they been in proper condition and fully grown, 220 pounds per head. Of this number, 158,254 were what are known as light hogs or "lights." These should have weighed 80 pounds or more, or an increase of 12,666,320 pounds; with an increase of thirty pounds on the balance of the hogs, an increase of 66,466,680 pounds could have been secured, or a total gain, had all these hogs been up to standard, of 79,127,000 pounds which, at 17 cents per pound, would have amounted to $13,451,590.

Let us consider for a moment the innocent little Canadian hen, of which we have 41,000,000 flying on and off the nest in Canada. The average yield of the Canadian hen is only from 5½ to 6 dozen eggs a year. By better breeding and selection, very much better results can be obtained, because some of the hens in high-class flocks are yielding from twenty to twenty-five dozen eggs a year. An increase of only one dozen eggs a year by better selection and breeding would result in an increase in our poultry wealth of $12,300,000 at 30 cents a dozen, to say nothing of the results that can be obtained in bettering the quality of our fowl which are disposed of for the table.

The results I have referred to will give us an increase in our field crops of $233,211,082, an increase in our livestock of $275,308,666 as a result of improved methods, making a total of $508,519,748, or more than one-quarter of our total national debt per year, and this, without turning over a single fresh acre. I would ask if it is not reasonable that we should make every effort to attain this end?

These are just a few striking illustrations of the possibilities of a better system of agriculture, and the figures that I have given show, without any doubt, the necessity of more agricultural education. We are disseminating this education to-day through the medium of our experimental farms, agricultural colleges, agricultural exhibitions, agricultural press, county agents, the Livestock Branch, the Seed Branch, the Fruit Branch, the Entomological Branch, Dairy Branch, and the Health of Animals Branch. While we are accomplishing a great deal of good work, our work would be vastly increased if more money were available for the purpose.

To show the results of agricultural education in the livestock business and the benefits to be obtained from campaigns of education, let me point out that when we in Canada first began to become interested in the big market for our hogs in Great Britain, our hogs were on the whole of a more or less nondescript variety. We had the American thick-fat hog, the scrub hog, and a few of the bacon type. We soon learned that the Danes and the Irish were supplying the British market with what is known as the bacon-type hog. An attempt was immediately made in this country to induce our farmers to rear that type so as to meet the requirements of that market, and to show you the excellent results obtained, I might say that during the past year in our inspected abattoirs no less than 85 per cent of the hogs that passed through these establishments were of the bacon type. That shows the results of agricultural propaganda of the right kind. I am quite confident that if this had been left to individual effort, not nearly as good results would have been obtained.

Let me give another example to show what can be accomplished by improved methods of caring for livestock. On a one hundred acre farm on Vancouver Island are two brothers, neither of whom has ever had any training in an agricultural college. They are shrewd business men, anxious to improve their opportunities and willing to work. They maintain on this farm 3,000 head of high class poultry. They carefully trap nest their hens, and have registered some of the best of them with the result that to-day for their best hatching eggs they are securing no less than $7 per dozen. On the same farm a Jersey herd was established about ten years ago, and to-day that herd averages more than 550 pounds of butter fat per cow, while the average scrub or nondescript cow is satisfied with 125 pounds. This is another example of what can be done by improving one's methods and a willingness to work. Let me give another example. Last year in British Columbia a single cow yielded within twelve months 32,000 pounds of milk, which is just eighty pounds less than the world's record, and which is eight times as much as the yield of the average Canadian cow. This one cow required only one-eighth of the room in the stable that was required for eight average cows, needed only one-eighth the care, and consumed a little more than one-eight of the feed required by eight scrub cows. The farmer that kept eight average cows to yield as much milk was at a loss at the prevailing price of feed and found that at the end of the year he had been farming in a circle and had not got anywhere. After balancing his receipts and expenditures he found that he had got nothing from his year's work but the fresh air and the exercise, whereas the man with the 32,000 pound cow was able to sell that milk for $1,280 and he sold the cow with a heifer calf for $15,000 to be shipped all the way to Pennsylvania. The heifer calf brought $1,000. The value of knowing how to do things was worth in this particular case at least $14,000.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: If these methods were followed by the average farmer does the minister think there is a market for very many $15,000 cows?

Mr. TOLMIE: There is a market at the present time for every cow of that kind that we can produce. Anybody who would come all the way from Pennsylvania to British Columbia to get one of that kind must have needed it pretty badly. Some one may say that this was a rich man's cow, and that a poor man could not afford to keep her. Let us look at her history. She was bred near Syracuse, New York, and as a calf was sold for $150, a price within the reach of any half prosperous farmer. Had she fallen into the hands of a scrub farmer, who had wintered her on the sunny side of a straw stack and kept her on a sheep pasture in the summer she would still be worth about that price, but she fell into the hands of an intelligent man who knew how to handle her, and under his methods she gave these records, and at ten years of age he was able to dispose of her for the price noted.

Let us take another case which will perhaps appeal to some of our friends a little more strongly because it is the case of a cattle ranch. In this case while good methods of farming were followed better methods secured very much better results. In a valley in British Columbia east of the Cascade Mountains is a cattle ranch, where several thousand head are kept. It was managed by an old cowman who had come over the Texas trail, and who knew that good sires would produce good results. He purchased good sires for use on the ranch, and his cattle were a little better than any other cattle in the neighbourhood. Some time ago the ranch was taken over by another man and under the new management the sires were improved and the poor females carefully culled out. The result was that the beef turned off from this ranch averaged in a few years 150 pounds more per head than they had under former conditions. That shows what may be accomplished by good feeding and good breeding. Good breeding alone will not put the live stock business on a sound basis. We must learn to feed more liberally, and as an illustration let me give the result of an experiment at Nappan Experimental Farm in Nova Scotia, where a number of heifer calves were secured from farmers in the district who maintained scrub herds. By careful feeding all these heifers in their first lactation period produced 50 per cent more milk than their dams under ordinary management, and the offspring of these heifers from a pure-bred sire yielded twice as much as the scrub grand dam. This is a striking illustration of the results obtained first by good feeding, and secondly by good breeding. We need to feed and keep our cattle better all over Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. On the average they are not well enough fed during the winter months. We are too much inclined to gamble on the weather, particularly in some of our ranching areas, where if we have good luck we win out, but if we have a severe winter we lose heavily. What we require is more haystack insurance, that is, we want to make provision for the severe winter. In many of the semi-arid sections lying east of the mountains I think we can obtain no better results than by following out a system of irrigation wherever the water is available and the soil suitable for the purpose. This will bring us excellent results. I have seen wonderful results in British Columbia, Oregon, Washington and Idaho where I have seen lands that would yield nothing but rattlesnakes and sage brush turned into a veritable garden. Alfalfa and many other crops could be produced in Alberta under irrigation, and in some of our non-irrigable areas very much better results could be obtained by sowing these crops that will grow under semi-arid conditions; brome grass, for instance, western rye grass, and a plant that is coming into vogue nowadays and attracting a great deal of attention, namely, sweet clover. At Scott, Saskatchewan, with a rainfall of less than eight inches during the growing season sweet clover produced a considerably heavier yield than alfalfa under the same conditions.

There is another line that has been overlooked to a great extent, but which where it has been adopted has yielded excellent results, and that is the silo system. It costs $3 or $4 per ton capacity to build a wooden silo with iron hoops. Corn has perhaps been given the most prominence among silo plants, but in those areas which are liable to frost it is not so good as sunflowers, which are now being used for the same purpose. They will stand a temperature of 27 degrees, or 5 degrees of frost. Experiments carried on in Montana have shown that 2½ tons of sunflowers ensilage is equal in feeding value to a ton of alfalfa hay, and as you will remember a ton of alfalfa hay is equal in feeding value to nearly one ton of bran. At Strathmore farm in Alberta, owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company it was found that the cows gave more milk, and of a much better quality and maintained their weight better on sunflowers than on corn. At Scott, Saskatchewan, with a precipitation of only 7.45 inches of rain in the year a yield of from 5 to 7 tons of sunflowers per acre was obtained, and in a steer feeding experiment carried on there the sunflowers gave a feeding value of $13.81 per ton, which is very high, yielding in cash value, from $69.05 to $97.67 per acre. At Kapuskasing in Northern Ontario the yield of sunflowers was 25 tons per acre; at Strathmore on the Canadian Pacific farm in Alberta, under irrigation conditions 34.06 tons; at an experimental farm in Montana, no less than 44.01 tons per acre, a tremendous contrast to the average yield of "prairie wool," which is a half-ton to three-quarters of a ton per acre."

This opens up a vast field for the production of cheap feed for the maintenance of our livestock. Better feeding will save our cattle in severe winters. It will produce larger and better cattle all round and we shall be able to send better finished cattle to market, securing very much more satisfactory prices. If the livestock business of this country is to be put on a sound basis we must feed more liberally, and in this connection I may say that the branches of this department are keenly alive to the importance of this subject as is evidenced by the fact that they are conducting experiments with these fodder plants on twenty of their farms from the Atlantic to the Pacific. All the information that is obtained as a result of these experiments is absolutely free to the farmer who is desirous to get it.

Realizing that many of our cattle are sent to market in an unfinished condition and at great consequent loss to the country, the department last winter introduced a system by which they are giving special prizes for car lots and groups of cattle at the livestock shows. At Brandon this year no fewer than 300 head of cattle were on exhibition, and an American judge who was present pronounced the calves he saw there to be the best collection he had so far seen on the continent this year. At Chicago the International show has accomplished wonders for the American livestock business by encouraging production of finished animals; and realizing this, we were glad to contribute to the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair Association of Canada a sum to assist them in carrying on a show there every year. While at the outset that show will not be on as large a scale as that which is held at Chicago, I am quite sure that in a few years the Toronto Exhibition will compete with the Chicago show, and will render very great assistance to the livestock industry of this country.

Since the war another problem has been worrying agriculturalists all over the country, and that is the problem of keeping the boy and girl on the farm. All the literature that I have seen on the subject shows quite plainly that no panacea has been discovered to meet the difficulty in connection with the exodus of the boys and girls from the farms. I think that hon. gentlemen will all agree that we can go a long way towards solving the problem by adopting better farm methods; by making the home more attractive; by keeping better livestock; by making more profit on the farm, which will make possible more comfortable conditions such as will be conducive to happiness and contentment; by making conditions tolerable for the farmer's wife; and generally by doing everything we can to make life on the farm attractive. In addition to this, I think that good roads and cheap automobiles should play a very great part in helping to keep the young people on the farms by rendering very valuable assistance to the farmer in different ways in connection with his work and by enabling him and his family to move around and mix with the neighbours, thus obtaining some social pleasure out of life. In this regard the women's institutes of the country have been performing a worthy service and one that has been of great value. We have women's institutes scattered throughout the country from coast to coast, and recently a Federation of Women's institutes was formed. These organizations are an excellent medium through which to improve farm life. They do a great deal of splendid work in spreading social propaganda. They have instituted household science work, giving instruction in the domestic arts, in home nursing, sanitation, improvement in social conditions, and they are exercising a very wide-spread influence which cannot but make for the enlightenment and advancement of all those who live on the farm. These women have worked very generously during the war, and the organization referred to being non-sectarian and non-partisan they have been capable of rendering highly valuable service to the country.

There is something else that will improve agriculture and business generally, and that is a better understanding between the city man and the farmer. When the city man gets his quart of milk in the morning and has to pay 15 cents for it, he is rather inclined to designate the farmer a profiteer; but he probably does not know the history of that quart of milk. He does not realize that the cow from which it was obtained cost possibly twice as much as she would in 1914; he does not know that all the fodder used for that cow is just about double in price what it was four or five years ago; he does not realize the fact that labour is scarce and that the farmer has to stay at home and milk his cows twice a day 365 days of the year, including holidays, birthdays and all. On the other hand, the farmer should realize that 80 per cent of the goods he turns off his farm are either manufactured or consumed in Canada, so that the home market is easily his biggest market; and that every time a new sawmill is put up, or a new logging camp, a new mining camp, a new factory, or any other new industry established, all this increases his big home market.

I am not personally in favour of any policy which proposes to tear down one industry in order to build up another; I feel that there is room for all of our industries in this great country. What we need is more national thought and more business co-operation between city man and country man. I may remark that very excellent results have been obtained in the United States in certain sections where bankers and business men have established amicable social relations with the farmers in their surrounding agricultural districts In many cases the city men have backed the farmers, enabled them to increase their capital, to establish their dairy industry on a sounder and better basis, to go in more extensively for hog raising, etc., with the result that while the agricultural industry in these districts formerly just dragged along, many have now become prosperous and the business men find an excellent market right at their door.

The war and its inevitable after effects, not to mention the debts that have been incurred, have brought us face to face with the great necessity of production, and we must realize the importance of the man who produces, whether agriculturally or industrially, as compared with the man who heretofore has thrived on the efforts of others. In our present situation we cannot hope to free ourselves from the incubus of our debts without great national effort. This is the time for energetic action; this is the time for thrift and sound commonsense. Our markets are receiving careful attention. We realize that the surest way to stabilize our agricultural industry is to furnish the farmer with an absolutely reliable market, or one as nearly approximating that standard as possible, so that he can be always sure of getting reasonable prices for his produce when he is ready to sell it. The home market is receiving close attention, and any one who is unable to-day to obtain an article in his own town should endeavour to get it in the neighbouring town rather than send to a foreign country for it.

What we need is more home buying. We have to the south of us a very good market for our agricultural produce, particularly for our livestock and many other articles which the farmers produce. It is very convenient and within easy reach, but I think we would be rather short-sighted if we did not give some attention to the development of the great market overseas, and especially the market of Great Britain. I believe in building up a bond of sympathy between the old Mother Country and this one, one of her most important Dominions. In addition to the bond of sympathy between us, we can find in the Old Land a business that is a very profitable and satisfactory one to this country. On the continent of Europe there is also a most excellent market.

Realizing the opportunities on the continent of Europe, the Department of Agriculture secured, immediately after the winter fairs were held, two first-class Canadian steers, which were exhibited in France, Belgium and Switzerland, with most excellent results. One firm alone has shipped to the continent of Eurpoe no less than 20,000 head of cattle, and many others are shiping very largely whenever shipping space is obtainable. We have had some very favourable comments from the European papers regarding these cattle, in the first place alluding particularly to the quality and condition of the animals, and in the second place to the enterprise of the country which adopted that practical method of displaying her goods. Another strong feature in connection with our cattle is the reputation they have made on account of their good health. We have no foot and mouth disease in this country. One of our greatest competitors on the continent of Europe is the Argentine Republic and some other South American countries, where foot and mouth disease prevails most of the time. Looking to the West, there is also a market springing up on the Pacific ocean.

Mr. MORPHY: In regard to these cattle from Canada which you have shipped to Great Britain, is there any restriction upon their entry as there was formerly?

M. TOLMIE: Those cattle that I spoke of were shipped to the continent of Europe. I will touch upon the British embargo a little later.

Mr. MORPHY: Are they admitted free to the continent of Europe?

Mr. TOLMIE: Yes.

Mr. MORPHY: But not into England?

Mr. TOLMIE: Not into England. On the Pacific we have at the present time a market that is worth to the United States and Canada something over $1,000,000,000. You will be surprised to learn that China is one of the chief consumers of Canadian condensed milk and that Japan also takes many other lines of goods. To Australia, New Zealand and the Hawaiian Islands, we have recently been sending consignments of our pure-bred stock. These markets are not yet very large for livestock, but they will gradually increase. There is also the chance for a market on the east and west coasts of South America for pure-bred animals. We are keenly alive to the situation, we are keeping in close touch with it, and we give the producer in Canada the benefit of any information which may be of use to him just as soon as we obtain it. In addition to what I have just mentioned in connection with our markets, we are building up strong marketing organizations. We have control now of our stockyards to ensure the seller fair treatment when he ships his cattle to those yards. We encourage the co-operative marketing of livestock and ordinary farm produce. As an illustration of the good results that may come from effort in this direction I may say that in consequence of the system of grading and inspecting our eggs shipped to the Old Country, we secured from 19 to 20 cents more per dozen than was received for eggs sent from the United States. We cannot expect to compete in foreign markets unless we keep our produce up to the highest standard, which standard must be carefully maintained.

In this connection, and recognizing this fact, we adopted some time ago a system of distributing pure-bred sires throughout the country so as to raise the quality of our stock. Recently we have entered into an agreement with the province of Ontario whereby we are trying out a scheme known as the scrub sire campaign. In this campaign representatives are sent to farms where scrub animals are kept, information is given as to the better results that can be secured from better breeding and feeding, and an effort is made to induce the farmers to use better sires. Canada is also doing a very good business in pure-bred animals. There is a stiff demand in the United States for pure-bred cattle, and high prices are being offered. As an illustration of this, I might mention the fact that an Ontario calf, only seven months ago sold for $106,000.

Great Britain still maintains an embargo against Canadian cattle. We have been making continuous efforts for thirty years to have that embargo lifted, but so far without success. I can assure the House that as long as I am in this position, and as long as there is any possibility of success, I will continue those efforts to have that embargo removed.

Our meat inspection service is carried on in the abattoirs that slaughter animals for export and interprovincial trade. This meat inspection is very close and strict and on every carcase that is passed as being fit for food you will find a little blue stamp bearing the words "Canada Approved." Some of these carcasses are shipped out of the country but you can secure inspected meat in many butcher shops in this country by insisting upon getting meat bearing the "Canada Approved" mark. Cattle that are slaughtered and sold in small butcher shops and not passing through the abattoirs are inspected either by the Provincial Government or the municipalities where inspection is enforced. The Dominion Government does not undertake this local inspection.

The Health of Animals Branch is charged with the care of the health of the live stock of this country. We have established what are known as "accredited herds" in an effort on our part to eliminate tuberculosis from our pure-bred herds. We hope that by creating little nuclei of pure-bred herds we will soon start on the road towards getting rid of tuberculosis in this country, a disease which is causing serious losses in all the countries of the world. We also deal with hog cholera and comparing our work with that of the United States we find that we have made very much better progress in dealing with that disease. According to the latest figures hog cholera in this country amounted to only one-half of one per cent. Dourine is another disease that has caused great loss among horses in Alberta and this disease has been practically wiped out as a result of our efforts. The success of this work is largely due to Dr. Watson who was in the employ of the department and who was able to isolate the organism which was responsible for the disease and to develop a serum which was very useful in reducing and controlling it. In Alberta we have also what is known as mange; and this area has been under quarantine for some time on account of the cattle having mange, which is a skin disease. We expect to be able to get rid of this disease during the coming summer. We have an organization and equipment for dealing with the matter and hon. gentlemen will appreciate the magnitude of the undertaking when I mention that we will require baths to give a lime and sulphur bath to over 200,000 head of cattle.

We have also raised the standard of veterinary teaching in this country. That is very important because we have over a billion dollars invested in the livestock industry. Within the last few years there have been serious outbreaks of foot and mouth disease on the American side and had we been at all careless we would have had this disease in Canada and we would have lost many millions of dollars. Thanks however, to the vigilance of our Health of Animals Branch, the disease was kept out.

Animals are subject to other diseases which, while not included in our Contagious Diseases Act, cause serious losses. For instance, our losses per year on poultry alone amount to over $7,000,000. Contagious abortion and sterility in cattle, and internal parasites require very careful investigation, so that in that way we secure information of great value to the farmer.

Now, while the importance of pure-bred sires and the better breeding of livestock cannot be overestimated, the production of pure seed is just as important. We have in connection with the Department of Agriculture a Seed Branch, whose business it is to encourage the use of new and improved varieties of seed, and to disseminate propaganda on the value of using improved seed. We have a system of stimulating the interest of farmers in this work by distributing to them good varieties to be grown under certain conditions, and many farmers become seed-growing specialists. In this way a great deal of valuable seed is turned out every year. Then we have a system under which seed grown under certain restrictions is eligible for registration, and last year we produced 100,000 bushels of registered seed. We also encourage the use of improved seed through field crop competitions, seed fairs, and provincial seed exhibitions, by which means several million bushels of high quality seed is produced annually, and this registered seed is doled out to the seed men throughout the country, so that our work affects the whole Dominion.

What are the actual results obtained? There has been a great increase in the production of timothy seed in Alberta. A few years ago only a small quantity was grown, but last year no less than 20,000 bushels were produced. Our Canadian market can consume 300,000 bushels of this seed annually, and the export market would take 2,000,000 bushels if we had it to sell. In 1918 the clover seed of the country was valued at no less than $10,000,000. Clover seed has been produced of excellent quality, particularly on the clay lands of Northern Ontario. Before the war practically all our field and vegetable seed was imported from Germany and other European countries, but owing to the excellent work performed by our Seed Branch we are now able not only to supply our domestic demand but to export in considerable quantities.

Much has been done too in creating seed potato centres for the production of disease-free seed. This has made a tremendous difference in some sections. The lower St. Lawrence valley has established an excellent reputation for producing high-class potato seed, and northern grown Canadian seed of all kinds is gaining a very good reputation throughout the continent.

During the war the Seed Branch took up emergency seed distribution to meet the prevailing war conditions, and they established a Seed Purchasing Commission, which did very effective work in maintaining a supply of seed during the whole war period in spite of very heavy handicaps. This Commission had a turn-over of $12,000,000, every cent of which has been returned to the Receiver

General, and in addition they were able to pay all operating expenses.

I may point out for the benefit of hon. members from the West that it is not the intention of the department to withdraw the Seed Purchasing Commission from the western provinces until normal conditions are reached in that section.

The Fruit Branch has also been rendering very excellent service by enforcing the Inspection and Sale Act, inspecting and grading fruit and the filling of packages, and by giving practical demonstrations in orchard cultivation, pruning, spraying, grading and so forth. They also carry on inspection at the point of shipment. In this way they protect our trade by ensuring that the fruit is sent to market in first-class condition, and where found satisfactory, certificates are given on carload lots, which assist the sale of the fruit at destination.

Crop reports are issued by telegraph during the growing season, and when the sales are proceeding in Great Britain we receive market reports which are sent all over the country so as to place the grower on a perfectly sound footing in marketing his produce. Attention is also given to railway and express tariffs and the handling of fruit in transit.

It is a matter of more than passing interest in this connection that Great Britain is proving to be our one big market of importance. Another matter of interest is that box fruit is becoming much more popular. In addition to our export business with Great Britain, we also ship to the United States, Australia and New Zealand in their off seasons when they have no fruit to sell.

Our Experimental Farm system is rendering a very valuable service to the country, but unfortunately it is not perhaps as well appreciated as it might be. Our stations are situated in all the provinces, and particular care is taken in carrying on experiments in regard to adaptability of the soil for production, climatic conditions, and so forth in new sections. All this information is made immediately available for the farmers in those districts. For instance, a settler going in can immediately secure full information on the best means of growing crops in that section by applying to the Experimental Farm. It is estimated that this service is worth $60,000,000 a year to the country. Frequently we hear people complaining that our Experimental Farms do not pay. This is rather an unreasonable attitude when we take into consideration the very small plots of ground that are used for carrying on experimental work, in some cases not more than one-fortieth of an acre, which it is necessary to cultivate by hand—the most expensive kind of work. In the event of something of value being discovered, it is not given to the public right away, but further experiments are conducted in control plots, and the experiments may run over four or five years to make sure of the correctness of the results obtained before the information is passed on to the farmers. After all, the real harvest and profit from an experimental plot is not the small amount of grain, roots or seed that may be obtained from it, it is the information that is filed away in the office for the use of our farmers.

