Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. As usual at the beginning of a new Parliament, I would like to extend customary congratulations first to the Governor General who admirably discharges his duties and shows a thorough knowledge of Canada. I am also pleased to see you back in the chair, Mr. Speaker, because you have discharged your duties with much dignity and fairness during the last Parliament. I would also like to congratulate sincerely the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. There is no doubt that they are destined to a fine career and I heartily wish them the best.

I cannot refrain from mentioning the changes which have occurred in the House; thus, the former leader of the opposition (Mr. Clark) has become Prime Minister. We wish him the best of luck in carrying out that difficult task given to him by the electors. I am convinced that the former prime minister (Mr. Trudeau) who is now Leader of the Official Opposition will lead his troops with as much ability as in the past.

I also extend my good wishes to the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) for his skill in speaking French. I should not forget either the leader of my party, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) who brings on the federal scene his invaluable experience.

My best wishes are directed to all new hon. members who make their debut; I wish them as much success as possible. The hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) stated yesterday that he had been welcomed by all hon. members, except those of the Social Credit Party. I dare hope that he did not mean what he said; so, my best wishes to him, and I wanted to say "Tungasugit" to him, which means "welcome" in his language.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see my colleagues and I are getting closer to power, but what I fear most on this side of the House is to be asked questions by my Liberal colleagues. I hope they will recognize that we share the floor of the House with the Progressive Conservatives, but we do not necessarily share their policies.

It is customary at the beginning of the first speech to praise the beauties of one's constituency, which I hasten to do. I have had the honour of representing the constituency of Rimouski for seven years. This year, the area of Témiscouata was added to the area of Rimouski to form the new constituency of Rimouski, which will be called Rimouski-Témiscouata eventually, as I put forward a bill to that effect. I should like to thank all my electors who enabled me to sail across the "Red Sea", and I repeat what I have always said: Once elected an hon. member is at the service of the population. Whatever the political barriers may be, above all else human beings must be taken care of. I can assure my fellow citizens of the riding of Rimouski that I shall be available and devoted to them.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne is the first opportunity the government has given us of evaluating the situation in our country and the solutions it intends to bring as the elected government. The government party made many promises during the last election campaign. To what extent it will live up to those promises remains a mystery. But one thing is sure, and that is that Canadians want a drastic change in the direction given the management of our country. They want a sound and stable economy, favourable to the young. I rejoice when I hear the government state that it will stress co-operation with the provinces. I was one of those who, in the past, opposed systematically the prevailing atmosphere of confrontation. And so, we were offered a plateful of good intentions that had been so reduced that the hungriest could not eat their fill. Here is the problem, Mr. Speaker. We have never really had a truly economic policy. Preceding governments merely implemented measures without too much concern about their repercussions, going ahead somewhat blindly.

When we draw a picture of the future, we cannot help doing it in the darkest colours. Our young people are not sure that jobs will be available for them when they leave school. The rate of unemployment remains at a level which is unacceptable to a society worthy of the name. The rate of unemployment in Quebec is 9 per cent. In my region of eastern Quebec, the level is intolerable. Early last summer, it reached 22 per cent. It is a fact that this level was reduced somewhat during the summer months, but because of seasonal factors only. Faced with such a situation, talents are wasted, lives are jeopardized, and our young people are powerless to deal with an uncertain future.

While on this subject, I should like to remind the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) that a new policy affecting the distribution of control regions for the computation of unemployment insurance entitlement came into force in November, 1978. It was claimed that this policy would take the economic realities of the various regions into account. This is certainly not the case in my own riding. It is made up of two separate areas, one which is attached to the Lower St. Lawrence-Gaspé region, and the other to the Quebec City region where the criteria are clearly less advantageous, while the rate of unemployment is about the same in both areas of my riding. The rate of unemployment in the Lower St. Lawrence-Gaspé region is about the same as in the Quebec City region.

Mr. Speaker, unemployment is a real problem, we must not hide the truth and be afraid to say so, especially when it is as high as it is today. Not only does unemployment completely upset the economy by generating a slow paralysis of all activities, but it jeopardizes the capitalist system itself. Either the system will find a way to make it disappear or unemployment will some day make what is left of the system disappear.

The real solution to unemployment and inflation is not to create jobs at all cost but to change our present social system and allow all citizens, no matter what their status, to enjoy our country's wealth, even if they have no job, since as consumers they are integral parts of our Canadian economy. The solution we have been advocating for many years is to bring the retirement age from 65 down to 60 or less, according to the rising rate of unemployment. Then we would strike the necessary balance in the equation between industrialization and consumption. During the first six months of this year, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in the Lower St. Lawrence area has shown such variations as 17.9, 22.8, 23.7, 19.8 and 17.9 per cent.

In the Quebec City area, it reached 9.4 per cent, 10.7 per cent, 11 per cent, 9.1 per cent and 7.3 per cent. It is therefore obvious that these rates have nothing in common. This is why I ask the minister to review the boundaries of this area so that the region of Grand Portage may be included in the Lower St. Lawrence-Gaspé area to determine benefit entitlements.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, may I also take this opportunity to review quickly the state of our economy. Unemployment is a great concern, but the unemployed are not the only ones left out by our economic system. Farmers are not particularly privileged in our system. They are faced with much red tape and many regulations. Quota allocations are constantly reviewed, so that farmers cannot plan on a long-term basis.

People 65 and over also have to fight to obtain minimum living support. My friends in the government used to listen when I debated this question during the last Parliament, but now that they are on this side of the House I wonder if they will be receptive.

[Translation]

In the last few years, I have suggested an optional retirement pension plan at 60 which could be established progressively. It would ensure better distribution of government funds. In this way, the jobs liberated by these people would go to the unemployed and we could save considerable amounts in unemployment insurance and reduce the financial burden of the old age security system. As I was saying, my colleagues in the government were very receptive to this idea. Will they still be as receptive now that they are on the other side of the House?

What about the poverty which still exists in spite of all the social legislation passed by Parliament? Last year, the Senate estimated that 43 per cent of the people living on their own were below the poverty level. These are mostly older people, which supports the suggestion that I made earlier. There are also 22 per cent of Canadian families in this situation. Poverty, inflation, unemployment, those are all important challenges which threaten all Canadians. In view of all this, the Speech from the Throne does not contain much hope. It refers to a few isolated measures, but does not mention any real medium or long-term economic policy. The government has adopted an attitude of laissez-faire in the hope that the situation will improve by itself. The previous administrations gave the impression that they left everything to luck. When Canadians protested against incredible inflation rates, a commission was created. Five were established during the last few Parliaments to study, control or review prices and especially wages, and they were then abolished. I was quite happy when the present government abolished the latest of these Liberal inventions.

Concrete problems require concrete solutions. Since 1971, the cost of living has increased by 90 per cent. The dollar has gone down 20 per cent compared with the American dollar. And since we are talking about statistics, I shall give a few more. In 1978, the government had a deficit of $12 billion, or 20 times more than in 1974. The deficit will be even higher this year. My colleague from St. John's West, who is now Minister of Finance, was the first to be shocked by this situation in past years. If he wants to take strict action, now is the time to do it. Our debt continues to increase at an alarming rate.

Last year, we had accumulated a $40.5 billion debt and we paid over $5 billion in interest, $240 per capita. Over the last five years, bankruptcies more than doubled in Canada, and rising interest rates are pushing credit out of reach, which implies that investments will slow down and people intending to buy a home will prefer to wait until conditions get better, rather than paying rates of up to 14¼ per cent.

Such is the situation confronting members elected to this new Parliament. We should concentrate on this and see to it that this government discharges its duties as soon as possible. The people today expect and are entitled to a minimum of sincerity and honesty from politicians. Last year, while corporations increased their profits by 25 per cent, our unemployed, our farmers, our old aged pensioners and all those asking for a fairer share of this country's riches felt no improvement.

I have given many statistics, enough maybe to make us forget the human consequences of our economic difficulties. Our party always favoured throughout its history a human approach to our society's various problems. We believe in giving first place to the human being. We have consistently proposed reforms to that end. We believe among other things that each citizen must enjoy a minimum of physical and social security. We therefore propose a system of guaranteed annual income. The first duty of any government is to guarantee that every individual and family has sufficient income to be reasonably well off.

Mr. Speaker, economical justice also means fairer distribution of development across the nation. If certain economic areas continue to be favoured at the expense of others, national unity will be left without much support. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that the government consider an economic recovery plan for remote regions, for example by implementing a transport policy beneficial to these regions so that they can also have their rightful place under the sun.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) no doubt remembers when it was announced that allowable cod catches in the Gulf of St. Lawrence would be increased. In this regard, also, the people of the Gaspé peninsula are at a loss since 10 per cent of these additional quotas will be for vessels of 100 feet or more which are harboured in the gulf or elsewhere. The problem lies in the fact that fishermen from the Gaspé peninsula do not have large vessels and those vessels of 100 feet or more will come mostly from other areas. I would therefore ask the minister to reconsider his decision which discriminates against the Gaspé peninsula fishermen.

Mr. Speaker, as a duly elected political group in this House, we could, according to the rules of procedures, introduce a motion condemning the government, but since the government must have the opportunity to prove its good will, we will allow it to do so. That is why we voted the way we did last Monday on the motion put by the Leader of the Opposition, but we can always change our mind.

[English]

I sincerely hope that this session will be the occasion to draw all the dynamic forces of this country together. Canada is at the crossroads of her history. Many decisions are facing us, and they will not always be easy to take. Quebeckers are about to make a decision which will affect all of us, whatever the result. I hope that the government will show an attitude of change and co-operation with all provinces so that Canada may be a better land for our children.

● (1610)

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to wish you well in the fulfilment of your responsibilities. Also, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard). I hope that in the next few years my French will be as good as his English was this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: First I would like to assure hon. members that as I make my remarks this afternoon I am completely free of conflict of interest. I say that because I was involved in the oil industry for 20 years. However, prior to my nomination as Conservative candidate for Calgary South, I divested myself completely of any interests in the oil industry. I hold no management position nor do I serve on any board of directors or any committee.

The subject which I wish to address to the House this afternoon is on the issue of Petro-Canada. In my opinion, it is unfortunate that the issue of Petro-Canada has been blown so much out of proportion by the media and by the opposition parties in this House, particularly in relation to future energy supplies for Canada. It seems to me that this controversy is relatively unimportant compared to the more serious problems facing Canada today.

Just to put the issue of Petro-Canada in some perspective, let me say that the company had total assets of $3.3 billion as of December 31, 1978. At the rate at which we are importing crude oil into Canada, this amount is equal to the cost of six months' crude oil imports. In other words, in the short period of six months, Canadians have consumed crude oil equal to the assets of Petro-Canada. It is in light of this that I believe the matter of Petro-Canada has assumed far greater proportions than is warranted.

At the same time, it is important for Canadians to understand what Petro-Canada is as it stands today and what can be achieved by individual Canadians owning shares of that company. The opposition would have Canadians believe that the solution to the energy crisis lies in the choice between Exxon and Petro-Canada; that is, multinational ownership or state ownership.

In the last five years, a revolution has been going on in western Canada and in the oil industry generally. The number of companies owned by Canadians has been increasing at a significant rate. Today, there are over 700 companies finding and developing new oil and gas reserves. Most of these companies are Canadian owned. They are responsible for 75 per cent of the wells drilled in western Canada, and there are numerous stories involving Canadians who have become important factors in the oil and gas picture.

I am absolutely confident that the oil industry will find the oil and gas reserves we need for self-sufficiency, given the economic opportunity to do so.

There is no question that the people of Canada distrust the giant oil companies. I think this distrust is largely unfounded. Consumers, not only in Canada but in all industrial nations, have been the great beneficiaries of cheap oil supplies for many years. Surely it would be foolish to cast aside the benefits that Canada receives from the large multinational oil companies simply on the basis that they are very large, with huge budgets, and that they are the object of the popular suspicion that bigness brings. The multinational oil companies have had great success in finding oil, some of it in hostile environments. They have enormous reservoirs of extra expertise. It would be irresponsible to do anything but encourage them to search as aggressively as they possibly can in Canada.

I simply cannot understand how economic nationalists can say that the repatriation of the Canadian oil industry from the United States investor is in the best interests of Canadians. In the next ten years, Canada will need about $200 billion just to develop our energy resources. Canada cannot provide this money by itself; it needs foreign investment. But how can we possibly encourage foreign investors when they do not know if their investment is going to be nationalized? Certainly much of the oil is foreign controlled. Why is that? It is because the former Liberal government would not offer Canadians the incentive to invest in their own country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: I can speak from personal experience. I have spent many years trying to raise money in Canada for oil exploration, with little success.

Our government favours a strong private sector energy industry, managed by Canadians and owned by Canadians. We believe in Canadian citizenship ownership rather than Canadian state ownership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: Our government believes that a Petro-Canada owned directly by Canadian citizens will be more effective and efficient, and will contribute more to Canada's objective of energy self-sufficiency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: The private sector, the Government of Canada, and the provincial governments must all be deeply committed to the performance of their roles which are, respectively, petroleum operations and the design of a public policy framework. Both public and private participants must contribute to the accomplishment of clearly desirable national objectives.

Let me return for a moment to the fall of 1973 and 1974. Because of the Middle East war there were fears of shortages of oil in Canada. It was largely on the strength of the realization that Canada could not rely on cheap foreign oil to supply our needs that the former Liberal government came to the conclusion that one of the vehicles to be used to improve Canada's security of supply would be a national oil comany. Ostensibly this was the main reason for the establishment of Petro-Canada. But the Liberal government was so concerned about extending government control to the private sector that it lost sight of the basic energy needs of the Canadian people. Since that time, Petro-Canada has been put forward not only as a national saviour in terms of security of supply but also as a "window on the industry" and as a necessity for state to state oil trading.

The original mandate of Petro-Canada was to explore for and develop new sources of oil and gas supply for the country in areas where the conventional producers were not prepared to gamble. But what did Petro-Canada do? It purchased Atlantic Richfield and Pacific Petroleums. Did these acquisitions add any new reserves of oil and gas to our Canadian inventory? No, not a drop. Virtually all these reserves were acquired by the purchase of Atlantic Richfield and Pacific Petroleums. These reserves were in the ground in Canada and were completely secure for the people of Canada. Atlantic Richfield and Pacific Petroleums could not export any reserves without federal government approval.

It is interesting to note also that in 1977 Petro-Canada had 151 million barrels of oil reserves. At the end of 1978, these reserves had declined to 143 million barrels, a net loss of 8 million barrels for the year.

Security of supply is achieved when new oil reserves are found or new technology is developed to enhance production from existing reserves. New oil is found by long and diligent work and expertise. It is not found by acquisitions, by buying companies that already have it. In fact, much of the expertise acquired through the acquisition of Atlantic Richfield and Pacific Petroleums has since left Petro-Canada.

● (1620)

Pacific Petroleums was a well-managed, successful and aggressive company. It was doing all the things any oil company could be expected to do and it was not costing Canadians one cent. It was finding new reserves; it was helping to create security of supply. Let us also remember that the purchase of the various assets Petro-Canada now owns did not contribute to the creation of any new jobs which otherwise would not have been created by the acquired companies if they had been left on their own.

It is simply untrue that the acquisition of Pacific Petroleums will provide Petro-Canada with a cash flow from existing oil and gas production to help finance the search for new oil and gas supplies in the development of heavy oil fields. The cash flow from Pacific Petroleums will not even service the interest on the debt incurred to purchase the company.

Also I should like to point out that it is not true there is any need for a government-owned oil company to make investments which otherwise would not be made. The recent example of exploration success in the Beaufort Sea demonstrates that if the ground rules with respect to taxes and pricing are satisfactory, shareholder owned companies will become involved of their own accord in all the risk taking which Canada needs in this or any other industry.

In his motion of non-confidence, the leader of the New Democratic Party sought to secure for Petro-Canada a monopoly on all imports of oil into Canada at a time when our supply is uncertain and insecure and when the international oil companies still have much of the foreign oil under their control through contracts. Surely common sense would suggest that a course opposite to that of the New Democrats should be undertaken. We should seek as many channels through which essential oil can flow as possible, not restrict the means to import oil. We should take full advantage of the worldwide oil network provided by the big companies, the so-called Seven Sisters, and if there are any useful ways of adding to this, we should do that as well.

One of the criticisms over the proposed sale of Petro-Canada to Canadians is that it is necessary for the federal government to keep a window on the industry through ownership of a large oil company. This is sheer nonsense. I should like to point out that in the blue book of estimates for 1979-1980 the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is staffed with no less than 12,180 man-years of bureaucracy to keep a window on the industry at a cost of $200 million. In addition, the Petroleum Corporations Monitoring Act provides volumes of information to the government. The oil industry is monitored from every standpoint and is likely the most highly regulated industry in our country. The necessity of having a window on the industry is nonsense.

[Mr. Thomson.]

There has been much discussion about the advisability of having a Crown owned corporation to effect purchases of foreign oil from foreign government-owned companies, and if necessary Petro-Canada should be utilized for this purpose. A better method would be to negotiate an international trade agreement with the particular country which is to supply oil, and then have commercial agreements negotiated within the terms of that treaty by private companies in Canada that would use the oil. This would serve the dual purpose of giving the Canadian government better control over the acquisition of foreign oil, while leaving commercial terms to private industry. Our government recognizes that it has a responsibility to fulfil with respect to state to state oil supplies. However, it is not necessary for Petro-Canada to carry out this function. Our government intends to do everything possible to ensure adequate supplies of a vital commodity which we will have to import in increasing volumes during the 1980s.

Where does Petro-Canada stand today? Let us remember that the original purchase of Petro-Canada was made by placing an additional tax burden on Canadians. The taxpayers of this country put up $800 million in equity to fund Petro-Canada, which is the equivalent of over $300 for every man, woman and child in Canada. This money came out of the pockets of Canadians in taxes which they otherwise would not have had to pay. The taxpayer also has ultimate liability for $2.5 billion worth of debt Petro-Canada has incurred. The financial structure of Petro-Canada as it now exists is overburdened with debt in relation to equity. Its debt is three times its equity, compared to a ratio in the private sector of the oil industry of about one-third debt to equity. In other words, Petro-Canada has nine times the amount of debt in relation to the equity of the private sector.

In 1978 it earned $13.3 million on an investment of $3.3 billion. This rate of return is less than half of 1 per cent and is an appalling mismanagement of taxpayers' money. We must remember that the government is borrowing money at the rate of 10 per cent, while PetroCan makes less than one half of 1 per cent. Shareholders of any public company would not tolerate such a disgraceful profit performance from its board of directors and its management. In the first six months of 1979 Petro-Canada lost $7.6 million. The reason for this loss is that the company cannot generate sufficient income to pay for the interest costs on the debt incurred to purchase Pacific Petroleums.

Petro-Canada is attempting to carry out the impossible, the dual roles of a commercial company and an agent of federal government policy. It is an impossible position of conflicting interest. The conflict between political goals of a government and the goals of a commercial corporation is at the root of what is wrong with Petro-Canada. When a Crown corporation such as Petro-Canada is charged with the frequently conflicting responsibility of serving broad national objectives and showing an appropriate profit from the use of resources under its control, such conflicts place the senior technical personnel and officers in an inherent state of uncertainty. They must make difficult decisions as to which objectives should take precedence, frequently with incomplete knowledge of the urgency of national priorities. I say that without intending to malign the management of Petro-Canada.

Resources are not efficiently used when the objectives of a company are not clearly stated. There is an old saying in business: "If you don't know where you are going, any road will get you there". Those who control the company have an uncertain accountability. Profits may be attributed to good business judgment, while losses may be attributed to the fulfilling of national objectives. Who is to know? Certainly not the Canadian public with the set-up we have at the moment. Crown corporations are never free from political interference. It has been amply demonstrated by numerous Crown corporations that in every instance of direct government involvement in business they have problems running commercial operations without special breaks and subsidies. What our government is seeking to do is to maximize the benefit from the use of taxpayers' dollars. Maximum benefit results when government limits its role to public interest activities which are not commercial.

It is imperative that individual Canadians understand our serious oil deficiency. If the individual Canadian is directly involved in Canada's energy future, he will have a better opportunity to understand the energy problem. Certainly government must be responsible for public interest activities designed to assure secure supplies of energy for all Canadians. However, government need not engage in activities which are more effectively and efficiently served directly by its citizens, whether citizens invest as individuals or are organized in business.

I support the recommendation by the task force that Petro-Canada, as it presently exists, be divided into two parts, one which will be a private sector company and one which will continue to be an agent of the government and have direct responsibilities for activities which appropriately lie with the government.

The task force has recommended, and I agree, that the public sector responsibility would be transferred to a new government agency with the following functions: the negotiation of any necessary state to state oil supply contracts; the promotion of increased frontier exploration; and the promotion of oil sands and heavy oil research and development.

The private sector company, a new Petro-Canada, must be given a firm mandate to conduct its affairs on the basis of commercial viability. It must be absolutely clear that Petro-Canada will not be an instrument for the achievement of the government's public policy objectives.

I support the concept that individual citizens will be better served by having their energy investment reside directly with the private sector company. In this way shareholders will have the democratic right to influence policy through the decisions of the annual meeting or through the board of directors.

The new Petro-Canada as described by the task force can be the largest Canadian-owned petroleum company and its board of directors must be free to develop corporate policies which will permit the achievement of commercial objectives in a responsible way. Because Petro-Canada will have to compete, it will constantly be accountable to its shareholders, the citizens of Canada, for the efficient use of its resources and the resulting profits. Mismanagement will quickly become evident.

Canadian citizens, through their direct participation in Canada's new petroleum company, will be involved in the rewards and the responsibilities of ownership, and at the same time the new company will have the responsibility of encouraging citizen involvement and will recognize its direct accountability to its citizen shareholders.

The task force has again recommended that only eligible Canadian individuals should be entitled to receive shares in Petro-Canada, and only eligible Canadians should be permitted to acquire shares in the after market. I completely agree with this. A new Petro-Canada is assured of being a wholly Canadian-owned company. Individual investors should be limited to 1 per cent of the common shares outstanding. Every citizen in this country would be eligible to receive shares.

Under the proposed reorganization Petro-Canada would have the potential of becoming not just the largest Canadian controlled company but perhaps the largest company in the energy field in this country. The performance of management and the board of directors will be measured by the profitability of the resources it has under its control. Direct ownership by Canadians is preferable to assigning responsibility to government officials, with only the electoral process as a periodic control mechanism.

There is no issue that I feel more strongly about than our freedom which exists under the free enterprise system. Our liberty is directly linked to free enterprise. If free enterprise is destroyed we lose our political freedom. If we believe in the freedom of the individual from state domination, we must not allow any government to dominate our economy through government ownership.

Our government intends to give individual initiative the opportunity to flourish once again, and to stimulate the enthusiasm of all Canadians to take a stake and to share in the risks of building a better Canada. It is the creative drive in people, the energy of individual Canadians operating in a free economy where there are opportunities and where government is an assistance, not a hindrance, it is individuals, not bureaucracy, not government, that make a nation great.

I for one will be delighted to own the shares of the new Petro-Canada. If run properly as a commercial operation it will be one of the best investments any Canadian could hold. This is an opportunity for our children and for their children to participate in the immense economic wealth of their country.

In closing, I put the following question to this House. Do you prefer that Canadians own Petro-Canada through their federal government, as they own Air Canada and the post office, or do you prefer that Canadians pay lower taxes and have the opportunity to make their own choice of investment?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Jonquière (Mr. Marceau), I would like, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson): Northern Affairs—Provincial status for the Yukon; the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae): Energy—Purchase of oil from Mexico; the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes): Energy—Supply of gasoline and heating oil this winter.

The hon. member for Jonquière has the floor.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fretz for an address to his Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, as I take the floor to speak in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, I recall an extremely pleasant moment I experienced in 1969 when at the request of the then prime minister I had the privilege of seconding a motion for an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Being aware of the importance of the role we have to assume I take great pleasure in congratulating the movers of the motion for an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Also I would like to extend my congratulations to the Speaker for his re-election, to assure him of my collaboration and to remind him that probably all members appreciate his competence and his devotion.

First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the Speech from the Throne must not necessarily contain the detailed list of what the government proposes to do during the session. What is generally expected is a general statement on the direction the government intends to take for a given period, bearing in mind the problems that confront the country. We know that, in this day and age, Speeches from the Throne are often long, that they are made up of general considerations on the state of the nation, the problems it faces and an enumeration of the bills to be submitted to the legislators. In that regard, the Speech from the Throne of October 9 by the new Governor General is more in the old tradition than in the new. It is rather short, possibly even laconic, compared with some speeches of the preceding government.

A Speech from the Throne, whether long or short, specific or vague, always says something by which one can judge to some extent whether the government has the upper hand or not, whether it knows where the country is going, whether it has policies and ideas to offer as solutions to current problems. Now, what is one to think of the first Speech from the Throne of the new government? Its concision betrays at once great wariness and a lack of confidence in itself on the part of this party that accedes to power for the first time in 16 years. This speech confirms what was suspected from the start, that this inexperienced team is still somewhat haunted by the scope of the difficult problems Canada faces at the present time. But, from a government that spent the last few years criticizing the former government mainly for its economic, energy and constitutional policies, the Speech from the Throne clearly indicates that it has yet to make its bed, that it did not make it in those three fields of endeavour.

In the economic sector it announced a series of measures which are certainly warranted to a certain extent, if not entirely original. But we do not have the feeling that the government has an exact idea of the remedy which our condition requires. I see a clear indication of this in the fact that it is counting a lot on the upcoming federal-provincial conference which is to set the economic targets of Canada for the next decade and determine together with the provinces the best means to achieve them.

We should certainly not look down on this concern which proceeds from the best federalist spirit, to involve the provinces in the planning of long-term economic policies. But a government bent on demonstrating leadership must have its own outlook on matters and express it. In any event, it must act and indicate how it intends to act if it wants to inspire the trust which is so necessary for the expected recovery.

Yet, it is in the economic sector that the new government apparently wanted to impress the public most by announcing rather pompously a five-phase strategy. One is undeniable and it concerns once again the control of government activities: expense cutback procedures already announced in Jasper at the end of the summer, staff cuts in the public services, sunset legislation allowing for the termination of government activities which are no longer justified.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw particular attention to a project which means a great deal to the Lac Saint-Jean region and for which its representatives have fought for over three years. When the government speaks of budget cuts, it creates confusion, in my view, maybe not willfully so, but it does create confusion in the minds of the people. For three years, Mr. Speaker, and after heated debate, we have been authorized to build a taxation data center in Jonquière, and this project might create, in the short or longer term, 1,000 temporary or permanent jobs. In an area where the unemployment rate ranks among the highest in Canada, this project is of crucial and vital importance. I urge the government not to take action to stop this project, however short the deadline may be.

The federal government has already directly invested $2 million in this project. The foundations of the building are already built. A contract for construction of the structure has been awarded to the lowest bidder; moreover, and it is important that this be recalled, the city of Jonquière, at the request of the federal government, has modified its plans for future development in order that the site be rearranged according to the requirements of the federal government and located in the middle of the three former communities of Jonquière, Kénogami and Arvida, which are now amalgamated under the name of Jonquière, a building symbolizing the federalism we are advocating on all sides of the House. I must commend most particularly my colleague who is here in the House right now. He was the minister for our area, the minister of regional economic expansion, and he worked hard both within cabinet and in other places so we would have in our region that building which is the most concrete proof to separatists that federalism is not only discussion and dialogue but really jobs we need in an area highly troubled by unemployment reaching alarming proportions which are close to the highest in Canada.

So I would like to say beyond any political partisanship that it is not Gilles Marceau, federal member of Parliament, who is speaking, but the spokesman for a remote area of this great country of ours who is imploring this government—and they will get the credit for continuing that building; I will make sure of it—but I ask them, I beg them nearly on my knees not to delay that construction because there are thousands of people waiting for jobs, trying honourably to earn a living, who are often blamed for being unemployed although it is not always their fault. I recall that this government has received a petition from ladies in my riding containing 22,000 signatures. Only women can do interesting and persuading things like that. They went around homes, gathered 22,000 signatures and sent them here to Ottawa. The Jonquière city council prepared a long brief indicating the investments of over $5 million which have now been made by the city of Jonquière and the provincial government for the road network, and the federal government has committed $2 million.

The estimates of the Department of Public Works included an amount of $3,500,000 earmarked for the continuation of the work because, as I said, the foundations are there, the plans are practically completed, only the structure is needed and the lowest bidder submitted his price and was accepted. I am not suggesting the government did not have the right to stop that project. I think it is normal for a government to examine each and every project before investing. I admit it is their responsibility to see whether the project really meets a need.

I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) during the question period when he said, "we are going to examine which projects create jobs, which projects are the most effective". Well, I want to urge him, and I know that he can accept our representations, I urge him and I urge the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Nielsen) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) to carry on that project. It is not a party which will benefit from that project, it is the people in that area who want it, who require it, and I believe that it is one of their fundamental rights to ask that federalism be advantageous not only for big cities, big centres, but that it be good as well for people who live in remote areas and who are also going to vote in the Quebec referendum. Until the government takes a decision on that matter, I think that we are in no position to convince people that federalism is good for them; the project is temporarily stopped and people are beginning to wonder. Still I would not want to voice a definite opinion about this.

I know the government will take into consideration that request I make on behalf of the population, on behalf of the 22,000 people who signed the petition, on behalf of the city of Jonquière which has presented the petition, as well as on my behalf since I presented a memorandum and on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board who has met with those people to discuss this with them.

In addition to those few general remarks on the budget, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that major problems like energy, inflation and unemployment are mostly dealt with in a futile phraseology. The Progressive Conservatives are in turn experiencing the advantages and disadvantages of our status as a U.S. subsidiary, forced to counter the blows as well as we can. The increase in the bank interest rate just struck a hard blow on our economy and thus cancelled the benefits which were to be derived from the mortgage interest deduction program the government should eventually introduce. On constitutional matters, nothing in the throne speech shows a vision of Canada in the future, of the role the federal government should be playing in a country threatened by centrifugal forces. It is noteworthy that it says a lot about diversity in Canada but nothing about the unity to be preserved or restored.

The same thing is true of the energy problem, which is very serious in itself and which moreover threatens to accelerate the political disintegration of our country. Since major Canadian problems have a more or less direct relationship with the main problem of our unity crisis, the government will be unable to implement a coherent and credible energy policy if it does not first define its purpose in constitutional matters. The jewel of the Speech from the Throne should have been the energy policy at which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has worked all summer long and about which he had given us a lot of hope, but there is now a deadlock between Ontario and Alberta concerning the pricing of Canadian oil, and the evasiveness of the Governor General shows the reluctance of the government to use its arbitration powers since this could damage its general purpose theory of non-confrontation federalism.

Since the price of gas may go up in the near future to $1.30 a gallon and in view of the tragic effects of this increase on those who not only drive their cars but must also heat their homes with oil, since major increases of this importance are foreseen, both sides of the House must concentrate their efforts to try to make a decision at the federal level which will be equitable for everyone and go beyond the individual or collective interests of the provincial governments.

The term "non-confrontation federalism" is an electoral cliché which seems increasingly on the way to becoming a constitutional principle even though it does not exist in practical government. It is useful when provincial interests coincide, for instance in the case of lotteries and provincial offshore resource rights, but it is not sufficient in a case of a conflict of interest. We have only to think about the conference of communications ministers, where the premiers requested yesterday jurisdiction over cable distribution, to which the federal government rightly objected. The provinces have already started to show some impatience and dissatisfaction and they will continue to ask for more as long as the government gives them everything they want. However, I believe they can be responsible enough to realize, when the government refuses their requests, that this disintegration of the central power must come to an end since it has already gone too far in one direction, which does not mean that we should go in the other direction.

The speech outlines a number of legislative measures that appear to be so much less objectionable that their brevity leaves no room for criticism. But one thing above all is lacking in that document—a thrust, a vision, a certain image of tomorrow's Canada that would instil courage and call to action.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to say a few words on the dismantling of Petro-Canada. I know that members opposite have different views from ours. But as far as I am concerned, the point can be made that the hydrocarbons market, especially the oil market is controlled by foreign multinational corporations, and those corporations in the conduct of their business do not give due priority to Canada's national interests. In a period of 40 years, no private Canadian corporation succeeded in achieving a major role in the oil industry. Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation owned by all Canadians, has become in a matter of years Canada's biggest oil company. As I see it, Petro-Canada gave the Canadian government for the first time the expertise vitally needed to really know what is happening in that sector. Like a number of other nations, Canada now has in Petro-Canada an important instrument to better protect our national interests in that industry. I therefore urge the government to consider the situation in depth, to look at the survey showing that 75 per cent of Canadians generally approve of Petro-Canada. It seems to me that we should keep Petro-Canada as the property of all Canadians and a major instrument of Canadian policy in energy matters.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would once more ask the government, outside of any partisan politics, to decide on a work re-start on the fiscal data centre in Jonquière. In so doing they will prove to the people in my area that they are a sensible government, and the thousand jobs they will be creating will deserve them praise as they will the previous government who started the project. And for once a genuine link will have been provided between past and present.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There was an indication earlier that the House would be seeking consent at this time to revert to routine proceedings, particularly to statements by ministers, to permit the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to make a statement and for others to respond to that statement. I see the Prime Minister is in the House now. Is it agreed that the House revert to statements by ministers at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

WOMEN

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF "PERSONS CASE"—PROPOSED MEASURES TO IMPROVE STATUS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the House will know, today marks the fiftieth anniversary of the "Persons case", that historic decision by the Privy Council of Great Britain which declared that women were in fact "persons" and were thus eligible under the British North America Act to "be summoned to and become members of the Senate of Canada". This decision was the result of the tireless efforts of five Alberta women: Emily Murphy, Nellie McClung, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Louise McKinney, and Irene Parlby. It is fitting that the House pay tribute today to the efforts of those five Alberta women, and to the efforts of countless others in the 50 years since the Persons case who have worked to reduce the obstacles to equality for women in Canada.

● (1700)

Seven such women were honoured last evening by His Excellency the Governor General, and the House would want to join in recognition of the rank of Dr. Elizabeth Bagshaw of Hamilton, Ontario; the honourable Thérèse Casgrain of Montreal; Marion Royce of Toronto, Dr. Grace MacInnis of Vancouver, Eileen Tallman-Sufrin of White Rock, British Columbia; Mary Two Axe Early of Caughnawaga, Quebec; and Sophia Dixon of Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The stark fact, on this fiftieth anniversary of a landmark decision, is that women have not achieved equality—economically, politically, socially.

[Translation]

Economically speaking, women are second class citizens. Despite a sharp increase in the number of women in the labour force, and considering that it continues to grow, there is always a marked gap between their conditions of employment and those of men, particularly as regards the number of jobs available, the nature of work, the salary, working hours and opportunities for promotion. In the area of employment, women are pushed back in ghettos or in positions characterized by low pay and limited mobility. The gap between the income of men and women is enormous and it widens continually. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the average income of women represents only 53 per cent of the average income of men. And women are most affected by unemployment—9.1 per cent compared to 6.9 per cent for men.

Among senior citizens, women are often alone with a small pension or often with no pension at all. Even with the old age security pension, among single women, widows, divorced women or women over 65, three out of five live under the poverty line.

[English]

Politically, women have not achieved equality. One look around this chamber is enough to show that. Socially, a second class status persists, reinforced by the fact that many women—because of their economic dependence—are often powerless to change their situation. Clearly, the situation of women in this country 50 years after the Persons case is not one of which we can be proud. It is a priority of my government that this situation must change. I have spoken many times in the House as leader of the opposition on the failures of government policy in relation to women. Now, as head of a new government, I intend to try to rectify some of those failures and to develop policies that are sensitive to the needs and aspirations of Canadian women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: We have to remedy the economic situation which follows from the second class status we reserve for women. One of the most important findings of the latest report on women and poverty prepared by the National Welfare Council is the one which says that in most cases women are poor because poverty is the natural consequence of the role society gives them.

Our economic structures leave no room for equal status. To remedy this situation, an important step would be to recognize the influence of the jobs traditionally reserved for women which leads them to poverty and to find solutions to the problem. We are currently preparing an employment strategy which will deal precisely with this problem.

False solutions intended to bring down the unemployment rate among women by creating short-term jobs will not really improve the employment situation for women. We have to recognize that segregation in employment, lower salaries, limitation of promotion opportunities and care of children are all realities and that we, in the House, have a duty to find solutions to these problems because, in the final analysis, not only women will benefit from them, but the whole society.

[English]

An employment strategy for women must be based on two fundamental premises; first, women are in the labour force to stay; second, women have the right to participate in economic activity on the same terms and conditions as men.

The objectives of that employment strategy will include lowering the female unemployment rate through permanent full and part-time jobs, reducing job segregation and developing measures to work toward its eventual elimination, and lowering the wage gap between men and women.

The employment strategy that is presently being drawn up by Status of Women Canada, in conjunction with other departments, will contain measures dealing with women in the public service as well. We will be developing an enhanced equal opportunity policy to advance women in the public service, and developing measures to ensure that the proportion of women in the public service is maintained, and even improved, during the period of attrition.

Once women achieve equality in the work force, they will be able to achieve equality in retirement. But until that goal is reached we must do something to alleviate the extreme poverty among elderly women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We have announced a committee inquiry into pension and retirement questions. That committee will consider the pension situation for women. I hope it will make recommendations to the government upon which we can act with some speed.

In the meantime, one of my government's commitments is to cease the practice of cutting off the spouse's allowance upon the death of the pensioner spouse. This is only a first step, but a necessary one, and it is the bill with which we will begin this new Parliament of Canada on Monday next.

In the social realm, the abuse of women both inside and outside the family is something that must be rectified. In this regard we intend to do our part by rationalizing the sexual assault offences and by calling on the provinces to do their part in relation to the administration of justice in the matter of violence against women. In addition, the interdepartmental committee on family violence is working towards a national consultation to find solutions to the problem of family violence, of whom the chief victims are women. This committee was begun under the former government, and I consider its work to be a priority in coming to grips with the problem of violence against women.

Finally, in order to end the discrimination in the Indian Act against women who marry non-Indians, we will be bringing in an amendment to amend the discriminatory sections of that act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it is my earnest hope that the women of Canada do not have to wait another 50 years to achieve equality of status with men and to be true persons in our society. We should not have needed the courts to declare in 1929 that women were persons. Nor should we need to be reminded of the fact in 1979.

The hard truth, however, is that women are still not considered full and equal persons, that every inch towards equality has been won only by a hard fight against public opinion, and that a lot of attitudes must change before the goal of true equality is reached.

I hope that the commemoration of Persons Day throughout the country today will mark a beginning in a drastically needed change of attitude, and that in the future such commemorations will be reminders of injustices of the past—and not of the present.

• (1710)

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we on this side welcome many of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Clark) statements today. I join with him in paying tribute to the distinguished women he mentioned at the beginning of his remarks. I noted that he talked about Alberta women, and women from across Canada. I am happy in terms of my parochial interest to thank him for recognizing Dr. Elizabeth Bagshaw. I might say that I too should like to pay tribute to an Alberta woman, a woman I met about 20 minutes ago, a totally charming and disarming woman, and a very friendly one indeed. She happens to be the Prime Minister's mother.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I must say that having met her I feel totally unable to make any unkind remarks, which pretty well necessitates obliterating about three quarters of my speech.

I do wish to pay tribute to the women of Canada on this the fiftieth anniversary of the Persons case. I pay special tribute to those brave Alberta women who led the battle some 50 years ago, but I honour as well all those women who followed them in their determination to create a society where women have an equal place. Since that momentous decision in 1929, which in very narrow terms allowed women to be appointed to the Senate, many changes have taken place in the lives of Canadian women. Many doors have opened, but there is still a long way to go. There are still people in our society who do not enjoy all the benefits of full citizenship, and a great many of them are women.

The problems of our country—inflation, a faltering economy, a high rate of unemployment, and reduced social services—all rest heavily on the shoulders of women. Despite the increasing awareness and more general recognition of women's rights, there are still areas of discrimination and, as society becomes ever more complex, new issues concerning women arise. We must continue as elected representatives to be responsive to the needs of women so ably expressed by women.

The Prime Minister referred to the government's employment strategy. Many of his comments with respect to that were most welcome, but might I point out two principal concerns if any employment strategy is to have a real chance of implementation. One is the key area of day care centres across Canada. Recent statistics indicate that day care centres are on the decrease. Success cannot be attained in terms of equal opportunity for women in the work place if day care centres are inadequate. Lacking such centres, many women cannot take advantage of the opportunities for employment so many of them wish to obtain in order to alleviate the very poverty of which the Prime Minister spoke. I think this is an area in which the Prime Minister would have particular influence with his colleagues in the provinces, many of whom are premiers, and I would hope he would undertake to place that subject on his agenda at the earliest possible opportunity.

The other key to considerably alleviating inequality with respect to women lies in the area of private pensions. A lot could be done there in terms of survivors benefits, early vesting, and indexing. Again in terms of the realization of the objectives the Prime Minister so eloquently spoke of, this topic should be placed high on his priority list for discussion with the provinces as so much of this area falls within provincial jurisdiction. Certainly under the Canada Assistance Plan the federal government can, in co-operation with the provinces, attain a great deal.

The celebrations around the country today reflect the joy and pride we feel on this important anniversary, but the day should also serve to remind us that the work toward a truly equal society, a society where all citizens are full citizens, must continue with renewed force.

I should like to take this opportunity to commend women's organizations both of yesterday and today for their sense of purpose and for their work toward a just Canada. Their record is already an impressive one. May they go on from strength to strength. Many of my hon. friends within this party and on this side feel very strongly on this whole question. I refer to the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni), the hon. member for Saint Léonard-Anjou (Miss Bégin). I hope they will have some appropriate comments to make during this discussion.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it was with a great deal of pleasure that I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) make his statement today commemorating the very important fiftieth anniversary of the Persons case.

As someone who believes strongly in equality for women I compliment the government most heartily on this important public gesture. I would also add in this context that I was pleased to see the recognition given to pioneer Canadian women who contributed to advancing the status of women, in the form of medals presented last night by the Governor General of Canada. I know the government is directly involved in those activities as well and it deserves commendation for that action, too.

In this context, and I do not mean it in any partisan sense, I was pleased to note that four of the seven women were very active in the cause in which I deeply personally believe. I say this given the history of my own party and its forerunner. That, too, is not only a commendation of the women but of the impartiality of the government on this occasion. I should like to say in this context that the party I lead in the House of Commons has a long tradition of being concerned with the equality of women, as was recognized last night in those awards. But it is also a continuing battle, and I should like to take the opportunity briefly to praise in particular the continuing efforts of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has fought long and hard for the cause of women throughout the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Having made these points, I want to go on to make some observations of a rather different nature both in tone and substance. The economic leadership which Canadian citizens were promised by the Prime Minister during the recent election campaign has been, in the main, I regret to say, lacking in all areas, including that of the equality of women. The government has already had five months in which to initiate measures to respond to the grave economic crisis which literally thousands of Canadian women face today disproportionately—unemployment and lay-offs, cutbacks in vital support services, and an alarming state of poverty clearly documented by the National Council of Welfare. This is the reality after five months of the present government. I regret to say that the Conservative response to this embarrassing situation has chiefly been the recycling of election promises, a few regressive proposals and a few token gestures, in addition to the positive things the Prime Minister mentioned today.

● (1720)

In the main the statement of the Prime Minister which we just heard could have been a carbon copy of the election promises which were outlined in his speech on May 6. At that time he stated:

> We believe the most effective role for the federal government in promoting the status of women is to set an example.

I use that quotation to raise and answer the question: has that example really been set in the five months the Prime Minister has had since assuming his important office?

Some hon. Members: Yes!

Mr. Broadbent: I will offer my view now to hon. members opposite. If this is leadership by example, in my view we will have to wait another 50 years before full equality of women can be realized!

Let me mention just a few examples of the government's inability to provide serious leadership up to this point, not discounting some of the changes which were announced and which have been long over due. During his presentation to the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women yesterday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) reaffirmed the Conservatives' election promise to give women a higher priority in Outreach by reinstating some $3 million to the program. That sounds good, but what the minister failed to say yesterday was that he has already admitted that the total budget for women's Outreach projects for this year will amount only to somewhere between $300,000 and $400,000. This paltry sum—and paltry it is for such an important task—will be allocated to only the few women's Outreach programs which survived the Liberal's cutback campaigns of last year.

The point is that the government has simply refused to reinstate worth-while women's projects which were forced to close because of lack of funds, and there are many of them across the country and many which the party in power itself was critical of when it was in opposition, such as Saskatoon's Women in Society Today. Many projects were cut off. They have not been reinstated, and no commitments have been made to any women's Outreach programs for the 1980-81 fiscal year. Surely this is a serious point.

When the government referred to women in the public service, during the election campaign, its members promised that the reduction in the federal public service would have no disproportionate effect on women. Despite this commitment women have continued to be laid off in numbers greater than their labour force participation would indicate, in every single branch of the public service.

Guidelines to ensure that there is no decrease in the number of women working in the public service are simply nowhere to be seen, as was made evident in responses to questions asked by members of my party in the past few days.

Still another election promise was a commitment to:

> . . .monitor and recommend changes in public service remuneration scales so that the principle of "equal pay for work of equal value" is effectively applied within the federal service of Canada.

Not only have such recommendations not been forthcoming but, even worse, the government has totally shirked its responsibility in this area. Instead of setting an example for the private sector, the government, as the largest single employer of women workers in the country, is refusing to bargain in good faith with employees in negotiations on the issue of equal pay for work of equal value. If the government is committed to the equal pay principle, why are increasing numbers of female public service employees being forced to take their complaints to the Human Rights Commission? The numbers are increasing daily. I refer the Prime Minister specifically to government librarians, psychiatric nurses, home economists, physiotherapists and occupational therapists, all of whom have had complaints on this principle.

Persons Case

At a September meeting the Minister of Employment and Immigration publicly pledged that, and I quote, "No new legislation would discriminate against women". In the next breath the same minister admitted that proposed amendments to the unemployment insurance program might include tougher eligibility requirements for voluntary quitters, many of whom will be women who will quit their jobs—and I do not exaggerate—because of sexual harassment. Surely that is a legitimate reason for quitting, and a woman ought not to be punished for that if she has contributed to the unemployment insurance scheme. Many will have to quit because their husbands will change the locations of their jobs and move elsewhere. Surely a woman ought not to be penalized under the unemployment insurance system for that.

I understand also that serious consideration is being given to a two-tiered benefit structure which would directly affect and tie benefits to family composition. This would deprive many women of the benefits to which they are entitled. It is deeply disturbing to me that the Conservative government is even thinking—let alone acting—about introducing a family-based insurance scheme which would virtually cut off benefits to thousands of married women.

I could go on to a number of matters which ought to be pursued by a government which wants to make constructive change beyond matters of tidying up, to which the Prime Minister referred, but I will conclude at this point by saying that this party is deeply and profoundly, both historically and at present, committed to the idea of equality between men and women, and I urge the Prime Minister, if he undertakes one commitment in the life of this Parliament—and I mean in the life of this Parliament—to do everything he can within the framework of federal law to bring the goal of full equality between men and women into being in this Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I see that the hon. member for Bellechasse would like to have the floor now. Without prejudice to a previous decision concerning the status of the Social Credit Party of Canada, I am going to recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse. He can start the question period.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, first I want to associate myself with the Prime Minister to extend congratulations to Canadian women on the fiftieth anniversary of the recognition of their rights, which gave them the opportunity to participate, as well as men, in all the political activities of our country. I would like to thank and commend all the women who have been decorated last night by the Governor General of Canada and who deserve our congratulations.

It is my pleasure to take this opportunity to declare in this chamber that women have a special role in our country and our society and I look forward to the day when the contribution of housewives will be taken into account in the gross national product. In my opinion, this would be a recognition of an essential contribution on their part.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the government intends to introduce, in the course of the current session, a bill to take a first step towards setting up a guaranteed minimum income plan. Does the government intend to start with housewives, and will that bill be studied in the first part of the session?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the government has no intention of introducing such a bill, but I am aware that the hon. member has often brought in bills to that effect. We do intend to recommend that changes be made in proceedings on private bills and I can say to the hon. member that if he wants to introduce the same bill again, it will be considered seriously by hon. members of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues, I should like to add my good wishes and congratulations to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) for having underscored, in that fashion, the fiftieth anniversary of the so-called "persons" affair. I followed his speech closely and, as he insisted on an employment strategy for women, I should like to ask him whether he is willing to consider a rather serious problem, which is not mentioned in his speech and of which women on both sides of the House, I believe, still dream naively, that is, that of a women's caucus to help overcome the barriers put up by some bureaucrats and ministers of the right hon. Prime Minister, and to make right the Income Tax Act on the following point: would the Prime Minister agree to sponsor personally, so that it can be included in the coming budget, an amendment to the Income Tax Act providing that women who share the work with their husbands in small and medium businesses—usually rural projects, farms, corner stores, smoke shops, grocery stores, etc.—will be eligible for all privileges with regard to salaries, benefits, whether it be pensions or income tax deductions, as full-fledged employees or partners, as the case may be, of their husbands.

I presume that an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act would also be necessary. I take the liberty of stating in the House that I would have much more confidence in the Prime Minister than in his colleagues responsible for national revenue and finance.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member who is, I believe, a former minister of national revenue, that I am prepared to discuss this with my two colleagues to see exactly what are the problems related to the implementation of such an amendment.

It may be something which has already been proposed by some male members, particularly the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). It is something that we would consider when preparing a budget. I know that the hon.

member recognizes the fact that I cannot foresee at present what will be the contents of the budget.

● (1730)

[English]

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the right hon. member (Mr. Clark) on some of his statements this afternoon which were most encouraging. In all sincerity, I hope that the Prime Minister's good and sincere views will not be obscured by some of the other talk which we hear from other members of his party. For instance, when the Prime Minister spoke about employment strategies for women, I am sure he was aware that one of the major obstacles to women's entrance into the labour force and to their long-time attachment to the labour force is lack of adequate child support.

As I said two days ago in the House when I brought in a motion under Standing Order 43, the Law Reform Commission itself estimated that as many as 75 per cent of maintenance orders are just not paid. On the one hand, the Prime Minister said he will give more freedon to private members and to committees to do more work in the House, but that particular motion under Standing Order 43 was denied by a member of his party.

Would the Prime Minister agree to look into a possible amendment of the divorce act so that maintenance orders can be enforced across Canada and thereby women helped in the support of their children, which is quite legitimate, by the way?

Mr. Clark: I can certainly give the undertaking that the government will look into the possibility of an amendment of that kind.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also join other hon. members in commending the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) for his statements, however limited they were today.

I have a question for him, but first I would just like to mention that after 50 years there continue to be major changes to be made before women gain equality. Although we are now officially persons, we are still very much second class citizens. Statistics show that the wage gap between men and women continues to widen. Women earn 56 per cent less than men.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister to commemorate this anniversary, and in particular to honour an outstanding former member of Parliament, Grace MacInnis, who helped poor people to found the National Anti-Poverty Organization. This is an organization of poor persons, most of them women, and I might say that the branch in British Columbia, the Federated Anti-Poverty Group, cannot even afford to have a telephone or money for postage stamps for their organization. Will the Prime Minister instruct the Department of National Health and Welfare to provide adequate ongoing grants for affiliates of the National Anti-Poverty Organization to enable them to maintain offices, to organize and to develop self-help programs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Let me preface my answer by welcoming the hon. member, who will obviously carry on the distinguished tradition of her predecessor who was honoured last night by the Governor General.

As the hon. member knows, we have indicated our intention to establish a select committee of the House of Commons to look into the question of the voluntary sector generally and ways in which the policies of the Government of Canada can be changed to encourage various voluntary organizations. I would hope that there would be an opportunity for that committee to take a look at the particular case she has raised. In the meantime, I will take a look at that particular case. I want it understood that I am not giving an undertaking at this stage to do anything more than look into the matter, but we will certainly do that to see if it would be possible, within our present priorities and flexibility, to extend the kind of aid for which the hon. member asks.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) correctly identified older women as often finding themselves with no or very low pensions. I should like to ask him whether he plans to discuss again with the Ontario government the question of allowing women who are temporarily out of the labour force because they are caring for young children to drop those years of no or low earnings from the final computation of the Canada Pension Plan? This has often been suggested as a solution to the problem of women who have interrupted their careers. During the last Parliament, Ontario was the only one of the provinces which would not agree to this solution.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I would want to refresh my memory on the exact position taken by the Canadian and Ontario governments. I will give an undertaking to the hon. member that I will do that. I would draw to her attention the fact that we intend to have a committee, or a subcommittee of one of the standing committees of the House, look into the entire pension question or the retirement income question. While I expect that much of the consideration in those hearings would focus upon matters directly within the federal jurisdiction, there may well be the opportunity to flag areas in which initiatives could be taken by the provinces. If those initiatives are real and substantial, I would certainly be prepared to discuss them, or to have them discussed, with the provincial counterparts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Quick consultation with the rules will remind hon. members that it is within the discretion of the Speaker with regard to these sorts of statements to decide whether or not to allow a brief question period. We have had one and I would not want to stop it now. Questions have been brief and to the point, and so have the answers, but there is an increasing number of members who wish to participate and I wonder, having regard to the nature of the statement, how long that should be allowed to continue.

Persons Case

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two brief questions. I am sure the Prime Minister will welcome the first one, but I hope he will welcome the second one as well. The first question I should like to ask the Prime Minister is whether he does not feel that the name of Agnes Macphail should be mentioned today. She was the first woman elected to the House of Commons and, in doing so, she blazed a very significant trail.

My second question relates to the Prime Minister's reference to a committee study of the pension situation of women. May I ask if he will join me in making sure that that study includes a look at the very unfair provision in most pension plans, both public and private, which results in the situation that, if the wife dies first, the husband's pension is 100 per cent but, if the husband dies first, the wife's pension is only 50 per cent? I hope it is not going to take 50 years to correct that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The hon. member asks if that would be within the powers of inquiry of the committee. I can give him the assurance that it will be, at least in so far as it relates to public pension plans. As regards Agnes Macphail, certainly it is appropriate not only for her contribution to be mentioned but for her contribution to be mentioned by the hon. member. I must relate to the House the note passed to me by my colleague, the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald), which points out that there have been only 28 women here since that time.

● (1740)

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. His party had a secret paper, which became public, regarding changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act that would affect voluntary quits, as my leader has pointed out, mostly women, maternity benefits, and the two-tier system. There is much concern in the public about this among women's groups and trade union groups from coast to coast. Can the Prime Minister give an unequivocal commitment to the House that any changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, which are brought down in the future, will not affect any of these particular aspects of the unemployment insurance program, which obviously would discriminate against women?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I cannot and will not give an unequivocal commitment that none of the proposals brought forward will not be subject to that criticism. I wonder if the hon. member can give me an unequivocal indication as to how so many of these private reports become public.

Mr. Speaker: Earlier I saw two other members on their feet. I think we should conclude the questioning with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), and the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my riding of Vancouver-Kingsway was represented, as Your Honour knows, from 1965 to 1974 by Grace MacInnis, and I am very proud to have succeeded her. I hope I can live up to the work which she did in the House.

[Mr. Speaker.]

An hon. Member: What about Simma Holt?

Mr. Waddell: The least said the better. If Grace MacInnis were here she would say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), "Thank you for the rhetoric, but let us get down to brass tacks". I have a question for the Secretary of State (Mr. MacDonald) who, I believe, is responsible—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Waddell: Then I will direct my question to the Prime Minister with reference to this matter. The Prime Minister's mother was mentioned, so perhaps I might draw the question from something my mother told me. As a widow and a pensioner, she receives just in excess of $3,000 a year from the government, whereas the Vancouver Sun indicates that the president of MacMillan-Bloedel receives something in excess of $360,000 a year when one counts the salary, the benefits, the shares and stocks. Is the Prime Minister prepared to look into the matter of income distribution between elderly women and other people in the community like the president of MacMillan-Bloedel?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I think a fair amount of ideology was smuggled into that question. Certainly we are not proposing to adopt what I take to be the hon. member's views on income distribution.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions, including this afternoon, the Prime Minister has expressed his intention to amend the Indian Act to allow native women who are presently excluded from official Indian status to be included, in the future. Does he plan to make that retroactive and, if so, what provisions is he willing to make to ensure that the 300,000 people who presently enjoy, if I can use that term, official Indian status, will not be overwhelmed and will not suffer by the addition of 800,000 more people with that status over night?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and the House will know that the question of this amendment has been one of great contention between governments of both parties and the Indian community in the country. For some time there has been the hope, on the part of the predecessor government and ourselves, that the National Indian Brotherhood would come forward with a formula for amendment. I have indicated to the National Indian Brotherhood that the Government of Canada cannot continue to wait for their proposals. However, we are engaged in very extensive consultation with them as to the form of the amendment, in the hope that we can have an amendment which will be satisfactory to Indians whether male or female. Naturally one of the questions considered in that consultation is the effect upon exisiting reserves and existing status Indians of the amendment we introduce. I cannot answer the hon. member specifically today, except to say that is a matter on which we are seeking advice from the Indian community as well as elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker: I know there are other hon. members who certainly could put questions if the time were extended, but in deference to the rather brief question period referred to, I think the questioning has been adequate.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fretz for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, like others I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I add my congratulations to those previously extended to the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), and the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald). Following as I am upon the heels of the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and other speakers respecting the event which has now become known as Persons Day, and which honours the great decision of the Privy Council on the matter of women's rights, may I add to the roster of women who have distinguished themselves in this chamber in the past the name of Coline Campbell. She was the first woman elected to the House of Commons from Nova Scotia and represented the constituency of South Western Nova.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: It is in the spirit which pervades this day of non-partisanship that I mention that, and I apologize to the current hon. member for South West Nova (Mr. Haliburton) who so successfully succeeded her.

Also I want to record my best wishes to Mr. Speaker on his re-election. The House will continue to depend upon Your Honour's sage counsel to guide its proceedings. I should like to make special reference to the work of the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain). since he is from the neighbouring province of New Brunswick and, that recommends him to my favour. Also he happens to be one of the foremost debaters on the floor of the House. Even though he will not be participating further in our debates, his knowledge of the forensic arts will guide those of us who have lesser abilities, and his presence will grace the chair.

The Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) spoke eloquently of the death of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I echo the sentiments of the Leader of the Official Opposition—he departed this chamber but his spirit lingers on. I am proud to have served with him in the House. Equally I am proud to have served with the former hon. member for Halifax, Mr. Robert Stanfield. While no longer a member of the House he continues to serve the people of Canada.

It is a tradition to express good wishes to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada and his lady, but I want to do more than that. I ask Mr. Speaker to convey to Their Excellencies the best wishes of the people of Halifax West, as well as my own compliments. Very recently we in Nova Scotia were honoured by a visit from the Governor General and Mrs. Schreyer. I am happy to say that they were royally received by Nova Scotians, and they responded to that welcome with regal grace. I utilize these royal words to underline the fact that the Governor General is the representative of the Queen of Canada, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. We in Nova Scotia are not ashamed to express the esteem we hold for the Queen and the Royal Family. We are equally proud of the British tradition which allows the Queen to have her special representatives in Canada and in Nova Scotia, and we accord proper honour to them.

In the same tradition we honour the duly elected representatives of the Canadian people. I want to record my congratulations to the right hon. Prime Minister and the members of his ministry, particularly my fellow Nova Scotian, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), now the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I will speak more about the necessity of expanding the role of his department in the Atlantic region.

My reference to the Atlantic region reminds me that this area is not always understood by the citizens of other parts of Canada. Often we are regarded by Canadians as a drain on the national economy. But it must be recognized that today many parts of the maritimes, and particularly Nova Scotia, rival the best areas of Canada. The city of Halifax and its surroundings now comprise one of the finest urban areas in North America.

We have in Halifax West two of the most progressive and developing areas in Nova Scotia, Bedford and Sackville; in fact, Bedford will become Nova Scotia's newest town in 1980. Halifax West with its 100,000 residents and 65,000 electors is the largest constituency on the east coast; it has the lowest unemployment rate, the highest per capita income, and the highest percentage of home ownership in eastern Canada. We are not looking for handouts, but we do require incentives and sensible assistance as we seek to develop our physical and human resources. It is in that light that we examine the Speech from the Throne.

Let me say very quickly that we appreciate the substantive matters and the possibility of new directions for Canada indicated in the speech, and I will comment more specifically on these matters. There is, however, a real omission from the throne speech that is of vital concern to me; I have in mind the plight of the Canadian Armed Forces and the public service of Canada.

In the case of the Canadian Armed Forces, their voting record over the years tells the tale. I will dispense with a review of the statistics and simply say that the support they recently accorded members on this side of the House from the Halifax area was overwhelming. While my colleagues, like the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), have been diligent in their support of the armed forces, we must recognize that we made commitments that now must be fulfilled.

In summary, we undertook to increase the complement of the armed forces from 79,000 to approximately 85,000. We undertook to improve equipment so that our forces could comply with NATO standards. And we must select a new fighter plane and implement a fighter plane acquisition program so that our air element is not embarrassed internationally.

Not the least important of the concerns of the members of the armed forces is their rate of pay. We demand their loyalty and their devotion to duty, but we must recognize that they live in society and must pay for the goods and services in the same way as other citizens. If servicemen and women are to retain their pride in their uniform and in themselves, they must receive adequate compensation.

I am heartened by the statement of the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon) that the armed forces would receive a pay increase effective October 1. I hope it will be a reasonable one and will not be frittered away by increased rentals and other internal expenses. In the words of our Prime Minister, "There is no higher calling than service to one's country. But the country must support the people who have decided to serve."

Let me also record some remarks in support of the public service of Canada. In the last Parliament members of government engaged in what became known as "public service bashing". After 16 years, during which the government allowed civil service standards to decline and structures to decay, the government turned on its employees and blamed them for the evils of government. Instead of working with representatives of government employees to remove the cancers that had grown within the public service, the former ministers attempted to manipulate the surgeon's knife and they spread havoc among their employees. The cutbacks resulted in the loss of the fisheries laboratory and other productive activities.

It never ceases to amaze me that intelligent men can expect to govern Canada without the assistance of public servants, employees who must be dedicated, capable, and willing to perform their duties. We can only expect a proper return from our public servants if we allow them to bargain collectively for their vital employment terms and if we refrain from abusing our legislative power over them. In this connection I hope and trust our government will not make the same mistake as its predecessor, and that it will not introduce legislation affecting public servants and their employment without consulting their representatives.