The Entomological Branch is also rendering good service, but it is very little known. The work has to do with the destruction of parasites injurious to crops. Hon. members will perhaps be surprised to learn that our losses from injurious parasites amount to $125,000,000 a year. In some parts of the West, in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and also in Alberta, we are now threatened with a grass-hopper plague. We are combatting these grass-hoppers by treating them with a mixture consisting of arsenic, bran and molasses. To give an idea of the extent of our operations in co-operation with the Provincial Governments, I may say that the work will require 100,000 pounds of arsenic, 2,000 tons of bran and 50,000 gallons of molasses for the purpose. When we take into consideration the fact that from 2 to 4 grains of arsenic are sufficient to kill a human being, I think we may reasonably expect that 50 tons of arsenic will take the hop out of a considerable number of those grass-hoppers. It has been suggested that we try poisonous gases for this purpose. There are many difficulties in the way, but we are carrying on a quiet investigation and if there is any promise of success we may go further with the matter. The brown-tail moth is another parasite that has caused a lot of trouble to our orchards in the East, but luckily that pest is now almost under control. In British Columbia we have what is known as pear thrips, which have done some damage to orchards out there. As an illustration of what has been done by the Entomological Branch, I may say that in one particular orchard that I know of the yield in one year was only 700 boxes of pears. That year work was commenced by the Entomological Branch and in the next year the harvest amounted to 7,000 boxes.

The Entomological Branch has been brought to a high state of efficiency by the late Dr. C. Gordon Hewitt, a gentleman of high scientific attainment and of very large calibre. We were unfortunate enough to lose him through death some weeks ago. He possessed great executive ability, and his loss will be a serious one to agriculture and to science, not only in Canada, but all over the world; for he was becoming widely known on account of his scientific attainments. I wish to pay this tribute to Dr. Hewitt's ability and to the very great work that he performed in this country.

Another new line of industry that is doing well and making good progress is the tobacco industry. The crop last year amounted to over 20,000,000 pounds, worth about $8,000,000. But this industry is only in its early stages; there is a great deal to be done in securing co-operation so as to facilitate the putting up of curing plants and the improvement of marketing facilities. The Department of Agriculture has been interesting itself in this industry. We have a man overseas who is looking into the possibilities of the British market and trying to make arrangements for the selling of Canadian tobacco. When he returns we expect that he will bring with him a great deal of valuable information which will help us to attain this end.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have taken up a great deal of the time of the committee, but I thought it advisable to outline rather briefly the possibilities of agriculture in this country. I have also directed attention to the important part that agriculture can play in meeting our present financial situation. The prospects for development, I think you will agree, are practically unlimited. In briefly summarizing the situation, I may say that it will be the object of the department to facilitate and encourage production and better methods of farming by the medium of education, demonstration and illustration; to encourage a system of mixed farming with live stock as a basis; to increase and encourage better feeding, finishing and marketing of live stock; to develop our export trade in agricultural products; to expand our marketing policy in every posible way and to have our goods, when they are placed on the market, of such quality and in such condition as to enable us to meet successfully any competition that may offer; to improve and extend our facilities for handling perishable products; to conserve carefully the health of our live stock and to maintain the high reputation we now possess in this connection; to assist in the development of special lines of production which have not yet become thoroughly established; to encourage co-operation and co-operative selling; to improve transportation facilities for handling our products; to investigate the possibilities of securing cheaper money for our farmers so as to enable them to increase their production; to use our best efforts to rigidly apply such legislation as is on the statute book for the protection of the farmer.

I feel that a policy of this kind is an absolutely safe one and can bring about nothing but the best results. Of course, our efforts in this connection will be limited to the amount of expenditure that we shall be able to make. After travelling all over Canada I find myself to be more than ever a thorough believer in this country. I am more strongly than ever impressed with the extent of our wonderful resources. There should really be no pessimism at this time on the part of our Canadian people, if they will only consider the tremendous wealth of this country and its possibilities. While it is necessary to apply taxation to meet our immediate requirements, it should be but a temporary burden and but a side line to a big progressive movement for more business and the development of our wonderful opportunities in agricultural and natural resources. All that is required is an intelligent handling of the situation, and I feel that with the spirit of the Canadian people behind it no safer plan of action can be adopted and nothing is surer of success than the policy which I have indicated.

Mr. WHITE (Victoria): Without presuming to be the agricultural critic on this side, I may say that although I agree with nearly everything the minister has said, particularly with his remarks respecting the improvement of stock by breeding and feeding, it is possible that some of the minister's figures may be misleading. If I understood him aright, he said, speaking of the loss that Canadian producers had sustained in the matter of hogs, that the weight of these animals might have been increased with advantage to the producer. Well, it is possible that if the weight had been increased there would have been a greater loss to the producer. Not every one may know that there are certain limitations as to size and weight. Hogs in our country weighing from 175 to 225 pounds are worth four, five, sometimes six cents a pound more than those which go above that weight. So that the statements given out by the minister might mislead some who have not much practical knowledge or who are beginners, and who might sustain a loss rather than make a profit if this suggestion of the minister was adopted. A few years ago a young man who had invested a considerable amount of money in live stock in my part of the country was trying to follow the directions issued by the Central Experimental Farm. He was feeding the hogs on rations as laid down by that branch of the Department, but he was feeding them under different circumstances. In the Experimental Farm the hogs had the benefit of steam coils to keep them warm, but this young man was feeding them in a stable in which the temperature was not very well regulated; consequently he lost his stock by following that advice.

The minister gave us examples of what can be done by breeding. He told us of a certain cow that was sold for $15,000 and about large production of milk being obtained under certain circumstances. Well, very often these large productions of milk cost more than the milk itself is really worth. A few years ago I saw at the Winter Fair in Ottawa a cow that was making a record by producing 100 or 108 pounds of milk a day. But the fact of the matter was that they were giving her that milk to drink, after adding some other foods to it, and it was costing more to get that increased production than the production was worth. I simply point to these facts in case people might be carried away by the minister's statement that everybody should go into the raising of expensive stock and that if they did they would find a ready market for it.

We know that high prices are paid for the winners in all classes of animals. For instance, a few years ago in Chicago a rancher from my province bought a pure-bred Hereford bull for $27,000. It took a judge two days to decide which was the better of the two, this bull and another one, and the one that was placed next to this one in the prize list, sold for $3,010. This is simply a case of the top price being given for the one which became famous owing to the fact that he was a prize winner. Some time ago a Boston terrier sold for $15,000. The animal was, of course, not worth that; he was not, for utility purposes, worth more than any cur running about the streets; but he was a prize winner at the show, and somebody wanted him and was willing to pay this price.

As regards the record cow of which the minister spoke, if he had given us figures to show how many cows were used for dairy purposes, and what was the average production and its value, per cow, the people of the country would know what there was in dairying. As regards prizes and encouragement given by the Government to carloads of steers and other things, in many cases the expense is greater than the value of the prize.

The minister has stated that we do not feed our animals enough, but I think the average farmer throughout the country feeds in the most profitable way. When hay is worth $60 a ton, as it was this year in the western country, and a man was induced to put three or four tons of hay into an animal during the six months of feeding there was this winter, he would not find that profitable advice when he discovered that he had put $250 worth of feed into a steer that would not sell for $120. Circumstances alter cases, and the average farmer may be trusted to know pretty nearly what pays him and what does not. Although we are all in favour of improving stock and the breeding of cattle, and we have every confidence that the minister, as an old showman and a man who has handled a great deal of stock, will give the stock breeders all the encouragement they can possibly expect from the present Minister of Agriculture, I was just pointing out these facts, because I am afraid he looks at the stock business more with the eye of a showman than as a practical man who is making a living out of the business. I have always used pure-bred sires in all classes of animals, and I have always had a herd of pure-bred cattle; but the man who makes the money makes it, not out of his pure-bred herd, but out of his grade herd, and the bigger the grade herd, the more money he makes. In the western country, every stock man who looks after his business well makes money out of his grade herd, but I do not know of any who have made money by going into the high-class, pure-bred stock. The reason for that is that there is room for only one or two at the top of this kind of breeding, and if many went into the business, the result would be disastrous.

While I appreciate what the minister has said, I do not take his figures altogether seriously when he says that we should continue feeding our hogs and cattle when it is not profitable to do so. If the average man carried his hogs over until they obtained a weight of four or five or six hundred pounds, he would find he was losing money. After a hog gets over the select weight of, say 175 to 225 pounds, the extra expense of making it heavier would mean only less profit to the producer. Perhaps those who were turning their cattle off at lighter weights, found that paid them better than to carry them over until they reached a heavier weight. Many ranchers in Alberta made a great mistake last year in not selling because prices were a little lower than usual. They could have got eight or nine cents a pound for their stock, but they would not sell as they had been accustomed to higher prices. Now they find that they have added to the cost of their steers possibly $120 to $150; in many cases they have not as many as they had before, and they find that steers have cost them more to carry over than they are really worth. Therefore, there is no fixed rule. That is the only difference I have with the minister who says that we should carry these animals over until they reach a certain weight. Sometimes that would be a very expensive experiment. The average stock breeder knows when he should sell and when he should not, and my experience is that they never lose very much money through not knowing what to do when the proper time comes. Sometimes, on paper, statements are made apparently showing an enormous waste; but if people knew the circumstances of the matter, they would find that the average stockman, no matter what kind of stock he is handling, is getting out of that stock practically all the money there is in it.

Mr. TOLMIE: I appreciate what the hon. member, who is recognized as one of our prominent stockmen in Alberta, has said, but I should like to correct one or two of the statements he has made. In the first place, I did not advocate the production of the thick-fat, heavy hog to a weight of six or seven hundred pounds. I said that these hogs should average 220 pounds, which is the ideal bacon hog. As regards the high producing cows, perhaps I am wrong, but I have had experience in this line; I have maintained a dairy herd, and the best paying cow I ever had was one that gave 112 pounds in a day or 25,560 pounds in 11½ months.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: I qualified my statement by saying that I did not know anything about the dairy business, but I had watched one particular cow that was making a record at the winter fair, and I know that everything that she produced was turned back into her with something added to keep up the production. I do not pretend to be a dairyman; I never had a dairy cow in my life.

Mr. TOLMIE: In British Columbia we have plenty of grass and fodder, and it is unnecessary to feed a cow her own milk.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: They do not make records.

Mr. TOLMIE: The milk is usually worth much more. The particular cow I have mentioned with a record of 32,000 pounds, is one I have watched and known ever since she was landed as a heifer in British Columbia, and she has been most profitable in every way. As regards the high price of hay in Alberta, my hon. friend will agree with me that this is a most exceptional year, and the department has spent nearly a million dollars in assisting farmers in the matter of hay alone.

Mr. W. H. WHITE: And more light cattle were sold.

Mr. TOLMIE: My experience as regards the pure-bred stock versus the grade in the average herd is that under ordinary conditions, particularly in dairying, the pure-bred animal is worth more than the grade. In the first place she will produce more milk as a rule; she has just as good a constitution as the grade when she is properly kept, and her calf is worth often ten times as much money as the calf of the grade cow. As regards the light cattle I mentioned in Toronto, these were not ranch cattle but cattle that had come largely from Ontario and Quebec. If the hon. member had seen them, I am sure he would have agreed with me that the country was suffering a tremendous loss that might have been avoided by turning these cattle off during the grazing season or by making better provision for food.

RAILWAY ESTIMATES.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Railways and Canals): An arrangement was made with the leader of the Opposition that we should take up the Estimates of the Department of Agriculture this afternoon in order that the minister might make a statement. But for that arrangement we could not have proceeded with the Estimates this afternoon, under the rules of the House. I understand that an hon. member on the other side wishes to address the House in connection with the Department of Railways and Canals, and in order to meet the convenience of the leader of the Opposition in that respect, I would suggest that we take up a non-contentious item in the Estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals, which we can pass after the hon. member has made his statement, and then return to the Estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I therefore move that further discussion of the item before the House be postponed for the present and that we take up item No. 337, reading as follows:

Railways and Canals—Miscellaneous—compassionate allowance to the widow and children of the late J. L. A. Frobe, who was killed while in discharge of his duty as brakeman on Canadian Government railways at Ashton Junction, Que., on Sept. 11, 1918.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FRANK S. CAHILL (Pontiac): There is a despatch in the Ottawa Journal of April 27, 1920, as follows:

Hanna Starts Suit Against F. S. Cahill.
President of Canadian National Sues Member for Pontiac.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Nesbitt): Is it unanimously understood that the hon. member need not confine his remarks to the item before the committee?

Mr. J. D. REID: I would ask the committee to allow the hon. member to discuss on this particular item the matter which he wishes to bring before the House. If we took an item to which the matter he is going to discuss would be more relevant, I would not expect the committee to pass it to-day.

The CHAIRMAN: I just wished to have it thoroughly understood, so that there will be no misunderstanding afterwards.

Mr. CAHILL: The despatch reads:

TORONTO, Ont., April 26.—D. B. Hanna, president of the Canadian National railways, has brought suit against F. S. Cahill, Liberal M.P. for Pontiac, for statements alleged to have been made at the Montreal Reform Club two weeks ago in regard to Mr. Hanna. Mr. Hanna declared to-day in an interview with the Star he was not out to get money out of Mr. Cahill, but to "clear his character."

"I am too old a man to have anything like that stand against my name," said Mr. Hanna, who denied that he ever bought a lot in a western townsite, or even thought of buying one.

Mr. Hanna declared that the whole thing was a political game, and an attack on the non-political administration of the National railway.

I may say that I have had no notice nor information yet of this writ having been issued. I am not at all afraid of it when it comes. I have here Poor's Manual of Railroads for 1919, at page 1715 of which I find the following:

Canadian Northern Town Properties Co., Ltd. —Inc. Oct. 22, 1913, in Canada, to acquire land and develop towns on the Canadian Northern Railway system. Except for portions that have already been sold, company has acquired the whole of the sites of about 300 towns and villages, aggregating approximately 68,700 acres. Company has also acquired valuable property in 172 other towns and villages.

I went to the office of the Secretary of State to ascertain who the directors of the Canadian Northern Town Properties Company, Limited, were, as this company was not among the list of assets which were acquired by the Dominion Government. It is not in either the first or the second schedule to the Act taking over the Canadian Northern railway. I found that for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1919, Mr. D. B. Hanna was president of the Canadian Northern Town Properties Company, Limited; Messrs. A. J. Mitchell, R. C. Vaughan and R. G. O. Thomson, directors; and Mr. L. C. Groom, secretary. The three first named are directors or officials of the Canadian Northern or the Canadian National Railway Company, while the last two are not among the officials of the Canadian National Railway Company. The Canadian Northern Town Properties Company, Limited, is not the property of the Canadian people, as I understand it, but the private property of Mr. Hanna and, I suppose, Sir William Mackenzie and his other friends. I understand that this is a company that owns the townsites along the Canadian Northern railway. When I made the statement in this House last year that I had been informed that the management of the railway was moving engines and equipment of other terminals to the town of Hanna in order to promote the real estate business of that town, I was told that Mr. Hanna did not own any of the property there. Mr. Hanna's statement at that time, as I recollect it, was that he had never bought a lot in Hanna or any place else in the West. He makes practically the same statement in this newspaper report which I have read to-day. I have never said that he bought lots. I said he was interested in the company, which acquired lands and turned them into lots and sold them. My information was that they moved some twenty engines from Calgary to Hanna, and when I asked the railway employees why it was done they told me they could not see any reason for it from an operating standpoint, and they said that two trains had to be employed to haul water to supply the engines at the town of Hanna, to which the terminals had been moved. The only reason for it that could be given by the people who informed me of this matter was that it was in order to promote the townsite of Hanna. For the benefit of whom? Apparently for the benefit of the Canadian Northern Town Properties Company, Limited, of which Mr. Hanna is given as president.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in looking over Poor's Manual, I find that the Canadian Government did not take over the Inverness Railway and Coal Company when taking over the Canadian Northern, and you will find in the Auditor General's Report for the year ended March 31, 1919, Volume 3, page W-171, the following:

> Inverness Railway & Coal Co.: run of mine, 83,304.35 net tons at $5.25.

On the same page you will find the following:

> Dominion Coal Co., Glace Bay, Springhill, St. John and Sydney: run of mine, 153.1 net tons at $3.79.

Now, if you turn to Poor's Manual of Railroads for 1919 and look up the Inverness Railway and Coal Company you will find that the corporate officers are Sir William Mackenzie, Sir Donald Mann, R. E. Macleod, and so on. It is quite apparent from that, that the company of which Mr. Hanna is president is buying coal from the company of which Sir William Mackenzie is president. It is also quite apparent that the Canadian National Railway Company, of which Mr. Hanna is president, is in a position to bring business to the towns that may be benefited, which are the property of the Canadian Northern Town Properties Company, Limited.

Mr. Hanna can go on with his suit if he so desires. As far as I am concerned, I have absolutely no fear of it. He has the whole force of the Dominion Government back of him; he has the whole force of the finances of Canada back of him; he has the whole force of the legal luminaries of Canada back of him; and if that is not enough he has in the Act, Chapter 13, Statutes of Canada, 1919, section 6, the following:

> No director of the company shall be under any personal responsibility to any shareholder, director, officer or employee of the company, nor to any other person, nor, except with the approval of the Governor in Council, shall be subject to any pecuniary penalty under the provisions of any statute, in respect of his office, or any act done or omitted to be done by him in the execution thereof.

So that Mr. Hanna is exceedingly well hedged about by everything that can possibly tend to make him safe. He is in a position that makes it possible for him to go just as far as he likes, for he has behind him the Treasury of Canada, and is backed by the legal advice of his department. He has the whole Government of Canada behind him and furthermore he is immune by reason of an Act of Parliament. Now, I have given these circumstances to the committee, and if Mr. Hanna can refute them he is welcome to do so; and, it is the duty of the Government to satisfy us in the matter. When we come to the Estimates on Railways and Canals I shall be prepared to take up with the Minister of Railways several other items in regard to which I desire information, but I merely make this statement now to show that Mr. Hanna is very far from being correct when he says that he is not interested in the town sites along the Canadian Northern railway and is not buying coal from the Mackenzie and Mann interests. In the Senate Debates of the session of 1919, June 25, at page 745, there appears the following extract from a letter written by G. J. Hammon, President of the Basque Chemical Production Co., Ltd.:

> Without any desire to be unreasonably critical in regard to this delay, but wishing to determine what service we might expect from the Canadian Northern, we have been investigating and have recently discovered that there have been very frequent delays to trains on account of the poor quality of coal used in the engines on the Canadian Northern line. It seems that this coal is being used on account of a contract made by the Canadian Northern with a mine near Brule Lake, Alberta, (of which we are informed Mr. R. J. Mackenzie is the principal owner) before the Government took over its operation. This contract was made at a price approximately $1.00 per ton higher than was paid by the Grand Trunk Pacific at the same time for better coal.

I want to bring this matter to the attention of the committee simply because there is a widespread opinion in this country that the Canadian National railways are not getting a square deal under the management of Mr. Hanna and Mackenzie and Mann, and if the Government are in a position to clear up the matter and to show that there is nothing between these people we shall be glad to have a statement. We on this side, however, insist on having everything laid on the table clearly and distinctly, and above board.

Mr. J. D. REID: The action which the hon. member says Mr. Hanna has taken against him, as reported in the press, is of course a personal matter of which neither the Government nor I have any knowledge. We have had nothing to do with that matter and must of course leave it to Mr. Hanna and the hon. member to settle. The hon. member still persists in the statement that Mr. Hanna has an interest in connection with Mackenzie and Mann, and I gather from his remarks that he stands by his position in this matter. If this suit should go on it will undoubtedly be well to have all these statements cleared up, and I am sure that every step should be taken, if the matter goes before the courts, to see that the situation is made absolutely plain. In order to prove his case my hon. friend has referred to a particular instance, namely, the Inverness Coal Company, and he argues that the very fact of the Government having purchased coal from the Inverness Coal Company shows that they are doing business with the Mackenzie and Mann interests.

Mr. CAHILL: The price is $1.25 higher.

Mr. J. D. REID: The hon. member says that the price is $1.25 higher. Well, I have not with me the information that would enable me to state the facts as they are, but the prices of coal in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and at the several mines were fixed by the Fuel Controller, Mr. Magrath, and if I remember rightly they were based on the cost of production. I remember that in the case of the Inverness Coal Company the cost of production was exceedingly high. I shall be glad to bring down the report of the Fuel Controller and have it laid on the Table for the information of all hon. members and of the hon. member (Mr. Cahill) in particular; but speaking from memory I can say that the cost of production in the case of the Inverness Coal Company was very much higher than almost that of any other company in the province of Nova Scotia. There is also another point to be considered in connection with the Inverness Coal Company. It is true that it shows a higher price than the Dominion Coal Company, but if the hon. member will read the report, I think he will see that there are other companies that are much higher than the Dominion Coal Company.

Mr. CAHILL: Not that I can find.

Mr. J. D. REID: Perhaps not. As I say, I am only trusting to my memory without having had an opportunity to look very carefully into the matter. Now, the Inverness Coal Company is situated, I believe, some sixty miles away from the Intercolonial railway, and the Inverness railway, which has to carry the coal from the place of production, charges $1.00 or $1.25 a ton for conveying it to the Intercolonial railway at Point Tupper. It costs us, say, $5.50 right where it is there, whereas if we had to purchase it from the Dominion Coal Company, there would be the freight to Point Tupper, which would practically make it the same. The price as mentioned by the hon. member of, say, $5.25 for the coal that was purchased for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1919, in my opinion, would not have been the price that was fixed by the Canadian National railways because it is generally arranged in the spring before. It must have been arranged about March 1918. The Intercolonial railway was not taken over by the Canadian National railways until about the end of 1918. That contract had been arranged before. If so the prices were arranged by the fuel controller and those who were associated with him. I remember at the time seeing a discussion with the fuel controller as to the prices of coal in Nova Scotia. The prices at some of the mines being more than at others, they had to decide where the coal should be bought if the men were to be kept employed.

5 p.m.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The cost of production differed at different mines?

Mr. J. D. REID: Yes. At the Dominion Iron and Steel Company the coal they produce is not only the best but the cost of production is very much less than in any other mine in the district. I would like to satisfy the House as to the correctness of what I say from the report of Mr. Magrath. I am sure I can satisfy the House and the country that the prices that were paid for coal in the lower provinces during the years of the war were fair and just and in the public interest, that they were fixed by the commission and that Mr. Hanna or any of the officers of the Canadian National railways had nothing to do with them at that particular time. The Inverness Coal Company was not originally started by Sir William Mackenzie. If I remember rightly, the Intercolonial railway had been purchasing coal from that company for many years and Sir William Mackenzie and his associates were not in possesion of the coal company at that time. They are not in possession of it at the present time for the reason that it went into liquidation. The liquidator, Mr. McGillivray, has been operating the company for six or seven years. He has absolute control of the coal mine and Sir William Mackenzie, Mr. Hanna, or any of Mr. Hanna's associates, had nothing to do with the prices of coal purchased for the Intercolonial railway. When my Estimates are brought down I will have all this information here and I will be glad to give it to the hon. member. If it will assist him in any way by throwing any light on the purchase of coal or any other supplies he will have it and he will be able to see that not all of the statements made by him are correct. Mr. Hanna has assured me that he has never had anything to do with any of these townsites, and that he does not own any lots and I must rely on his statement until the hon. member or any other person can give me any evidence that the statement is not correct.

Mr. CAHILL: He signs the statement.

ESTIMATES—DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE RESUMED.

Experimental Farms—maintenance of Centra Farm and maintaining of additional branch stations, $1,200,000.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I rise only for the purpose of joining with my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) in the tribute he has paid to the memory of the late Dr. Gordon Hewitt, Dominion Entomologist. It was my privilege to know Dr. Hewitt personally and I am sure that all who shared his acquaintance will agree with the statement that in his death this country has lost not only one of its ablest scientists, but also one of its most public spirited citizens. There was no activity of a public nature in this community in which a private citizen could share that Dr. Hewitt was not ever ready to play his part. In the work upon which he was engaged for the Government he will be remembered as one of the most faithful and efficient public servants, as well as one of the most distinguished. Though comparatively young, I think he was not more than thirty-five at the time of his death—the record of his scientific work has not been surpassed in the branches with which he was associated by any other member of the public service. I believe the tribute paid by the minister is one in which every hon. member of this House will be glad to share.

Mr. PARDEE: How many experimental farms are there?

Mr. TOLMIE: Twenty.

Mr. PARDEE: How are they distributed amongst the different provinces?

Mr. TOLMIE: Two in Nova Scotia, one in New Brunswick, one in Prince Edward Island, five in Quebec, three in Ontario, two in Manitoba, three in Saskatchewan, two in Alberta, and four in British Columbia.

Mr. PROULX: Where are they located in Ontario outside of the one at Ottawa?

Mr. TOLMIE: One at Kapuskasing in the north and one at Harrow in Essex county.

Mr. PELLETIER: Is it the intention of the Government to increase the number of demonstration farms? I have been asking for one in my riding for six or seven years but I have been unable to get a definite answer yet. My predecessor, Mr. Boulay, pressed for the establishment of a demonstration farm until 1917, and I have been asking for it ever since I have been here. We have no experimental farm below Ste. Anne's and that is 180 miles above Matane. If we had a demonstration farm it would greatly help the farmers whom I represent. My riding is divided by the Causapscal mountains and we really need two farms. If we had one at Amqui or Causapscal and one at Matane I am sure that it would be a great advantage to agriculture in my riding and the surrounding country. I would like to know if it is the intention of the Government to grant our request and to continue the work which was started a few years ago.

Mr. TOLMIE: The department very fully realizes the importance of these farms and the very excellent work they are doing in many parts of Canada. We have requisitions from the Atlantic to the Pacific for the establishment of such farms, and it is our intention to establish more of them just as soon as we can get the finances necessary for the purpose.

Mr. TURGEON: A couple of years ago I asked for the establishment of an Experimental Farm in the county of Gloucester where the location of the district is admirably adapted for the purpose. At the time my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar) was Minister of Agriculture, but as he left office not long afterwards I cannot attribute to him any neglect in not attending to my request. The deputy Minister of Agriculture,—whom I see with the minister, —knows the country very well. He knows that the situation all along the north shore of New Brunswick when you cross the Restigouche is one of the finest in any part of the Dominion, and it would certainly be a very appropriate and useful site for an experimental station. I again draw the attention of the present minister to my request, and I hope that before another year has passed he will have given it his favourable consideration.

Mr. W. C. KENNEDY (North Essex): Has the minister under consideration increasing the acreage of the farm at Harrow?

Mr. TOLMIE: That matter is under consideration.

Mr. DENIS: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great pleasure to the pronouncement made by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the different branches of his department, but I did not hear him make any statement about our tobacco-growing industry. As I am particularly interested, and as I consider it of vital interest to this country, I propose to make a few remarks on the subject and to ask the hon. minister to be kind enough to answer a question which I shall put to him.

Our people generally perhaps are not fully aware of the significance of our tobacco industry. If we look at the statistics we shall find that last year we grew approximately 26,000,000 pounds of tobacco, and we imported, almost wholly from the United States, in the neighbourhood of 25,000,000 pounds. So that our tobacco consumption in round figures is about 50,000,000 pounds a year, of which we are producing only 50 per cent. The tobacco crop yields our farmers an annual revenue of many million dollars, and as the industry is practically unlimited, the export demand never being met, it seems to me that the industry should receive the greatest consideration on the part of the Government.

If we increased our tobacco production, we could, in the first instance, supply practically the whole of our domestic needs; that is to say, I think that about 45,000,000 pounds of the 50,000,000 pounds we consume could be supplied by our tobacco growers. Of course, there will always be certain brands of tobacco in demand which cannot be produced in Canada. Then if our production should exceed our consumption, we have unlimited markets abroad. For instance, England is importing from the United States, if I am not mistaken, in the neighbourhood of 300,000,000 pounds of tobacco annually. Now, with our preferential tariff we can secure an advantage on the English market, so that no matter what our production might be we should always have an open market for our surplus crop.

I do not intend to make a fuller statement until the Budget debate. But for the time being I deem it my duty in the interest of the country generally, as well as in the particular interest of the district of Joliette which I have the honour to represent—a district which is producing many million pounds of tobacco each year—to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, of whose goodwill and sincerity I am well aware, the very great importance of our tobacco-growing industry, and to ask him what the Government is doing to encourage our growers.

Mr. TOLMIE: The Government is very much alive to the situation. A short time ago the tobacco seed used was of many varieties, some quite unsuitable for this country. The Government took the matter up and last year distributed 904 ounces of free seed, and sold 1,940 ounces, a sufficient amount to plant, on a conservative estimate, 17,064 acres. In addition to taking that step, we have had conferences with our tobacco growers, and have carried on experiments at our various experimental farms for their benefit; and realizing that one of the best methods of putting the business on a sound footing is to insure the producer a good market, we have sent a man overseas to make a careful study of the whole situation with a view to establishing a selling connection between the growers of this country and the consumers of Great Britain. We expect he will return in a short time and will have very valuable information to impart to our tobacco growers.

Mr. DEVLIN: Who is the man who was sent across?

Mr. TOLMIE: Mr. Félix Charlan, chief of the tobacco division.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: How many demonstration farms are there in the province of Quebec, and where are they situated?

Mr. TOLMIE: Experimental farms?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Demonstration farms.

Mr. TOLMIE: Aubrey, Lachute, Paspebiac West, Stanbridge East, Cap Chat, Drummondville, Lac à la Fortune, L'Assomption, Little Cascapedia, Rimouski, St. Clet, St. Julie, St. Gédéon, St. Jules and St. Etienne des Grès.

Mr. PARDEE: Are these all maintained by the Dominion Government?

Mr. TOLMIE: Yes.

Mr. PARDEE: How many are there in Ontario?

Mr. TOLMIE: None.

Mr. PARDEE: What is the reason for the distinction? Are there no illustration stations in Ontario aside from the experimental farms?

Mr. TOLMIE: We are just commencing this system of illustration farms and we have selected districts where we think they are most needed. In Ontario agriculture is established in a pretty sound way; there is more pure-bred stock, and in some respects the farming sections are more advanced in Ontario than, perhaps, in any other part of Canada. The system will be followed up, however; we have several sites under consideration in Ontario and elsewhere.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: I congratulate the minister on the most excellent statement he has made in connection with experimental farms. Some years ago I directed the attention of the Department of Agriculture to the need of an illustration farm in the western peninsula. A variety of products are grown there, and I do not need to emyphasize the necessity for the establishment in that district of an illustration farm at the earliest possible day. I hope the minister will see to it that this is done.

Mr. TOLMIE: The western peninsula has been receiving very careful consideration in that direction since I have been in office.

Mr. LEGER: I wanted to know if there were any illustration farms in New Brunswick.

Mr. TOLMIE: Ten are planned for this year. The sites have been selected.

Mr. W. C. KENNEDY (Essex North): How much of this vote is to be spent at Harrow, and how does the amount provided this year compare with the amount spent last year?

Mr. TOLMIE: $7,175, the same as last year.

Mr. J. E. S. E. d'ANJOU (Rimouski) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, while we were dealing, earlier in the session, with a resolution advocating the establishment of further experimental farms in Canada, I took occasion to ask for the establishment of such a farm in the county of Rimouski, and I shall improve this further opportunity, since we are now voting sums for the experimental farms to broach the subject once more. Of course, my honourable friend cannot follow me, but the deputy minister is, I believe, familiar with the French language and will convey my meaning to the honourable minister.

The county of Rimouski is surely one of the most beautiful and flourishing counties in the province of Quebec; it is by all means a banner county; the farmers who live there are progressive people who are solicitous for the extension of the farming industry in this country.

I am easier to please than my honourable friend from Matane (Mr. Pelletier) and shall not ask for the establishment of two experimental farms in the county of Rimouski. I shall be content with an experimental farm in the town of Rimouski itself:

Mr. F. J. PELLETIER (Matane) (Translation): I am not asking for two experimental farms; I want two illustration stations.

Mr. d'ANJOU (Translation): I beg my honourable friend's pardon if I misconstrued his remarks. I understood that he was asking for an experimental farm at Amqui and another one at Matane.

At all events, it seems to me the Government should leave no stone unturned towards establishing such farms almost all over the country. True it is that the financial affairs of Canada are in a bad way, but after all, money can always be found and money spent in the furtherance of these objects would be spent in the best interests of the country.

Therefore, I am confident that the honourable minister will take my request into earnest consideration and that, ere long, the county of Rimouski will have a fine and important experimental farm.

Mr. TOLMIE: We have a farm at Ste. Anne, and it would be hardly practicable to establish another at the place to which my hon. friend refers. As things develop we may consider that.

Mr. McKENZIE: I must commend the minister on the very able and exhaustive address he delivered in connection with this item. His speech contained a great deal of very valuable information, some of it highly scientific. I suggest that that speech be published in pamphlet form, with any direct suggestions that might be made by the minister or his officials in connection with it, and put in the hands of every farmer in Canada. A good deal of it, of course, cannot be lived up to, but it is well to aim high, even if the high standard which is set up cannot always be attained. May I ask where the illustration farms in Nova Scotia are located?

Mr. TOLMIE: One at Nappan and one at Kentville.

Mr. McKENZIE: I think it would be a splendid thing if at least one of these farms could be brought in touch with the Agricultural College at Truro. It is an ambitious little institution. It is not very old, having been established, I believe, in 1904 or 1905.

Mr. FIELDING: Earlier than that.

Mr. McKENZIE: I see that my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) claims this college as a product of the time when he was Premier of Nova Scotia. I was in the local legislature for five years from 1900 to 1905 and I remember we had arguments in regard to this matter, but I shall not doubt the statement of my hon. friend that it had its beginnings in his days. This college has made very good progress, and while the Dominion department may be helping it as regards demonstration on farms and showing in a general way what can be done by proper experiments, I should be pleased to see that co-operation carried on more extensively. In the island from which I come, with its large population and its vast industrial interests and developments, there are no agricultural stations at all, either provincial or Dominion. I need not tell the minister that, with the great population that we have, steel workers and coal miners, lumbermen and fishermen, all of them good in their way, but none of them producing anything from the soil, it is highly desirable that the farmers should be given every encouragement to produce as much as is necessary for the upkeep of our local population. There is nothing like seeing what can be done; scientific lectures and all that sort of thing are very good; but the real thing that comes home to the farmer is to have a demonstration on a piece of land which is like his own so that he may see that, if he takes the proper steps, whatever results can be obtained on the demonstration farm, may be obtained by him. If there were two or three demonstration farms in the whole island, say near such centres as Sydney, North Sydney or Sydney Mines, where there are large populations and good soil, but where it is hard to get farmers as the people are mostly coal miners or steel workers, such demonstration farms would be highly beneficial. In the island there are large numbers of Scotch people, who are naturally farmers, working in those mines, and if it were shown to them what could be done on Cape Breton soil, many of them might be induced to leave the steel works and the coal mines and to take up farming. I trust the minister will take this phase of the work of his department into his serious consideration.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am glad to hear the remarks of the hon. member. I may say that I visited the Truro farm and was very much impressed with it. The acreage there is large; I was shown some excellent cattle, both dairy and beef breeds, and I think I saw one of the best standard-bred stallions I had seen for many years. The farm, under the management of Mr. Cumming, seems to be very good. Many of these large provincial establishments have farms in connection with them, the same as at Guelph and other places; but the Dominion officials keep in close co-operation with them in all provinces, all working towards the one end.

As regards Cape Breton, we are at present planning to have an illustration station situated somewhere in that section of the country. These illustration farms are doing excellent work. An illustration station is operated under the management of an ordinary farmer who is selected on account of his ability and the suitability of his farm for the purpose. He works under the direction of our Experimental Farm Branch; he carries on the best system of rotation; he uses nothing but the best seed, and the farmers of his neighbourhood have an opportunity of profiting by the work that is being carried on. We trust that the illustration station we hope to establish in that section will render valuable service.

Mr. FIELDING: We know what an experimental farm is, but how does the minister define a demonstration farm, which, I understand, is something on a smaller scale than an experimental farm?

Mr. TOLMIE: We have in the Department of Agriculture no demonstration farms, and I do not know of the term being used anywhere in Canada except in Alberta. The Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture of that province, has farms with schools in connection with them where the young farmers are given a short six months' course during the winter, being taught the handling of machinery, breeding of livestock, blacksmithing, harness making and many other things that might be useful to them on the farm during the coming summer. In the summer they work on their fathers' farms. This is a plan that has been adopted on the continent of Europe for some time, and in Alberta these places have produced excellent results.

Mr. FIELDING: I desire to associate myself with my hon. friends on this side who have congratulated the minister on the full and interesting statement he has made. I am glad to hear him saying a good word of the College of Agriculture at Truro, which began in a small way about 1885 or 1886. I remember the beginning of it very well; it began as an attachment to the provincial normal school. At first it was a sort of agricultural department in the normal school. Later on buildings were erected; a farm was purchased, and my successors in office have developed it in a large way and I am glad to know that the college is doing excellent work. I am pleased to learn that an illustration farm will be located in Cape Breton. Even in a comparatively small province like Nova Scotia, we speak of East and West, and when the time came for the location of the School of Agriculture a little difficulty arose in connection with the location of it. The most attractive farm land in the province from some viewpoints was the Annapolis valley, and there was a strong desire to locate the institution there. It was, however, felt that an experimental farm should not be located at the most attractive point, but that a location should be selected where the soil was of average quality, similar to that of the farms of the people it was intended to reach. Since the location of the provincial farm at Truro, the Dominion Government have located one at Kentville in the West. If the minister is able to increase the number of illustration stations, they would be very welcome. Did he mention where these were in Nova Scotia, other than the Kentville one?

Mr. TOLMIE: There is one at Nappan.

Mr. FIELDING: That is a branch of the Ottawa institution.

Mr. TOLMIE: So is Kentville.

Mr. FIELDING: I understand the Kentville farm is quite a small farm.

Mr. TOLMIE: It is quite a large farm; I was there last fall.

Mr. FIELDING: Are there any more besides those at Nappan and Kentville?

Mr. TOLMIE: In Nova Scotia ten illustration stations are being planned for at the present time.

Mr. FIELDING: I should like to make a suggestion to my hon. friend. If these illustration stations mean only comparatively small expenditures, although most of my constituents are not farmers, a large number being fishermen and lumbermen, there is a large agricultural section in North Queen's country, adjoining the county of Annapolis. This is an excellent agricultural district, and I should be glad if the minister, in selecting the locations of these illustration stations, would bear in mind the attractions and claims of that section.

Mr. CRERAR: I regret I was not in the Chamber when the minister was making his statement preliminary to the introduction of these Estimates. It is possible that the minister may have referred to the suggestion which I shall now offer to the committee and to the minister for what it is worth. It is well known that, under the Act of Confederation, the powers of the provinces and the Dominion in matters of agricultural administration are equal. This has led to a considerable amount of duplication in the work that is carried on by the Dominion Department of Agriculture and the various provincial departments. For instance, I know it is a fact that many of the provincial Departments of Agriculture are carrying on work similar to that done by the Federal Government through its demonstration farms. Manitoba and Alberta, I know, have illustration farms. This means a very considerable increase in the total expenditure on this class of work. If my memory serves me right, the total amount spent by the Departments of Agriculture in Canada, both federal and provincial, runs to about $7,500,000 annually, and it has occurred to me that if a better understanding could be reached with the provinces in respect to the various fields of endeavour, probably a great deal more in the way of results might be achieved from this expenditure. This duplication applies not only to demonstration and illustration farms, but to other fields of activity in agriculture. Almost all the provinces, if not all of them, have departments dealing with livestock, as well as with dairying, beekeeping, poultry raising, in all of which fields the federal department is working. The Federal Government has its officials at the experimental farms in the provinces, and there is also another set of officials under provincial control, doing similar work. I think that possibly greater efficiency, without additional expenditure, could be secured if a better understanding could be reached between the provinces and the Federal Department of Agriculture in respect to their respective fields of inquiry and endeavour. That particularly presses upon our attention at the present time because of the great burden of taxation which this country is facing. It is a case of making our dollars go just as far as we can and if the minister by co-operation with the provinces can promote a better understanding in this regard, he will be doing a real and genuine service to agriculture in this country. I know it is perhaps difficult to do. Unfortunately in the field of agriculture, as in some other departments of our governmental service, the provinces desire to carry on their own particular inquiries, and it is often a little difficult to adjust the differences and, shall I say, perhaps the jealousies, that may exist. Nevertheless, the task is one that I think should be undertaken, and I know of no time in our history that was more opportune to undertake it than now. I offer this suggestion to the minister and the Government for what it is worth. I think if they examine it closely they will find some merit in it.

Mr. TOLMIE: I greatly appreciate the suggestion of the hon. member for Marquette. We realized that there was considerable duplication between the federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture, and we called a meeting of deputy ministers about two months ago in the city of Ottawa, when the matter was very fully discussed. We have made a certain amount of progress along the line of having the different fields of endeavour more clearly defined.

Mr. CRERAR: I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. WILSON (Saskatoon): I was very much interested in the statement made by the minister, and as to its educative value I wish to endorse the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. McKenzie) that the statement should be printed and distributed as widely as possible throughout Canada. There is probably no business in Canada to-day to which the application of science brings greater results than agriculture. It is a case of knowing cause and effect. There has been great care exercised in the production of livestock, and in the selection of animals for breeding purposes, but it is only in recent years that it has been impressed on our farmers that the same care in the selection and improvement of seed brings equally good results. We know what a great benefit to the country the improvement in our wheat seed has been, and in this connection I wish to bring to the minister's attention a matter to which I referred a year ago, and that is the good work that a citizen of Saskatchewan is carrying on in the improvement of wheat seed, and the great benefit it has been to agriculture in this country. This man up to the present has not been recognized by the Government for the work he has done, although I was pleased to see a few days ago that Queens University had conferred a degree upon him in recognition of the work he has done in the breeding of seed. I refer to Mr. S. Wheeler, a man who has brought credit to Canada in the breeding of seed wheat. I understand that at the present time he is working on a new seed wheat which he has developed to quite an extent, and which he names "Bobs." He is endeavouring to produce a seed that will be rust proof. It is about fifteen or sixteen years ago that rust first made its appearance in Western Canada, and since then there has been more or less rust every season. If Mr. Wheeler succeeds in producing a seed that will resist rust, it will mean a saving of millions and millions of dollars to the country. I think the Department of Agriculture should recognize to some extent the great work this man is doing for agriculture, and should put him at all events beyond the necessity of worrying about financial matters so far as his experiments are concerned. I thought it proper that I should again bring this matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. KENNEDY (North Essex): The minister was kind enough to say this afternoon that he would take into serious consideration the question of providing for an increased acreage in the Experimental Farm in South Essex, at Harrow. I think the minister was there recently, and I am sure the people gathered the impression that something was going to be done. I do not know whether the minister said so, but that is the impression the people have. The amount of $7,000 in the Estimates is very small for the upkeep of a farm in such an excellent agricultural county as Essex, and I trust the minister will see his way clear to be a little more generous in his expenditure there.

Mr. TOLMIE: I was not able to get down to Essex county, but the deputy minister was there. The Harrow farm, like nearly all the tobacco farms, shows a profit, so there will be that profit to expend, in addition to the $7,000. So far as the extension of work is concerned, I of course appreciate the situation that exists, and I am anxious to do everything that is at all possible. The department is anxious to expand the experimental farm system everywhere, but present financial conditions must be borne in mind.

Mr. KNOX: May I ask the minister what provision is being made in order to meet the changing conditions that are now arising in the West, where districts which were largely, and in some cases wholly, wheat-producing are now turning their attention to stock raising and dairying? I have in mind particularly the district of Rosthern, where is situated one of the Saskatchewan farms. In this district one man is using the sunflower ensilage about which the Minister of Agriculture has spoken to-day, and I may inform the minister—for I think the fact is of some importance—that the people in that district are of the opinion that it will be wise for the Government farms to lead the way along these lines. I should therefore like to know what steps are being taken to meet the changing conditions.

Mr. TOLMIE: In such sections as Rosthern we are establishing dairy herd systems. In that section we are starting this system, and for the farm we have already purchased some pure-bred Holstein cattle. We shall have a barn built there as soon as possible.

Mr. PELLETIER: My hon. friend's answer to my question a few moments ago in regard to demonstration farms is rather indefinite. He said that he had had many requests from all over Canada. May I ask if he will take my request into serious consideration and see if he cannot do something for my riding?

Mr. TOLMIE: I promise the hon. gentleman to take his request into serious consideration.

Mr. PARDEE: The minister said a moment ago that certain work would be done at Harrow, and I may be permitted to remark that whether or not experimental farms return a pecuniary profit they are entirely necessary and their establishment is perfectly justifiable. I should think that the last thing we would want to do would be to curtail the expansion of experimental farm work. I do not want any lengthy list, but can the minister inform the committee whether the principal farms are self-sustaining? The statement has been made that so far as Western Ontario is concerned conditions are so good that nothing more is required in the way of demonstration farms. Admitting that to be true, yet, in my opinion, a place can never be so good as not to need further development. Farming of every description is carried on in that locality and I think that demonstration farms should be established there as soon as possible. I should like to know—and I think it is a matter of some interest to the people throughout the country — what percentage of the experimental farms of Canada are self-sustaining and if any revenue which may be derived from them is put back into the farms in the form of further expansion.

Mr. TOLMIE: I was mistaken when I said that the returns went back into the farms; they are turned into the Receiver-General. The experimental farms on the whole are not profitable. From the nature of the work they carry on it is impossible that they should be profitable. For instance, many of the plots contain only one-fortieth of an acre, and every bit of work done on such a plot is done by hand. After some information of value is secured it is not immediately released. Further experimental work along the particular line is carried on for four or five years, and when we have proved beyond doubt that our information so secured is of real value then we distribute it. The mere seed or grain or roots that may be obtained from any experimental plot of such a size is not of any real profit. The real profit that is derived from such a plot consists in the information that is filed away for dissemination among the farmers of the country.

Mr. PARDEE: Quite so.

Mr. TOLMIE: From a rough estimate, it is calculated that the potential value of the experimental farm system of Canada is no less than $60,000,000 a year.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am sure that the minister must have overlooked the statement made by the hon. member for Saskatoon. I think that the work of the distinguished scientist to whom reference has been made was spoken of last year, when there was a good deal of talk about it. We find now that the same scientist is endeavouring to produce wheat which will be rust-proof. I rather think that the minister forgot to make some reference to the observations of the hon. member for Saskatoon, and it would be a pity to let the subject go by unnoticed.

Mr. TOLMIE: I thank the hon. member for bringing the matter to my attention. I quite recognize the ability of Mr. Seager Wheeler, and his work is just another illustration of what energy, knowledge, and application can do. Other farmers around the district are, I think, in a position to obtain good results if they will take advantage of the opportunities at hand. Mr. Seager Wheeler is working in co-operation with our Seed Branch and all the information that can be obtained is being made use of. I am glad to receive the suggestion of the hon. member for Saskatoon that the department should recognize what Mr. Wheeler has done, and I can assure him that this matter will receive attention.

Mr. ARGUE: I cannot let this opportunity pass without making a plea for that part of the country from which I come, namely, the southwestern part of Saskatchewan, which is an arid district. If farming conditions in Ontario are said to be so good that they do not need experimental farms, I can assure the minister that conditions in our part of the country are the reverse and are such as to make the establishment of a farm there imperative. The district around there is 150 miles square and it is settled by as good farmers as can be found anywhere in Canada. Every dollar of our money is staked in the land and we have either to make that land profitable or walk out and leave it. If we had an experimental farm in that part of the country it would be possible, by demonstrating to the farmers the benefits to be derived from different kinds of tilling, development along various lines, etc., then to make the land pay, and I would ask the Government to make a start this year. I do not ask them to spend a lot of money but I would request that they make a start on an experimental farm in that district to see if they cannot help the farmers there. I know those men, for I have been with them for the last sixteen years, and I can safely say that no better class of men can be found anywhere in this Dominion. When we went out there in the Victory Loan campaign in 1918 Swift Current was the first place in Saskatchewan to win the flag. I think it was a remarkable achievement, and it is but right that such men who have the sand to labour under disadvantages and carry on so well should be helped as much as possible. I trust therefore that the minister will take the matter into earnest consideration and try to make a start there this year.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

Rt. Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. 109 to amend the Supreme Court Act.