I must mention this, Mr. Speaker. We propose to reduce the size of the federal public service. Many public servants recognize there is waste and over-staffing and that the situation must be remedied. I ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) to remember that these employees have rights, and that he should deal with them fairly and with respect for their rights.

I said the Speech from the Throne contained the promise of a new direction of government in Canada. Nowhere can that new direction be better demonstrated than in the matter of regional development and in the field of energy.

With regard to regional economic development, we were told that the mandate of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would be strengthened by legislation. I will watch for the introduction of this legislation with great interest, and I am sure that interest will be shared by a great many people in Atlantic Canada.

The concept of a department of government to review and rectify regional disparity is valid and viable, but that department must be at the heart of the central government. It must be properly financed, and unfettered by statutory restrictions. I believe the current function of DREE is too narrow in scope and is unnecessarily confined by law and legal definition. There must be federal-provincial co-operation, but the requirement for pre-agreement tends to delay the dawn of real economic progress. We must place more faith in the people involved and rely less on their written words. In short, we want expansion and development, not legalistic arguments; action, not words.

I said DREE must be at the heart of government, and that may necessitate the promotion of the minister to the inner cabinet. I am in favour of that for several reasons.

The hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) reminded his fellow Nova Scotians that he was part of the inner circle of the late Liberal government. He scolded the Prime Minister for not according our Nova Scotia minister the same status. It is true that the hon. member sat by the throne of the former prime minister, but Nova Scotians paid a price for his status. He was singled out for his unselfish ways, for keeping his eye on the national interest; Sydney Steel crumbled, the Donkin coal mines lay undeveloped, the Halifax shipyards were idle and oil supplies were diverted from the east coast, but the procedures of this House were handled with great care and attention. If that is what having the ear of the prime minister does for Nova Scotia, then I suggest our minister stay in the outer cabinet and demand dollars for us instead of dinner parties.

I see that the clock is approaching six, Mr. Speaker. If it pleases Your Honour, I would call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): If the House agrees, it is now six o'clock. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, the evening recess permitted an opportunity to reflect upon my remarks concerning the former member for South West Nova who, as you will recall, I said was the first woman elected from the province of Nova Scotia to this chamber. I did not want to imply, nor would I want anybody to infer, that we were not perfectly satisfied with the new member for South West Nova, who also served in this House, I believe, between 1972 and 1974. In no way did I wish to imply that the people of Nova Scotia should consider returning that woman to this House. While she served well, once was enough.

Mr. Knowles: You were right the first time.

Mr. Crosby: I said earlier that the Speech from the Throne contained the promise for new direction of government in Canada, and I reviewed the possibility of that direction in the field of regional disparity. I would like to continue my comments on the throne speech and its contents.

We on the Atlantic coast realize that many of our hopes for the future rest with the rapid development of the fishing industry, and we await anxiously the white paper mentioned in the throne speech. We also welcome new developments in agriculture. There is no finer person in this House than the man who now heads that ministry. I know that he will be warmly welcomed in Atlantic Canada. We are also pleased that shipbuilding and the merchant marine will receive special attention from the government.

The Speech from the Throne mentioned the goal of self-sufficiency in energy by 1990 and recognized the role of the provinces in achieving this end. For me, this is a vital challenge for both the national and our provincial governments. If we cannot achieve energy self-sufficiency and acceptable cost burdens, all other economic measures are doomed to failure, and we will lose our quest for improved social and living conditions for all Canadians. Energy self-sufficiency means more than an adequate and secure supply of fuels and generation.

Equally important as the availability of supply is the price we must pay for energy. Energy self-sufficiency will not be achieved in Canada if one part of the nation pays twice the price for gas or petroleum products as another part. Self-sufficiency will be meaningless if Nova Scotians pay twice the price for gas or electricity as other Canadians.

In the late 1950s the national government decided that all Canadians should have medical care and that that care should conform to a national standard. Medicare became a reality. I believe a wise national government would recognize a similar national standard for energy and say that no Canadian should have to pay more than the national average price for the energy he or she consumes. The Nova Scotia government and most Nova Scotians believe our goal should not be limited to energy self-sufficiency on the supply side, but should also extend and include a national average price limitation on the cost side.

The Nova Scotian government under Premier John Buchanan is working to resolve the energy problem in my province, and I believe the problem can be resolved with diligence and intelligence, but federal government assistance is required. Premier Buchanan recently announced his energy policy for Nova Scotia. His course of action combines intelligence, common sense and resourcefulness. He has designed an energy system for Nova Scotia that incorporates diversity and flexibility. At the same time it minimizes environmental risk and maximizes social and economic benefits.

Nova Scotia's previous energy policies left the province dependent on foreign crude oil for almost 85 per cent of its energy requirements. The remaining requirements are met by coal and hydro. Taking Canada as a whole, only 44 per cent of the total energy requirement is met by crude oil, and much of that crude oil is provided domestically. Middle East and other world-wide developments have left Nova Scotia with a high cost source of energy and an uncertain one.

The picture becomes clear in relation to domestic and industrial electricity: 65 per cent of electricity is generated with petroleum derived from imported crude. The solution to the problem is equally clear: Nova Scotia must displace foreign crude with Canadian energy sources. To that end Nova Scotia seeks to develop its coal resources. Estimates indicate a coal resource of 3.5 billion tons in various coal fields. In areas ready for immediate development such as Donkin, Cape Breton, there is said to be 2.6 billion tons, with 800 million tons recoverable using current technology. But federal assistance is required.

While coal production is the major thrust in displacing foreign crude, exploration for oil and gas is a major concern and a real hope for the future. Discoveries in the Sable Island area are being assessed, and the tempo of development and exploration in that area must be accelerated.

The activity in Sable Island and other oil exploration prompts me to mention Petro-Canada. The operations of this agency are complex and not easily understood. I endorse the concept of "privatization". Years in government and public service convince me that government must respect those activities that properly belong to the private sector. Nonetheless, the research activities formerly sponsored by PetroCan must be continued. If they are not, all Canadians will suffer but, in the east, we will suffer more. The report of the task force on PetroCan has indicated this vital work of exploration will continue.

In this connection, Nova Scotians applaud the turnover of offshore mineral rights to the provinces. This does not mean the federal authority cannot play a role in exploration and development. It does give the coastal eastern provinces a chance to achieve a new financial economic status.

At present, utilization of Canadian oil and gas resources involves a serious transportation problem for east coast provinces. Marine transport of Arctic gas is being considered, and a proposal for an east coast pipeline is now before the National Energy Board. These developments are being carefully monitored by the Nova Scotia government.

More imaginative solutions to energy problems include the development of Fundy tidal power and research activity in coal gasification. The economics of processing coal to liquid fuel is being vigorously pursued. These ventures require immediate federal attention and aid. The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), in his usual thoughtful way, described in detail the possibility of employing peat and other natural fuels to displace expensive foreign crude. His suggestion deserves attention. We would like to see the Annapolis River tidal project implemented immediately.

The challenge in the Speech from the Throne and the challenge for Canada and Nova Scotia is clear: we must solve the energy problem. I am confident that Premier Buchanan and the Nova Scotia government are on the right road to meet that challenge. I am equally confident the Prime Minister will assist us to deal with the energy problem. He has spoken in this House and elsewhere about the necessity of rectifying the economic imbalance in Canada. He understands federal-provincial relations. He recognizes the special needs of Atlantic Canada.

Changing the direction of government in Canada means providing the kind of assistance that leads to self-reliance and self-sufficiency. That is what we want in Nova Scotia, and with this new direction that is what we can achieve.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I hear some of my friends on the left indicating that this is perhaps my maiden speech. I suspect those friends were here during the last Parliament but they must have absented themselves from the House for a long, long time, otherwise they would have heard me speak from time to time.

An hon. Member: Stanley never hangs in.

Mr. Knowles: You look so young.

Mr. Daudlin: It is because I look so young, and it is out of envy that they say that, I think.

It is a distinct honour to be able to participate in this first debate of this Parliament. Like those before me, I would like to congratulate Mr. Speaker on having been chosen once more by this chamber to represent us. As a member who now finds himself on this side of the Speaker's chair, albeit temporarily I am sure, your presence in the chair will afford me an even greater opportunity to benefit from the keen wit and wise judgment referred to earlier by members of this House. I intend to avail myself of those qualities often.

I join with other members who have participated in this debate in extending my compliments to the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald) for their contributions in moving and seconding the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I should as well, by way of preamble to my comments this evening, express my appreciation to the electors of Essex-Kent for their reaffirmation and confidence in my ability to serve their interests in this Parliament. I believe I share with other members of this House the combined pride and humility that follow from being chosen one of the relatively few spokesmen for the entire population of Canada.

Following the redistribution which took effect on the dissolution of the last House, the constituency which I now represent lost the community of Chatham in the northeast, and with it the substantial urban population which had brought the balance of an urban oriented citizenry to an essentially agricultural riding. With the loss of Chatham the riding has gained an almost totally agricultural area by acquiring two townships, Harwich and Colchester South, together with the larger communities of Blenheim and Harrow. I would be remiss if I did not welcome those new areas to the riding.

As I have indicated, the riding of Essex-Kent is now predominantly rural, with abundant agricultural activity, which included most recently the hosting of the International Plowing Match. This was officially opened by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). Because of the agricultural nature of the riding one might expect, and I would go further and suggest my constituents would have cause to be disappointed if I did not examine closely the Throne Speech to find how it proposes to deal with so important and vital a part of our economy as agriculture and the production of food.

I listened attentively to the Speech from the Throne when we were in the other place. I examined and re-examined the written copy of the Speech from the Throne, bearing in mind that the present government had taken great pains to put itself on record during the last election as stating that it was the direct and continuing responsibility of a federal government to support the agricultural industry aggressively. Yet, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding meticulous examination of the throne speech and the avowed commitment of that government during the most recent campaign, what I find is that essentially there has been an omission to mention agriculture in the throne speech. One would have to look elsewhere to find any statement of continuing commitment on the part of the Prime Minister or his cabinet to producers of food in this nation.

I cannot overlook either the fact that when the Prime Minister, in putting together his new cabinet, thought so little of his party's commitment, oft repeated during the campaign, of high profile and high importance to the agricultural sector, he opted while selecting those of the inner and those of the outer cabinet to decide that in fact the Minister of Agriculture should be relegated to a position of secondary importance, which neither the Minister of Agriculture nor the people of this nation, and particularly the agricultural producers should be prepared to accept.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, has said that it is time to quit fighting the last election and to move on. But I believe it is important, if we are to determine where this government may be wanting to go, given that it has failed to provide us with a blueprint or plan of action for agriculture in the throne speech, that we look at what that party, through its representatives, was heard to say in the campaign.

The promises were many, Mr. Speaker. They promised they would bring in new ideas and new initiatives to the federal agricultural policy. In fact the Minister of Agriculture, when he was critic of that portfolio, put himself on record in this House as stating, for instance on milk policy, that the import quota on cheese in this country should be reduced by some 10 million pounds at the very least. And yet in his first actions in dealing with that very dairy policy, the minister and his government has not included any such action in any announcements that I am able to find. But he has indicated in some talks that he had privately with some producers elsewhere in the nation that it would perhaps still be a good idea to reduce those imports. And yet when one discusses this with officials, one determines no such action is planned. It leads one to the conclusion that, having assumed the reins of power, they may have now decided that, in fact, the previous administration was correct in the levels which had been set and that no reduction should take place, or alternatively they are unprepared to accept the consequences of reducing the quotas to a level to which they claim to be philosophically committed.

At another time, Mr. Speaker, the representatives of the government suggested that they would be working toward reduction of the escalating costs of farm inputs, including machinery, fertilizer, interest rates and so on, in order to lower the cost of production. Those were the promises, but what have been the actions? Machinery prices have not gone down; they have gone up, and will go up further if, in fact, the energy cost increases proposed by this government are allowed to take place. The cost of fertilizer has not gone down; it has gone up and, indeed, the level of future prices can only be speculated upon if one is to assume that natural gas will be linked to the relative costs of other oil-based energy. One can only cringe at the thought of the possible cost of a bag of nitrate in the spring of 1980.

Then, of course, there is the matter of interest rates, Mr. Speaker. If it were not so serious it would almost be funny. I can recall sitting on the other side of the House and listening to the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), then critic, arguing long and hard—one thought then without much real commitment to the idea, but with a healthy dose of partisanship—that increase after increase was wrong, that it would lead to inflation, that it would have a detrimental impact on the lives of the people of Canada, that it should be fully discussed by Parliament before being allowed to take place, that the minister should not slavishly follow the dictates of the governor of the Bank of Canada, and indeed, the movements of the industry in the United States.

Now what has happened, Mr. Speaker? Conversion, a seeing of the light! Perhaps they have accepted that it was the right thing to do. Now they seem to argue that it was wrong then and right now. In any event, they seem to have a renewed faith in the Bank of Canada and a sudden inspirational understanding of what has happened for the last three years. It is almost enough to shake one's confidence. But as bad as those things are, they do not hold a candle to something else. And indeed, maybe all that we are going to have left for light in this country is candles if, in fact, this government is allowed to continue to do what it proposes to do by way of PetroCan and the petrochemical industry.

It would now appear that they have reached a decision to move immediately, precipitously and, in my view, unthinkingly towards world prices, regardless of the cost of replacement, regardless of the cost necessary to assure exploration, and regardless of the cost of production. Perhaps I could stand by and I could argue against it, and perhaps I could almost argue detachedly were it not for the fact that I am so completely convinced of the incredible impact, yes, the incredible, detrimental impact that this will have on the food production industry in this nation.

The previous administration, in an attempt to assure continued supply and continuity of supply, in an attempt to move prices upward, while buffering and cushioning the Canadian public from the adverse effects of abrupt changes upward in oil pricing that had been experienced throughout the world as a result of OPEC decisions, saw input costs in the agricultural sector increase dramatically, and I have heard, and members of this House have heard the reasons for those increases.

Many have accepted them and others have argued that it was wrong. But they were accepted, they were imposed, they were lived with, and the farmers of this nation were put into a cost squeeze that has reached crisis proportions. The agricultural industry is one industry that cannot conveniently pass on its input costs to the consuming public. If and when it does, the impact on the consumer of increased prices for food results in CPI figures like were announced today, showing this nation once again moving toward and shortly into double digit inflation.

Only a few short years ago one of the least concerning input costs in agriculture may have been energy. I suggest, as I attempted only last week to point out in my questions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Minister of Agriculture, that the time has now arrived when the agricultural producers of this country must be given absolutely clear and unequivocal assurances by this government that they are wanted, that they are needed, that, in fact, this government is going to give the assistance necessary to assure their continued existence and is going to provide mechanisms that will protect them against the rising costs of energy as it relates to the cost of the production of food.

So that there can be no confusion, and so that members of this House may understand that I am not spreading alarm unduly, that I am not creating a false crisis, let me offer some examples. In 1971 in Canada the farming community spent $264,708,000 on petroleum, diesel oil, and lubricants for machinery. By 1978 for the same products the price had risen to $519,600,000. Another important statistic to remember is that primary agriculture alone accounts for about 3 per cent of all the energy consumed in this country.

Getting a little closer to home, let me point to the greenhouse industry, one of the most energy intensive industries in this country, an industry worth in Essex county alone some $20 million per year in gross production on a direct basis, without taking into account the salaries involved in packing, in transportation, in sales—an industry that has been threatened by the moves that are taking place. Some 62 per cent of the input costs for the production of food in these greenhouses goes to heat them.

There are growers in that constituency, in that industry, who in 1973 were paying 15 cents per gallon for light oil. Two days ago those same growers were paying 59.78 cents per gallon, an increase of almost 400 per cent. At the same time you must recognize that the actual return to the producer for those same crops in gross terms has not yet even doubled. One can immediately comprehend the nature and the extent of the problem. I do not think I overstate the case by suggesting that if in fact the kind of price increases that this government is now contemplating are allowed to take place, they would destroy the greenhouse industry. That $20 million industry in the county of Essex, and the extension of that industry is found in Kent county, in Lambton county, and indeed in the riding of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) as well as in the Niagara peninsula, will find itself hard pressed, and in fact impossible to continue.

It was for that reason I raised the question last week. In fact I have had meetings with the Minister of Agriculture since that time. I do not propose merely to point at the problem. I do not propose to suggest that in fact it is a terrible thing and somebody has to do something about it. I have suggested to the ministers, both in the House and privately, that there is a solution to this difficulty that this industry is in the throes of experiencing. I would almost say I have implored those ministers to consider the possibility that if in fact they are going to proceed as a government with the kind of price increases they are talking about, that the agricultural industry as a whole, and the greenhouse industry specifically, should be exempted from those increases.

How that could and should be done would be to fix the cost of energy as an input cost in food production at the level which it was in the spring of 1979, by way of returns, after application and indication by the growers that they were in fact true food input costs. This would be much the way in which we now deal with the situation for taxation on gasoline for farm vehicles. In the same manner the growers should be allowed to make application to the Department of National Revenue for rebates that would sustain the level of their energy input costs for the production of their food at the levels they were at in 1979, which I think most members will agree are already high enough to make it very difficult for even a good grower. I suggest that some consideration be given by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Agriculture to a mechanism such as that, or to some other mechanism which would accomplish the same end.

The only way in which we shall be able to maintain the agricultural industry in general and the greenhouse industry in particular, which in the past has had to sustain too great an impact in terms of energy policy, would be through the adoption of a proposal of this kind. The impact of rising prices for diesel fuel, nitrates used for the production of fertilizer, and natural gas used for heating, including, particularly, the heating of greenhouses, will be such that producers will not be able to pass it on to consumers because, if they were to do so, the cost of the basic food basket which goes to make up the CPI would send us into a frightening inflationary spiral. I am sure none of us in this House wish to see either producers or consumers placed in a position where they are unable to protect themselves.

In the early production years of the Alberta oil fields the greenhouse industry in Essex County was made to pay higher prices for oil than it would otherwise have been obliged to pay if there had been access to the offshore oil then available to areas of Quebec through the Port of Montreal. In the early fifties the consumers of Ontario, and particularly agricultural consumers, were paying prices for oil higher than world prices so that sufficient moneys could be diverted to the Alberta oil industry to enable that industry to be sustained and developed. The producers in my riding are now saying: "Isn't it odd that we should have been made to pay those prices and sustain those costs for the benefit of Albertans in the fifties and now, when we are seeing greenhouses going up for sale and lacking buyers, the oil producers are calling for more and more and more?"

Mr. Speaker, I do not only plead with this government which appears bent upon a policy of increasing those prices. I look beyond this government to the premiers of the provinces which are producing this energy, and ask them to remember and consider what consumers did for them some years ago. I believe I must go beyond this government because it seems to be bent on bargaining with the price of energy in order to obtain the consensus it hopes to achieve. It appears, though, if reports are to be believed, that such a consensus will be elusive indeed.

I would not want, by reason of the emphasis I have placed on the energy matter, to leave this House with the impression I feel the only agriculturally oriented policy which should have been touched upon by the government in the Speech from the Throne should be concerned with energy and its impact on the cost of production of food. There are other areas that the government should, in my view, have addressed in the Speech from the Throne if it was anxious to provide assurances to the food producers of the nation that there continues to be, and will continue to be, a place for them in the economic fabric of Canada.

The minister said much outside the House in the course of pronouncements during the campaign about the Farm Credit Corporation. In various statements while he was opposition critic he was most supportive of that corporation. Indeed, he has spoken in quite favourable terms of the need to provide new funding sources. But he appears to have taken little or no action since the government came to office to turn his commitment into actions. Perhaps this would not be so bad, in the circumstances, were it not for the fact that there continues to be difficulty in funding farm credit.

Right at this time of the year young farmers, attempting to get loans to purchase new farms which they can ill-afford to buy at the present bank rate, find the Farm Credit Corporation saying, "We would love to take your application, but of course you must realize that it will be taken purely upon the basis of our being able to fund it next year when we hope to have more money." It alarms me to read in a newspaper, The Ottawa Journal of October 12, that this corporation, one which persons like myself which represent agricultural areas have always wanted and always been willing to support, should be suggesting it wishes to move into the direction of privatization, as seems to be the aim of the government, and in so doing to remove the competitive advantage which was given it to ensure that it does, in fact, make money available to young farmers in Canada who are trying to buy land at prices that are spiralling out of sight, leaving them in a position where they could not reasonably expect to get that other 200 acres of land, or 300, or 500 or what-have-you.

It is indeed alarming to find that the Farm Credit Corporation, through its chairman, should feel that its competitive advantage over the banks should be reduced, leaving the corporation and the banks on roughly the same ground. This seems to me to go directly against the fundamental principles upon which the FCC was instituted in the first place and it scares me, frankly, when I think of those young farmers in my riding who are finding it ever more difficult to buy land at $6,000 or $7,000 an acre.

In my view it is essential that the Farm Credit Corporation should be given legislation which would allow it to go for funding to sources other than the Treasury Board. It has always lacked that capacity and I, for one, would be prepared to support the Minister of Agriculture as far as possible from this side of the House to ensure that action is taken quickly along those lines in order that farmers should have access to those funds so as to get into the production of food.

If it seems I am being overly persistent in these matters it is only because I have seen no indication by the new government of its stand on any of these vital questions. I might refer to the area of research and development in the agricultural sector. It is of the utmost importance that a country with such bountiful land, land capable of being even more productive, should develop it to the fullest extent, to the benefit not only of ourselves but of the world where far too many people are dying of malnutrition and starvation. It is imperative that there be a strong endorsement and encouragement of research and development in all areas of food production and distribution. The realization of Canada's future agricultural potential must be achieved by advances in skill, techniques, and expertise.

I would be remiss if I did not express the sentiments of the majority of the members of this House—yes, even hon. members opposite—that the hon. member who previously occupied the post of minister of agriculture was viewed very warmly by members of this House and by the producing communities across this nation who, for the most part, were satisfied that great achievements were made in agriculture through the efforts of that man. Regardless of what achievements were made, valuable time has been lost since the election, and such absence of progress in changing times is regression.

The previous administration fought hard to achieve negotiated settlements of bilateral trade agreements on horticultural products for the fruit and vegetable crop producers of this nation. I can but hope and urge very sincerely that substantial priority be given by the government to re-introducing and bringing forward appropriate legislation which would allow the implementation of the bilateral negotiations and assure for producers the guarantees and advantages achieved by those negotiations.

I am particularly worried about the rumours we hear that certain segments of a bilateral agreement are being bartered away and that we may now be seeing certain interest groups in the country suggesting to the government that tariffs on tomato paste, for instance, should be removed because there is not currently a tomato paste industry. We negotiated and fought for seven years.

We tried to obtain for the producers of this nation the kind of tariff protection which now exists in that bilateral agreement and which would have created a milieu in this country which would induce new industry and bring to Canada its own tomato paste industry for consumers of that product in Canada. It also would have put Canada on the map in terms of international production of tomato paste. I think all of us knew that that would not happen and could not come about unless and until we had in place the kind of guarantees which would assure companies the opportunity to come, to start off well, and to be able to stay. Having achieved that, we now hear that there are those who would have the government remove those tariffs because the industry is not yet here. I argue as strongly as I can that the alternative to that is not to remove but to allow a remission until such time as the new industry is here.

Because there is no Canadian industry, in my view to remit is fair. To remove entirely what has been so hard fought for by producers would be throw our hands up and say we never want to see a Canadian tomato paste industry. I think this has to be dealt with quickly. The uncertainty which now surrounds this matter has to be removed, and we have to indicate that the government is committed to the introduction of such a new industry to Canada.

I would like to suggest to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance that it might be appropriate on the fiftieth anniversary of the "persons" decision, under which women were considered persons within the definition of the BNA Act for purposes of their selection and entry to the Senate, that those ministers consider the plight today of women involved in agriculture and small business who, by reason of lack of incorporation, find themselves in the position of being integral parts of the farm or small business unit, putting in untold hours of labour on tractors and combines, or perhaps behind the counters of small businesses, and unable to draw salaries which would otherwise be paid to non-spouses or non-family and, alternatively, if salaries are drawn, receiving money which cannot validly be deducted as expenses.

I believe it is time that this inequity was removed. Fifty years should have been long enough to afford us the opportunity to work out mechanisms which would allow such inequities to be removed from our taxation legislation so that all persons involved in agriculture and small business could receive and have deducted fair compensation for the valuable work they do.

I see that my time has about expired. I thank the House for its patience. Through its action I ask the government to demonstrate—in spite of the absence of this in the Throne Speech—that it has a continuing, vital interest in agriculture and that in fact it is prepared to say to the farmers of this nation, "We still want you; we will do what is necessary to support you".

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I count it an honour, a privilege, and a challenge to have been elected to this House by the people of the constituency of Bow River, and I am very happy to take part in this debate.

At the outset I wish to congratulate the mover and the seconder on the splendid addresses they both delivered. Their material was excellent, and their presentations were clear and eloquent.

The Bow River riding is a new constituency. It is made up roughly of 30 per cent of three former constituencies, Palliser, Rocky Mountain, and Crowfoot, with the balance coming from the Lethbridge constituency. The Bow River constituency has virtually everything. It has one of the seven wonders of the world, Lake Louise, and some of the most talked about tourist items in Canada, including the townsite of Banff, nestled in the majestic mountains, and the city of Drumheller, located in the Canyon of the Red Deer where there are the dolomites which have been photographed probably more than most other geological formations in the world.

The three areas, Lake Louise, the Banff townsite and Banff National Park, and the Drumheller areas, are tourist areas extraordinary and draw people from all over the world. The Drumheller valley contains the famous Badlands where the dinosaurs used to roam.

An hon. Member: Still do.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): They are not quite as fossilized as some of the members of the NDP.

The rock and soil formations attract geologists from all over the world and form the northeast part of the riding. The constituency completely encircles the city of Calgary. There are cattle, horse and sheep ranches, grain farms, poultry farms, oil wells and gas wells. There are scores of small businesses, and there are coal mines. Some businesses are large, some medium, and some small. Bow River is an agricultural, industrial and commercial centre in the thriving province of Alberta.

However, the best thing about the constituency is its wonderful people who come from all countries of the world. They have brought with them their cultures and are making their cultures part of the great Canadian mosaic. The cultures of our native people are found on the three reserves within the riding, the Blackfoot Reserve, the Stony Reserve, and the Sarcee Reserve. All together these people contribute to making Canada a better place in which to live.

On top of all that we have the town of High River, the birthplace of our innovative and energetic Prime Minister (Mr. Clark).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): His parents still live there, and they are wonderful people. Everyone in Bow River and, indeed, in Alberta, is proud of the fact that a native son has become the Prime Minister of this great country, and under his leadership our country will become united and strong. I am proud to have the opportunity to represent such wonderful people and such a wonderful constituency.

One of the thrilling paragraphs in the Speech from the Throne reads as follows:

> My ministers were given a mandate to change the direction of the Government of Canada, as we enter the 1980s. The basic purposes of that change will be to enhance the rights, freedoms and opportunities of individual Canadians, and re-establish the spirit of partnership and renewal which are fundamental to our federation.

"To change the direction of the Government of Canada" that is the reason the Progressive Conservative Party is on this side of the House. Why did the people of this nation want a change of direction? Well, let us look at just a few items. For ten or more years free enterprise values which made Canada a healthy, inventive and prosperous country have been discredited. There has been a mulligan stew of collectivism and statism. Government ownership permeated legislation, and then the administration crippled free enterprise by regulating and controlling the economy. The government told the people what was good for them, leaning more and more to the left, and with the help of the NDP they tried to kill free enterprise altogether.

An hon. Member: Now they are getting closer and closer.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Yes, they are getting closer together every day. As a result, people became afraid to invest money in their own country and they invested elsewhere. More than $2 billion left Canada since 1974. Besides torturing the productive system of this country, they went on a wild spending spree spending money they did not have to the tune of billions of dollars. In 1973 Canada had a small surplus on current account in its international trade and payments account. By late 1974 and every year thereafter our current account deficit was around $4 billion or more. It was an extremely poor performance. The Canadian dollar declined from $1.03 in 1976 to about 83 cents in terms of the U.S. dollar, a fall of nearly 20 per cent by 1979. Depreciation of our dollar against currency such as the Japanese yen, the West German mark and the Swiss franc was almost 40 per cent, but even this was not enough to make any substantial improvement in the trade balance.

To add to the dilemma, this resulted in almost one million people becoming unemployed, fewer goods were produced, the gross national product was below that of the United States, below that of Japan and below that of France. As a result inflation became rampant. The government of the day continued to spend more than it had, and the government deficit grew to as much as $13 billion. The deficit in the balance of payments grew to over $5 billion. But deficits had to be paid, and so the government went outside the country to borrow money, leaving a legacy of debt that generations yet unborn will have to pay because of this economic mess that was created.

No wonder the interest rate rose seven times in a few months during the last weeks of their administration, and now the Liberals have the audacity to ask why the interest rate is increasing. They know that the deficit must be covered by an equal amount of capital coming into the country. So long as this economic mess continues, it will be chaotic to have the flow of capital going out of Canada until we are at least able to get production up to a point where there will not be too many dollars chasing too few goods. Yes, the economic mess was created by the Liberals and we are still living with it. It cannot be cured over night. Instead of playing politics, I would think the Liberals today would assume responsibility for the mess in which they left this country, the mess that our present government is trying to clean up.

In 1968 the debt of this country was some $32 billion, and for this we paid annually more than $1 billion in interest. That was bad enough, but within the next ten years of the Liberal administration under its present leadership, the debt grew to $80 billion—more than double. The people of Canada were paying almost $7 billion in interest every year.

The former minister of agriculture said the other day that he left Canada in a good state. A good state? A messy state, if I know anything. In addition to that, there was a flight of more than $2 billion out of this country to build industry and to provide jobs in other countries, while our own people were unemployed. The gross national product was not growing. Trade deficits were continuing to grow larger each year. It is fortunate indeed that Canada has not gone into complete bankruptcy. As a matter of fact many people said to me, as I knocked on their doors in Bow River, "If that administration is returned, the whole country will be bankrupt." Look at the facts. They had something on which to base their fears. Does anyone believe that the direction should not be changed? Surely it does not take anyone with more than a grade three education to see that something had to be done to clean up this mess into which we were getting deeper and deeper.

Certainly the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) cannot press a button and find that, presto, everything turns rosy. Remember that the country is close to a crisis financially and economically. Even though faced with this economic mess, the Progressive Conservative government is determined to turn the crisis into an opportunity to give free enterprise a chance to work, to create a climate where people will be glad to invest their money in their country, not send it elsewhere, and a chance to free our industries and our people from the regulatory bondage in which they have been placed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Wealth comes not from government offices or politicians' edicts but from that portion of the market place which is free. Collectivism, centralized planning, regulation after regulation, frustrate people to the point where they will not even bother investing their money. One man said to me, "It is so hard to invest $100,000 in this country. I am going down to Florida where I can invest the money and where people are glad to have the investment." That man can come back to Alberta and to Canada because there is not going to be this red tape that tries to keep people from investing in their own country.

The multinational companies have their place. They provide employment, and as good corporate citizens they should pay their share of running this country and give our workers a fair return for their labour. Along with the multinationals we need hundreds of thousands of individuals in partnerships, small businesses working for profit in a free market. What will the result be? The result will be interacting individual decisions with no conscious direction from the government, no single purpose for each goal. Each individual has his own purpose and goal and seeks to secure the greatest reward to avoid or to cut his losses or to make a contribution. There are literally thousands of purposes, millions of decisions and millions of adjustments every day as inventors, entrepreneurs, middle men, employers, workers, buyers and sellers pursue their own prospective interests for themselves and their families, the sum total of which builds a nation.

Our wonderful neighbours to the south built a nation on the principles of free enterprise and individual freedom. Today they could be energy sufficient had their administration in the last few years not shackled free enterprise. Exploration for coal, oil, uranium, natural gas, came almost to a standstill in that great nation to the south. The administration was tying it up with red tape. The administrations thought they could regulate and control and that free enterprise would still work. The Congress of the United States has been told repeatedly that there is no shortage of fuel as such but that it takes money to find it. Individuals and companies need motivation to invest their money, and a reasonable return is essential. There are vast deposits of coal, oil and gas today in the United States, and I say they would have been self-sufficient had they not allowed the left wing of their party to dictate their policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Similarly the Liberals emphasized the left wing of their party. I know there are some free enterprisers in the Liberal party and there are some also in the NDP. Why do they want to shackle free enterprise? Let them come over to this group which breeds free enterprise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Yes, we plan to change the direction in this country.

Now, let us look at another item, namely, tourism. I mention tourism because it can become a great industry in this country. This year, in calculating the amount of money spent by Canadians in other countries, compared to what those who came to Canada spent in Canada, we find a $2 billion deficit. Canada has all its wonders, majestic mountains in Banff and Jasper. There is the wonder of the world in Lake Louise, Hoodoos and dolomites near Drumheller in the badlands of the canyon of the Red Deer River, just to mention a few attractions in my own constituency and to say nothing about the wonders found in the maritimes, Ontario and Quebec. There are wonderful falls in the Northwest Territories. Canada has wonder after wonder, yet we have a $2 billion deficit. Did the former administration ever ask why? I am very happy that the new minister in this government responsible for tourism is taking a look at new directions. We want our people to travel across the country. We must make it attractive for them to do so, in order to keep our money in our country. But that is not the only point. We can do something else as well.

There is a tremendous market for international tourists who would like to come and enjoy the beautiful scenery and wonderful hospitality of Canada. Major tour wholesalers in the United States, Australia and the Pacific rim countries are sending hundreds of people who want to come to Canada to other places, because we have become so bound with red tape in parts of this country that we have not provided accommodation.

How would one like to go to the Banff National Park or Lake Louise and find when one got there that there was no place to sleep, and then have to drive 100 miles or more into British Columbia or back to Calgary to find a room? People who have had to do that say they will never come back. Private enterprise today can and would provide accommodation in Banff and Lake Louise, and protect the environment, if given an opportunity to do so. But because of the bureaucracy built up by the previous government, along with the rules and regulations, they cannot do it. They cannot build new motels. They cannot tear down old ones and build modern cabins. The bureaucracy in Parks Canada has become God. They know best what the people want.

A man wanted to start a medical practice in Lake Louise when the Liberals were in power, but they would not let him. People can get sick. In this case the doctor finally became frustrated and left. Bureaucracy has taken hold. The people in the offices think they know what is best. They will not even license a man who wants to work in that particular area. They say that there is some rule or regulation passed by the former administration which makes it impossible for them to do it; they do not want to break the law.

We want more and more people to come and enjoy the beauty of our mountains, the beauty of the maritimes, the beauty of every province in the country, each one with its unique attractions. Let us encourage entrepreneurs to build accommodation and at the same time protect the environment in our national parks. We should encourage thousands of these internationals, people from other countries, to come and enjoy our scenery. Such a policy will bring in new dollars and help our balance of trade, as well as provide jobs for people. Also it will enable entrepreneurs to provide a different type of traffic which will help the environment. They could provide a bus which would take 60 people instead of 30 cars taking the same number of people, to beautiful Lake Louise. The same thing could apply to other parks across the country.

I speak about Banff National Park because that is part of my constituency. It illustrates what is going on in other parts of the country. There is no end to what can be done to change the direction and turn the travel deficit into a surplus. Capital is waiting to be used if we turn out the red light and turn on the green.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): I want to say a word or two about agriculture. Certainly agriculture needed some changing, with all due respect to the former minister. To put it in a nutshell, we found a dismal record. There were 2,000 boxcars which were unserviced, 4,000 new hopper cars were required, and 5,000 boxcars needed refurbishing. There was loss of markets. There were approximately 16 ships waiting in Vancouver to be loaded. Western farmers were paying fines of up to $5,000 a day which came out of the pockets of the producers, because the ships had to sit and wait and wait. The nation had a 35-million bushel backlog in exports. It was an all-time high. Producers saw their markets disappearing and going to other countries. They wanted a change of direction. Already we can see the change of direction. There is a changed attitude toward hopper cars entirely. Also I hope we can give the producers of this country a fair return for their products. It has been too long. Every other industry receives its costs plus a reasonable profit. Farmers work for the good of the country. They are entitled to a fair return plus the cost of their labour and a reasonable profit. I hope to see a change in that area during the life of this Parliament.

I should like to deal with another area in which we want to change the direction, and that is the supplying of energy in the country by way of coal. For many years our coal mines remained virtually idle while we bought coal from other countries. Canada has a tremendous tonnage waiting to be mined, yet Canada is a net importer. Year after year the Alberta legislature passed resolutions urging the federal government to assist us in getting markets for our coal. But what happened? In the Drumheller Valley 20 mines disappeared. Only one mine remains. Their market has disappeared. At the same time Canada is bringing in millions of tons of coal from another country. Our own miners are being dislocated and are required to find work after being in the pits and the bosom of the earth for 30, 40 or 50 years. The same thing happened in the province of Nova Scotia. Many of its miners came west and are still working in mines that are operating. But what about the thousands of people who could not find work?

In 1978 15 million tons of coal valued at $750 million were exported; 18.5 million tons valued at $200 million were used in Canada; and 15.5 million tons valued at $660 million were imported into Canada. That was in 1978 when our unemployment level was growing close to the million mark. I was raised in a coal mining community and worked in the mines. My father and my brothers were coal miners. I know what it means to be hungry when the mines had no work. I remember many times coming out of the mines and just yearning to see the light come on in the tipple indicating that there would be work the next day. Around the tables in the homes in the mining area of Newcastle people would say, "If we could only get just a little bit of that Ontario market". Think of the jobs this would have provided, think of the effect this would have had on our balance of trade, think what this would have done toward attaining energy efficiency and sufficiency.

The producers of coal in Canada are the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. There may be coal in other provinces as well. Now there are about ten mines operating in these five provinces, plus two dozen corporations, mostly oil and gas companies, which have sizeable coal rights and are planning to produce coal for conventional uses. Our coal mines should operate for additional domestic and foreign markets. In the province of Ontario we need more than the 3.7 million tons of thermal coal a year to which it is presently committed. I thank the Ontario government for at least giving us a bite of its market. With some help from the federal government, I am sure the people of Ontario will give us more business.

By 1980 the demand for domestic coal is expected to increase greatly. To enable coal to play a meaningful part in our energy requirements, as we work toward self-sufficiency, we need to do certain things. We need additional transportation and terminal capacities. We need to do something about transportation costs.

Research should also play a part as coal can be used in many ways. There are literally a thousand items that can be made from coal. There is a tremendous opportunity in the liquefaction of coal to produce a large range of liquid and gaseous hydrocarbons, and in the gasification of coal to produce low, medium and high Btu gases for combustion; process energy to congeneration of electricity, petrochemical feed stocks, and the manufacture of synthetic fertilizers. There is opportunity for the use of coal as an energy source to recover large amounts of synthetic, heavy oils and bitumens. I have said for years, and I said when I was part of the government of Alberta, that we should not be using our oil and our gas, particularly our gas, in our industries. Why do they not use coal and save the clean fuel for the heating of our homes? Gradually people are coming around to believing that that is right. There is a large range of uses for coal.

Again we should protect the environment, but let us not stop coal mining because a few extreme environmentalists say it is going to hurt the environment. Yes, we should change the direction and produce our own coal when we have such abundant supplies.

There is another item that has been mentioned to me many times as I knocked on doors in the Bow River constituency, and that is the direction in which we are going with the metric system. It was brought into this country in a questionable way by the Liberal administration. This is another example of the former government telling the people what was good for them without the people having an opportunity to have their day in court.

This government believes in reflecting the thinking of the people to the greatest possible degree. Because metric was brought in the way it was, because it is ahead of its time, because the United States is reluctant to go ahead with metric, and because the United States is our greatest trading partner especially in regard to agricultural products, let us keep our systems parallel. There will be utter confusion and loss of markets if we move to metric ahead of the U.S.A., particularly in agricultural matters.

Let us teach metric in our schools. Let us prepare for it rather than suddenly thrusting it on the people. I hope we can change the direction of the metric system by slowing it down to a stop. In that way there will be some freedom of choice in whether people use it or not.

One hon. member mentioned the case earlier today about a storekeeper in his riding for whom it was going to cost a large sum of money to change his scales. At least five of the storekeepers in the Bow Valley constituency told me during my recent mainstreeting in 42 centres that the change in their stores will bankrupt them. One said his scales alone would cost him $8,000, and another said it would cost him $2,000. He said he could not afford to pay $2,000 for scales just to weigh the few items that required weighing in his store. Let us give some thought to this thing and what it is doing to our country. We do not want to be an island when the world turns metric, but let us not penalize our people, hurt our markets, and destroy the faith of our people by pushing this on them before its time.

We hope to change the direction of legislation, not by bureaucracy or by cabinet orders, but by free debates in this House before passing any laws in respect of which the people should have some input, and before anything is thrust upon them. Some of the cardinal principles of the Progressive Conservative Party are freedom of thought, freedom of choice, and freedom of enterprise.

I believe it was Woodrow Wilson who said:

> Liberty has never come from the government. The history of liberty is the history of the limitation of governmental power, not the increase of it.

My own Prime Minister has said several times—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank hon. members. I will not abuse your kindness.

In September, 1978, British Prime Minister James Callaghan in a speech to the labour conference declared, and I plead with NDP members to listen carefully because I have heard some funny things coming from that corner this afternoon:

> We used to think that you could just spend your way out of a recession and increase employment by cutting taxes and boosting government spending. I tell you in all candour, that that option no longer exists, that in so far as it ever did exist, it only worked by injecting a big dose of inflation into the economy followed by a higher level of unemployment.

Instead of asking the government to roll back prices, which is going to throw people out of work, why do you not ask the government to roll back bureaucracy and, create jobs, as this will do some good for the country? Free enterprise can bring prosperity back to Canada, bring unemployment to a minimum, and increase our national product. We plan to unshackle free enterprise and give it a chance to work. It can work again and make this country once more one of the greatest in the world, prosperous, highly productive, with the retention of individual liberty, and that is important.

I close with a quotation from the Speech from the Throne:

> My ministers were given a mandate to change the direction of the Government of Canada—

That is exactly what we are going to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to be speaking today early in this session of the Thirty-first Parliament. If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome all our new colleagues sitting in the House of Commons for the first time and wish them well in the exercise of the heavy responsibilities they will have to discharge in the coming months.

Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as the spokesman for my party on tourist matters, I would like first of all to give the House an analysis of the tourist situation in Canada and, second, elaborate briefly on the highlights of a new approach on the tourist issue.

The tourist industry ranks high in the economy of this country. I only have to quote a few figures: $10 billion in tourist revenues which represent 5 per cent of our gross national revenue, with the result that the tourist industry holds fifth place in the economy of this country. Tourism in this country creates 900,000 jobs, 500,000 of which are permanent. The needs for facilities and services created by tourism in Canada require public and private investments of $1.5 billion.

Tourist revenues at all levels of government exceed $4 billion. Also, every dollar spent in the tourist industry has a multiplier factor of $2.40. Finally, the private sector of the tourist industry is made up of 80,000 small competitive businesses, 2,000 travel agencies, 350 carriers and 43,000 restaurants, plus 15,000 hotels. The tourist industry is becoming increasingly important from our social point of view. The Canadian society is becoming increasingly involved in the leisure age, a good part of which is spent on travelling. According to Statistics Canada, the average spending on travelling, tourist activities and recreation accounts for 10 to 15 per cent of the family budget, which is more than substantial.

The tourist industry is also very important in terms of Canadian unity. Travelling Canadians can discover the various areas of this country, discuss with their fellow citizens and get acquainted with the different ethnic and cultural groups that make up the Canadian mosaic. In spite of the figures we just quoted, in spite of the fact, as the hon. member who spoke before me suggested, that the tourist industry is probably the one which is being left the most in the hands and only in the hands of private enterprise, it does not mean that everything is well in the industry. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the tourism industry in Canada is very sick and it is high time that we find a cure. Let me simply mention that the deficit which was $727 million in 1975 went up to $1.7 billion in 1978 and that, if this trend keeps up, it is estimated that the tourism deficit will reach $10 billion by 1985. This situation is unacceptable and we must react as swiftly as possible. One of the fundamental causes of our deficit is the fact that a large number of Canadians spend their vacation abroad and that we are unable to attract to this country an influx of foreign visitors. For instance, in 1977, 31.8 million Americans came to Canada while 39.4 million Canadians travelled abroad, including 37.9 million to the United States.

Yet, the population of Canada represents only 10 per cent of that of the United States. That same year, more than two million Canadians, of which 31 per cent came from Quebec, spent more than $1 billion in Florida. The devaluation of our dollar in 1978 did nothing to change the situation. Indeed, in spite of a devaluation of 15 per cent compared with American currency and 25 to 50 per cent compared with European currencies, we have kept the same record deficit as in 1977. Moreover, the number of Canadians willing in 1978 to pay 15 to 50 per cent more to travel abroad remained exactly the same as in 1977, which certainly did not help reduce our deficit.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to note that services in the tourist industry cost 20 per cent more in Canada than in the United States. Tourism in Canada is therefore a luxury that 80 per cent of the population cannot afford. The travel price index in Canada rose from 100 in 1971 to 160 in 1976 compared with an increase of 100 to 141 for the same period in the United States. Even though our dollar was devalued by more than 15 per cent, it still cost less to travel to most places outside Canada. For instance, Mr. Speaker, the air fare of $160 from Montreal to Miami is less than the air fare of $192 plus the 8 per cent tax from Montreal to the Magdalen Islands. Yet, the distance is shorter by half. In this regard the government should consider seriously and in depth offering Canadians a greater choice of charter flights to allow lower costs and a greater number of trips within the country.

Let me now go on to another aspect of the tourist industry, namely, the role of travel agencies. We do not object either to the existence or the role of travel agencies since they have their place in tourist planning in Canada, but we would like to underline the matter of the free services offered by these agencies. Even though they claim that their services are free, it is certainly false since the 2,000 Canadian travel agents in 1977 raked in $2 billion of which only 20 per cent remained in Canada. The companies involved in tourism pay commissions of 7 to 15 per cent to travel agencies, 7 to 8 per cent on airplane tickets, 10 to 12 per cent on organized trips, 10 per cent on charter flights, 10 to 15 per cent on car rentals and 8 to 10 per cent on hotel costs.

Travellers cannot therefore save on those commissions by purchasing directly from companies. Those who drive their own cars and arrive directly at the hotel indirectly pay to hotelkeepers commissions to agents they did not use. That should be corrected. We would consider reducing those companies' rates by the amount paid as commissions to travel agencies, and force the latter to charge their commissions directly to their clients.

Quite apart from that, we regret that travel agencies do not advertise enough to convince people to travel in Canada. Go to any agency, you will find that more than 80 per cent of packages offered for sale have foreign destinations. We also feel on this side of the House that the issue of wages and salaries in the tourist industry is of the outmost importance. It is vital that a wage policy be developed as soon as possible for the tourist industry. Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal briefly with another aspect of a more geographic nature, namely, our climate. Many people argue that our Canadian climate and especially our Canadian winter is not good for tourism. We believe, Mr. Speaker, it is high time we take a more positive approach.

We are fortunate in having four seasons quite distinct, each with its charms and beauty. This is an asset of which we should take advantage of. To those who decry winter, I would say that it lends itself to a variety of inside and outside activities. We never exploited our winter season enough to promote tourism. I am sure that with well designed publicity campaigns we could attract large number of tourists from the warmer countries, to whom snow and winter are novelties. The same advertisements could also make Canadians aware of the beauties and opportunities of our Canadian winter.

Mr. Speaker, I have referred to advertising. Over the last few years, tourist publicity in every form has increased considerably. We should examine seriously the quality of that publicity. Obviously, our publicity does not really attempt to put the accent on the particular attractions of Canada. In fact, 80 to 90 per cent of the tourist publicity in Canadian mass media by airlines and travel agencies encourages Canadians to visit foreign countries and particularly the United States. It is true that it is much more profitable for a travel agency to sell a complete package to Miami than a return flight to Vancouver. We can realize the seriousness of the situation every day in our newspapers, periodicals and magazines.

The publicity budget of the Canadian Office of Tourism for 1979-80 is roughly $10 million. Of that amount, $5.9 million is for the United States, $2.6 million for the rest of the world and only $1.5 million for Canada. We complain about our deficit and the small number of Canadians who are visiting our country. It is not with only 15 per cent of our publicity budget spent in Canada that we shall convince Canadians to visit their own country. Mr. Speaker, we simply must increase the amounts spent on publicity in Canada. First we should promote tourism in our country rather than abroad.

The government expressed its concern about government spending. We suggest that it should study carefully the publicity budget of the Canadian Office of Tourism and particularly the $5.9 million spent for the United States to check if the return on those spendings justify the cost and, if not, to allocate those amounts to publicity in Canada.

To illustrate the seriousness of the whole situation, Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote some brief statistics concerning some periodicals, for instance Evasion. This publication that calls itself the only great French monthly periodical about travel, holidays and recreation in Canada has been published since November, 1975. In 27 issues which appeared since that date until October, 1978, this periodical published articles about Canada in 12 editions, about Quebec in 19 and about Florida in 25. Those figures do not need any comment and are unacceptable. Furthermore, Canada is certainly one of the countries which publish the largest number of tourist information. But that avalanche of publications with a profusion of superlatives does not allow a foreigner any more than a Canadian to prepare his travel in advance. Often it does not even encourage him to do it. Canada is very little known as our pamphlets and folders are like very short range rifles, they do not cross the Canadian borders or even the provincial borders.

Still, Canada does offer many tourist attractions capable of motivating a transatlantic trip, but they are not always publicized adequately, in that those which we praise most here are not necessarily those that are the most eagerly sought after by people outside North America. Our tourist concepts do not necessarily correspond with the tastes of the Spanish or the Germans. The European, for instance, generally attaches much greater importance to history, art and folklore. Nature pleases him more than do the great American tourist attractions. Old Montreal and Mount Royal would therefore be far more appreciated than the buildings of Place Ville-Marie.

Mr. Speaker, I am not exaggerating when I say that here, in Canada, there is no truly organized tourist industry. For years now, governments, federal and provincial, private enterprise, have been going ahead with their promotions, according to their own whims and small concerns. There is no real tourist policy in Canada. There is a free-for-all. Mr. Speaker, that situation cannot last any longer. We must plan, even now, our tourist development for the 1980s. That is a priority we must set for ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to elaborate on a few suggestions I discussed with a citizen whom I have learned to admire greatly because of his thorough knowledge of tourism. I am speaking here of a citizen who really thinks in terms of the interest of his country, namely, Mr. Jean-Marie Guay of Gatineau. I was also deeply interested in the proposal of the Minister of Tourism with regard to developing an over-all strategy for tourism in Canada. Mr. Speaker, we too feel that our tourist deficit is of prime concern. In that regard, with the co-operation of Mr. Guay, I looked into certain measures designed to reduce our deficit, and as an example we took the case of Quebec.

Statistics indicate that 52 per cent of Quebeckers do not travel. If half of these 52 per cent of Quebeckers had spent $180 travelling in 1976, that is the average spent by those Quebeckers who do travel, this average of $365, Quebec's $200 million deficit would have been replaced by a $50 million surplus. If the duration of the trips made by Quebeckers in Quebec had been extended by 10 per cent, $70 million could have been recovered from the 1976 deficit. If the number of Quebeckers travelling outside Quebec had been reduced from 24 to 20 per cent, and if these Quebeckers had spent in Quebec half of the average of $365, the deficit could have been reduced by $45 million. A 30 per cent increase in non-American foreign tourists would have brought in an additional $30 million. A 15 per cent increase in Canadian tourists from other provinces would have brought in $15 million in additional revenues. A 10 per cent increase in American tourists would bring $15 million more.

Mr. Speaker, these measures could be applied to Canada as a whole without much difficulty. Contrary to what occurs in other areas, there is probably in Canada and elsewhere in the world no organization, eitheir public or private, which is involved in serious research in tourist leisure and the implementation of its findings. Many people have some experience in the tourism industry, but as far as I know there is no real graduate in that field. First of all, Mr. Speaker, it seems important to me to consider the creation of an independent tourism research and development institute. This institute would be financed by both public funds and private funds coming from associations involved in tourist matters. Once set up, the institute would, as a first step, evaluate the Canadian tourist product as well as current and potential, customers for that product.

The Canadian tourist product is more than just natural beauties or historic sites. A full evaluation of the tourist product would also look at the whole service sector—the carriers, hotels, restaurants and tourist circuits. That step seems to me of prime importance. How could one expect, Mr. Speaker, to develop any tourist strategy if one has not beforehand made an inventory of what are the country's tourist attractions, development potential, and customers to develop it?

The institute being an independent agency, its evaluation of the product would be most objective since it would not have to yield to parochial interests. So the end result of this evaluation would take into account only those tourist attractions and services which are most worth while and eliminate a great many others which have very little interest.

There is no intention on my part to favour one region at the expense of another but one must understand that not everything is worth seeing in Canada and that we must first develop what is most profitable. The evaluation of our tourist product would enable us to establish uniform classification criteria for the services available. For instance, the traveller would know that a three-maple-leaf hotel or restaurant has the same meaning in Vancouver as it does in St. John's, Newfoundland, which would quite often spare him very unpleasant surprises and would largely contribute to the elimination of a great many exploiters who make a living out of the false representation of the services rendered.

The identification of the clientele would allow for better planning of our tourist development in accordance with the varying tastes of travellers. It is as important to provide the culture minded type of visitor with a product that will capture his interest as it is in the case of the sports fan or the travelling gourmet. The proposed institute could play a leading role in the preparation of training programs for tourist agents who, once defined, could become precious instruments for the provincial departments of education. The institute could also raise the interest of young people for tourism. Students and youngsters are the future of our country. The institute could develop certain instruments such as, for instance, tourist educational games which could be integrated as complements to the social sciences courses provided in the schools. The institute could also carry out marketing studies in the field of tourism and try to improve on the Canadian product.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that this institute should have an independent status. This must not be construed as a refusal to co-operate with the various levels of government and private enterprise engaged in the development of tourism. The institute could also make governments and the private sector involved in tourism benefit from the results of its research by recommending initiatives to be taken in the area of tourist infrastructure and the development of their tourist strategy. The creation of a tourist research and development institute would not have to compete with government and private agents already working in this area. It would be an additional tool to promote tourism in Canada.

We also consider, Mr. Speaker, that the work already being done by the various levels of government must continue. We recognize that the federal government has a major role to play in the promotion of tourism in Canada. It should be involved in the establishment of tourism development policies, in publicity and also in the area of tax incentives provided to private business in the tourism sector. We urge the government to inform us as soon as possible of its response to the Powell report recommendations concerning taxation in the tourist sector.

We must also reconsider the approach and the objectives of the federal government when negotiating federal-provincial agreements concerning the tourist industry, to avoid certain waste of public money, and, to be very clear, to avoid repeating the exercise experienced in Quebec where we have spent over $75 million sprinkling grants all across the province instead of developing one, two or three regions, instead of concentrating our efforts in these regions to attract specific customers.

We must also—and a Progressive Conservative government, I hope, should convince banks—facilitate the access of the private sector to risk capital, because the tourist industry needs large investments which are practically unobtainable because of the unreliability of this supply in public funds.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we will have to review the functions of national parks within a global tourist strategy in Canada. Allow me now to sum up our position. As I have said, our tourist industry is in bad shape and we will have to find a remedy as soon as possible. We believe that the Canadian tourist industry must be included in a large industrial strategy so that it could enjoy the same advantages that other industries already have.

We think that the development of a national tourist strategy must be made in direct consultation with all levels of government and private entreprises operating in that field. In this regard, we hope that the next federal-provincial conference of tourism ministers which will take place later this month will result in better planning and co-ordination of policies and investment.

We also believe that the creation of a tourism research and development institute is a very important move for the development of tourism in Canada. Mr. Speaker, tourism and its development are important resources for all Canadians. The time has come now to develop those resources not only for us but specially for future generations.

[English]

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): I wish to begin by adding my sincere congratulations to the many already expressed to you, Mr. Speaker and to the Deputy Speaker on your reappointments. May you continue to preside over the affairs of the House in the same efficient and non-partisan manner, and with the same degree of fairness you demonstrated in the previous Parliament.

Before going any further I would like to comment on the speech made by the hon. member on the other side. I am glad to know the party opposite is finally showing interest in tourism, which is something it neglected to do over the last 11 years. We support most of what the hon. gentleman has just said.

• (2140)

As well, I congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald). I should especially like to express my delight with the speech given by my friend and fellow islander, the hon. member for Cardigan, as his rural constituency is not unlike the one which I have been chosen to represent. I am indeed honoured to be here in the House of Commons delivering my maiden speech. I hope I can serve the constituents of Malpeque as well as they were served for 25 years by my PC predecessor and now premier of Prince Edward Island, the Hon. Angus MacLean.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gass: May I also express my gratitude to the good people of Malpeque for placing me here and assure my constituents that it is my intention to serve them to the best of my ability, whether I am here in Ottawa or at home in my riding.

It could be said that the constituency of Malpeque which I represent is the incarnation of what everyone who is not an islander believes Prince Edward Island to be. The Micmac Indians knew Prince Edward Island as Abegweit, meaning cradled on the waves, and the island has often been referred to as the million acre farm, or Canada's garden province.

We in Malpeque are blessed with fertile rolling farmland, bountiful waters, and beautiful sandy beaches. Thus agriculture, fisheries, and tourism are the three major industries that keep the majority of the people of Malpeque happy, healthy, and employed. The three industries are like a three-legged stool, each leg or industry supporting and complementing the other two.

Every year the land produces an abundance of potatoes, a quality potato which is shipped throughout the world and for which Prince Edward Island has become famous. But we do not grow only potatoes. The spud may be king, but there are other crops and produce such as grain, dairy cattle, beef cattle, and hogs, that are of significant importance to the Malpeque farmers. Prince Edward Island in known as the Kentucky of Canada because of the quality harness racing and the standardbred horses that are raised on the island. However, no matter what the product, we on Prince Edward Island are proud of what we produce, and equally proud of the hard working people who produce it.

Much of the same thing could be said of the fisheries industry in Malpeque as has been said of the agricultural industry. Malpeque is well known for its lobster and its lobster suppers, its oysters, and for its giant blue fin tuna.

Some hon. Members: M-m-m-m-m-m-m!

Mr. Gass: During the often too short fishing seasons, men and women work long and hard to bring in the products of the sea for which Prince Edward Island is famous. It was especially encouraging for me to see that the future development of our fisheries resources was considered in the Speech from the Throne. Such development is necessary if those who live off the sea are to continue to live as they have, and to further improve their lot. Canada needs its fisheries industry, and only through expansion and improvement of the industry will our country be able to maintain its position as one of the major fishing and fish exporting nations of the world.

I have already had occasion to mention how proud we are in Prince Edward Island of our products which possess such high quality. This quality has been the result of a collective effort on the part of the people, the result of good, honest, hard work. For the people who live from the land and the sea, work is not a four-letter word. They are proud of what they do and proud of the effort they put into doing it. I am sorry to say that the general attitude toward work has changed over the past half century as science and technology became more advanced. At one time work was a source of pride and joy for all men and women. It is our duty not only to stimulate the economy by providing more jobs, but we must also seek the means to create a greater desire in the populace to be employed.

Work is not a burden to be endured or avoided but should be looked on as a source of pride, a sense of accomplishment and achievement for a job well done. As a member of the PC caucus committee on tourism, one of the highlights of the Speech from the Throne for me was the fact that mention was made of the tourism industry, and I quote: "In co-operation with the provinces and industry, a national tourism strategy will be developed."

In Prince Edward Island tourism, along with agriculture and fisheries, is one of the three major industries and sources of revenue and one of the fastest growing industries on the island. As I have already had occasion to note, we in the constituency of Malpeque are blessed with beautiful, sandy beaches. Malpeque is the home of Prince Edward Island's only national park, which stretches for approximately 21 miles along the island's north shore and which is perhaps Prince Edward Island's most famous landmark and tourist haven. My riding is also recognized worldwide as the home of Anne of Green Gables, the fictitious little island girl made famous by island born authoress, Lucy Maude Montgomery. Lucy Maude, well known for her "Anne" stories, has also immortalized the beauty of and her love for the island, in her poetry. "The Island Hymn," written by Miss Montgomery, expresses her feelings as well as those of many islanders. With Your Honour's permission, I will quote it:

Fair island of the sea,
We raise our song to thee,
The bright and blest;
Loyally now we stand
As brothers, hand in hand,
And sing God save the land
We love the best.
Upon our princely isle
May kindest fortune smile
In coming years;
Peace and prosperity
In all her borders be,
From every evil free,
and weakling fears.
Prince Edward Isle, to thee
Our hearts shall faithful be,
Where'er we dwell;
Forever may we stand
As brothers, hand in hand,
And sing God save the land
We love so well.

People who "come in from away" to Prince Edward Island are not disappointed, for islanders put their heart and soul into making their province a place where visitors can relax and enjoy themselves, and learn what good, simple living is all about. During the summer months our tourism industry not only employs thousands of our students, but provides an income for many families, one which they live on year round. Thus tourism is of the utmost importance to Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, and Canada as a whole.

The fact is that tourism in Canada is an $11 billion business accounting for 5 per cent of the gross national product, and employing one person in every ten. Eighty per cent of the tourist businesses are classified as small business. For too many years this important sector of the economy was virtually overlooked by previous administrations, and this must be changed. The government must also endeavour to develop a program of awareness for the public of Canada. Canadians all across the country should be made aware of the importance of the tourist industry to the economy and to the country. If tourism is to succeed and flourish as a major industry in Canada, it is of the greatest importance that the Canadian people understand its great and valued impact on the country.

Transportation is another major concern of mine, Mr. Speaker, for in order to serve our basic industries in Prince Edward Island we need adequate transportation systems; better ferries, better roads, and improved rail and air services to and on the island. In order for our agriculture and fisheries industries to remain viable, an upgrading of the systems that transport their products to markets must take place. Such upgrading in reference to Prince Edward Island would include better roads, better port facilities, and improved ferry and rail service, and an overhaul of air service. The tourism industry also depends heavily on how efficiently the transportation system to and on Prince Edward Island is operating. We are, however, in the process of acquiring new airport facilities, a step in the right direction, I might add. What improvements that are being made to our transportation systems to and on Prince Edward Island are slow in coming, and few and far between. I hope that in the near future attention will be given to this matter of such great importance to Prince Edward Island and its industries.