Mr. DENIS: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I was not in the House when this Bill was read a second time. I only rise to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that according to this Bill the Privy Council will have jurisdiction in some cases in which the Supreme Court of Canada will not have jurisdiction. I had my whole argument prepared for the second reading and I was ready to quote the articles bearing upon the matter but I will not take the time now it would be absolutely useless. But it seems to me to be irrational that in some cases the Privy Council should have a wider jurisdiction than the Supreme Court of Canada. It appears to me that in every case where the Privy Council has jurisdiction the Supreme Court of Canada should also have jurisdiction by right and not as a privilege.

Mr. DOHERTY: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must ask the unanimous consent of the House that the hon. member may have the right to speak because when the right hon. gentleman moved the third reading of the Bill he exhausted his right.

Mr. DOHERTY: I want to point out to the hon. member that this is under the control of the Provincial Legislatures. It is for the Provincial Legislatures to say what right of appeal there shall be from the ultimate courts of provincial authority to the Privy Council, and we cannot control that. But it is the duty of the Parliament of Canada to determine what shall be the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada. If the Provincial Legislatures desire to preserve an appeal to the Privy Council we cannot withdraw the jurisdiction for appeals from their courts direct to the Privy Council.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I desire, with the assent of the House, to lay on the Table the fourth volume of the report of the Auditor General.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply—Minister of Finance—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Experimental farms, $1,200,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Just before recess my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) succeeded in getting an assurance from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) that an illustration farm would be established in Cape Breton Island, and I must express my great satisfaction at the decision of the minister. However, when he sends his officer down there to determine the site of that farm, I would ask him not to forget to have that officer go over the most important part of the Island—from an agricultural standpoint at least—that is, the western part. If the officer is a competent man, as I have no doubt he is, I am satisfied where the site will be.

Mr. SEXSMITH: During the afternoon we learned that the department has established a number of demonstration farms at various points throughout the greater part of Canada, but I did not hear any reference made to the district of Central Ontario. There is no agricultural college or agricultural farm between Ottawa and Guelph. The whole of that Central Ontario district is a splendid farming section, and I am sure that all that it is necessary for me to do is to direct the attention of the minister to the need for the establishment of one of these demonstration farms in the county of Peterborough.

Mr. COWAN: Just before six o'clock the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Argue) had directed the attention of the minister to the need of an experimental farm in that dried-out area, as they call it, in the southwest portion of Saskatchewan and southern Alberta. I wish to emphasize as strongly as I can the need of that experimental farm. It is not a matter of local concern; a national obligation is involved. For this reason: some years ago when Hon. Frank Oliver was Minister of the Interior, the Federal Government attempted to change from a ranching district into a farming district an enormous area in that western country—as large I should say, as the whole of the settled portion of Ontario. The Federal Department of the Interior threw thousands of farmers into that district, a district which had never been recognized as suited for farming. The result was that thousands of farmers have had to gain experience of the conditions there—conditions entirely different from those to which they had been accustomed. They have not succeeded. The country is a good country. The land is good; it is not an arid but a semi-arid district. They have almost enough rainfall to make farming a success every year, but in the absence of more than "almost enough," they have failed, in many years, all over that district. The farmers out there are not able to do the experimenting themselves. You cannot expect a lot of pioneers to do the necessary experimenting; they have not the money. I consider it the duty of the Federal Government, therefore, who have drawn hundreds of thousands of people there, to do the experimenting which will supply these people with the information necessary to make farming a success. If a farm is established there it will undoubtedly cost a few thousand dollars, but if you thereby enable these people to carry on their operations successfully; if you can get them to grow the kind of grain which is suited to a semi-arid district—and I understand that can be done—you will make for this country millions of dollars every year. Last year, by reason of the fact that they had not this source of direction and knowledge, Canada lost millions of dollars. Can we reasonably, then, hesitate to make the necessary expenditure? I urge upon the minister that he give the proposal of the hon. member for Swift Current that attention which it deserves.

Mr. BURNHAM: I would like to add a word or two to what the member for East Peterborough (Mr. Sexsmith) has just said about the distribution of demonstration farms. It is true that the experimental farm at Guelph, for example, has been of the greatest possible benefit to our district,—not the county of Peterborough only, but to the whole district. But Guelph is a long way from Peterborough—it is considerably more than two hundred miles —and while the more energetic farmer goes there sometimes, or the more curious, it is not always possible for farmers to do themselves justice in this respect. The only place where they can obtain the necessary information, therefore, is the Experimental Farm at Ottawa. It is altogether out of reason that experimental farms should not be more generously distributed than that. Although I am not, like my confrere, a practical farmer, I am nevertheless a theoretical farmer and a very interested farmer. I really take an intense interest in the cultivation of the land,—perhaps by other people. However, I know farmers and farming conditions fairly well, and I am convinced that nothing could be done of greater benefit to the farming community and therefore to the people generally than the placing of demonstration farms—I would say model farms—in each county. An inspected and superintended farm that is, a farm as it ought to be, with all the equipment of a modern farm for intensive farming—because intensive farming has to come sooner or later if farming is to be made profitable and we are to hold our own with the rest of the world—such a farm, I say, should in my humble opinion be established, or at least assisted, subsidized if you like, in each county, so that the farmers in the immediate vicinity could profit by them, and those who want to go into agricultural life might have some place close at hand where they could learn how these things should be done. Many men do not know the remedy for evil conditions which arise on their farms. They cannot afford to incur great expense in connection with them, and if there were a centre—not necessarily an expensive centre—close at hand where they might go and learn the condition of agriculture in the county in question would be improved not less than fifty per cent, I am sure, and the production accordingly. The Government cannot pay too much attention to agriculture in this respect. If my position be correct, that it is not unreasonable that there should be a local centre in each county, how really absurd is the condition when, as I say, there is no demonstration farm of any kind within a radius of two hundred miles. I hope, therefore, that the minister will note that we are practically destitute of an agricultural centre of this kind, and that that need is one which ought to be met.

Mr. PEDLOW: I wish to say a word on this subject, representing, as I do, one of the largest agricultural and dairying constituencies in the Dominion, and perhaps one of the best. My good friend from the constituency of Beauce (Mr. Béland) may dispute that point—he has done so on several occasions—but he has not visited South Renfrew in recent years. It will be comforting to the minister to know that I am not going to press a claim upon him for a model farm, an experimental farm or a demonstration farm for South Renfrew. The majority of the farms in South Renfrew are, I can assure you, Sir, model farms already, so that they require very little assistance along that line. The hon. members for East and West Peterborough have my sympathy, nevertheless, and I sincerely trust, in view of the fact that the need is pressing there, the minister will listen to their request and grant it as quickly as possible. I said that I came from one of the largest and best agricultural and dairying constituencies in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. BELAND: After Beauce.

Mr. PEDLOW: I say that advisedly, notwithstanding the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Béland). That is a habit of his, but nevertheless the fact remains. I wish to direct the attention of the committee, and particularly of my hon. friend (Mr. Béland), to the fact that in the South Riding of Renfrew we have one of the best-watered agriculture districts in Canada. It is watered by the river Bonnechere, which rises in Golden lake; we have also in that constituency, you will be pleased to know, in addition to all the other beauties that exist there, the Garden of Eden on one side of the town of Renfrew and the land of Goshen on the other.

Mr. BELAND: Do you make maple sugar there?

Mr. PEDLOW: We make maple sugar of the best quality, a quality that will pass the most rigid inspection of the inspectors of the Health Department. In addition to a superior brand of maple sugar, seeing that we have such desirable spots there as the Garden of Eden and the land of Goshen, we have a land flowing practically with milk and honey. The hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Proulx) wants to know if there is any whiskey in the South Riding of Renfrew. I am not an expert in matters of that kind, but I would not be surprised at all if there is some of that delectable nectar also in that constituency. Speaking personally, while I have not been a farmer in recent years, most of the members in the Chamber at the present time will be surprised to learn that a man who has spent forty-five years in the business of merchandising claims that he is a farmer. The earliest years of my life were spent on a farm. I have done everything on the farm a man, even of my size, could possibly do. I have ploughed and sowed and reaped and mowed; I have done all these things in turn, even in the old days when the reaping hook was the favoured mowing machine and the spade was the favoured plough. Therefore, I can speak with authority even on matters of that kind.

I have listened with great attention and deep interest to the excellent review of the agricultural situation as given this afternoon by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie). He made special reference to the development, by those under him in his department, of seeds and stock and farm products generally. Reference was made recently by an eminent scientist in this city —I refer to Sir Oliver Lodge—to the unique position held by Canada in the production of wheat. That eminent student, although up in the air sometimes in some of his ideas on life and the hereafter, occasionally takes time to investigate passing events. He had taken notice of the fact that Canada had produced the best wheat in the world, and that wheat was produced by a Canadian, a professor of the experimental farm I refer to the Marquis wheat produced by Prof. Saunders. He referred to a later development in wheat of a still better quality, now, I understand, passing under the name of "Bobs," and produced by a man named Seager Wheeler, also a Canadian. I congratulate the department on these developments and the progress made along these lines.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), on one point particularly, and I should like to refer to that point again, because I believe it is one worthy of special attention of the Minister of Agriculture, namely, the danger of overlapping. Joking aside, it is all very well for each county to ask for an experimental or model farm and all that sort of thing, but there are limits to the possibilities along that line, and it will be well for the minister to confer with the agricultural departments of the different provinces so that there may be no overlapping. I think the Minister of Agriculture of the Dominion Government should develop the higher part of his work and leave the other departments to the provinces to deal with, and he should so co-operate with them as to avoid overlapping in the work attempted.

It would be interesting to make a passing reference at least to a few of the points in contrast between farm conditions in this country in the past and farm conditions as these obtain at the present moment. I trust I shall not be trespassing too much on the time of the committee by making just a passing reference to these features, and then I will give some reasons for certain suggestions I purpose making as regards the disbursement of the vote under consideration. Pioneer life in this country, as we all know, was most strenuous. The pioneers arrived here from the Old Country; they were dumped in the forest, and their first efforts would be to build a log house for a place to live in. In those days they were not surrounded by such luxuries as obtain at the present time. They were accustomed to the use of primitive instruments such as the spade, the scythe, the reaping hook, the ox-wagon, with oxen for ploughing instead of horses. Their stock was not the class that we have to-day, it was scrub stock, and, instead of having modern machinery to separate the milk, that had all to be done by hand. The isolation, too, must have been almost intolerable in those days, almost desperate. And yet this hardy race of people made the wilderness blossom as the rose. What a difference there is in the surroundings of to-day! In almost every home in rural Ontario at least there are telephones; there are a daily rural mail service, motor cars, tractors, and in Western Ontario, electricity, which has developed more largely in the western part of Ontario than it has in the eastern part, but of course improvements will follow there also. The people have modern machinery for both their homes and their farms. In the olden days, as I have already indicated, there was first the log house and then the clapboard house, but now most modern farms have brick residence with large modern barns, thoroughbred stock and all kinds of labour saving machinery for both the home and the farm.

As to what is being done by the Agricultural Department to assist in the further development of all this, I will refer to just some features that I have gathered from a publication issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture. I refer to crop bulletin 142, which gives a great deal of general information. In spite of all this improvement, in spite of all the work that is being done by the Department of Agriculture, and in spite of the call back to the farms, that call remains unheeded, as we can easily see by reading the daily press and other reports.

One man from Pembroke, North Renfrew, writes to the Department of Agriculture, Ontario:

> There have been more sales of farms and stock and machinery this spring than in twenty years. Few people now appear to want to work on the farm.

The point I wish to make in that connection is this. The labour problem is one of the most important that confronts the farmers at the present time, and I appeal to the Minister of Agriculture to devote part of this appropriation towards assisting the farmer along these lines and try to improve conditions. Another writes:

> This "back to the land" that is being preached by men that you could not drive back to the land with a club is all rot. There is no coming back to the land observable; it is all the other way.

Another farmer from Vespra, Simcoe county, writes:

> Celibacy and childless marriages are sadly too common. How it all will end time alone can tell. I fear that the foreign element will ultimately dominate our country, and that the Canadians of the future will be of an entirely new cast.

That is his opinion why the farmers have difficulty in getting help. I am sorry the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) is not in his seat. I would also like the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) to be here to take notice of that view expressed from Simcoe county.

Another farmer writes from Cornwall, Stormont county:

> A number of farms have changed hands recently in this vicinity, mostly to Quebec people, who seem to stick to the soil.

That is another statement that would have been of very great interest, I am sure, to the hon. member from Frontenac, indicating trouble possibly for him to attend to.

There are other problems of the farm besides the labour problem. I think that a large part of the appropriation we are being asked to vote should be used expressly to relieve the labour situation and to give assistance in other directions. For instance large implements which cannot be purchased by individuals and which are great labour-saving devices, should be loaned by the department to farmers throughout the country, because the saving of labour is so very important at the present time. A farmer writes from Oxford, Grenville county:

> There is nothing that would increase production so much in this county as drainage. If the Government could be induced to put a ditcher for underdraining into each township and let the farmers pay the running expenses it would be a godsend to this country. We have the tile very convenient.

Here is another suggestion which I think is a very important one. It has been adopted in the Old Country to assist farmers there. I would ask the minister to pay particular attention to this, from Whitby township:

> Farmers who have houses for their men have all the assistance they require, but those who do not furnish houses are short of help.

I know from experience in Ireland that they had great difficulty there along the same line in days gone by, but in recent years the Government have given assistance to the farmers in the way of capital to help them build homes for their labour. I think when a farm of moderate size is able to offer the inducement to a married man and his family of a decent home with two or three acres of land, it is of great benefit to the individual farmer, and ultimately to the whole community. It would help to bring about what we are all preaching from day to day, namely, greater production. This man has a home for his hired help and has no difficulty in obtaining all the help he requires.

The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Argue) and the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Cowan) have referred to the great need there is of assistance of the department to the farmers of the southern part of Saskatchewan. During last fall I had some experience in that province, in the constituency of Assiniboia. I saw most of the southern part of the province during my stay and got quite a lot of information about western lands and conditions generally that was of great value to me personally, and has been of great value to some of my friends in the vicinity of Renfrew who are desirous of moving out West. I found that a lot of lands out there were held by speculators. That is a rotten condition, in my opinion, and I think there should be some method of forcing that land on the market. At present the Canadian Pacific and other people are simply holding these lands for speculative purposes, and this has a tendency to keep settlers far apart, that is, there is a great distance between one settler and his next-door neighbour. That means, of course, that the schools are a considerable distance away from many of the farmers. I found, however, some very pleasant surprises in that desert land, and some very nice homes. One home I visited was that of a man who had gone out there from Tweed, Ontario, fourteen years ago and who had taken up a quarter-section of land. Later on, he acquired another quarter-section. Besides this half-section he owns one of the nicest homes I have ever seen anywhere. It was modern in every respect, with hardwood floors, hot water heating, electric light, and so forth. It was one of the greatest surprises I have ever had. It just shows what thrift and energy on the part of an experienced man from Ontario can do, even in the not auspicious surroundings I found obtaining out there.

I might also refer to the school situation there. I was surprised and pleased to see the provision that had been made for the training and education of youth. It was one of the most pleasant things I observed possibly during my entire trip through that constituency.

[Mr. Pedlow.]

Mr. COWAN: Does the hon. gentleman think we are a lot of barbarians out there?

Mr. PEDLOW: I did not expect to find the people indulge in such extravagance in the matter of schools.

Mr. COWAN: Extravagance! Is that the hon. member's idea of education? Education is not extravagance.

Mr. PEDLOW: The people evidently intended to provide the best equipment possible in the matter of education for the rising generation. In the town of Estevan, with a population of only 2,500, I saw three large public schools and a high school. I queried the necessity for such extravagance in a matter of that kind, and I was informed that most of the residents in that part of the country came out there young people, and they all had large families, which necessitated extra accommodation in the matter of schools.

Mr. SEXSMITH: I would ask the hon. member what large families in southern Saskatchewan have to do with the item before the Chair?

Mr. PEDLOW: I only mentioned that incidentally when I branched into this digression from the main subject. But it has this connection with the matter under discussion: I am desirous that the Department of Agriculture should use some of this $1,200,000 to assist the farmers in these isolated places by establishing model farms to show the farmers how to operate their farms to the best advantage and to relieve the labour situation. It must be remembered that farmers come into competition for labour with manufacturing concerns. They also come into competition with the tobacco growers, who offer higher wages than the farmers can afford to offer. If you make conditions favourable for farm help they will not want to indulge in the extravagances of city life, nor will they seek what the Civil Service has to offer. If you assist the farmers along the lines I suggest you will accomplish much. I find in the bulletin a summary of the situation, and as it is not lengthy I shall read it. It appears under the heading "Labour and Wages." This statement reads as follows:

> Farm labour conditions were never more acute, even during the latter years of the war. The rates of wages have been steadily mounting, and are now regarded as impossible to meet by a number of correspondents. While some farmers are seeking men at any price, others bluntly state that they will have to do with what labour they can muster at home and let the remainder of the work go.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is undeniably a most serious condition of affairs, and in my judgment is requires the earnest, and more than that the immediate, consideration of the minister. I think it is of greater importance now to provide satisfactory labour than even to undertake the further development of stock or the production of seed. Farmers have an abundance of seed at the present time but they need help to sow that seed, and, when the proper time comes, to harvest the crop. To continue:

Many also are "seeding down" to conserve labour.

This is another serious situation in view of the fact that we are anxious to increase production.

Several correspondents point out that it is impossible for the average food producing farmer to successfully compete with manufacturers, shopkeepers, lumbermen, owners of lake vessels and even with such special crop raisers as tobacco growers and truck farmers so far as paying wages is concerned. The alluring call of urban life, with its short hours and entertaining scenes, is also referred to by correspondents. Wages for farm labourers vary greatly according to nearness to manufacturing centres and general location, and also the experience and ability of the worker. From $40 to $80 a month with board—and even higher—are quoted for single men for the summer, and from $70 to $100 a month with house, garden, milk, etc., to married men working the year round. From $3 to $4 a day with board is being offered for short-term workers.

These wages will not compete with the wages offered by manufacturers, lumbermen and others who are able to pay higher rates. This condition of affairs, Mr. Chairman, is causing unrest among the farmers, and a great many farms are being sold in various parts of Ontario. For instance, take the county of Elgin. I find that a farmer, writing to the Department of Agriculture of Ontario, says:

Malahide, Elgin: More farms have been sold in this township during the last six months than for years before, and many of them were sold to persons who were not farmers.

Now, Sir, this is not improving the situation very much, and if we cannot encourage capable men to take charge of valuable farms the results will be far from gratifying. Another farmer writes from Lanark:

Montague, Lanark: A number of farmers in this township say that they are not going to work fourteen or fifteen hours a day to raise provisions to feed the city man who wants an eight-hour day.

This is just the way that the farmers are thinking. From Plantagenet, South Prescott, the following comes:

We do what we can and let the rest go. Half the farms are left to be managed by men and women past their prime.

Another farmer from Elgin writes:

Hired help are asking from $600 to $1,000 a year with house, garden, fuel, milk and what eggs they can use.

Just imagine, Mr. Chairman! "What, eggs they can use," with eggs at present prices. Why, that would mean an enormous addition to the wages asked for. The statement goes on to say:

The farmers are few who can stand that; they might better work for the hired man. The only solution of the problem is pasture more and till less. Many farmers are selling out and moving to town.

Another man writing from Stephen, Huron, says:

Farm labour is scarce. Between $60 and $65 a month is paid to hands and horse kept. Nearly all are leaving for the cities, where they have short hours and high wages.

I will not tire the committee by reading other statements which I have in connection with this matter. The main point I desire to emphasize is that the minister would be well advised if he diverted some of the money which is being voted under this item towards inducing some help to go to the assistance of the farmers who are quite evidently very badly in need of assistance.

Mr. McISAAC: I rise simply for the purpose of expressing my appreciation of the admirable way in which the Minister of Agriculture has presented the facts regarding his department. Certainly his address this afternoon was a splendid one from every point of view. It contained a great deal of valuable information and I sincerely trust that the suggestion which has been made will be carried out, and that his address will find a wider range of publicity than it will receive by being simply recorded on the pages of Hansard. I hope it will be printed in pamphlet form and distributed throughout the Dominion so that farmers in every part of the country may derive some real benefit from the information which it gives in such abundance. I am sure that a careful study of the minister's speech will enable the farmers to employ improved methods in their prosecution of agriculture, and I am inclined to think that the facts contained in it will be a revelation to a very large number—probably the majority—of the farmers of Canada. A perusal of the minister's speech will show them how extensive is the work carried on by the department and what excellent progress has been made in the development of agriculture. In my province there is an experimental farm, which, so far as I know, is doing good work, and I shall be extremely pleased to hear from the minister some reference to the progress which that farm is making. If it is the hope of the minister to visit the experimental farms in the various provinces I shall be delighted to learn that he will include in his itinerary the Garden of the Gulf and see how things are getting along down there. I do not think I shall trespass upon the time of the House any longer. I might perhaps have been disposed to extend my remarks somewhat farther were it not for the enormous amount of time consumed and the variety of subjects discussed and passed under review by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow).

Mr. TOLMIE: With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for King's, P. E. I., (Mr. McIsaac) I am glad to say that the farm at Charlottetown is making satisfactory progress. A good deal of work has been carried on in connection with crop production, poultry and steer feeding experiments. We are increasing our livestock at that farm, we are taking up dairying, hog raising and so on, and the farm is making good progress under present conditions.

Mr. SEXSMITH: I have not heard from the minister whether he intends to consider the great central part of Ontario. I am glad to hear of the splendid progress that is being made in the East and also in the West, but it seems he is overlooking the good old province of Ontario. We have in Peterborough, Victoria, Haliburton, North and South Ontario, Durham, and Hastings counties a district which is not excelled for mixed farming anywhere in Canada. That high-priced calf that the minister spoke of this afternoon in his splendid address was developed in that district. We have developed, I am proud to say, in the county of Peterborough, some of the best dairy and beef herds in Canada. I have been told by the judges sent out from the department to the little agricultural fair that we hold in the village of Norwood in my riding that it is the best agricultural fair between Markham and Sherbrooke, and there is to be seen at it some of the finest dairy and beef cattle to be found anywhere in the country. We have not had any assistance from the department in the way of demonstration or experimental farms. I am not thinking for a minute that it is necessary to establish an experimental farm. I would not advocate or support it. Demonstration farms, as my hon. friend from West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) said, might well be established in every county. I would be inclined to favour that. I do not see any reason why a farm of 100 or 200 acres could not be taken in every county. If an expert were put on such a farm it could be made to pay and pay well. It would be a great object lesson to the farmers in the district. I do not wish to ramble all over the Dominion talking about southern Alberta and the conditions there and all the other parts of Canada, I only wish to impress upon the minister the necessity of giving the central district of Ontario some consideration. I would like to know if it is his intention to do so.

9 p.m.

Mr. NESBITT: I would like to suggest to the minister that he do not go to the expense of establishing demonstration farms throughout the counties. Why not hire the men who do the farming already?

Mr. DENIS: The hon. member need not be afraid of that.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Agriculture being the basic industry of this country when anything appertaining to it is under discussion in this House, it should be given full and sympathetic consideration. I am not going to embarrass the minister with an application for an experimental farm.

Mr. NESBITT: Do not be bashful.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am not bashful. My application has been in for a considerable time and I am very glad it is, in view of the fact that so many hon. gentlemen have made application to him at this time. In his splendid address this afternoon the minister spoke about increased production. I am sure if there is one thing that is engaging the attention of the thoughtful people of this country at the present time it is the matter of increased production. The minister divided the topic under two heads. First, he urged that there should be increased production from the land already under cultivation. I am sure that the minister, the officers under him and the staffs that he has upon his experimental farms, are in a position to lead the way in respect to this matter. The other point about increasing production by bringing under cultivation raw or new lands is a matter that has to be looked at from a different standpoint. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow), there is a shortage of help in this country and if we are going to bring new land under cultivation we need more help. I am sure that the minister must know that there is a real shortage of farm help in the country to-day. Before we can consider bringing any large areas of new land under cultivation it would be well to give consideration to the help problem. The minister spoke about the class of immigrants that he would like to see coming into this country in larger numbers. I am sure every member of the committee will agree that the class that he described would be very desirable immigrants if we were able to get them. But the minister did not enlighten the committee as to where he was going to get this class of immigrants. It is all very well to set up standards but in this connection beggars cannot logically at any rate be choosers. When we take into consideration that we are losing a great many of that class of our people who formerly have done the manual labour of this country I think it is well for us to consider just where to draw the line with regard to immigration.

Mr. BURNHAM: Does the hon. gentleman mean that he would be in favour of allowing the immigration of cheap labourers into Canada?

Mr. JOHNSTON: I mean just what I said; it would be well for the minister and the Government to give this matter serious consideration. The minister also referred to the importance of good seed and good sires There is no man who has had to do with agriculture, either growing grain or raising livestock, but will know that the advice given the committee this afternoon by the minister was good. In the province of Saskatchewan from which I come the only men who are successful in their work upon the land are those who give particular attention to intensive cultivation. To succeed in farming in Saskatchewan one must give every consideration to the cultivation of the soil. After having done this it is well to use the very best seed, and in breeding livestock to use the best sires that are procurable. The minister also mentioned the cultivation of sunflowers as silage feed. I am sure this is an important matter. We have just come through a very trying winter in the western provinces owing to a great shortage of feed, and if the growing of sunflowers will in any way help in the event of a recurrence of such a shortage it should be given every attention by the department.

I wish to endorse what the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Wilson) said this afternoon respecting the great service rendered this country by Mr. Seager Wheeler, of Rosthern, Saskatchewan. This gentleman has brought honour not only to himself and to the province but to the whole Dominion, having on many occasions won the world's championship for wheat and the coarser grains. As pointed out by the hon. member for Saskatoon, the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon Mr. Wheeler a few days ago by Queen's University. I think the least the Department of Agriculture could do would be to put this gentleman in such a position that he would be relieved from the worry of making a living for himself while carrying on his experimental work. He is doing that work off his own bat, so to speak, having received no assistance from the Provincial or the Federal Government, and I think it is time the department recognized the valuable servcies that Mr. Wheeler has rendered this country.

Mr. TOLMIE: Mr. Chairman, in regard to what the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Sexsmith) said about the absence of an illustration station in his section of Ontario, I am very glad indeed to hear that such excellent cattle are produced there—this is not the first time I have heard of them—and also to know what a very fine quality of farming is carried on there. That is probably one of the reasons why that section has not yet received an illustration station, because no doubt the department has been careful to select those sections where the farming is not so good and illustration stations are more necessary. However, we are now taking up the matter of establishing illustration stations in Ontario, and when we come to a decision the claims of Peterborough will be given very careful consideration.

With respect to the labour situation, it is pretty bad all over this continent. I do not think we are any worse off on our farms than they are in the United States and some other parts of the world. Being one of the results of the war, it is a very difficult condition to regulate. We have established labour bureaus in various parts of the country in co-operation with the provincial authorities and those in charge are doing the best they can to supply men. In Western Canada, I think, conditions are a great deal better than in Ontario. This department has been in touch with the Department of Immigration, whose business it is to take care of these matters, and they assure us that they are making a very strong effort to help out as far as they possibly can.

Mr. J. F. REID (Mackenzie): Mr. Chairman, I listened with considerable pleasure to the hon. minister while he was giving us his well-thought out brief. It brought to my mind what I have often heard repeated in the last two or three years,—that we were having too many farmers in Parliament. So far, I think the record of the present Minister of Agriculture will bear out my statement that he, at any rate, is "the right man in the right place."

He has told us of the progressive improvement of our dairy strains of cattle, which, of course, we are all glad to hear. But I think he forgot to say a word on behalf of the beef strains of cattle,—and judging from the appearence of my hon. friend I believe that he enjoys a juicy beefsteak just as much as I do. But he cannot get that delicacy from the dairy cow; it must come from the beef cattle. In that connection let me add, that I have noticed that sires are provided by the department in settlements in the West where the farmers keep only a few cows. In my opinion,—and I speak as a farmer of some experience,—the quality of the sires is not up to the standard that it should be, and I hope the minister will see to it that that standard shall be reached by the sires which are supplied from time to time. It is a good investment, and when a sire is purchased a few hundred dollars extra should not be considered if an animal of the right quality is secured.

I would like the minister to inform the committee what was the net result of a shipment of two carloads of steers sent from the West to the Experimental Farm here. I met a farmer yesterday who is farming within a short distance of the city, and he told me that at the present time it did not pay to stall beef cattle. So perhaps the minister could give us some valuable information along that line.

I was rather amused when the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow) told us of his trip out West to the "isolated" constituency of Assiniboia. There can be no doubt that when he left home he had an impression that this constituency was a benighted district, but when he got there and saw that the people could build three public schools and one high school no doubt he came to the conclusion that, after all, they were not so badly "isolated." I do hope that my good friend from South Renfrew will again visit the West on some similar occasion and help us out.

I do not wish to press the minister at this time for an experimental or a demonstration farm in my consistuency; I think there have been too many requests of that sort already. I will wait until a more opportune time. I wish the hon. minister every success in his department and I have great hopes that he will contine to be "the right man in the right place."

Mr. CAHILL: Would the minister advise us what the intention of the Goverment is with regard to the Kapuskasing Experimental Farm?

Mr. TOLMIE: The land was given to the department. The cost of operation last year, including buildings and clearing, was about $60,000. The buildings are nearly completed now, and we intend to operate the farm as the other farms are operated. We feel that this farm can render a valuble service in that clay district where the soil is somewhat different from that of the other farms in Ontario.

Mr. POWER: Will the minister tell us something about Spirit Lake, in the province of Quebec? The experimental farm there also was built by German prisoners.

Mr. TOLMIE: Spirit Lake is another farm that was given to us. The amount spent on it so far is not quite as great as the amount spent on Kapuskasing. We have not erected as many buildings; we have not got as far advanced as we have at Kapuskasing. But it is the intention of the Government to go ahead with the development of that farm, which is in a clay loam district.

Mr. CAHILL: These two farms are on the Transcontinental, in the clay belt in Northern Ontario and Quebec. In the district where the Spirit Lake farm is situated there is a settlement of from fifteen to twenty thousand people. At Spirit Lake considerable farming is under way, it is now a farming territory; but at Kapuskasing not one hundred acres of land are under cultivation, outside of the experimental farm. If my memory serves me well, a report was recently published in the press of a commission which investigated the settlement at Kapuskasing, and from it I understand that most of the settlers have left that territory. How much money has been spent in the Spirit Lake territory?

Mr. TOLMIE: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. member the information, but I shall be glad to get it for him.

Mr. CAHILL: Before this item is passed?

Mr. TOLMIE: I hardly think that the hon. member would want to hold up the item pending the furnishing of this information.

Mr. CAHILL: Well, this item is more important, perhaps, than the minister thinks. There is a settlement in the Spirit Lake territory, in the province of Quebec; every effort is being made to colonize it. The people there are practical farmers; they are not people who have been brought in by any assistance, they have gone in on their own account; they are clearing the land and cultivating it and making their homes there without assistance from the Government or from any other source. While settlers are being carted back from the Ontario end of the Transcontinental, people are going into this other territory by the hundreds. All they want is good railway facilities and the ordinary encouragement that a Government may give. I am anxious to know what money has been spent at Spirit Lake, because Spirit Lake is much more advantageously situated so far as settlement is concerned than Kapuskasing ever will be, —at least, until there is a different immigration and colonization policy in Ontario.

Mr. TOLMIE: At Spirit Lake we are expending this year $45,000.

Mr. CAHILL: And $60,000 at Kapuskasing?

Mr. TOLMIE: That was last year; it included expenditure on buildings, which will not be necessary this year.

Mr. CAHILL: Have you in the Estimates for this year $45,000 to be spent at Spirit Lake?

Mr. TOLMIE: Yes.

Mr. CAHILL: And how much at Kapuskasing?

Mr. TOLMIE: The amount is $56,000. There is a very much larger area of land to be cleared at Kapuskasing.

Mr. CAHILL: Does the minister think that Kapuskasing is the proper place to develop, to the detriment of the Spirit Lake territory? Does he think it is necessary to have two experimental farms in such close proximity to each other in that northern country? Would it not be better to spend all the money in one farm and have that farm do some good?

Mr. TOLMIE: I have never visited Kapuskasing, but I am informed that the land is of good quality and that we can look forward to considerable development there, Spirit Lake is also a promising district.

Mr. CAHILL: The minister is correctly informed. There is nothing wrong with the territory; the land is good enough. If the territory were colonized the Transcontinental railway would serve a good purpose. But until the Ontario Government have some system of colonization, or will allow the only class of people who will ever settle that northern country to go in there, it is absolutely foolish for the Dominion Government to be spending money in a territory where you are not going to get settlers. And I repeat that under the present system of colonization in Ontario you will not get settlers in that country.

Mr. POWER: What has happened since the German prisoners went away? Who has been working the land at Spirit Lake?

Mr. TOLMIE: We have a superintendent there and a number of men.

Mr. POWER: How many men?

Mr. TOLMIE: About twenty.

Mr. BURNHAM: Before the discussion of this interesting subject comes to a close I should like to ask a question that seems to me to be quite pertinent. There are at the present time, when these most important Estimates are being considered, less than thirty members in the Chamber. It has been the same every year while I have been in the House; almost without exception the Farmer members pay no attention at all to the Agriculture Estimates. Look at the Farmers' party over there!

Mr. DENIS: How many are there?

Mr. BURNHAM: The hon. gentleman who is the sole occupant of the cross benches at this moment (Mr. Andrews) is a distinguished soldier; I do not know that he is a distinguished farmer. But every other member of the Farmers' party—except the one who has come in just now, at an opportune moment (Mr. Johnston)—is an absentee. That is the interest that the members of the Farmers' party take in the farming affairs of this country. It is not because they have any criticism to make, because one of their members said a few minutes ago that the Minister of Agriculture was the right man in the right place. They have no criticism to make; they have no suggestions to offer; yet they are a Farmers' party.

Mr. GAUVREAU: That is why they went out; they have no criticism to make.

Mr. BURNHAM: I see that my hon. friend does not know anything about agriculture. Speaking for that large class of people who are more or less ignorant of agriculture, I think that the farmers in this House might do the rest of the population of this country the honour, if they will not do the farming community the justice, of staying on the scene and giving their best thought and consideration to the Estimates of the Minister of Agriculture when they come year after year. I am glad to see that at this moment the distinguished leader of the Farmers' party (Mr. Crerar) has come in. We now have a total of three in the Farmers' party, but the best part of the Agriculture Estimates and the discussion on them is over. After hearing so much about the labour question, I should like to ask the leader of the Farmers' party what he proposes to do about labour. I asked the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston) if he proposed to admit cheap labour into this country. He, of course promptly fenced the question and returned me a sharp, but not an explanatory answer. I should like, and we should all like to know how this question of labour is going to be solved. Farmers, I understand, rebel against working fourteen hours a day—as they do in summer, but not in winter—whilst people in towns work eight hours or, perhaps, nine hours a day. The conditions are different. The people who have been on the farm do not want to stay there; they want to leave the farm. What we would like to know is, how the farming community and the leader of the Farmers' party propose to remedy the situation; because we can possibly assist him, and we shall do our best to do so. But is the situation to be remedied by the employment of cheap labour or by simply throwing down the barriers and allowing everything to come in at its cheapest from China and other parts of the world? I know the hon. member (Mr. Cahill) would let anything at all come into this country. He does not care about the farmers of Quebec or the manufacturers; it is cheapness he wants. I believe, however, the leader of the Farmers' party is a different type of man, and I am sure on this matter he would be pleased to give us the benefit of his experience.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I cannot think the hon. member was serious in his criticism of members of this group for non-attendance in this chamber. I am sure every hon. member of the House must know that these benches have been well filled during all the discussion on the Estimates that have been before the committee. He complained because I did not give an answer to his question regarding the class of immigrants to be admitted to this country. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the help problem of this country is one for the Government to consider, not for me.

Mr. CAHILL: I should like to ask the minister again if he would not consider amalgamating those two farms to which I have referred and putting them where they would be useful, instead of spending fifty or sixty thousand dollars at a point where there is no settlement and where there seems to be little possibility of settlement in the near future. It seems that after we start an experiment, we must continue spending money endlessly with apparently no object in view. The minister himself states that he has not visited that section of the country and that he knows nothing about the territory, but that it is reported to him as good territory. The territory is all right, but an experimental farm in a section where there is no settlement and where there is another experimental farm a few miles away with a settlement around it seems unnecessary. It would be better to spend the money where you have a settlement than to spend money in a part of the country where you have no hope of settlement in the near future. Unless you are spending money to some advantage, an item of $50,000 is worthy of consideration. The item seems to keep on growing from year to year, and I think the minister would do well to strike out that appropriation of $50,000 this year. If it is necessary to spend it somewhere else, do so, but I would not ask the minister to spend it at Spirit Lake.

Mr. HAY: How far apart are these two farms?

Mr. CAHILL: Possibly a hundred miles, not more than that. The hon. member will not find one settler between the Quebec boundary and the town of Cochrane. This place is west of Cochrane, it is true, but there are practically no settlers in that territory. If you travel over that line through Northern Quebec, you will find it is settled from Rivière Bell to Lorraine, where fifteen to twenty thousand people, actual farmers, growing wheat, oats, other grain and hay, are settled to make a living. The minute you cross the boundary into Ontario, the country is a wilderness. The settlers who went in there simply went in and took the timber off. The country is waste; whatever timber is left is burned, and the country is not at present attractive to settlers on account of the timber being taken off. In Quebec the settlers are not allowed to take off the timber except on the land they are going to cultivate the following year. They cut the timber off five acres and clear that up; the next year they cut the timber off another five acres and clear that up, and so on. They are settlers. The unfortunate part of it is that they are unable to get out the products of the forest because they are not furnished with railway cars. The railways are there, the people are there, and soil suitable for production is there. When the hon. member speaks about this being a waste country, I may tell him that there is between the Abittibi and the Nipigon room enough for a larger population than there is in Ontario to-day. The territory is good, but the colonization policy of the Provincial Government is bad; the colonization policy of the Dominion Government is bad; in fact, they have absolutely none. The minister this afternoon spoke of colonization; he was going to have some sort of hand-picked people immigrating into Canada and settling on the land. I do not know where he purposes getting them, but there are only certain classes of people who will go into that northern timber country and settle it. The French Canadian, who understands how to settle timber country, is the best man to settle it; he is the only man on the North American continent who has made a success of settling timber country in our time. People from Scandinavia, Northern Europe, would settle that country; but unless the Government have a policy of getting people on that land, it is absolutely useless to spend money on experimental farms and railways where you will not get a settlement until perhaps the buildings decay. The Government have no policy; the Government of Ontario by their legislation practically prohibit the French-Canadians from going into that country. If that is the policy of the Ontario Government, who own the land, why should the Dominion Government spend money to operate an experimental farm in that territory? Why should the Dominion Government spend money to operate a railway in that territory, if the policy of the Ontario Government is that no people shall go in there except those who are hand-picked? If they go into the Kapuskasing district, they would have to come out again or else starve, just as happened in that district. Unless you have colonization, it is absolutely nonsensical for the Government to be spending money in that northern part of Ontario where they will not allow settlers to go in. Why not spend it somewhere else where it will be of some use or save it to the Canadian people? It may be necessary and good business to operate a farm in the Spirit Lake territory, but it cannot be necessary to have two farms within a short distance of each other in the same climate, with the same class of territory, the same soil, the same conditions, one place where there are settlers struggling to make a living and another where the people went in and went out again because they were suffering on the land. You will never get anywhere until the colonization conditions are changed, so why spend this money?

Mr. TOLMIE: At Kapuskasing we have 400 acres under cultivation and 400 acres are being cleared. We have the buildings and the plant that is necessary to operate the farm. I consider that we should continue to operate the farm, for the present at any rate. We cannot abandon it. The only way to demonstrate that the land is any good is to show that it can be cultivated at a profit. We took the farm over as an internment camp, I understand, it was used for that purpose first. So far as the colonization end of it is concerned, that is something for the Ontario Government to take care of. I am quite willing to confer with them with a view to having that country settled, and to take any steps that we possibly can take to that end. I think it would be foolish to abandon the farm under present conditions.

Mr. CAHILL: Why expend more money there than in other districts where there is settlement?

Mr. TOLMIE: Because we have a very much larger plant there, and necessarily there is a call for more money.

Mr. CAHILL: Why put a larger plant there when there is no settlement?

Mr. TOLMIE: The plant was there before I was here.

Mr. CAHILL: It was not there before the Government of which my hon. friend is a member was here.

Mr. DUFF: It's a war baby.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am informed that it was there before this Government was in power at all.

Branch of Entomology, $18,000.

Mr. POWER: I should like the minister to give some explanation of what entomology is.

Mr. TOLMIE: It is the study of parasites as affecting agriculture. It is a very important work. It is estimated that these parasites cause a loss every year in Canada of $125,000,000. We have a staff of entomologists who make a study of the life history of these parasites and of the various insecticides that can be used to destroy them, and the securing of cheap insecticides. Some of the big problems they are engaged on at the present time are the grasshopper plague on the prairies, the mosquitoes in the raspberry growing section of British Columbia, and the brown-tailed moth.

Mr. POWER: As I understand the minister's explanation, it sounds like the ward heelers attached to the Union Government.

For the administration and enforcement of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, $150,000.

Mr. CAHILL: What progress is being made with this?

Mr. TOLMIE: We are making some progress with the grasshopper plague out in Western Canada. As I pointed out this afternoon, it will require about 2,000 tons of bran, nearly 100,000 pounds of arsenic, and 50,000 gallons of syrup to make a bait to scatter around the grasshopper districts with a view to destroying them. We are also carrying on a mosquito investigation in the Fraser River valley, where the mosquitoes have been so bad as to drive away the pickers in the raspberry and strawberry districts during the harvesting season. We are also working on the pear thrip, a parasite that attacks the pear orchards. On Vancouver Island a harvest of only 700 boxes was obtained from an orchard one year owing to this parasite, but after the entomologists had studied the problem and their recommendations had been carried out 7,000 boxes were obtained the next year. We are also working on the spruce bud moth, and another parasite affecting the bark of the fir trees in British Columbia, and we expect excellent results from these investigations. We are also working on the brown-tailed moth in the Maritime Provinces and at the present time have just about eliminated it. The life history of these parasites has to be carefully studied to enable us to adopt the proper methods to counteract them. We are also studying how to get cheap tree sprays to be used in the large orchard districts of the Niagara valley, the Annapolis valley and British Columbia. The work the entomologists are doing is a very valuable one.

Mr. BURRELL: My hon. friend (Mr. Power) raised the question as to what the study of entomology was. Perhaps he would pardon me if I gave him a little illustration of its value, which is pretty well known to anybody who has given any study to the subject. Some years ago the citrus fruit industry—the orange, lemon and grape fruit industry—of California, which has an output of probably $100,000,000 a year, was threatened by an invasion of the orchards by an insect called the cottony cushion-scale, belonging to an order of insects which live on the sap of trees. No remedy was found for a long time, and it looked as if the whole industry was threatened with extinction. Then several of the best entomologists were put to work on the problem, and after a long time one of the entomological experts travelling in Australia to try and find out where this particular cottony cushion-scale came from, and what particular insect preyed on it, thereby keeping it in check, discovered that it was indigenous to Australia, and that these insects were kept down in numbers by being lived upon as a food by a particular species of beetle belonging to the so-called lady bird family. When this entomologist discovered that this lady bird or lady beetle fed on the cottony cushion-scale, thereby keeping the pest in check and rendering it non-injurious to vegetation, thousands and thousands of these beetles were imported into California, and they went on breeding there until in the course of three or four years they had bred to such an extent that they had practically wiped out the cottony cushion-scale in California, and saved the citrus industry, which represents an investment of untold millions of dollars. I think that is about as good an illustration as can be given of the economic value of entomology in a hundred different lines.

Before taking my seat I should like to pay my personal tribute, as Minister of Agriculture in the past, occupying the position which my hon. friend (Mr. Tolmie) does now, to the work of a very capable entomologist in the service of the Dominion Government, who, I regret to say lately died. I refer to the late Dr. Gordon C. Hewitt, who by his work in this particular branch of the service conferred enormous benefits not only upon the department but upon the whole country.

For the development of the dairying industry, and the improvement of transportation, sale and trade in food and other products, $165,000.

Mr. DENIS: I think this is one of the fields in which there is duplication by the Provincial and Federal Governments. To my knowledge, work along this line is being done by the province of Quebec. I should be glad if the minister would let us know what is being done along federal lines.

Mr. TOLMIE: The Dominion Government's work in this connection consists in the promoting of dairying generally. We also carry on cow testing associations in co-operation with the Provincial Governments. We carry on improvements in the manufacture of butter and cheese through instruction; provide plans for dairy buildings; and make investigations of special problems in dairying. We operate a station at Finch, Ontario, for demonstration purposes. The Dominion Government also carry out the oleomargarine regulations, and cargo inspection at Candian and United Kingdom ports. We have several inspectors overseas who inspect cargoes on their arrival in order to keep us fully informed concerning their condition when they reach the other side, and enable us to provide that the goods may reach the consumer in the best possible shape. We also handle a refrigerator car service for both butter and cheese; we attend to cold storage and pre-cooling of fruit, and carry on fruit storage investigations. We are conducting some interesting investigations this year in connection with the storage of fruit and the shipping of fruit in refrigerator cars, and we expect from these investigations to obtain some very valuable information. We carry out the administration of the Cold Storage Act and the Cold Storage Warehouse Act, as well as the regulations in regard to creameries. We issue monthly a dairy news letter, and weekly a dairy produce market report; and in connection with the proposed new work we intend to take up scientific dairy research, which is something that has not hitherto been done in this country. We also deal with cheese factory and creamery economics. The Provincial Government do a great deal of educational work but there is no real clashing between the two departments. We co-operate with the provincial dairy departments wherever it is possible to do so and we render every assistance we can, feeling that our objective is the same as that of the provinces.

Mr. DENIS: The minister's statement would tend to confirm the assertion of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) this afternoon that improvement is possible in the way of avoiding duplication in the work done by the Federal and the Provincial Governments. Item 45 is divided into two parts, the first referring to development of the dairying industry and the second providing for the improvement of transportation, sale and trade in food and other products. I understand that the latter belongs to the Federal Government. But the first part of the item in regard to the development of the dairying industry seems to me to appertain more particularly to the Provincial Governments, and I asked the question which I did because it appeared to me that there was useless duplication in the work accomplished by the Dominion Government on the one hand and the Provincial Governments on the other.

Mr. TOLMIE: There is no serious duplication at all.

Mr. DENIS: I am glad to learn that fact.