As a member concerned about the plight of the farmer, the fisherman, and the small businessman of my constituency, it upsets me to see interest rates continuously increasing. Such increases are a disincentive to the expansion of small business and industry and one must sympathize with a person who is already in business and who has a loan with a floating interest rate—always up, it seems. This government will have to do everything within its power to bring interest rates down to a reasonable level.

I have spent the last few moments speaking of matters and issues which are of major concern to Malpeque and Prince Edward Island. Now I would like to continue for just a few moments addressing you on a subject which has always been and always will be of the utmost importance to me, that is, the role of the youth in Malpeque, in Prince Edward Island, and in Canada. The youth of this country are of special interest to me. I have a very deep and abiding concern for our young people. They have so much to contribute; it is a shame to see a great deal of this energy and potential going to waste. What do you tell a youngster about the kind of job he can expect to have when he leaves school, Mr. Speaker? It saddens me to see the disillusionment of our young people because they are not able to find meaningful work.

Bitterness and frustration are evident among many of our young Canadians who finish school and are unable to find jobs. We spend millions of dollars educating our youth and the only opportunity many of them get to utilize their skills is in completing UIC forms. It is time we re-arranged our priorities. We must start spending more assisting private enterprise and small business, thus creating an environment where more jobs are available.

It pleased me to see that the Speech from the Throne proposed the passing of legislation which would encourage small business and private enterprise, as well as the creation of a youth employment secretariat. It is important that the youth of Canada have faith in the political and parliamentary process of our country. It is important we continue to endeavour to provide a favourable climate in which our youth can live and work, for only then will we be able to keep our young people at home, only then will we be able to participate in the continuing development of Canada. In the past, Prince Edward Island has had problems keeping its youth at home after they finish their formal schooling. In the words of the Speech from the Throne we need to assist all individual Canadians, but especially our youth, in "building a stake in our country".

I should like to make mention of an issue which concerns the whole of the Canadian populace, in particular the youth. Because of my long involvement with young people and my deep and abiding concern for their welfare, I feel it is incumbent on governments, both federal and provincial, to establish an educational program advising Canadians on the more recent information about marijuana and other drugs and their adverse effects. I feel the lack of education is the crux of the whole drug problem, and that such an educational program, once established, will go a long way in helping our young people to understand the problems that can arise from the adverse usage of drugs.

I should like to go on for just a moment to deal with another matter which, in an indirect fashion, concerns young Canadians. If we are to expect our youth to have faith in our country's political and parliamentary process, if we are to expect our young people to have respect for those in positions such as we hold as members of Parliament, we are, first of all, going to have to show a little more respect for each other as we sit here in the House of Commons debating and making decisions on matters that concern our country.

It appalls me, Mr. Speaker, to witness the lack of respect that is present as individual members address the House. It may be difficult for some members to refrain from showing ignorance and lack of manners, but I do wish they would begin to show some politeness. Now that these sessions are being broadcast across the country for all to see, Canadians are able to view what they could only read about before—the thumping and pounding, the catcalls and the rude remarks. Is this how we endeavour to see that our youth respect the institutions we represent? As this first session of the Thirty-first Parliament continues I sincerely hope many of you will take a good, long look at yourselves and your actions here in the House, not only for the sake of the youth in the country but for your own sakes as well.

As many before me have stated, ours is a new Parliament facing an enormous challenge. Let us endeavour to live up to the expectations that Canadians have for us. And, Mr. Speaker, may we not disappoint them.

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, before coming to the subject, I should like to congratulate you on your appointment as Deputy Speaker of the House. As a neighbour in the constituency of Châteauguay, I can tell you that it is an honour for the whole area of the valley of Châteauguay.

[English]

Last week, Mr. Speaker, I alleged in a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) that the effect of recent instructions issued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Epp), specifically the removal of the commissioner of the executive committee in the Yukon, is to grant de facto provincial status to that territory without the consent either of Parliament or of the Yukon electorate, not to mention the other provinces in confederation. Surely this contention is not in any doubt.

I quote from the letter of instruction which was issued to the commissioner by the minister, which led to her resignation: the commissioner was instructed to request the territorial government leader that he constitute and appoint a body known as the cabinet to replace the executive committee. She was then told in that same letter, "You will not be a member of the cabinet or of the executive committee and will not participate on a day to day basis in the affairs of the cabinet." Then, to make the meaning absolutely clear, the commissioner was informed that she had to remove herself physically from the legislative building. If there is any doubt anywhere that the intention of the minister was to create de facto provincehood by his instruction I need only refer to the authorization contained in the minister's press release—I presume it was also included in the letter—to the effect that the chairman of the executive council could call himself premier.

When I asked the Prime Minister the question last week he replied that he was surprised that the spokesman for our party was not enthusiastic about an extension of democracy in our country. Let us just consider the question of responsible government. Does the Yukon have it now? What measure of responsible government does it have? Until this last event the commissioner had been instructed by the previous government, to accept the advice of the majority leader as to the number of members of the executive, and following the last territorial election the commissioner was also instructed to accept the advice of the majority leader on the appointment of elected members to the executive committee. In addition, this executive committee had control over matters of local importance and matters of concern to provincial governments such as health, roads, education, and the administration of justice.

These matters were all being looked after by this executive committee long before this recent initiative of the minister. Although he may have obtained some advice from his advisers, and they in turn may have received some advice from the Department of Justice, I certainly have very serious doubts as to the legality of at least part of what the minister has initiated in this instance.

The commissioner resigned. The commissioner did not resign in a tiff. She was not a bureaucrat who was insulted by these actions of the minister. If any white has a right to call herself a native Yukoner, she has. Her roots go back two or three generations in the Yukon. Without question she was and is one of the most esteemed personages in the north.

At the time of her selection last January she was the unanimous choice of all Yukoners. Suddenly in October she had to resign, and she resigned because she felt it her duty to resign, presumably in the interests of the Yukon and Yukoners.

It seems to me that the minister has placed himself in an unfortunate situation. I was happy to see him elevated to minister. I felt he was sympathetic toward native people. I felt he was open and frank and would be an excellent minister. He has been, to use the phrase of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander), bamboozled here by his colleague from Yukon, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Nielsen), who is a very astute individual and who realized perhaps—this may be one of the reasons, at least—that the Drury report will be forthcoming within the next few weeks. Certainly if any of Mr. Drury's statements so far find their way into his report, we can expect some recommendations about local government in the Northwest Territories.

The report does not address itself to the Yukon, but presumably there is some fear in some quarters that there may be some interesting stuff in that Drury report, and people of the Yukon may perhaps be interested in making use of some of that material. Those who are not interested in seeing that happen want, in effect, to pre-empt that danger. In fact by pre-empting that danger they are pre-judging the referendum the Yukon has been promised on the whole question of provincial status. They are pre-judging the electorate and, in effect, pre-empting their right to decide in one way or another.

The referendum will have to deal not just with a "yes" and a "no" question, but it appears it will not even reach that point if the minister, taking advice from his colleague in the cabinet, the Minister of Public Works, has his way. The die will have been cast, and that is what has happened in this situation. We now have de facto provincial status in the Yukon without reference to Parliament, without reference to the electorate of the Yukon, and without reference, as the Prime Minister has promised, to the premiers of the provinces.

There are a number of questions we can ask. The financial implications for Yukoners themselves are serious. The Yukon is presently receiving from the federal government about $23 million a year for operating expenses, another $15 million for capital expenses, plus the $13 million or so which is being raised by its taxpayers and which, presumably, in the next year or so will be the subject of an income tax system within the Yukon itself.

I would like to terminate by requesting the minister to reconsider his position to allow, first, a consideration of this change by a parliamentary committee and, second, to reconsider the change in the commissioner's role. It is certainly not a change which is in the interest of the people of the Yukon or of the people of Canada.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his question. I know he is sincere about his views, but I must say to him that my views are diametrically opposed to his, which have been stated by the former government, that colonial status must remain north of 60. That is a position that this government does not accept.

The point should be mentioned also that he talks about the fact of provincial status. I do not know what the fact of provincial status is because we have never had that in our Canadian experience, but I want to say to him, first, that the Yukon does not have control over land; second, it does not have control over resources; third, it does not have control over fiscal responsibility. In fact I said in the letter of instructions to the former commissioner that the budget was to be looked at by the elected people and only then submitted to her and passed on to Ottawa. So when the hon. member speaks about provincial status, whatever definition he might have, it does not square with the facts.

What the government has done through the letter of instructions to the commissioner of the Yukon has been to provide the Yukon with responsible government as far as the Yukon Act allows. The Yukon Act provides that the commissioner receive instructions from time to time from the minister with respect to the ways in which the government of the day wishes the commissioner to carry out his or her duties. In fact the former minister said very similar things, and I quote from his letter of instructions. It reads:

> In response to territorial requests for further transfers of delegation of responsibilities to the Yukon, the federal government wishes to be as forthcoming and as flexible as possible. Our aim is to achieve full, responsible government in the Yukon while ensuring that the interest and participation of the Yukon Indians are fully guaranteed.

They are almost exactly the same words as I used in my own letter, which reads:

> It is clear to me that prior to the introduction of legislative changes in the Yukon Act it will be necessary for me to ensure that measures are developed which will protect the interests of native people in the Yukon and ensure their full and effective participation in government.

On the matter of consultation, I was in the Yukon, I met with the Yukon territorial government and I met with the Council of Yukon Indians while I was there. In fact on Friday, the weekend before the letter was sent, I telephoned Mr. Harry Allen indicating the letter of instructions.

I want to tell the hon. member that meetings have been established on the consultative process, as I have indicated earlier. I will be meeting with the Council of Yukon Indians next week on Tuesday; I will be meeting with the government of the Yukon Territory on Tuesday of next week, with a view to having the first tripartite meeting of the three groups next Thursday. I want to indicate to the hon. member that full consultation is in place. What the government has done—

Mr. Watson: After the fact.

Mr. Epp: Not after the fact, before the fact. If you think a Friday comes prior to a Monday, that is your choice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: The letter of instructions was made. That is number one. Second, we have said that on constitutional development consultations will take place, and tripartite meetings as I said before, have been going forward. Third, only after that will amendments be made to the Yukon Act with regard to responsible government. Fourth, when experience of responsible government is in place and the full financial implications of provincial status, the pros and cons, have been studied, with full disclosure of those facts, only then will a referendum be held on provincial status within the first four years of the mandate of this government. That is the clear plan. It is well in place. There is only one difference between the former government and ours, and that is that we believe that the people of northern Canada should enjoy the same democratic rights as we enjoy in the south. The period of colonialism is over.

ENERGY—PURCHASE OF OIL FROM MEXICO

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with my colleague in congratulating Your Honour on your elevation to the role of Deputy Speaker. I know the very fine job Your Honour has done in the past. I am pleased that the House is in such good hands.

On Tuesday I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) a question about a Mexican oil trade deal that we were in the process of negotiating before we slipped from power.

Mr. Kempling: You mean fell.

Mr. McRae: Only slipped slightly. In January our minister met with his counterpart in Mexico, along with officials from Petro-Canada and Pemex, and eventually met with the President of Mexico, Senor Lopez Portillo. They agreed to a long term, ten-year oil deal involving something in the order of $5 billion to $6 billion worth of Mexican oil for Canadian goods and services in roughly the same amount. This deal was then put on paper and initialed by our minister and the Mexican ambassador on May 4 or 5, with the expectation that the President of Mexico would come to Canada in September and that there would be a proper signing of this document. After that there would be some negotiations between Petro-Canada and Pemex to bring the deal into fruition. It was hoped that by this winter we would have 10,000 barrels of oil a day coming to the east coast from Mexico.

I asked the Prime Minister why the visit of the President of Mexico had been postponed, whether indeed it had been postponed, or whether indeed the deal actually had fallen through. The Prime Minister assured me that the trip had to be postponed, but he said nothing about whether the deal had or had nor fallen through. He indicated that the Mexican president would visit Canada in May of 1980. There is no question that there has been a postponement, otherwise some kind of an arrangement could have been made for an earlier signature. I am not sure a signature is possible come next spring.

I should like to question what probably has gone wrong. I think there has been a lack of understanding on the part of this government of the history of Mexico, how Mexicans feel about oil, who produces and sells their oil and to whom they sell. We must not forget that the Mexicans went through a revolution in early 1920s to shake off American oil interests. It was made plain to all and sundry that the Mexicans did not want to deal with the multinationals, the Seven Sisters. They wanted to deal state to state. I think there is also a parallel with Venezuela where the Venezuelans decided not to go through with the deal involving 100,000 barrels per day to Petro-Canada through their oil company PetroVen, because during the election there were expectations that the right hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) might become Prime Minister and that his government would break up PetroCan and the deal would not go through. I think most of these countries are very wary of dealing with a government which does not put any faith in a national oil company.

There is another problem which I think may have occurred, and that is the problem of dealing with the government of Japan and the Japanese petroleum exploration company that also made some overtures to Mexico. It looks to me like they have outsmarted us. I cannot prove at this particular point that we have lost $5 billion or $6 billion worth of business, but I am certain there has been a postponement. There may be a shortfall this winter and we will need additional amounts.

I am very concerned that this government does not believe it wise to keep the national oil company in there in order that it may make this kind of deal. I am concerned that the government does not feel the national oil company should be made stronger and stronger for this purpose. I am afraid that the Mexicans and Venezuelans will look very askance at the kind of establishment we are going to set up after we give away the assets. I think they will have some doubts about this agency that is to be created with a lot of debts and not too much expertise, the best parts having gone. If this happens, I believe we will actually lose this deal which could mean 100,000 man-years of work for Canadians if the trade aspects are followed through.

Mr. Bob Jarvis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question put and the statements made by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), may I first point out that I had always understood, certainly when I went to school, that the revolution in Mexico in the 1920s, which included some of the activities of Pancho Villa, was a fight over the question of poverty and the oppression of the people by a dictatorship. I did not realize that they were fighting oil companies at that time. If my friend's speculations are as sound as his history, then there is very little to be said in respect of his speculations.

I would, however, respectfully point out to the hon. member that an Energy Co-operation Agreement was initialled by the Canadian and Mexican governments on May 4, 1979. Article II of the agreement looks forward to a minimum delivery of 10,000 barrels a day of crude oil commencing in 1979 or 1980. Those were the terms of that original memorandum of agreement. Deliveries of larger volumes will follow over the ensuing 12 months.

A separate Industrial Co-operation Agreement was initialled at the same time, and there is no barter connection between the supply of Mexican oil as referred to in the Energy Co-operation Agreement or in the memorandun or the Industrial Co-operation Agreement which was signed at the same time.

At the same time as the Energy Co-operation Agreement was being negotiated, discussions were taking place with Mexican officials about the details of future supply of oil to Canada. A commitment was received from Pemex, the Mexican national oil company, for deliveries of small quantities to begin in the second half of 1980 to the extent that production will permit once their existing commitments are met. That does not include any commitment to the Japanese, so there is no foundation to the speculation the hon. member posed in that regard. Deliveries to Canada are to be increased beyond that level in accordance with the availability of their supplies.

Contacts have been maintained with the Mexican government and with Pemex since the agreement was initialled. A Canadian delegation headed by the assistant deputy minister for energy visited Mexico City in September. It discussed Mexican production forecasts for 1980, which will determine the date when supplies will commence. A second visit is to be made in December at the Mexicans' suggestion, when further information as to future deliveries will be made available. That hardly suggests that the deal is at an end or is not going forward, particularly when at the Mexican suggestion we are attending that meeting to fix the times when deliveries commence. I trust that satisfies the questions and statements put by the hon. member.

ENERGY—SUPPLY OF GASOLINE AND HEATING OIL THIS WINTER

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I raised with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) the problem of the supply of fuel, oil and gasoline being down in Ontario. Indeed, we have learned that the reserves of home heating oil are down over 18 per cent from the same period last year, and gasoline supply by some 20 per cent. If members will recall, last year in Ontario the supply situation was very tight. Indeed, we have learned that British Petroleum has been closing its gas stations on Sundays and that Shell has been reducing the hours of operation of its gas stations as well, all of which, of course, indicates that there is a serious supply problem facing us in the months ahead.

What is more worrisome is that the oil companies in many cases have not bid on traditional fuel oil contracts for large users such as school boards. Indeed, in the area from which I come, and in nearby Algoma, a number of school boards have not been receiving the traditional bids from the oil companies to supply them with fuel, nor have they been offering the traditional discounts to large users. When I raised this matter in the House on Monday, I pointed out to the minister that we have a very fragile situation. In fact, those were the words he used. I wanted from him some kind of assurance that we would be able to make it through the winter without any problems.

I am still not satisfied that we will be able to do so. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Lawrence) has admitted that he is powerless to do anything with the oil companies which are refusing to make their normal bids. I think that that is a sad statement, considering the power which the federal government has at its disposal. It really puts us again at the mercy of the private oil companies, the majority of which are foreign-controlled, at a time when we are about to, if we believe this government, disband Petro-Canada.

It seems to me that the situation will only get worse. The other thing that I pointed out to the minister is that the department of consumer affairs for the past six years has been investigating these oil companies on suspicion that they have been manipulating supply and price. I understand that the department will soon bring forward a report and that there is a likelihood that criminal charges will be laid. All of this makes me very suspicious about why we are facing shortages this winter, or potential shortages.

The oil companies tell us that there have been refinery breakdowns and this accounts for the lower supplies. We also know that gasoline demand was up over the summer and that many of the refineries were not producing home heating oil but converting to gasoline production instead. But the mere fact that we have this ongoing investigation into the supply practices in the oil companies makes me wonder if those are the real reasons, and to that end I asked the minister in the House whether or not he would make public the reports of the National Energy Board as to the supply situation because we, as members of Parliament, and the public generally, do not have access to these reports.

I think it is important that we be able to determine to our own satisfaction what the reasons for this downturn in supplies are. The minister, I think, misunderstood me when I asked that question because he thought I was referring to the investigation by the combines branch of the consumer affairs department. What I wanted to know was whether or not he would make those National Energy Board fuel reports public.

The other point was that the minister, by agreeing that the supply situation was very fragile, made me worry in the sense that all he was saying was that they were monitoring the situation and he was hopeful that we would make it through the winter without any problem. I categorize that statement as a rather bland assurance to the consumers in Ontario. What I wanted to know from the minister was what kind of contingency plans the government has in place in the sad event that we do come up with shortages over the cold months.

Members know that in the spring, before the election, we passed the Energy Supplies Emergency Act which the Conservatives opposed, unfortunately. It gives the federal government some rather sweeping powers to allocate supply to regions that experience shortages and, if it needs to, to implement rationing.

From statements made by the minister in this House and the fact that members of the energy supply allocation board have not yet been appointed, I do not think the government has any contingency plans in place to enable it to react quickly to a shortage if it occurs. The second question I would like answered tonight is this: does the government have any plans in place to meet a fuel oil shortage so that consumers, especially in the more remote parts of the province, will not experience shortages and cold homes over the winter months?

Mr. Bob Jarvis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question put by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), may I say that all of us on the government side join with him in expressing concern over a growing world problem, namely, the limited supply of a non-renewable resource which the world as a whole is using beyond its capacity, and beyond reasonable expectations for that resource to last.

One of the prime objectives of this government will be to urge and to lead all Canadians to conserve this limited resource, and to use the resource in a more meaningful and proper manner.

With respect to the questions put, I would advise the hon. member that the government has undertaken several measures to ensure adequate supplies of gasoline and heating oil for this winter. First, they include curtailing crude oil exports to keep pipeline-fed Canadian refineries fully supplied—and I am sure that the hon. member is aware of the dramatic cutbacks in the export of crude oil; second, facilitating the exchange of western Canadian oil for additional eastern seaboard imports, which will increase supply in an area dependent upon oil for much of its energy.

The oil industry is programming a very high rate of delivery of refinery raw material from domestic and overseas sources in the fourth quarter and a commensurately large product market. If these programs can be achieved, then inventories of middle distillates for diesel and heating oil should be close to desirable levels by the year end.

A national outlook for the first quarter of 1980 is that programmed supply should be adequate to meet forecasted product demands, given normal weather conditions, with an acceptable closing inventory level.

Quebec and Ontario seem to be the principal regional trouble spots. The brunt of the oil product supply stringency has been felt in central Canada at the reseller level. Companies affected include medium-sized resellers, who sell both at retail and wholesale levels, and retail sellers of gasoline and heating oils.

Officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the National Energy Board are keeping in close touch with these resellers, seeking by all possible means to create the conditions for them to get product supply. As well, officials are in frequent contact with refiners having crude oil or products supply difficulties. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has formally urged refiners to treat the resellers fairly. Officials are keeping in close touch with industry and the provinces. The current reading on the situation is "tight but manageable". We have to learn to be a conserving society.

I trust that answers the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to be adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to put forward a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of statements made on Monday by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Lawrence) to the effect that the Combines Investigation Act administered by him has, in his opinion, rather large gaps and in some cases is ineffective, and in view of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Clark) apparent agreement, as witnessed by his response on Tuesday to questions by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), that the government's private sector orientation depends heavily for its success on effective competition in the marketplace, I would move, seconded by the hon. member from Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston):

That the House instruct the government to introduce on a priority basis the stage II amendments to the Combines Investigation Act as recommended by the director of investigation and research of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY BE REINSTATED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the minister's public pronouncements concerning the paramount importance of the inshore fishery, and considering the fact that since June no inshore vessels in Atlantic Canada or Quebec have been replaced, and because inshore fishermen desperately need these vessels if they are to reap the benefits of the 200-mile limit, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy):

That this House call upon the government to immediately replenish the fishing vessel subsidy program by approving the funds necessary to bring it up to the amount allocated in the fiscal year 1978-79.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

REPLACEMENT FOR JET PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

My motion concerns the JET program, a Canada Employment and Immigration Commission program designed to assist the integration of young people between the ages of 15 and 24 into the work force. The JET program, initiated by the Liberal government in March, 1978, will soon be terminated. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail):

That the government advise the House what it proposes to do to replace the JET program.

Mr. Speaker: The motion, if it is to be presented at this time, will require unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS CONVERTING HEATING APPLIANCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I rise to put forward a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity—urgent because of the impending introduction of the budget.

S.O. 43

I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker):

That the legislation or budgetary measures to be proposed in this House to encourage the conversion of home heating appliances from oil to gas should extend at least the same financial assistance to home owners in the province of Quebec who wish to convert the heating systems in their homes from furnaces burning imported oil to Canadian-made heating units using domestically produced electricity.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of this motion for debate would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TELEVISION

CALL FOR EMERGENCY DEBATE ON CANADIAN CONTENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to put forward a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The president of the CBC, in his annual report released while Parliament was not in session this summer, stated that English-speaking adult TV viewers are spending nearly 75 per cent of their viewing time watching foreign programs, and that their children are spending 83 per cent of their viewing time doing the same; that French-speaking adult Canadian TV viewers are spending 48 per cent of their viewing time watching foreign programs, and their children 56 per cent—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a motion, would he proceed to it.

Mr. Waddell: I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House immediately begin an emergency debate with respect to the Canadian content available on our television channels.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to debate such a motion at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HARBOURS

WHARFAGE CHARGES ON GRAIN AND GRAIN PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

[Mr. Herbert.]

An increase in wharfage charges announced by the National Harbours Board for east coast ports has more than doubled the tariff for grain and grain products in the port of Halifax-Dartmouth. This will damage the competitive position of the port and hurt producers and shippers. Accordingly, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House request the Minister of Transport to direct a review by the National Harbours Board of the increase in the wharfage charge affecting grain and grain products so that the adverse effect will be minimized.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the hon. member for Halifax West. Is there unanimous consent for such a motion to be put to the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

AIR TRANSPORT

CALL FOR GOVERNMENT TO CANCEL MAINTENANCE EMPLOYEE CUTBACKS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Due to the decision of the federal Treasury Board to cut back on casual employees at Canadian airports and additional operational cuts ordered recently in Atlantic Canada, forcing airports to restrict runway use during snow and adverse weather conditions this fall and causing vocal concern by some airport managers that the safety of the travelling public may be affected; due to the fact that for the past month, in eliminating a function of air radio operators because of a contract dispute, Transport Canada has ordered runway and approach lighting at some airports in Atlantic Canada to remain at the same intensity regardless of weather conditions, causing pilots to complain of blinding lights during clear weather conditions; and due to the fact that certain of these airports generate revenue through air radio unaccounted for in actual landings, as witnessed by the $3.6 million presently owed the federal government for air radio services supplied in Atlantic Canada to three U.S. airlines, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin):

That the government cancel its ordered maintenance cutback and term employee cuts at airports in Atlantic Canada and give air radio operators more recognition in order to protect the safety of the travelling public.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST ADMINISTRATION BE TRANSFERRED TO DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering that the legislation protecting authors is already over half a century old, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming):

That jurisdiction over copyright be immediately transferred from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to the Department of the Secretary of State which is certainly better qualified to undertake as soon as possible a most important review aimed at protecting Canadian culture, that is, of the Copyright Act.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY BE REINSTATED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the announced intention of the government to strengthen Canadian shipbuilding and to encourage individual enterprise; in light of the fact that actions taken by this government have frozen the 35 per cent subsidy which has for many years been available to fishermen purchasing new vessels; in light of the fact that in my home province of Manitoba, which last year received $280,000 and this year has received only $20,000, the Deparment of Fisheries and Oceans has on file the applications of 90 fishermen seeking well over $130,000 in subsidies; and in light of the fact that this freeze has meant fishermen have been unable to upgrade their boats and, in Manitoba, boat works have been forced to lay off workers and are likely to lose hundreds of thousands of dollars this year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House instruct the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to lift the freeze immediately on the subsidy program and process those applications which are presently on file.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for consideration by the House at this time would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

NORTHERN PIPELINES

FOOTHILLS' PROJECT—CONTENT OF CANADA-U.S. DISCUSSIONS

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I want to return to the issue of the Foothills oil pipeline, which I am sure is an issue the Prime Minister does not particularly wish to pursue. I would like to inform him that we are going to push this issue as hard as we can so that the Americans can at least know where the House of Commons stands with regard to this overland pipeline.

My question to the Prime Minister is this—one I have been asking all week long—

• (1115)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The Prime Minister has said that his ministers were meeting with U.S. representatives, pushing the Foothills' proposal. Yesterday, he reeled off a list of meetings between officials, but not one Canadian minister was mentioned.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Where were these meetings held? Were they specifically directed to the pipeline issue? What was said? Were there any ministers at the meetings to state officially Canada's position on the overland route and, if so, which minister?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the practice was in the former government. In this government, the officials, including the ambassador of Canada to the United States, speak on instructions from the ministers. The ministers gave instructions to the officials and the officials carried those instructions forward and made clear, in a way that was absolutely clear to the United States, the support of the Government of Canada for the Foothills' route and the overriding concern of the Government of Canada for the effect of oil spills caused by tanker off the west coast of Canada.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I take it from that answer that no ministers were present. Perhaps the Prime Minister would be well advised to check the statements his Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce made in the Senate on Wednesday.

My next question is also directed to the Prime Minister. As he is aware, my colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, placed on the record yesterday a statement from the U.S. Department of the Interior that Canada, through its new government, had been asked to indicate its preferences, and no official word had been received by the United States as of late August. That U.S. statement was contained in a report dated July 7, 1979, and made public the following month.

Would the Prime Minister tell the House when his ministers made the position of the new government clear during the summer? Evidently, it was neither clear nor official, because the Department of the Interior—the lead co-ordinator of the pipeline project in the U.S.—did not know anything about it.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I do not have Hansard here with me yet. My recollection of the statement partially quoted by the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso yesterday was that it was a partial statement, and that he did not include in his quotation the very important element that the United States request had been for a statement of the Canadian position before September 28. That was the request to which we responded by sending an aide memoire dated September 28.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be most useful to the House and to the country to know exactly what the government finally said to the Americans when they did make that final deadline for submissions in the aide memoire of September 28 to which the Prime Minister just referred.

Did the government firmly state its preference for the Foothills' overland route and, if so—I see the Prime Minister is getting it ready; I hope the aide memoire is a further indication of the openness of this government—did the Prime Minister clearly state, in terms as strong as those used by the former government in their aide memoire, the preference of this government for the Foothills' project; and would he table the aide memoire so that we can see if this position was as firmly stated as the former government's last April?

Mr. Clark: I can say with a great deal of satisfaction and relief that it was nowhere as difficult making the government of the United States and the Foothills' people aware of our position as it appears to be to make a simple message clear to the hon. member opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We did not have to repeat the statement to the Americans five times in a week. The aide memoire to which the former minister refers was made public. I do not have a copy with me. I am sure if the hon. member checks with his research facilities they will be able to find a copy of that aide memoire. In any event, I will give an undertaking now that as soon as I have a copy of it brought back to me—I just did not bring it with me to the House—naturally, I will lay it upon the Table of the House.

• (1120)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Make your position clear to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West, on a supplementary.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance announced that the government is increasing the interest rates on Canada Savings Bonds.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

An hon. Member: That is not a supplementary.

FINANCE

REQUEST GOVERNMENT REVERSE POLICY OF INTEREST RATE INCREASES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of his statement in his press conference this morning, that if the governor of the Bank of Canada recommends another increase in interest rates the government will probably go along with it, in view of the fact that already the 9.6 per cent increase in the cost of living is outrunning the wage index, which is up by only 7.5 per cent, and in view of the fact in that situation another interest rate increase would add to inflation and make things still worse for those who are trying to live on their inadequate wages, may I ask the Prime Minister what this House can do to persuade the government to reverse this idiotic policy of interest rate increases when, in fact, they ought to be reduced?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what this House can do, if it has a practical alternative which is preferable to the policies being recommended by the governor of the Bank of Canada and by this government, is make those policies known to the standing committee to which we have agreed there should be a reference of the question of interest rates, with the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada present as witnesses.

Mr. Chrétien: He is not available; he is afraid.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, of course, that response leads me to remind the Prime Minister of suggestions which have been made by this party, particularly by my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa.

May I put the question this way: In view of the Prime Minister's statement yesterday in the House that the government regards inflation as enemy No. 1, yet has said "no" to subsidies on essential foods, has said "no" to a fair prices commission with the power to roll back unjustified increases, and has proposed only cutbacks in government spending which would have the effect of increasing unemployment and making things worse, when will the Prime Minister take this enemy No. 1 seriously and do something about the rising cost of living?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we take this enemy No. 1 seriously whenever we indicate determination to move on programs which will reduce the burden of the cost of government on the Canadian economy which will re-establish some sense of confidence that there is now in Canada a government prepared to face hard decisions today, rather than roll with easy decisions.

I know the hon. member does not particularly agree with that approach, because his colleagues and members of the official opposition condemn practically every measure we take designed to bring government costs into line and have that effect upon controlling inflation.

Mr. Breau: That is not true.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary relates to the fact that not only are workers and their families having trouble keeping up with the cost of living, but so are our pensioners.

My question is this: In view of the fact the present system of indexing old age security and other pension benefits is on a system which is always five months to eight months behind and does not relate, in terms of the index, to the things that pensioners actually have to buy, will the government review the formula for indexing, and will it consider establishing a special cost of living index for pensioners, so that they will not continually go behind as they are now?

● (1125)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we have already indicated our intention, in the Speech from the Throne with references to the review of retirement income provisions in the country, to undertake precisely the kind of review to which the hon. member is referring, and a broader review.

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE OF CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—COST TO TAXPAYERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question, again, to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance announced that the government is increasing the interest rate on Canada Savings Bonds to encourage their sales in the face of generally increasing interest rates, increases which are apparently supported by this government.

Can he tell us how much money this increase in Canada Savings Bonds rates will cost the Canadian taxpayer who has to pay the additional cost to the government of money it borrows because of this interest rate policy?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if I may reply to the hon. member's question, I can give him a specific figure on Monday detailing the anticipated cost of the interest rate increase as it applies to CSBs. I would point out to the hon. member that recipients of that interest are, of course, Canadians.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could he also tell us, when he gives us his answer on Monday, how much the increase in the interest rates since this government took office will be adding to the deficit of the government and to government spending generally, both of which the government has said it will be reducing?

In view of the fact that these interest rate increases will obviously increase the deficit and government spending, can he tell us how this is consistent with what the Prime Minister said yesterday and today, that he was making inflation enemy No. 1 and would fight inflation by reducing government expenditures, an obvious discrepancy and contradiction?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if I may again reply to the hon. member's question, I am sure that he is at last realizing the dreadful legacy the former government left this nation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: —and which is now having to be transformed into the form of an ongoing debt, with the consequential effect on interest rates to which the hon. member referred.

Oral Questions

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

PROPOSED PRIVATIZATION—REQUEST PLANS BE SHELVED

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. With mortage interest rates in this country now at the level of 14 per cent and, as the first minister is aware, with the housing market in this country now in a serious crisis, with starts down 13 per cent, new purchases in a decline, and 30,000 unemployed in the construction industry—with these kinds of figures, is the first minister prepared to develop immediate plans to come to the aid of the housing market in Canada and, in particular, is he prepared to shelve any plans to privatize the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation so that the corporation can get down to the business of solving the housing crisis, rather than worrying about its existence in the next three or four weeks?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the hon. member that it is precisely for that reason that we intend to move as quickly as we can with our tax credit proposal.

I would hope the hon. member will use what influence he has in his party to encourage some of the traditional members of the party who might be inclined to obstruct debate on some of the budget bills we have to get through and, consequently, delay the ability of Parliament to deal with the tax credit proposal, not to engage in obstruction but, instead, to help us clean up as quickly as possible the bills overhanging from the former session so we can get on with this aid to the housing industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the first minister if he will be prepared to use his influence to influence some of the more traditional members of his party to desist from putting forward outdated ideas about privatizing national corporations that serve the public interest.

In addition, would he also examine his own mortgage credit program and recognize that it will do nothing to stimulate the housing market, that it will only serve 30 per cent of Canadians and, in fact, will not provide any form of assistance to bring new people into the market?

● (1130)

Will the Prime Minister give assurances that this government will shelve plans to privatize CMHC, and will he also undertake immediate plans to reduce mortgage interest rates and help people who really need to buy houses?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I really should not enter into this matter which is internal to the Liberal party, but I cannot miss the opportunity to wish the hon. member as much luck in influencing the members of his party as I have had in influencing the members of mine.

[Mr. Stevens.]

BANK OF CANADA

POSSIBLE CANDIDATE FOR POST OF GOVERNOR

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In keeping with his opinions on open government, would the Prime Minister advise the House whether or not it is true that the former member for Don Valley, who is now a prime ministerial adviser, is being considered as a candidate for the post of governor of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Chrétien: Patronage.

Mr. Johnston: In view of Mr. Gillies' place in this developing economic policy, and in view of the interesting theories which he himself expressed in hearings before the finance committee last year, would the Prime Minister agree that he should also appear as a witness before the standing committee on finance to examine the interest rate policy of the government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no consideration is being given to the appointment of Dr. Gillies to that position. Indeed, the government has come to no decision as to what list of candidates it may consider for the appointment to the office of the governor of the Bank of Canada at the expiry of the—

Mr. Foster: Has the governor of the Bank of Canada resigned?

Mr. Clark: You might like to listen to the rest of the answer—at the expiry early next year of the term of the current governor or, indeed, whether it would be of mutual interest to have the current governor continue in his responsibilities.

With regard to the second part of the question, this government does intend to reverse the practice of the former government, that of hiding away former officials of the Privy Council Office and the Prime Minister's Office. As the hon. member will know, it was the practice of the former government to refuse Parliament access to the deputy minister responsible to the Privy Council Office or the deputy minister responsible to the Prime Minister's Office.

Dr. Gillies is not of deputy minister status, and we would have to see whether or not his appearance at a committee would create a precedent. I shall take a look at that situation. My expectation is that it will probably not be possible or valuable for Dr. Gillies to appear before that committee, although I share the hon. member's respect for his views.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In the hearings last year on monetary policy and, specifically, on interest rates, the Minister of Finance—who is not here today—admitted that he was not an expert in the area and, in fact, described himself as a layman. That was not the case with Dr. Gillies. He expressed some professional views as an economist and also as a member of the opposition at that time.

In view of the very special role that he plays today, it seems to me important that he appear, and my question is, would the Prime Minister encourage him to appear if he is invited by the committee?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member is now asking a rather different question. First, he was asking that Dr. Gillies appear in his status as principal adviser in my office. The hon. member is now asking that Dr. Gillies appear at the committee in his capacity as a professional economist. The decision as to whether or not to invite Dr. Gillies is, of course, academic until an invitation comes from the standing committee.

Mr. Kaplan: You control the committee.

Mr. Clark: If such a question does come, we will consider the implications of the request to the system of government that we have, where deputy ministers and ministers report. We will also consider whether or not Dr. Gillies, in light of his position, has the latitude he formerly enjoyed to give testimony as a professional economist.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): In other words, no.

PUBLIC WORKS

STATUS OF GUY FAVREAU COMPLEX

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. I congratulate the minister on his appointment and wish him well in his new responsibilities.

[Translation]

My question is as follows: Now that the government has failed in its attempt to have General Motors set up shop in Montreal, has the minister received representations from the Minister of Supply and Services to have work resume immediately at Place Guy Favreau? If not, will he give orders for the immediate resumption of work on that important project strongly endorsed by the people of Montreal, the authorities of Montreal, the Montreal Board of Trade and all unemployed construction workers in the Montreal area?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his kind wishes. In response to his question, I can say that a study is under way now with respect to the market and economic feasibility of the Favreau complex in Montreal which has been promised, on and off, since 1972 by the hon. member and his colleagues on that side, in the absence of any economic feasibility study in place before proceeding with the project. I expect to receive the results of that study, which is now under way, by the end of November. At that time the matter will be considered and a decision made as to whether to proceed.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Is the study referred to the one which has been ordered from Conservative engineer Dupras, the first recipient of his colleague's patronizing handouts?

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF SUBSIDY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Small Business and Industry.

In view of the importance of maintaining a strong domestic capability in the construction and the repairing of ships in Canada to maintain some 45,000 jobs connected with the shipbuilding industry, and in view of the fact that the present construction subsidy of 20 per cent has proven to be an effective means of reducing Canadian prices to a level competitive with those of overseas builders—a subsidy which is slated to be removed on December 31, 1979—I would like to ask the minister if he would take the appropriate steps to continue the 20 per cent subsidy and, as well, I would ask him if the government would address itself to the many other recommendations of the consultative task force on the Canadian shipbuilding and repair industry approved by the government last February.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): Mr. Speaker, the economic development envelope is down and all of the resources that are available to our department for programs such as the shipping subsidy are under review and study. We have extended the shipbuilding subsidy for three applications that were made available in the province of Nova Scotia.

The program expires in its present state on December 31, 1979, and the subsidy would revert back to the 9 per cent level. The matter is under complete review within the department and will be proceeding to cabinet as a cabinet document. When cabinet has made a decision on the allocation of that type of resource, I will be able to answer more directly.

Mr. Breau: Which cabinet?

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

POSSIBLE PROSECUTIONS—REQUEST DOCUMENTS BE TABLED—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, if we may have some order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Prime Minister indicated that if someone other than members on the opposite side of this House felt that the unprecedented ministerial consultations were not appropriate, he would agree to a full investigation of what has been called the trucking affair.

Yesterday, a very distinguished former justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Wishart Spence, said:

> I would say that any consultation would have to be on the legal propriety of prosecution and not on any other element. It might be, for instance, that some other member of the cabinet might be very experienced in a particular branch of law involved, in which case he might consult him.

Given that the Minister of Transport is not a lawyer, and given that the minister stated outside this House on Wednesday—

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that he has already transgressed the ordinary bounds of a preamble. I think he had better put his question.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): In view of the statement of Mr. Justice Spence and the statements of the Minister of Transport, will the right hon. Prime Minister now agree, in his spirit of open government, to, first, table the documents which were used to brief the Minister of Transport for the Friday meeting and, second, will the right hon. Prime Minister agree to refer this entire matter to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for comprehensive inquiry and report back to this House; and, if not, why not?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I admire the hon. member's perseverance. When this matter was raised in the House first of all by the hon. member, minutes after the meeting ended, and subsequently in response to questions by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, I undertook to look at the law and the precedents regarding the propriety of that meeting.

I have reported to the House of Commons the very firm advice of the law officers of the Crown that there was nothing illegal, nothing inconsistent with either law or with precedent in the practice of the Attorney General of Canada seeking the advice.

Mr. Breau: What about morality?

Mr. Clark: The hon. member has shown a new interest, for his party, in morality and propriety. There was no problem of propriety, no problem of morality, no problem of precedent and no problem of law having to do with the behaviour of the Attorney General of Canada in convening that meeting with his colleagues.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

CONSTRUCTION OF DATA TAXATION CENTRE—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS REGARDING PROJECT

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Contrary to all expectations and in spite of a $3.5 million vote which appears in the estimates of the Department of Public Works for the year 1979-80 to carry on construction work at the Jonquière data taxation centre, the President of the Treasury Board announced on July 27 a delay of indefinite duration, even if that project might create over 1,000 full or part-time jobs in a region where the rate of unemployment is one of the highest in Canada.

Could the minister indicate to my constituents, to whom this project is of paramount importance, whether he will react within the next few days to the strong representations which were made to him, first in Ottawa on or about September 18, 1979 when a petition with 22,000 signatures was presented to him; then in Ottawa on the same date when an important memorandum from the municipality of Jonquière was submitted to him; and then when a personal memorandum was presented to him on August 9, 1979; and, finally, when he had here in Ottawa a personal meeting with the representatives of the city of Jonquière on October 3 last?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Jonquière for giving me notice of his question. I wish to assure him that the decentralization counter-moves that we made were not made lightly; they were made only after a very thorough examination of the premises taken by the former government with respect to each move.

In the case of the proposed data taxation centre in the city of Jonquière, I wish to confirm that Mayor Dufort did visit my office with three of his officials. I found it a very worth while meeting, and as a result of it I have undertaken to have a representative from my office go to Jonquière and see first-hand what are the ongoing implications for the federal government and the local municipal government with respect to this situation, bearing in mind that this project was postponed, not cancelled.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL ABSORB COST OF RAIL SERVICE IN MONTREAL SUBURBS

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport and in the permanent absence of the senator who is negotiating, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. I should like to ask whether he intends to fulfil the formal undertaking made by the previous government to fully finance the capital costs required for the establishment of a commuter train service in the Montreal area and if so, what is the state of the negotiations with the government of Quebec?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter I will have to discuss with the Minister of Transport because I do not have the details here today.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, considering the rumors about negotiations, can the right hon. Prime Minister ask his Minister of Transport to instruct the CNR to freeze or postpone any rate increase until negotiations with Quebec are completed.

Mr. Clark: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can discuss it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. It is mooted in the public service that there are 2,000 appointments to be screened, reviewed and assigned by the office of human resources in his office.

In view of the fact that yesterday he spoke in the House on the fiftieth anniversary of Canadians women being recognized as persons, and at that time referred to the economic inequality of women, I wonder if he will state at this time how many of the 2,000 appointments will be assigned to women.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as many as possible. I should say, and frankly admit to the House, as I have indicated to my colleagues, that in the past both under the former government and our own, not enough were.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): A supplementary question. Recognizing that in the past only about 13 per cent of the total number of these appointments had been held by women, would the Prime Minister assure us that there will in the future be a higher proportion of such appointments?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that is very much my goal. That was, naturally, along with the considerations of obvious competence, one of the factors which guided us, not simply in looking at the number of women employed in the public service but also looking at the prominence of women employed in the public service.

I was very pleased at the appointment of the Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare, an outstanding public servant, and the agreement of Mrs. Jean Wadds to accept the appointment as High Commissioner to Great Britain.

THE ENVIRONMENT

OIL TANKER TRAFFIC ON WEST COAST—ACTION TO PREVENT HARMFUL EFFECTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that the previous administration and the present government have lain idly by while oil tanker traffic off the British Columbia coast has risen to the highest, most dangerous levels in Canadian history, and in light of the fact that yesterday the National Energy Board ruled it cannot consider the implications of the proposed increase in marine transport of Alaskan crude oil, can the minister indicate to the House what specific action his government intends to take to deal with the serious and dangerous oil tanker traffic on the British Columbia coast?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): The specific question that the hon. member is putting relates to the fact that the National Energy Board has stated it did hot have jurisdiction to consider the environmental implications of that part of a pipeline outside Canada.

I can tell this House through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of Canada would not give approval to any pipeline which was subject to Canadian regulatory processes, and which had environmental implications against the public good of Canada, unless adequate environmental studies were undertaken.

REQUEST FOR TASK FORCE STUDY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hatchet job done to the Thompson oil port inquiry by the previous administration, and while the United States Congress it attempting to dictate oil transport policy in this country, and knowing that the National Energy Board cannot present the required political or diplomatic positions either to this House or to the United States government, will the Prime Minister assure this House today that he will set up a task force to advise the House, before President Carter visits Canada next month, of the implications of tanker traffic on the marine environment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, as I understand his question, is asking me to up a task force today that would report to this House of Commons, before the visit of the United States President, on all the marine environmental implications of tanker traffic down the west coast. I doubt, frankly, that the job could be done that quickly.

What the Minister of the Environment has undertaken to do is to make it clear that even though the National Energy Board does not believe it has jurisdiction in this field, this government has now, through the Minister of the Environment, given a very clear and unequivocal undertaking that there will be adequate environmental impact assessments in relation to any implications of any activity down the west coast of Canada in regard to which there is a regulatory role and authority, and an approval role and authority, of the Government of Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REVIEW OF PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT AND THE MERIT PRINCIPLE—APPLICATION OF PRINCIPLES IN REPORT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. The D'Avignon report on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle has outlined clear principles by which employees may be discharged. However, the commissioner of penitentiaries has used an additional principle which he calls the "reverse merit" principle, which really means the better you are, the sooner you get fired—which ought to make the regional administrators of penitentiaries feel pretty secure.

Can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House how this principle can be applied and still preserve a high-quality public service?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, to answer the hon. member's question, I believe he is referring to a work force reduction policy which was developed by the former government in 1969 and 1970 in consultation with certain bargaining agents. The policy was reviewed in 1978 by the previous government, again in consultation with those bargaining agents. Once again we are reviewing this policy. As it is a rather intricate program to which the hon. member has referred, I believe I should report at a later date to the House as to what our position is with respect to the policy in general.

CABLEVISION

REQUEST CRTC INTERVENE TO SETTLE STRIKE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Communications but in view of his absence I shall direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

As the larger part of the population of Quebec City has been denied cable television for several weeks now by striking employees of Cablevision Nationale Ltée of Quebec City, can the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether or not he is willing to make the necessary representations to the CRTC to have it intervene energetically, and not only to pay lip service, with Cablevision Nationale Ltée and make it negotiate seriously with its employees with a view to settling the strike and having the company respect its obligations toward the people of greater Quebec City?

NATIONAL REVENUE

HIGHWAY SUFFERANCE WAREHOUSE IN RENFREW AREA

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. I gave him advance notice, so he has had a lot of time to do some positive thinking.

Last March, the former minister of national revenue, the Hon. Tony Abbott, stated that he was prepared to accept a suitable application for appointment of a highway sufferance warehouse in the Renfrew area. A suitable application was received by May 31. Is the present Minister of National Revenue, after reviewing representations from the president of the Ontario Sufferance Warehouse Association, now prepared to give immediate approval to the commitment made by his predecessor and allow the establishment of a highway sufferance warehouse in the Renfrew area of eastern Ontario to be proceeded with on an urgent basis?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been before governments generally through the work of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton for some period of time. I intend to make an announcement shortly with respect to this matter.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

INQUIRY WHETHER CORPORATION WILL BE PRIVATIZED—PROGRAM TO ASSIST TENANTS

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Since the dismantling or privatization of that corporation was announced, several citizens are worried. Until now, the government has implemented programs to help tenants. The minister doubtless knows that economic strengths are not the same in every province and that average incomes are not either, and that, in addition, both interest rates and inflation are increasing. If any group of citizens is being burdened by the effects of that situation, it is the tenants. Can the minister tell us whether or not he intends to recommend a program to help tenants directly?

I should like to put him another question; does he intend to privatize the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and could that make interest rates go down?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question from the distinguished former postmaster general. I want to assure him that, despite reports that are going around, there has been no ultimate decision taken on what will or will not be done with Canada Mortgage and Housing.

We on this side are very conscious of maintaining the responsibility of the Government of Canada for the social needs of Canadians in housing. I have spoken from time to time with the responsible minister in Quebec about the need to protect tenants and to protect people in that province from any of the unfortunate consequences of high interest rates or any other policies that affect housing.

I think it would be fair to say in this answer that the demographics, as hon. members opposite know, clearly indicate that the demand for housing in the eighties will not be as great as it has been. For that reason it is important that we concentrate on improving the urban core in some cities, the rehabilitation of existing housing and looking after the needs of all tenants.

INQUIRY WHETHER UNDERPRIVILEGED WILL BENEFIT FROM HOUSING POLICY

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for urban affairs. In view of the fact that Mr. Donald Matthews, chairman of the task force on Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, seems to have been the former national president of the Progressive Conservative Party as well as a housing developer, can the minister responsible for CMHC tell this House who on this task force was representing the interests and views of underprivileged Canadians in need of social housing, or are we to understand that the minister put the fox in charge of the hen house as far as housing policy is concerned?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to send the hon. member opposite a list of the people who comprise the group looking into the various questions in Canada Housing. Any doubts that this House may have about the political neutrality and objectivity of Mr. Matthews ought to be removed by the fact that his beautiful daughter is married to a very, very prominent Liberal politician.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR MINE IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that the new drilling has been completed for the Donkin mine in Cape Breton, which shows huge coal reserves, and the estimate is that if that mine is started now, by 1984 it will replace eight million barrels of oil a year, will the minister say when the money will come from the federal government to start that mine?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, the question of the Donkin mine is part of a very important energy package strategy, not only for Nova Scotia but for the maritime provinces.

The timing of the production of the mine is very important to ensure that market conditions and forecasts are such that it will come on stream at the most opportune time. I share with the hon. member the urgent wish that the mine will be started as soon as possible. This matter is under very active consideration at this time and will be discussed in cabinet before very long.

Mr. Hogan: I thank the minister for the information. May I now ask what the condition is as far as the Prince mine is concerned? A pledge was made by the former government to allocate funds. I understand this has not yet been done. That is a very vital part of the whole self-sufficiency argument of making Cape Breton coal useful, instead of importing oil.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, there is at the present time a very realistic disposition to expand not only Prince but No. 26 colliery. However, that is without prejudice to the plans for the Donkin mine. However, all these particular aims and objectives have to be co-ordinated so that the coal is not only there when we need it but, hopefully, will not be there too soon.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY BE REINSTATED

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I want to take this opportunity, belated as it is, to congratulate him on his responsibilities and to wish him well.

The minister is aware that no money has been available for the fishing vessel subsidy program since last June. In the meantime, the whole construction season has gone by and the shipyards in the Atlantic area and Quebec have been idle through lack of funds. Is the minister aware of this situation and the fact that hundreds of fishermen in the Atlantic area and Quebec are in desperate need of new vessels? He knows the cost of a longliner over 50 feet is more than half a million dollars. Has the minister requested funds for the subsidy program, and can he tell us when those funds will be forthcoming?

● (1200)

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): As is the case with so many good programs, we have had to place a freeze on this one because of the free spending habits of the government of which the hon. member was a supporter. However, we have had discussions with the provinces and worked out an arrangement whereby there will be at least a partial lifting of the freeze. Details have been worked out so we can implement the program, albeit in a modified way, for the balance of this year and hopefully for at least part of next year.

Mr. Rompkey: I thank the minister for his positive answer. I want to make sure it is positive enough. My supplementary question is for the President of the Treasury Board.

In view of the fact that in the last fiscal year $11 million was allocated for vessel subsidies, and that in the present fiscal year no moneys have been allocated since the new government came to office, is the hon. gentleman prepared now to respond to the needs of the fishermen of the Atlantic area and Quebec by allocating funds at last year's level, to ensure that fishing vessels can be replaced and new vessels built?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): I can assure the hon. member, who is a veteran of this House, that I will respond in the appropriate way, the way in which any president of the treasury board would respond to any request from his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF HON. ROBERT STANFIELD WITH PLO

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the hon. lady tell the House whether the emissary extraordinary, or the extraordinary emissary to the Middle East, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, did indeed hold any public or clandestine meetings with representatives of the PLO before the PLO has met the two conditions which the Prime Minister laid down for relationships with, or recognition of that terrorist organization?

Further, if Mr. Stanfield has indeed had such meetings with the PLO, has he discussed with the PLO any topics other than the moving of the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, and has he made any undertakings to continue further contacts with the PLO?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to meet with Mr. Stanfield since his return to Canada, but I have read in the press and listened to reports that he stated he had met with a representative of the PLO, and I am perfectly willing to believe Mr. Stanfield's comment. It was in no way clandestine. He said what he had done, and he did that knowing the terms of his reference permitted him to meet with anyone he felt it was appropriate to consult.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DRESS OF MEMBERS IN CHAMBER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have received a note from the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) concerning his failure to wear a tie in the chamber today. The fact is that two or three members have brought this to my attention; I noticed it myself. It is, of course, a departure from an accepted standard of dress which has been agreed to and enforced by the House for quite some time. Our procedure puts me, at least, into somewhat of a "Catch 22" situation. If I recognize the hon. member for the purpose of addressing the House in connection with a question of privilege or otherwise, then I would be offending the very standard with which we are concerned. In order to be able to hear the hon. member on this subject it seems to me I would need the consent of the House. Is the House agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MUNRO (HAMILTON EAST)—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS CONCERNING PIPELINE ROUTE

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising from a reply the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) gave to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) on Wednesday last. He said, and I quote from page 291 of Hansard for Wednesday:

> Ministers of this government have been in touch with Foothills and in fact with United States officials throughout the summer to make clear the preference of the Canadian government for the Foothills group and to make very clear our concern about the environmental impact of tanker traffic off the west coast.

On the same day in the Senate, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret) stated:

> As a government, as you well know, we strongly encouraged and urged the United States government to adopt the Foothills proposal both officially and in a memorandum of intent sent to the President of the United States recently and also through unofficial discussions held throughout the summer by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister told the House that in all those meetings he listed yesterday no ministers were present. I refer him to a taped conversation which was accepted in the House, and which was accepted when it was referred to in the House, and in particular to a question dated August 23, directed in the latter part of the summer to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the minister who, according to the Prime Minister, was in touch with the United States government all throughout the summer urging the acceptance of the Foothills all-land route. I quote:

Q. Is Canada going to have to re-endorse the Foothills proposal in light of Schlesinger's memo?

Not "any change in Foothills' application" but "Schlesinger's memo".

A: (Hnatyshyn). Well, I think the position we are taking as a new government is that we are going to review the alternatives and I simply think it is premature to indicate a position on the matter now.

Q. What's the status of the former government's commitment? They said they preferred the Foothills route. Does that stand?

A. Well, I think that a new government is going to look at the alternatives and I don't want to suggest that in any way the review itself means that we are either going to change or not change, but I just think the process obviously has to be . . . that we have a chance to look and have a fresh view of all the alternatives and accordingly, when that process is over, our position will be made clear to the United States, to the President of the United States.

This is the minister who, all during the summer, according to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret), has been pushing the Foothills route throughout the summer, as stated in Hansard by the Prime Minister. To continue with the taped report:

Q. We have had some technical problems. Could I repeat the question about whether you feel you are under any pressure from the American government to act on this matter?

A. Well, what I have said is that it is my understanding that the Americans, the administration and the new occupants of those positions of energy and the Department of the Interior, are in fact themselves going to look at the whole question and that there is certainly no indication to me, at least based on the information I had at my disposal at the time, of any rejection or acceptance of one alternative or the other.

He was clearly talking about alternatives in the sense of other proposals opposed to Foothills. The answer continued:

So that is still very much open. What I am saying is that I take it that Mr. Schlesinger, in his statement, is expressing his point of view but my understanding is that it is not one that has been accepted as a position of the administration in the United States.

So we find the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the end of the summer saying he is taking a fresh look at the whole proposal.

The Prime Minister informed this House that throughout the course of the summer this minister, along with some of his colleagues, had been urging the acceptance of Foothills' proposal.

I would like to quote another minister who was named as urging the acceptance of Foothills' proposal during the course of the summer, as stated by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I refer to the reported remarks of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Fraser) in a story in The Vancouver Sun of October 18, which reads in part as follows:

The Vancouver South MP said in an interview that while the government favours an all-land plan put forward by Foothills Oil Pipe Lines Ltd.—and has gone so far as to say so in a recent aide memoire—

This refers to the aide memoire the Prime Minister said was sent at the end of September.

—"there are more than just environmental considerations" to take into account.

"Trans Mountain (Pipe Line Co.) at least has the favourable characteristic of getting the tankers out of congested waters"—

The Prime Minister has indicated that this minister throughout the course of the summer had no doubts and was pushing the Foothills' all-land route. This article was made public. It was read, presumably, by the Americans, and it cast doubts. It extolled the virtues of Trans Mountain and a tanker route. Compounding this impression—it is more than an impression; there was a statement by the Prime Minister—was a statement read to this House and which was made by the department of the interior, the lead department, saying that at least halfway through the summer no word had been heard from the Canadian government. The Prime Minister said there were meetings of just officials, let alone officials for ministers during this period.

My question of privilege is this: The Prime Minister of this country today clearly states to this House and to the Canadian people that his ministers—and the government is the Prime Minister and his ministers—have been urging the United States government throughout the summer to accept the Foothills' route. At the end of August the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, one of the lead ministers of this government, said he was looking at all the fresh new proposals and making no commitment with respect to Foothills. This was compounded by the Minister of the Environment who said in Vancouver a week ago that Trans Mountain had its virtues.

It seems to me that this is shoddy, to say the least. I would like some clarification from the Prime Minister because I think this is misleading the House of Commons and the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) has put his own description on it. He said it is shoddy. That seems to me to characterize the intervention as a disagreement, perhaps, and a dispute over the quality of the answer given. As we all know, answers which are or appear to be on the basis of argument and in conflict with other answers may be the subject of discussion, but I will have some difficulty recognizing this as a question of privilege in its basic form.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) was seeking the floor, but I have to say that on the basis of the intervention and the fact that there is no motion at the moment which would compel any action by the Chair, I do not under the circumstances think we can pursue the matter as a question of privilege because in my opinion it clearly is a matter of disagreement and dispute and does not constitute a question of privilege.

MR. ALLMAND—DRESS OF MEMBERS IN CHAMBER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with respect to the wearing of ties in the House of Commons. I put this question of privilege as a serious one. This morning it was my intention to change into a shirt and tie and come here dressed according to the traditional rules, but at the last minute I received several important telephone calls.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would like you to hear me out. I received important telephone calls, with the result that when the bells rang for the calling of the House I did not have time to change. In the circumstances I thought it was more important to come here without a tie and participate in the proceedings of the House than come late or not at all.

I really want to question the propriety of this rule—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: If hon. members opposite would be quiet and listen to my argument, I would like Your Honour to reconsider this rule. Parliament is a very old institution, and proper dress in the House of Commons has varied considerably over the 700 or more years Parliament has existed as an institution. For most of those centuries ties in the House of Commons were not the rule. It seems to me that the important thing under the rule of proper decorum in the House of Commons is proper dress and neatness and not necessarily the wearing of ties.

I have visited other Parliaments in the world, and I think that if one inquired of the Parliaments of many countries in the Inter-Parliamentary Union one would find that the wearing of ties is not the rule.

Second, I would like to remind this House that this is a House of Commons. I was just reading the rights and privileges of members of Parliament. This is a house of commoners, and it is my opinion that to the majority of people in Canada common dress is not the wearing of ties, if we consider the total range of population.

The tie I am wearing was lent to me by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), who is an Inuit. There are Indians and Inuit in this Parliament, and it is not proper to demand the wearing of ties of people whose traditional dress does not include the wearing of ties.

Earlier this week we celebrated "Persons" day which recognized equality between men and women in Parliament. It was a very important anniversary. In this respect I think men in this House should have the same freedom of dress as women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I point out that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) is not wearing a tie today. The hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is not wearing a tie. The hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) is not wearing a tie.

Consequently, I would like Your Honour to reconsider this rule. I think it is anachronistic in 1979 or 1980. I think my constituents want me to be here whether I am wearing a tie or not, and I argue that my privilege to speak as an elected member of Parliament for a constituency was interfered with merely because I did not have a tie on today, when I wanted to ask a very important question on an important issue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to entertain this matter in this way. The hon. member knows that this has been an accepted standard and that standards of dress are very difficult to enforce, define and categorize. For many years all commoners have accepted a standard of dress for men in this House.

I grant that some of the hon. member's representations may be very reasonable. Nevertheless, it has been the accepted standard here by all members of this House of Commons that the standard of dress for men includes ties. I simply say that if the hon. member or any other hon. member wants to try to change that, the right thing to do, surely, would be to do it through their caucuses or perhaps through representations to a committee which might make a recommendation so that the House can change this rule. It is not for me to decide, thank heaven, what the standard of dress should be. The House has made that decision through a long accepted practice, and all I am doing is enforcing it. If the hon. member wants to change it, he should persuade his colleagues, and I will be happy to enforce whatever change there might be. However, until that time comes I am bound to follow the practices of the House as they have been well known to me since I have been here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. BREAU—ALLEGED INSULTING REMARKS OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) today, in my view, failed to comply with Standing Order 35 concerning the use of disrespectful and offensive language against members of this House. I therefore rise on a question of privilege to give the Prime Minister the opportunity to clarify the matter because I do not think that any member wants to offend others.

On two occasions today, the Prime Minister made reference to members on this side of the House in a way that could be construed as offensive. First, in reply to a question put by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) regarding House procedures and the legislative program, the Prime Minister stated that some members on this side of the House, some members—he did not specify from which party—had decided to obstruct the budget bills and the business of the House. Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Prime Minister through you that the budget bills are not yet on the order paper, that no member has seen any, that no one knows if they will be printed in exactly the same format and with the same content as in the last Parliament. Therefore, how can one conclude that members on this side of the House have already decided on the stance they will take during a budget debate or a debate on a budget bill?

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is imputing motives, and he did say "some members" without referring to any party. I would ask the Prime Minister to clarify his statements and remind him that those summer caucus meetings are over. He is now in the House of Commons in the Canadian Parliament and we expect on this side of the House to scrutinize all the bills he will introduce, whether they be budget bills, bills from the last Parliament or any other bill, first because it is our duty as members to scrutinize the content and presentation of the bills.