Mr. MORPHY: What method is employed by the Government to bring to the attention of the individual farmer the information obtained from the dairy records? Is there any special method that enables the department to have that information completely disseminated? I quite appreciate the fact that there are many farmers who are alive to the value of dairy records and cow testing and who seek information because they are interested. But that is the class of farmer who needs information least; he is alive and up-to-date. There is the other man, however, who probably lives alongside the energetic farmer, and it is of him that I am speaking. What is done to buoy him up and to induce him to take a keener interest in the improvement of his own herd?

Mr. TOLMIE: We reach the public through the Agricultural Gazette and bulletins issued by the department, and we have in every dairy centre a man who disseminates all the information that is at his disposal. He imparts this information as best he can in the immediate district, and then much of this material is also sent away to the agricultural press and receives publicity in that way. The information also reaches the public through the medium of the farmers' institutes.

Mr. MORPHY: How many copies of the Agricultural Gazette would reach individuals in the riding which I have the honour to represent, for instance? Is there a list on which the names of persons who might need the Agricultural Gazette or the dairy news letter could be enrolled?

Mr. TOLMIE: This information is sent to those people who apply for it. It is an expensive matter to distribute material of this kind indiscriminately throughout the country because in many cases it is only thrown aside. It is not deemed wise to send it to those who do not ask for it. In all cases in which the bulletins are asked for they are sent, because the very fact that there is a demand for them shows that the farmers to whom they are sent are interested. In all such cases we are glad to send all the information we have.

Mr. MORPHY: Do I understand that all the names that might be sent in by a member of the House would be put on a list and that those persons would become regular receivers of the Agricultural Gazette?

Mr. TOLMIE: Not of the Agricultural Gazette, but of the bulletins. We shall be glad to furnish them with those.

Mr. MORPHY: Would that include the dairy news letter?

Mr. TOLMIE: If they wish it.

Mr. CAHILL: What did the transportation which is included in this item amount to last year?

Mr. TOLMIE: I may point out to the hon. member that we do not pay any transportation; we simply supervise the transportation of shipments.

Mr. CAHILL: The item is "improvement of transportation." What does that mean?

Mr. TOLMIE: We are continually seeking methods by which transportation can be improved. For instance, we are carrying on some experiments this year through an arrangement with the railway companies and the fruit men, making a test in regard to the recording of temperatures in refrigerator cars, etc., and we trust that a good deal of valuable information will be secured. Shipments are also pre-cooled before they are put into the refrigerator cars, and the temperature is carefully noted. These experiments are being conducted this summer at the request of a large number of fruit men and we expect that beneficial results will be derived from them. In connection with refrigerator car inspection and market reporting last year the expenditure was $3,570. This covers refrigerator car inspection at Montreal and Toronto.

Mr. MORPHY: In regard to the establishment of a station at Finch for the improvement of the cheese industry, I should like to know exactly what is being done in this direction.

Mr. TOLMIE: We have taken hold of two cheese factories at Finch and are operating them as model factories. Any man who wishes to learn anything about the cheese and butter business can go there and see how things are done in an up-to-date way. It has proved of great value to the cheese makers. We are making cheese and butter and shipping milk, and the station has been showing a profit.

Mr. MORPHY: Where is the station?

Mr. TOLMIE: About fifty miles south between here and Cornwall.

Mr. MORPHY: I suppose it is well recognized that in a district such as I have the honour to represent, and in other districts, this country produces a tremendous lot of what we ordinarily call factory cheese. That is a cheese of 75 or 80 pounds. This cheese is practically all shipped out of the country because Canadians do not appear to be a cheese-consuming people. I fancy it is safe to say that from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 worth of cheese is exported annually. It is a strange thing that the Canadian public will not eat cheese to anything like what may be deemed a reasonable extent. People eat a little cheese but not much. The British consuming public seem to eat more cheese, especially if they can get a glass of beer with it. In the absence of that trade in this country have the Government ever considered the idea that there must be a tremendous quantity of cheese that is imported from other countries such as Roquefort, Gorgonzola, Edam and other varieties that before the war at any rate were brought in here and sold at from 60 cents to 75 cents a pound? I believe that to-day Roquefort will cost $2 a pound. This condition exists while there are a lot of districts in this country with the finest pasturage in the world and cows that stand up equal to those in any other place because the farmers and dairymen have made great strides in developing, through pure-bred sires, valuable herds. Yet there is no incentive apparently given to the people to go in for a finer and smaller package kind of cheese outside of the factory at Ingersoll. That is about the only place where they put up some small packages of pimento and ordinary cheese. On the general argument that the home market in everything else is the best for the farmer, it ought to be the best for the cheese farmer —the man who develops and uses his farm largely for dairy purposes. I throw it out as a suggestion to the minister that if this factory at Finch is only dealing with and putting forward to the people of Ontario the production of what is called cheddar cheese, or some such name, there might be a great opening for the Government to establish at that factory the manufacture of a small cheese of the richer variety which, if this production were extended to the country districts under proper educational facilities, would induce capital among the farming body to be invested on the co-operative plan, to establish factories in the dairy centres which would supply a cheese that the people of Canada would eat and that also would give a better remuneration. I would ask the minister to look into that.

10 p.m.

Mr. TOLMIE: We have been making a few of the small cheddar cheese at Finch. I shall be very glad indeed to accept the suggestion of the hon. member and look into the matter further.

Mr. CRERAR: This item is perhaps one of the most important in the Estimates we have under consideration. I might say with reference to the point raised by the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy) that we have several varieties of cheese made in Canada other than the Canadian cheddar which is sold in Great Britain. We have the Oka cheese made by the Trappist, the Experimental Farm cream cheese, and several other varieties of that kind. I believe the hon. gentleman will find quite a sufficient variety to satisfy his taste in that respect. But apart from that, our cheese industry in Canada is undoubtedly one of the important branches of our agricultural industry. Canada has for many years occupied a pre-eminent place in the British market for her cheese products and the total exports have run from 175,000,000 to 200,000,000 pounds per year. I am confident that we can establish a similar pre-eminence in respect to our butter output. In building up this industry, however, the question of transportation and particularly of modern refrigeration as applied to transportation is of the highest importance. I think that any money that is expended in the way of improved transporation facilities and in the way of finding out the best methods of refrigeration and of handling these commodities will certainly be money well spent. We should not overlook the fact that our position in Canada is a very favourable one in respect to the world's markets. We have heard from the minister already about the position which our cheese occupies in the British market. There is no reason why our butter should not occupy an equally favourable position. We have in addition to that a vast and growing market immediately to the south which is bound in the years to come to take large quantities of our dairy products. The fact is sometimes overlooked that more than half of the population of the United States lies east of a line drawn north and south through Chicago. By far the most densely populated portion of the United States, within twelve or fifteen hours by train from one of the finest agricultural parts of this Dominion, namely the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. If we have vision to look into the future we have a splendid prospect ahead of us in respect to the development of our dairy industry. I say again that any assistance we can give in the direction of perfecting the methods of transportation and particularly the development of proper cold storage facilities, so that these commodities that are of a perishable character can be brought to the markets in the best condition, will be money well spent. It is now generally recognized particularly with respect to food products of this class, that quality is of the highest consideration and if we can make cheese and butter of the highest quality and can get proper facilities for taking them to the markets of the world in the best possible shape, the dairy farmers of Eastern Canada particularly—because they are more favourably situated in that regard than the dairy farmers of the rest of Canada—can find a ready and profitable market for everything they can produce.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has the minister considered adopting a policy whereby fertilizers can be obtained at or as near cost as possible by those engaged in the dairying and other branches of agricultural industry?

Mr. TOLMIE: We fully realize the value of getting fertilizers to the farmers at the very lowest possible cost, but, as the hon. gentleman will understand, railway rates are very high and concessions are very difficult to get.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is because railway rates are so high that I am anxious to know if the Government has any policy on this matter. It is one of the most important considerations, I imagine, in connection with agriculture that fertilizers should be obtainable by our farmers at the minimum cost; and it seems to me that because we have these high transportation charges the Government ought to formulate a policy to deal with the matter.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought this matter to my attention. I will look into it further.

Mr. LEGER: What instructions are the government milk testers given in regard to their duties and their districts?

Mr. TOLMIE: These cow testers are directly under the control of the Provincial Governments as to their particular districts, but we have certain men who go out among the farmers and interest them in the advantages of cow testing. These tests are of great value to the dairyman, because it is the only method by which he can tell the best cows in his herd, the real test, of course, being the butter-fat content rather than fine looks, and he is thus enabled to eliminate his poor cows. The men we send out arrange with the cheesemaker or buttermaker, as the case may be, connected with the local creamery to test the milk, and we pay the tester.

Mr. LEGER: Is it his duty to test only the milk of the patrons of the factory, or is he instructed to test any cow in the district?

Mr. TOLMIE: He is instructed to test any cow throughout the district.

Mr. LEGER: I have personal knowledge of one case where a farmer, not a patron of the local butter factory, sent his milk to be tested, but a month or two afterwards the testing officer said that he would not test the milk of any farmers outside the patrons of the factory. That is the reason for my question.

Mr. TOLMIE: If the hon. member will be good enough to bring the case to the attention of the department, we will be very glad to get a report on it and take any action that may be necessary.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to delay the Estimates for more than a minute or two, but I was rather interested in the remarks of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy) and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) regarding cheese. I know very little about cheesemaking, but for some years I have been more or less of an epicure in regard to cheese, and I was struck by the remarks of the hon. member for North Perth when he drew the attention of the committee to our cheese production. I think those remarks are well worthy of careful consideration by the minister, who has given us such a very excellent report this afternoon and has shown such a high quality of management in his department. A short time ago the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) told us that the province of Quebec had the finest record in this country for the quality of its butter, and I think I would be quite safe in saying that the province has an equally fine record both as to the quality and variety of its cheese production, and I was a little surprised that some hon. member from that province did not rise to confirm that statement.

The point I wish to make is that we are to-day producing, especially in the province of Quebec, cheese which is quite equal—and I think I am a fair judge as an eater of cheese—to any of the imported European varieties, such as Roquefort and Camembert. The only trouble is that our fine varieties, such as the Oka, the Trappist and the Beloeil are not made in large quantities, in fact, we cannot begin to supply the demand. The cheese from Beloeil is made by two or three farmers there, it has a most delicious flavour, but so far as I know it has never reached the markets beyond Ottawa. I have purchased it many times in this city, and have taken it to my home a thousand miles west, and every one who has tasted it has passed the most complimentary remarks regarding its quality and flavour.

I think it would be well for the minister and his deputy to consider the advisability of encouraging the making of this delicious cheese which the province of Quebec excels in producing. In the European markets when any one is buying cheese he considers our ordinary Canadian cheese of very superior quality—and we know it has a high food value—but in addition a very well-known cheese is sold as "old" Canadian cheese, and that cheese when properly cured is, to my mind, almost equal to any Roquefort we import. Therefore, I think the production of old Canadian Cheese—which I presume is simply our ordinary cheese aged for a certain time—of Oka, of Trappist and of Beloeil cheese, should be heartily encouraged by the minister and his department, for the reason that those varieties might well take the place to a certain extent of the expensive cheeses imported from Europe. I merely wish to offer that suggestion by way of supplementing the remarks of the hon. member for Perth and the hon. member for Marquette.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank the minister for his kindness in promising to look further into the question of the transportation of fertilizers. In that connection may I say one word as representing one of the Prince Edward Island constituencies? As the minister is aware, the products of Prince Edward Island are almost exclusively agricultural, and in the province are found very rich deposits of mussel mud which is excellent as a fertilizer, but owing to the high cost of transportation those deposits are very little used. If this form of fertilizer were extensively used the agricultural products of the Island would be very considerably increased, and I would be pleased if the minister would make a point of paying particular attention to the needs of the Island in that regard. That is only one instance. I think the question of supplying fertilizers to farmers at the lowest possible transportation cost is one that might well constitute a policy which the Government should take up for the entire Dominion.

Mr. DENIS: A year or two ago I communicated with the Government railways in an effort to secure a reduction in the freight rate on fertilizer that is being used in the district of Joliette in connection with the growing of tobacco. Generally speaking, it seems to me, it should be the policy of the Government to make effective a general reduction of freight rates on fertilizers all over the country. The more production there is on the farm the more freight there will be for the railways; for each carload of fertilizer that the railways transport, they will receive two or three, sometimes more, carloads of agricultural products. It has been said time and again that railroads have been duplicated in Canada; that we have three transcontinental railroads when we should have not more than two, and so on. There is a great deal of truth in all that, and the only possible way for us to make these railroads pay is to feed them. We feed them by bringing about more agricultural production. This is a very important question for the Government to consider. If the freight rates on fertilizers were generally reduced, the result would be a benefit to the farmer, a benefit to the railroads themselves, and a benefit to the country.

Towards the encouragement of cold storage warehouses for the better preservation and handling of perishable food products, $25,000.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Some weeks ago a delegation came here from Nova Scotia, consisting of the Provincial Secretary of Agriculture and some of his officers, to press upon the Government the importance of providing cold storage facilities for export shipments of agricultural products from the Maritime Provinces. Will the minister say if the matter has been considered, and if so what decision has been reached?

Mr. TOLMIE: At that time a committee was formed to act with the minister in looking into this matter. We have been investigating the matter through our livestock branch with a view to ascertaining just what supply of cattle there would be for such a plant in the Maritime Provinces. It would be necessary of course, for us to have a sufficient supply of cattle before a plant could be built and conducted at a profit, particularly with an abattoir. The report which I have from the Livestock Commissioner does not indicate that sufficient cattle would be available just now to keep such a plant going. But we are developing to the very best of our ability a co-operative selling plant whereby farmers are encouraged to form co-operative selling associations so that their cattle can be shipped in carload lots, both to Montreal and down into the markets to the South. We hope that by following that policy for a while the supply of livestock in my hon. friend's section of the country will be so increased that it will be sufficient to maintain an abattoir. We have also taken the matter up with the Canadian National Railways and they have the whole subject under consideration. I assure the hon. member that we shall do all we possibly can to get such a plant established. It is a necessity for the farmers in his district, because at present they are very much at the mercy of the buyers. It is the same old story of the Western Canada cattle ranches; you have to sell your cattle in the fall when they are fat, whereas if you had cold storage facilities you would be able to put your beef in there and keep it until you could get a satisfactory price.

Mr. CRERAR: A year ago, if I remember correctly, an appropriation was asked for the erection of a cold storage warehouse in Montreal. Can the minister say what progress has been made, if any?

Mr. TOLMIE: That plant is under construction, under the direction of the Harbour Commission.

Mr. McKENZIE: Would the minister give us some general idea of the purpose of this vote?

Mr. TOLMIE: This vote is in connection with the administration of the Cold Storage Act. Under this Act we have assisted by subsidy the construction of cold storage plants to the extent of about one-third of cost, on condition that they be available for the use of the public. The subsidies paid have amounted to $699,242.41.

Mr. McKENZIE: What I really meant was whether all the cold storage business in Canada comes under my hon. friend's department. For instance, are bait freezers, which is another system of cold storage, under his department?

Mr. TOLMIE: No, under the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. McKENZIE: I think that the Minister of Marine, in his usual way of getting things shoved off on somebody else, told me the other night that he had nothing to do with cold storage establishments; that they come under the Department of Agriculture. Now that both the Minister of Marine and the Minister of Agriculture are here, I wish to state that I want to get a cold storage plant for bait down in Cape Breton; which of the hon. gentlemen it comes from does not make the slightest difference. The people of that part of the country are suffering very much from want of cold storage for bait. I want to make a serious statement to the minister. In the spring of the year large quantities of small fish travel round the coast. They are not much good for food, but they make splendid bait. But the fishermen have no place to put that bait where it can be preserved; the consequence is that when the schools of fish go by, that supply of bait disappears. Then in the fall, in September, October and on until Christmas, there is splendid cod fishing along the shores, but the difficulty is that the fishermen have no bait. The proper policy would be to have cold storage plants at certain convenient points along the shore to store the bait, and sell it. The fishermen do not want this bait for nothing; they are willing to pay for it, but they are not wealthy enough to have cold storage facilities themselves. If cold storage plants were supplied with competent officers in charge of them and enough was charged for the bait to cover the running expenses, that would be satisfactory. In Newfoundland, I understand, they have not only cold storage warehouses, but steamers supplying the fishermen at different points with bait out of cold storage at certain seasons of the year when they could not get it otherwise. Although we perhaps could not put a boat on the service as is done in Newfoundland, at different points, not only Cape Breton, but all along the coast from Yarmouth to Cape North, there is great necessity for facilities of this kind. I, therefore, urge, not only upon the minister, but upon the Government generally, the great necessity for providing the facilities for which I am asking. At this season of the year millions of pounds of that bait could be caught and conserved; but when there is no way of preserving it, the opportunity is lost; and when great profits could be made by fishermen, you find the fishermen sitting on the shore on a beautiful fishing day with the fish in millions around them, but unable to catch the fish because they have no bait. This is the actual condition of things, and I am not exaggerating. When I appealed to the department before, I was told that there was a certain company at Canso which had some bait stored away, but the company said: Our bait is for ourselves; the storage is our own, and we are not going to give our bait to others. The result was that the fishermen had to go without it. Possibly with some exertion those fishermen might manage to get a place for themselves, but that would take a considerable amount of money, more than the fishermen have.

Mr. TOLMIE: This department has no control over any of those bait cold storage plants. I presume if some of the bait was shipped to any of the plants in which we are interested, it would be accepted for storage. I realize the importance of what the hon. member says as regards having a supply of bait on hand, and I shall be glad to look further into the matter. I have not very full information at present beyond what the hon. member has given me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is it the Government's policy to grant these subsidies only to warehouses that are erected under the control of some municipal or other public body, or are subsidies granted sometimes to private individuals?

Mr. TOLMIE: At the present time, only to municipalities. The subsidies were cancelled about the beginning of the war, and

I understand no subsidies have been given since.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister think that is the wisest course to pursue? Is it not advantageous to encourage these cold storage places to as large an extent as possible?

Mr. TOLMIE: It may be possible to look into this matter again with a view to taking up the subsidizing of cold storage warehouses in the near future, but up to the present I have not had an opportunity of going fully into that aspect of the case.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have had some correspondence with the minister as regards a cold storage warehouse at Ellerslie, P.E.I. If the minister is looking further into the matter, I should be deeply obliged if he would give some consideration to the people of that particular part of the island. In that connection, there is one representation which I should like to bring to the minister's attention from some of the residents of Ellerslie. They point out, in connection with the cold storage warehouse there, that the company have space not only for storing what is necessary for the public needs, but for storing what is necessary for food for the fox industry. The company seem to be under the impression that because they were supplying space for food for the fox industry, they were thereby losing the opportunity of getting the Government subsidy which would go only to concerns that were supplying public needs generally. The company contend that they are endeavouring to meet those needs, and as regards the fox industry they make an interesting representation which I think is important. This is a letter I have received from two electors in Ellerslie:

> We think the fox industry should have some recognition from the Federal Government, because we believe the Government will receive more income tax from the profits of fox farming than from any other source in this province, and without some means of preserving the food, this industry cannot advance as it otherwise would. If the authorities would reconsider this matter I know they would find out the advantage it would be to the Government to encourage the fur farming industry, which they would be doing, as well as giving valuable assistance to the farmers of this and the surrounding sections by giving a reasonable grant to assist the above-named organization in the erection of their chemical freezing plant.

That seems to be a practical, although a somewhat novel suggestion. The minister will realize that an industry such as the fox industry has become in Prince Edward Island is one that it would be well for the Government to help even in this indirect method.

Mr. MORPHY: Is it fish bait they feed the foxes or what?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall have to ask the Minister of Agriculture to answer that question as I am not an expert on the fox industry.

Mr. TOLMIE: I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the hon. member has said regarding the storing of food for foxes, and this is a matter that might perhaps be looked into a little further. We have not neglected the fox industry altogether. We now have an expert in Prince Edward Island making a very careful study of fox diseases, that work being carried on under the Health of Animals Branch. Another department of the Government is looking into the nutrition of foxes. Fox food down there consists very largely of old horses and meat of that kind, any cheap meat the people can get hold of. I just wish to point out that we have not neglected the industry; we are taking a keen interest in it, and we are anxious indeed to assist any of these young industries that are trying to get a footing and that show prospects of succeeding.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On further reflection, I remember visiting some of the fox ranches, and one of the things that came forcibly to my notice was the quality of the food these little animals were getting. I was told that to get the better classes of furs, they sometimes feed the foxes with the very best class of meat. If that be the case, if the minister can help along the storage of the food that is necessary, he will be furthering an industry that is already one of the most important, certainly on the Island, if not in the Dominion, and one that may become of increasing importance in the whole Dominion.

Mr. CRERAR: Personally, I have not a great deal of use for subsidies of any kind, and I think the subsidising of private cold storage plants in this country can now very well be discontinued. As the minister has stated, we have given in assistance in this direction something like $700,000. In many cases the result was that the government of the country contributed 30 or 33 per cent of the cost of erecting a cold storage plant, and after the subsidy was earned, the cold storage plant was used entirely for the convenience of the company that promoted and built it, and the benefits to the general public were very slight. There are in this country cases where private cold storage companies operating in perishable commodities have been able, through the control of cold storage, to exercise a very considerable influence on the price at which they sold their commodities. Cold storage is a thing that might very well be municipally developed, and in cases where a cold storage plant is erected in this way and any merchant or dealer can secure his allotment of space, I think the department might very well be warranted in giving assistance; but the giving of assistance for the development of cold storage plants for private companies, who, after they have earned the subsidy utilize the storage entirely for their own benefit, is a different matter, and I do not think the country would be warranted in expending more money in that direction.

The fox industry in Prince Edward Island is a growing industry, and I have no doubt a very profitable one in view of the rising price of furs. If I might offer a suggestion to the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) it would be this, that the fox farmers might very well practise and apply the principles of co-operation in respect to supplying themselves with the necessary storage facilities and that sort of thing for the carrying on of their industry, which the farmers of Western Canada have successfully practised in respect to the selling of grain. Self-help is the best kind of help, and if a group of farmers engaged in the fur-producing industry can get together and provide the facilities that are necessary to them in common for the carrying on of the industry, it is infinitely better for them and infinitely better for the country, than if that is done through government assistance. In the development of sound co-operative enterprise in my judgment is found the safest road for the development of an industry, as well as the development of self-reliance and confidence on the part of those engaged in it.

Fruit Branch, $140,000.

Mr. CRERAR: Perhaps the minister would give us an explanation of the increase in this item.

Mr. TOLMIE: The increase is due largely to increased cost of transportation for employees, and partly to the facilities that I have already referred to regarding cold storage and the shipment of fruit under cold storage conditions.

Health of animals, $500,000.

[Mr. Crerar.]

Mr. McKENZIE: Some time ago I was making inquiry about the shipment of cattle from the port of North Sydney to Newfoundland and other points. We have no veterinary inspector at North Sydney, and I understand that before these cattle are permitted to be put on board ship, they must be inspected. There is a veterinary at Sydney, a very competent man, but Sydney is seventeen miles away from us by land and five miles by water. The port of North Sydney is open very much later in the year than Sydney, and open earlier in the spring; so boats come round to North Sydney for loads of cattle. At present the inspector has to come seventeen miles from Sydney to do the inspecting, and that has been found very inconvenient. I do not want to interfere in any way with Dr. Thurston's employment or his salary. He is a returned soldier and a deserving man in every sense, but I think he has enough to do in the great city of Sydney and the town of Glace Bay and other places where he works for the Government, and as we have a veterinary in the town of North Sydney I think it would be better if a man who was right on the spot, and who could immediately inspect these cattle, was appointed. It is very inconvenient to have to wait for this inspection, sometimes the steamers are held up, and at other times they will not wait. I have been trying to get this difficulty remedied for some time by having an inspector located at the port of North Sydney.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am glad my hon. friend has brought that to my attention. I understand, however, that the shipments from there are very small, and that it would hardly pay to maintain a man on a salary at that point, but we might look into the advisability of having a local man do what inspecting is required and pay him by fees. I will make a note of it and see what can be done.

Mr. McKENZIE: The shipments are not so very small. The Railway Department, after a good deal of fighting, have put up very large sheds and provided proper accommodation for the protection of these cattle. I would like to see the man who does this work paid properly, and I am sure it would not cost so very much. I am not asking that he be given a fixed salary, but it could be so arranged that he would be paid for every shipment he examined. The veterinary in North Sydney, Mr. George Coleman, would be able to do this work very well, if the minister would make an arrangement with him. I am speaking more in the interest of the trade than in the interest of any individual who might be appointed, but I should be very glad to see this young doctor appointed as inspector there. He is a college graduate and he could do the work very well. I am sure the minister could make an arrangement with him that would not be very expensive and that would facilitate shipments very much.

For the administration and enforcement of the Meat and Canned Foods Act, $520,000.

Mr. PEDLOW: Why is this not under the Department of Health? I see on the next page, by item No. 61, that the administration of the Act regarding fertilizers, is under the Department of Health. I think these two items should be transposed.

Mr. TOLMIE: We are expecting to take over the administration of the Act respecting fertilizers at a very early date. With regard to the inspection of meat and canned foods, these are products of the farm. The meats are slaughtered in abattoirs under the inspection of veterinarians by the Health of Animals Branch. This is one of the branches of the Agricultural Department. I think it is quite proper that the inspection should be under the Department of Agriculture, because in the first place we are dealing with agricultural products, and secondly, the work is carried out by a profession that is very closely allied with agricultural matters.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the explanation of the increase in this item?

Mr. TOLMIE: It is explained by the increasing volume of business, and by the fact that we have had to engage more men to carry on this work.

Mr. DENIS: I notice by the Auditor General's Report that the amount spent on this work last year was $360,836.49. An increase to $520,000 appears to me very large.

Mr. TOLMIE: I think my hon. friend is giving the figures for the year before last.

Mr. DENIS: That is correct. Is the Government receiving any return from the enforcement of this Act, or is it all expenditure and no revenue?

Mr. TOLMIE: In carrying on the inspection of these meats we are rendering service to the whole public. We have to meet competition from the United States and the Argentine in the markets of Great Britain. In the United States this inspection is paid for by the Government. In our packing houses the packers pay for the overtime. If they keep an inspector for three or four hours or oblige him to work on a holiday, they pay the extra charge. When this matter was under discussion a little while ago, we came to the conclusion, after an investigation, that it would not be judicious to place the packers in this country at a disadvantage in competing with the United States, the Argentine and Great Britain.

International Institute of Agriculture, to assist in maintenance thereof and to provide for representation thereat, $10,000.

Mr. PARDEE: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. TOLMIE: This is our contribution to the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. This institute has its headquarters at Rome, and its object is to gather information in regard to agriculture from various parts of the world. By subscribing to it we are able to keep in close touch with the world's agriculture and to apply the information which we receive in that way to the benefit of the farmers in this country.

Mr. MORPHY: Who is in charge of that institute?

Mr. TOLMIE: Mr. Doherty is the Canadian representative.

For the development of the livestock industry, $900,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it is understood that the minister would allow two or three items to remain over for discussion on a subsequent occasion. There are only a couple of items of his Estimates left now and I think he might let them stand.

Mr. TOLMIE: If we let one stand it would serve your purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend had better hold this one; it is one of the largest.

Mr. TOLMIE: Very well.

To enforce the Seed Act, to test seed for farmers and seed merchants, to encourage the production and use of superior seeds and to encourage the production of farm and garden crops, $225,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is an increase of $25,000 here; perhaps the minister would explain the reason.

Mr. TOLMIE: We have opened a new seed laboratory in Winnipeg, and there are also increased expenses that are affecting all departments this year. This is perhaps one of the most important branches in the whole department. I think I explained this afternoon that it handled seed during the war through what is known as the Seed Commission created to meet the situation during the war period. It handled over $12,000,000 worth of business, showing a small profit on running expenses.

Mr. CRERAR: There is an item on page 8 which has to do with the Agricultural Department—item 15—and which I think we might dispose of to-night.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That item relates to civil government. We have not yet had the details in regard to civil government, and I might take advantage of this opportunity to point out to hon. gentlemen opposite that we expect to get detailed information in regard to the Civil Service classification before going on with civil government Estimates.

Mr. DOHERTY: We hope to be in a position to furnish that information soon.

Mr. TOLMIE: I think we had better take up resolution 139 on page 38:

Experimental Farms—New buildings and improvements, renewals and repairs, etc., in connection with existing buildings, fittings, etc.	$200,000 00
Flags for Dominion public buildings	5,000 00
Dominion public buildings—Generally	30,000 00
Royal Canadian Mounted Police buildings	500,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This resolution is divided into four items. I think it had better stand; it has reference to the Royal Mounted Police.

Mr. CAHILL: What are the buildings referred to here?

Mr. TOLMIE: As the item says, it is for new buildings, improvements, renewals and repairs to old buildings on all farms.

Mr. CAHILL: Have you the totals for the different farms?

Mr. TOLMIE: Yes. They are: Central Farm, $53,235; Charlottetown, $6,450; Kentville, $8,600; Nappan, $6,500; Fredericton, $5,500; St. Anne de la Pocatière, $8,750; Cap Rouge, $15,250; Lennoxville, $9,200; Morden, $9,150; Brandon, $12,900; Indian Head, $3,700; Rosthern, $5,600; Scott, $5,100; Lethbridge, $16,065; Lacombe, $5,400; Summerland, $17,150; Invermere, $1,950; Agassiz, $3,200; and Sydney, $6,300.

First item agreed to, resolution stands.

Resolutions reported.

On the motion of Rt. Hon. Mr. Doherty the House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

[Mr. Tolmie.]

Monday, May 17, 1920.

The House met at Three o'clock.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1920.

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting further Supplementary Estimates for the year ending March 31, 1920, was presented by Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and referred to the Committee of Supply.

HONEY BILL.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): On behalf of Hon. Mr. Rowell, I beg to move:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House has agreed to the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 29, an Act respecting Honey, with an amendment to their amendment as adopted by the House on the 12th instant.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT, 1919, AMENDMENT.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Railways) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 135, to amend the Railway Act, 1919.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. J. D. REID: Mr. Speaker, section 6 of the Act to amend the Railway Act, passed at the last session, provided that any railway under provincial jurisdiction which was leased or operated by another road wholly or partly within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada should be regarded as a work for the general advantage of Canada and therefore subject to the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. This clause was inserted to cover the case of the Quebec Central Railway which, being part of the Canadian Pacific Railway system, was under provincial as well as Dominion jurisdiction. We found afterwards that that clause had been so worded as to have the effect of taking in street railway lines, electric suburban railways and tramways constructed under the authority of a provincial legislature. This Bill proposes to place these electric lines again under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Government. If I read the main clause of the Bill its purpose will be explained:

Section 6 of the Railway Act, 1919, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

2. The provisions of clause (c) of section 6 of the Railway Act, 1919, shall be deemed not to include or apply to any street railway, electric suburban railway or tramway constructed under the authority of a provincial legislature and which has not been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada otherwise than by the provisions of the said clause.

This is merely to place such lines again under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. BUREAU: Will the minister read the section as it read before?

Mr. J. D. REID: Well, I have not the section before me at the moment.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Is there any provision in this Bill for extending the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission in regard to telephone companies? A provision to that effect was left out of the previous legislation. It was introduced in this House, but defeated in the other.

Mr. J. D. REID: No.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CIVIL SERVICE CLASSIFICATION.

Mr. PREVOST:

1. In the re-classification of the Civil Service, have the so-called American experts and the Civil Service Commission taken into account the actual cost of living in fixing the salaries of the civil servants?

2. If so, have their estimations been verified adequately and justly?

3. If not, is the work done by the so-called experts and the Civil Service Commission to be modified and readjusted as regards the salaries?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Yes.

2. Yes. The recommendations of the Civil Service Commission have been approved by the Government, thoroughly investigated and endorsed by special committees of the House of Commons and Senate and finally authorized by the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1919, passed 10th November last.

3. The Civil Service Act provides, section 42 (2), that "The Commission shall hereafter, as it may from time to time deem necessary, establish additional classes and grades and classify therein new positions created or established in the said classification, and may divide, combine, alter, or abolish existing classes and grades."

Subsection (1) of the same section provides that the classes of positions shall "include the several rates of compensation." The Civil Service Commission has power, therefore, to "modify and readjust" the salary schedules and submit the same for the approval of the Governor in Council.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

How much does it cost per mile to haul a car on the Canadian National railways?

Hon. Mr. REID: I answered this the other day.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood that the minister explained why he could not answer the question, but I thought the question should stand with a view to the hon. member revising it.

Mr. CAHILL: A private car or passenger car?

Hon. Mr. REID: I cannot give any other answer than that which I gave to this question the other day.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

MR. PHILIPPE BOUCHER.

Mr. BOURASSA:

1. Has Philippe Boucher, of Charny, railway conductor on the Intercolonial railway, who was arrested for theft of merchandise from the Grand Trunk railway in Montreal last fall, and found guilty, been reinstated in his former position?

2. If so, how long after his offence was he reinstated?

3. At whose request was he reinstated?

Hon. J. D. REID:

1. He was not arrested for stealing from the Grand Trunk railway, but he was arrested by a Grand Trunk railway policeman for having in his possession blankets belonging to Canadian Government railways. He has since been reinstated.

2. Twenty-six days.

3. At the request of the General Superintendent after he had thoroughly investigated the matter and found that Boucher was not attempting to steal.

VESSELS UNDER RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton):

1. How many boats are under control of the Railway Commission as regards rates, tolls, tariff agreements and arrangements?

2. What are the names of the vessels, the dead weight tonnage of each and the routes over which they run?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. The Board of Railway Commissioners has not the definite information that would enable it to reply to this question. The tariffs filed, in conformity with Sections 336 and 358 of the Railway Act, do not show the names of the steamers nor their tonnage, nor does the Act call for this information.

2. See answer to number 1.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION STAFF.

Mr. FRIPP:

1. Are there any male persons of military age employed in the offices of the Civil Service Commission who were eligible for service overseas and who did not enlist for such service?

2. If so, what are their names and date of appointment?

3. Why are they retained?

4. Have any appointments been made to the said department of young men who did not see service, between the ages of twenty and thirty-five years, since the 1st of November, 1918?

5. If so, how many?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Yes.

2. J. W. Bourbonnas, 15th July, 1918; W. B. Cole, transferred to Civil Service Commission, April 1, 1920; S. J. Daley, 30th September, 1908; C. V. Putman, November 15th, 1918; A Thivierge, transferred to Civil Service Commission, February, 1920.

3. Being all married men with families these were not liable for military service although eligible, and the Civil Service Commission is not aware of any reason why they should not be retained in the public service.

4. Yes.

5. Four.

BANKRUPTCY ACT—TRUSTEES.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has the Government determined its policy regarding the appointment of trustees under the new Bankruptcy Act, 1919?

2. If so, what is it?

[Mr. J. D. Reid.]

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

MR. PUTMAN.

Mr. COPP:

1. Is there an official connected with the Civil Service Commission named Putman?

2. If so, does he hold a responsible position of an advisory or directory character?

3. What is said position?

4. Beyond an academic examination, has he any qualifications in the nature of practical experience in handling or supervising large bodies of officials?

5. If so, what special qualifications?

6. What is his age?

7. What is his salary?

Rt. Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Yes.

2. Appointed Assistant Chief, Organization Branch in March, 1920.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. Yes.

5. Graduate civil engineer, eight years' banking experience, six years of engineering experience, during such period had direction of as many as three hundred men, one year and a half with the Civil Service Commission on classification work, one year as acting chief. Obtained highest standing on Civil Service open competitive examination held in October, 1919, for the position of Chief, Organization Branch, with a percentage of 86.3 per cent.

6. 32 years.

7. $255 a month.

PURCHASES BY GREECE AND ROUMANIA.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. Were the goods bought from different corporations or commercial firms in Canada, with the credits granted by the Canadian Government to Greece and Roumania, purchased after tenders were called?

2. What person or persons purchased these goods for Greece and Roumania?

3. Has any Government employee taken part in the purchase of these goods? If so, who is or who are these employees, and in what department are they employed?

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER:

1. The bulk of the purchases made by the Greek Government were surplus stores belonging to the Militia Department. The prices fixed by the War Purchasing Commission were submitted to the Greek Government and the decision to buy was made by their representative.

In the case of the leather, cloth, and other materials bought by the Greeks, tenders were called and submitted to the representatives of the Greek Government who made the final decision to purchase.

With reference to the purchases made by Roumania, these were made direct by the Roumanian representatives from representatives of Canadian firms in London. These orders were passed to the Canadian Trade Commission who gave an opportunity to the whole trade concerned to participate in the order.

2. The respective representatives of the Greek and Roumanian Governments.

3. In all cases the decision to purchase was made by the representative of the Government of Greece and Roumania and not by any Government employee.

ENTERPRISE FOUNDRY COMPANY.

Mr. BUREAU:

1. What amount of money was paid by the Enterprise Foundry Company of Sackville, N.B., for the 95 tons of cast iron which were shipped from the Ross Rifle factory of Quebec, to the said Enterprise Foundry Company?

2. Who was the money paid to, and who fixed the price to be paid?

Hon. Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. $2,543.25.

2. (a) Receiver General; (b) Assistant Commissioner.

CAMPBELLTON-GROSS POINT INTERPROVINCIAL FERRY.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure):

1. Has the contract for the Interprovincial Ferry over the Restigouche river, between Campbellton, N.B., and Gross Point, Quebec, been awarded?

2. If so, to whom, and on what conditions?

3. Who were the tenderers, and what were their respective tenders?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. Awarded but contract not yet signed.

2. (a) To John Quinn, the only tenderer who was qualified to carry out the conditions; (b) Supply a suitable boat propelled by steam. Ferry to run daily (Sundays excepted) from 6 a.m. to 8 p.m. at half hour intervals except for six hours during the day when only one round trip will be required in the hour. Tariff: Two horse cart or conveyance with driver, each way, 40 cents; one horse, cart or conveyance, each way, 30 cents; one automobile, each way, 30 cents; one horse, each way, 10 cents; each head horned cattle, each way, 10 cents; each head sheep or swine, each way, 5 cents; each passenger, each way, 5 cents; every hundred pounds of freight, 4 cents. Ferry to be placed on service by 1st May; license for five years, and license to give two sureties for $500 jointly. The department reserves the right to reject the boat if found unsuitable or unsafe; to modify the maximum tariff if deemed expedient, etc. The licensee also to carry over without fee all militiamen, soldiers or sailors when provided with passports or under charge of their proper officer. Licensee has power to commute passenger rates, and to keep tables of rates and sailings placed in a conspicuous place and on board of boat.

3. Robert L. Sinclair, $350 per annum; Richard K. Murray, $250 per annum; Frank J. Allard, $70 per annum; John Quinn, $10 per annum.

When contract was offered to Mr. Sinclair, he informed the department that he could not provide a boat. The others were asked to operate ferry in accordance with terms of their tender; Mr. Murray did not reply; Mr. Allard would use a scow until he could provide a boat within two months; such arrangement not being satisfactory, the contract was awarded to Mr. Quinn.

CAPTAIN PERCY FLYNN.

Mr. MARCILE (Bagot):

1. Has Captain Percy Flynn been officially appointed by the Department of Militia adjutant of the 22nd Regiment of the Permanent Force at Quebec?

2. If so, what was the nature of his services in France with the 22nd, or other unit?

3. If he has not been appointed, is it true that an order of the headquarters of the Expeditionary Force in England, sent to officers commanding the reserves, amongst others to the 10th Reserve where Captain Flynn was adjutant, to the effect that the adjutants of Reserves should have seen service in France in order to be maintained in their position, or to be put on the general list of officers fit for service in France and subject to reduction in rank if necessary, and in the event of failure to conform to said orders, such officers were to be returned to Canada and placed at the disposal of the Adjutant-General?

4. Did Captain Flynn agree to go to France in accordance with said orders, or did he prefer to return to Canada and accept an appointment similar to the one he had in England, with the First Depot Battalion, 2nd Regiment of Quebec, at Quebec?

5. If so, were there not, on the list of the Department of Militia, officers having seen service in France with the 22nd Battalion and who had made application, and were qualified and well recommended, to be appointed, adjutants of the 22nd Regiment of the Permanent Force?

6. How many officers, having seen service in France with the 22nd Battalion, have applied to serve with the Permanent Force of Canada?

7. If Captain Percy Flynn had no service in France, and if he returned to Canada under the conditions mentioned in question No. 3, after a number of years in England, is it the intention of the Government to continue him as adjutant of the 22nd, or will the Department of Militia consider the appointment of a former officer of the 22nd, having had service on the firing line in France, as adjutant?

8. Is it the policy of the Government and the Department of Militia to give a preference to officers having had service in France who desire to serve in the Permanent Force of Canada, or are all officers placed on the same footing as those who have only seen service in England, Canada or in Siberia?

Hon. Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. The appointment of Captain Percy Flynn as adjutant of the 22nd Regiment is in a draft gazette dated the 29th April, which has been submitted to the Privy Council for approval.

2. He did not see service in France.

3. This officer was appointed a lieutenant in the 57th Overseas Battalion in May, 1915, and received promotion to the rank of captain on appointment as adjutant on the 19th January, 1916. He proceeded overseas on the 2nd June, 1916. During his period of service overseas he held the following appointments: Transferred to the 69th Battalion, 8th June, 1916; appointed assistant adjutant, 21st June, 1916; appointed adjutant, 1st July, 1916; transferred to the 10th Reserve Battalion, 4th January, 1917; appointed adjutant, 8th January, 1917, which appointment he relinquished on the 29th April, 1918, to return to Canada. The services of Captain Flynn were specially applied for by the General Officer Commanding Military District No. 5, Quebec, in February, 1918, as an experienced officer was necessary to undertake the duties of adjutant of the 1st Depot Battalion, 2nd Quebec Regiment, Quebec, and Captain Flynn was considered to be the best officer for the appointment. His return to Canada was, therefore, approved, and he reported for duty on the 22nd May, 1918. He was subsequently appointed to the Canadian Expeditionary Force (Siberia) and served in Siberia from December, 1918, to May, 1919, as a company commander.

4. It is true that officers were called upon to revert to the rank of lieutenant to proceed to France, and the records show that Captain Flynn, on the 25th October, 1917, applied to revert accordingly, and that he was compulsorily retained until he could be suitably replaced as adjutant of the 10th Reserve Battalion by a French Canadian overseas casualty. The records further show that these conditions prevailed until the return of Captain Flynn to Canada was approved by special request referred to in paragraph 3. Under the circumstances, it was not considered that his lack of service in France should debar him from permanent military employment.

5. A list of applicants for appointment to the 22nd Regiment, a number of whom served with the 22nd Overseas Battalion in France, is on file in the department.

6. Twenty-five applications for appointment to the permanent force have been received from officers who served with the 22nd Battalion in France.

7. This department concurred in the appointment of Captain Flynn as adjutant of the 22nd Regiment owing to the special requests and recommendations of Lieutenant-Colonel H. Chasse, D.S.O., M.C., and of the General Officer Commanding Military District No. 5, after consideration of the names of all officers who had applied, and having regard to his excellent qualifications for the appointment, this department sees no reason for making any change, providing Captain Flynn continues to prove himself an efficient officer as in the past.

8. The policy of the department has been, when possible, to make selections to fill permanent force vacancies from officers who have seen service in active theatres of operations during the late war, having due regard to their qualifications and the nature of the appointments for which they are required.

[Mr. Marcile.]

GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN IMPORTS.

Mr. RINFRET:

1. What was the amount of imports from Germany and Austria during the year 1919?

2. What was the total amount of said imports for the first three months of 1920?

Hon. Mr. BURRELL:

1.

From Germany	$14,041
From Austria	779
Total	$14,820

2.

From Germany	$30,223
From Austria	48,944
Total	$79,167

INQUIRY RE QUESTION.

Mr. DEVLIN: Was question 32, which is a very simple one and one which could be answered readily, answered?

Mr. SPEAKER: Question 32 stands.

Hon. Mr. REID: I must get the information from the Canadian Pacific Railway and I have not the information as yet.

Mr. DEVLIN: As I read the question, the information would come from the Post Office Department.

Mr. SPEAKER: Any reference to the answering of questions should be on the Orders of the Day.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS.

Mr. HAY:

1. What are the working hours of the civil servants in the Inside Service, stenographers, clerks and others?

2. Are these hours strictly observed?

3. What salaries are stenographers, clerks and others receiving? That is, the average generally, also average bonus?

Mr. ANDREWS:

1. How many married women whose husbands did not serve in the Canadian Expeditionary Force are in the pay of various Government departments at Ottawa?

2. Is it a fact that the Department of Immigration has in its employ a lady at a salary of $300 per month?

3. Is this lady the wife or mother of a returned soldier, and was any effort made at the time of her employment to secure the services of a war widow or dependent?

4. Is this lady's husband in the employ of the Government or of one of the Provincial Governments?

5. Is it a fact that the daughters of several departmental heads are employed by their fathers in Government service and that in many such cases these young ladies hold positions which could be well filled with men who have been trained by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment for the Civil Service, but are unable to secure appointments?

Mr. COPP:

1. Did the steamship Metagama sail from Liverpool carrying soldiers and their families on or about the eighth day of February, A.D. 1919?

2. If so, were any complaints made to the Militia Department or any other department of the Government as to the condition of said steamer at time of sailing and during said voyage?

3. Were any complaints made to the Government or any department thereof as to the treatment accorded to said soldiers, their wives or families during said voyage?

4. Did a delegation from the city of St. John appear before a committee of the Cabinet on or about the 27th day of February, 1919, protesting against alleged ill-treatment of said soldiers and their families during the said voyage?

5. If so, who comprised said delegation and what members of the Government acted on said Cabinet committee?

6. Did the Government take any action as a result of said conference? If so, what action and what was the result of same?

7. Did said delegation file affidavits or solemn declarations of passengers as to the condition of the steamer and treatment accorded said passengers during said voyage?

8. If so, did the Government hold an investigation concerning said complaints?

9. What was the result of such investigation?

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Mr. DUFF:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, reports, documents and other correspondence between the Post Office Department, the Post Office Inspector at Halifax, and any person at Vogler's Cove, Nova Scotia, regarding complaints in connection with the manner in which post office matters are conducted at the said Vogler's Cove.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT.