The second example I want to deal with in my remarks relates to the arrogant attitude shown today in the House by the Prime Minister, and I would like him to clarify this, Mr. Speaker. At one point, he said in an answer and while looking at me that I had a newly found interest in morality. It may well be that he did not quite understand what I had said, and I would like to give him the opportunity to clarify this, because I do not think he would want to question my political morality, present or past.

● (1220)

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think there can be no better determination of the intent of hon. members opposite to obstruct the business of the House than the three points of privilege we have heard this morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: With regard to the question raised concerning the reference I made, that was in the context of an interjection from the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) relating to morality. He mentioned the word "morality". I was speaking about standards of public morality and I suggested that in the past, when that party formed the government, there had not been everywhere the same interest for matters of public morality, which he suggested by the way he interjected in the debate. That's all.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, I would add that the Prime Minister has in fact just done it again since in light of the questions of privilege we have raised today he has imputed motives to us by saying that we wanted to make systematic obstruction of the proceedings of the House. I would like to point out to him, Mr. Speaker, that this lengthy five-month delay in calling Parliament has contributed much more to the delay in the proceedings of the House than the intelligent questions of privilege that have been raised today.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would have to check the record, I suppose, but my recollection is that what the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) said today had to do with the hope that hon. members in the House could be persuaded not to obstruct the business of the House in the future.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: In any case, even to me the remarks just made by the right hon. Prime Minister that actions taken this morning are in fact an indication of an intention to obstruct the business of the House may be unpleasant, but certainly they are not unparliamentary and I have no basis on which I can found any question of privilege; nor have I been asked to found one by way of any motion. In terms of the language used by the right hon. Prime Minister, I have to determine whether or not any unparliamentary allegation has been made by him. I am not aware of any, but if the perusal of the record shows me to be in error, I will certainly allow further argument on it. For the moment, however, I do not see any.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege I would just like to clarify if, following your ruling a while ago, you still consider that imputing motives to members of Parliament is unparliamentary. Could you please clarify for us whether or not imputing motives to a member of Parliament or a group of members of Parliament is unparliamentary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL GRAIN HANDLERS' DISPUTE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I had expected questions directed to me regarding the work stoppage in the port of Montreal, but in light of the fact there were none, I have an announcement to make for the edification of hon. members.

In view of the considerable interest displayed in the House relative to mediation efforts concerning the strike involving the port of Montreal grain workers and the National Harbours Board, hon. members will be pleased to learn that a memorandum of agreement was entered into last evening and it is anticipated that a ratification vote will be held over the weekend which will lead to resumption of grain elevator operations in the port of Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I am quite optimistic with respect to the ratification, and if all goes well, I would expect early resumption in terms of the port of Montreal getting back to work as soon as possible. I hope this is of some benefit to all members of the House.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure on behalf of my party to inform the House that we are very happy this strike is over. Unfortunately, we cannot congratulate the minister on having settled it himself. I think that attrition and time were the main factors. There is a well-known saying that time is the healer of all ills. It seems indeed that that is what happened in this case, and one cannot say that the Progressive Conservatives are responsible for settling the dispute in the port of Montreal.

That strike which actually lasted several months occasioned heavy expenses and serious inconvenience to farm producers in that area of Quebec. That is what the minister failed to mention this morning. That is what his government wanted to do for them, to compensate them for the extra expenses and inconvenience they suffered because of that strike that lasted too long. It is obvious that the strike pushed up the cost of grain supplies to flour mills, for example and it is obvious the price of feed grains for farm producers increased by several dollars a ton. When my colleague, the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier), asked the minister last week what he intended to do about that conflict, he did remind him that this government had intervened immediately right at the start of a similar dispute in western Canada on the Pacific coast. And the hon. member for Longueuil was rightly concerned about the inaction of the Progressive Conservative government about this dispute in the port of Montreal.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will come to the House later on to tell us what he intends to do to compensate those who were seriously affected by this dispute. In answer to a question by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Ostiguy), the minister said he hoped to be in a position to give fuller information as early as next week, meaning this week, about the breeders who were affected by the strike in the port of Montreal these past months. So I hope that next week the Minister of Agriculture will act on the representations of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe and that help and financial compensation will be forthcoming for those so seriously affected by that strike which lasted much too long.

[Mr. Alexander.]

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who has expressed our concern about this matter, I want to say on behalf of our party that we welcome the announcement that a memorandum of agreement has been reached between the parties and we hope that it will not be long before operations are resumed.

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander). Even though the dispute has been settled, there is a major problem left because feed grain supplies are nil in the port of Montreal.

Does the Minister of Labour intend to make representations to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and his colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to speed up the grain movement to the port of Montreal so as to replenish the stocks in time before the closure of the St. Lawrence Seaway? Otherwise we will of course have to move grain by rail and perhaps also by boat; does he intend to make representations to that effect?

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the hon. member that the memorandum of agreement has to be ratified, of course. As I have indicated to him, I am optimistic that the ratification will come through. In terms of the representations just made by the hon. member, for the benefit of my colleagues, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), certainly I will see to it that they are brought to their attention.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF COMMITTEES

On the Order: Government notices of motion:

October 17—The President of the Privy Council:—That this House approves the radio and television broadcasting of the proceedings of its committees on the basis of principles similar to those which govern the publication of the printed official reports of debates;

That a special committee, consisting of Mr. Speaker and ten other members to be named at a later date, be appointed to supervise the implementation of this resolution;

That the committee have power to appoint from among its members such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate to such subcommittees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the Thirtieth Parliament be referred to the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section 2 of Standing Order 21, this notice of motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) is transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

THE ADDRESS—LIMITATION ON LENGTH OF SPEECHES

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity of exchanging diplomatic notes with the chief government whip and the House leader of the New Democratic Party. As this is the last day of this important debate and as there are a lot of members who wish to speak, I think we can obtain a House order if Mr. Speaker would allow me to move it, seconded by the chief government whip. The number one government speaker today, I believe, is the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens). He would get 30 minutes; one speaker in the New Democratic Party would get 30 minutes; the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), who would be our second speaker today, would get 30 minutes; and all other speakers would get 20 minutes, with no extension of time asked for or granted.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if there is need of a seconder of the motion, I would be delighted to second it. In any event, we would consent to such an order.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations, and we agree to this proposal. On behalf of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, I understand that he will do his best to speak for a shorter period than 30 minutes, but certainly no longer.

May I make one other suggestion which might add one more speaker to the list. According to the rule the debate is supposed to be interrupted at 4.45 o'clock today, but I believe there is a well-known understanding that we seldom call for a recorded vote on the main motion with respect to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. That is the understanding for today, so perhaps with that understanding the debate might continue until five o'clock and the question can be put at that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am told there has been consultation. While I have not been consulted, I am always willing to co-operate. I want to assure the House of my co-operation, even though I had the right to object. Thus I find the proposal reasonable, and I accept it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the order. Briefly they are that as we proceed to the resumption of the consideration of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the first speaker from the government, the first speaker from the New Democratic Party and the second speaker from the official opposition shall be entitled to speak for 30 minutes; that other speakers will be entitled to speak for 20 minutes; and that there will be no recorded division. Therefore, the debate this afternoon shall continue until five o'clock rather than being interrupted in accordance with the Standing Order.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fretz for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier-Maskinongé): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks in the throne speech debate I should like to extend my best wishes to His Excellency the Governor General who presided for the first time at the official opening of the Thirty-first parliament. I first met Mr. Schreyer in 1965 when he was member for a Manitoba riding and at that time we were sitting opposite each other in this House. He then served as premier of his province, and in that capacity had a brilliant political career in the service of his fellow citizens, and I wish to offer him, Mr. Speaker, my best wishes in his new office as Governor General of Canada.

I also wish to congratulate the sponsors of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald) on the excellent way in which they performed their duty. They gave a fine picture of their ridings and showed that they have much to contribute to Parliament. The new Parliament is made up of newly elected members in all parties, which should give a new impetus to Canadian federalism and prove that the system is still very strong, judging by the calibre of the men and women willing to serve their country. I therefore wish all these newcomers much success in their new responsibilities.

It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that I am delighted about your appointment to the Chair of this House. The fact you were appointed from an opposition party is unique in the history of our Parliament, and this is all to your credit, because it shows how impartial you have always been. I extend my best wishes to you on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, in the last election, I was confirmed for a fifth mandate as the representative of my constituency with a record majority in the constituency of Berthier-Maskinongé. This is an honour which, of course, is shared by my family, and it is a token of confidence of my electors towards their member who has been sitting here for 14 years. I want to thank them sincerely and to assure them of my complete dedication in their service and in the service of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, as several hon. members, I was very pleased to hear the Speech from the Throne which was read in the Senate by His Excellency the Governor General. It is the fifth Speech from the Throne I have had the advantage to hear, and I must admit I was very disappointed by this one. Like Canadians, I thought that the new government would give a new impetus to our economy, propose new policies in the area of agriculture, take a new approach to our energy problems, reassure Middle East countries about its long-term foreign policies following the well-known and dramatic blunder made by the Prime Minister when he mentioned the possibility of Canada moving its embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. On the contrary, the Speech from the Throne is entirely lacking in specific references to the orientation of the Clark government foreign policy and the future of our country.

With regard to the Quebec referendum, not a single word, although we all know that since 1867, when the British North America Act was adopted, our country has never been faced with such constitutional problems. Never has the unity of this country been so threatened. The government did not deem it necessary to even make reference to it, probably believing they would make another mistake they might have to regret, knowing full well that their position on this issue and their policies vis-à-vis the provinces are not very clear. The right hon. Prime Minister prefers not to get his feet wet and capitalize on the joint efforts of the federal and provincial Liberals from Quebec to bring the referendum battle to a successful conclusion, only to claim credit for a moral victory later although not having been involved in the debate.

Indeed, that is the position of the other Tory provinces which are fed up with Quebec's claims within confederation. To show Quebec a spirit of co-operation and a new openness to good understanding, the right hon. Prime Minister has agreed after being in power for five months to give Quebec and the provinces control over the Loto Canada lottery—can you imagine—in return for a tiny monetary compensation which is tantamount to giving the province of Quebec a candy to stop recriminations. This had Mr. Parizeau, the Quebec Minister of Finance, saying that things were finally starting to open up in Ottawa. That is absolutely ridiculous, Mr. Speaker.

During the election campaign, I told my constituents in Berthier-Maskinongé about the danger of electing a Progressive Conservative government, especially one dominated by Western Tory premiers in a particularly difficult period in terms of energy supply. Indeed, as we know, they have the oil.

Five months have elapsed since the Progressive Conservatives took over and we now find ourselves in the midst of an energy crisis. We were told recently by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that there is not enough oil to supply homes in Eastern Canada next winter. That is all done undoubtedly to make us swallow more easily a substantial increase in the short term, which was not long in coming, Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the minister announced Tuesday night that an increase of 34 cents to 40 cents a gallon of fuel and heating oil was expected for 1980.

Everything is clear now. We wanted to know the position of the Clark government on energy matters. Now we know it, and it is just the beginning. In years to come, we shall be faced with other major increases which will place Canadians, especially those of eastern Canada, in an intolerable situation as regards heating their homes and filling up their gas tanks.

As for us Liberals, our position has always been clear and it still is. We subsidized the consumer, we allowed a price increase which was just enough to stimulate production. This did not please the premiers of oil-producing provinces very much, but we had to consider the needs of all Canadians. It is unwise for the cause of national unity to tell energy-producing provinces that domestic oil prices must reach world levels and that any surplus belongs to them so that they can put into so-called heritage funds billions of dollars at a time when the eastern provinces fight unemployment and stagnation. These rich provinces have a short memory. They seem to forget their leaner years when all Canada came to their assistance through oil exploration subsidies as well as in the agricultural and transportation fields. What seems even more ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that this new government would like to do a hatchet job on the national corporation of Petro-Canada which was set up by the Trudeau government and received royal assent in July 1975.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are very concerned about the fate of Petro-Canada, as is confirmed by a recent survey among Canadians which shows that they are in favour of leaving untouched this national corporation and several other Canadian public and business companies and corporations. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that any country seriously concerned about securing energy supplies for its citizens will create a national petroleum corporation. In Canada, eight multinational companies share among themselves 91 per cent of our gas and oil. Petro-Canada is a well-administered and efficient corporation with assets of more than $5 billion. It is a profitable corporation which is not afraid of taking risks.

Up to now, those operations have been successful in the Arctic, in Nova Scotia, off Newfoundland and in the west. With Petro-Canada as negotiating agent with Mexico, Venezuela and other oil exporting countries, Canadians have no reason to be afraid of any shortage such as happened last winter when some parts of the country experienced oil shortages because the big multinational Exxon, of which Imperial Oil is a subsidiary, had diverted oil supplies from Canada to the United States.

Now in office, as in many other fields this government is confronted with election commitments, and as it tries to save face, it hesitates to decide what to do about that company. Canadians are not taken in. They will not appreciate the government position in this regard. After five months in power, Canadians are still waiting for those magic formulas the Prime Minister promised during the election campaign to stimulate the economy. As the Prime Minister said solemnly, as we enter the 1980s the ministers were given a mandate to change the direction of Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, we are off to a shaky start.

Last week the governor of the Bank of Canada announced the third interest rate increase under the new Conservative government, under a Prime Minister who barely nine months ago was going on record as Leader of the Opposition saying that interest rate increases were out of reason. He now agrees with the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey, that U.S. rate increases should be followed, however severe the hardships for the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, in five months since they were elected, interest rates went up three times to a Canadian record. Mr. Clark is learning that he views matters quite differently now that he has to take the decisions instead of criticizing. The government pretend to be looking for long-term solutions but they only do patchwork, as in their interest rate and property tax credit program. It will be interesting to see how the Prime Minister will go about implementing his rather vague program of economic growth. Mr. Speaker, it is stated in the throne speech that the government will have to approve a mortgage interest and property tax credit program.

In his introduction the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) indicated the government wanted to free the people in order to strengthen liberty. What he forgot is that the only way to free the people is to bring down social and economic barriers, but there is no sign of that in the throne speech.

There are in this country millions of people who are forgotten, unthought off, neglected and even despised. There is nothing for them in the throne speech. What this government is doing is raising barriers and emphasizing divisions. Quite the contrary, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) indicates the election promise of mortgage rate tax credit will benefit 300,000 Canadians who will have a stake in the country. He suggests this will stimulate employment and have economic spin-offs. He forgets to say what is in store for the remaining 40 per cent of the people in rental housing in Canada and the 60 per cent in Quebec. This program brings them no direct benefit. The minister seems to be saying that since he promised them nothing he does not have to think about them. The only people who count for this government are those to whom it made promises; others do not count.

Mr. Speaker, I remember that when Senator Edward Kennedy came to visit Ottawa, two or three years ago, to consult our Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on our hospital and health insurance program, which he wanted to introduce in the United States, in answer to a question concerning the tax credit on mortgages, he suggested that we do not embark on this program which is already implemented in the United States, and does far more harm than good there for most people.

In fact, this program helps mostly people with upper middle or high incomes. I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that this Progressive Conservative government persists in going through with this policy notwithstanding much advice to the contrary, because this Progressive Conservative government wants to preserve its tradition of legislating in favour of the rich at the expense of the working people.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying at the beginning of my remarks that there was not a single word about agriculture in the throne speech, and God knows that when the Progressive Conservatives were in opposition they knew all the answers to our agricultural problems. After five months in power, nothing, not even the hope of a new policy in the throne speech. Canada is renowned as the granary of the world with its cereal crops, particularly in the west. Furthermore, it is known as one of the great cattle producers in the world, and in the eastern part of the country the dairy farmers produce almost all the natural milk, industrial milk, butter and cheese, not to mention poultry farmers as well as beef and pork producers.

The government did not think once about helping them face the ever-rising cost of feed products and administration. Concerning the crucial problems of the agricultural economy about which the Progressive Conservatives were so concerned when they were in opposition, not one word in the throne speech, as if all our farmers suddenly became prosperous and the government had to consider other priorities.

Mr. La Salle, who is not in the House today, has not treated me as courteously as I did last week when I listened to his speech. Last Tuesday he attempted to bring the agricultural issue into perspective by taking credit for the dairy policy proposed by the Liberal government when he announced the reimbursement of export taxes amounting to $26 million and the readjustment of milk quotas on the basis of consumption.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the silence of his government in the Speech from the Throne, which, I am sure, will provoke smiles among the farmers of his Joliette riding and the Delanaudière area where I come from, particularly also among the members of APU, Mr. La Salle discussed the dairy policy support program while he attempted to take credit for it. The objectives of that policy are, first, to establish quotas for industrial milk on the basis of Canadian demand in order not to flood the consumer market and to protect producers; second, to index the subsidy paid to industrial milk producers on the basis of inflation costs and production cost increases; and third, to hand back to producers the levy of 20 cents a hundredweight on deliveries to absorb the export cost of production within the quotas set for producers.

This is where those $26 million are coming from. It is not a subsidy, it is just a deposit which producers have left in the hands of the Canadian Dairy Commission and which will be repaid to them very soon. There was nothing new in all this as the subsidies established by the Liberals under the dairy policy is a statutory program that was always criticized by the Progressive Conservatives. But they have yet to propose an alternative. Instead the minister should have announced at the opening of this Parliament the new agricultural policies proposed by the Progressive Conservatives to assure a balanced operational income to our farmers in a period when inflation is so high.

Minister La Salle who, in the past, was the advocate of workers criticizing the small changes brought to the unemployment insurance program by the Liberal government effective last July in answer to the demands of employers who had problems to hire manpower, Minister La Salle—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but since the beginning of his remarks, on several occasions he referred to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the Minister for Supply and Services, by his family name. It has been a long established tradition in this House that in referring to an hon. member, one should either mention the name of his riding or his full title in the cabinet.

Mr. Yanakis: Then, Mr. Speaker, I should call him the hon. minister La Salle in order to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No. The hon. member for Joliette is the Minister for Supply and Services.

Mr. Yanakis: That's it! I just cannot get used to his new title.

When faced with the problems of the employers who were experiencing difficulties in hiring labour, the hon. Minister for Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle) never revealed that his colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) was planning to make things even more difficult for the recipients of unemployment benefits by reducing by almost a billion dollars the amount of benefits paid to the unemployed and by imposing harsher penalties for those who do not respect the provisions of the act. Would it be in order to find the necessary money and deliver their extravagant election promises such as a tax credit on mortgages and property taxes? Now that they are in power, not a word in his speech concerning measures designed to help workers. What a drastic change of attitude.

In his speech the hon. Minister of Supply and Services said that when the Liberals were in power the number of unemployed reached 1,500,000. I just wonder where he got those figures. To him the value of figures is irrelevant. What he is interested in, Mr. Speaker, is simply to mystify people as he is used to. Well, in order to refresh his memory I will remind him that the actual number of unemployed never went over 900,000 when the Liberals were in power and the national rate never exceeded 9 per cent.

Right now, thanks to the last budget presented by Mr. Chrétien, the former minister of finance in the former Trudeau cabinet, the number of unemployed has been lowered to nearly 700,000 and the national rate is down to 7 per cent for a workforce of 10,300,000 Canadians. That is the truth, Mr. Speaker, and in his new position the minister should know that he cannot juggle figures as he sees fit because people are not fooled so easily. I challenge the Progressive Conservative government to improve in the coming months the situation, especially the economic situation in which it has put us since it came to power.

Mr. Speaker, I could speak at length on the legislative program of this government but I notice that my time is running out. Canadians keep their eyes wide open on the Clark government whose actions have already started to create much scepticism among the public, among businessmen and our international partners. The hesitations of the government, the Prime Minister's untimely statements on the issue of the move of our embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, his energy policy which is bound to increase the cost of living and will fuel current inflation, his indifference towards the Quebec referendum, his monetary policy are already very expensive for Canadians although this government has only been in power for five months. We are still waiting for the prophetic Prime Minister who was to work miracles and cure the ills of our economy. In the 1980s he will have to act otherwise we in the opposition will have to turf out the government. The lack of reference in the Speech from the Throne to crucial issues reflect the Prime Minister's hesitations and confusion that concern all Canadians as well as several other countries.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour, most of my remarks will have to be made after lunch. But may I say in a preliminary sentence that I chose to join this throne speech debate because I feel that it is very important that every member of this House understand fully the expenditure plans of the previous government, and the expenditure plans as they are being formed by the present government. I say this in anticipation of the estimates which are now going before the various committees of this House and are being considered by members of the House. I feel I should take an opportunity, just after lunch, to inform the House of some of the stark realities of the position in which the previous government has left this grand nation as a result of their mishandling of our economy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, just before lunch I indicated that I intended to join in this throne speech debate largely to outline certain of the realities that faced the nation with respect to the former government's spending plans and the current government's spending plans.

Before I get into the main body of those remarks, I feel I should like to join the many others who have congratulated the House on the selection of the new Speaker to carry on as he did in the earlier Parliament.

I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald) for their excellent addresses in moving and seconding the motion that is now before us.

Of course, I should also like to indicate my encouragement to you as Deputy Speaker for accepting your new role, as well as the appointment of the Speaker to which I have referred.

I feel that in considering the throne speech, which I would mention was extended or certainly elaborated upon by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) in this debate, it is particularly important that we as members of Parliament consider the reality of Canada's spending position at the present time. As you know, Mr. Speaker, on October 11 I tabled various documents in this House including the main estimates for the fiscal year 1979-80. We also tabled supplementary estimates A to those main estimates. Before the middle of November we intend to table supplementary estimates B, and it is anticipated that before the end of this fiscal year there will be a further tabling of supplementary estimates C.

The reason I mention that is that I feel it is important, as we consider the spending plans of this government, which are to some degree an extension of the plans of the former government, that we be candid with the Canadian public as to what is the reality of Canada's fiscal position at the present time. I say that because you will recall that when I was tabling, in the rather routine way that it is done, the main estimates for the current fiscal year, the House leader for the opposition party seemed to chide or somehow or other try to get me to say whether I "approve", to use his word, or recommend the main estimates to this House. I was very curious why the House leader for the opposition would have chosen that day to appear to be, if not naive, rather childish, knowing as he does that it is certainly not traditional for the person who simply tables the main estimates to make some statement that he recommends them or approves them.

I therefore felt it was perhaps important that I reflect on what the hon. member really had in mind when he made that request. Naturally, knowing that he is a great scholar of the English language, I thought I had better go to the Oxford dictionary to see what in fact is meant by the word "recommend". I think it is interesting to get that on the record. Oxford says that to recommend is to give in charge to God a person, his care, etc.; to speak or write of in favour or trial; say something is fit. When we turn to the word "approve", we find it means to confirm, sanction, commend, pronounce or consider good.

When you think of the significance of those two words as defined in the Oxford dictionary, I am a little pressed to understand why the House leader used the word "recommend". If in fact what he was seeking was an approval, what he was in effect asking me to do was to refer the main estimates and confirm them, sanction them, commend them, pronounce them or consider them good.

I had been very careful when I tabled those main estimates to make it clear that they were exactly as tabled in February this year by the previous government. We had taken that very, very conscious step because we believed, as the ongoing process of this House would evolve, that it was necessary, certainly from a procedural standpoint, to get those estimates reintroduced for consideration by the House. Frankly, if the House leader feels any better on that basis as part of the ongoing process of this House, I recommend them to the House and that they get on with them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The thing I think we have to make very clear is that those main estimates, as it has now evolved, are only part of the ongoing considerations that this House must bear in mind concerning the over-all spending plans certainly of the former government and currently of this present government. There are four things I would suggest that hon. members bear in mind as they work their way through the main estimates, the supplementary estimates A and supplementary estimates B. Those four things are as follows.

• (1410)

Hon. members will note that I received first reading today with respect to a bill to alter the accounts of Canada. I am going to touch on that a little more fully later. It is a sad story. We have found, largely through the work of the Comptroller General of Canada, that the previous government was recording various assets as being realizable assets on the part of the Government of Canada when in fact there was no net worth there.

We feel the time has come to make some of these revelations. We are not talking about nickels and dimes. We are no longer talking about "What's a million?" We are talking about "What's a billion?" The amount of the write-off that this House is going to be asked to consider with respect to the fiscal year 1978-79 is now over $4 billion. When we look at these main estimates which were first tabled in February of this year, there was absolutely no indication by the government of the day that there was serious doubt with respect to some of the assets they were still recording as being fair assets on the part of the Government of Canada and which, if they had written them off in the 1979 fiscal year, would have indicated their deficit was up by over $4 billion. That was never revealed.

Second, it is important to bear in mind that in considering the main estimates one must consider supplementary estimates A, which have already been tabled in this House. I would suggest, and hon. members will have ample time to do this, that they also consider supplementary estimates B, which will be introduced certainly early enough to allow hon. members to look at them before they have to pass an appropriations bill indicating their approval of the main estimates.

Finally, in the few minutes available to me I hope to touch on the question of the various liabilities that the previous government knew to exist but which they chose not to reflect in those main estimates tabled last February. In short, when the House leader of the opposition asks me whether I approve the main estimates, I have to say they can only be approved in the context of the four other elements that I have indicated. To say otherwise would have been nothing short of making a representation to this House.

Let me go further. As I have said, I welcome the opportunity to make it clear that I am recommending to the House, in the context that I have indicated, that they pass these estimates, the supplementary estimates I have tabled and those I will table in the future which, taken together, and I emphasize this, will represent this government's expenditure plans.

[Mr. Stevens.]

The situation faced by this government with respect to managing expenditures for the current fiscal year is a difficult one. We inherited a set of programs operating in full flight, if you like, on the basis of the spending authorities planned by the previous government, both in the estimates tabled last February and in the subsequent decision of that government. I emphasize that Parliament never approved those spending plans. It was dissolved on March 26 before approving interim supply. Consequently, government operations have been funded through the authority of special Governor General warrants.

This government, in addition to developing our own spending plans in some detail, had to decide on the most responsible method for obtaining parliamentary authority for the funds required to keep the government operating in the current year. One alternative was to develop, print and table in Parliament a completely new set of estimates and to throw the previous blue book away. We are a government of restraint and to have done that would have clearly been a very expensive and time-consuming exercise. The time required was much better spent, in our opinion, on developing the means and on beginning to make the necessary decisions as to how to restrict and redirect spending in 1979-80 and future years.

Consequently we chose the other alternative. We chose to table the estimates in the same form as the previous government. This enabled government operations to proceed as smoothly as possible, avoided the unnecessary cost of printing a revised book, and gave us time to begin to initiate action to control spending. However, I tabled the estimates with the clear understanding that they do not, in isolation, represent precisely how this government plans to spend public funds. The government does not intend to utilize every authority in the estimates to the precise level indicated in the estimates. We will in fact be revising the spending plans represented by the estimates by freezing some funds to be approved in the estimates and will either let those funds lapse or seek parliamentary authority through supplementary estimates for alternative spending.

Hon. members are well aware of some actions already taken by the government to alter the spending plan represented by the estimates. The level of authorized person years for 1979-80, for which salary and other funds are included in the estimates, has been reduced by about 2 per cent, with a targeted total reduction of 5,000 person years. The associated funds in the estimates will be frozen. A moratorium on all discretionary spending was imposed on departments and agencies from June 8 to October 15. This will result in more funds in the estimates lapsing unspent at the end of the year or being available to offset new spending requirements more consistent with the priorities of this government, as may be approved by Parliament in supplementary estimates.

So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that under the very difficult circumstances imposed by the fact that no estimates were approved before the fiscal year began, the government has chosen the most responsible way of obtaining parliamentary authority for the expenditure of public funds.

The technical matter on the tabling of estimates raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) draws attention to a very serious issue which I believe it is my responsibility to ensure is fully understood by this House. That issue, Mr. Speaker, is the very adequacy and validity of the over-all spending plan for 1979-80 announced by the previous government when the estimates were tabled last February. At that time the previous government assured this House that the ceiling on total outlays of the government would be $52.6 billion. "Outlays", which was the word they used, included all budgetary expenditures as well as government loans, investments and advances.

I believe there are two very serious criticisms of the plan presented to Parliament, Mr. Speaker. First, it was not an adequate disclosure and proper representation of real spending by the federal government. Second, even if one were to ignore for a moment the very limited range of government activity to which the so-called "outlays" figure applies, the $52.6 billion ceiling was not at all a realisitic figure in light of subsequent actions of that government and the economic situation that they knew to exist.

I would like to deal first with the issue of disclosure. There are three main shortcomings in the previous government's spending plan with respect to the need for full disclosure to Parliament. First, there was absolutely no indication of the level or nature of so-called "tax expenditures". These are provisions in the tax system which result in loss of revenue to the government; for example, the child tax credit and capital cost allowances for businesses. They may be just as important as direct government spending in determining the over-all level and effectiveness of government action in a given policy area. Without some effort by the government at disclosing tax expenditures, the provisions themselves are unlikely to be publicly debated and re-evaluated and it is impossible to assess the true level and effectiveness of government financial involvement.

In this connection, if time would permit, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from the statement made in this House by the then president of the Treasury Board to show how unfair was that statement last February when he initially tabled his main estimates. But let me go on.

My second point is that the previous government did not relate to its $52.6 billion spending plan borrowing by some Crown corporations with the implied guarantee of the government. Under the authority of their governing legislation, some Crown corporations, such as the Export Development Corporation, may borrow funds on the private market rather than from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. These private sector borrowings still represent a contingent liability of the Government of Canada in the order of several billion dollars which are not shown in the estimates or included in "outlays" as defined by the former government.

The third shortcoming of the former government's plan with respect to Parliament's need for full disclosure is related to accounting practices. Over a period of many years certain government expenditures were recorded as loans, investments and advances and, therefore, as assets on the books of Canada, when in fact no realizable asset had been created. The result was to distort the apparent net debt of the country.

With respect to the first two items, tax expenditures and off-budget financing, I am not suggesting that they are necessarily inappropriate or improper. Indeed, in many cases they may be thoroughly justified. What I am suggesting is that the government has a responsibility to make every effort to ensure that government activities of this type are fully disclosed to Parliament. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that as the current President of the Treasury Board they will be disclosed from my office in future. If they were not to be disclosed, Parliament could no longer properly evaluate the government's performance or the true financial impact of government policy. I say this in full recognition of the fact that, for example, there are some very difficult problems in defining and measuring tax expenditures.

But that is no excuse for doing nothing. In the United States, tax expenditure figures have been published as required by the congressional budget act since 1976. Why should we in Canada say it is impossible? This government has every intention of developing the means of making the maximum diclosure of tax expenditures and obligations created by certain Crown corporation borrowing in association with the direct expenditure plan.

The actions of the former government provide a perfect example of the difficulty of assessing government actions in the absence of such information. They tabled their $52.6 billion spending plan as a model of restraint because of the 8.9 per cent increase it showed over the spending total of the previous year. In the process, however, they had converted certain outlays into tax expenditures for 1979-80. The conversion of child benefits to tax credits with reduced family allowance payments artificially reduced the year to year growth rate in spending as defined by "outlays" because it cost about $650 million in lost revenue.

With respect to accounting practices, the government has already taken action by way of a bill, which received first reading today, to adjust the accounts of Canada. That bill contains clauses which, if passed, will correct several accounting issues and, in particular, two outstanding anomalies which have been contained in estimates of prior years. The first concerns the account known as the airports revolving fund, which at last count amounted to about $650 million and covered the operating and capital expenditures of no fewer than 22 of our national airports, despite which it is classified within the non-budgetary section of the annual estimates presentation. I have spoken about this matter before, Mr. Speaker, and I am happy to say that in the future such expenditures will be classified as budgetary in the same way as similar expenditures which are made under the air transportation program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: At the time this matter came up last March, Your Honour will recall that we, then in opposition, took great exception to some of the steps which were being taken between March 31 last year and April 1 this year. At that time I said the present administration was misrepresenting the financial position of the Government of Canada in a desperate attempt to camouflage the actual trends of federal spending and the deficit. Were it not for the fact that taxpayers' money was involved, I went on to say, the bizarre accounting practices of the administration would be worthy of an April Fool's Day joke; but there was nothing funny about what amounts to a loss of $650 million. I pointed out that, in effect, the government had put the loan into what it called suspension; they did not want to write it off. I make it clear that they did not want to write it off because, if they did, they could no longer show the figure they wished to show in relation to restraint.

I went on to point out that the date of the suspension of the loan is significant—April 1, the start of the new federal fiscal year. This meant that the procedure would not appear in the federal accounts for some time and would probably not be criticized by the Auditor General until the fiscal 1980 report was released in the fall of the subsequent year. Real restraint in federal spending, I said at that time, would not be achieved by wizardry in accounting. I added:

As long as government prefers restraint on paper to restraint in fact, none of the tough decisions on real spending restraint can be taken. Until those decisions are taken, Canada will drift ever closer to economic chaos and national bankruptcy.

On taking over as President of the Treasury Board, I found that what I had indicated as critic at that time was exactly what had transpired. Imagine the absolute audacity of the opposition House leader standing up and asking me whether, as President of the Treasury Board, I now approve of those estimates, which included the April 1 wizardry to which I have just referred!

The second situation which the bill to which I have referred will correct is the manner in which the government's share of the unemployment insurance program has been presented each year in the estimates. Although this has been shown quite properly as a budgetary expenditure, it has always been shown in arrears, the amount in the estimates representing the government's cost only up to the end of the last calendar year. To correct this anomaly and place this account on a current fiscal year basis will require an adjustment in the accounts of Canada in the order of $2.7 billion. That, Mr. Speaker, is what the House should be aware of with respect to the lack of disclosure in the previous government's spending plans.

My second major criticism is that the ceiling of $52.6 billion which the government did place on the narrowly defined outlays portion of its activity was completely unrealistic given its subsequent actions and the economic situation. The $52.6 billion total included main estimates plus $1.35 billion in reserves. When we first had a look at the books after the election, almost exactly one half of those reserves was exhausted. That was $670 million gone in the first two months of the year. More than $115 million of the expenditure cuts announced the previous August had been reinstated after the estimates were tabled. The figures published in estimates for some programs, such as equalization, were dependent on passage of legislation which to this date has never been passed. Additional costs of several hundred million dollars will result if this legislation cannot be passed this year, and even now we sense that the present opposition is obstructing the progress of this House.

Mr. Rae: Give us a bill.

Mr. Stevens: There had been very large overruns in some existing programs, such as payments to VIA Rail, and some decisions had been taken, such as enrichment of the Canadian home insulation program, which would cause charges against reserves at a later date. CHIP alone will cost at least $100 million more than what was shown in the estimates tabled in this House last February. Some non-discretionary increases in major statutory programs had occurred, but the majority of the charges against the reserves had been of a discretionary nature.

That left this government in an untenable position. After two months into the year only half the reserves within the $52.6 billion ceiling were left, and the really major cost increases, such as the oil import compensation program due to huge OPEC price increases, still had to be accommodated somehow.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the difficulties experienced with the tabling of estimates result from the inadequate and unrealistic nature of the spending plan announced by the previous government. That plan did not provide adequate information to Parliament. It also included a figure for total outlays which is unrealistic in light of subsequent action by that government in the economic circumstances.

Nevertheless, I am recommending, as I have said, that the House approve the authorities reflected in these estimates, because we have concluded that it is the best means of ensuring an orderly transition to the spending plans of the new government without undue interruption of public services and government operations.

What I wish to make clear, however, is that I am not assuming responsibility for the expenditure policies of the previous government which gave rise to the need for these funds to be provided by the House. The policies of this government will be reflected in future supplementary estimates and in new legislation, such as the bill covering adjustments to the accounts of Canada and the forthcoming Crown corporations bill. In addition, as we know, shortly there will be a budget brought in by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie).

In short, it is a long, tangled story which I know the previous government, now the official opposition, only wish could be dropped or obliterated from the records of Canada.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my first speech in the House of Commons on a personal note by dedicating my words to the memory of my youngest brother, Robert James Blaikie, who worked very hard on the Winnipeg-Birds Hill NDP sign crew during the spring election campaign but who did not live to see me take my seat in this House because he was struck down by a truck, through no fault of his own, while riding his motorcycle home from the beach last summer.

But, more importantly, in the final analysis it is to the future of all the little brothers and sisters of the world, born and yet to be born, that I wish to address my remarks this afternoon. Those who survive may yet be the unlucky ones.

I understand the tradition of Parliament to be that I should initially say something about the riding which I represent, and this I am glad to do. The riding of Winnipeg-Birds Hill is a new riding comprising in part the southern and urban portion of the old federal riding of Selkirk and the town of Transcona, formerly a part of the federal riding of St. Boniface. I come from Transcona, I am the first person born and raised in Transcona to sit in this House, and for that privilege I thank all the people of Winnipeg-Birds Hill who supported me on May 22 as well as those in Winnipeg-Birds Hill who worked so hard during the election compaign for the NDP.

Winnipeg-Birds Hill is a fairly large and fairly typical urban area throughout most of its parts, with the exception of its northern edge, which is still, and hopefully will continue to be, given over to market gardening and a more rural lifestyle. It is a riding of hardworking people who are paying the bill for this country while corporations and those who run them hide from giving their fair share through perceiving tax loopholes and tax shelters as an opportunity for virtue rather than as the temptation to vice which they in fact are.

The largest single employer in Winnipeg-Birds Hill is the largest single employer in all of Winnipeg, and that is Canadian National Railways, at whose Transcona main repair shops and Symington Yard work many of the people of Winnipeg-Birds Hill. I worked there myself as a labourer during summers—and sometimes during the winters as well—while going to university from 1969 to 1974.

It has often been thought and, more recently, said by those who lack foresight and/or by those who have a vested financial interest in highways and related industries that the railroad is on its way out, particularly passenger rail. How anything like that could be said in full knowledge of the energy crisis and in full knowledge of the complete and total supremacy of rail transport over highway transport when it comes to concern about energy is beyond me.

Let me serve notice that any government which wishes to convince me and my constituents in Winnipeg-Birds Hill that it is serious about energy conservation will have to show the wisdom to invest large amounts of money in the modernization and marketing of rail transport in Canada. Nevertheless, one can only be pessimistic about this in view of this government's conceptual inability to distinguish between short-term government spending and long-term government investment, which produces assets and the economic infrastructure which benefits generations to come. No greater example of this kind of conceptual blindness could have been given to us this afternoon than the speech made by the previous speaker.

With respect to passenger rail in particular, this government ought to seek changes in the situation of VIA Rail, the institution set up by the former Liberal government. It appears to preside over the disappearance rather than the revival of passenger rail in Canada. Between old equipment, infrequent service to many areas and collaboration to keep the price of bus travel below the price of passenger rail, there is little to be optimistic about in this area of concern. Just the other day the announcement of the decision to have passengers change trains in Winnipeg late at night could hardly be interpreted as anything but an attack on passenger rail in this country.

The distinction between the short-term and inadequate conceptual framework of this government concerning spending and a longer term, more substantial political vision brings me to the point in my speech where I wish to speak on a broader philosophical level about how this government and the world view which it represents is leading us down the road to destruction. Fundamentally, of course, it is the same road down which the previous government was leading us. The difference is that the former government was leading us there out of cowardice and out of fear to stand up and say that this is the wrong road, whereas this government will lead us there with zeal and a naivete about the world which would be laughable if it were not so tragic. It is hard to know which government is the more to be pitied.

Allow me to elaborate on the error of the direction in which this government so proudly and self-righteously is leading the Canadian people. For many years now, indeed for those centuries that have passed since the beginning of the industrial revolution, the western world, particularly North America, has been guided more or less by what is properly known as Liberal economic doctrine, or the doctrine of the marketplace, as the final adjudicator of what will happen for the good and what will not.

Under this system, there is no question that there has been an incredible increase in the material well-being of a large portion of the world, and thus the accolades for free enterprise that we so often hear from members across the way, not to mention members to the right of our caucus—and, make no mistake, they are where they belong, to the right of us, despite the last minute and hypocritical moans of compassion for the oppressed that we have been treated to this last week or so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: But this economic growth that the champions of free enterprise are so fond of citing did not happen in a vacuum. It happened at the same time as whole new continents were conquered by the west and technologies improved and developed for the extraction, refinement and secondary manufacturing of resources.

All this growth was had at great cost in human life and basic human justice. Formerly independent countries were subjected to colonial rule; aboriginal peoples and their cultures were held in contempt and destroyed; traditional and renewable resource economics were dislocated for the profit of the powerful, and many within the powerful industrial nations themselves were reduced to starvation and the slavery of necessity as they streamed into the factories to try to eke out a living.

This was capitalism at its worse, the kind of capitalism we have now exported to the Third World. At home, however, the development of unions at no small cost in human suffering, the development of orderly marketing in some areas, either through government control or private sector monopoly, and the development of government regulation and government ownership for the public interest, have blunted the effects of raw competition and profit seeking.

At the same time, we have seen the development of large multinational corporations whose power overshawdows that of most nations of the world and who are able to blackmail and ruin national economies at will. We have seen the slowing down of the western world economically as we come to the limits of our ability to dominate the planet, not just for economic reasons, but also for environmental and physical reasons as pollution increases and resources are depleted. We have been able to observe that, in spite of all the wind which passes on the other side about opportunity and progress, hundreds of thousands of Canadians live without work, without a decent standard of living, without hope for a better life. Finally, at the same time we have seen a gradual erosion of community life, of family life and of meaning. Life is meaningless for so many people. We produce and consume, we keep the economy going, we are told to be good consumers. We exist for the sake of the economy. I am reminded of Tommy Douglas' excellent interpretation of the biblical teaching that the economy is made for man, not the man for economy.

This short historical sketch raises three questions: the question of power, that of limit, and that of meaning. All of them are related to the future.

On the question of power, it is customary to hear conversations about big government, big business, and big labour, with much emphasis on increasing power of government. I am no promoter of bureaucracy but when it comes to a choice between big government and big business—because in this country there is no such thing as big labour—let me say why I come down on the side of government. It is not a question of bigness versus smallness, or government versus the individual. All this talk about the individual and individual freedom as justification for letting large corporations do what they want is evidence of complete blindness to reality on the part of some and of cheap political jingoism on the part of others. One would like to think that it is the leaders who are the jingoists and the followers who are the dupes, but listening to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) one suspects it is the other way around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Corporations are not individuals by any twist of the imagination, and for that matter individuals are not individuals in the way we usually hear this word used by Liberals and Conservatives. We have our being in relation to others and we try to be rugged individuals at our peril and to the peril of the world.

I was talking about power, Mr. Speaker. Power must be made accountable, and if the choice is not between big and small but rather who is going to be big until we can decentralize our lives a bit more through the development of technologies which require less centralization, then, given this choice, I say that there must be more government involvement, not less. So long as we continue to have and continue to improve the democratic nature of governments so that power is more and more accountable, this will be a good thing, not a bad thing.

The alternative to this reallocation of power so as to make it more accountable to the democratic process is to continue to let very important decisions be made privately according to the criteria of maximum profit instead of public justice and survival of the human prospect. The talk on the other side about returning control to individual Canadians through privatization is a farce, a false description of the reality of allowing a few Canadians, and even more non-Canadians, through foreign ownership, to control the rest of us, those of us who cannot afford to pretend that we control something by owning even a few shares in a corporation, and for that matter may not be interested in earning a living through investment but rather through hard work in the productive or service sector of our society.

Power is to be mistrusted because it can be, and mostly is, corrupted by the vanity of human kind, expressed in control, and by a selfishness of human kind expressed through exploitation. So even the power of democratic governments must be held in constant check by a vigilant and informed citizenry. I have no illusions about the negative aspect of government, but, nonetheless, government is a more appropriate avenue of accountability than the vain hope that corporations, imprisoned as they are by the structures of profit maximization and protected by governments which think it their responsibility to give them a free hand, can ever really act substantially and in a prolonged way for the benefit of all, and particularly of those who inhabit the future.

Next to the question of power there is the question of limit, or of realizing the limits within which we act as humans in a finite universe which exists not just for our sake but for its own sake, something declared to be valuable by the creator, independent of human existence. For too long our relationship to nature has been one of domination, of viewing it as merely an instrument of our own self-interest. This has been true, to a greater or lesser extent, of all major western ideological streams, including the democratic socialist tradition. On this account, we are all in need of repentance. But this error has been compounded in many so-called advanced countries by the addition of competitive economics to the tragedy.

So we have seen the following, Mr. Speaker. Valuable resources have been depleted for no other reason than that it was profitable to sell them as fast as could be to as many as could be. When I think of all the gas and oil that would yet be available for important uses and for future development of underdeveloped as opposed to overdeveloped areas, I get sick with anger in the knowledge that this was done for no other reason than to increase the global profit margins of a few large corporations, which then had the nerve to pay little or no tax to societies whose future they so endanger.

When I think of depleted fish stocks, of soil paved over or spoiled by overfertilization for short-term yields, or of all the valuable forest that goes into packaging and bagging hamburgers that are already wrapped, all for the sake of what is innocently called marketing, I become fearful at just what kind of judgment history reserves for such a society.

Then there is the problem of pollution, that other great hallmark of the system with which members opposite are so fascinated. River after river—the English-Wabigoon river system, for instance—lake after lake—Lake Erie is the first thing that comes to mind—and place after place—one can hardly help thinking of the Sudbury basin—fouled by the great benefactors of mankind who, for all their user-pay rhetoric, when it comes to health care and other human rights have been consistently unwilling to pay the full cost of their economic activities.

The full environmental, not to mention social, costs of traditional economic development are enormous, and we have just begun to pay them. Indeed, the sons will have to pay for the sins of the fathers. Let the corporate sector bear the full cost of their activities, and let them be silent for once on the government spending required to remedy their social and environmental sins. The gleam in their own eye is so big that they are tripping over themselves with self-righteous blindness.

We live in a finite universe. What this means, among other things, is that if we continue to remain committed to an economic system which requires infinite growth to be healthy, then we are committed to a logical fallacy in theory and disaster in practice. What is worse is that this government would have us uncritically rededicate ourselves to this undesirable end, when I can think of a no more fundamentally wrong direction in which to go. Rather, we must learn to seek ways of organizing our economic life so that we do not have to grow all the time, so that everyone has enough, and so that social and environmental considerations may be given priority—a planned economy. The CCF called for it in 1933, and the need for it is relevant today in ways that J. S. Woodsworth probably could not have imagined.

Economic growth is not the solution to things that it is thought to be, both because it does not guarantee justice and because it does not fulfil the need for meaning in life. I do not say this self-righteously. I am conscious of the fact that governments of the left have not always been environmentally responsible, and that they too have been too uncritical of economic growth. What I do submit is that these errors are not inherent, are not built into the very concept of society which, for instance, we in the New Democratic Party advocate. We have the conceptual tools, and I believe also the character, to face up to these problems of limit because we are not bound within the ideological prison that members opposite find themselves in, which I submit makes them enemies of the future whether they know it or not, and for the sharper among them, whether they like it or not.

The question of meaning is the third problem which I raise concerning the direction in which this government would lead us. It is the most ironic problem of all three. As I listened over the last eight days to the speeches of the members opposite, the conviction grew in me that these men and women are their own worst enemies. They lament and they wail about the erosion of values, of hard work, of family ties, of community consciousness, of duty, and somehow imagine that this is the result of a socialist plot. It is their world view that has been running the world for the last few centuries, not ours. It is their world view that has been running the country since its inception, not ours. The failure of the system to hold the community together is their failure and no one else's. It is their failure because the one value they hold above all others is the value of economic freedom, the freedom to make a buck wherever and whenever one can and the corresponding emphasis on material wealth as the measure of a person's worth, and indeed the measure of a country's worth. It is this very value inculcated from day one, and reinforced over and over again by advertising and by Tory pamphlets, that is eating away at all the other things they hold dear.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), who is not present today, spoke last week quite eloquently about the disappearance of good agricultural land. Yet if asked to support land use planning, even if it went against the economic freedom of land developers, my money is on the prediction that he would back down. It is not socialists who have allowed the haphazard and unplanned development of our urban areas to happen; it is city councils all over this country of the same mentality as this government. Winnipeg city council is one of the worst examples of a so-called non-partisan government whose allegiance to developers knows no shame.

I have heard members opposite lament the destruction of community spirit. The Prime Minister in particular likes to go on about the value of small community life. I ask them: Who is destroying the family farm and small businesses all over this country? Not the socialists but the economics of growing multinational control, of agribusiness, and of chain stores. It was NDP provincial governments which tried through stay-options and land lease programs to maintain rural life in Canada. We are the true conservatives. We are the ones who would intervene to conserve what is valuable and good about Canadian life, rather than abandoning it to the whim and self-interest of the economically powerful in the name of this specious freedom which serves no one but the powerful themselves.

What we have before us are a sort of primitive nineteenth century classical Liberals who represent the latest revolt of the powerful against what little progress in social justice has been accomplished already. As for the Liberal party, an attempt to locate it ideologically would require that one have in one's hand the latest Gallup poll. Pragmatism is the name given to the ideology of the Liberals. Pragmatism is the name given to this lack of principle and power, and power only is the name of the ideology that the Liberal party has, in spite of its hypocritical criticisms of the government and the NDP for being ideological. It is impossible not to have an ideology. Theirs is the most despicable of all because they refuse to admit it, lest they would have to defend it, of course.

Human life cannot much longer bear the suffering which Adam Smith's invisible hand, indeed non-existent hand, has visited upon the world until now, and the disaster that it will visit upon the world should it continue to be mistakenly perceived to be there. It is clearly not the case that the best interests of all are served by allowing and encouraging everyone as individuals to pursue their own self-interest. This would be to build a house on sand, a house that will blow over as the strong winds of economic reality blow on it and various individuals, groups, or provinces scramble to protect their share of a shrinking pie, a scramble that is called "good business" when engaged in by the powerful and called "living beyond our means" when engaged in by the powerless.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: I must confess a certain sympathy for the latter category because it is my belief that when there is scarcity, it is immoral for those who are well off to decide that their standard of living is the one thing which must be protected above all else and restraint imposed on everyone else. This is the time when the commitment of the Canadian establishment to social justice is being tested and found wanting.

We must build our country not out of dreams of riches, of opening up new frontiers and all the other stuff the Prime Minister likes to go on about, but on the rock of human community expressed in the equal sharing of our country's wealth with each other and with the world. We must build it on the rock of respect for the non-human environment and the future, expressed in an economic system which does not demand growth yet which permits appropriate growth in underdeveloped areas. We must build it on the rock of democratic accountability of power, so that important decisions affecting society and its future are made in the public rather than the private sector. Only in this way will we be able to negotiate a future which we can look forward to.

In other words, to quote W. H. Auden, "We must love one another or die". The world is too small now and human actions too significant and powerful to be placed at the disposal of the marketplace and the values it represents. We have a crisis of values, but it is not the crisis that members opposite think it is. It is not only that we have seen the erosion of traditional values; we have at least one traditional value, the value placed on our economic system, which has led to the present crisis. The sooner it is dumped, the sooner we will be able to restore and refurbish those values, the passing of which is appropriately lamented.

We must love one another or die, not just through charity or the new routine platitudes of Conservatives about the voluntary sector in social services, but as the very structures of our economy, our politics, and life together as a people among other peoples comes to reflect the theological truth that, whether it fits our ideological fantasies or not, we are brothers and sisters, children of the same God who intended that we live in fellowship rather than in competition with each other, and in fellowship with Him and creation.

We have before us in this century, and particularly at this juncture, the choice between life and death, between love and continued separation from each other. We have chosen death so many times before. How long before our choices are irreversible, before we gain the whole world and lose our souls?

I have heard members opposite disparage comments like mine as so much doom crying and lack of confidence in the Canadian people. But my idea of responsible leadership is not to be a cheerleader. I am reminded of the distinction between false prophecy and true prophecy which we find in the dispute between Jeremiah and Hananiah in the Book of Jeremiah. Those who prophesy peace, who would heal the wounds of the people lightly, who are afraid to be anything but optimistic and superficial, are not to be trusted. They would save us not by repentance or change, but by more of the same.

We must amend our ways and our doings. There is no salvation in pious phrases about reduction in government spending. It is to the amending of our ways and our doings that my work in this Parliament will be directed. Thank you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I would rise—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Friesen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I realize that this is the hon. member's maiden speech and I do not want to disrupt protocol, but I wonder if he would entertain a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member ready to entertain a question?

Mr. Blaikie: Sure; why not?

Mr. Friesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for permitting me to ask a question. He has made some really quite broad statements about the guilt that the market system ought to bear for the destruction, as he describes it, of our way of life and our system. I agree that the market system has to share some of that guilt, but I would ask him if maybe the clergy should not share some of that guilt too?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I could not say everything in 30 minutes, but had I had the opportunity of commenting on the inadequacy of the clergy I would have required another 30, especially the church corporately, Mr. Speaker, for the way in which it has been an uncritical ally of our economic system for so many years. There are many in the church who have much to be repentant about, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the way in which they have thought it their religious duty to protect the interests of the powerful, but I would agree with what I think the hon. member is implying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) perhaps the House will allow me to invite the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) to read Citation 333 of Beauchesne's fifth edition which prohibits members from having any kind of exhibits in the House. It states in part:

Speakers have consistently ruled that it is improper to produce exhibits of any sort in the Chamber.

I could carry on reading the citation but I invite the hon. member to look at it, and perhaps even refer to the House of Commons Debates of June 16, 1969, at page 10,156. I would ask that the hon. member remove the nice mascot he has on his desk from the House.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker I am, of course, most willing to comply with your ruling, but I was finding this mascot of the football game that is to be played this weekend between Ottawa and Carleton Universities a little bit more bearable than some of the rantings of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, this first opportunity I have to participate in a debate in the Thirty-first Parliament is for me a pleasure and a great honour. At the outset, I would like to congratulate the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and the seconder of the motion. They showed eloquence and competence in expressing the views of their fellow citizens who have elected them to the House. I would say that indeed I appreciated the message from the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald), a member from Prince Edward Island, my neighbouring province. I must say that his compassion, his humanity and his approach to politics make of him a worthy successor to the former member for Cardigan, the minister of veterans affairs, whose attitude, approach to politics, compassion, and sense of humanity were hard to equal. I have always been impressed with the simplicity of his approach to problems and also with his compassion for and his readiness to help the ordinary people. The hon. member for Cardigan then is right to keep this approach in politics.

I want of course to pay my respects to His Excellency the Governor General and his wife, and to thank him for delivering the Speech from the Throne on October 9. I want to congratulate all the new members who have been elected to this House for the first time, and I notice that many of them are very eloquent and speak very well. I want to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on his eloquence. For the moment that is all I want to congratulate him on, but on another occasion after his maiden speech perhaps we will have the opportunity to consider the substance in a little more critical and detailed way.

Mr. Speaker, after four and a half months of this Progressive Conservative government, we are beginning to see what really is this party's philosophy. One could say that after four and a half months there was not much to be learned in the throne speech. There was not much in the speeches made in the House, or in the speech by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) this afternoon, to indicate that those people have the courage of their convictions, and would dare do as they preach. But we are beginning to see that some of them are using the power they have temporarily acquired, even if only through 36 per cent of the votes and, pursuant to the mandate they have received by this slim margin, they want to govern without showing up in the House of Commons. It took them four and a half months to gather their courage and meet the House of Commons. Now, after secret studies and discussions, they want to change radically not only the economy but the whole political and social structure of this country. I shall come back later to what the President of the Treasury Board has said because I have a few things to say about him, particularly the restraining influence he has on some hon. members opposite who are now ministers and who, I know, are compassionate men who wish the Government of Canada would do more for the Canadian people. I shall come back to this point later on.

However, one thing strikes me and it is that we have in Canada some well organized, well ordered and well financed forces which are endeavouring to destroy Canada, while the government in the Speech from the Throne does not mention the situation in Quebec which the country faces. There is absolutely nothing. I merely want to add, Mr. Speaker, that for a Francophone, an Acadian who sees, understands and reads every day what is happening in Quebec, the kind of campaign led by members opposite who constantly complained—

Mr. La Salle: You are the ones who complained.

Mr. Breau: I will come back to the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) in a little while. He can take his time and quiet down.

Mr. Speaker, when we realize that a systematic organization is trying to destroy Canada, is the federal government not brave enough or does it not know how to stop what is going on there? And yet, Mr. Speaker, it is not because the government does not want to tackle the constitutional issue, because ministers speak about it. They spoke about it in veiled terms because they did not want to do it openly, but they wanted to criticize our leader and suggest that we saw only one aspect, the Canadian policy. However, when we speak about rights to offshore resources, are we not referring to the constitutional issue? It has been stated that British Columbia and Newfoundland will obtain the ownership and not only the profits, because the previous government wanted to leave most profits from offshore resources to British Columbia and the Maritime provinces.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) refers to jurisdiction and ownership. Are these not constitutional issues? But the question of the language rights of minorities is hushed up. As the leader of the opposition, the Prime Minister made a speech last year in Montreal in which he set a high value on section 133 of the constitution which guarantees the language rights of Quebec Anglophones, all the while without saying a word of the need and desire of Francophone minorities to have their rights enshrined in the constitution. A Speech from the Throne—

Mr. La Salle: You had 16 years to do so.

Mr. Breau: Yes, my friend, we had 16 years to do so, but we had to deal with the systematic opposition not only of those of you who were sitting in the House, but also of some progressive provinces. And if the hon. member for Joliette thinks it is a bad thing, let him take the time to discuss it with the Premier of New Brunswick who is of the opinion that we should have a strong central government, and that language rights should be enshrined in the constitution.

Mr. La Salle: With the provinces!

Mr. Breau: Yes, with the provinces. So why does the hon. member not suggest that? When the Prime Minister was leader of the opposition, he did go to the trouble of making speeches on the matter. In Montreal, in his speech he insisted especially on the rights of Anglophones in Quebec. So, we took note of that. The Anglophones in Quebec should have rights. If we want the constitution to be a success, that might not be necessary today. But if language rights were guaranteed the Francophones in the constitution, it would constitute a symbol of justice and equality, it would help those among us, and I hope, across the way, who would have Canada maintained as it is. It would help us to go to those who want to break up Canada and tell them, "Listen, Canada can restore the imbalance; justice and equality can be achieved in Canada not only in principle, not only in its symbols, but also in fact."

So, I should have liked the government to have had the courage, at a time when Canada is almost breaking apart, to deal with that matter. To my mind the government will be sorry it did not over the long term. The hon. member for Joliette, the Minister of Supply and Services, may perhaps have the opportunity to explain the matter and reassure the Canadian people and the House by telling them that the position of the government has nothing to do, for instance, with the rather close relationship it has had with the PQs in the past and may still be trying to develop.

[Mr. Breau.]

Mr. La Salle: I got the information in the report of the Pepin-Robarts Commission.

Mr. Breau: Then, Mr. Speaker, the member for Joliette will have the opportunity to explain it so as to dispel all fears.

[English]

Let me come back to the question of political philosophy. The Conservative party philosophy on the economy was so well expressed by Dr. Gillies, a former distinguished member of this House, not long ago when he said that the best government is less government. That party suggests, and we heard the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) propagating this stand again today, that if the intervention of government in the economy and society, if government spending and borrowing is reduced, it will create some slack which will be picked up by the private sector.

It has been only four and a half months since the Tory administration began, and already we have seen the total failure of that philosophy. Did General Motors come to Quebec? General Motors approached the former government for assistance, and they have approached this government for assistance.

Mr. La Salle: You tried to get it during ten months.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Joliette will have time enough to speak about it. He should act like a minister and calm down. He is no longer in opposition.

[English]

When the private sector is left on its own there is no assurance that there will be the kind of economic development policy which is necessary for the country. The fact that GM is opting out of a major investment in Quebec is a sign already of the total failure of that government's philosophy with regard to the economy.

I see that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) is in the House. Have we seen any banks running to finance fishing vessels in the last four months? Have we seen any banks running to finance wharves? The minister has been told by the President of the Treasury Board, and once again in public today, that the discretionary spending of his department is frozen until October 15. The result is that not one fishing vessel subsidy has been approved since June 1, the last date the former minister had the authority to do so. Not one cent has been awarded in New Brunswick for the construction, expansion, or even the major repair of wharves. Yet do we see the private sector running to finance these services, these basic and fundamental investments which are needed for the fishing industry?

I have told the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans before in this House, and he is a man of great compassion, what the Tory party would do once it became the government, and that was that the Bay Street philosophy would be the source of their policies. Already the minister has been put down by the President of the Treasury Board and been told, "look, all these things you want for the fisheries and the Atlantic provinces are not important. We have to put this economy in order so that the people on Bay Street can read and see it in their terms". I warned the Minister of Fisheries that this would happen, and now we are seeing it in practice.

The Minister of Fisheries is not even in the inner cabinet. This is very downgrading for a member who, for months in 1971, stood in this House and argued for a separate Department of Fisheries. The former government established a separate fisheries department, but now it is not even represented in the inner cabinet. It must be very humiliating for the minister, a man of such compassion and a champion for the little man, to bear the fact that he is not a member of the inner cabinet where he could speak for the fishing industry and the fishermen in this country.

There is one other thing which has happened in the fisheries which needs to be told.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans announced on August 27 last that he would raise the cod quotas in two areas of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, namely, areas 4T and 4VN, and recently said in the House that he had been in consultation with the provinces. He said he had been in consultation with an advisory committee on groundfish fisheries in the Atlantic provinces before making that decision. I simply want to say to the minister that he has not finished answering questions on that. He has not finished explaining what happened at the July 10 meeting in St. John's, Newfoundland, with the advisory committee, tabling the minutes of those meetings, explaining why a subcommittee was set up at that meeting, and so on.

I am sure the minister in his answer did not want to ignore the situation, because he is certainly not a member who is devious and who would not want to give a complete answer. I do not doubt that, but he said there had been consultations with the provinces on higher quotas, the minister cleverly omitted to say whether or not there had been consultations on the issue of allowing boats 100 feet or more to enter the Gulf. The minister has not finished answering questions on that and he will have to answer this fundamental question involving long term policies as well a long term approach on the development of fisheries for all eastern Canada which is going to determine whether provinces located more than 200 miles away like Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and the Gaspé area in the province of Quebec, are going to be able to benefit from that new 200-mile zone.

That long-term approach is very important, Mr. Speaker. The minister did not answer whether there had been consultations with provincial governments on that issue, and the minister is going to have to answer it because, Mr. Speaker, that is the most unfair situation one can imagine. The minister may have acted somewhat hastily because he was only recently appointed a minister, so I give him the benefit of the doubt on this.