The House resumed from May 12, consideration in committee of Bill No. 12 (Hon. Mr. Guthrie) respecting the election of members of the House of Commons and the Electoral Franchise.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When progress was reported upon this Bill on Wednesday last, paragraph (k) of clause 2, clauses 32, 63 and 101 had been allowed to stand. All of the other clauses had been agreed to with the exception of clauses 19 and 76, which cannot be adopted until the House has concurred in the required money resolution. Clause 32 had been discussed at length and was still before the committee. Shall clause 32 carry?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Since this matter was last before the committee I have had the benefit of a conference with some of my hon. friends opposite with regard to clause 32, in an effort to carry out, if possible, the suggestions made by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), and other hon. gentlemen opposite. As a result of that conference, I have prepared certain amendments to clause 32, which amendments will, I think, generally speaking, pretty fully meet the suggestions made, although perhaps not in every case to the letter. If the amendments prepared to clause 32 are adopted, the result will be briefly this. In any province of Canada where there is a provincial voters' list not more than two years old, that list shall be adopted as the basis of the Dominion franchise. In cities, towns and villages, or in what are known as urban polling divisions, the procedure laid down in schedule A to the Bill as drawn, will be very nearly followed, there being a few minor amendments to schedule A. But in all rural polling divisions the procedure has been somewhat changed. The provincial list, if not more than two years old, will be accepted as final and complete for rural polling subdivisions, with two provisions, first, that a person may still apply under section 63 of the Act to be added on election day and may vote; second, that a person who is not on the provincial polling list may apply to the revising officer of an urban division in the same electoral district to have his name added, and the revising officer is given power to add that name and to notify the returning officer that the name has been added to the list. Therefore, there will be a double remedy to anybody who has been left off the provincial list and who is a resident of a rural polling division. First, he may go to the poll on election day, be vouched for by two electors who can swear to his qualifications, obtain his ballot and vote. Secondly, he need not wait for election day; he can go directly to the revising officer, have his case determined and have his name added to the list. There is this further provision, that if the revising officer refuses to add his name, after hearing and inquiring into the case, that man shall not subsequently on polling day be entitled to go to the poll and swear himself on. If he does that, we have provided a penalty. The committee will note that the result is this. In a city, town or village, or in a division having cities, towns or villages, the procedure is unchanged and schedule A will prevail. In rural divisions, the procedure is radically changed where there are provincial voters' lists. If there be in existence in any province no provincial voters' lists of less than two years of age since last finally revised and completed, the whole list shall be made in both rural and urban divisions, in urban divisions under schedule A, and in rural divisions under schedule B. This matter was discussed at the conference which we held on Thursday last, and the proposals seemed to meet with the approval of those present. I have heard that one or two minor objections have since been raised, but the amendments which I have now the honour of moving have been drawn on the basis which I have just outlined. They will involve a considerable amendment to both the schedules of section 32 and a slight amendment to section 33.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What will be the machinery for adding the names of women who are not on the provincial lists in the province of Quebec?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They will go on either by application to the revising officer or by application to the deputy returning officer on polling day. I appreciate the point raised by my hon. friend. Personally, I favoured the old arrangement whereby a rural register would be appointed and would see that all the women as well as the men who were entitled to vote were put on the list, thereby avoiding unnecessary expense. It was put to me most squarely on the ground that where there are lists it would be an unnecessary expense to appoint enumerators throughout Canada for rural polling divisions when you had these two safety valves—section 63, as well as an application to the judge. Under the amendment as now proposed women or men who are not on the provincial list will have to apply in either one of the two ways I have indicated.

Mr. DENIS: I have listened with great interest to the minister's explanation of the amendments. While I have every confidence in the members who assisted the minister in drafting these amendments, I must say that it is hard to appreciate offhand their significance under the new conditions. In the province of Quebec all the women will have to be placed on the list. In the rural divisions they can have their names put on the list, under this new amendment, by applying to the returning officer. How long is he going to sit?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Five days.

Mr. DENIS: How many revising officers will there be for each constituency?

Mr. GUTHRIE: In every urban division there will be one registrar up to a population of 4,000, and an additional registrar for each additional 4,000. Under 1,000, of course, it is a rural division. One revising officer is appointed for each electoral list. He is the county judge and has power to appoint as many additional as may be necessary.

Mr. DENIS: It seems, then, that the women will be obliged to travel a long distance to have their names registered.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They will have to travel to the poll in any event, and they can vote on polling day without going to the judge.

Mr. DENIS: The difficulty will be this. There will be 300 electors to each poll. Now it has been said, and with good reason, that it is rather hard to poll 300 votes in one day in one division, though it can probably be done when all the machinery has been set in order in advance; but if every woman voter has to bring along two witnesses on polling day who will prove that she has a right to vote, that procedure will take some time, and I submit that it will be absolutely impossible for all the women to vote within the time set, on account of the unavoidable delay which this procedure will entail. I think that objection should strike the mind of the minister. It is easy to calculate how many minutes each person will have to vote when 300 voters have to vote within a certain time, and a calculation will show that the time allowed for each is very limited. There are bound to be periods during the day when no voters are coming forward, and if there is a crowd of women coming to be sworn in at the end of the day, it will be absolutely impossible for them all to vote under the procedure I have mentioned.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was of the same opinion as my hon. friend. I preferred the Bill as originally drawn, but these amendments have been drawn to meet the objections of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) and my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau), who pointed out that in cities in the province of Quebec the lists were prepared only once in two years. I do not hink it is possible to meet every suggestion, or to meet everybody's convenience. You cannot grant just as much convenience as you would like in a matter of this kind. The voters have to put themselves out some. However, I do not anticipate even in the case as stated by my hon. friend, that there would be very great difficulty in polling all the votes. A ten-hour day for 300 voters would allow each voter two minutes each, which is more than the average voter takes. Then as a rule they do not all vote. The voters have also another way of getting their names put on the list, by going to the judge, and that would no doubt be done by those who found it convenient to do so. I think that the greater number of those who applied to the deputy returning officer on polling day would be able to vote. I do not mean to say that this is a perfect scheme, but it is the best we have been able to evolve.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton): May I ask the minister to give his reasons for not having an up-to-date list in the rural districts as well as in the cities?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under these proposals it will be just as up-to-date in the rural districts as in the city districts. If there is a provincial voters' list not more than two years old, it will be adopted, and there is power to add to or strike off that list.

Mr. FIELDING: The revising officer is a judge?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. That would be an up-to-date list. As the Bill was drawn, there was no provision for a revision in the country; it was considered that it would involve too much trouble, because people would have to come to the cities, and it might involve too much work for the revising officer. It was thought that if you adopted the provincial list and gave the individual the right to apply personally to get on that list, or to go to the polls on polling day and be sworn in and vote, you would have an up-to-date list for people who desired to vote, at all events.

Mr. ROSS: In Quebec the names of women are not on the provincial lists, whereas in Ontario they have been put on the lists. I was not at the conference on Thursday, but as I understand the proposed amendment, application has to be made in person, to the revising officer to be put on the list. Am I right?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I gave you a copy of the amendment. I do not remember the precise wording at the moment.

Mr. ROSS: It does not absolutely say so in so many words. I have not had much time to study it carefully, but I think that is the effect. That was not the case under the Bill as originally drawn.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To apply in person to the revising officer.

Mr. ROSS: If it does, I can make the suggestion more pointed. Under the Bill as introduced a voter was entitled to be put on the list by the registrar upon the evidence of a credible person; that was the proposal until this amendment was suggested.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Have you any objection to that being followed out?

Mr. ROSS: As far as the revising officer is concerned?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, to the Bill as originally drafted.

Mr. ROSS: Yes, because there is no appeal to the registrar. If it was right to have the registrar, who is to some extent a partisan officer—I do not care what government is in power, whether Liberal or Tory—put on the list a voter on representations made to him by a credible person, why, should it not be right for a judicial officer, without asking the personal appearance of that person, to put on the list the name of a man or woman on similar evidence being offered to him? If the argument was strong in that case, and the original Act was right, it surely would be stronger in this case when the revision is being made by a judicial officer.

I may say that I was not at the conference on Thursday. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) has gone a long way and has been very generous in this whole matter. But under the amendment he suggests applying to the province of Ontario, this situation arises. As the law of the province now stands, lists are prepared for October, 1919, and if the two-year limitation is left in the Act as it is—and I have no objection to that—on the 20th of October, 1921, there will be no provincial list available, and under the suggested amendment of my hon. friend on the 20th of October, 1921, we in the province of Ontario will have to revert to this very thing that we are eliminating for two years. Well, if it is good to eliminate the appointment of registrars and the expense attendant thereon for two years, it is good to eliminate them after the two years.

I suggested to my hon. friend this morning an amendment along these lines, drafted by Mr. Biggar, and I think he will be able to work it in properly.

If in the province of Ontario—

This would apply after two years had gone by. I think it should be made to apply now generally.

—no lists have been prepared and completed as aforesaid,—

That is, within two years.

—but municipal lists are required by law to be annually prepared and to include all persons who could be entitled to vote under this Act at the date of their preparation, the last of such lists shall be used as the voters' list for such election—

What does that mean? I suggest that the municipal lists in Ontario as prepared by the municipal authorities under the provincial laws, and which are prepared every year and include the names of all persons who are entitled to vote under this Act, shall be the basis of the Dominion Elections Act; but there shall be added thereto and subtracted therefrom the names which should be added thereto or subtracted therefrom under this Act in the manner my hon. friend has suggested in his amendment. But if he will not concur in that, I would suggest that he put in the Act the amendment that has been drafted just casually—I do not say it is agreed to or anything like that—by Mr. Biggar to the effect I have mentioned. Because if he does not do that by October, 1921—although we will have complete municipal lists which will be almost man for man and woman for woman the last lists we want for Dominion purposes—in the province of Ontario we are thrown back on the appointment of registrars to prepare new lists at a cost of half a million dollars a year. As I say, if it is good up to 1921 it is good after 1921, and I would ask my hon. friend in all fairness and as a matter of economy to have that suggested amendment made.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton): Is it not a fact that the municipal lists in Ontario are based upon a property qualification? How could you make use of that?

Mr. ROSS: Under the Bill introduced by Premier Drury and which is before the Ontario Legislature at the present time,—and which, I have no doubt, will be passed before this Parliament rises—the system of making up the municipal lists is being entirely changed. At the time of the last election the enumeration system was adopted and found to work very unsatisfactorily, thousands of men being left off the lists and the expense being very heavy, over $500,000, as I pointed out the other day. But the Ontario Government is now passing a law that every man and woman twenty-one years of age shall be put on the assessment roll, and the assessment roll is made the basis of the voters' list, consequently the voters' list prepared by the municipality are just as complete a basis as can possibly be secured for federal election.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton): But that Bill may be changed in the same way as this Bill has been changed; it has not passed the Legislature yet.

Mr. ROSS: That is true; but even if it is changed, all that will mean will be that the revising officer will have a little more work to do—a few more names to add; it cannot mean anything else.

Mr. FIELDING: With regard to the Nova Scotia lists about which there was some controversy, I am glad to be able to say that the proposals made by the hon. minister (Mr. Guthrie) go very far to remove the objections which I ventured to offer. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that I tried to picture the Nova Scotia lists as so safe and sound that they could be accepted in their entirety. The Bill departed from them in two points. In urban districts it provided for an appeal to the county judge, which is retained in the Bill as it now stands. While I thought that was unnecessary, I have no objection. Our chief difficulty, however, was in regard to the rural lists; there it was proposed that the Nova Scotia lists under the provincial law should be revised by officials called registrars. I am glad to note that the minister, for various reasons, one being the large expense throughout the Dominion, has withdrawn the provision regarding registrars. He has retained, however, this safeguard, that if there are any persons who feel that they have been improperly left off the Nova Scotia lists, they shall have the right to appear at the polls and by there swearing on qualify themselves. As I have already said, I do not like the idea of a man swearing himself on the list on election day. However, the minister has guarded that by the amendment that he has made, and I do not think there is any very serious objection to be urged now. I want to say with regard to elimination of the registrars, that the minister has gone a long way to meet our wishes, and I hope on other grounds we will be able to come to an understanding. On the Quebec and Ontario lists I must refrain from expressing any opinion, because I have not given so much attention to those as to the lists of my own province.

Mr. ARTHURS: In all Franchise Acts at present, both provincial and Dominion, special provision is made for the unorganized districts in any province. According to this Act no special provision is made so far as I have been able to discover. I would point out to the minister in charge of the Bill that lists two years old are as a rule absolutely useless in an unorganized territory. The ordinary voters in a mining or lumbering district almost entirely change in the course of two years, and this mode of preparation as suggested by the amendment would practically annul all such lists. There is also this to be considered, that in many cases these lists being in existence, polls will be held in subdivisions where there will be absolutely no voters at the time of the election. On the other hand, the men who had been voters in those polling divisions will have moved to some other part of the constituency, or to another constituency, in which they would have no chance to be placed on any of the lists. I think this matter should have the consideration of the minister before pressing the amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I realize that in unorganized districts where there are no municipal institutions there is more difficulty in regard to the voters lists.

Mr. ARTHURS: There is no difficulty under the system of registration.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would like to see a list prepared in unorganized districts within thirty days if it were possible, but that breaks the rule we are applying to the rest of Canada. We must try to have a uniform system. I have had to tell my hon. friends from Quebec that we cannot make a special provision for Quebec; they must be put to some inconvenience too. If one is going to make an Act to bring every convenience to the door of everybody it is going to be a very difficult thing to frame one that will in the end be practicable. Objections have been raised from the province of Ontario to this arrangement by the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) and objections have been raised to the arrangement on behalf of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I see the difficulty pointed out by my hon. friend from Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs). If we cannot adopt something that is going to be of general application I do not see anything to do but to make a uniform law and stick to the proposition originally drafted even although it would involve heavy expense. The proposals I make are not made on my own behalf or on behalf of the Government but they are proposals made to meet the objections raised by hon. gentlemen opposite. If they are not satisfied with them there is no use of going on with a proposition that pleases nobody and displeases everybody. I would rather hear a little further discussion before coming to a conclusion; I do not wish to impose my will on the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The main purpose of the conference, as I understood it was to see if it were possible to avoid the duplication and the great expense involved in the prepartion of voters' lists where lists are already prepared and are satisfactory. Each one can speak best in reference to his native province. The present proposal refers particularly to the province of Ontario. The Ontario Government is putting through a law which will require that every year lists shall be made up in every municipality urban an rural, which list will include the name of every man and woman who is entitled to vote. These lists will be made up year after year. What we ask is that these lists, with the prepartion of which Ottawa has nothing to do, they being prepared by the municipality, shall be taken as the basis of the voters lists for federal purposes. If the law stands as it is at present all this work will be done by the Provincial Government, but in addition to that the minute we propose to have a federal election the Dominion Government will have to appoint an army of enumerators to go over the province of Ontario to prepare fresh lists disregarding those lists which are perfect in themselves. This is an enormous waste of money.

Mr. H. A. MACKIE (Edmonton): We have to do that in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The cost at the last election ran up to half a million dollars or more. Why should that amount be spent to produce lists less satisfactory? The question that has arisen with regard to Ontario arises from the fact that we are not certain just when the provincial lists will be completed and what my hon. friend from West Middlesex desires is simply to make certain that there will not be under this Act the expense of the double preparation of the voters' lists. I think that was also the purpose in regard to the other provinces such as New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Where these lists exist the idea is to use them as the basis of the federal franchise and to save the enormous expense involved in the preparation of new lists.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In view of the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) I must say that my question as to the means of putting women on the lists in the provinces where they have no vote was not intended as a criticism of the amendment. I very much prefer the amendment to the clause as it stands in the Bill. I think we should do away with this enumerator business altogether. My hon. friend need not say that he will withdraw the amendment because we have criticized it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It was not on that account I made that remark but it looked to me as if the amendment did not please hon. members on either side of the House.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I like it better than the clause.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My objection to my hon. friend's statement in regard to the Ontario lists is this: I do not think it a proper thing to make a patchwork of the election law, and that we should have one law for one province and another law for another province. If we cannot get some kind of uniformity we had better stick to the old law. We should have a uniform franchise law and a uniform method of carrying on our elections. The hon. member for West Middlesex and the hon. the leader of the Opposition both take the ground that it may possibly be that in the course of time we will have municipal lists which will suit our purpose, but they cannot give the assurance that that will be so. The hon. member for West Middlesex is hugging a Bill—I have not had the opportunity of examining it—and he says that the Drury Government is going to do so and so. It has not done it yet. As a matter of fact in the province of Ontario we have the provincial voters' lists prepared last fall still in force, and if this House dissolved to-day those voters' lists would be the basis of the lists that we would have to use. It is beneath our dignity to wait on the Drury Government and see what they are going to do. They will probably change the law; it may be amended and reamended. When they see what we have adopted they may meet our suggestions. I cannot see any sense or reason in the suggestion that because a Bill has been introduced into the Ontario Legislature which may or may not ultimately suit the case, we should deliberately drop something we believe to be the best suited to carry out the purpose in view in order to meet some policy which they may adopt in the Ontario Legislature and which they may undo two or three weeks hence. In regard to Nova Scotia, I agree with the hon. member (Mr. Fielding) that the object to be attained there was the avoidance of expense and duplication of effort, and that it was possible for us to do that for the simple reason that they have provincial lists there just as they have in British Columbia, where they have an annual preparation of voters' lists. In Quebec they have one every two years.

Mr. DENIS: Every year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Every year in the rural parts, but every two years in the large cities.

Mr. DENIS: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We are changing the clause as originally drawn from one year to two years to meet the case of the cities in the province of Quebec, but we give it general application throughout Canada and the whole of the clause has been drawn to that end. No matter whether it is Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, or any other province that has a provincial list, we adopt that list. I am not going to make exceptions. I do not counsel the making of exceptions for different provinces. I do not think it would be wise or fair to do so, and if the amendment is not going to be better received on both sides of the House than it has been I am satisfied it is going to disappoint a great many people. That is the reason I would like to have the matter more fully discussed. I do not want to have it condemned, because there is merit in it, but if we are going to add to it, to take from it, and re-write the whole thing, why let it go.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that we are not taking any exception for the purpose of having an amendment which would be generally applicable; the point we are raising at the moment is simply one of interpretation to carry out the spirit of the amendment. The purpose of the amendment being to use, if possible, the lists that are in existence, we simply want to make sure that if those lists are in existence they will be used and that they will not be lost sight of altogether through failure to draw the attention of the Government to a possible consequence of the kind.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is a very grave exception to draw an amendment to provide that in the province of Ontario we shall accept the municipal lists, because if at the next session of the legislature of the province they change their method of getting up the provincial lists we shall be all away from it. Then we would have adopted the Ontario municipal lists, and the legislature would have provided for new provincial lists.

Mr. ROSS: I do not think my hon. friend quite understood the purport of my suggested amendment, although doubtless he appreciates the spirit in which I made it; it was only to carry out what I understood was the conclusion arrived at in the conference on Thursday. Now the suggested amendment which I made was this: The time may arrive when more than two years may elapse and there will be no provincial list.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But there is a provincial list.

Mr. ROSS: I know that as well as my hon. friend does. However, I do not want to get into a controversy with him. I admit he has been very generous in trying to meet these cases, but I am only pointing out that there is one little point that he has not meant by his amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have met the only case I tried to meet. I never agreed—and never heard it suggested until to-day—to adopt the provincial list.

Mr. ROSS: I am not saying that the hon. gentleman is not correct, I am only pointing out a situation which may arise. Supposing election does not take place until two years from last October. There will then be no up-to-date provincial lists in force. The amendment I suggested was simply this: If in Ontario the provincial legislature enacts that municipal lists shall be prepared annually—which we think they will enact—and that on all such lists the name shall appear of the persons who are entitled to vote under our Dominion Franchise Act—if that happens and the provincial lists are more than two years old then the municipal lists containing all the names of the electors that are entitled to be on them under the Dominion Franchise Act that we are enacting to-day shall be taken as a basis and names added thereto or subtracted therefrom according to the very plan my hon. friend has set out. I will frankly admit that the amendments my hon. friend has made are a great improvement on the original Bill, and we appreciate them very much. It may be the suggestions that I have made are not good, but I am not making them in any spirit of opposition. I am advancing them in the hope, if possible, of still further improving the Bill and saving expense, a thing we all admit would be a wise procedure. That is the whole object of my suggestion.

Mr. CALDER: In the preparation of the municipal lists by the municipal authorities each year will the names of persons be included regardless of whether or not they had the proper qualification?

Mr. ROSS: My hon. frieend has put a very fair question and in reply to him I will read the clause from the Ontario Bill. It is section eighty-six, which reads as follows:

> In addition to the particulars required by The Assessment Act, to be entered upon the assessment roll, every assessor shall enter upon the roll the name of every person who is of the full age of twenty-one years, a British subject, and who has been a resident of Ontario for a period of nine months—

In this Bill the period is nine months, but I believe an amendment has been adopted to provide that the period shall be twelve months—— > —prior to the date fixed for the assessor to begin to make up his roll, and who is a resident of the municipality and qualified in other respects as the assessor believes, to vote at elections to the Assembly.

My hon. friend will see how broad this provision is. It applies to every person twenty-one years of age, who is a British subject, who has resided in Ontario for nine, or twelve months, and who is a resident of the county.

Mr. CALDER: That being the case what is the provision of the proposed law in so far as regards making that the provincial list at the time of the election?

Mr. ROSS: I will explain to my hon. friend: That is the basis of the provincial list, and once a dissolution of the provincial House, or a vacancy in the Assembly, occurs in an individual city, an election board, consisting of the county judge and four other persons, sits and takes that list as a basis. In each municipality they take that list and add to, or strike off, the names of persons who are entitled to vote for a member of the legislature. But the Bill of my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie), with suggested amendments, has provided just as efficient machinery whereby that list can be taken as a basis and by the revising officer—for whose appointment the Bill provides—names can be added to, or struck off the list just as in the Ontario Act. We are quite ready to concur in the machinery which my hon. friend has provided except that we would like to see this one suggestion adopted. That suggestion, I would say, is made in all kindness.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): My hon. friend has just read from a Bill which has not yet been passed by the legislature of Ontario.

Mr. ROBB: That is absolutely true.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend who has just spoken in regard to the Ontario list, will see the significance of what is in our mind when I mention to him that until the provincial legislature is dissolved there will not be in existence a provincial list for Ontario, although all this work of registration will have been completed year after year. The present Government in Ontario may hold office for the next four years, and we recognize that unless some provision of the kind suggested is made the provincial list may not apply at all at the next general election and under the machinery of the present Bill the lists would have to be prepared by a great army of enumerators, and the advantages that would be derived from using the existing lists would be lost.

Mr. SIMPSON: Lists are prepared annually by the municipalities in organized districts, but we have unorganized districts in Northern Ontario, and I presume also in Northern Quebec.

Mr. GAUVREAU: No.

Mr. SIMPSON: There are large numbers of voters whose names would not be on any municipal list, and if it is incumbent that they should appear in person before the revising officer in order to have their names added to the voters' lists it would mean in some cases their travelling three hundred or three hundred and fifty miles for that purpose. Therefore I think we should consider such a provision very carefully before we adopt it.

Mr. SEXSMITH: I must say that I am absolutely opposed to the adoption, as a basis for our own lists, of a provincial list that may be two years old, and I am opposed to adopting a municipal list, leaving it to be revised in the manner that is suggested. Any man who has had experience in connection with the preparation of municipal lists knows that there is not a municipality in the province of Ontario—or in any other province for that matter, where the assessor makes up the list—where there are not scores of voters left off every list. Now, in order to have those voters placed on the list one of two ways is open to you: First, an appeal may be made to the registrar, who may be ten or twenty miles away. You ask the individual voter to appear in person before the registrar in order to have his name placed on the list, and two citizens must accompany him to the poll and also take an oath. Otherwise that man cannot cast his ballot. I have seen sixty names taken off the list in a poll of less than three hundred—and that a list which had been prepared the same year. Now, if you have twenty or thirty people coming to a poll who must be sworn, each with two or three others who must be sworn, you will never be able to poll all the votes. At the last election, in polls of two hundred and fifty or three hundred, or more, it was found difficult to get the votes polled during the prescribed hours, even though only an occasional person had to be sworn. A federal franchise should be a federal franchise, independent of the provincial, municipal or any other authority. Surely Canada as a whole is sufficiently interested in the election of members to the House of Commons to be willing to bear the expense of having an up-to-date voters' list. In the past we have had the experience of one province having one law and another another. I remember when one man could vote two or three times in one province and could only vote once in another. Hon. members from Quebec know that it is only a few years since men in their province could, if they had the property qualifications, vote in as many different polls and in as many different places as they could get around to in the hour.

Mr. BELAND: But in different ridings.

Mr. SEXSMITH: I know, but it was the case of one man voting two or three times, whereas in another province one man could vote only once.

Mr. DENIS: Of course, he had to be qualified in each riding.

Mr. SEXSMITH: We used to have a similar law in Ontario, but we changed it and adopted the principle of one man one vote. I believe in the principle of one man one vote, one woman one vote, all over Canada, and that we should have an up-to-date list—a list which is right up to the minute.