Mr. Speaker, the minister must know that the large fishing companies always tried to manipulate the groundfish advisory committee. Companies such as National Sea Products, Nickerson and two or three other fishing "tycoons" always fought the previous minister, my colleague from Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc), not only on his actions but on his long-term philosophies. They always fought him. They spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on a national advertising campaign to fight the policies of the previous minister and the previous government, who were saying that in quota allocations a regional component would be included for the first time to ensure that people in New Brunswick, the Gaspé Peninsula and Prince Edward Island, the independent fishermen with the smallest boats would have an opportunity to catch the fish that will be there thanks to better stock management and the 200-mile limit. Because it is crystal clear that the big companies that have money, that use large boats can go near the coast and anywhere where they can invest $1 million, $2 million or $3 million in 100-foot, 200-foot or even 300-foot boats. They can catch all the fish there is in a matter of weeks. The fundamental question was this: are we going to let this happen? Are we going to let go down the drain the policies of the future, the fishing licences of the future, to quotas of the future? All of a sudden the minister, who has been there two and a half months, gives something to those big companies. As I told him personally, as a new minister I give him the benefit of the doubt. But, Mr. Speaker, to the forces that have been well represented in his party for two or three years, to the forces that always opposed that policy that is fundamentally just and fair to the independent fishermen, those who cannot borrow $1 million from the bank, to those forces I say: your Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is already perceived as someone who sings to the tune of the big companies. This is how he is perceived. I hope the minister will have the courage, because it was only on November 1 he allowed large boats 100 feet and over to come into the Gulf, I hope he will have the courage to consider this question and ensure that those forces in his party which have always been opposed to the fishing policy supported by my party during its last four years in power, that those forces will not compromise his own principles which, I know, are both humanitarian and compassionate.

Mr. Speaker, I say the same thing to the hon. members for St. John's East, Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and by extension to the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), who are active in the community. That is how they got to be elected. I had the opportunity to tell them, during last December's unemployment insurance bill debate, what would happen if their party came to power, what would happen if the hon. member for York-Peel, who is now the President of the Treasury Board, had responsibility for public funds and government policies. And just look at what has happened.

Let us look at the mortgage tax credit plan. The only thing I cannot explain to myself is how the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) as Minister of Finance could screw up enough courage to propose such a program so clearly to the advantage of the regions of the country that pay the higher property taxes and the regions of the country where people buy homes traditionally and finance them by a mortgage.

Let us look at the effects on the Atlantic provinces. The province of Newfoundland has 1.84 per cent of all homes in Canada but will have 1.2 per cent of the benefits of that program. The province of New Brunswick has 2.66 per cent of all homes in Canada, and will get 1.7 per cent of the benefits. Ontario, where Bay Street is, I remind the member for St. John's East, where the President of the Treasury Board is from, where his party took the support to form a government—and maybe justifiably and I do not want to argue that at this point—Ontario has 36.8 per cent of all homes in Canada and its benefits will be 35.4 per cent.

An hon. Member: Are those the figures for the Toronto area?

Mr. Breau: No, I have not got the figures for the Toronto area. The hon. member for St John's West, when he came into the House, never showed the compassion that the hon. member for St. John's East had, but at least he showed great demagoguery speaking on how he was going to defend Newfoundlanders. One of his first speeches was on the UIC cuts of 1977. He stood in the House and said, "We are going to filibuster this bill; we are going to stop this. It is terrible for Newfoundlanders, it is terrible for maritimers". But when it came down to a vote the hon. member did not show up. I would remind the hon. member for St. John's East that he did not show up either. His party at that time could not find a devious way to oppose the bill. It found one last December.

I just hope that the hon. member for St. John's East and the hon. member for St. John's West can stop the President of the Treasury Board who is chairman, I am told, of the economic committee in cabinet under which the UIC review comes. The economic committee of cabinet is chaired by the great member for York-Peel. I hope the hon. member for St. John's East will be able to stop this terrible thing we have heard about, that they are going to come in with a two-tier system which will have the clear effect of penalizing the young people of this country and the women of this country. I want to give them all the support I can to stop this terrible thing. He is not in the inner cabinet, however, so maybe he will just hear about it down the hall when the inner cabinet has made the decision.

I moved a motion yesterday or the day before to try to put the minister in charge of DREE in the inner cabinet. His colleagues said no. Next week I am going to move a motion to have the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in the inner cabinet. I think he would be a great countervailing force to that destructor of the country, the President of the Treasury Board. If that man is allowed to continue with his philosophy he is going to create economic disaster for the four Atlantic provinces—total economic disaster—

An hon. Member: For the whole country.

Mr. Breau: —for the Atlantic provinces and, I suppose, for the whole country too. I suppose that Bay Street will be able to continue to exist, and that is about all he cares.

The President of the Treasury Board talked about the estimates and said that he did not get another set of estimates printed because it would have cost too much. He said we could not really get that changed in order to give the clear direction of the Tory government, because it would have cost too much to print another set of estimates. The philosophies and the principles of the President of the Treasury Board are not worth a few thousand bucks to have about 1,000 books printed so that this government could express what it wanted to do with the spending programs of the federal government, and so that the House of Commons could have criticized what they wanted to do. I do not buy this garbage that in four and one half months the government could not have a set of estimates printed.

In 1978 the government at the time, when the estimates had already been printed, changed those estimates to reduce government spending and divert funds elsewhere to the tune of $2 billion. Two million dollars were diverted once the estimates had been printed.

The real truth is that the President of the Treasury Board, with his colleagues in the inner cabinet and, I suppose, once in a while the outer cabinet, and once in a while the backbenchers of the Tory party, spent their time worrying about who is going to get the contracts—to make sure that Media Buying Services was going to get all the contracts for the Tory party—make sure that in the case of the Guy Favreau complex in Montreal it was a Conservative engineer that would make the revision. That was important! They have not done anything else during the summer. They could have had another set of estimates printed and have presented it to the House of Commons.

Like the Argentine fiasco where we lost about $2 billion worth of business, and the Alaska oil pipeline presented by the Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company Limited, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) answered today and yesterday that the ambassador of Canada had represented Canada's interests on that question. He very cleverly, and in a devious way, said that the Conservative government had informed the United States government about dangers to the environment, but he never talked about the overland Alaska oil line project. He said the ambassador had the job of representing government policy.

Petro-Canada had an interest in that oil line through Westcoast Transmission. Did the Canadian ambassador to the United States have a clear policy on Petro-Canada in the past four months? Can anyone stand up and say that? The Canadian ambassador does not represent anything but official government policy or clear messages from the government. Therefore, how could he assure the United States government that the Canadian government was clearly and strongly behind the Alaska oil pipeline overland route?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Because he is brighter than you are.

Mr. Breau: I agree that he is very bright. He was named by the government when we were in power.

The Prime Minister did not state that the ambassador had communicated to the U.S. government that the Canadian government was behind the overland route. He stated the ambassador had communicated to the U.S. government the concern of the Canadian government about the west coast tanker route. One does not automatically go with the other. You could reduce tanker traffic by not bringing any oil from Alaska. We are asking did he or did he not explain to the U.S. government that we were behind the Alaska gas trunk that Foothills was proposing? He has not answered that.

The President of the Treasury Board demonstrated again today that the government has done just about nothing in those four and a half months because he did not have time or did not think it worth while having another set of estimates printed. What garbage! The President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister said today that we were already obstructing the workings of this House. I give the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) notice that whatever bills he places on the order paper will be looked at carefully. That is our duty. When bringing forward appropriations, the President of the Treasury Board will have to explain in great detail, as he had us do when we were in government. He will have to explain why it is he could not have another set of estimates printed if he disagreed with the present ones. It would not have taken long. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle) could have found a friendly printer to print another set of estimates.

The Atlantic provinces are being threatened by the approach of this government in reducing government spending and intervention in the economy. We are starting to see the proof of that. We are beginning to see exactly what it is the Tory government is going to do. Apart from the ideology and philosophy of these questions, in a country like Canada you cannot pretend that you are going to represent fully the interests of people across this country by reducing the leverage and manœuvrability of the federal institution of government in spending. You cannot do that. If you give more power to the provinces, you are giving more power to Ontario—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member that his time has now expired.

Mr. Breau: In view of the agreement today that we would not ask for extended time, I will not do that.

Mr. Alex Jupp (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by joining with members on both sides of the House in offering my congratulations to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) on the occasion of his re-election as Speaker of this House.

This might be an appropriate time to bring to the attention of the House a message that was conveyed to me as a new member of Parliament as I met with electors in the longest election campaign in Canadian history. In my case it was a campaign which lasted for 14 months. Indeed, I must express my appreciation to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau), the former prime minister. It was because of his reluctance to call the election in the spring of 1978 at the end of the normal mandate of the last Parliament that I was able to visit so many electors throughout Mississauga North and thus be elected to Parliament. Were the Leader of the Opposition in his seat today, I would say to him that had he followed his own instincts and not listened to the bad advice of his bad advisers, I would not be here in this Parliament and he would likely not be on that side of the House.

My message, however, is less one of consoling hindsight to the official opposition than it is to the members on both sides of the House, particularly those who sat in the last Parliament. This institution is not held in high regard by Canadians. Indeed, some view Parliament as the only institution in the country that is run by the inmates themselves. During the division bells last week one young visitor to the House asked his friend what the noise was all about. His friend replied that he did not know, but maybe it was because one of the members escaped!

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I was given the distinct impression, in my months of house to house visiting prior to the official election call, that Canadians question the relevance of much of what goes on in the House. The first issue of Parliamentary Government, a journal which I would commend to all Canadians seriously interested in the integrity of Parliament, addresses the question in an article on "Public Opinion: Why Don't Canadians Trust Their Representatives?" and I quote:

> The behaviour of members may appear rowdy, frivolous, and unworthy of the seriousness of the matters under discussion. Where increased public understanding is the goal, there are some doubts about the ability of television to contribute to this understanding under the present broadcasting format.

I do have hope for improvement, Mr. Speaker, because of the decorum of the new members on both sides of this House. My hope is that this Thirty-first Parliament will be seen as a turning point in respect of this House and the great tradition for which it stands. Let us refrain from the catcalls, the posturing, and the irrelevance that have brought disrepute to this great democratic institution, and dedicate our presence to a serious discussion of the public issues.

On this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in tribute to the late Right Honourable John George Diefenbaker. Above all, Mr. Diefenbaker was a man who loved Parliament and the historical traditions for which it stood. We can honour his memory in no greater way than by dedicating ourselves to respecting and preserving those laws, traditions and institutions which history has proven to be the basic ingredients of any lasting progress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to be the practice of new members to say a few words about the constituency which sent them to this House. I rather suspect that, with the exception of Ottawa Centre in which the Houses of Parliament are located, more members have visited Mississauga North than any other riding in the country. This is because it is the home of the Toronto international airport. Mississauga North is the second most populous constituency in Canada. It contains the communities of Streetsville, Malton, and Cooksville, which are over a hundred years old, as well as the very new communities of Erin Mills, Meadowvale, Rockwood, and Mississauga Valleys. Its diversity is reflected in the densely populated Dixie-Bloor area, where I reside, while a few miles away abound the pastures of over 100 farms. As well it includes the picturesque communities of Applewood Acres, Applewood Hills, Applewood Heights, Fleetwood Village, and the Credit Woodlands.

It is very much a multicultural constituency, comprising citizens of over 80 countries, the majority of whom are of neither Anglo-Saxon nor French origin. I am grateful for the confidence they have placed in me as their representative in this Parliament, and pledge myself to work with you on their behalf to address the serious problems confronting our great country.

I felt compelled to enter public life because of a profound concern for the direction the previous government was leading this country. I became convinced that nothing short of a defeat of that government was necessary if Canada was going to chart out a new course and avoid the disaster that would surely come to this nation had the Canadian people voted otherwise last spring.

In the past decade, the government's share of Canada's gross national product has grown from 33.7 per cent to 41.1 per cent. What is the significance of these comparative ratios to the average Canadian? In terms of impact on our everyday lives, probably very little. However, when these figures are projected into the future they become ominous indeed. They really tell us of the extent to which government—all governments, federal, provincial, and municipal—are shaping and controlling the destiny of our political economy. It has been argued that once government controls more than 40 per cent of a nation's production the trend becomes irreversible—that the nation is on a course to inevitable state control of the means of production and distribution of all goods and services.

We have never had a referendum or bill repealing economic freedom, and there is little evidence of a consensus for a national goal of collectivism. Nevertheless, we are drifting from a society that once valued thrift, initiative, and reward for effort into one where governments are borrowing from the future to meet rising expectations which they have helped to fuel.

Almost a quarter of what the federal government now spends comes not from taxes or general revenues but by borrowing from capital markets or printing new money. In the past decade, Canadians have seen the rise of a powerful political system. The federal public service, excluding military and Crown corporation personnel, has grown from 237,000 to 317,000, an increase of 34 per cent. The operating costs of the federal government have quadrupled, and federal spending has quintupled. In the same ten-year period, taxes paid per person have increased three and three-quarter times.

It is noteworthy that if, during the period of controls, the federal government had heeded the same guidelines for restraint as they set out for the rest of us, federal expenditures would be $3.3 billion lower than they stand at present. Long before the introduction of controls which had the effect of transferring critical management decisions from the private sector to the government, there was clear evidence of a trend to turn to government as the ultimate determinant in what has been labelled the "political bargaining arena".

My concern, one which I hope goes beyond partisan considerations, is that this drift toward a larger state role will result in a boring and sterile society from which excellence, and perhaps freedom, too, will vanish. History tells us that no society can remain free in terms of civil rights or the political process when its people have transferred all significant powers to its government. It is a concern which goes beyond the prospects for our economic system to the future of Canadian society.

Civilization moves forward through ideas. The dynamics of progress of any country are essentially the dynamics of ideas—the extent to which the nation is effecitively able to develop and utilize its creative power and its human talents. The way in which ideas emerge into the mainstream of the social, cultural, political, and economic life of a nation has a great deal to do with its progress and destiny. My point is that the processes of idea creation, of national planning, of alternative futures exploration, of resource deployment and priority-setting—all of the basic processes which ultimately determine the kind of society in which future generations will live—seem to have been turned over to government. We have come to expect from government the development of the grand design because we have turned over to it the responsibility for managing, financing, and challenging social change. We must now recognize that governments are not supremely wise and infinitely perfect and that, like all human institutions, they never will be. Thus, only disaster can result when a country's ideas, knowledge, and intellectualism become subservient to government.

The time is ripe for the emergence of new approaches to social, political, and economic problems. We are entering an era when Canada and the western industrialized nations must turn to new avenues of creative power for civilization's advance. To strain all this creative power through the funnel of power politics and bureaucratic compression would defeat the very purpose of such a vital endeavour. The result would be a political monotheism that fossilizes all human progress. Our task must be to seek out the kind of initiatives which are required to bring about a rebirth of a creative free society in a dramatically new context. We must begin the creative adventure in the quest for larger truths, a higher order of morality, responsible philosophical perception, and visionary leadership.

I am not suggesting we should attempt to drive government back to its passive role of half a century ago. That is neither desirable nor possible. However, there must surely be some human alternative to the notion that all we really need to solve our problems is simply another scoop of government.

I believe there is deep concern about society's drift and the dearth of renewing ideas which comes from creeping statism. What is urgently needed before we reach the point of no return is an intelligent dialogue and debate on the sickness of an overgoverned society. Canadians are receptive to constructive proposals grounded in the public interest that promise any possible rational recovery from the malaise with which we are afflicted. The problems confronting our social institutions present seemingly insurmountable dilemmas. I am confident, however, that they can be solved in a creative society in which our citizens are encouraged to utilize their political will and optimal intelligence.

Mr. Speaker, permit me to set out a few of these ideas which I submit in the hope that they may be considered to be worthy of thought as a disciplined intellectual, if not constitutional, framework for new directions to Canada's political economy.

First, to reverse the trend to increasing government control of our private institutions, we might permit citizens to directly allocate up to $100 of their income taxes to non-profit, voluntary agencies. Organizations such as those engaged in education, recreation, sports, health, medical research, and the arts would benefit, as well as newly created agencies with new hope for financial viability. The consequences would be a reduced dependency on government, reversing the drift to state control which threatens the dynamism of a free pluralistic society, and shifting the locus of funding power from government to the hearts, minds, and purses of individual Canadians. This could have the effect of unleashing a productive synergy through the creation of new associations for the study of such apparently insoluble problems as inflation, unemployment, industrial strife, crime, poverty, and war, as well as centres for the study of alternative energy resources and alternative futures research.

Second, each Parliament should be required to balance its budget for the life of that Parliament. The last Parliament added more than $30 billion to the public debt, with interest charges more than doubling. Altering this course is both a moral and an economic imperative. We must now give thought to making it a political imperative. Governments must not be allowed to buy power by stealing from the future. To pay for what we want today, as a society, we must have the moral courage to tax our citizens and to raise the funds necessary to meet those wants. Instead of belittling the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) in the hope of political advantage, we should lend him our full moral and political support. I say to both the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) that, notwithstanding the terrible legacy of the previous decade, the people of Canada will stand behind them in the tough decisions they will have to make.

As a nation we are confronted with three real choices when it comes to government spending: first, a drastic reduction in expenditures, including cuts in programs which none of us really want to see cut; second, a major increase in revenues, largely through increased taxation, or; third, national bankruptcy. The mindless spending of the previous administration has had the effect of fueling inflation, debasing our currency, and robbing our citizens of their savings. It is the very difficult task of this administration to restore common sense to government spending, notwithstanding the opportunistic posturing of some hon. members opposite.

Third, the size of the bureaucracy should be reduced by at least 60,000, not including Crown corporations. It should then be limited according to our population growth. The centralized federal bureaucracy interferes with every aspect of our daily lives. It regulates and directs our business affairs, taps our telephones, opens our mail, misuses our tax returns, invades premises without warrant, and tries individuals in secret courts. Only an alert Parliament, aided by constitutional change, will mitigate such abuses of our liberty.

Fourth, the dates for the calling of general elections should be prescribed, every four years. We should not give prime ministers the right to play games with the electorate, with political parties and with the lives of those who offer themselves for public office. I am not advocating a limitation on parliamentary democracy. The government must at all times retain the confidence of the House of Commons. However, I believe that the calling of elections is too important to be left to the whim of prime ministers or their advisers' interpretations of the latest Gallup poll. These are just a few of the ideas I gathered from my one year of knocking on doors in Mississauga North.

I am heartened by the determination of our new Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to restore Parliament as a responsible and useful instrument of idea creation, by his frank and open communications with Parliament and the Canadian people, and by his preparedness not just to tolerate but also to encourage dissent as a useful contribution to public policy formation. These are all refreshing signs which lead me to be optimistic about the future of this Parliament, of this government and, indeed, of Canada.

Notwithstanding the legacy of serious fiscal imbalance, of an emasculated Parliament, of inflation, of unemployment, of debt and of confrontation—all of the factors which have contributed to our national malaise—there is hope for this country. I am convinced, however, that if we want to restore some sense of social and economic stability and some sense of nationhood, we must give serious thought to the direction in which we are going. We Canadians, through this Parliament, require a commitment to new national goals.

We have the potential. We have a rich and diversified resource base. We have sophisticated technology which places us in the scientific forefront. We have a high level of personal savings for investment because we are a prudent people. We have some of the best cereal grain-growing lands and forests in the world. We have an educated work force. We have the potential to become self-sufficient in energy, and we have the blood of a hundred nations flowing through our veins. No other country in the world has more to offer to its people. No other country has all those ingredients. What we lacked in the past was the political will to put those ingredients together.

This is the challenge of this Parliament. This is the challenge of this government. Let us go forward with a zest for achievement, new ideas for nation building, and new ideals for excellence. Let us go forward in the creative adventure of providing new direction to Canada of which we can all be proud.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, as is customary, I would like first to congratulate the Speaker on his election. Those of us who sat through the Thirtieth Parliament are well aware of the contribution he made to Parliament in terms of increasing its prestige and enlarging its scope and power. Under Mr. Speaker we had the advent of television in the House, and in many ways his support and his working with Parliament have added immeasurably to the prestige of Parliament.

I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) for their acceptance and for nominating Mr. Speaker, with the idea that he is the very best person in the House we could possibly find to take care of the needs of this House.

It is customary for new members at the beginning of their speeches to speak about their constituencies, and I would like to do that myself, even though I have been here for two Parliaments, because my constituency, like all our constituencies, changed somewhat in the course of the last election.

The constituency I represented in the past was Fort William, part of the city of Thunder Bay. The constituency has been enlarged and has joined with a part of another constituency. It now includes the community and area around it about 140 miles from Thunder Bay, known as Atikokan. Atikokan is a mining community different from Thunder Bay, which is basically a pulp and paper and manufacturing community.

Unfortunately, in the last year Atikokan has gone through a rather bad transformation. One of the major mines has shut down, and the second mine will be shut down within the next six months or so. However, this community has shown some real fortitude and decided that it is going to continue. Its people have put together many new enterprises, and they are looking forward to the coming on stream of another mine, Bending Lake, in the next two or three years. I will be very pleased to represent the people of that area and to push as hard as I can for the coming on stream of this particular mine. We will be watching things like pipelines and how well the government handles the Foothills and other pipeline deals, which will increase the demand for iron ore and bring on the Bending Lake operation more quickly.

The city of Thunder Bay is Canada's largest grain port and one of the world's largest grain ports, if not the largest. It very seldom is mentioned in terms of the moving of grain. There was an article recently in the Toronto Star and an editorial in The Globe and Mail about all the difficulties we are having regarding the movement of grain. The articles mentioned rail problems, labour problems and so forth, but in neither of these articles was the city of Thunder Bay mentioned, even though two thirds of all the grain shipped out of this country goes through Thunder Bay, twice as much as Vancouver.

As a matter of fact, I believe it is estimated that we could move all the grain going through Churchill out through Thunder Bay in four days in any given season. The port is grossly under-utilized. We could handle twice as much grain if we had sufficient rail cars. I am concerned about this because Dr. Horner recently suggested that one of the solutions to the problem of grain movement might be to move unit trains to the east coast, bypassing Thunder Bay. Of course this does not make very much sense. In the first place, the major reason grain is not moving the way it should be is that we do not have a sufficient number of rail cars. The railways are not moving grain as they should. If we move grain by unit trains to the east coast we will need three or four times as many rail cars as would be needed to move grain just to Thunder Bay.

The second major point which must be understood is that one of the main reasons Thunder Bay is so efficient is that grain moves from Thunder Bay 2,200 miles to the open sea, or to Sept-Îsles. That grain goes out on a ship, the grain is unloaded and iron ore is brought back to Sault Ste. Marie and to some American ports. That is a very major development. It is a very major transportation activity in our country. The efficiency of Thunder Bay depends a great deal on the fact that ships do not come back with empty bottoms. I think a great deal more thought should be given to utilization, and I hope this government will consider greater utilization of the port of Thunder Bay.

Perhaps one of the misconceptions we have is that all grain moving to China, Japan and Asia must go through west coast ports. A very senior official of CPR said to me in a conversation that he is convinced that if the Crowsnest rates were not in place, it would be cheaper to move grain from Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba to Thunder Bay and by ship through the Panama Canal and to Asia than it would be to move it across the Rocky Mountains into Vancouver.

I would like to mention one other point regarding the port of Thunder Bay because I think it is important. We have not had a major labour stoppage or a major strike since 1968. To conclude on this particular point, I should like the House and the government to know that the Thunder Bay operation is very efficient, very cheap, and very under-utilized.

We in opposition have to learn this new role, much the same way as hon. members opposite, having spent many years in oppostion, have to learn the new role of government. There is no doubt about that, and it is a different process either way. I think it behooves us to give the government a bit of a chance, while we are trying to get our act together, to show what it is going to do. We should not be too critical.

For many reasons we were not as critical of the government this summer perhaps as we might have been regarding some of the things it did. I still believe they have to work things out, and I do not believe it is our job to tear them apart in the first six months or so of the operation. But I am concerned about one major trend—I am concerned and it worries me—because I think that one of the facts of life about this country is that we are very weak as a federal government.

This is not a strong federation, it is a weak federation. For a long time, under previous governments, power has been gravitating to the provinces. Some of that is desirable, some is necessary, but I think we have made mistakes. I think that one of the mistakes of which we can be accused is block funding in one form or another, the transfer of power to the provinces. I do not envy the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) his job at this point. There is so much transfer of power to the provinces in that area that federal authorities cannot control medicare the way they should be able to control it. I think these are some of the mistakes we have made.

I am seriously afraid that this government is continuing this drift, and perhaps even accelerating it. I am concerned when I hear the Prime Minister goes to Newfoundland, to British Columbia, and to Nova Scotia and talks about handing away offshore rights. In Newfoundland there is a slightly different constitutional twist to this, but certainly as regards British Columbia and Nova Scotia there is no question about what the constitutional rights are. Offshore resources belong to the people of Canada, to all of Canada. That has clearly been declared by the Supreme Court, and I think it is understood by all. There is nothing wrong with the government of this country making a deal, as we did in the past, and saying, "Okay, we will share these resources, 75 per cent to you, 25 per cent to us." But to say that these will be handed over directly to the provinces is not acceptable.

I am concerned about a series of other things that have happened. I am concerned, for instance—this is a small thing perhaps—about the transfer of Loto Canada, which was Canadian and had some merit, which supported Canadian sports, about its transfer, with considerable loss of revenue to the government. I am concerned very much about oil pricing, whether or not this is something that gives one province a very strong advantage over another province. I am concerned about the selling, giving away or transferring of Crown corporations to the private sector or, possibly, to the provinces.

I am especially concerned about PetroCan because that is something for which, from the very beginning, from the time it was first announced by the government, or even before it was announced, I and some of my colleagues here fought very hard. We fought very hard to set this very important piece into the energy policy of this country. In a country where the resources are controlled by the provinces, where the ownership of our resources is so much in the hands of foreign corporations, of multinationals, there is very little left for a federal government to do in the field of energy because we do not have power. So it is extremely and vitally important that there be an instrument of federal power in terms of energy. Perhaps the most important instrument of federal power, of federal ability to initiate and pursue energy activities in this country, is PetroCan. That is the fundamental reason why it exists, the fundamental reason why we as the government set it up.

I become annoyed when people on my left—just physically on my left, not fundamentally so—grab hold of this issue and say "This is our creation." It is not their creation, it is our creation. We have worked hard for it and we have fought against many members on the other side, including the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), to establish that company. It was done because we needed that fundamental instrument for an energy policy. We needed something to ensure we had an adequate supply of energy for all Canadians, not just for the people in this province or that province.

Members of the government may say they will allow some activities, such as the drilling that has been going on. Last year, in 1978, PetroCan was involved in over 50 per cent of the drilling in the north, and yet it is still the sixth smallest oil company in Canada. I think it was involved in the drilling of 11 out of 13 wells on the east coast, and it was responsible for such things as the Sable Island gas find. These are fundamental to the future of this country at a time when energy shortages are becoming evident to all. So I just do not understand the government that would weaken or destroy this company, that would take the assets, as the leader of the NDP has said, of this country and privatize them, socialize all the liabilities and remove the possibility of the company acting independently, having a decent cash flow and being able to function on its own.

Basically, when you take away Pacific Petroleums, you take away from PetroCan a lot of the technology to function. It will lose its role to be an eye on the industry, an industry which most Canadians do not trust. It is an industry that is not trusted, and yet we have taken away, by this apparent act of the government, the ability to look at the industry and tell us what is happening. The government has made a very major decision and we in the opposition will fight very hard, not to defeat the government so much, but to stop this change. We will fight very hard to ensure that this bill does not go through, that Canada will retain a strong instrument for an energy policy in this country.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about economic policy because I think there is a kind of misconception in the House and in the country that the high interest energy policy of the previous government is the same as the high interest energy policy of this government. I would like to spend a good deal more time on it, but I think I have only about three minutes left. However, I would like to make this point very clear.

When we were in power we had an interest rate which disturbed me. There was no question about that. I have had some real doubts about the Keynesian notion that one can manipulate seriously the money supply by the interest rate. I think that is a dead thing. It was functioning for a long time, but I think it is dead now. But there is a fundamental difference between now and then. At that particular time we were following the American interest rates, and there was some point in that. Also at that particular time the difference between the Canadian inflation rate and the Canadian interest rate was approximately 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent. So the net interest was approximately 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent. Roughly that is the situation with the American interest rate today. But the prime rate in Canada now is approximately 13.5 per cent or 14 per cent, and the inflation rate is approximately 9 per cent or 9.5 per cent. So there is about a four or five percentage point difference. The key factor is that the American spread is 1 per cent or 2 per cent and our spread is 4 per cent or 5 per cent. We do not need that kind of spread. We will be arguing very strongly against increasing interest rates further. We will be arguing very strongly for lowering interest rates because of the nature of the spread.

In conclusion, I should like to say that I am watching the government very carefully. I am very, very disturbed that we may be giving away what is vital to Canada being able to continue as a nation. I am concerned that the fundamental economic policies of the government are not in tune with the times. We will be watching those particular things during the next one, two or three years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, certainly it is an honour to have the opportunity this afternoon to participate in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I congratulate the mover and the seconder of the motion, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald) respectively, for their very articulate and excellent speeches. Congratulations are also in order to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) on his re-election to the high and respected post of Speaker of the House of Commons. The re-election is a sign of the great trust and high regard which many of us place in his ability to preside over the deliberations of this representative body. Also, may I extend my personal congratulations to the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House (Mr. McCain) and his colleagues on their appointment to important positions.

I feel honoured to have the opportunity to extend a warm welcome to all of those members who are gracing this chamber for the first time, and a great many members who have made outstanding speeches already. I feel greatly honoured to be back in this august chamber having first come here in 1972, almost seven years ago. I am deeply indebted to the voters of Parry Sound-Muskoka who, through their action, have given me the honour to represent them in the House. I assure the constituents of Parry Sound-Muskoka that their concerns and interests will remain always in the forefront of my decisions.

I would ask for a brief indulgence to pay homage to the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker whose demise has deprived the Parliament of Canada of one of its staunch supporters and participants. While one accepts his passing away with deep regret and sorrow, one cannot help but feel a vacuum in this chamber. The right hon. gentleman's monumental contributions to Canada in numerous forms will long be remembered dearly. What I may utter today will not do justice to the dedicated task of attaining some lofty principles for Canada. However, I wish to register my deep respect for what the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker stood for. I hope many of us will be able to carry on this noble task in various fields and many more must aspire to the ideals for Canada outlined in the long public career of the late right honourable gentleman.

I see nothing more befitting to grace Parliament hill than a statue of the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. I am sure one of the highlights in the visits to Ottawa and Parliament of many tourists and Canadians would be a visit to such a statue. If the excuse for the delay in erecting such a monument is financial, I am certain Canadians will donate generously toward this project. A statue will be the best tribute we can pay to the man who so strongly guarded parliamentary tradition throughout his entire lifetime.

I cannot help but feel that the entire country from coast to coast took in a breath of fresh hope on May 22. The vigour and dynamism of the new government are beginning to provide the kind of leadership the voters had hoped for in the Progressive Conservative government. I highly commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) for his outstanding speech earlier in this debate. He briefly outlined the program of action for Canada which the government expects to pursue. It is a plan which I support. Also I share the vision the Prime Minister has for Canada. We seem to have turned the corner in the matter of federal-provincial relations on to the road of co-operation and understanding. This may be our chance to bridge the rifts of the past. The new Prime Minister has displayed compassion and understanding in his dealings with the many issues confronting our nation today.

Since I represent the picturesque riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, I am delighted to have read the following in the Speech from the Throne:

> In co-operation with the provinces and industry, a national tourism strategy will be developed.

If I recall correctly, this is probably the first time tourism has been given such high recognition at the federal level. This commendable action will give rise to some form of organized approach to resolving some of the difficulties encountered by the tourism industry. It is hard to imagine that such an important industry as tourism has been on the back burner for so long. It is an industry which can help restore balance to our international trade picture. For instance, tourism earned approximately $2 billion in foreign exchange last year. Furthermore, there is every indication tourism is on its way to becoming our leading industry in income, export earnings, and employment by the end of the century. Today tourism is a labour-intensive industry, fortunately absorbing a large segment of the labour force. It employs almost 9 per cent of the Canadian work force, or approximately one million people. Tourism and travel generate an income of $11 billion a year for Canadians. This accounts for 5 per cent of our gross national product.

During the summer a special caucus committee was formed with a mandate to look into various aspects of the tourism industry. The committee heard evidence from representatives of various sectors in the industry. One matter was made abundantly clear, and that is that we should give tourism the higher profile it rightly deserves. In this regard I have on many earlier occasions spoken in favour of establishing a secretariat for tourism. Once again I voice my concern that the delay in establishing such a secretariat will continue to affect adversely this very important industry.

In the spirit of freedom of expression which the Prime Minister would like to encourage among our ranks, I should like the government to consider setting up a secretariat for tourism at the earliest, and include the responsibility for tourism in the title of the minister. The caucus committee on tourism heard representations from various groups, including Tourism Industry Associations of Canada—TIAC, the Alliance of Canadian Travel Associations—ACTA, Via Rail, and the Canadian Automobile Association. It is interesting to note that the minister responsible for tourism was in Newfoundland yesterday to meet with his provincial counterparts. There was meaningful discussion and productive dialogue.

It is interesting to note some of the recommendations that are being made to the government with regard to tourism. These are as follows: that the Canadian Government Office of Tourism—CGOT—be maintained, but that its role be examined and more clearly defined; that CGOT act as a co-ordinating body between the industry and the federal government departments, and between the federal and provincial departments of tourism; that CGOT spearhead the development of a national tourism development plan which does not operate in isolation from but, indeed, as a basic element of national policy on transportation, energy and general economic development; that there be a change of focus to include encouragement of tourism facilities development; that CGOT, in consultation with the industry and the provinces, develop a method for gathering and rapid dissemination of statistical information that will be of assistance to the tourism industry; that the title "Minister of State for International Trade" be changed to "minister of state for international trade and tourism"; that CGOT, in consultation with the provinces and the industry, co-ordinate the development of a national inventory of accommodation to determine the feasibility of a national rating system.

It has also been recommended that the minister express to the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment (Mr. Fraser) this committee's concern about the positive contribution that Parks Canada could make to the tourist industry. At the present time a great many of us feel it is too restricted. We also hope that the minister will request the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to look into the effect of eliminating Canadian regulations hindering the entry of U.S. public charters on the Canadian air industry and tourism. It is also recommended that the minister strongly recommend to the Minister of Transport that any consideration of transportation policy should include passenger rail service and its impact on tourism.

I have been impressed with the down to earth approach of the present government. In this regard I am able to substantiate that it is the first time in the history of the Parry Sound coastguard base that a Minister of Transport from Ottawa has paid an official visit. This base, which serves the vital Great Lakes area, was visited by the Minister of Transport not too long ago, in fact on September 26. This is concrete evidence that this government wants to come to grips with the reality of problems facing Canadians by getting down to talking to the people. The previous government grew so arrogant and isolated in Ottawa it forgot that its mandate came from Canadians across the country. It is no wonder that such a harsh and deserved judgment was cast upon them in the last general election.

Another example of this new form of government is the recent visit by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Nielsen) to survey flood damage around the Lake Nipissing area.

What such visits symbolize is the desire on the part of the government to listen to the concerns of average Canadians, and to govern through consensus rather than dictation. The government in Ottawa cannot become isolated from the people like its predecessor, for it plans to stay in touch with the people.

Our national defence is being brought back on the rails by the very competent and able Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon). I had the honour a week or so ago to announce on behalf of the Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs the expansion and upgrading of facilities, including the installation of new computer facilities in order to improve the surveillance of all Canadian air space. The move to establish the region operations control centre in North Bay to ensure the sovereignty of Canadian air space is a welcome move to all Canadians. The expenditure of $87 million on the upgrading of facilities and the employment of another 200 personnel in the area will certainly be a welcome boost to its economy.

While on the question of defence I must register my strong support for Canada to fulfil its commitment to participate in NATO with its other allies. Our participation in this vital body must be restored to the fullest. The recent ploys of President Brezhnev to reduce Soviet armed strength in Europe must not be taken at face value. The west must continue to be diligent and on guard even in times of détente.

The residents of Parry Sound-Muskoka have been concerned for quite some time now about the ill effects of acid rain and what it does to the many lakes in the area. I am delighted to see that the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment has placed the question of acid rain high on his list for resolution, in consultation with our southerly neighbour. All of us wish him well in his deliberations and hope the efforts will bring good news.

As most have read in a recent issue of The Globe and Mail, a committee recently released a report which is certainly very disconcerting and shocking, especially in relation to my area which is one of the greatest tourist areas in the Dominion of Canada. The facts published in the paper were that about five million metric tons of sulphur dioxide is produced in Canada annually compared with about 25.7 million metric tons in the United States, and that of the U.S. emissions, about four million metric tons flow northward, compared with between 500,000 and 700,000 tonnes that blow south from Canada. It is very easy to see that even if we are able to reduce our emissions of sulphur dioxide we are not going to make much of an impact until the United States is willing to do the same.

There is certainly great concern among those of us in Ontario because about 140 lakes in Ontario, primarily in the Sudbury area and south, which includes my area, have been acidized to the point where they will not support certain types of fish. Let us hope something will be done about this. It is also noted that forest lands do not lend themselves to alternate uses. This fact was not given too much priority at the outset, but it is certainly something that gives us a great deal to think about.

The Progressive Conservative party, as we are aware, is the party of small business. It is this government which can best provide the ideal climate for growth of small businesses. After all, small businesses, whether in the tourist industry or any other, form the backbone of the economy of our country. Individual initiative is best reflected in the number of successful businesses that operate in this country. The task before us is to create a climate which will be attractive to new investment and will draw capital from all sources.

Another point on which I would like to touch briefly relates to the throne speech. The throne speech is not the be all and end all. It is merely an indication in the most general terms of what the government intends to do during its term in office. No one ought to expect dramatic announcements. The era of dramatic pronouncements faded away with the former government. The present government will obviously be making announcements, but on an ongoing basis. Not every item could have been detailed in the Speech from the Throne.

Apart from the economic crisis, the world today faces energy crises. Canada is well endowed with energy sources, ranging from the traditional coal to the tar sands. One must be pleased with the announcement in the Speech from the Throne of the intention to make Canada self-sufficient in energy by 1990. It is essential that we strive toward this goal in order to meet the energy challenge. In this regard I would like to mention the possible exploitation of peat or muskeg for energy use. Canada has a large reservoir of peat which is yet to be tapped. I have been in touch with various government departments to investigate this further.

I have for a long time been an advocate of some changes in spouse's allowances. I am, therefore, glad to note that Parliament will be asked to extend spouse's allowances in circumstances where they are now denied. I certainly welcome the introduction of the bill to amend the Old Age Security Act to bring in the necessary changes.

In the last few days there has been a lot of hysterical talk about the economic state of our country, talk that concentrated around the unfortunate increase in interest rates. Let me assure you that no one is happy with increases in interest rates. On the other hand, one cannot easily dismiss and overcome the mess in which the Liberals left the economy. A time period of a mere five months cannot remedy the Liberal's misguided economic policies of the last dozen years.

During my election campaign I pledged to fight against an increase in interest rates. I plan to continue this fight. As a former owner of a small business, I am well aware of the damage high interest rates can inflict upon small businesses. The cost of money, especially invested money, can be prohibitive, and often stifling to the growth or basic survival of small businesses.

Every Canadian is delighted to know that the Progressive Conservative government has kept its election promise to allow property and tax credits to come into operation at the earliest opportunity. This will make the dream of owning a home a reality for many Canadians in all income brackets. In addition, this program will provide stimulus to the construction and home furnishing industries. These industries are largely Canadian-owned and will be able to generate more jobs and income. The program will provide tax relief to existing home owners, as well as provide incentives that will make home ownership more attractive to prospective home buyers. This program will go a long way to making the basic necessity, shelter, available to a greater number of Canadians than ever before.

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise and take part in this debate. First of all I want to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald). Both members acquitted themselves well, and I am sure that they will continue to be an honour and a credit to their constituents in this chamber.

I want to congratulate, too, the Speaker of this House on his re-election and also congratulate as Acting Speaker, the representative for Carleton-Charlotte, who occupies the chair today.

This throne speech was not so much a throne speech as a university calendar. It offered us not so much a course of action as a course of study. It was not so much a series of proposals for moving our country forward as a series of seminars. We take our choice of a study on cultural policy, foreign ownership, the voluntary sector, and nuclear energy.

Of course there were some indications of good things to come. I was pleased, for example, as the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) pointed out, to see the reference to improving the guidelines for the spouse's allowance. We will have to wait and see, of course, just what this means. Now that the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) has been removed from social programs, we might assume that a less hard line on selectivity will be taken on this and other social programs. Had he stayed where he was, no doubt we would have seen the application of Tory philosophy in the form of the means test, and we may still see it. But in my opinion this is not the route to go. The principles of universality in pensions and the spouse's allowance must never be tampered with.

Our senior citizens receive the pension not as a privilege but as a right. They deserve it because of their hard work throughout the years, and because of their contribution to society. They have paid into this scheme throughout their lives, and it is only fair and just that they all receive the pension in their later years. In any case, those in higher income brackets return the pension with their taxes. I hope the government will not be so foolish as to apply the means test to old age pensioners.

I was also interested to hear that amendments would be made to veterans legislation. I sincerely hope that those measures will improve the lot of those who, in many cases, gave the best years of their lives for their country, and improve the lot also of their widows and dependants. However, I am fearful of this. This government has seen fit to insult our war veterans by abolishing the Ministry of Veterans Affairs as a full time portfolio. I can tell this government that veterans across this country will not take it lying down. They are not that kind of people, and neither are their sons or daughters. Certainly that is the word which I get from Newfoundland.

My colleague, the former member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe who now occupies a position in the other place, must have been shocked and angered to hear of the disregard for veterans' rights. For years in this House he fought incessantly to improve the lot of veterans like himself. I know that Senator Ches Carter, another champion of veterans, must have been shocked and angered as well. I can tell veterans that this party will not forget them and that we will speak on their behalf in this chamber to ensure that their interests are protected. War veterans have many vivid memories. They do not easily forget, and I can tell you they will not forget this government.

There are other measures that we look forward to with great interest. I welcome the extension of the power of Parliament and greater prominence given to private members' initiatives. I should congratulate, too, my own member of Parliament, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on attaining the position he now occupies. I am sure that he will lend to that position the competence and dignity that he lent to his former position as House leader for the opposition. I welcome the reference in the throne speech to this measure.

I welcome too the suggestion of a youth employment secretariat and an employment strategy for women. I welcome the indication that the mandate of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be strengthened. This policy, a policy of our party, has been a tremendous asset to our people in improving services and expanding business in the Atlantic provinces. These are positive and progressive measures and, provided they are well thought through, they should mean a great improvement.

Most of the campaign promises of this government were quickly forgotten, shelved, or "task-forced" once they got into office. One they did keep was the transfer of ownership of offshore resources of Newfoundland. There has been a strong positive reaction to this in our province. The House misunderstands the background of this. For decades my province has been a virtual ward of central Canada. Newfoundlanders have resented coming to Ottawa cap in hand for DREE agreements and other special concessions. They have never been satisfied that equalization payments have been such a large portion of the provincial budget. They have tried desperately to change an economy where unemployment insurance payments amount to $250 million a year, ranking after wages in transportation, and ahead of wages and salaries in fishing, mining, hospitals, and education. The amount from unemployment insurance is second only to the wages and salaries we get from biggest contributor of all to the provincial economy, and that is transportation.

We have always been an independent people in the best sense of the word, and we have never been afraid of hard work. Now, with clear indications of lucrative oil discoveries off our shores, Newfoundlanders and Labradorians see an opportunity to be self-reliant, self-supporting, and to contribute to, rather than draw from, the Canadian confederation. Of course we have contributed already our culture, our history, our songs and stories, and our traditions. When Canada is searching for an identity we have at least known who we are and where we come from. But now the emphasis must be on where we are going.

It is important for us to protect our way of life from the possible disruptions that the development of oil reserves can cause. Many of our people still live in small communities by the sea, sustained by a fishing economy and the strong bonds of community life. We must ensure that development is controlled, that it is not disruptive, and that it does not fracture or overwhelm the present way of life in Newfoundland. We must ensure that development is in the best interests of our people and that they will derive both immediate and lasting benefits from it. Therefore Newfoundland must have the power to look after its interest, but we will need to know a great deal more than what is contained in the correspondence between the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the premier. What has been agreed to is ownership. What is needed is control. These are interesting words—ownership, control, jurisdiction. How will they be interpreted in legislation and possible constitutional amendments? What will be the final deal? What will be the trade-offs? We will have to wait and see, and we will be watching closely.

Newfoundland and Labrador have legitimate needs, concerns, and rights flowing from their history, but Canada has needs and concerns too. If we want to be full Canadians in every sense of the word, surely we must act to strengthen Canada and not weaken it. Newfoundlanders and Labradorians may not be entirely satisfied with their present role in confederation, but they know full well the blessings of confederation, and they want very much to be a part of this country.

We are a people who have been known for our generosity and not our selfishness. I know that while Newfoundlanders want fiercely to defend their own interests, they will want to ensure that the country is strong too, in energy supply and in every other way. I believe that both of these aims can be achieved. But we will be watching closely as the negotiations go on between Ottawa and Newfoundland. I will be watching as a Newfoundlander and as a Canadian.

In the meantime we have serious problems that are of an immediate nature. Some of the oil discoveries are near our most historic and richest fishing grounds, the Grand Banks. There is imminent danger of the non-renewable resource destroying the renewable; and the fish, Mr. Speaker, will be there, we hope, long after the oil is gone. That is why, as I said earlier, controlled development is so important. Newfoundland and Labrador have depended on, and will continue to depend on fish as the mainstay of the economy. Therefore it is urgent that a proper contingency plan for dealing with oil spills be put in place. To my knowledge there is not one. I would suggest to my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) who, I know, shares my concern, that he see to it that such a plan, together with the necessary equipment placed in Newfoundland and Labrador, is put in operation immediately. He has the authority and the responsibility for this and he should act right away.

I want to congratulate my hon. colleague from St. John's East, Mr. Speaker, and to wish him well in his portfolio as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He is the first Newfoundlander to hold that portfolio. Much will be expected of him, in his home province as well as other areas of Canada. He has distinguished himself in this chamber as a member of Parliament. I hope his policies will be in line with his proposals. He will have some tough decisions to make. For our part, Mr. Speaker, we will be watching closely to see that those decisions are in the best interests of the fishermen and of the industry as a whole.

The Speech from the Throne tells us that a white paper will be produced on the fishery. After six months in office, when there are serious problems to be resolved the best this government can do is a white paper. No doubt this is all part of the plan for greater consultation. That is fine, Mr. Speaker, but I would ask the minister what consultation there was with inshore fishermen before large vessels were allowed back in the Gulf recently to fish for cod. This is an action which was undertaken without consultation. Yet the minister has said in his Corner Brook speech and elsewhere that emphasis must be given to the inshore fishery, and that the communities along the northeast coast of Newfoundland and the coast of Labrador must be protected.

We could not agree more, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the minister in saying this, is continuing the policy of the former minister of fisheries and of this party when we formed the administration. It is the right policy. The inshore fishery is important in the Atlantic provinces, not simply from the point of view of economics, but because of our very settlement and way of life. The inshore fishery and the Atlantic lifestyle are inseparably intertwined. To tamper with one is to undermine the other. That being the case, I ask how is it that there is no money in the small craft harbour budget to build and repair desperatly needed wharves and breakwaters? How is it that millions of dollars of Canada Works funds will go unspent because small craft harbours has no budget to complement the Canada Works funds as has been done over the past several years?

This party realized how important shore facilities were, and more than tripled the budget for them in recent years. I have brought this to the attention of the government before and nothing has been done. This is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker. I quote from a recent editorial in the St. John's Evening Telegram as follows:

> Fishermen are in constant danger of losing not only their industrial property but also their lives, without adequate protection in many harbours.

It goes on to say:

> But Newfoundland now does have two cabinet ministers in Ottawa, and they are in key positions in this respect, the Finance and Fisheries portfolios. They have already showed they can use their influence and knowledge to win support from their largely farm and city-oriented colleagues for other marine and related projects, and we hope they can be just as successful in getting action on the inadequacies of our small craft havens.

I echo those sentiments. But in all fairness it is the intransigence of the "Baron of Bay Street", the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), that is the real difficulty. He has not earned his reputation as "The Slasher" without hard work, Mr. Speaker. Not only has he slashed the public works budget for marine works, he has slashed millions of dollars in the vessel subsidies so that since June no inshore fishermen anywhere in the Atlantic region or Quebec have been able to replace vessels or to build new ones, and this at a time when the Atlantic fishery is more lucrative than ever.

Thanks to the establishment of the 200-mile limit by the previous Liberal government, the fish stocks are rebuilding, the price is good, and fishermen are optimistic. At least they were optimistic until the member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) got his hands on the tiller. Whatever he is doing, one thing is certain—he is not helping the fishermen. Even his leader has said that there are areas of the Canadian economy which need stimulation. The fishery is one of those, Mr. Speaker. I do not know how we can get that message to the President of the Treasury Board, but I can tell him that fishermen in Atlantic Canada and Quebec are frustrated and angry at the lack of support they are experiencing. I suspect it is true for fishermen and pleasure boat users who need small craft harbours in all areas of Canada. Consultation is fine, but it will not float; you cannot tie your boat to it, and you cannot eat it.

I would suggest to the President of the Treasury Board that he leave the towers of Bay Street and get into Atlantic Canada. If he does, he will find out for himself how disastrous his policies will be for the fishermen in that area. If he goes to Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker, he should take time for a trip on the new Newfy Bullet. Yes, there is a Newfy Bullet, Mr. Speaker. It is not a big train, mind you. In fact, it is only one car. But it is beautifully outfitted. I listened to my colleagues in the House talk about more hopper cars for grain and the need for improvement in trains. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) mentioned that, and I certainly agree with him. We have a train now. It is confined to one car but it is a good car, a great car. It has sleeping and eating accommodations, a Cordon Bleu, even a telephone. And the President of the Treasury Board should not have any trouble getting on because the car is for VIP's only. It is for the movers and shakers in CN—at least the shakers—and the movers and shakers in the government. It is not the sort of thing you go fishing in on the 24th of May.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, they have made changes. It is no longer CN in Newfoundland but Terra Transport. Evidently, the President of the Treasury Board gave them enough money to buy a new name. No new track; no new cars; no new passengers; no new freight; a new name! I thought the Newfy joke was dead, Mr. Speaker, but it is not. It is alive and well, and running on a narrow gauge track!

The premier of the province was impressed. He said the announcement was merely cosmetic. He said, and I quote:

> This latest announcement is a very silly attempt by CN to try and indicate to the people of Newfoundland that they are really doing something. The main problem we have right now is to get CN, who are totally responsible for the railway, to spend some money on it and try to make it a viable force in transportation in this province.

Right on, Mr. Speaker! We have heard from the Tory premier of Newfoundland and we could not agree more. That is a provincial premier speaking. So we have to sit up and take notice. The words of a provincial premier are not to be taken lightly or wantonly, but soberly and in the fear of God. And by the way, why was he not consulted about this? It was not "consult", Mr. Speaker; it was "insult". Is it any wonder that Newfoundland wants more control over its own affairs?

The new government has brought back the Newfy Bullet, Mr. Speaker. But how it is going to get half a million people into that one little car escapes me. Of course the people of Labrador will not be able to travel on it anyway because there are no tracks in Labrador, not even narrow gauge. My colleague, the hon. member from St. John's East, will be amused by the reversal of roles that goes on in this House. If he looks back through Hansard or, if I do, we will find a transposition of speeches of some years ago.

I want to talk about oil prices because the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka mentioned that. He talked about small businesses and the necessity to support them. I agree with that, but I wonder how we can support them with fuel oil prices rising 14 cents per gallon and gasoline rising 24 cents per gallon. That policy will have a disastrous effect in Atlantic Canada. I noticed that one cabinet minister is reported as saying that gasoline might even rise to $1.30 per gallon. Yesterday in Ottawa The Citizen reported someone as saying that within the next couple of years it might even rise to $1.45 per gallon.

It might interest the House of Commons to know, Mr. Speaker, that in Labrador city gasoline is already $1.39 a gallon, and fuel oil, 79 cents a gallon. In Goose Bay gasoline is over $1.40 a gallon. In Rigolet and St. Anthony it is in the same range. These are people who live in northern areas of the country where the winters are long and cold. To ask those people, most of whom do not have the capacity to pay, to shoulder the burden of higher fuel prices in the interests of conservation, is ludicrous. We are not talking about people who are wasting money on luxuries. We are talking about people who are working hard to make ends meet. This government says they should pay higher prices in the interests of conservation, in accordance with the demands of the Arab countries. There are other ways to achieve conservation, Mr. Speaker, more effective, less costly, and less harmful to primary producers and those at the lower end of the income scale.

What of small businesses? My friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka who preceded me mentioned those. They are struggling to survive, in danger of being swallowed up by large corporations. What will higher energy costs do to them? Besides adding to inflation, of which we have an overdose in the Atlantic, it will be an additional hurdle they have to overcome on the road to survival.

The real burden will be on the old, the widows, the disabled, the young, those who are on fixed incomes and low incomes, those who through no fault of their own cannot help themselves. Are we to tell old age pensioners that they must burn less gas in their power boats and skidoos? In fact, are we going to tell that to fishermen, loggers or miners? This government is. It says it will increase oil $4 a barrel by the end of 1980, adding about $100 to the average annual heating bill. The government may consult with the provinces on this one, but apart from Alberta it is unlikely it will get consent. Ministers are finally going to have to bite the bullet themselves.

My friend mentioned that the ministers of tourism are meeting in Newfoundland for the first time. That is good. However, what is their position on the increase in the cost of energy and what will it do to the tourism industry? The ministers of finance will also be meeting. It will be nice to see what comes out of St. John's.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, thank you for these few short minutes. I guess I will have to do a very major editing job on my speech. Unfortunately the first thing to go will have to be the congratulations to yourself. The second thing to go will be the geography lesson. We now get down to the main body of the speech.

A hundred years ago it was important that if Canada was to survive as a distinct nation the southern border be secured. Through the actions of great statesmen such as John A. Macdonald, this was achieved and it was Canada, not our friends from the south, that took possession and developed the vacant prairies.

This having been done, it was then necessary to turn our eyes northward. However, it was not until that equally great Canadian statesman, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, gave us his vision of the north, that Canadians as a whole began to realize that the destiny of this country lies in the effective use and occupation of Canada north of that narrow belt along the United States border.

Unfortunately the vision was transitory and became blurred when new governments took office, governments with a concept of Canada restricted to the limited geographical areas of central Quebec and Ontario from which they drew their political support. With a new and progressive government in office, we can look forward to a resurrection of the Diefenbaker vision, and we in the north, who have so much to offer, can look forward to playing our full role within the Canadian confederation.

His Excellency the Governor General in his throne speech outlined the two main fields in which progress has to be made in the northern territories. They are, of course, industrial and resource development on one hand, and constitutional development on the other.

There is no sound reason why prosperity should stop at the 60th parallel. The distribution of resources does not respect political boundaries. Resources extend on both sides of the border. There is no sound underlying economic reason why Alberta enjoys the highest standard of prosperity in this country whereas a few yards over the border the state of the economy is one of neglect and stagnation.

It is necessary that the Government of Canada help in the development of resources in the Northwest Territories, resources which it holds in trust for eventual Canadian provinces to be established in the north.

The throne speech refers specifically to the minerals industry. If you let us develop our oil fields and our gas fields, if you let us develop our uranium mines, if you let us harness our extensive hydro-electric resources, we can help Canada achieve its goal of energy self-sufficiency. If you allow us to develop our deposits of base and precious metals, our fishing industry and our fur industry, by exporting these products we can help Canada balance its books and reduce its international balance of payment deficit, and help restore international confidence in the Canadian currency.

If you allow us to develop our agriculture, our forests and our tourist industry, we will generate our own sources of revenue and become less dependent on the largesse of the southern Canadian taxpayer. All we want is the opportunity to do these things, and to be treated fairly and honestly in the same way as Canadians living in the southern provinces.

For these great things to happen, Canada must be prepared to invest in the provision of the necessary infrastructure. Roads have to be built, harbours and airports constructed, electric power made available at reasonable costs. What is probably more important is that present disincentives to investment in the north have to be removed. Our taxation policies and regulatory environment should be both certain, free from arbitrary measures, and designed to encourage northern investment by Canadians. Our system of land tenure must ensure security of title, and our transportation policies must be designed so that products shipped both from and into the north can reach their destinations without being priced out of the marketplace.

In the very few minutes left I will turn to the subject of responsible government and the fact that northern Canadians to this very day are denied the full rights and privileges of Canadian citizenship. Is it conceivable that in the last quarter of the twentieth century Canada still governs part of its own country in this semi-colonial fashion?

Because we have to finish in about 60 seconds, I will dispense with the other things I had to say on the very important subject of constitutional development in the north. I would like to end by saying this. In the Northwest Territories the paternalistic socialism of the previous government has failed, and failed miserably. I am pround to stand here today as part of a new government, one unencumbered by the mistakes of the past, a government devoted to the active development of the Canadian north, a government that holds dear the principles of individual liberty and of private ownership, and most of all a government that recognizes the right of all Canadians, whether they live in the south or the north, to be masters of their own fate and controllers of their own political destiny.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to an agreement reached earlier this day, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the main motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Fretz) agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Turner: Would the government House leader tell us the business for Monday?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The first piece of legislation by the new government is the bill standing in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to correct an inequity in old age security legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order. It being after five o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.03 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

NATIONAL UNITY

RECOMMENDATIONS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT AND THE MERIT PRINCIPLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

Considering that the Quebec referendum campaign is now under way; considering that federal civil servants, as first-class citizens, will be called upon to participate actively in that campaign; considering that the employment act restricts the political participation of civil servants in the normal election process but gives no indication as to the legality of their active participation in partisan referendum activities; considering that the Progressive Conservative government cannot continue to waffle on this matter and must give clear and specific instructions with regard to this important matter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau):

[English]

That this House requests the government to amend the Public Service Employment Act and, in doing so, adopt the recommendations of the special committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle so as to allow some public servants to participate freely in political activities during elections and referendum campaigns and, secondly, to allow public servants for whom the duties of their positions vary from the first group, to participate in elections and referendums subject to request by the employee and decisions by the Public Service Commission and, thirdly, to prohibit senior executives and senior management, whose duties can be considered sensitive if they participate in elections or referendum campaigns; the foregoing to allow Canadians working in the public service to participate in good conscience and in defence of their country in the upcoming referendum.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

HUMAN RIGHTS

REQUEST THERE BE OPEN TRIAL FOR HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVISTS IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity for which there seems to be support in all parts of the House.

In view of the fact that today the trial of a number of human rights activists begins in Prague, Czechoslovakia, in view of the fact that the activities of these people are apparently the result of a civil rights movement which led to the creation of the movement known under the name of "Charter 77", and in view of the fact that Law No. 120 of the Czechoslovak Collection of Laws of October 13, 1976, includes the text of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which were signed on behalf of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic in 1968 and confirmed at the 1975 Helsinki Conference, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That this House register with the Parliament of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic, the concern and the hope of the Canadian people that these trials be conducted publicly, be open to observers and that the human and civil rights of those being tried be upheld and respected according to the spirit of the Helsinki Act.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

ISSUANCE OF WORK VISAS TO FOREIGN NATIONALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

S.O. 43

In view of the fact that a dangerous precedent has been set by the issuing of work visas in Edmonton to foreign nationals working on the dredge Aquarius under charter to Dome Petroleum, while seamen are unemployed in Vancouver, and in view of the Prime Minister's weekend statement in New Brunswick favouring future movement of Arctic resources on Canadian vessels, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration rescind work visas issued to foreign nationals and require the Aquarius and Dome Petroleum to hire Canadian ships' crews henceforth.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only upon the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IMPORTATION OF ARTICLES MANUFACTURED BY POLITICAL PRISONERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the evidence presented this morning by members of the Helsinki monitoring groups in exile, visiting Ottawa, that many articles imported into Canada are, in fact, manufactured by political prisoners in forced labour camps, and particularly steering-wheels for the Lada motor vehicle sold throughout Canada, in Camp No. 3 in Mordovia, I urge the minister to investigate and report back to the House within 90 days so that this House may consider a Canadian boycott of these kinds of goods. The motion is seconded by the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. De Bané).

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO POSSIBLE COMBINE ON LUMBER PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent necessity.

[Mrs. Mitchell.]

Given the fact that the building industry is experiencing serious difficulties, especially in the residential housing field, because the retail prices of lumber have reached a record high in Canada; given the fact that people are getting concerned because the wholesale lumber trade has become a near monopoly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy):

That the House recommend to the government an immediate investigation to find out if indeed there exists such a cartel, and report to the House at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the hon member. Under Standing Order 43, the presentation of this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ELDORADO NUCLEAR—DISPOSAL OF NUCLEAR WASTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the recently announced plan by Eldorado Nuclear to ship 5,000 gallons of radioactive acid waste across Ontario from its refinery in Port Hope to Elliot Lake, in Algoma district, considering that this decision was taken without consultation with the town council of Elliot Lake or any other elected representative, and in view of the plan by this government to locate its new uranium refinery in Hope township, on the doorstep of metropolitan Toronto, thus increasing the nuclear waste that would have to be handled in this way, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner):

That if Eldorado wishes to transfer its nuclear waste from its refining operations in Ontario to Algoma, then this House instructs the company to locate its refining operations in the Algoma district.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CALL FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF NORTHERN MINERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Northern Mineral Advisory Committee was formed by the previous government to help formulate northern mining policies, and that this committee was comprised solely of the mining industry and government representatives and did not allow the participation of other interest groups in the north, and in view of the fact that the report of this committee is inaccurate and inconsistent in many ways and that the government intends to carry out the recommendations of this committee, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development refer the report of the Northern Mineral Advisory Committee to the appropriate standing committee of the House with a request that the committee seek representation from the broad range of interests involved in or affected by mining in the north.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the terms of Standing Order 43, the presentation of this motion for debate at this time can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

ANNUAL TAX EXPENDITURE BUDGET AND REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that federal government tax expenditures represent a large and growing proportion of federal transfers and have a significant impact on the progressivity of the income tax system, and in view of the fact that these transfers are largely invisible to the public, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray):

That this House instruct the President of the Treasury Board to introduce, first, an annual tax expenditure budget which will indicate the size and nature of projected federal tax expenditures in each year; and, second, a tax expenditure report to be published each year as a part of the government's accounts which will show the tax revenues actually forgone in the form of incentives, exemptions and deductions to taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

FUTURE PRICE OF OIL—AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the last two weeks we have attempted, in this House, to get the government to tell the Canadian public what it is entitled to know, that is, the kind of oil price increases with which it is proposing to hit the public. Today we heard stories that an agreement had been reached on the weekend between the minister of energy for Alberta and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The agreement was for a $4 per barrel increase in the price of oil, which would mean that the average Canadian consumer will be taxed an additional $180 for gas and home heating oil next year.

My question is as follows: Can the minister tell the House whether an agreement or understanding, formal or informal, has been reached with the government of Alberta? Is the agreement for an unbelievable $4 a barrel more next year and, if that is not so, what were the exact figures arrived at between the two ministers on the weekend?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity the hon. member's question has given me to indicate again that these stories are of a highly speculative nature.

With respect to the question of consultation, clearly there is ongoing consultation with the affected provinces; indeed, with all the provinces. There has been an attempt, which the hon. member will know was not the case with the previous government, at having this consultative process.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The fact of the matter is that we are carrying on. There is no agreement. In fact, the reports indicated that we met in Calgary. I was not in Calgary this weekend. That will give the House an idea of exactly the accuracy of those particular reports. In fact, I know the hon. member will appreciate the fact that these consultations must take place, that whatever increase in the price of oil takes place in due course, one must always remember the consequences to our country if we do not go to energy self-sufficiency, and the cost of reliance by the people of this country upon offshore imports.

In a matter of a few years from now, I know the hon. member's party will flip-flop in respect of this energy policy. I know his concern with respect to this particular matter is very intense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister was not in Calgary during the weekend, but he was in Ottawa last Thursday when he gave the brush-off to the minister of finance and the minister of energy for Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Yet the minister of finance for Ontario has stated that the proposed energy package that was discussed could cost Ontario alone 20,000 jobs and over $1.2 billion. One hates to think what this would cost all the country if the proposed package were to be adopted.

Can the minister tell the House what package he discussed with the minister of finance and the minister of energy for Ontario on Thursday which would lead to such horrendous results if it were to be put into effect?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, again the hon. member puts a proposition before us which is patently absurd. There was no question of anything but the most generous reception that I had from the province of Ontario with respect to my discussion with them of energy options.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Of course, the hon. member would not understand this because he never experienced worth-while discussions in federal-provincial relations with the provinces when he was minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That previous minister does not understand consultation. He does not understand the give and take of discussions with the provinces. I can tell the hon. member that the discussion was one which was very productive, and was acknowledged to be productive by the province of Ontario and its very worth-while representatives.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has called the two Ontario ministers liars.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

• (1420)

Mr. Lalonde: My suggestion is that he need only look at the press report and the television interview with Mr. Miller last Friday.

REQUEST DATE OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE BE ADVANCED

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Again according to press releases, Premier Davis of Ontario is reported to have asked the Prime Minister to postpone any decision concerning the oil price increase until after the first ministers' conference scheduled for early December, so that all first ministers may discuss this issue together and in public. First of all, is it true that the Prime Minister has turned down Premier Davis' request and, if so, is he willing to set up the first ministers' conference at an earlier date so that all our first ministers may discuss this issue together and in public, and not simply once in a while during bilateral secret meetings or episodical telephone conversations?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should say, first of all, that the practice of calling provincial ministers liars went out of style when the hon. gentleman's party went out of office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: If I may try to reply with a measure of precision to a precise question, I should like to say to the hon. member that I have, indeed, received a telegram from the Ontario premier to the effect that before making a decision it would be preferable if all first ministers had the opportunity to discuss in a public forum a consensus concerning energy-connected issues. Premier Davis suggested that a federal-provincial conference be held in December. During the press conference I held last Friday, I indicated that December would be too late. We are looking into several other options, including holding before December a special meeting with all provincial premiers.

[English]

USE OF ADDITIONAL REVENUES DERIVED FROM INCREASED ENERGY PRICES

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given this government's professed commitment to extensive consultation, and the fact that the government has had five months in which to establish its energy policy, will the minister tell the House if he has consulted with the multinational oil companies with regard to the price increases he is about to announce, and have they given him assurance that the additional revenues which will accrue to them will be used in Canada for exploration and development in the energy field?

In other words, has he been assured that the multinationals will not use these funds to expand their already substantial program of diversification into non-energy related areas?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that there has been broadly-based consultation with all segments of the industry, including representatives from CPA and IPAC. We have had consultation at the official level. I have met with them myself and discussed energy policy and the implications of that energy policy and energy self-sufficiency.

We will require the co-operation of Canadian and foreign corporations in this country in order to achieve our goal of energy self-sufficiency. In fact, a monitoring process has been taking place in respect of the profits of the oil companies, and this indicates that something in the vicinity of 95 per cent of the profits of the oil companies has been reinvested in Canada.

Our intention is to encourage that kind of investment, and we will try as much as possible to bring all elements, both in respect of private industry and government involvement in that direction as well, to assure and reassure that all the resources we have in Canada are pointed toward the achievement of energy self-sufficiency in Canada, so we will not be subject to the very questionable offshore import requirements that we would face down the road if we carried out the policy enunciated by the hon. member's colleague, the critic for energy of the Liberal party.

Mr. Evans: Out of the $4 per barrel increase, and we can only assume that that will be the price increase brought forward by this government, the federal government will get something in the range of $1.20 per barrel.

Will the minister tell the House to what specific uses the government intends to put this $1.20 per barrel in revenue, and what proportion will go to each of those uses?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I indicated earlier to the hon. member for Outremont that there is no agreement yet as to the question of pricing. As a result, the hon. member's question is hypothetical in nature.

When a decision has been arrived at, it will be announced to this House and an indication will be given during the course of the announcement with respect to applications. We are hoping that this announcement will take place before too long. We are carrying out full consultations which will ensure the best policy for our country.

EFFECT OF OIL PRICE INCREASES ON RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If he will not tell the House what this projected price increase will be, I would like to ask him this question. Given the fact that his department has made projections of the economic impact of various price scenarios, can he confirm to the House that a $4 increase in the cost of a barrel of oil will add an additional 2 per cent to the inflation rate, pushing us into double-digit inflation, causing about another 80,000 Canadians to be unemployed and reducing the growth of the gross national product by at least 1 per cent or, in other words, pushing us into a severe recession?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in fact, part of the discussions which have taken place thus far have involved the implications of an increase in pricing; and the hon. member is quite correct, that that whole matter is receiving very serious attention.

There is no question that there is a difference in points of view, and some discussions have taken place with respect to the implications of a price increase. I do not accept the figures which the hon. member has indicated as being categorical and not subject to question. However, I would ask the hon. member, in consideration of his position and his stand-pat, do-nothing approach which he is now suggesting, to consider the implications of such a policy to a country in which the production of oil is now reducing and going downhill to the point where, unless we take some very important initiatives in terms of energy policy—

Mr. Broadbent: By keeping Petro-Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has interjected again, without any substance, as usual. He refers often, in the case of Petro-Canada, to the question of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, the hon. minister is taking quite a long time to answer.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In answer to the Leader of the New Democratic Party—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, that was a lot of talk, but there were no precise figures and there was no answer to the question. Would the minister table those projections, so we can see for ourselves what the negative impact would be?

By way of a supplementary question, considering that the government is moving toward major price increases in oil, which will mean even higher profits for the oil companies, while at the same time it is concluding a six-year investigation into those very same oil companies for price-fixing, I wonder if the minister will give a commitment that before any price increase proceeds, the report of the combines investigation branch will be made public, so that we will not have the case of just adding extra money to the coffers of these companies which are ripping off the consumer?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the hon. member, for whom I have a great deal of respect, would use the protection of the House of Commons to make allegations before an investigation has been completed. The fact is, and it is no secret that there is an investigation taking place, that until those conclusions are brought before us and the director of prosecutions has been able to assess whether or not charges will be laid from the standpoint raised by the hon. member, I myself would not want to draw any conclusions in this House.

Upon the conclusion of our consultations, we will be bringing forward a comprehensive policy with respect to energy which will take into account the macro-economic effects of an increase in prices. It is also my intention, in the course of a report to the House after the consultations have taken place, to table in the House, by way of a green paper, a statement with respect to the results of the discussions which have taken place concerning certain assumptions, including the effects, economic and otherwise, of our policies.

Mr. Lalonde: Why not a blue paper?

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the government does not undertake a six-year investigation unless it is pretty sure it has charges that will be laid. I understand those charges will be pending.

My final question is this: How does the minister reconcile privatizing Petro-Canada so that it will play by the same rules as the private sector, when this private sector has not acted in the public interest, as witnessed by the fact that charges of price-fixing will be laid shortly? Would the minister not agree that Petro-Canada, as a Crown corporation, would help ensure that there is real competition and fair market practices are being carried on in this vital industry?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the hon. member's leader keeps talking about an analogy with the Arrow situation that took place under the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. Unfortunately, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has got the bow turned around.

I only want to say that the assumption the hon. member makes with respect to charges is one that he can only make on the basis of assumption, under the protection of this House. There have been no charges laid, and until such time as they are, I am not going to comment on that kind of speculation. The second point, with reference to Petro-Canada, is simply irrelevant with respect to the question he raised relating to our energy policy.

[Mr. Symes.]

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS TO PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS RESPECTING MEANS TEST

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I believe the rules will not allow me to question a minister on his former responsibility, if he had any.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister, possibly the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and perhaps the minister responsible for the social envelope and, God help us, the President of the Treasury Board, who assumes the responsibility for the speech made in Montreal by the former minister of state for social affairs in which he indicated that his government was looking seriously at the possibility of modifying the old age pension plan to introduce the odious means test, which everyone in this House over age 30 remembers very well and knows what it means?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gather the former minister, who is not quite accustomed to being on that side of the House, although he will have 15 or 20 years to grow accustomed to it, was trying to ask whether the statement attributed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology represented government policy.

First, the statement attributed to the minister by the press was an inaccurate attribution and, second, it does not reflect the policy of the government.

FUNDING OF SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Since this envelope system presumes, or assumes, that expenditures within a department or within an area will be covered by cutting down programs in other areas, may I ask where he will take the money from, or what he will cut or reduce to cover the costs of Bill C-6, which is some $4 million per year; that is, the spouse's allowance?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may know, the bill will be before us this afternoon. That was a commitment by this party during the election. It is a commitment which this government will keep as a consequence. Its effect on the over-all resources available for retirement income are not affected.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

BUDGET FOR PROGRAM—POSSIBLE SAVINGS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. It has been rumoured fairly well through the press that he has instructed the incoming new deputy minister for social development, when this department is set up, to look for savings of about $1.5 billion in the whole area of social development.

I would ask the President of the Treasury Board if this rumour is true, and where he expects to find this particular type of saving.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the rumour is just not true.

YOUNG CANADA WORKS

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL MEET PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS TO ESTABLISH PROGRAM

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. During the electoral campaign, the present Prime Minister promised to pay the provinces $15 million to boost home care for the elderly. Has that amount already been paid to the provinces, or does the minister intend to meet with his provincial counterparts to discuss the matter and establish a similar program which would rectify an intolerable situation?

Finally, if that is not the case, would he meet with his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, in order to revise the amounts to be paid and make a more equitable distribution of Canada Works' money so that all ridings may receive the minimum which is essential to maintain similar programs which the Liberal party had already established throughout the country?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may know that we have, both within the ministry and, indeed, with provincial counterparts, opportunities to discuss just that matter.

I will be meeting with my provincial counterparts in November, and again perhaps in the new year. We have a whole range of matters that need to be discussed which were left over from the previous administration.

ENERGY

REQUEST PRICE OF NATURAL GAS NOT BE INCREASED

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As there never has been—

An hon. Member: Good luck.

Mr. Hees: You are now going to get a constructive question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: As there never has been any economic justification for increasing the price of natural gas when oil prices are increased following OPEC oil price rises, will the government give very serious consideration to not increasing the price of natural gas when the price of oil is increased in the future, so that natural gas from our present sources of supply and from the more than 7,000 shut-in gas wells in this country will become more attractive for heating homes, stores, office buildings and industrial production, and in this way help a great deal to bring about self-sufficiency in oil for use in transportation and plastics at the earliest possible moment?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for his usual good question, constructive as it is. I recommend to the hon. member for Outremont, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie that they take a lesson from him with respect to the kind of constructive question that is asked in this House.

I, naturally, take any suggestion made by the hon. member very seriously and will give consideration to matters raised by him.

QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS RESPECTING ITT-RAYONIER RESUMING OPERATIONS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Last September, there was an announcement by ITT Rayonier, an American multinational, that the company had the definite intention of closing its plant in Port Cartier, which meant that over 1,300 workers would lose their jobs. Considering that that multinational company has already received over $119 million in subventions from the federal and provincial governments since 1972, over $20 million from DREE, and considering also that the deputy minister, Mr. Robert Montreuil, declared in September that his department was prepared to give financial support to any group or firm interested in the ownership of that plant, could the minister tell the House if his department has made some attempts to find buyers, which would make it possible to reopen that plant, save these workers' jobs and also millions of dollars already invested?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, may I compliment my friend for his facility in the other official language.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: He is correct, Mr. Speaker, in his statement that we are very concerned about the matter and are working with the province of Quebec, perhaps through a subsidiary forest agreement, to see if something can be done to alleviate the situation. No final decision has been made, but we are sympathetic and will do everything we can through my department to alleviate the situation.

QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS RESPECTING ITT RAYONIER RESUMING OPERATIONS—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister.

In view of the far-reaching effects that the closing of this plant will have on the economy of that part of the North Shore, ITT being one of the main employers in that area, and in view of the obvious mismanagement on the part of the government and the multinational which was granted over $100 million in public funds, does the Prime Minister, together with the Quebec government, intend to ask for a public inquiry to shed light on this matter and also under the Quebec-Ottawa agreement on the modernization of the paper industry in Quebec, does he intend to take over, jointly with Quebec, the management of this company?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first question, we do not intend to conduct such an inquiry. I want to wait until I have the reply of the minister responsible in order to have all the details. As he indicated, the government is presently considering all the aspects of this truly serious situation. As for the possibility of a co-management arrangement involving the government of Quebec and the Government of Canada, this is not something we are considering at this point.

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REPORT ON PENSION REVENUE POLICY

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the government intend to make public the report of the interdepartmental task force on pension revenue policy?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will hear in the debate on the bill this afternoon, I will be informing the House that the report will be published.

[Mr. MacKay.]

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, if the minister intends to make the report public, could he tell me when, and whether it will be referred to a parliamentary committee?

[English]

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated on an earlier occasion, the report is in translation and as soon as the translation is completed, it will be published. Along with a number of other studies, it will be brought forward to the parliamentary committee that considers pensions and retirement income.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS IN RADIO OPERATORS DISPUTE

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I am sure the minister is aware of the inherent dangers caused by the air radio operators strike.

In view of the fact that there have been no regular flights in and out of Wabush, Labrador, since Friday, causing undue delay and stoppage to passenger travel, mail and freight movement, and in view of the fact that this same scene is repeated across northern Canada and rural Canada, can the minister advise the House the present status of negotiations between his government and the employees, and when he expects there might be a resolution of this difficulty?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I, too, regret the inconvenience and delay that is occurring because of the strike. The mediator met with both parties on Saturday. He is meeting again with union and management officials, and we hope there will be a resumption of the bargaining process in the very near future.

SHIPPING

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING SUBSIDY TO CLARKE STEAMSHIP LTD.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the minister's department to pay a subsidy to Clarke Steamship Limited to compete against CN Marine, which is a Crown corporation operating in north Sydney, an area of high unemployment? If so, why is this the policy of his department?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the particular contract to which the hon. member refers is something which has been in place for quite some time. It is a matter that I and my departmental officials are currently placing under review.

THE ADMINISTRATION

STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER ON LEGALITY OF BREAKING LAW WITH PERMISSION OF CABINET MEMBER

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is a question on which I have been hoping to have an opportunity to get some information since May 22. It touches on the fundamental principles of justice in this country.

I would like the Prime Minister to tell the House and Canadians what, exactly he meant when he advised the press soon after the election that the law could be broken in this country provided it had the permission and approval of a cabinet minister.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that statement was made in the context of discussions on how we can ensure that any activities that might be seen to be beyond the law, by law enforcement agencies are, in fact, maintained within the context of law by giving consideration to the adaptation in Canada of a practice that exists in other jurisdictions requiring the approval by a minister responsible to Parliament of any extraordinary activities by a police agent.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Justice is nowhere near this House to answer questions of this nature, might the Prime Minister confirm if, in fact, the law has been broken under those circumstances; and, if so, how many times since that statement was made?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the former government established the McDonald royal commission, which had as part of its mandate to look into this broad question. The report of that commission is expected some time, I believe, in June of next year and we look forward to receiving the report.

If the hon. member is asking me a question as to whether or not there have been any activities authorized by ministers of the Crown since June 5, the answer is that there have been none.

IMMIGRATION

POLICY RESPECTING FUTURE IMMIGRATION

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration: it has to do with the Vietnamese refugees.

Last summer, the minister announced that to provide leadership and challenge to the Canadian people in sponsoring boat people, it would match private sponsorships on a one-to-one basis, but it vastly underestimated the response of the Canadian people. In fact, the 50,000 quota is virtually accounted for at present.

I ask the minister, in view of that, whether the government intends to provide any continuing leadership and challenge to the Canadian people; or was the parliamentary secretary to the minister speaking accurately on Friday night when he indicated that nothing more would be done by this government until the 50,000 boat people had arrived in Canada?

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the reference made by the hon. member opposite to the grand success of the private sponsorships of the Indo-Chinese refugee program is welcomed by this government. Indeed, this is one of the great success stories and an example of a partnership between government and people. The fact that approximately 19,897 private sponsorships have already been arranged is living proof of the fact that the program is a great success. However, I would say to the hon. member opposite that we are only halfway home in terms of the efforts of both the people of Canada and the government to make this program work.

It is quite one thing to have close to 20,000 private sponsors arranged; it is quite another thing to actually, physically, get the refugees from Southeast Asia to Canada: I refer to the transportation, the processing, the staging centres and, most important, the resettlement endeavour which require the efforts and co-operation of the private sector. As I have said on many occasions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: It is not a debate; the Address is over.

AGRICULTURE

MUTILATION OF CATTLE—STEPS TO DETERMINE CAUSE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, but first a short explanation is required.

A strange mutilation of excellent cattle has been occurring in Alberta. Cattle have been mysteriously killed, sex organs have been removed, and sometimes the eyes and tongues have been removed, many times by an expert knife-man.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: To date neither the cause of death nor the culprits have been ascertained. My question to the minister is this: Are the federal Department of Agriculture and the federal veterinary surgeons co-operating with the Alberta government to determine the cause or causes of these deaths and to apprehend the culprits?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question, I certainly share this concern. It is my understanding, after consultation with my colleague, the Solicitor General, that this situation started first of all in the United States and then moved into the province of Alberta. The latest report that I have indicates that this situation is now occurring in the province of Saskatchewan.

I can assure hon. members that the RCMP are investigating the situation, and I have been in contact with officials in my department to help the health of animals branch and we will certainly co-operate in any way that we possibly can to resolve this very serious and bizarre situation.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CANADA-U.S. DISCUSSIONS ON WEST COAST OIL PORTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. It is not quite as earthy as the last question, but it concerns the matter of west coast oil ports which the hon. member for Skeena and I first raised in the House on October 11.

My question is this: In light of the fact that the United States department of energy released a report in Washington just last week entitled "Petroleum Supply Alternatives for the Northern Tier and Inland States for the Year 2000", which questions the need to build any sort of west to east transportation system—whether pipeline or tanker route—is the minister familiar with the report, and what specific dealings has the minister had with the Americans on the subject of an oil port since October 11, 1979?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the report and I have had no direct dealings with any American officials.

SMALL BUSINESS

FUNDING OF SMALL BUSINESS INTERN PROGRAM

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry. It has been reported that the funding of the small business intern program has been exhausted, despite the fact that the program does not expire for several months.

Since the ongoing needs of Canadian small business owners for essential management education will, accordingly, not be met, would the minister tell us whether the premature termination of the small business intern program funding is simply the result of Conservative cutbacks, or whether it is the direct consequence of the sucess of that program?

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): Mr. Speaker, the small business intern program is one of the successes of the ministry. It was allocated $5 million of funding; the applications cleaned that allocation out in the very early stages of the program and we are out of funds: there are no funds available for it at the moment.

This program has a very high priority with the ministry and we shall be making application for its extension.

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): My supplementary is directed to the same minister. Because of inflation, does the government intend to provide additional funds to ensure that the program is maintained until its completion, or shall we conclude that that worthy program will be completely scrapped like so many others?

[English]

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): I think my previous answer covers the supplementary. The funds originally allocated to the program have been expended. Our experience with the program is that it is a very popular and successful one. We shall be seeking additional funding for it.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR DIP

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Matapédia-Matane): Is the minister aware that the DIP program, which is aimed at supporting Canadian businesses that want to export in the high technology, communications and transport fields, is presently short of funds? The committee responsible for processing the various applications in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has approved many of those applications from Canadian businesses which want to export but unfortunately DIP is short of funds. Can the minister give the House some hope that he will be able to obtain an additional amount from the Treasury Board to help those Canadian industries which sell their products on international markets?

[English]

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the ministry is devoting a great deal of time to studying the resources available in the economic development envelope. These resources are naturally limited and we want them applied as much as possible to the winners among our industries. The DIP program is a very successful one and a very needed program. It retains a high degree of interest and thrust from the department.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

POLICY ON FUNDING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I am sure it will be of interest to him because I know that for a number of years he was a member of the committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts as I was. It concerns a statement made about a year ago by the new Secretary of State that federal cultural institutions were starved for funding, and a further statement made shortly after that by the then secretary of state, Mr. Roberts, promising $24 million of Loto Canada funds to support federal cultural institutions.

Can the Prime Minister confirm reports that out of the total of $24 million which will be forthcoming under the new agreement in 1980, $12 million will be going to cultural institutions, for a net loss of $10 million on the basis of the promise made by the previous government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): I will have to await the return to the House of the Secretary of State, who is in Toronto today meeting with provincial ministers of education, and ask him to comment on the details of any disposition of revenue from Loto Canada.

POST OFFICE

DELAY IN SERVICES AT CALGARY, ALTA.

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment. Has he any information to give the House about the serious situation which has developed in the Calgary post office sorting station, where over 35 semi-trailer trucks carrying mail have been backed up? Has this situation been corrected?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): If the hon. member, in his question, is referring to a back-up in the last few days, I am not aware of it. I am aware that there was a serious situation in Calgary for a number of weeks. It arose as a result of some people leaving and the difficulty of replacing them. There was co-operation between the unions involved, extra staff and extra hours were employed and the situation was corrected. I understand it is well under control at the present time.

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY DELAYS

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport who is the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It relates to the Second Narrows bridge accident in Vancouver harbour last week and the consequent slowdown in grain movement. I understand that steps have been taken to move products to North Shore shipping positions via B.C. Rail and, in some cases, by barge directly across the harbour.

Can the minister assure the House that grain is getting its fair share of the traffic on the BCR and on the barges? At the moment it appears as though grain is being allocated a lower than appropriate proportion of BCR space and is being allotted no space at all on the barges. What is the government, or, in particular, its new grain co-ordinator, doing to ensure that grain movement gets a high priority in the allocation of space on B.C. Rail and on the barges?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): I can assure the hon. member that grain is getting a priority classification. I can assure the hon. member, also, that the newly-appointed grain transport co-ordinator is working very actively with all the components within the grain handling transportation system; as a matter of fact he met with officials of the Canadian Wheat Board immediately after the accident occurred and has been monitoring the situation very closely.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The question of added costs becomes important in connection with the arrangements made to move grain by alternative means to the two major terminals on the North Shore. Can the minister say who will have to bear the added costs? Will it be the government, the CNR, or the farmers? Will the minister ensure that the farmers are not burdened with the extra shipping costs and, further, not burdened with any unusual demurrage charges which might accrue as a result of the bridge accident?

Mr. Mazankowski: The determination of liability would have a direct bearing upon who pays the additional costs. Needless to say, our approach was to get the grain moving and sort out questions of cost and liability at a later stage. I may say that all components of the grain delivery and transportation industry have indeed co-operated and that the disruption has been minimal.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

REMEDIAL ACTION BY CHIP TO PROTECT HOME OWNERS FROM HAZARDOUS INSULATION MATERIALS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canadian Home Insulation Program. Since it appears home fuel oil prices will again increase this winter, and that parts of Canada might even experience oil shortages, the importance of home insulation both for the consumer and the country becomes ever more critical. Yet during the past several weeks numerous articles have appeared in the press concerning the failure of various home insulation materials—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, perhaps he will put it.

Mr. de Jong: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Have other materials, such as styrofoam and treated wood-shavings been subject to testing methods, and are there any testing procedures to ensure that urea-based foams do not give off highly toxic formaldehyde gas after insulation? Further, what remedial action is the CHIP program prepared to take in cases where hazardous products have been installed in Canadian Homes?

● (1500)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that very timely question. I want to tell him that at the present time the matter of home insulation has been dealt with by my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It has now been classified, as he knows, under the Hazardous Products Act. The testing has been done in the past for CMHC by the Ontario Research Foundation. CMHC in itself has not taken part directly in the testing but has had to take their word for the results obtained.

We are looking into all aspects of this very important program. It has been generously funded. We hope to improve its administration as more experience is gained.

Mr. de Jong: Since the responsibility and the technical knowledge regarding home insulation, as the minister mentioned, is spread over various departments, and as it is my feeling that the CHIP program has not lived up to its great potential, will the minister consider recommending to the House that a special committee of the House be set up to investigate home insulation practices and materials and the CHIP program?

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting suggestion. I would not be prepared to turn it down out of hand. All of us can use all the expertise we can get from elected members and, indeed, from those affected in the housing industry and insulation industry. It is a program that has been generously funded. There are administrative problems with it. It is of great concern to Canadians in this high-cost energy era. I will consider this and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. In view of the fact that two of the main actors involved in the activities of the subcommittee are members of the cabinet, that is, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Federal-Provincial Relations, can we expect a review of the recommendations approved and rejected by this government and, more especially, does the minister intend to reconsider the setting up of a five-man committee on penitentiary policies?

[English]

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that basically is a question for the House, or perhaps for the committee to decide. I think it would be very valuable to the House to have an ongoing committee dealing with correctional services. If the committee or the House so decides, I do not think there would be any objection whatsoever from the government side of the House.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. ROY (BEAUCE)—ALLEGED CONTRAVENTION OF STANDING ORDERS RESPECTING MOTION ADOPTED

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I now rise on a point of order because I think that a motion passed by the House was out of order. To confirm that opinion, I did some lengthy research and this is why I waited several days before drawing the attention of the House to the matter. I have of course consulted the following authors on parliamentary rules: Erskine May, Bourinot and Beauchesne. I am also referring to Standing Order 1 and I quote:

1. In all cases not provided for hereafter or by sessional or other orders, the usages and customs of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as in force at the time shall be followed so far as they may be applicable to this House.

Mr. Speaker, I have here copies of the following rulings made on February 23, 1939 by the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, and I draw the attention of all my colleagues on both sides of the House specially to this fact, since the point of order I am raising is extremely important for all parliamentarians. Here is actually what appeared on page 96, on February 23, 1939:

[English]

Ordered, that the proceedings relative to the motion relating to unemployment subsequent to the division on the question, 'That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question,' be null and void.

[Translation]

And, Mr. Speaker, on May 21, 1957, another ruling was also made by the House of Commons, and I quote:

[English]

Ordered, that the proceedings on the third reading of the National Health Service Contributions bill yesterday be null and void, and that the bill be read the third time tomorrow.

[Translation]

And a little further, on page 196, on April 25, 1963, one finds this, and I quote:

[English]

Ordered, that the proceedings relating to the Mr. Speaker's Constituency bill subsequent to the division be null and void.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we could refer also to an important ruling to which reference is made regularly when questions like this arise in parliaments. The reference is to a point of jurisprudence made on April 3, 1604:

The rule was urged—

And I am quoting the ruling to which reference was made not so long ago in British types of parliaments.

—that a question, being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again, but must stand as a judgment of the House.

There is also that earlier ruling of the government in the House of Commons of Canada on March 24, 1873.

Mr. Speaker, the motion introduced by the right hon. Prime Minister and member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) is out of order, and I remind hon. members of the terms of that motion:

That a committee be appointed to prepare and report, in accordance with Standing Order 65, lists of members to compose the standing and standing joint committees of this House; and that the committee be composed of Messrs. Baker (Nepean-Carleton), Kempling, Friesen, MacEachen, Lefebvre and Knowles, and that the provisions of Standing Order 65(1) be suspended in relation to the number of members on the said committee.

That is where, Mr. Speaker, I say this motion is not receivable, as the motion itself talks about suspending a provision of the Standing Orders. Indeed, the authors are unanimous, Mr. Speaker: suspending a provision of the Standing Orders requires unanimity or a notice on the order paper and, as you know, a notice of this kind cannot be put on the order paper the first day of the opening of the session since under parliamentary law that day is not considered as a regular day of sitting. That is why that very motion to suspend a rule of the House could not be put on the first day of the session. I quote an authority on parliamentary law, A. Beauchesne, citation 13, at page 7, on unanimous consent:

13. 1) Within the ambit of its own rules, the House itself may proceed as it chooses; it is a common practice for the House to ignore its own rules by unanimous consent. Thus, bills may be passed through all their stages in one day, or the House may decide to alter its normal order of business or its adjournment hour as it sees fit.

2) The House is perfectly able to give consent to set aside its Standing Orders and to give its unanimous consent—

You will have noticed, Mr. Speaker, "and to give its unanimous consent"— —to waive procedural requirements and precedents concerning notice and things of that sort.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to quote from Bourinot, on page 214:

Each House is bound by every consideration of self-interest and justice to observe strictly its rules and Standing Orders, and to rebuke—

I repeat "to rebuke—"

—every attempt to evade or infringe them.

Consequently, the Senate and the House of Commons never permit—

Mr. Speaker, it is well defined in Bourinot—

—their rules and Standing Orders to be suspended, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, I can never overemphasize the necessity to comply with the rules. All authorities are explicit on that point, and allow me to quote again from Erskine May.

● (1510)

Here is what we find in the chapter

Breaches of Privilege and Contempts—

—under the heading

Disobedience to Rules or Orders of either House

Disobedience to the orders of either House, whether such orders are of general application or require a particular individual to do or abstain from doing a particular act, or contravention of any rules of either House is a contempt of that House.

Those are not the words of the hon. member for Beauce. I am simply quoting from the experts in parliamentary procedure.

The rules of this House are in contempt of Parliament, especially when one considers the origins of the Standing Orders. I should like to quote once more from Bourinot in his chapter on the rules and regulations, in the section on the origin of the rules, where we find the following:

To protect the minority and restrain the improvidence and tyranny of the majority—

—even though there is not absolute majority in the House—

—to secure the transaction of public business in a decent and orderly manner.

Mr. Speaker, this is what we find when we refer to the various experts.

Mr. Speaker, I am not criticizing anything that you have said or done. Indeed, from the very beginning of the discussion on the motion in question, you said "pursuant to the provisions of the Standing Orders", and you then asked for the vote.

However, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my motion was actually to try to obtain the unanimous consent of the House in order to straighten out the matter.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, you could not foresee the result of the vote. It is only after the vote that yourself, the House and all members or Parliament learned that opinions were divided on this matter. It is only after the vote that it could be known, provided, of course, the matter was drawn to your attention.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer you to the term of Standing Order 51, and I quote:

Whenever Mr. Speaker is of the opinion that a motion offered to the House is contrary to the rules and privileges of Parliament . . .

—and I am doing just this—

—he shall apprise the House thereof immediately, before putting the question thereon—

. . . if a vote is in fact required, before putting the question thereon . . .

. . . and quote the Standing Order or authority applicable to the case.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore your duty to inform the House that an order has been taken contrary to our rules.

Mr. Speaker, what are the possible avenues? Since that famous April 2, 1604, even if they have the power, members have always been reluctant to rescind theirs orders. This stands from the judicial nature of the British-type parliament.

We therefore recommend that an order do issue declaring the proceedings null and void. We find in May the following quote:

That an order do issue declaring procedures to be null and void where procedures have been violated, even inadvertently.

—and I quote specifically Mr. Erskine May:

An order declaring proceedings to be null and void is employed where there has been an inadvertence or some form of irregularity in procedure (u). The reason for resorting to it is either (i) that there is no resolution which can be rescinded or order which can be discharged

And Mr. Erskine May goes on to say:

The proceedings are declared null and void.

Since the British House of Commons in similar circumstances does this, and I am referring to the three dates I have given earlier in my remarks, when emphasizing that this is how they had proceeded on February 23, 1939 by declaring the carried motions null and void, they did the same on May 21, 1957 and again on April 25, 1963.

As in the case of all the other rulings, this last case is interesting because all proceedings following an irregularity were declared null and void.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the lack of action or decision, when an irregularity provides an exception to our Standing Orders in the case of the setting up of a committee, constitutes a precedent of grave consequence. That would mean that a simple majority, without notice, could henceforth make exceptions to our rules on any topic whatsoever since they are included in and subordinated to so important a matter as the creation of a committee.

[Mr. Roy (Beauce).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) rose on a point of order that is interesting but, to my mind, there are at least three or four serious difficulties. First of all, before putting the question he brought up this afternoon, I explained to the House that the motion was in order in so far as the procedure is concerned. Only after that did I put the question to the House. Secondly, we are dealing with a decision reached by the House in the past, and it is therefore impossible to solve the problem now. Finally, I also feel that the point the hon. member for Beauce has brought up, that is the right of the House to change the rules by a simple majority, and not by unanimity, is also a suggestion I cannot fully accept. However, the hon. member for Beauce has indeed brought up an important matter. He studied the program envisaged for tomorrow, and he prepared something for this afternoon; I feel therefore that I must take his arguments under advisement and, tomorrow, I shall give my opinion more formally on the points the hon. member for Beauce brought up this afternoon.

MR. STEVENS—CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—COST TO GOVERNMENT OF INCREASE IN RATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You will recall that on Friday, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) asked me how much the increase in the rates paid on Canada Savings Bonds would cost the Government of Canada, which increase had been announced the previous Thursday. I promised him an answer today and I wish to put it on the record now.

It has been projected that the increase in the rate on the new series of Canada Savings Bonds from 10.25 per cent over seven years to 11 per cent in the first year and 10.5 per cent over the remaining six years, plus a similar yield adjustment to all outstanding issues, will cost the Government of Canada an estimated $215 million over the full term to maturity of these issues. In the initial year, that is the 1980 bond year, the extra cost to the government of these yield adjustments is expected to amount to $62 million.

Acid Rain

ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, last week a scientific report was released, and as a consequence some members of the House asked that a statement respecting the present government position on acid rain be made in the House. I agreed to make that statement, and as a consequence I am here today.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask whether copies of this statement have been given in advance to the spokesmen on this issue for the other parties?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I understand that in both cases statements were given in advance. I am surprised that the hon. member who raised the issue in the House of Commons is not here this afternoon, and I have no explanation for that.

The gradual increase in acidity of precipitation in eastern North America and in Europe has been of concern to the scientific community for some time. It was not, however, until the findings of an OECD study were released in 1976 that the potential magnitude and seriousness of the problem in western Europe were first grasped by a wider public. The concern was carried to all of Europe through the implementation of a scientific study under the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe. Indeed, next month numerous European countries, as well as Canada and the United States, are expected to sign a convention on long-range transboundary air pollution which was developed last year under the ECE. This convention represents the first step being taken to address the problem of acid rain in Europe and is indicative of the concern for the problem. While the Government of Canada actively participated in the development of the convention, the convention is very general in nature and is insufficient to deal with the situation in eastern North America.

Early awareness of a potential acid rain problem in eastern North America was heightened by the OECD report. Recognizing that convincing presumptive evidence indicated that the long-range transport of a variety of polluting substances, particularly acid pollutants, was undoubtedly occurring within and into Canada, Environment Canada embarked on a comprehensive scientific program to develop a clearer understanding of all aspects of the complex problem.

Members of the House will recall that in June 1977 the then minister of fisheries and environment gave a strongly worded speech to the Air Pollution Control Association meeting in Toronto in which he referred to the problem of acid rain as an "environmental time bomb". The speech was aimed at focusing the attention of the federal and provincial governments on the problem and indicating Canadian concern for the first time to the United States. With the increased knowledge which we have acquired in the past two years, it is now evident that the time bomb is much bigger than anything envisaged in 1977.

Recognizing the international dimensions of the problem and the need for international co-operation in the development of a mutually agreed scientific data base from which to develop solutions, the Government of Canada and the United States in 1978 established the Canada-United States bilateral research consultation group. The initial results from Environment Canada's scientific program, together with results from provincial and United States scientific investigations, were described in the first report of this group which was released on Monday. The report indicates that large areas of North America are sensitive to damage from acidic precipitation.

Decreased productivity and diversity of fish species have been observed in lakes and rivers in Ontario and in the Atlantic provinces. While we do not have as detailed data for Quebec, there is every reason to believe that the situation is similar in that province. Spawning failure of Atlantic salmon in streams in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces has been linked to acid precipitation. The precise extent of the damage being done is difficult to determine but the continually emerging evidence indicates ever more serious concerns, as well as increasing geographical extent. For example, various pieces of evidence suggest agricultural and forest productivity are at risk. While some of the potential damage cannot be irrefutably proven at present, by the time it has manifested itself the damage could be irreversible.

Continued pollutant loading of sensitive areas of eastern Canada at present levels will result in continued degradation with extensive irreversible acidification occurring during the next decade or so, particularly in aquatic ecosystems. Increased loading will accelerate the rate of deterioration. The report also notes extensive damage in the northeastern part of the United States where there is strong concern about the problem.

In anticipation of the contents of the research consultation group report and aware that the situation was serious, the Government of Canada and the United States issued a joint statement and communique on transboundary air pollution on July 26, 1979. In these documents the two governments outlined the basis of existing co-operation and indicated their intention to develop a co-operative agreement on transboundary air quality. The release of the joint statement and communique followed meetings of officials from both countries on December 15, 1978, and June 20, 1979.

While I welcomed the work which had been done in this regard by officials of my department and the Department of External Affairs, I recognized that a commitment at the highest level was needed to set in motion the reduction in emissions necessary to ameliorate the problem. On August 8, 1979 I went to Washington and met with the hon. Cecil Andrus, Secretary of the Interior, the hon. Douglas Costle, Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and the hon. Gus Speth, Chairman of the President's Council on Environmental Quality. I made it clear to my U.S. colleagues that the Government of Canada attaches a very high priority to the rapid reduction of acid-causing pollutants. I emphasized the fact that both countries were polluting each other and that effective control could best be undertaken on a co-operative basis.

[Mr. Fraser.]

I found complete acceptance of this view and a willingness to examine specific strategies designed to put in place the needed controls. I undertook to accelerate the process of developing with the provinces concerned appropriate Canadian control strategies and I was assured that a similar effort will be made in the United States. The next Canada-U.S. meeting on acid rain, this time involving both federal and provincial officials, takes place October 24 in Washington. Needless to say, this important matter also will be discussed during President Carter's visit to Ottawa November 9 and 10.

Immediately following my return from the United States I met with Dr. Parrott, the Ontario minister of the environment. I was much heartened by this meeting. We have a mutual understanding of the importance of the problem and a desire to address the necessary solutions. Dr. Parrott made it clear that Ontario will apply diligently any requirements agreed by the Canadian and U.S. governments in a future agreement. I will be meeting with Mr. Leger soon and I hope to achieve a similar understanding with him on the need for action. I have spoken to Mr. Bacon of Nova Scotia who is also the current chairman of the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers. I recognize the importance of discussing this matter with other provincial colleagues as well.

A federal-provincial committee on control strategies for long-range transport of air pollutants has been set up to focus on solutions to the acid rain problem. This committee originally contained provincial representatives from Ontario and Quebec only. Its formation was strongly endorsed at the June 1979 meeting of the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, and Nova Scotia, as current CCREM chairman, was added to represent the other provinces. The CCREM recognized the seriousness of the problem, endorsed federal leadership in seeking solutions and gave strong support to the federal government in undertaking negotiations with the United States.

The focal point of the committee's first meeting on September 25 was a conceptual work plan of the tasks necessary to identify, develop and evaluate alternative abatement strategies. The plan is designed to provide recommendations to governments of the cost effectiveness of various control options. I am pleased to report that there was agreement on the general thrust of the plan by all in attendance. Despite the complicated nature of the problem, and competing environmental, economic and social factors, the initial output of this activity should be available by spring.

This initial output, which would assess the application of specific abatement technologies with preliminary cost estimates, would not however tell us much about specific environmental benefits that might result from a particular level of reduction. It would take much longer to produce precise data for this purpose although clearer understandings of effects are continually emerging. The extent to which we need precise data on expected environmental benefits would depend in part on how costly the controls might be. Similarly, should the direct control costs appear very high, extensive additional economic analysis designed to help us understand the broader effects of these costs on society would be needed to guide us in selecting the optimum means of control. For these reasons it is not yet possible to estimate with certainty the time needed before firm recommendations for ultimate control strategies will be forthcoming.

Let me illustrate further. Members will be aware of some early general estimates made by my officials suggesting that a 50 per cent reduction of emissions of sulphur dioxide in eastern Canada would result in direct costs to polluters of $350 million to $500 million annually over the remainder of the century.

The figures which have yet to undergo detailed analysis do not, for example, take account of possible offsets arising from the effective marketing of by-product sulphuric acid in Canada or for export, nor do they reflect impacts on other sectors of society ranging from electricity bills to balance of payments. Obviously informed judgments will have to be made about these matters before committing ourselves to a particular course of action. However, lest I be misunderstood, let me make it perfectly clear that there will have to be major reductions in the release of acid causing pollutants in North America, and this government is determined to ensure that Canada meets this challenge.

As I have indicated in several statements on this subject, it is our present intention to rely on the provinces to put in place the needed control requirements. I am counting on my provincial colleagues and I am confident that they will do what must be done. However, members of the House have asked what will the federal government do should the provinces fail to act. The federal government has the constitutional authority to act for the good of the country in respect of controlling the interprovincial and international flow of pollutants. We would not shrink from this responsibility. Indeed, it is very much my view that the federal government ought to have at least residual authority set out in legislation to deal, as needed, with interprovincial and international pollution problems, which is something we currently do not have, in both the air and water fields. I have instructed my officials to examine this matter in the context of our current review of the federal government's role in environmental protection.

Given the time sensitivity of the issue, it is obviously important to look at interim measures to retard the problem. While it is not clear at this time what these might be, I have instructed my officials to investigate all possibilities. As an absolute minimum I believe it would only be wise to ensure that there be no further increase in emissions of sulphur dioxide in central and eastern Canada. I will be discussing this with my provincial colleagues. In addition, I plan to hold discussions with the chief executive officers of the corporations in Canada principally responsible for the problem.

Members of the House are fully aware that, however rigorous our domestic control strategy may be, it cannot alone overcome all the effects of acid rain. May I therefore conclude by stating that I have instructed my officials to ensure that, in co-operation with the provinces, all of the necessary preparatory work is completed in time to allow signature of an effective Canada-U.S. abatement agreement as soon as possible after the U.S. election next year.

Throughout this century Canada and the United States have led the world in effectively dealing with transboundary pollution, whether in water or air. In this the provinces have consistently been our partners. I am confident that this long-standing partnership, both domestic and international, will continue.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we thank the minister for his thoughtfulness in providing us with a copy of his statement this morning, and we also wish to congratulate him on his decision to make a statement on acid rain in this House and to hear the comments and questions of interested parliamentarians.

We agree with the minister that the situation is very serious and that we are dealing here with what has been described as an "environmental time bomb". Here ends the positive part of our message on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, and I will explain briefly why.

If, as in the words of the minister, "the damage could be irreversible", and there are indications in the environment that this could be the case, then several questions come to mind as to why this government is tackling the matter of acid rain so slowly. For instance, why did six weeks go by from the date when the minister came back from Washington before the first meeting was held by the federal-provincial committee on control strategies for long-range transport of air pollutants? Why is it that the initial output of the work of this committee can only be available next spring? Why, two and a half months after the minister's visit to Washington, is there no indication in his statement today of the specifics of the Canadian control strategies, on the eve of the next Canada-U.S. meeting on acid rain scheduled to take place this coming Wednesday? Why has a meeting not yet taken place between the minister and his counterpart in the province of Quebec?

Why, considering the gravity of the situation described by the minister himself, is there hesitancy, to say the least, in making the polluters pay by charging them the estimated cost of $350 million to $500 million annually, or any sum for that matter?

Why does the committee on control strategies for long-range transport of air pollutants, which supposedly reports to the minister—and we hope the deliberations of this committee will not be as long as its name—have to be concerned with "the cost effectiveness of various control options", when life around us—the ponds, brooks, rivers, lakes and perhaps even our fields and forests—is being poisoned to the point where human health might be affected too, in the long run?

Really, what is $350 million annually if we are to deal with this "time bomb" described by the minister? What is $350 million today if, by all estimates, costs can only increase if action is delayed?

Why is it that if, as he says today, the minister thinks he can prevent present levels of pollutants causing acid rain from increasing, the technology needed to do this cannot be used to decrease levels of emission? Why cannot his so-called "interim measures" be used to decrease levels of emission if they can be used to prevent increases?

Why is it that the minister informs us again today that the signing of the agreement has to wait for a new president to be installed, 16 months from now, when by all accounts President Carter is a well-known politician for his commitment to the cause of a clean environment?

What is at stake here, Mr. Speaker, and not in respect of acid rain alone, is the credibility of the political system at the international, national and provincial levels, namely, whether or not in the eyes of the public we, the elected representatives, are capable of delivering in response to the gravity of a situation threatening the survival of the ecology of our planet.

We on this side of the House cannot believe or accept that the concern of U.S. citizens vis-à-vis acid rain is any less than that of Canadians. We on this side of the House cannot believe or accept that the concern of residents of Ontario is any less than that of residents of Quebec or of the Atlantic provinces.

If elected representatives in provincial legislatures and their governments engage in jurisdictional games instead of offering their fullest co-operation, they do so at their own political peril and will have to be judged by their own constituents accordingly. While acid rain continues to do its insidious damage, we cannot wait for jurisdictional duels to take place at the peril of our environment. The solution to a serious threat to our environment, which as we all know unfortunately knows no boundaries, cannot be allowed to become the victim of ineptly handled federal-provincial relations.

On the other hand, there is ample evidence, at least in this House today, that the minister and members of all parties are very worried about this invisible death creeping around us. What we cannot understand then, given these elements of urgency and the desire to co-operate, is why the responsible officials, be they provincial or be they federal on both sides of the border, cannot be locked up in a conference room and given, say, 60 days to come up with standards required and with the text of an agreement for the signature of the U.S. president and our Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). Representatives from industry and from labour could be added so as to facilitate and expedite the work of these officials.

The minister's statement today reminds us of someone who, at the site of a burning building, cried "Fire!" but tells the occupants they have to wait a year and a half for the fire trucks to come to their rescue.

Canadians, as we all know, are in the forefront of all nations as being known for their sensitivity to the quality of their environment. They cannot be reassured by the government's actions so far and by today's statement, because the minister has not been able to explain why we have to wait so long for the United States and, in an equally serious matter, why we have to wait so long for the provinces to move and to take vigorous action, particularly—and on this I will conclude—in the light of this passage contained in the long-range transport of air pollutants report, which is at the base of today's statement and which states on page 25 that "the greater portion of total sulphur deposition in each country is probably the result of domestic emissions".

• (1540)

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to thank the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Fraser) for getting his statement to my office well in advance of question period today. Also, I would like to thank him for the detail of the statement which runs approximately ten pages in length.

A lot has been said and written about acid rain in recent weeks and months. I will be brief in my response and concentrate on asking the minister if he would do everything in his power to get some action from this moment on, instead of speeches, words and statements to the press. In saying that, I am not levelling my criticism directly at the new minister responsible for the environment, as was alleged or stated a few moments ago by the member from one of the Toronto ridings. After all, the previous administration was well aware of the implications and the most serious fears with respect to acid rain fall-out for approximately a year, the last year that they were in office.

I would like to state at this point that I believe it is grossly unfair for a Liberal member of this House to condemn outright, or to a considerable degree, the present administration when in fact his own party had plenty of time to investigate and bring in some remedies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn: Having said that, I would like to reiterate once again what has been said in this House with respect to the seriousness of acid rain itself. As the minister knows, it is the most serious environmental threat that we have today in Canada and in North America. Indeed, it is very common in central and western Europe and in Scandinavia. Acid rain is a very insidious thing in that one cannot see it, taste it, touch it or smell it. It is not like the Don River in Toronto oozing its sludge into Lake Ontario; you can see and smell it and say, "Yes, that is pollution."

None of these elements are available to the human senses. Therefore, it is difficult to marshal public opinion as well as corporate action with respect to acid rain because, as I have discovered in the last few weeks, most people are not even aware that it exists, and therefore are not aware of the horrendous potential damage that it may have for all of us.

In the province of Ontario alone we have lost approximately 140 lakes as far as aquatic life is concerned. They are what we call dead lakes, yet they still look very attractive. The water looks very clear and one can go boating and sailing, but the sport fishing industry is finished in those lakes. When one looks at the statistics with respect to sport fishing and angling in Ontario, one discovers that of a $600 million a year tourist industry approximately half of the income relates directly to sport fishing. The other half, of course, is divided up among winter sports, such as hunting, skiing and such.

If this acid rain situation continues, we will lose virtually all our lakes in Ontario and most of the lakes in Quebec. Time is running out. However, it may not be until the most serious consequences of acid rain are known that the public will really become angry if the government does not act and act very quickly. I am referring to the report that was released, I believe, just last week, the joint report of Canadian-United States scientists in which they are now discovering that acid rain is definitely having irreversible effects, limited as they may be, at the present, on crops through the soil. The effects on the soil will lead to crop reduction.

At this point I would like to put a question to the minister which he perhaps will answer in a few moments after he has had a few moments to think about it, if he has not already. It has come to my attention informally that the Athabasca tar sands are posing a very serious sulphuric threat to the Canadian breadbasket, the prairies, in so far as grain production is concerned. The threat is not in the immediate sense, but unless something is done about the Athabasca tar sands emission of sulphuric acid into the atmosphere— because as the minister knows, it does not have to rain down; it can simply fall down out of the atmosphere on to the Canadian prairies—it could become a serious threat.

Think of the magnitude and the consequences if we were to allow the Canadian prairies, and no doubt the American plain states, to become wastelands while we dither, talk and argue as to whether or not it is a provincial responsibility or a Canadian federal initiative and whether or not President Carter is running or not running for re-election. The whole thing becomes not only serious, but could foster cynicism because of the political implications of the whole problem.

The minister has outlined a rough time frame. He has not been specific. No doubt he cannot be specific in terms of actual dates, days or weeks or months, but I implore the minister, as he states in his statement, to use the powers that the federal government presently has. I implore the minister not to wait for Dr. Parrott and to stop listening to Inco executives telling him, "Us poor folks up here in Sudbury just can't afford emission control standards or else we will have to lay off two or three thousand Inco workers", all of which is balderdash and Dr. Parrott should know that. I am rather disgusted at Dr. Parrott's statements as quoted in the press last week.

The minister's statement at page 8 reads:

> The federal government has the constitutional authority to act for the good of the country with respect to controlling the interprovincial and international flow of pollutants.

The minister admits in this statement that he can take the initiative. We on this side of the House and, indeed, the whole country is waiting for the minister to take that initiative. What I would like to suggest is that he begin here in our own backyard in Ontario by calling in the chief executive officer of Inco and saying, "Look, give me your timeframe for cleaning up the emissions".

The Ontario Conservative government has allowed these emissions to continue at the rate of 3,600 metric tons a day coming out of the Inco smelters, when it should be down to 750 metric tons a day, which is still disastrous. Yet Dr. Parrott at Queen's Park says, "Well, we can't force them because we don't want to do anything to upset Ottawa-Washington negotiations on this matter, so we will just sit back and go easy with Inco or any other polluter in the province of Ontario until my federal counterpart has done all the work with his counterpart in Washington". In other words, Parrott, I think, is being a Pontius Pilate and simply washing his hands of the whole thing, at least for the time being.

I repeat, time is of the essence in respect to acid rain. No doubt there will be questions asked by other members. In closing, I implore the minister to call in the chief executive officer of Inco and ask him for a timeframe for clean-up. If it is not satisfactory to the minister responsible for the environment, then let the minister bring into the House the necessary legislation. I can assure him that it will be given very fast passage as far as members on this side are concerned.

If Inco can prove to the federal government that it cannot afford what it could have afforded in 1975, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $300 million for emission control mechanisms, then let Inco come to the federal government and explain why. I am not referring to rapid tax write-offs; in my opinion that is the wrong way to go about it. At the same time that the chief executive officer of Inco brings his balance sheet to the federal government, however, I hope the minister will say to him, "I do not want to see your Sudbury balance book; I want to see your multinational balance book—what your total world assets are and what your total financial picture is, worldwide." The taxpayers of Canada should not have to subsidize a multinational corporation that has millions or billions of dollars stashed away somewhere else in the world when its one operation in this country might not at any given moment be in a strong financial position.

I welcome the statement, Mr. Speaker. I called for it in the House last week when the minister was apparently quite simply making a statement to the press. It has given the Liberal critic an opportunity to stand on his feet and has given me an opportunity to bring these matters to the attention of the House. I am sure hon. members will want to question the minister on his statement. I hope we will get action on this. The minister's heart is in the right place, Mr. Speaker. I am convinced he is extremely concerned about this. I am also aware that he may have—and I hope I am not imputing anything here—opposition within his own party or within cabinet.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Blackburn: I said he "may" have, I did not say he had. I am almost convinced, though, that he is facing very stiff opposition from the corporate sector which is responsible for this acid rain catastrophe, Mr. Speaker—and it is in fact a catastrophe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Acid Rain

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I must say the statement by the minister concerning acid rain and the impact it is having on our country is a very sobering one. This is especially so in the areas of the Canadian shield not buffered by limestone rock, like some other areas of the province of Ontario and other parts of the country.

I wonder if it would be possible for the minister to provide members with maps showing the areas affected by the various polluting industries, whether they be in Canada or the United States. One press report indicated that there were about 140 lakes in the Sudbury area that are dead and will not support fish because of the acid rain. I wonder if the minister could provide a map showing that.

I notice that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. MacKay) is sitting beside the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Fraser). I wonder if he could speak with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, because many of the industries causing acid rain would be located in northern Ontario. Perhaps he could require that industries receiving grants under DREE instal the proper anti-pollution equipment. This might even be broadened to include all other federally regulated industries.

We appreciate that there is difficulty in regulating those under provincial jurisdiction and those under international jurisdiction or located in the United States. Those regulated by Canadian standards and those receiving federal grants could surely be required to provide immediately the proper environmental standards.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question about providing maps and other information, it is my intention some time soon—and the time has not yet been set—to make available to all members a full and complete briefing by officials of the Department of the Environment, including scientists, so that all members will have a better technical understanding of the difficulties we are facing.

With respect to the other matter the hon. member mentioned regarding my colleague and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, that is one of the things which is being looked at with respect to the economic implications of any control strategy.

I wonder if I could have your permission and the permission of members of the House, Mr. Speaker, to apologize to members of the Social Credit Party who did not receive a copy of my statement this morning. I regret that; it was not intentional and I can assure them that at any other time I make a statement a copy will be sent out of courtesy to my friends.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up my colleague's question about the availability of maps showing the distribution of this acid rain across the country. Does the minister have any data on the effects of acid rain on Atlantic salmon? If so, could this data be made available to the public so that those of us in Altantic Canada who are concerned about the very survival of Atlantic salmon will know what the situation is and what action has to be taken?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. We have some data and I can make arrangements to have it made available to the hon. member and other interested members.

The evidence we have to date indicates that the acidic precipitation in the form of snow that builds up during the winter melts very quickly in the spring. It is this acid shock into the streams that is causing the very serious damage. Ultimately, as the acid precipitation builds up in the lakes it makes the situation even more difficult.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question to the minister is with respect to the potential damage to the food supply in Canada which is very grave and which was referred to by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). There is the possibility of prairie grain crops being virtually wiped out in 15 years, and also the effects will be felt in southern Ontario.

What kind of input is the minister getting from the Department of Agriculture and the Department of National Health and Welfare regarding food production in the country? I understand that acid rain destroys the nutrients, the nitrogen in the soil, and therefore diminishes the crop yield. It also interferes with photosynthesis—the effect of sun on the leaves of the crops—and thereby affects the reproduction of those plants and certainly the quality of the plants. I am also concerned about nutrition, and I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) is very concerned about it.

Is the Minister of the Environment receiving input from the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) about productivity and the security of our food supply in 12 or 15 years? I think this is one of the most important problems facing us.

Mr. Fraser: I thank the hon. member for his question. Last week the hon. member for Brant raised privately with me the potential problem that may arise from the development of the tar sands. I instructed my department over the weekend to see what reports are available at present and to concentrate on the potential problem, especially in view of the fact that the scientific report released one week ago today indicated, I think with some considerable clarity, that the acid rain problem is not just with lakes and the depletion of fish and higher forms of life, but is affecting the soil.

I might also say to hon. members that some of the opposition in the United States to doing anything about the clean-up—and I am not suggesting there has not been some opposition here as well—has been because that part of the United States most obviously affected, the Adirondack area, is a relatively small part of that country geographically. If the scientific evidence is clear that the agricultural sections of the United States are also being hit, it will make it much easier politically for governments to act.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the minister on his statement and also the former minister for bringing this whole thing to light and terming the problem a real "time bomb". The minister is going to have considerable difficulty within his own party given the predilection to the strong private sector, and also to supporting the provinces.

● (1600)

Certainly there has been a new dimension to the whole problem with the Canada-U.S. biological group. The Ontario Great Lakes Advisory Board statement in July indicated that the province of Ontario was responsible for half of the acid rain itself; it was not just an American problem. In northern Ontario we are particularly concerned because the shield area does not have built into it—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Question.

Mr. McRae: —the kind of protection that some other areas with limestone might have. Therefore, the acid is not as easily neutralized.

I would like to mention to the minister a new coal-fired hydro plant being put up in Atikokan, very close to the U.S. border. In Minnesota I understand there are 39 of these plants which are spilling forth sulphur dioxide. It seems there has been an agreement at this point not to add scrubbers to this plant. This is a brand new plant which will not go into operation for two or three years, so there is still plenty of time to get the scrubbers.

I ask my question partly on behalf of Atikokan and partly because I think it has a bearing on where I think we are going in the future. As I understand it, the scrubbers cost approximately $3 million to $4 million for a $1 billion operation; in other words, about .3 per cent to .4 per cent of the total operating cost.

Will the minister be providing some funding and assistance to these new plants so that he can insist that the scrubbers, which will remove the sulphur dioxide and therefore remove the potential sulphuric acid from lakes, will be installed? I want him to bear in mind that this is a great fishing area—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Put a question, please.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has put his question.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, briefly the federal government has not yet decided in what way and to what extent any government aid should be given to industry in order to encourage the clean-up. Those are matters that are being discussed. The whole economics of the clean-up control program is being discussed now. We hope to have a report in the spring, as I said in my statement. It is not an option that is being set aside, it is just that a decision has not been made in that respect.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, as a former minister who has a few scars to show in dealing with the provinces on these matters, will the minister, if necessary, come back to this Parliament for authority to proceed if he finds that provinces, possibly hiding behind international negotiations, are not willing to face the issue? If my memory is correct, a good percentage of the deposits, around 40 per cent to 50 per cent, are from Canadian sources, and that we do not need to use international agreements, which are difficult.

The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) is right when he underlined that some new plants in Canada are not being equipped properly. Will the minister forget this fetish that his Prime Minister has to constantly get agreement with the provinces, but in fact act, if he has to act alone?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell hon. members that unless I have evidence that the provinces are not prepared to co-operate, I do not intend to use the constitutional power of the federal government at this time.

I have indicated that we have the constitutional power to act unilaterally. It would require additional legislation in this House which does not presently exist, but the constitutional power does exist. I have made it very clear to our American colleagues that Canada does have the constitutional power to act, and will act. However, until I am persuaded—and I am not persuaded today by any means that the provinces will not co-operate—I intend to move in co-operation with the provinces.

There has been some comment about the minister of the environment for the province of Ontario, Dr. Parrott. Not only has he made a commitment to me but he has also made a public commitment that Ontario will apply, and apply stringently, those standards required by any international agreement that we are able to put into place with the United States.

I think it is important, and I say this to all hon. members, that no increase in total emissions take place. No increase can be guaranteed by the provinces if they do not issue permits for an increase. It does not even require any immediate cost of pollution abatement equipment.

Mr. Speaker: I advise hon. members who have been seeking the floor up to this point that I should conclude questioning with the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) and the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question based upon what the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) asked the minister relative to the cost of scrubbing operations and cleaning up sulphur dioxide emissions from plants that are burning coal, and so on. I would not want to contradict him, but it seems to me he is inaccurate. I would be interested in getting the latest information that is available to the minister. I realize that it is extremely tricky in that there are a lot of disagreements, but certainly as guidelines to our decision in the House it will be very important. Therefore, I ask the minister to provide that data or any other data relative to specific areas that are compiled by his department.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his remarks. I would advise all members of the House that the data available to me and my department can be obtained. I ask hon. members to please put a request in to me directly and I will try to arrange for it to be dealt with as quickly as possible.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in light of reported accounts in "Scientific American" of the significant role of Inco Limited's Sudbury operations as the largest single source of sulphur pollution—approximately 1 per cent of the world's annual emissions—and because of the significant effect of acid rain on fish and forest products, could the minister undertake immediately to study the effect of the Sudbury operation?

Also, could the minister undertake to do a similar study of Inco's Thompson operation, especially in view, first, of the importance of fishing and forest operations in northern regions; and second, research in this area, where the Thompson operation is more isolated, would be much better to prove a cause and effect relationship between sulphur emissions, the resultant acid rain, and the result of this pollution on fish and forest products.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that all emission sources are being studied.

As the hon. member will remember, I said in my statement that I am planning to meet with the chief executive officers of companies with the most serious emission sources in Canada, which include the particular company the hon. member mentioned, and others.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills. In respect to the introduction of bills, members are aware that there are a number of private members' public bills on today's order paper for the usual introduction that we give to all private members' public bills in this way. However, I understand that there has been consensus that this process be deferred until Wednesday of this week. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the questions be allowed to stand.

[Mr. Hogan.]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-6, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure indeed that I rise on second reading of this bill in the House. The amendments to the Old Age Security Act contained in this bill fulfil a clear commitment made by the members on this side during the last election.

There are two parts to the bill. Both deal with the removal of certain provisions contained in the Old Age Security Act which were the source of financial hardship and despair to people affected by it.

The first and broadest amendment deals with the spouse's allowance program. This bill will remove the provision whereby the allowance is cut off six months after the pensioner spouse dies. Up to now the spouse's allowance program has led financially dependent persons into a false sense of security on the basis of income received under the program. Then, at a time when their personal bereavement is still fresh, and their financial prospects have, if anything, dimmed, the financial rug was pulled out from under them.

I am proud to say that this government will no longer tolerate this situation. Within this bill is contained an amendment which will ensure that a person receiving the spouse's allowance will never again have to worry about losing it simply because the older pensioner spouse has passed away. As long as he or she continues to be in need, the continued protection of the spouse's allowance program will be assured.

There is another part to this bill. It is not nearly so significant as the spouse's allowance amendment in terms of the number of persons involved, but in its own way it is also very important. I am referring, of course, to the removal of the provision whereby old age security benefits are suspended if the recipient is sentenced to prison for a term of over 90 days.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that it was announced in the Speech from the Throne that the government will be inviting a parliamentary committee to review the retirement income needs of Canadians in the 1980s. This announcement reflects the fact that this government regards the pensions as a priority area.

I want at this time to review in brief some of the issues which have led us to look at pensions in this light. First of all, I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, this House and all Canadians that this government, while it will be seeking efficiency and economy in government, will nevertheless have a strong interest in the social policy sector. In particular, we want to alleviate the situation of low-income Canadians, and our senior citizens certainly have more than their share of persons in the lower income levels. Broadly speaking, we are after a pension system that provides adequate income protection and fair treatment to all.

More specifically, the issues include the difficult situation faced by many old age pensioners; second, the level of protection provided to women by the pension system; third, the performance of the private sector in the pension system; fourth, the introduction of greater flexibility in the age of retirement; fifth, the position of the disabled and the handicapped in the pension system; finally, the protection offered the families of deceased persons, and, for all of these, the maintenance of the purchasing power of benefits paid out.

In reviewing these issues, we will not be starting without some background. We will be drawing upon the numerous pension studies and reports conducted at all levels of society in the last several years. We will be consolidating this information and adding to it from extensive consultation with people in general, with the pension industry, with provincial governments and with special interest groups.

We are all well aware of the review that has been going on for the past three years. That was an interdepartmental study carried out largely by officials under the last government. We in this new government recognize the value of that study as a major background piece of work that has been done, and we will take whatever advantage there is in it although we will not be bound by it.

There are other groups in the pension field to whose work we will be referring, such as the "COFIRENTES" report from the province of Quebec, the Ontario royal commission, the Economic Council of Canada and the Senate committee on retirement age. The federal and provincial ministers of finance have also been sponsoring a study by their governments during the past few years of the funding of the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. "Canada at the Pension Crossroads" by the Research Foundation of Financial Executives Institute and "Pensions and Survival" by Geoffrey Calvert are just two of the studies conducted in the private sector.

I want to stress in discussing the process which I am describing that this government will be looking at the pension sector with a fresh perspective. If this review should reveal that a major overhaul of the pension system is necessary to create an effective, fair and efficient structure, then we will be free to develop and carry out such an overhaul.

Nor is this process going to be strictly related to the bureaucracy or even the government alone. In keeping with the open government policies of this side of the House, we want to involve Parliament in the process through the participation of a parliamentary committee. The members of this committee will be able to reach out to Canadians on particular issues in the pension field and obtain and evaluate views from every part of the land and from very broad terms of reference.

Great emphasis will be placed upon consultation and co-operation with the provinces and the private sector. By this means we will be able to seek joint solutions which we can all accept as being the best avenues for meeting the future pension needs of Canadians.

In this context, let me refer again to the specific provisions before us. While this bill may represent a small step, it is an important one for those who will benefit from it, and it is important also to demonstrate this government's concerns for the pension sector in general, and for the problems faced by Canadian women in particular. I look upon this bill as an expression of good faith by this government that what can be done quickly will be done.

When I speak of continued spouse's allowance protection, I do not just mean the continuation of the same amount of benefit payable before. It is significant that over 85 per cent of our spouse's allowance recipients receive less than maximum benefits because they or their spouse have some income aside from old age security benefits. For most of these couples the income received is money coming to the older pensioner spouse, money which will drop dramatically or cease altogether if the older spouse dies. Clearly, it is unrealistic and unjust to continue to pay the same amount of allowance after the spouse's death when we know the allowance recipient's other income has considerably dropped.

For this reason, the spouse's allowance for widowed recipients will not only be extended but will also be recalculated on the basis of the personal income of the surviving spouse—the actual income which he or she has available to meet daily living expenses. The extended allowance will continue to be paid until the beneficiary reaches age 65—when the regular old age security pension is available—or until he or she remarries or dies.

I expect that some 2,200 allowance recipients will receive extended benefits in 1980-81 as a result of these provisions. The cost will be about $4.3 million in that fiscal year or some 2.7 per cent of the total cost of the spouses' allowance program.

This provision will go far in ensuring some financial security for a very vulnerable segment of our society, the newly bereaved, near aged widow. The vast majority of our spouse's allowance recipients are women, many of whom have been out of the paid labour force for years, and others who never sought paid employment. At the age of 60-plus it is clearly unreasonable to assume that they would be able to go out and fully sustain themselves on the labour market.

If I may refer now to the provision which will end the suspension of the OAS benefits for prisoners, this is also an improvement of some significance. I might point out that when an OAS pensioner has the pension suspended, any allowance paid to that pensioner's spouse must also be suspended.

This is a problem which has been raised by many in this House but in particular I would like to thank the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) for her strong stand on the matter during the last session.

This provision has, over the course of years, proven both difficult and unfair. When OAS pensioners are imprisoned and their benefits are subject to suspension, any delay in effecting the suspension can result in overpayments which must be collected when the pension is released. Even if there is no overpayment, the lack of benefits during imprisonment can mean that these people are released with little money at an advanced age and few prospects for making a living.

There are fewer than 100 persons affected by this provision in any given year. The cost of maintaining payment of their OAS benefits is a small fraction of a per cent of program costs. However, if even one prisoner is able to find a better life as a result of this change, and one prisoner's spouse is not deprived of her allowance, it will be well worth the effort.

In conclusion, I look upon this bill as a first step which this government intends to take, while considering other possibilities for achieving an improved pension system in this country. I invite the support of all members of this House for this particular step, to improve the humanity of a program now in place, and for the broader examination which we hope to carry out, in co-operation with provincial governments and the private sector, to ensure that we have the best possible pension system that we can afford to provide retirement protection for all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would accept a question on his statement.

Mr. Crombie: I would be pleased to, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Axworthy: I just want to know if the minister could explain whether the provisions of the bill contain any retroactivity for those spouses under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether that should be done in committee, not being familiar with the procedure. Let me suggest that the only retroactivity in the bill relates to the six months they may have already got with the extension which was passed in the last session.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by congratulating the new minister on the presentation of his first legislation in this House. I express the hope that this will be the first of many. Meanwhile, I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) will clarify the minister's mandate. We on this side keep hearing about ministers responsible for the social policy envelope. There is now to be a super minister of social development. We hope very much that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie), who is responsible for a very major slice of the budget voted by this Parliament, will occupy a very senior position and be heard by his colleagues.

[Mr. Crombie.]

I may say that if the new minister has a slight nervousness, this is shared by his critic. The other day the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) commented on the fact I had moved into a new field. I must confess that the more I read about this field, the more I think it would have been wiser to stay with fisheries and oceans for a while yet. Be that as it may, I am gratified that I have the support and share the co-chairmanship with my colleague, the former minister of national health and welfare, the hon. member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Miss Bégin). She brought, as did her predecessor, the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde), a level of awareness and discussion on social policy matters which I hope to rival.

I might also say that physically located in the House on my left is the formidable veteran for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), an expert to whom we will listen very carefully.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, first I must say that we have very few reservations concerning Bill C-6, which will help an important group of our population. At the committee stage, we will put some questions of detail and make some suggestions and I am sure that a number of my colleagues in the House will want to voice their opinion. The fact is that this bill, as the minister admitted himself, is only a first step. It is a modest effort to better the situation of some 2,400 Canadians, according to the figures I saw. However, there is no doubt that this bill will leave many Canadians between 60 and 65 years of age with the impression that they are not treated fairly.

[English]

When this legislation was introduced by this party while in office, it was made clear that this spouse's allowance bill was to be seen in the context of a guaranteed annual income program. This in fact was a first step toward this goal. When he was minister of national health and welfare in 1975, the hon. member for Outremont undertook a massive series of consultations with the provinces to achieve this end. Two provinces, Ontario and Alberta, both with Tory provincial governments, prevented the establishment of the basic guaranteed income plan.

It is not without interest that I found in the clippings a quote in the Calgary Herald of December 22, 1977 by the then leader of the opposition, now Prime Minister. The last sentence reads:

So our present plan is certainly not to proceed with a guaranteed annual income program or even to propose one.

There is no doubt that the unfair features of this program would have been and could still be corrected by an enlightened approach in the area of guaranteed income. It is still the basic position of this party that a guaranteed income plan or a plan using the approach of negative income tax is highly desirable. As was the case in medicare, slow progress should not mean that we abandoned the goal we want to reach.

The first group in this country which has a form of guaranteed income are senior citizens over 65 years who are eligible for the guaranteed income supplement. The next obvious group are those between 60 and 65, especially women, whose earnings power and training and educational opportunities are often limited. This is the group with which we should now be concerned.

● (1630)

It is important to remember that the citizens who are now in their early sixties were the teenagers of the depression, a time when educational opportunities outside the cities were meager, if existent at all, when training for women was extremely limited and often those young people who did not serve in the forces, which was the majority, went into jobs which became obsolete and where opportunities for advancement, for such things as private pensions, and so on, were almost unheard of.

These workers were the sons of the marginal farmers in depressed fishing villages, the sons of unskilled workers in our cities. At present they number approximately one million and, according to the statistics I have seen, almost 50 per cent of them would require some assistance under an income tested benefit plan.

The government today introduced a bill which would distribute some $4 million to approximately 2,400 Canadians. It is a small step and we hope the minister will come forward with more measures. We hope he will have access to more funds. In fact, he has contributed to his own argument in an article of July 14, 1979 in the Ottawa Journal when he said:

> I'm opposed to any plot to dimish the amount spent on the social well-being of citizens.
> Spending on health and welfare is not swollen beyond its rightful place.

To which we say, "hear, hear" to the minister. We hope he will pass that clipping around to some of his colleagues. Not only will we support the minister when he brings forward new plans, but we will support him when some of the social programs will be under attack, as they have already been, by some who would sacrifice them on the altar of Tory dogma. In fact, it may be that the minister will want to look to this side for support, and he will have that support when the time comes to arrest the efforts at mutilating some of the social programs, in particular medicare, child credit, family allowances and old age pensions.

After years of effort by successive governments—and Liberal ones have been in office during the passage of most of these major pieces of legislation—there are still, in spite of all these efforts, thousands of people in Canada who live under the poverty line, whatever definition or yardstick is used.

If the Minister of National Health and Welfare brings forth legislation such as Bill C-6, we will support him, even if we do not feel that it goes far enough. As I said earlier, some of my colleagues will suggest some improvement, some changes, that the minister might want to consider.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude this brief statement, my first as critic of social affairs, with a quotation from the great writer and philosopher Georges Bernanos who wrote admirably on world poverty, at a time when it was even worse than it is now. When somebody came to him with the following objection: "But you forget, sir, that the poor will always be with us", he answered simply: "Yes, alas, they will always be. But the question is to know who will choose them".

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I begin my remarks today by extending my congratulations to the minister not only on introducing this, his first piece of legislation, but on his being invited by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to take charge of one of the most important departments in the federal government, the Department of National Health and Welfare. At this point I want also to welcome my friend, the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc), to this very important field. I look forward to his assistance on social matters along the lines he has already indicated in his remarks today.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare described this bill very well when he said it was a small step. Sir, we shall support Bill C-6 although we shall try to have it amended in committee in one or two respects. However, even if we do not get those amendments, we shall support the bill as it is a step in the right direction, as has been said. It does something for about 180 persons a month, and anything that does something for six persons a day is worth taking the time of Parliament to pass.

However, even with all the good will I feel toward the minister because he is in this important department and is trying hard, I simply cannot let him get away with the notion that he is doing something wonderful in the bill he has brought forward today. It is so small a step that he must really have been embarrassed in putting it forward.

In a moment I shall explain why I am critical of the government's going only this far, but before I do so I want to say that I welcomed the minister's use of a certain phrase when he was talking about improvements in our pensions and social legislation. I think his words were: "We want to keep alive the humanity of a program already in place." That is true. In spite of all the faults and shortcomings there might be in the Old Age Security Act, in the Canada Pension Plan, the family allowance program, the unemployment insurance program, and all the rest, we have, in the course of 40 years or 50 years, built a certain amount of humanity into our social programs; and what is most important is that we have made them programs which are such that people do not feel a stigma when they receive the benefits.

I know that, perhaps more often than is comfortable, I have spoken about the days which I remember when a person who was receiving an old age pension preferred to keep quiet about it. There was attached to it a means test as long as your arm and it was somewhat of a stigma to be on the old age pension. But from the day we established the principle of universality, from the day when the right hon. Louis St. Laurent said that even though he did not need it he would go along with universality in taking the pension, it became a mark of honour.

We extended this into a good deal of our legislation. In some cases we have developed a double-barreled proposition such as in old age security where the basic amount is universal and the guaranteed income supplement is on a needs test basis. I have had a lot to say about this that is critical, but the fact of the matter is that we have established so much humanity and dignity about old age pensions that Canadians feel a lot happier getting old age security and the guaranteed income supplement than they would if they were getting a form of provincial or municipal welfare. The same is true about the spouse's allowance. It is a form of welfare, but those who get it are getting something that comes from the Department of National Health and Welfare, something which, even though it is not called an old age pension, is related to that pension.

I am trying to impress upon the minister that the words he used when he spoke about the humanity of a program that is already in place were very significant, and I hope he will stand on guard in these studies about our pension programs against those who would destroy or take away the basic element of that humanity, namely, the degree of universality which we have now achieved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I was happy to hear the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent talk about our social programs, and I do not mind his making the reference which is made so often, that the Liberals were in power when most of these bills were brought in. Yes, the Liberals were in power, but some of us were over here all the time, prodding whatever government was over there.

So I welcome the statement that the minister made today about the study, about their concern and about the various problems that need to be considered and, as someone said today about another minister, I am sure his heart is in the right place. However, I hope he will realize that his allies in respect of a good pension program and a good social program are not necessarily those behind him who keep calling for free enterprise, that they are not in the business community that fights against higher pensions and indexation. Some of his best allies are over on this side of the House. He will have our support if he tries to maintain a social program on the basis of the humanity to which he has referred.

Now let me come to what this bill does. The minister left, until the second part of his speech, the part which affects only a few, namely, the change regarding those who are imprisoned. As he said, it affects only 100 persons a year. But I suspect in terms of spouses that it affects very few—half a dozen or a dozen—in the course of a year where the spouse at home is cut off from her spouse's allowance because the old man did something he should not have done and landed in jail. It was inhuman that this situation was there, and I am glad it is being corrected.

The major thing this bill does is to make a change with respect to the position of the spouse in the 60 to 65 age bracket when the older spouse dies. I know this bill works both ways. The spouse in the 60 to 65 age bracket can be the husband and the older spouse can be the wife, but in 90 per cent or more of the cases it is the other way around. So we are talking about a program which is concerned mainly about women.

The other day when I asked the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) when we would get some legislation implementing our ideas about treating women as persons, he referred to Bill C-6 which was to be brought in today as evidence of the concern of this government for the women of the country. This bill has not moved one inch from the concept which the Privy Council had to reverse 50 years ago. So far as this bill is concerned, women are not yet persons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: Women in the 60 to 65 age bracket get a pension or an allowance not because they are persons, not because they are in need. They get a pension on the basis of being able to answer the question: "Have you got a man? Dead or alive, have you got a man?" If they do not have a man, dead or alive, by definition of the bill they do not qualify. But this is being brought in by a government which told us on Persons Day last week that this was to help women.

Let us go back and talk about this legislation. It was first proposed by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) in the election campaign of 1974. I remember it very well. I remember being at home that night and hearing on television that he was going to bring in a spouse's allowance which would provide a pension to the younger spouse where the older spouse was over 65 and had a pension. I heard him say on the night he announced it that it would, of course, create some problems, but that it was a step.

Certainly it has created problems. When it was brought in in 1975, coming in effect that fall, it provided that where the spouse between 60 and 65 was married to and living with an older spouse who was on the pension, the younger spouse gets the spouse's allowance, and that it can be in total the equivalent amount of the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. But the provision of course was that if the older spouse died, then the allowance of the younger spouse was cut off at that very moment. That was corrected earlier this year, when the Liberals were still in power, by extending the allowance six months. Of course, at that time the Tories said, "Why not extend it to age 65?" That is what the government is now doing.

None of these arrangements—the first one, the one for the continuation of six months or the one which now provides for the allowance to be continued to age 65—does anything about the fact that they do not do a thing for a woman between 60 and 65 who is a spinster. Is she not a person just as much as the woman who has a husband, or the widow of a husband who died within the last six months? The bill does not do a thing for the hundreds of widows in the country who were widows before they reached the age of 60. If a woman's husband dies the day the woman is 59 years, 11 months and 29 days old, she does not qualify. She only qualifies if she gets over that point before the husband dies, and only if she can pass the means and needs tests and gets family allowance.

I could talk about the other side of it. The same is true for bachelors and widowers who are left. But statistics show that that is not the problem. The problem is the position of women. Recently we had the report from the National Council of Welfare which underlined how serious the income problem is for older women. When I raised this with the previous minister of national health and welfare, she and her predecessor used to say, "What about those between 55 and 60?" Yes, I think they need help too, and I feel very strongly about that. But in this legislation we are talking about a particular age bracket, 60 to 65. In that age bracket we say to women, "You will get help not because you are a woman, not because you are a person, not because you are in need, but on the basis of marital status". It was wrong in its conception in the first place. It should never have been brought in in those terms. Although this fixes it up for 180 persons a month, it does not do away with the fact that all those others out there are not going to get it at all. My answer to this has been made many times and I say it again: We should really have a pension available between 60 and 65 to all persons who are out of the labour market.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I welcome the applause for that position, but I note that it is coming from my own colleagues, not from the rest of the House. Much as I feel that that is what it should be, I could be persuaded into accepting, as a beginning, a pension in the 60 to 65 age bracket to all persons in need. I am a lifelong fighter against means tests and needs tests, but I would accept a needs test a thousand times over a marital test. This is inhuman, this is degrading, and this is as antiquated as the Supreme Court decision back in the twenties before the Privy Council turned it over.

I think the minister should really go to work on this. He should not wait until he is able to revise the entire pension program. He should concentrate on the area between 60 and 65. For those over 65 at least we have our universal program, the supplement, health services, senior citizen housing and so on. Things are not rosy for those over 65, but they are a lot better than they were when we started fighting for these things a half century ago. But in the 60 to 65 bracket the position of women is really quite intolerable, and this bill does not touch it. It touches it for 2,200 people. I thought it was 2,400, but I accept the minister's statement that it would touch 2,200 people a year. That is 180 persons a month, or six persons a day.

The fact of the matter is that every day in this country six women in the 60 to 65 age bracket who are on the allowance become widows. They are taken care of by this legislation, but all the spinsters in that bracket, all the women who were widowed before they reached 60, or under this bill widowed six months before this bill passes, are not covered at all. Tell us this is a small step, tell us we must vote for it. Of course we will, but the minister should not stand up and brag, in light of what he is leaving undone by this bill.

A moment ago I referred to the six-month provision. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) asked an appropriate question just as the minister sat down. I hope something will be done about that when we get into committee.

The bill provides that its terms shall be effective, after it has royal assent, for those who become widows after it has had royal assent or for those who became widows not more than six months before the date of royal assent. That means that if we have passed this bill by the end of October, persons who became widows at the end of April will qualify, but those who became widows in the middle of April do not qualify. If the government switches to the borrowing authority tomorrow, then goes on to the tax bills and does not bring this bill back until some time in November, then those who became widows in the first part of May will not qualify.

That is really a form of blackmail against this House. We were into the bit last session when that six-month clause was being added. Perhaps I was doing some of the blackmailing. I was insisting that the Tories should let that go through because every day we delayed meant another six or seven did not get it. I blamed the Senate for delaying it a day or two as well. Surely that can be fixed up. Surely we can provide that any woman, any person if you want—as I say, the number of men affected in that lower age bracket is not great—who has been on spouse's allowance at all since the program began, and who is still under 65, should have it reinstated under the provisions of this bill. It started in 1974 so we cannot go back all the way, but let us not leave out any widows not yet 65.

I move on to say that I like the minister's four-thirds provision, which is such that the widow who survives will get not just the same amount, the half that she was getting before, but would get an amount based on her income. Surely when the government is doing this it is unthinkable to leave that provision there, because the widows of today whose husbands died five or six months ago will be looking at Parliament and asking how long it is going to take to get this through. There is a deadline in there that is really most unfair and most unkind. I know this, that if the government does that and makes it available to all those who have been on the allowance, I will still be pointing out how unfair that is to all the other widows, and to all spinsters or bachelors, if you like. As long as you have this marital provision in this legislation you are in effect saying that these people do not get their rights, do not get their benefits, because they are persons; they get it on the basis of a marital test, and that just does not make any sense in this day and age at all. I hope that much of the bill will be corrected.

As I say, even if we win that—and we will be glad that we won that little bit so that the number helped will not just be 2,200 in a year but might be a few more—that still does not get away from the fact that we have not yet really done anything about the general need for income maintenance that applies in the 60 to 65 age bracket.

I note that the draw the other day in respect of private members' notices of motions was a fairly good one for me. I believe my pension motion is number six, so it will not be very long until we get to that. This is not a new motion. It has been there right along. The only difference is that I keep raising the figure as to what the basic old age pension ought to be. This means that when we do get to it I will have an opportunity in another debate to talk about the needs of our older people as a whole.

The minister took some time today to refer to these other matters. I believe the basic amount of old age security must be increased. I believe we have to do something about indexing. I was pleased to note, that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) was agreeing outside the House to something I had asked for, namely, a special cost of living index for senior citizens. That formula by which it is always five to eight months behind is not only unfair, it denies all of the modern capacities we have with computers to work things out. You know, Mr. Speaker, it would not take long to devise an index that would give people a pension based on the cost of living in the month they get the cheque instead of a pension based on the cost of living of five to eight months ago.

The Canada Pension Plan needs to be improved in a number of respects. One of the most important respects, and I think it is appropriate for me to speak to it today because supposedly we are talking about women, is the position of women in the home. I know all of the arguments about the Canada Pension Plan being an earnings related pension plan. I was in on the work that led up to the plan and had a good deal to do with the passage of that bill. I accept the basic principle that it is an earnings related plan, but there is no reason in the world why there could not be an equivalent to the Canada Pension Plan for housewives working in the home.

Let me refer back again to last week; women are persons. We decided that 50 years ago, or the Privy Council decided it for us when our own Supreme Court could not see it that way. However, in terms of pension rights the woman who goes out and works in industry, works in the office or works outside the home has certain pension rights which do not apply at all to the woman who does a terribly important piece of work in this country, staying at home raising a family and so on. There are some, of course, who do both.

I noticed with interest that my friend the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) has a motion on the order paper which is fairly high on the list calling for pension rights for women who remain in the home. The other day when we discussed persons and so on, the Prime Minister expressed the hope that it would not take us another 50 years to move as far as we have moved in these last 50 years. A good deal of that rests on the shoulders of this very minister. It is on the shoulders of some other ministers as well. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon) has a few reforms he must make. The President of the Treasury Board is responsible for the Public Service Superannuation Act which needs some reforms as well. The Minister of National Defence has to do with the pensions of retired armed forces persons, and the Solicitor General (Mr. Lawrence) has to do with the pensions of retired members of the RCMP. There is the whole question of what happens to railway pensions and private pensions, but the lead in all of these things has been taken by this department.

Mind you, the old age pension got started in the first place before there was any Department of National Health and Welfare, but that helped to bring on the department and since then the lead in terms of pension humanity, to use the minister's word, has come from the Department of National Health and Welfare. I refer to lowering the age, getting rid of the means test, expanding the amount and all these other things our people need. I hope this minister will really get to work on this.

I like the idea of further studies. I have been through a good many of them, and most of the ideas are really there. I do not like the talk about "in the eighties". I know it will be 1980 in two or three months, but "the eighties", that is a decade; that is ten years down the road. Many of these people we are concerned about will not be living then. Some of us intend to go a lot longer than that, but many of them will not be here.

There are some things, such as the indexing bringing it up to date and making it fit the costs the old age pensioners have to meet, covering women for their services in the home and dealing with the problems of widows and veterans and so on, that require attention, and these are things in respect of which action could be taken soon. I hope the minister will get to work on them without delay.

Rather than take the floor again at eight o'clock I shall conclude my remarks now by saying again that I am pleased the minister is in this spot. As I look over the crowd on that side of the House I believe he has probably got as much of a heart as any of them over there. There are many on that side who go the other way, on the basis of the speeches they made last week. I am glad the minister has some changes in mind and I hope he realizes that the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc) and I are really supporting him, really backing him up when we say we will surely vote for this bill. But it is such a small step he should not expect us to continue to sing the minister's praises until he deals with these other issues. In terms of what we are talking about today, let us do something fast to treat women in terms of pensions as though they are really persons and not just individuals who get their pensions, in many instances only because of their attachment to a man. Surely that day has gone.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Mortgage insurance underwriting practices; the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet)—Combines Investigation Act—Difficulty in obtaining newsprint—Request for minister's intervention; the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—Immigration—Government policy respecting future immigration.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

It is my understanding that motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) will stand by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 2. The hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE AMENDMENT IN CANADA OF THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I dispense with the reading of the three remaining pages?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have the feeling this motion is extremely important, and although long, it should be read before the House. In fact, we cannot do otherwise unless there is unanimous consent. That is what you have asked; however, those are things that must be discussed between us at some point. We are getting more and more aggressive because of a very serious situation. If we cannot achieve good mutual understanding, we are going to live hard times. That being so, I accept that you be spared from reading the motion, but you should take good notice of what I have just said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In short, when I suggested that the motion not be read, that was simply a suggestion. As for me, I would not object to reading it in English and in French. That would probably have taken a good part of the hour at hon. members' disposal. Just because one feels one's rights may have been infringed on does not mean one should perhaps infringe on other people's rights.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moves:

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE AMENDMENT IN CANADA OF THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

Whereas the Parliament of Canada and the legislatures of each and every province of Canada have requested, and consented to, the enactment of an act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom in the terms hereinafter set forth, and the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted Addresses to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

PART I
POWER TO AMEND THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Subject to this part, the Parliament of Canada may make laws repealing, amending or re-enacting any provision of the Constitution of Canada.

2. No law made under the authority of this part affecting any provision of this act or section 51A of the British North America Act, 1867, or affecting any provision of the Constitution of Canada relating to

(a) the powers of the legislature of a province to make laws,

(b) the rights or privileges granted or secured by the Constitution of Canada to the legislature or the government of a province,

(c) the assets or property of a province, or

(d) the use of the English or French language, shall come into force unless it is concurred in by the legislatures of all the provinces.

3. (1) No law made under the authority of this part affecting any provision of the Constitution of Canada that refers to one or more, but not all, of the provinces, shall come into force unless it is concurred in by the legislature of every province to which the provision refers.

(2) Section 2 of this act does not extend to any provision of the Constitution of Canada referred to in subsection (1) of this section.

4. (1) No law made under the authority of this part affecting any provision of the Constitution of Canada relating to education in any province other than Newfoundland shall come into force unless it is concurred in by the legislatures of all the provinces other than Newfoundland.

(2) No law made under the authority of this part affecting any provision of the Constitution of Canada relating to education in the province of Newfoundland shall come into force unless it is concurred in by the legislature of the province of Newfoundland.

(3) Sections 2 and 3 of this act do not extend to any provision of the Constitution of Canada referred to in subsection (1) or (2) of this section.

5. No law made under the authority of this part affecting any provision of the Constitution of Canada, not coming within sections 2, 3 or 4 of this act, shall come into force if such law in rejected by any combination of provincial legislatures representative of not less than 20 per cent of the population of Canada (according to the latest census) within a period of 24 months after its passage by the Parliament of Canada.

6. Notwithstanding anything in the Constitution of Canada, the Parliament of Canada may exclusively make laws from time to time amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive Government of Canada, and the Senate and House of Commons, except as regards

(a) the functions of the Queen and the Governor General in relation to the Parliament or Government of Canada;

(b) the requirements of the Constitution of Canada respecting a yearly session of Parliament;

(c) the maximum period fixed by the Constitution of Canada for the duration of the House of Commons, except that the Parliament of Canada may, in time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, continue a House of Commons beyond such maximum period, if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of such House;

(d) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate;

(e) the residence qualifications of senators and the requirements of the Constitution of Canada for the summoning of persons to the Senate by the Governor General in the Queen's name;

(f) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of senators representing such province;

(g) the principles of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada; and

(h) the use of the English or French language.

7. (1) Notwithstanding anything in the Constitution of Canada, in each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to the amendment from time to time of the Constitution of the province, except as regards the office of Lieutenant-Governor.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1) of this section, no province, through the passage of an act of its legislature, shall partially, or totally, secede from the federation of Canada unless such act of the province is approved by the Parliament of Canada and the legislatures of each and every province of Canada.

8. Any law to repeal, amend or re-enact any provision of the Constitution of Canada that is not authorized to be made either by the Parliament of Canada under the authority of section 6 of this Act or by the legislature of a province under the authority of section 7 of this act is subject to the provisions of sections 1 to 5 of this act.

9. Nothing in this part diminishes any power of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislature of a province, existing at the coming into force of this act, to make laws in relation to any matter.

10. Notwithstanding any conditions contained within sections 1 to 9 inclusive, the people of Canada, acting in consort, can petition the Parliament of Canada to hold a national referendum on any constitutional matter. Such a petition must be signed by no less than 5 per cent of the voting population of Canada and be validated and accepted by the federal government.

On the receipt of such validated petition, the Parliament of Canada shall, before the lapsing of two full years from the date of receipt of the validated petition, hold a national referendum on the substance of the petition and shall enact into law the substance of the petition if such petition receives a 75 per cent plurality of all votes in Canada and no less than a 50 per cent plurality of all votes in each and every province of Canada.

11. No act of the parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the coming into force of this act shall extend or be deemed to extend to Canada or to any province or territory of Canada as part of the law thereof.

12. Notwithstanding the substance, rights or prohibitions, stated or implied, of the Constitution of Canada as revised, this act recognizes that Canada is a multicultural nation composed primarily of two linguistic solitudes, namely English and French. Furthermore, this act acknowledges the inherent right of self-determination of each of these solitudes respectively and that each shall have the inherent right through legal and peaceful means to secede each from the other if so desired and duly and legally expressed through a referendum supported in a near unanimous fashion by the people of the solitude seeking separation.

Furthermore, that such separation, if and when decided upon by the solitude seeking separation, shall occur not along established provincial territorial boundaries but along such contiguous territorial boundaries that are duly and legally negotiated between the two solitudes but which fully respect the rights of large minorities and their expressed option to remain with the solitude of their choice.

13. Without limiting the meaning of the expression "Constitution of Canada" in this part that expression includes the following enactments and any order, rule or regulation thereunder, namely,

(a) the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1964;

(b) the Manitoba act, 1870;

(c) the Parliament of Canada Act, 1875;

(d) the Canadian Speaker (Appointment of Deputy) Act, 1895, Session 2;

(e) the Alberta act;

(f) the Saskatchewan act;

(g) the Statute of Westminster, 1931, in so far as it is part of the law of Canada; and

(h) this act.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT, 1867, AMENDED

14. Class 1 of section 91 of the British North America Act, 1867, as enacted by the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, and class 1 of section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, are repealed.

PART III
FRENCH VERSION

15. The French version of this act set forth in the Schedule shall form part of this act.

PART IV
CITATION AND COMMENCEMENT

16. This act may be cited as the Constitution of Canada Amendment Act.

17. This Act shall come into force on.....day of.....

He said: Mr. Speaker, I present this motion to Parliament to initiate a new round of discussion on constitutional reform and, more specifically, discussion on the major first step of this process which is agreement on an amending formula followed by patriation. I trust that in the next round of discussion more debate will occur in the legislatures of this country. This process of constitutional patriation and finding agreement on an amending formula, though almost entirely the preserve of conferences by the first ministers and their subordinates, should begin to move directly into the legislatures and into this Canadian Parliament. Constitutional discussion and decision-making has to transcend what has become known as executive federalism.

First of all, I wish to commend the mammoth efforts of the former prime minister and now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) for his initiatives and dedication to constitutional renewal and reform. Indeed, all of the past efforts at constitutional renewal are commendable even in their failure. Though the intent of the previous government was commendable, the comprehensive, two-stage approach of total constitutional renewal proved to be too complex and too encompassing for even the most elementary agreement. It did, however, confirm the former approach of patriation with amending formula, followed by a stepwise renewal. Such an approach was pursued through the decade of the sixties culminating in near success at the constitutional conference of October 14, 1964.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) is to be commended for his wisdom in recognizing the applicability of such an approach when he reached agreement with four premiers at the Kingston conference on September 16, 1977. He said in the communique resulting from that conference:

> We are all committed to the objective of bringing the constitution home, so that we can change any part of it without going through the Parliament of the United Kingdom. We are confident that a new Progressive Conservative Prime Minister at Ottawa could bring us both the new attitudes required and the necessary political co-operation among all provincial governments.

Premier Bill Davis of Ontario is recognized as a consistent and strong proponent of patriation as a paramount priority. His consistency is commendable in my estimation.

History condemns us all for failing thus far to patriate the constitution, to find an amending formula and become a whole nation in law and in fact. It was during the federal-provincial conference of 1927 that questions concerning the constitution and its amendment were first debated. The search for an actual amending formula was re-initiated and addressed under the leadership of the former prime minister, the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, in the 1960s. Debates emerging from that period centred on the search for a constitutional amending formula and resulted in the Fulton-Favreau formula in 1964.

At the conclusion of the federal-provincial conference held in Charlottetown on September 1 and 2, 1964, to commemorate the centennial of the conference of the Fathers of Confederation which took place in that city in 1864, the Prime Minister, the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson and the premiers issued a communique. In it, the late prime minister and premiers "affirmed their unanimous decision to conclude the repatriation of the BNA Act without delay". The communique added that they decided to complete a procedure for amending the constitution in Canada based on the draft legislation proposed at the constitutional conference of 1961 which they accept in principle. The attorneys general of Canada then met to complete the amending formula.

At a conference of Canadian first ministers on October 14, 1964, the first ministers unanimously agreed upon an amending formula. The communique issued by the late Prime Minister Pearson and the premiers from that conference states that when the amending procedure becomes law, all future amendments to Canada's constitution will be made in Canada instead of by the parliament of the United Kingdom. The communique added the following:

> As a result our constitution will have become, for the first time in the history of Canada, truly and wholly Canadian.

The text of the bill embodying the amending procedure, "An act to provide for the amendment in Canada of the Constitution of Canada", and unanimously approved by the then prime minister and all the premiers of Canada on October 14, 1964, has been used as the basis for the bill proposed in the motion that is before this House today—almost exactly 15 years later. As there was unanimous provincial agreement at that time, the preamble to this motion states that all provinces have requested and consented to the enactment of such a bill. However, I anticipate that there will be a lot more discussion.

Some changes, of course, were made to accord with the reality of the intervening events of the last 15 years. In particular, clauses 5, 7, 10 and 12 are new and unique. Nevertheless, the basic principles embodied in this motion now before the House may be summarized. Before I summarize the principles, however, I should like to say that there are some provinces that desire more extensive veto power and would argue that the 20 per cent in clause 5 should be reduced to, perhaps, 15 per cent or even 10 per cent. That is a debatable point.

The principles of the bill may be summarized as follows. First, the BNA Act of 1867, with modest amendments, has served this nation well and renewal should be a gradual and stepwise process.

Second, this bill, if passed, would effectively patriate the constitution to Canada and provide a formula for subsequent revision in Canada through parliamentary and legislature approval.

Third, this bill incorporates a constitutional amending formula which (a) requires the unanimous agreement of the legislatures of all provinces as well as the Parliament of Canada to amend existing provincial powers, including natural resource ownership and control and the use of the English and French languages; (b) generally permits the provinces to amend their provincial constitutions as they deem appropriate; (c) generally permits the federal government to amend the constitution on purely federal matters; (d) provides a mechanism for the people of Canada to initiate constitutional amendment; and (e) provides a formula for amending the constitution generally in all other areas, which gives some emphasis to population representation rather than just emphasizing provincial legal entities and their equality of status within the federation.

Fourth, it establishes the requirement that no province can unilaterally secede from the federation in total or in part without the unanimous agreement of all the members of the federation.

Fifth, it recognizes the basic right to self-determination of the two linguistic solitudes, English and French, in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, time does not permit me to discuss in depth the implications of the various principles embodied in the amending formula proposed in this motion. Permit me to state, though, that I do not think we should be deterred by the impending Quebec referendum from seeking a way to patriate the Canadian constitution with an agreed upon amending formula. I am of the opinion that Canadians of French origin wish to remain, and will remain, as partners with the rest of us in this Canadian federation, but only through their own willingness resulting from the respect, recognition and advantage they receive from partnership.

The partnership will not endure through force or coercion and the right for self-determination must never be denied but rather held as an unequivocal right within the constitution itself. All parts of this nation form a whole which is unique in history, with a potential to lead the world a century hence, coveted by peoples and governments the world over. Indeed, I was quite surprised to read article XI of the United States articles of confederation. Perhaps I could put that on the record, Mr. Speaker. It reads as follows:

Canada acceding to this confederation, and joining in the measures of the United States, shall be admitted into and entitled to all the advantages of this union; but no other colony shall be admitted into the same, unless such admission be agreed to by nine states.

Mr. Speaker, in closing may I say that, having been a provincial MLA, it is my intention to initiate debate on this matter in any way I possibly can in as many provincial legislatures as possible. All elected representatives in Canada must relate positively to constitutional understanding and reform. It is not the exclusive reserve of lawyers, as I have been told on several occasions.

It is also time for us as a nation to cut our apron strings, to become full masters in our own house and, indeed, to become a whole member nation in the community of world nations. It is the way of the future for a great country called Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in this House on the most basic law governing this assembly.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have to admire the courage of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) in tackling such a subject in what I believe is probably his first address in this House and, in addition to taking on the subject, for offering some new approaches to the older Fulton-Favreau formula.

I noted that he said that we all welcome the day when Canada will have a fully Canadian constitution in the sense that the process of amending, too, will be one which is wholly Canadian. I welcome that statement from the other side of the House. I hope, however, this is not to be at any price. I hope we are not to feel that we must achieve this Canadian process of amending regardless of the content of the legislation by which it is attained. I submit that might well be a serious mistake.

There are some procedural problems with this motion. I am not going to challenge it on a procedural basis but I think I ought to mention that there are such procedural difficulties. For instance, the formula is not in the usual form for a joint address of this kind. Perhaps, more important, you will note that the words used contain a certain assumption of fact which is not true.

The address reads in part as follows:

Whereas the Parliament of Canada and the legislature of each and every province of Canada have requested, and consented to—

This is an hypothesis contrary to fact. There is no such request in this case and I doubt that there is likely to be. I am willing to go along with the hypothesis, however, and assume that this event has happened and that we are concerned with debating it. In other words, I do not want to go on debating the procedure, but would rather come to the substance. I think, however, that these points should be noted in passing.

Basically the hon. member has presented us with the Fulton-Favreau formula of 1964 with a few changes. In clause 5 he has changed the formula which is used, and rather than providing for a consent formula, he has provided for a rejection formula. Generally speaking, however, the approach is the same as in Fulton-Favreau. However, clauses 7, 10 and 12 are entirely new, as he mentioned. They are additions to the Fulton-Favreau approach. In clause 7, he provides the right of secession for any province, which may be exercised with the consent of all of the provinces and of the Parliament of Canada. In clause 10 he provides for referenda on constitutional matters, and in clause 12, which is the linguistic solitude clause, he also provides for referenda on the basis of linguistic groups.

I am almost tempted to sit down at this point to allow maximum opportunity for those on the government side to say whether or not they agree with these proposals. It strikes me that the hon. gentleman is being brave indeed in his own ranks in proposing the right of secession. I wonder how many of his colleagues on that side agree with him. There is one member I would like to hear from on that subject whom I see smiling at me. I would mention his constituency if I could remember it. I am told by one of my colleagues it is the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

It seems to me the provision regarding referenda is directly at odds with the attitude his own government has taken with respect to the referendum bill introduced by the previous government, one which was supported by members on this side for certain kinds of purposes but not in such broad terms as is being proposed here by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

With respect to clause 12, I am not sure that I expect objections to be raised by the other side, but I am certainly prepared to raise one myself. I do not like the phrase "two linguistic solitudes". I can only think of the word "solitude" as implying an enclave, with a lack of communication. If that is sometimes true in Canada, it is not what we would wish to enshrine in our constitution, and surely it is not something that we would want to perpetuate. It is extraordinary that the translation into French of the words "two linguistic solitudes" uses the words "deux groupes linguistiques", which mean something entirely different. They mean two linguistic groups. It takes the sting out of "solitude" by transposing it to a neutral word. The second time the phrase is used in English, speaking about the right of self-determination of each of these solitudes, the French has "de ces deux entités" which means "of these two entities".

I do not intend to charge the hon. member with the quality of the translation. Either the linguistic facilities of the House have let him down or the assistance he has received from his colleagues has not been equal to this occasion. However, it is important to note the difference in flavour between the English and the French on this point. Since the hon. member in his speech, as I caught it, used the phrase "two linguistic solitudes", I think we are entitled to think that it is that notion he wants to get across. I do not know whether members on the other side will object to this phrase, but I profoundly object to this phrase as describing any part of the reality of Canada.

I have said that principally this motion which is before us incorporates the Fulton-Favreau formula. That formula was, it is true, as the hon. member for Edmonton East has pointed out, agreed upon by the first ministers of Canada in 1964. But that agreement was very short-lived. It was an agreement without ratification, if I may put it that way. There was no follow-up. It is very similar to what happened after the agreement at Victoria in 1971. It will be recalled that at that time, when Premier Bourassa returned home—I think he had learned from the previous experience of 1964 that he had to keep his options open and so he did not give a final answer at Victoria—he found public opinion in Quebec was so opposed to the agreement that he was not prepared subsequently to ratify it.

In 1964 the follow-up was not so clear-cut. There were opposition politicians in Quebec who campaigned so effectively against the agreement which had been reached by the first ministers that the first minister of Quebec did not dare to go forward. That is why this agreement never matured into actual constitutional change. The agreement was too temporary to allow the change to take place. Indeed, the fact that within a very few years that agreement could be replaced by the Victoria formula indicates a considerable change of heart on the part of the first ministers.

In fact, the two situations were almost identical. In effect, we had agreement by all the first ministers in Victoria on the amending formula. What we did not have agreement on was the total package. It was not the amending formula in particular that Premier Bourassa finally decided to reject. Although it was in a sense the adoption of the amending formula before there had been subsequent reform of the constitution, the objection was not primarily and directly to that clause as such, as I recall it; it was to the totality of the package reached at that time.

We thus have a very similar agreement seven years later which changed, I submit for the better, the provisions of the amending formula which was agreed to in 1964. Why do I say that the change was for the better, Mr. Speaker? Because a large part of the rigidity which had been incorporated into the amending formula in 1964 has been removed. The Fulton-Favreau formula, if it had been adopted, would have been the most restrictive amending formula of any federation in the world. In all other countries there is provision for amendment which does not require the unanimous agreement of all of the governments in the country in order to bring about a change.

In the United States there are two kinds of provisions for constitutional amendment. One is through Congress and one through popular vote. In Germany, amendments to the basic law require a two-thirds majority in both Houses, the Bundestag and the Bundesrat. The Länder or the states are not consulted directly but participate through their representatives in the Bundesrat. In Australia, the amending formula requires a change to be adopted by the Australian parliament and then it provides for a referendum by the people in the states—not by the governments of the states, but a reference to the people in the states.

The Fulton-Favreau formula, if one looks at it closely, would, as I have suggested, require unanimous agreement of the governments of Canada in everything that really matters in the British North America Act. Let us just look at the words as they are presented to us by the hon. member for Edmonton East. In clause 2 of the motion which is before us, the operative words are:

> No law made under the authority of this part . . . shall come into force unless it is concurred by the legislatures of all the provinces.

It reads "all the provinces", not some, not a proportion as the Victoria formula would have required, but all the provinces. That applies to the four named categories, the first being "the powers of the legislature of a province to make laws". That is obviously section 92 of the British North America Act. It is by that section that such power is established. Section 92 is the heart of provincial power, along with section 93.

Section 93 is taken care of later in the Fulton-Favreau formula and equally restrictively, but the provisions in section 92 could not be changed without the unanimous consent of the provinces. And so on through the other categories: the rights or privileges granted or secured by the legislature or the government of a province, the assets or property of a province and the use of the English or French languages.

I can hardly argue historically that this is an Alberta amendment, but it clearly is the Alberta position in constitutional negotiations today. It is the position that Premier Lougheed has been putting forward, that there should be unanimous consent by the provinces for any constitutional amendment.

I believe it is based on a profoundly simplistic notion of the constitution. It is based on a belief that if only this could be written into the constitution no further changes could be made. It forgets the fact that the greatest changes in the constitution are those which have been written in by the courts—decisions by the Privy Council and by the Supreme Court.

The notion that conflict could be cured, or the constitution "frozen" as it were, by provisions of this kind ignores the dynamics of the constitution; it ignores the fact that issues arise and that powers overlap, that the power over property and civil rights which is in section 92, and thereby conferred on the provinces, conflicts with almost all the federal powers, the power over trade and commerce, for example. What a court has to do when it is confronted with a situation where either of those rights could apply is to decide which has sway or how far either should be allowed to prevail. That is not a question that can be solved by saying the constitution must not be changed. You do not have to change the constitution by a formal document if a court is going to say that in such and such a case the federal power over trade and commerce is the one that applies and that provincial power over property and civil rights shall not prevail. That is the real question as to the meaning of these powers and it is one which will not even be touched.

Even if the constitution could be frozen, though, the question is whether it should be. Should we freeze our constitution for all time which is, in effect, what we are doing? The reason we have failed to reach agreement in all the many constitutional conferences which have been held is mainly that, though it is not necessary in law, we have been proceeding on the basis that there must be unanimous agreement, on the basis of a political tradition of somewhat short duration that all the provinces have to agree before anything can be done. As long as this is the basis upon which we are proceeding, I feel we will never succeed in arriving at any agreement, that we will never make any progress because there is scarcely a subject upon which all the provinces can be expected to agree.

In recent years in Canada we have seen an enormous growth of provincial power, a dramatic increase in provincial revenues and bureaucracies. Perhaps even more striking is the increase in the provincial self-image, or the self-image of the provincial governments, and particularly of the premiers. These are minor potentates, Mr. Speaker, and sometimes they regard themselves as being much more than that. They have too much power already inasmuch as they have been able to stymie any agreement on changes to the constitution. I, for one, could not accept a constitutional amending formula which would forever give every government the right to stop all progress.

All right is not on one side, Mr. Speaker. We obviously could not accept amendments to the constitution by federal decision alone even though this House is representative of every province. The fact is, of course, that since there is representation by population some areas are better represented, as they should be, than are others. So the provinces must "have a say". But they ought not to be able to have such a say that every last province has to agree to everything that is done. That, Mr. Speaker, is really the nub of it, whether we ought to freeze our constitution at this time and say, in effect, there will be no further changes or that they can be made only by a process which is so excruciatingly difficult that the process will probably never be accomplished, or whether we ought to adopt something which is more flexible and which allows more room to grow.

I think I can speak for all members in my party—I certainly speak for myself when I say that my vision is one in which there is more flexibility, more openness for the future, more opportunity to grow. It is that model, rather than the polar model, which I recommend to the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to commend the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) for so early in his tenure as a member of this House bringing forward proposals for the amending structure, new in at least four respects. If we do not manage to pass this measure today—and I think it is unlikely because there are many aspects which give rise to discussion—I hope the hon. member will not be discouraged from pursuing the idea that this Parliament should be engaged much more than in the past in the discussion of constitutional reform, including an amending formula.

I entirely agree with him that over the past 50 years, going back, as I believe he mentioned, to 1927, most of the discussion with regard to the British North America Act took place between the federal government and the provinces; members of Parliament were, by and large, excluded from those discussions, to say nothing, of course, of ordinary citizens. So I commend the hon. member on bringing his proposal forward for four quite substantial changes from the Fulton-Favreau formula and advocating that there should be further and more extensive parliamentary discussion of this subject.

I agree with him, too, that the previous government did make a valiant effort to address the matter, though it did so in too complex a way. Whether or not the present government intends to set up a committee of this House, or perhaps a joint committee with the other place, I do not know. Perhaps the hon. member for Edmonton East knows. In my opinion it would be a good idea. Canada is going through a very serious time. As we all know, the referendum is coming up in Quebec and I believe it would be helpful for us if we were able to address, in a relatively non-partisan way, not only the matter of an amending formula but the direction this country should take, generally.

This brings me to my own feeling that, although the BNA Act has served us very well over the years, the time has come for making changes, if not, indeed, for a new constitution. Therefore I would hope that we would not only be able to patriate the BNA Act but, almost at the same time, that we would be in a position to make very substantial changes in it.

It is a pity we cannot engage in a real debate on this subject, because I have a number of questions to ask the hon. member for Edmonton East about his four new proposals. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) suggested that clauses 7 and 12 said pretty much the same thing. I do not think I agree. Clause 7, as I read it, says no province may secede from the federation unless the act of secession is approved by Parliament and the legislatures of all the provinces. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville referred to that as a right of secession. I really do not think it is a right of secession when the act of secession must be approved not only by the federal Parliament but by the legislatures of all the provinces.

More seriously, when you get to clause 12, the hon. member for Edmonton East is in fact giving what he calls linguistic solitudes—I prefer the word groups—the right to secede without the approval of any of the legislatures, simply through a referendum on the part of the group wishing to secede. I could not support this measure because I see what appears to be an inconsistency between those two clauses, on one hand saying no province can secede without the approval of the Parliament of Canada and every province of Canada, and on the other hand saying of the two major linguistic groups, either one may secede without reference to provincial legislatures or the federal Parliament.

I have already mentioned that the word "solitude" was perhaps not the best to use. I have noted that the French use different words. In French it is really groups or entities. I have been wondering, but did not have time to dash out and check, what word was used when Hugh MacLennan's book "Two Solitudes" was translated. Other hon. members may recall.

An hon. Member: Solitude.

Miss Jewett: That is interesting. Then there is a quite substantial difference here in the translation. I am not at all clear on what is meant in the second paragraph of section 12. I do not understand——shall occur not along established provincial territorial boundaries but along such contiguous territorial boundaries that are duly and legally negotiated between the two—

Perhaps he can explain it to me later. I am serious in saying I hope we will pursue further discussion and debate in this House on the amending formula and on the British North America Act itself.

Clause 10 is another addition to the Fulton-Favreau formula. This is an interesting proposal to initiate constitutional changes through national referenda. I was not here, nor was the hon. member, in the last House, but I understand that the Conservatives who were then in opposition opposed the use of referenda. I do not know whether the hon. member talked with any of his fellow Conservative members to see what they think of this.

In a country like Australia, which is a relatively homogenous society, there is a lot to be said for the use of referenda in constitutional reform. I am not at all sure that is the case in a country which has a very real duality in linguistic terms. Referenda under such circumstances may indeed be divisive. Although he is requiring a 50 per cent plurality of all votes in each and every province, and that would undoubtedly lessen the divisiveness, the chances of getting such a plurality on most of the matters that might be brought forward would be very limited.

It was, however, an interesting proposal. It might have answered to some extent the complaint of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville that the approach suggested in this resolution is not sufficiently flexible. I agree with him that basically this resolution is asking for the unanimous approval of all provinces on anything to do with section 92. Although it has been our practice by and large—not entirely—to have unanimous agreement of all provinces before an amendment is sent to Westminster, nevertheless to entrench this into the amending formula would, I agree, be extremely rigid.

My understanding of clause 10, the referenda clause, is that it tries to develop a little bit of flexibility which is not otherwise there. Although I basically disagree with the use of referenda in a country like Canada, I thought that was an ingenious way to try to get around the problem of unanimous approval of the provinces.

I hope the hon. member realizes that if a referendum did affect property and civil rights, if it were passed and so on, it would mean the provincial legislatures would not be able to veto it. At least that is my understanding of the way he has worded the referendum clause.

On the clause that is now clause 5, I would have thought that on non-critical matters 20 per cent was a reasonable percentage and it really would not need to be any lower. I hope hon. members realize clause 5 does not really touch any of the guts of the British North America Act because it does not touch section 92 at all.

I find I have a sufficient number of questions and puzzlements, particularly on what I see as a conflict between the secession clause, clause 7, and the linguistic groups clause and their rights to secession, clause 12, that I would say the bill needs a good deal of working over before it can go any further.

I want to applaud the hon. member again on suggesting that we should at least start debating some of these issues in this House. Since he has raised this matter, I am particularly interested in knowing whether he has any views about some of the proposals brought forward by the previous government, particularly the House of the Federation proposal of which we in this party were extremely critical. The hon. member will remember this was a proposal to abolish the Senate and create a new body to be called the House of the Federation. I would like to know his views on that, whether he has views not only on an amending formula but on the important substantive changes that we might see in the constitution of Canada. I look forward on some other occasion to debating those matters.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I compliment the hon. member on bringing forward the question of constitutional amendment. It is high time we were able to patriate our constitution. For too long, when speaking to others, Canadians have been embarrassed that we cannot in any way alter our constitution without the permission of Westminster. However, my friend has unfortunately not entirely considered some of the concerns that have been expressed by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) and the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett).

One of the major problems in our country is that the provinces are of various sizes and economic strengths. Prince Edward Island was at one time a pretty good province in Canada in terms of comparative strength, but now has far less economic strength than my city of Mississauga, less than half its population. It is unable, except with enormous assistance from the federal government, to maintain the whole plethora of provincial obligations. To a large extent the same applies in other provinces.

It is impossible for large provinces with economic strength to suggest in any way that some small province, such as perhaps the province of Manitoba or the province of Nova Scotia, should have the right to veto any change in the Constitution of Canada, but indeed that is what the effect of the hon. member's motion would be. What we have to do is to rethink what we mean in terms of provinces when we talk about who should be allowed to vote and what unanimity we need in order to amend the constitution.

A number of persons analysing our constitutional problem have asked, "Why don't we divide Canada into realistic economic regions? Why can't we have an economic region composed of the Atlantic provinces, and why can't we have, for the purposes of provincial responsibilities, for the purpose of an economic base in that area, one jurisdiction?" Perhaps there is no need to amalgamate completely, but certainly in terms of how things are arranged vis-à-vis the rest of Canada, and in amending the constitution, there should be economic regions and no particular province in those regions should have a veto over the whole of Canada.

Clearly the province of Quebec forms an economic region, and so does the province of Ontario. As we proceed west there is no question, in my view, that the province of British Columbia, perhaps together with the Yukon Territory, is becoming an economic region. I should like to see Alberta, the province of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), treated as an economic region, together with her sister provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. In terms of an amending formula we should decide that each economic region should have a veto in amending the constitution if together they cannot agree on it, but that no right of veto in altering the constitution should be allowed to just one province as the provinces now stand.

In going on to other matters I should like to say that the referendum proposal suggested by the hon. member is an interesting one, but when he states that an amendment proposed by referendum must be passed in toto by a plurality of 75 per cent, and by at least 50 per cent in any province, then the matter of referendum has to be virtually unanimously agreed to by all voting Canadians. The cost of carrying out such a referendum would then seem like an enormous waste of taxpayers' money. Surely members of Parliament representing their constituencies are well aware when a matter has at least 75 per cent approval and at least 50 per cent approval in the whole of the country. So the referendum proposal, while I think it is interesting and one which perhaps will help us determine whether a particular region will be in favour of an amendment to the constitution, surely deals with a matter which should be considered on the basis of a majority rather than on the basis of 75 per cent approval across Canada and a 50 per cent plurality in every provincial jurisdiction.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville and the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam mentioned section 92 of the British North America Act. Surely the proposal will, in some senses, make it impossible to amend the constitution at all. If provincial jurisdictional matters cannot be touched at all without the unanimous consent of ten provinces, then in effect federal jurisdictional matters cannot be touched either, and what you will have done in effect is to have a provision not allowing an amendment ever to be brought to the constitution. I bring that to the attention of the hon. member because perhaps this was not his intention.

What concerns me about this proposal is clause 12. In the debate on the Speech from the Throne I spoke last week about my concept of one Canada. This clause refers to two linguistic solitudes, a French Canada and an English Canada, a hyphenated Canadian and different kinds of Canadians. It even goes so far as to suggest that they could break up confederation and go their own way. We have been together in this omelet of confederation since 1867. Our railways have run through each others parts, our canals service each others parts, our investments, our buildings and our enterprises in all of Canada are in English and in French. What we have been trying to do is to break down that solitude so that each one of us can talk to the other.

Surely this party recognizes the separate communities right across Canada. We recognize Canadians whose culture is Italian or whose culture is Indian. What we must do is to treat all Canadians the same in one equal Canada. Any constitutional proposal which, in its very essence, contemplates the breaking up of Canada on linguistic lines, perhaps with new boundaries, as suggested in paragraph 12, is one which I and the people whom I represent would be most unhappy to contemplate. I am sure that if the hon. member thought about it he would agree that the people of Alberta also would be most unhappy with it. Surely we have one Canada, and surely we can be one Canadian nation. Surely we cannot all of a sudden try to do the Humpty-Dumpty trick, get all the king's horses and all the king's men together, and put back into two separate packages what is in that frying pan. Sir, we are Canadians.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to participate in the debate has just about run out. In passing, I want to make two short observations, one in respect of the comments made by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), and the other in respect of the subsequent comments made by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett).

First of all I think that private conversation will bring about a further explanation of paragraph 12 which is quite understandable and which simply addresses itself to the fact that man-made boundaries seldom have much impact on language and culture, and on love and hope.

My other point is addressed to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville. I wish simply to remind him that the narrowness of his approach to the matter placed before us by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) does not in any way serve the very real point made by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, that this House should be addressing itself to the nature of this question. For far too long the House has not been seized with this question in a proper and direct way. I commend the hon. member for bringing the matter forward and I hope that at some future date the subject of a bill similar to this will find itself before an appropriate committee of the two Houses of Parliament so that we may enter into a dialogue as members of Parliament perhaps for the first time in this century.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. the hour provided for private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crombie that Bill C-6, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to contribute to this debate and to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-6, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act and, more precisely, an act to amend the spouse's allowance. I will keep my remarks relatively brief so as to give as many other hon. members as possible an opportunity to express their various views and opinions on this very important and worth-while bill.

Today there are 2.1 million Canadians over the age of 65, approximately 9 per cent of our population. It is estimated that in the year 2001 there will be approximately 3.4 million senior citizens in Canada, representing 11.2 per cent of our population, and by the year 2031 there will be approximately 6.4 million senior citizens representing in excess of 20 per cent of the population.

There is no question that the biggest problem facing many of our senior citizens today is poverty. A single person who receives no other income except that of the basic old age security and the guaranteed income supplement must live off an income of only $3,700 per year, and a couple must live off an income of only $6,800 a year. The result is that one-half of the unattached elderly, and one-fifth of elderly couples, live below the poverty line. This is twice the rate of the general population.

One may ask: what about private pensions? Well, the answer is that private pensions, as they are structured today, are not able to meet adequately the retirement needs of most Canadians. When preparing my notes I was astounded to read that over two-thirds of our elderly do not have private pensions and that almost 60 per cent of working Canadians are not covered by company pension plans. Also it is a fact that very few pension plans are indexed against inflation, and that most of these pensions do not even provide for survivors' benefits.

In view of these very serious shortcomings and inequities in our pension system, particularly as they relate to our elderly, the problem is further compounded for those spouses whose only income is the old age pension and supplement to support his or her spouse who, because that particular spouse had not yet attained the age of 65, is not eligible for old age security, and consequently both spouses are forced to live—or perhaps a better word is survive—on the inadequacy of one pension.

This very serious problem was finally recognized by the government in 1975 with the passage of Bill C-62, the spouse's allowance. Although the bill was commendable in itself and it provided serious relief to the many pensioners concerned, it did not go far enough and some serious inequities still remain. Bill C-62 did not ensure that widows and widowers would be protected in the event of a spouse's death until the survivor became eligible for regular old age security at age 65. Also under Bill C-62 spouses receiving the spouse's allowance lost it if their spouse received a jail sentence of 90 days or more, and payment only resumed when the prison term was served. Although few people are affected by this provision, its application has been the source of inequities in that old age security pensioners face double punishment for their crimes: loss of benefits and imprisonment.

There is no question that it would be considered cruel and inhumane by every compassionate Canadian to have to say that on the death of the older spouse the pension of the younger spouse is terminated after six months. Yet this is the case today. It is a shocking situation that a widow, in her distressing time of sorrow, should receive information that the pension she has been receiving will be cut soon. How is she supposed to live with no pension income? The bereaved spouse is advised, when notified of the termination of the allowance, to apply for provincial welfare, but until application is made and approved several weeks may elapse in which time ordinary living expenses still go on and on and on. Also she is advised to apply for Canada Pension Plan survivor's benefits.

If the deceased partner had been eligible to receive Canada Pension Plan benefits, the widow would have been eligible to receive approximately 65 per cent of the pension her husband received. However, this does not come automatically. Application for survivor's benefits first must be made, and it all takes precious time. To compound the matter further, for widows in Ontario another irony exists inasmuch as she is no longer covered by OHIP, the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. While her husband who was over 65 was living, she was covered as his dependent under the free health insurance provided. Now she must apply for OHIP, and while premium assistance is ultimately available to those eligible, premium payments must be made until the application showing proof of need is approved. This is a very unjust situation when pension income has been terminated.

When Bill C-6 is passed into law it will negate some of the inequities of the present act. Spouse's allowance recipients whose spouses die will continue to receive the allowance until they themselves turn 65 and qualify for old age security in their own right, or until they remarry or die. The second amendment will remove the provision whereby old age security benefits are suspended when an old age pensioner is sentenced to prison for more than 90 days. This also meant that spouses of prisoners entitled to the spouse's allowance lost their benefits as well. The two amendments will benefit more than 2,200 persons in the 1980-81 fiscal year and will cost approximately $4.6 million a year.

While these amendments will alleviate two serious problems, they represent only a further small step forward in relation to the pension system in Canada and the possibilities which still remain for even much greater improvement. No doubt as the Canadian pension system is being continually revised for further improvements, some issues can and will be dealt with quickly, while others more complex will require more time to accomplish.

If I have any criticism at all about Bill C-6 it is the fact that this bill will not benefit those spouses of pensioners who will have been deceased more than six months from the time Bill C-6 receives Royal Assent and becomes law. In other words, the retroactiveness of this bill is very limited, indeed. How was this figure of six months arrived at; why six months, and why not a year or two years? Why not include all eligible widows or widowers?

I have no doubt that Bill C-6 is commendable in redressing some of the glaring inequities connected with the spouse's allowance, but surely we can afford to be a little more magnanimous and extend the spouse's allowance to all widows and widowers eligible for the allowance, and who are between age 60 and 65, until they themselves are eligible for old age security at 65. Surely this is not only fair but also just.

Therefore it is of the utmost importance that when Bill C-6 is brought before the committee concerned, the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, a change must be sought to have it amended to include the changes I have suggested. The extra cost would be negligible compared to the long over due and much needed benefits that would be received by those concerned who find themselves today living below the poverty line.

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like for a few minutes to participate in the debate on Bill C-6, and more particularly the first part that guarantees to people between 60 and 65 who receive the spouse's allowance following the death of the other spouse, whether they be widows or widowers, that the benefit will continue to be paid as long as the financial need is there.

I congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) on his first bill, a bill designed to help needy and underprivileged Canadians, and as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, we hope it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the principle of Bill C-6 and it is not my intention to oppose it, and I do not believe my Liberal colleagues intend to oppose this bill either. Unfortunately, the government did not go far enough. It is all very well to say this government is doing more now than the previous government by doing away with the additional six-month period and adding a six-month retroactive effect. If we are serious about doing something, I believe, Mr. Speaker, the government should go a little further so that this measure will apply in all cases of death prior to the legislation rather than future deaths to come or deaths that occur six months before the legislation is implemented. One could ask: why did the previous government not do it? The answer to this, Mr. Speaker, is that it was the intention of the former government to forget all that and replace this survivor's allowance with a guaranteed minimum income program for all people between 60 and 65.

Mr. Caouette: Oh, come on!

Mr. Cousineau: The Liberal party at its convention held in Montreal last week, that is this past weekend—

Mr. Rossi: Is that the best you can do?

Mr. Cousineau: If he wants to disturb me, that does not bother me at all.

Mr. Rossi: Come on, there.

Mr. Cousineau: So the Liberal party this past weekend passed a resolution incorporating the principle of a guaranteed minimum income for anyone between 60 and 65 regardless of marital status, that is whether that person is a widow or widower, single or divorced, but between 60 and 65. The minister felt that the total cost of benefits paid to spouse allowance recipients as a result of that amendment would increase by $400,000 in 1979-80 and $4.3 million in 1980-81. This is not quite accurate since the federal government pays 50 per cent of the welfare benefits given out by provincial governments. The provincial governments will not claim the part of the welfare payments granted to widowers and widows between 60 and 65 who had applied for it. In my opinion this will therefore mean a reduction in the claims of the provincial governments of between $1.5 and $1.7 million. It would therefore be more accurate to talk about a real expenditure of between $2.3 and $2.5 million for the federal government.

In its electoral campaign, the Progressive Conservative government did promise that it would take care of older people. As I said earlier, $4 million may appear in the books as expenditures under Bill C-6 but in fact $2.3 million will be paid in direct assistance. Yet the federal government will spend $2.3 billion for its famous mortgage interest deduction program while everyone knows—and it is a sad fact that the Progressive Conservative members are the only ones who refuse to admit this—that the great majority of older people no longer have a mortgage on their houses.

We often hear about this famous program, Mr. Speaker. We have said often and we will go on saying that this program is discriminatory since older people in general will not benefit from the mortgage interest deduction.

Unfortunately, I must say that Bill C-6 is also discriminatory since it will apply only to spouses and not to single or divorced people.

Mr. Speaker, the minister estimates that more than 2,200 people will benefit from this measure during the current fiscal year, and I can only hope that this will not be to the detriment of other Canadians.

[English]

We hope it is a step in the right direction.

This is what worries me, Mr. Speaker. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) has declared many times that he would cut jobs, cut expenses, with no increase whatever in expenditures. With such a policy, and I have asked this during my campaign and during my maiden speech, with decisions and declarations made without studying the consequences, who will suffer among those included in the budget for social welfare as a result of this increase of $2.3 million or $4 million? This money has to come from somewhere. Will the President of the Treasury Board ask the minister to cut some of the family allowances? Will he ask the minister to reduce benefits under the UIC? Will the President of the Treasury Board ask the minister to cut his budget for medicare? A lot of other questions could be asked about this matter, and a lot of questions remain to be answered. Where will the cuts be? Will the minister answer that?

This bill is such a tiny parcel, and represents such a tiny portion of the total budget. I trust the minister will not consider this bill as the great social reform of the Conservative government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in closing I want to thank the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare for having given me the summary of this bill. However, I would like to tell him in a very friendly way not to be overly concerned about his personal stationery even if the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) had to destroy his own, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen on October 15 last.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as one who has spoken often in this chamber and, indeed, across this country on the plight of elderly women and the poverty in which too many of them live, I am pleased that my first remarks in this chamber as a member of the government are in support of a bill which will go a long way toward removing the discriminatory aspects of the spouse's allowance legislation.

It has been a long fight, and my interest in it has been shared by many members, notably, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think that he and I have received more letters on this subject than all other members of Parliament. I am sure that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is saying that he only heard from women on the matter, whereas I told him on one occasion that I had received letters from several men who had been left in that particular circumstance as well.

Mr. Knowles: That is what I was saying. I get them from the widows; you get them from the widowers.

Miss MacDonald: He is absolutely right. I endorse that.

This bill is not a minor piece of housekeeping legislation that we should easily gloss over. To me this bill symbolizes the compassion, the common sense, and the instinct for justice and individual dignity that we, as members, must have. I am proud to be associated with this bill, but even more so, with a government that so early in its mandate has moved to eliminate one of the lingering injustices in our pension system. How different was the attitude of the previous government.

This particular bill should have been enacted many years ago. By failing to act, the previous Liberal government caused untold hardship among those least able to protect themselves, widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 65. The origin of that hardship goes back to Bill C-62 of the Thirtieth Parliament, debated in the spring of 1975. I said then, and have said many times since, that certain provisions of that bill were conceived in a spirit of meanness and callousness. Here we had a piece of legislation which enabled the younger spouse of an old age pensioner to receive old age security, on the basis of need, between 60 and 65 years of age. But then what? As soon as the older spouse died, the younger partner lost not only her husband but her pension as well.

[Translation]

The reactionary approach of the former government regarding older women was evidenced in the legislation on spouse's allowance which was tabled in 1975. I clearly remember the remarks I made to the then minister of national health and welfare when he appeared before the committee. I asked him, among other things, what he and his government had against widows. What really irked us was that the younger spouse who received regular allowance cheques was faced, upon the death of her spouse, not only with the loss of a loved one but also with an immediate stoppage in her allowance. By arguing for the suspension of payments, the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) gave a very clear idea of his government's attitude towards women, in particular, older women. The bill we have before us today, Mr. Speaker, will right this wrong.

[English]

The victims of such action have overwhelmingly been women. Statistics have shown that in 90 per cent of marriages the younger spouse is female and that females live longer than males. These women, who in their younger years remained in the home looking after children, with no access to continuing income or pension plans, are the same women who in their later years too often become the victims of a society which has not yet come to terms with equality in the work place.

While women have been "persons" for 50 years, society continues to discriminate against them, and the elderly woman is doubly prejudiced. It was all too easy for the previous government, in the name of saving a few dollars, to have denied and opposed the repeated attempts by my party and the NDP to correct the discriminatory aspects of the spouse's allowance program.

The sums involved have never been great.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: No, I would say to the hon. member in the opposition that the sums involved were never large and the victims were not many but the government of that day would not pay attention. Moreover, this group is anything but highly organized with all the means of professional lobbyists. It is estimated that each month roughly 200 recipients of spouse's allowance have their benefits cancelled. In a full year of operation, the extension proposed today will cost the treasury only $4.5 million. It is not much when human dignity and justice demand it.

I want to take this occasion to salute the many women and, indeed, the men who have insisted, by their letters and their pleas, that this legislation be changed. No issue has so consistently dominated my correspondence or gripped my conscience as the shortcomings of the spouse's allowance.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

[Miss MacDonald.]

Miss MacDonald: The hon. member in the official opposition laughs about this sort of thing, but I can tell him that there are many elderly women in this country who have had cause for tears because of this legislation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is not a laughing matter, and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) should know better.

Miss MacDonald: What these women have done by continuing their efforts in letter writing and in representations has been a real exercise in grassroots politics—the efforts, disorganized though they might have been, of the elderly, the poor and the destitute who have been subjected to the callous and frustrating treatment of a government that chose not to listen. The great thing about it is that these people never gave up. In their own quiet and persistent way they knew that common sense and fair play would prevail, even if it took an election and a new government to realize it.

One of these persons was a widow from British Columbia who wrote to me just recently. She enclosed an earlier letter I had sent her in which I had pledged myself to press for the continuation of the spouse's allowance after the death of the older partner. The lady did not have an organization to protect her economic interests. She did not have a lobbyist in Ottawa. She probably did not have a degree in political science or law, but I can tell you she knew where common sense lay, and she is now calling on the government to respond. The support and active encouragement of people such as this widow from British Columbia, regarding the spouse's allowance, is the democratic system working at its best.

This bill removes one inequity, Mr. Speaker. It does not profess to tackle all of the discrimination and injustice that has been allowed to become encrusted in our pension system. Too many of the elderly people who built our schools, our bridges, our roads, and reared our children—too many are living their last years in poverty. And of these poor, it is the women who are the poorest. As the recent study on women and poverty undertaken by the National Welfare Council states:

> Most Canadian women become poor at some point in their lives. Their poverty is rarely the result of controllable circumstances, and it is seldom the outcome of extraordinary misfortune. In most cases, women are poor because poverty is a natural consequence of the role they are still expected to play in our society.

The report goes on to conclude:

> In our study of low income women in Canada, we found that old women, and especially widows, are more likely to experience poverty than any other group in this country. After a lifetime spent taking care of their spouses and children, these women who had no opportunity to become financially self-sufficient are now abandoned by the generation that benefited most from their work.

That, sir, is an analysis of the plight of elderly women in Canada today. I am delighted that the attitude this government displayed in moving so quickly to extend the spouse's allowance has led us to take two further steps on this difficult road to end poverty among and discrimination against women.

First, the minister responsible for the status of women is currently working with his colleagues on the establishment of an employment strategy for women. That program will tackle the immediate problems women have to face on the job market and, in the longer run, will alleviate the disproportionate burden older women must bear.

Second, as was announced in the Speech from the Throne, a standing committee of Parliament will soon examine the question of financial needs of pensioners in the eighties. I hope that those who will be affected by the conclusions of that study will express their points of view as persistently as and even more vigorously than all those who contributed to maintain the spouse's allowance. I urge hon. members who will be involved in this study to come to grips with the problem of the inequalities which still exist in our pension plan and to consider the sensitive questions relating to those Canadians who are not protected by the present laws. What happens to single people, divorced couples, and those who have recently lost their spouses? That question will obsess us as long as women will not be equal partners in the labour force and will not enjoy equal access to pension and old age security plans.

[English]

This bill, sir, is both real and symbolic. It is real in that it corrects an inequity. It is symbolic in that it demonstrates that this government will tackle the problems of the elderly poor with vigour and with compassion. Only through this process can we achieve a humane, sensible, and broadly-based public policy capable of meeting the needs of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to support this bill. I should like to congratulate, first of all, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), as I know she has fought many many years to have this inequity reversed. I hope that when the bill has passed through committee many of the changes will have taken place, as I think we still have many inequities. Certainly some of the people who have been writing to her, and for whom she has been crusading over the last few years, will not be re-instated, as the bill only goes back six months. I am sure the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands will appreciate that. Certainly the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) indicated that he would like to see that changed in committee. We would like to see that changed, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated that his party would as well. I think there is a mood to make the change to ensure that those who have drawn this in the past will be re-instated.

I should like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) on his new job and let him know there is a mood on this side of the House to support him. I know he will run into a good deal of difficulty because of the government's disposition to cut back, to privatize and turn things back to the provinces. This is going to make his job very difficult. His job will also be difficult because I get the impression, as do many members on this side of the House, that his department has been downgraded to some kind of a post office arrangement—that the power that was formerly in that department has given to some kind of committee with a super minister of social development. At this point we do not quite know to whom to put our questions as we are not sure who is responsible in the inner cabinet which makes the decisions on what happens in respect to health and welfare. About one quarter of all government expenditures are made through this department.

We will stand behind this minister. I think he is doing his best, and he will have a lot of support for measures of this kind. I am also pleased that the minister has instituted a pension review. I hope this review will make things better, although it was indicated by another minister who held a job which does not exist any more, that there was some question whether old age pensions should continue to be universal. I do not know whether this is the case, but we keep hearing such things. Someone makes a statement that universality is at stake, or that we have to look at universality because we cannot afford to keep doing what we are doing.

I am not sure whether at this point the government is sending up a lot of trial balloons. Last week the press was writing about gasoline costing $1.45 per gallon, but at the weekend they were writing about gasoline coming down to about a dollar or $1.20 per gallon. The press reported that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) had a meeting in Calgary with the minister from Alberta and they talked about a different price range. The minister has said that he did not have a meeting with that minister in Calgary, but then we found out that he had the meeting in Saskatoon. This type of thing goes on and on, Mr. Speaker.

I get the feeling that the government thinks it can frighten people with talk of $1.45 per gallon for gas and then those same people will think they are on a good thing when the government starts talking about $1.20 per gallon. I feel that is exactly what has happened with the talk about pensions. Is it a trial balloon for the press? As an example, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), or his office, gave the press the idea that there would be a cut of $1.5 billion in social services, or in the whole area known as social development. This would cover unemployment insurance, social welfare, medicare, pensions—the whole area that would fall under one particular super minister. I asked him a question today and he said that that rumour was certainly not true. Unfortunately, I was not able to ascertain what the cut was going to be, but we keep hearing about a cut. It may be the same kind of cut. We may start with $1.5 billion, then everyone says that we cannot have that. If we end up with a cut of a billion, everybody says that that is much better, it is $500 billion less. It is this kind of thing that I think is going on.

I am not sure whether this government is doing this deliberately, so that when the axe falls it will look benevolent, or whether it is accidental. I do not know if it can mount a conspiracy of this kind. Conspiracy takes a lot of thinking. Brains are needed to mount a conspiracy. Perhaps this is giving too much credit where it is not due. But, I am not sure, and I am concerned.

I am concerned when we talk about universality of pensions. If pensions are to be cut back, and people are told that the old age pension—the pension that you and I and my constituents have been counting on for the last 20 years, counting on getting when we are 65—is not going to be there any more, then plans people have made will be for naught. People plan that this security will be available.

I am very disturbed when I hear ministers make this vague reference about universality. I am very disturbed when I hear there are debates taking place around the country on universality. I think this whole area of social security has a formidable principle, that is, universality and extra assistance where needed. These are the two cardinal principles to all of these things.

Universality in medicare, is another example. Are we getting to a point where that is going? I do not know. I really hope it is only that "trial balloon" that I am talking about, that the government is playing some kind of game and that it will get out of that when it is a little older. After all, we are not very good in opposition either. It takes a while to get used to these parts. I am most concerned that at some particular point somebody is going to pop this one on us. Somebody is going to say that we are going to get rid of universality. This is the beginning of this particular debate.

I wish this bill was going further. At times I was embarrassed by the fact that we did not make this move that the government is making today. I think that move could easily have been made, but there was a reason. We wanted to move into a guaranteed kind of annual wage situation, certainly for those people over 60. As the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Knowles: It is Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. McRae: Winnipeg North Centre, I am sorry. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated, and I agree with him, he would like to see that we return to the age of 60 as being a flexible age by which people can move out of the working force. In the long run this makes a great deal of sense. I believe that if you free people from their jobs at that point, those who want voluntarily to be free, a lot of job openings would be created and there would be a considerable saving at the other end, that is in UIC.

I think we should be moving into an area with some kind of guaranteed annual wage which would permit people to retire at an earlier age if they are not well—or for any other reason. If they need support, this would give them some support. The reason that we steer away from this kind of thinking is that it is too costly and we cannot afford it. The NDP steers toward it but, never having been in power nationally, it has never had to face up to the other side. This is the reason that I am not a member of the NDP, because at some particular point one has to face up to paying. When we talk about moving in these directions, earlier retirements, extending programs, a complete medicare program—which is costly—we have to spend some time talking about how we raise the money. Certainly when the government is faced with a deficit of $11 billion, $12 billion or $13 billion in a year, there is a grave problem facing it.

We should look at how we got into this situation. Inevitably the Canadian people think that we got into it because we had too many social programs, that too much was being paid out for this, for that, and for the other thing, to name a few, medicare, welfare, pensions for people who have needs, and so on. They think it is because of these programs the government is in a deficit situation. I think that is wrong. It is wrong to make that simple an assumption.

If we take a look at the revenue curves of the past government through the years up to about 1974, 1975, hon. members will find that the revenue and expenditure curves rise at roughly the same rate. One goes up a little more than the other in one year, but the next year it is reversed. But all of a sudden we got into some very significant increase in revenue when we indexed. This is something that we had to do because of inflation. As this government is now finding out, inflation is not a local phenomenom but a world problem. We indexed some things, but then we did something that got us into a lot of trouble. We indexed exemptions on income tax and a whole series of other things which became known as tax expenditures. So the expenditure curve went up this way, and the revenue curve went out like that. If one looks at those curves one can almost find the day and the hour when we indexed exemptions in income tax.

If this government wants to continue some of these programs and give the people the kind of social security that Canadians can expect—because we are a wealthy country in many ways—some of these tax expenditures will have to be examined. There are a whole series of them. The National Council on Welfare in a book written in 1977, I believe, called "The Hidden Welfare System Revisited", mentioned the year 1975 to 1976. This was the last year that figures were available. In that book it indicated that the tax expenditures increased by 17.9 per cent that year and government expenditures increased by only 10.4 per cent. Basically there was about a 27 per cent spread there. These things will have to be examined.

When exemptions are indexed to the cost of living, which is a desirable thing—there is no question about that—each year one has to add to the exemption created in the last year. For example, if it is $1.5 billion this year, over four years it is probably $5 billion a year that we are talking about. This is another area about which we should think seriously. I would hope that this minister, even though he may be in a somewhat lower echelon than the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be, will be elevated to the inner circle. Also I hope, before cutting back on these programs we can begin to start paying for them by increased taxation of some sort or other, and we should look at some of those tax exemptions.

They may have been justified for a short period of time but they are not justified now. We should try to pay for these particular types of programs because they are real programs for people with real problems.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) on his new post. A minister who comes from cabbagetown can't be all bad. I hope his reputation for encouraging citizen involvement at grass roots will extend to his new ministry as well.

My party and I face a dilemma with regard to Bill C-6 in that we must support a bill that we oppose. We must support this bill because we know that 180 people will benefit from it each month, widowed people who need a pension very badly. Therefore, we want no delay. At the same time we are opposed to this bill for two reasons—first, it is based on sexist principles, or, as my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre said this afternoon, a spouse has to be dependent upon having a man, alive or dead. Second, it does not go far enough to protect those aged 60 or over.

As my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre pointed out this afternoon, it is particularly ironical that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the minister of health should hold up this bill as a celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of recognizing women as persons. In my opinion Bill C-6 is based on an out-dated attitude that Emily Murphy and her colleagues abhored. It denies the basic right of women to be treated and respected as individuals in their own right, entitled to pensions equal to men's regardless of age or marital status. Also, it ignores single, divorced, and separated women, and those who live common law, making them third class citizens with no right to a pension at all until they qualify for an old age pension.

We agree that widows, and widowers too, should have an adequate pension adjusted to their income. As other hon. members have pointed out, the National Council on Welfare reports that one widow in four can expect not to benefit from the employer of her dead husband, and 45 per cent of all widows in the 55 to 64 age group are poor.

Many women who become widows before 65 have worked as homemakers for perhaps 40 or more years. In their earlier years they probably worked 12 hours a day, seven days a week, and all this without pay. After their children had grown up they found they had few marketable skills so they were unable to seek employment in today's market. Unlike working men, they are not entitled to the Canada Pension. Surely these women are entitled to an adequate pension at age 60, or earlier, if one is needed, regardless of whether they are widowed or whether they are legally married.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister of health will take action now to prevent the need for spouse's pensions in the future. The former member for Vancouver-Kingsway, Grace MacInnis, strongly advocated that we needed pay for homemakers, and also pensions for homemakers. She recognized that homemakers should be entitled to equal pay for work of equal value, with a full Canada Pension when the time came for retirement. What work is more valuable to society than child care and home making? Why shouldn't it be recognized as an essential job worthy of pay? Even our kids get allowances for helping in the home these days.

I cannot stress too strongly that Bill C-6, while necessary as an intermediate step, treats women, and widows particularly, as inferiors, while ignoring many other woman. Eligibility is based on a dependency relationship to a spouse; it treats the woman as an aging sex symbol rather than treating her with dignity as an independent person with rights in her own name. An even greater injustice in this bill is the fact that it completely ignores the needs of single, separated or divorced people who have no other source of income. Again, the majority of these people are women in the 60-65 age group.

More than 50 per cent of the women between 55 and 65 earn less than $4,000 a year, compared to 11 per cent of men in this age group. So we find that single, poor women under 65 are the most deprived group in our society. Many of them live as lonely outcasts in substandard rented rooms. They are not eligible to get into public housing. Many of them have a high incidence of mental health problems and physical health problems, as a result. They live on fixed welfare incomes of less than $200, in British Columbia at any rate, and the cost of living is going up every day. Such single, poor women, and also 11 per cent of single, poor men, have just as much right to an adequate pension as widowed spouses who at least may have a home. I resent having to categorize people in this way.

Band-aid token programs for a very small segment of our society cost a great deal and benefit very few. Bureaucratic welfare programs should be replaced by a social insurance system for those in need. We must aim at an adequate guaranteed income, or perhaps the term "social insurance" is better these days, with cost of living adjustments for all those who cannot afford to work, who are unable to work. As a first step, of course, the target group should be elderly citizens aged 60 and over who have contributed so much to Canada, and who deserve a life free from financial worries. Social insurance should be their right, just as old age pensions are. I should like to point out that in British Columbia during the golden years of 1972 to 1975—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: —we could afford this. We had a "mincome" program which was introduced for all unemployed persons aged 60 to 65. This program was paid for—and I hope members on the government side are listening to this—from the profits of the British Columbia Petroleum Corporation, which was B.C.'s version of PetroCan. Incidentally, "mincome" was so universally popular that it is being continued by the British Columbia Social Credit government. So it can be done, and I would say the profits of PetroCan might go a long way toward paying the costs of a federal "mincome" program, if we had sense enough to keep it and develop our oil resources.

In conclusion, let me suggest the following priorities. First, let us approve Bill C-6 making it retroactive to include all eligible spouses whether legally married nor not. Second, let us begin now to initiate a "mincome" quaranteed income program, with a COLA clause, for all unemployed persons aged 60 or over. Finally, I say this to the minister, let us plan to set up a guaranteed income system to replace our obsolete welfare system by 1985.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate which has been taking place for many years during each Parliament because, particularly when it comes to the elderly, our social policy is indeed found wanting. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) indicated in her speech a while ago that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and his party have always participated actively in debates on underprivileged people and I congratulate them for doing so. But I want to insist on the fact that the minister, voluntarily or not, did not allude to the very active part that my party and myself have always played on such issues as retirement at 60 and the guaranteed annual income. I suggested many times the idea of optional retirement at 60 and I defended the interests of those who live in poor conditions. I shall come back to that later.

First, Mr. Speaker, we must commend the introduction of this bill by the government. I congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) for having introduced this bill among the first legislative measures to be considered by the House.

I should like to remind the House that as soon as the spouse's allowance was introduced, I pointed out the problems raised by the death of the spouse and by the withdrawal of the allowance from the surviving spouse. In March, 1977, I moved a motion under Standing Order 43 asking the government to pay at least two-thirds of the allowance to the surviving spouse. The House is surely aware that quite a number of older persons are faced with acute survival problems. Those people are found especially in the 60 to 65 age bracket. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, employers no longer want to hire those in that age group at a time when they are unable to work because of ill health, and their only financial resort in many cases is social welfare. It is a sad end to have to make do with a small welfare cheque each month after a lifetime of work.

Bill C-6 will be welcomed by senior citizens who were deprived of their allowances. I hope, as they do, that the bill is only a step towards an old age security program at the age of 60. Last year, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, now Secretary of State for External Affairs, brought forward an opposition motion on the same subject as the present bill. The former government did not budge. I am happy the present government did not make only crazy promises during the campaign. This bill, as I said before, is not an end in itself but a step towards lowering pensionable age to 60. At least, I hope so. The problem goes beyond that.

The economic situation of our pensioners is precarious. Statistics Canada figures that 43 per cent of those who live below the poverty line are people who live alone. Most of them are old people. Pensioners without investment income have no protection against contingencies. Where the constant rise in the cost of living is concerned, they only have the quarterly indexation to help them. That is why, at the time of the debate initiated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs last year, I suggested a plan providing voluntary retirement at 60, a plan to be implemented progressively by lowering retirement age to 60 and making retirement voluntary. In other words, those who can work and want to do so could in fact keep on working. Besides, a study by the department of psychology at Western University, prepared for the national symposium on aging, held here in Ottawa on October 25, 1978, indicated a clear tendency towards early retirement at 60. We would therefore not be imposing early retirement since most of the aged would dearly love to retire sooner.

In Canada at the present time, there are over 2 million pensioners, half of whom receive the guaranteed income supplement. Last year, that old age and guaranteed income supplement program cost the treasury $4.3 billion. There is no doubt that a retirement plan stipulating voluntary retirement at 60, even if it were to be implemented progressively, would cost at the outset considerably more. On the other hand, such a plan would in fact free a number of jobs estimated at something like 287,000 in 1977. That is to say then that opening up those jobs would save considerable amounts in unemployment insurance. It therefore boils down to reorganizing financial outlays within the existing framework. Over the short term, it would mean considerable outlays. But over the medium and long terms, society as a whole would benefit greatly.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that outside the framework of a guaranteed annual income it is difficult to propose final and global solutions. Referring back to the meeting of the welfare council held last fall, I would like to quote from a report submitted by Queen's University which stated:

> Adequate revenue, decent housing and means of transport are essential not only for senior citizens but for all citizens.

This quotation shows the merits of a guaranteed annual income system of which we, of the Social Credit Party, have been the most ardent champions since the beginning of our movement. Until now, old age security benefits have fallen short of ensuring peaceful retirement to our senior citizens. They are faced with many problems, from the deterioration of their health to their isolation from the rest of society.

We no longer live in an era when a citizen could some day pretend to enjoy his retirement. What is in store for the elderly is uncertainty and even poverty in certain cases. Therefore we must look far beyond the measures that have been proposed to us today because any program designed to improve the living conditions of the elderly will be without positive impact if it does not get translated into adequate revenue and guaranteed financial security.

Our population is aging which means that because of a declining birthrate and the greater availability of health services, the elderly will make up a growing segment of the Canadian society. It is therefore now that we must prepare to face this situation. We should not wait until that time has come before we react. Some day elderly people will be in a position to organize and ask for their fair share of the riches which belong to them. Future generations of elderly people will have experienced affluence and education. These people will not tolerate as easily their regression into poverty.

The logical solution to the problems which will arise in the future is undoubtedly a guaranteed annual income. In January, 1977, I made the same representations that were listed in my speech today to the then minister of national health and welfare who is now sitting in the opposition side of the House as the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde). The minister told me in his letter dated February 9, 1977, that it was impossible to bring any over-all solution to the problems faced by senior citizens, and that the problems plaguing the disadvantaged and the senior citizens could be resolved to a large extent through the implementation of a guaranteed annual income plan, a program which could be ushered in with the provinces, as had already been done for hospital insurance and medicare plans.

Therefore, it is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government will consider very seriously that most important proposal concerning the guaranteed annual income in order to respect the right of all Canadians to a decent standard of living.

The present situation is bad enough in our country, so Parliament should pay attention to its members. This is especially important in healing our fractured national unity. The essence of unity, after all, is that all Canadians should feel they share in running their country through the elected representatives whose views are heard with respect and effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Armand Caouette (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, how the whole population of Canada must be glad tonight to have elected a minority government last May 22, especially the people from the constituency of Abitibi who know very well, as they always did, that a minority government at last brings the legislation the people want. Suffice to recall the year 1972 when the party which today forms the official opposition was then a minority government and when we saw so many pieces of legislation like the one we are dealing with today!

A while ago I was listening to the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) grumbling against the bill introduced in the House by this government. I remember that during the 30th Parliament I sat on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, when the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) was the incumbent minister and I recall urging him a number of times to improve the Old Age Security Act. How the costs were high, then, Mr. Speaker! And yet older people now have to cope with a higher cost of living, but since we have a minority government it will be introducing measures like the one we are dealing with today precisely because it wants to give Canadians legislation with which they will be happy.

Mr. Speaker, I want therefore to commend this new government on this welcome measure. If it carries, and I have no doubt that it will, the proposal will enable people 60 to 65 who now receive the spouse's allowance to have something the Social Credit Party has been urging for years, the right to their pensions even when their spouses die. Until this legislation does pass, these people are cut off from any benefit or possible income for their survival. So, on my behalf and that of my constituents in Abitibi, I once more commend this government for bringing forward such a bill.

This is a great improvement to the current act, under which the allowance is maintained only for six months after the pensioner's death. As my colleague from Rimouski indicated earlier, we had been requesting the previous government to improve the act for the benefit of people who gave so many years of their lives, who worked hard so that this country may be a good place to live in. Unfortunately, the good must pay for the bad. And the aged were paying for the bad. All they could do was to beg for a small pension from social welfare in order to pay their rent; they no longer had any money to eat.

Mr. Speaker, it is a known fact that the aged are the most underprivileged in our society. It may be remembered that the late Réal Caouette used to advocate a complete review of the Old Age Security Act. Of course, there were improvements: cost of living indexing of pensions, the supplement, and the spouse's allowance. Those measures were aimed essentially at protecting the aged against inflation, as we said earlier, but did very little generally to improve their circumstances.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is an excellent start, and it is my wish that people over 60 can one day get the full spouse's allowance. That may have been an amendment we moved at the health, welfare and social affairs committee to recommend that a pension be paid to anyone aged 60 who wants to leave the labour force to make room for younger people who are now receiving unemployment insurance and welfare payments.

We hope that some day this government which represents the Canadian people, the same government which has decided against the guaranteed annual income, might bring forward another improvement to this bill so as to allow a 60 year old worker to leave the labour market.

Mr. Speaker, in the past we often recommended such an amendment to help any person whose spouse died. I also took up this important theme once again during the last election campaign, and at that time I did not suspect in the least that my Progressive Conservative opponent might advocate such legislation. I think that my Progressive Conservative opponent in the last election must be very pleased about his government, even though we in the opposition propose the solutions that the entire population wants.

I also recall that, during the electoral campaign, we asked the former prime minister when he came to a meeting in Val d'Or what he intended to do for senior citizens. We never had a reply. Does this mean that, if he had been re-elected, his government would have gone back on its position that it was too costly to pass such a bill?

An hon. Member: It was about the price of Janelle—

Mr. Caouette: I know that it was not because of the cost to the minister of national health and welfare in the former government that we were told it was impossible.

Mr. Speaker, I shall be proud today to announce to the people of the Abitibi riding that this Progressive Conservative government finally knows what it wants. I also hope that this government will continue for a while yet to introduce such bills which benefit people in this age group and the entire Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I used to tell my opponents that, as a group, senior citizens were the most disavantaged in Canada, and they used to deny this and say that, in the last few years, older people had obtained privileges that others did not have. It is true that they have certain privileges, but many still live below the poverty line. We know that more than 800,000 people over 65 now live below the poverty line.

Mr. Speaker, the report published last year by the Quebec Federation of Senior Citizens and the Canadian Federation of Senior Citizens, which attempted to prove that many older people live below the poverty line, must also be kept in mind. As I said earlier, these people must be very happy today.

It is true that this report was published in 1971, but the information it contains must still be relevant in view of the ills resulting from inflation. Something had to be done for the spouse who lived in poverty after the death of the spouse who received a pension. The death of his or her companion has already been very distressing so it is normal that those people be protected by our government. They have built our country. Thanks to them our children have a better social status. We are proud of our senior citizens. When I think of those people who have opened up and built northwestern Quebec and of all the difficulties, sacrifices and miseries they endured, when I think of their tenacity, Mr. Speaker, I believe that those people today have the right to expect a social measure that will give them at least a chance to live their last years reasonably well-off instead of having to beg from everyone, from one government level to another, and always get the same answer, "You are living your last years, so we do not have to improve your situation". So, Mr. Speaker, I say yes to this bill but as my colleague, the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) pointed out earlier on, I regret that this reform does not apply to single or divorced people. But I hope that this government will continue to improve this bill. Of course the Liberal party would have done so had it been in power as it would have been a minority government like this one. It would certainly have tried to bring some improvement.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I am pleased to support the bill we have been presented with today and I hope that this government will go further since the Progressive Conservative members in the House of Commons certainly have to face in their ridings the same problems as the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) or the hon. member for Abitibi when they meet those people living under the poverty level or who have to beg, as I said earlier, from welfare services to be able to live decently during the limited time they have left.

[English]

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, certainly I do not intend to make a very long speech, but I asked the whip on our side earlier this evening if a few words from me would be in order, and for the first time in the three Parliaments of which I have been a member, he did not discourage me from speaking. Times have certainly changed.

I intend to support this bill. I think the bill is some progress, and certainly I would not oppose a measure which brings relief to the needy. But I want to make two reflections on the bill. Under our present system, although there are problems, I am satisfied with the regime which one enters on reaching the age of 65. I heard the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette) complain about it. One can complain about it, but basically the system we have in this country is very good. The advances which have taken place over the last 11 years have been very considerable. We have moved to a system where reaching the age of 65 for many poor people in our society is a goal to which they look forward, simply because of the social security system available on reaching that age. That is one of the points I wanted to make.

My second point is that I resent very much the suggestion by hon. members opposite and the minister that adding this very small measure has solved the problem, or moved very much closer to bringing justice to those who are needy and under 65 years of age. The amount of $4 million is a considerable one, but in terms of the social programs of this country it does nothing, and it does very little to relieve poverty for those under the age of 65.

Miss MacDonald: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) can stand up. She made speeches which focused on this very small group of spouses whose older spouses died after becoming entitled to the pension at age 65 and before the younger spouses reached the age of 65.

Miss MacDonald: And you never listened.

Mr. Kaplan: I am glad some of those constituents—and some of them are mine—will now continue receiving this pension. But it is a very small matter and it is hardly one about which anyone opposite can claim a great deal of satisfaction when so many others below the age of 65 who are in need receive absolutely nothing from this very, very small measure.

I resent the smugness I detect from the minister opposite, as if this very small measure, of which even the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) would approve because he is so niggardly, takes us very much closer to justice for people who are under the age of 65. I should like to hear the minister answer in committee for the needs of single persons under the age of 65. I should like to hear him answer for what his government proposes to do for those who are widowed before their spouses reach the age of 65. I am sure that the category is just as large for couples where the older spouse dies before reading the age of 60 or before reaching the age of 65. The younger spouse in social terms is worse off than those whom the minister is proposing should benefit by the measure being introduced tonight.

I am very happy about this measure. I will vote for it, but if it is the social conscience of the Conservative party and members opposite, if this is the type of small cheese about which they intend to make great speeches and use to indicate that they have a heart, I will be very disappointed, as will my constituents and the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I will not speak long because I think it is in everybody's interest to have the bill voted on and passed this evening, but I should like to add a few remarks to the debate. Having listened to the previous Liberal speaker, we can begin to understand why the Liberal party was defeated, although he made serious points as well. We seem to have a little social progress in the country every time we change government, and if there is a minority government, we have a little more social progress. Unfortunately that has been the history of social progress in this country—only under political pressure and only to get some political points.

The bill before us is a small step in the right direction, and therefore we will be voting for it. The speaker from our party pointed out the shortcomings of the entire pension scheme and the fact that single, divorced and people living common law will not be covered by it, as well as those who became widows more than six months ago. These are all shortcomings. There are not only shortcomings in this bill, there is a whole range of shortcomings in the entire area of social security in this country. This is something for which both the Liberals and Conservatives must take responsibility.

When I started compaigning, knocking on doors in my constituency, I was amazed at the number of elderly people living close to total economic and social insecurity. These are the people who worked hard all their lives, the people who settled and developed the prairies, the people who had to struggle against the severe elements, breaking open the prairies and getting development started. Many of them worked for 25 cents and up to $1 a day, yet saved money. These people were really committed to the work ethic. They have now retired and have seen the system and inflation rob them of their savings. These are the people who live from month to month with total economic insecurity.

It is our system that has produced this situation, and it is the system that has robbed these people of the wealth in this country that they produced in their lifetime. Therefore it is the system surely that must be blamed, and it is a system that members of both the Conservative and Liberal parties continue to support and perpetuate. It is a system in which most of the wealth leaves the country so that the little that remains has to be distributed among our elderly people.

An hon. Member: That is nonsense.

Mr. de Jong: An hon. member opposite says it is nonsense. Surely this is a rich country. Everybody agrees with that. Everybody agrees that this is one of the wealthiest countries in the world, with one of the smallest populations in terms of area and resources. That being the case, why is it that we have elderly people trying to live on $200 a month or less? Why is it we have people living on the edge of economic insecurity? There are a number of European countries with larger populations and fewer resources which have been able to do better for their elderly people than we have been able to do for ours. How do you explain that? Surely the only explanation is that the wealth of this country is not reaching the elderly people who created it and who need it today. That, unfortunately, is the sad case.

What we are finding now, and found under the former government, is that whenever there is a deficit in government financing the only way the government can think of to solve the problem is to cut back on benefits to the elderly. I am afraid of the type of cutbacks that may be looming in the future. We had an inkling of them when the former government tried to take some wind out of the Conservative sails by introducing some Conservative programs, at which time we had some cutbacks. What I am afraid of is that we will see a continuation of this under the present government. In other words, the people most in need and most deserving will be the ones whose programs will be cut back first.

What is involved is the redistribution of income and the redistribution of wealth. I am afraid this government will not really tackle the fundamental problems facing our elderly people as the former government did not tackle those problems. It brought in some social programs but neglected to put an economic base under them so that, in tough economic times, those programs were cut back first. I am afraid we are going to see some tough times ahead for our elderly and our young people.

We will support this measure as it is a step in the right direction, but we will be urging, convincing, seducing and cajoling the government to take the next step, the next step and the next, until we have social and economic justice in this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

POST OFFICE

MEASURE RESPECTING CERTAIN POSTAL RATES

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment) moved that Bill C-11, respecting certain postal rates, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as members of this House are well aware, beginning in 1976 and continuing until 1979 the former Liberal government chose to institute increases in letter and second-class postage rates by way of authorization by the governor in council pursuant to subsection 13(b) of the Financial Administration Act, rather than by presenting a bill to Parliament amending sections 10 and 11 of the Post Office Act.

Mr. Knowles: Shame!

Mr. Fraser: On these occasions this government, when we were sitting in opposition, spoke out against the Liberal government of the day for increasing postal rates by regulation instead of amending the Post Office Act, and for ignoring critical reports of this practice by the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

In its third report dated October 4, 1976, the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments considered that regulations setting new rates were ultra vires of section 6 of the Post Office Act and section 13 of the Financial Administration Act. It added that the use of regulations "amount to an unusual and unexpected use of power conferred upon the governor in council by section 13 of the Financial Administration Act". The fourth and sixth reports of the same committee reiterated those objections.

On the question of legality, previous postmasters general have stated in the House and in letters to the committee that before the regulations were made legal opinion from the Department of Justice had been considered. On the one occasion when the legitimacy of using the Financial Administration Act was challenged in the courts, the decision which was rendered on August 2, 1978, was in favour of the position the former government had taken.

However, I wish to remind all hon. members that that decision is now before the Federal Court of Appeal, and I think I should tell the House that the decision would have been argued in that court earlier this summer had I not intervened and asked the legal officers of the government to seek an adjournment. That adjournment was granted by the plaintiffs, the appellants in this case, on my undertaking to introduce into this House legislation that would in a retroactive way legitimize the rate increases that had been made under the Financial Administration Act.

I want to say to the House that the action which was taken in the courts was a direct result of certain plaintiffs feeling that what was being done was not according to the constitution and was contrary to the proper practices of Parliament.

It ought to be obvious to all members that, despite the fact that the government had won the case in the lower court, the case was being pursued actively in the Federal Court of Appeal and would, no doubt, have gone to the Supreme Court of Canada. I think all hon. members on either side of the House will agree that for the Post office and, indeed, this government, to be left in that sort of uncertainty was just unacceptable, and as a consequence, as I have said, the adjournment was obtained on the undertaking that this legislation would be introduced. I understand that the arrangement is that if this bill should meet with the approval of the House the case will be discontinued.

But irrespective of the outcome of the current case, this government considers that there is still a need to eliminate controversy over the use of section 13(b) of the Financial Administration Act. We concur with committee criticism about unusual and unexpected use of power by previous governments, and agree that as long as amendment to the Post Office Act exists as a means of rate adjustment, the Financial Administration Act is not the preferred method of increasing letter and second class postal rates. Although the use of the regulation may be technically within the law, it is clearly less than acceptable to some members of this House, the Senate, and the Canadian public.

I need not remind this House that there are still many problems to overcome before the Post Office can be restored to its former level of pride, dignity, and service. Not the least of these will be the conversion of the department into a Crown corporation. As I said, I hope to be introducing legislation to that effect some time after Christmas. Those problems will be much easier to tackle if this government is not at the same time fighting a rearguard battle against problems stemming from actions by the previous government.

Passage of this bill will legally confirm the amendments to the postal rates that were made by regulation by deeming them to have been made under the Post Office Act. In turn, this will clear the books and allow us to turn our full attention to the more important task of providing all Canadians with the postal service they expect and deserve.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, before I answer some of the remarks of the Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser) I congratulate him on tabling the annual report of the Post Office on time.

Mr. Fraser: You get some of the credit for that.

Mr. Lamontagne: It was compiled under the administration of the former government. I read it very carefully, and I must say that it was one of the best reports I have read yet. We reduced the deficit, we increased the volume, and did many other things we could really be proud of because it was really administered as closely as possible to private administration.

[Translation]

I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that a bill like this one, Bill C-11, as introduced by the Postmaster General at this point, intrigues me somewhat and strikes me as a strange priority. That is why I shall make a few comments and put a few brief questions, since another hon. member would like to speak to the matter; and as we want to complete the study of this bill tonight, I have promised to co-operate in that way.

I want to deal with the need for this bill.

[English]

When they were in opposition the Conservatives opposed the adjustment of postal rates under the authority of the Financial Administration Act, section 13(b), which allows the governor in council to increase rates. But with this bill the government prefers to amend sections 10 and 11 of the Post Office Act by Parliament. Despite legal opinions from the Crown that the use of the Financial Administration Act was legal, the Tories attacked our government at the time, saying that we were bypassing Parliament.

I would like to make myself clear on these points. The Department of Justice has affirmed the legality of the use of section 13 in adjusting postal rates. Moreover, when this method was tested in the courts, it was clearly upheld until there was an appeal. Something which perhaps the minister may not know is that the wording is in our Bill C-27, to convert the Post Office into a Crown corporation. The government has not invented anything.

The wording of the present bill is in our Bill C-27 and was put there in order to give the Crown corporation the certainty that there would not be obstructive or negative action from interested groups. In other words, we wanted to ensure that there would be a smooth start for the Crown corporation. It was also well known that part of the reason for the use of section 13 was to avoid taking up valuable time in a busy parliamentary schedule, and to give six months notice to postal users. However, rate increases were announced in the House of Commons and discussed there as well.

It was mentioned that we were bypassing Parliament. I found this curious coming from a government which has waited for so long before calling Parliament, the longest period in history without a Parliament. This in itself implies a criticism of the present administration's attitude to Parliament in relation to postal rates.

It is even more intriguing that the government has stated its intention to reintroduce legislation to convert Canada Post to a Crown corporation only after the Christmas recess, but yet has taken this occasion to place before us, piecemeal, a procedure for rate increases alone, which was already in our Bill C-27. Does this mean that the government is intending to introduce other postal rate increases? Does it mean that the government plans to delay or shelve introducing Crown corporation legislation, when it has had so much time to prepare or modify that legislation? Or does it mean that the government intends to modify the postal rate process further in future legislation which is well defined in C-27?

Are we going to see a series of minor bills dealing with postal operations, instead of one concise, comprehensive piece of legislation like our proposed Bill C-27? In Bill C-27, which was laid before the last Parliament by the Liberal administration, there was outlined an excellent postal rate procedure. It proposed rate changes subject to governor in council approval which then would be made public. If there were any objections, they would be filed and investigated by the Canadian Transport Commission, which would have been given the power to disallow the rate change.

Why has the government not done its home work and presented some substantial legislation to the House, addressing the real problems facing the Post Office, instead of playing a game of preferred or selective procedures? The government may well prefer to avoid using the Financial Administration Act to change postal rates, but regardless of this bill it could still change the rates if that is its intention. That is why I cannot understand the government presenting this bill now. Why did it not introduce a bill like ours to make the Post Office a Crown Corporation?

Bill C-27 is there, and with a few little changes which have been suggested by the management, it could be presented and have the same effect. It would also be a great help to the unions, the syndicates and the labour movement in the Post Office because it would prove that this government intends to move fast in implementing the legislation making the Post Office a Crown corporation, thereby getting the matter out of the way in this session.

Postal Rates

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, this is an Alice in Wonderland situation. The hon. member for Langelier (Mr. Lamontagne) lacks any credibility in any of the suggestions he makes to the government on how the Post Office should be run. For 16 years that party had a revolving-door policy with respect to most matters in the Post Office. They screwed the situation up so badly that human and interpersonnel relationships within the Post Office denied any successful means of collective bargaining.

Now the hon. member stands in this House like a Judas Iscariot and suggests to the new Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser) what he should do. Why did the hon. member not follow through with his suggestions when he had the opportunity? Why did his government bring in a Crown corporation bill in the twilight of the last Parliament if they were really serious about making the Post Office a Crown corporation, something which had been recommended by every royal commission since 1960? They brought it in during the twilight months. I think they are a phony gang, these Liberals, to suggest to the government the kinds of things that should be done.

In speaking to Bill C-11 I want to congratulate the minister and the government. I welcome this new approach—the new approach being that any changes to the Financial Administration Act by orders in council will be brought to the House of Commons. This is implicit in this bill, and I will deal with it a little later. The principle is one we support, and we expect the government to be consistent in that approach as we go through this Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad they are applauding, Mr. Speaker. They will get their chance to speak in a minute.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, the need for increased rates in the past was because there were increased costs in the Post Office, largely due to the implementation of technological change in 1971. There was $1 billion worth of technological change which was part of the recommendations of the "Blueprint for Change" in the Post Office. The Liberal government, whose representative just now made suggestions to the minister, should know that the "blueprint for change" not only envisaged changes with respect to the physical operation of the Post Office but also changes in human approaches to human problems. While they moved rapidly toward technological change in the Post Office, the whole question of the way management dealt with workers and the workers' response to technological change was neglected.

We should keep in mind that the workers in the Post Office came under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and were therefore excluded from any sort of participation in the discussion of technological change in the work place. Had they come under the Canada Labour Code they could have discussed matters and have negotiated technological change. Interhuman relationships became very abrasive and led to a breakdown in service to the Canadian people. That breakdown in service cost a great deal of money and has required continuous increases in rates.

This government, when in opposition, had a good analysis of the problem—a super analysis of the problem. The hon. member who spoke for the Conservative party when it was in opposition travelled the world looking at post offices. Indeed, he was postmaster general in a previous Conservative government. They well knew the problems, therefore, but now that they are in office the Postmaster General is Mr. Clean. The first thing the government did was wedge the Post Office in between oil spills and acid rain.

The most serious problem in the public service today is the Post Office. Everybody recognizes that. The Post Office and those who work in it have been made a scapegoat. They have been used to whip up a kind of fascistic response to the fact that the people do not get their mail on time. We could have hoped, therefore, for a minister whose sole and full time job was to look after the Post Office and make sure there was harmony in it. He could have started from scratch. There was a clean slate. The government did not have to make apologies for the mess perpetrated on the people of Canada by the previous Liberal administration.

We like the Postmaster General. He is a nice man—he is very expansive, very absorbent, very helpful, very courteous but, Mr. Speaker, he cannot deal with Inco and acid rain and oil spills and the Post Office problem all at the same time. The minister has said there will be a Crown corporation before Christmas—but he did not say which Christmas.

Mr. Fraser: After Christmas.

Mr. Rodriguez: Christmas 1980? Christmas 1981? We looked for a new start, a risorgimento as the Italians say—a new beginning. We did not get it. We got the minister with other responsibilities, and the Post Office is just a side issue.

When in opposition the government recognized that the interpersonal problems within the Post Office resulted in over 60,000 grievances accumulating. The Post Office management, playing games, allowed these grievances to be appealed all the way through three stages. The workers would win, the matter would go to adjudication, and on the eve of adjudication the Post Office would withdraw the grievance or not continue with it. Those accumulated grievances exacerbated relationships within the Post Office between management and the people on the floor of the plant. One would have thought that a new government that wanted to show good faith, that had no record and that did not have to apologize for the mistakes of the past, would have wiped out those 60,000 grievances. They did not. The government may be Mr. Clean in the public image but they allow the situation to continue. Those grievances still exist. Negotiations for a new contract will take place soon and those grievances can only cause problems.

One of the other problems in the Post Office—and I shall be blunt, Mr. Speaker—was the presence of a Mr. Corkery and Mr. Paré. Both gentlemen came from the private sector, one from Loebs and the other from a corporation in Hamilton.

They may know how to run a private enterprise corporation where profit is the motive, but they have a very narrow view when running something that is service oriented, where it is important for workers to get along with management. The thrust of the Post Office is to provide service to the people who pay for it, namely, taxpayers. This government did not remove those two gentlemen although they had a wonderful opportunity to do so. They could have called them Liberals; they could have shaken them out and brought in some new faces. It has been done in other departments. Maybe they were Tories in hiding, or closet Tories! Those gentlemen are still there, still mal-administering, still exacerbating the problems in the Post Office. This government acts as though nothing has changed and I suppose, politically, nothing has.

The principle established in Bill C-11 is one that we on this side of the House support and applaud. I recently read something interesting in a report of an interview between the head of the workers at de Havilland and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens). Crown corporations come under the Financial Administration Act, so in effect the administration of de Havilland comes under that act. The President of the Treasury Board, however, was reported as saying that any changes with respect to privatizing de Havilland would not be brought to the House of Commons. That is what he said. This is a downgrading of Parliament, an insult to Parliament, and it flies in the face of this particular principle put forward on the altar of democracy by the Postmaster General cum environment minister.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that tomorrow the House will revert to the study of Bill C-10. Could the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) advise the House if this is correct and, if we complete Bill C-10, in what order will the business be taken?

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention tomorrow to proceed with Bill C-10. When that is completed we will proceed with other bills pertaining to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), several of which are contained in the House orders. We expect that Bill C-10 will pretty well last for the day.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—MORTGAGE INSURANCE UNDERWRITING PRACTICES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on October 18 I asked the minister in charge of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation if he would assure this House that he would advise his officials in the corporation that, in view of the enormous numbers of repossession of townhouse condominiums, the corporation would cease giving undertakings to insure to lenders so that there would be no further building of this type of accommodation, certainly until the enormous surplus of repossessions were disposed of.

In answer to that question the minister gave me and this House a very unsatisfactory reply. The minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, mortgage insurance underwriting practices obligate the corporation to evaluate individual applications very carefully. However, we will be extremely cautious in getting into this sort of practice until we have studied market conditions.

In March, 1978, James Crozier, for the region of Peel, filed with the regional council there and with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation a complete analysis of the social disaster that was taking place in the county and region of Peel, and indeed metropolitan Toronto, as a result of the inept housing practice of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That document, filed with the corporation, outlines the problems, the repossessions, the inability of people to make and carry through with AHOP financing, the impossibility of marketing, by way of resale, condominium townhouses. The study was over a year and a half period.

At that time, and I point out that it was well over a year and a half ago, we had already many, many condominium repossessions in the hands of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The real estate fraternity, private real estate agents, were refusing to take listings for resale of condominium townhouses. People were taking keys in and handing them to the mortgage company saying, "We cannot pay our payments," and the corporation was accepting quit claim deeds. Yet the corporation continued to give undertakings to insure and enable the start up of more and more condominium townhouse projects, to the effect the minister advises me that on July 2 of this year they had in possession, in repossessions—empty repossessions of condominium townhouses—in Mississauga alone 791 units. Just walking the streets and talking to people one can see what is happening in my city—more and more of these condominium townhouses are now in possession of the corporation.

I could give the minister projects, and he has heard about them from me before—there is one called Talka Village on the Lakeshore Road in Mississauga. That project is advertised on CTV and touted by one Joel Aldred. It is a fine development, they say. It is a designed slum with not one sale—not one legitimate sale. There is a condominium project called Balsam Woods, again on the Lakeshore Road, in my riding. It has been financed and in and out of repossession problems for the last four years. Half of the units are still unoccupied although they have been built for four years. And yet this corporation and its inept officers continue to use the provisions of the National Housing Act to erect more and more condominium townhouses, to destroy and completely ruin the market for that type of accommodation so that those who were unfortunate enough to have put their hard earned cash into an equity position in that type of housing, find that their equities have totally disappeared.

Indeed, to say that the corporation has an obligation to evaluate individual market conditions is an indication that the officers of the corporation are of such inept quality that their ability to evaluate has been long since lost. And so, when I asked the minister this question, a rather pressing question, particularly in view of the financial stability of Canada Housing and Mortgage Corporation, I would have expected the minister to say, "We have ceased giving undertakings to insure on condominium townhouses, certainly in the city of Mississauga."

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my hon. friend that I very much appreciate the knowledge and experience he brings to this chamber in matters of housing. He has practised law. He has dealt with the situation. But I want to remind him that things are not quite as simple or direct as he would believe.

As demand for AHOP and assisted rental programs began to soften, CMHC did introduce a series of measures designed to restrict project approvals unless the need for housing was clearly identified. The corporation did initiate detailed reviews of local market situations, a check of current and pending vacancy rates, profiles of existing AHOP and ARP projects, specific need and demand surveys were instituted, and reviews of entrepreneurs' financial and development capabilities were carried out.

I would remind the hon. member that the identification of turning points in real estate markets is not always easy, particularly in advance, often when a local market forms a part of a major metropolitan market. New policy in assessing more carefully the situation pertaining to condominium townhouses has been instituted.

The hon. member has brought to my attention, as well, the practice of accepting quit claim deeds, which has not always been satisfactory. The situation there has changed as well. If an owner attempts to quit claim his property and subsequently goes into arrears, CMHC will now institute foreclosure proceedings and the owner will have to pay the legal costs and mortgage his condominium for the arrears unless there is a very good reason why he should not, for example, if the property is abandoned and there are serious mortgage arrears and no reasonable hope of recovering them, or an owner has been transferred and is beyond reasonable commuting distance. Then we would look at the quit claim deed situation and review it on its merits.

It is, I think, wrong to condemn in a blanket fashion the results of some of these programs which the previous administration instituted. I would prefer to think they were instituted with good intentions. There is a proverb which says that the path to hell is paved with good intentions, and sometimes the results have not been what I think all of us in this chamber would have hoped. But I believe it would be a little harsh to condemn out of hand the good will and the capability of the CMHC officials. This is not to say mistakes have not been made; it is not to say we are not very interested in looking into the situation.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I appreciate the forthright and thorough way in which the hon. member has brought these matters before the House, and to assure him that I am getting the utmost co-operation from the officials of the corporation in order to alleviate these conditions, including an early marketing of considerable numbers of units, to put it mildly, in possession of which the corporation now finds itself.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT—DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING NEWSPRINT—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S INTERVENTION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on October 17 last, I put two questions to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Lawrence), the first dealing with the scarcity of newsprint which compelled several Quebec newspapers to restrict their circulation or the number of pages in their publications and I asked the minister to study the matter thoroughly and, if he deemed it necessary, to submit the case to the director of investigation and research in the competition branch of his department to launch the required investigation.

I am pleased to say to the House tonight that I received this morning a letter from the minister advising me that he had discussed the matter with the director of investigation and research who had assured him that he would study the matter closely to see if it would be advisable to institute proceedings under the Combines Investigation Act. I am satisfied with the step taken by the minister and I thank him.

I must say that the scarcity of newsprint for newspapers in Quebec appears as ridiculous as oil shortages in Alberta. Quebec is enormously well endowed with forest resources and it is unimaginable that Quebec industries cannot get all the necessary paper. There is perhaps an explanation to this situation that may be due to market conditions more than to some anti-competitive behaviour. I noted quite recently an article which appeared in Le Devoir to the effect that the pulp and paper industry in Canada has known a tremendous development these past few months, and I quote:

> The major part of our pulp and paper production is being exported to the United States where the demand for newsprint and pulp and paper by products has considerably increased, thereby giving a new impetus to our industry. These exports, paid in U.S. dollars of much greater value than Canadian dollars, are responsible for an exceptional increase in the profits of the pulp and paper industry.

I am delighted for the pulp and paper industry. I have of course no objection to these companies making profits, but I am concerned that they fail perhaps to provide an essential service and to meet the Canadian demand. And I suggest that it is imperative, in the context of fair competition in Canada, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs tackle this problem and try to find a short-term solution in particular to the pulp and paper shortage in Quebec.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind this House that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs himself admitted that there would be serious loopholes in the Combines Investigation Act. And I asked the minister in this House whether he intended to bring in amendments to that legislation. He answered that his government was urgently considering several matters that were not referred to in the Speech from the Throne. That answer appears somewhat vague to me. On the one hand, he finds the legislation porous and he even goes so far as to say that certain large corporations could abuse the act and go unpunished. On the other hand, he does not see fit to announce the intention of his government to amend the Combines Investigation Act. I think it is important for the minister to give us actual signs of his intentions in this respect. Is he going to protect the interest of Canadian consumers or is he going to abdicate his responsibilities in face of the Progressive Conservative lobbying in this country which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, has always opposed amending the Canadian Competition Act. I hope the minister will take positive action and will not limit himself to pious statements and will introduce in the House a competition act with teeth. I can assure him of my support and the support of the members on this side of the House if, as a Progressive Conservative minister, he has the courage to face the music and even stand against some of his colleagues on the government side and decides to introduce a good competition measure in Canada.

[English]

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In order for me to recognize the hon. member, he will have to move to his proper seat. I do not think that at present he is in his seat.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) for his question and for giving me the opportunity to respond for the first time in the House. In particular, I should like to thank him for the subject he has chosen and for the very important nature of the question in terms of the ability of the newspaper industry in Quebec to respond to the needs of the Quebec people.

I would like to refer the hon. member in particular to the letter sent to him on October 19 by the minister, in which the following is stated:

On two previous occasions this year, problems similar to that of Le Journal's were brought to the director's attention. In one instance, the director found that newsprint was generally in short supply, but that the shortage was due to market conditions and not anti-competitive behaviour. It is probable that this situation persists to the present. The second instance involved weekly local and regional newspapers in Quebec who were experiencing difficulty in obtaining adequate newsprint supplies. The director discussed the matter with the Quebec government officials who had alerted him to the problem. Meetings were also held between those officials and representatives of the industry and newspapers. As a result, the temporary shortage was resolved satisfactorily.

Now I should like to refer quickly to an article in today's Gazette in which the following is stated:

Quebecor—

The publisher of Montreal's biggest daily newspaper

—has been hit harder than any other large Canadian newspaper publisher by the newsprint shortage, which has been building for the past year as growing publishers' consumption of newsprint wiped out excess productive capacity in the newsprint industry.

The Journal de Montréal now sells about 325,000 copies a day, up from 200,000 copies last year. I think this clearly shows that it is a supply problem. In fact, contracts have been honoured, new supplies have been found, for a paper whose 1977 consumption was 65,000 tons and whose 1979 consumption will be 79,000 tons of newsprint. Provisions have been made for an extra 3,000 tons monthly of newsprint through one of the Journal de Montréal's existing suppliers. Expansion and building will create new supply early next year.

As the former minister will know, there are no provisions in the Combines Investigation Act to deal with this matter of proof in terms of shortage of supplies. The act is essentially as it was under the former administration. If the hon. member for Papineau has specific references which he feels are the proper domain of the director of investigation and research, I have been assured that the director will accept and assess them. In the meantime the director will continue to monitor the situation to discern any evidence of price fixing, collusion, or any other behaviour which might be detrimental to our free market system. On a specific matter of revision or amendments to the act, I must defer to the minister and will be happy to respond in writing to the hon. member.

IMMIGRATION—POLICY RESPECTING FUTURE IMMIGRATION

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) a very simple question about Canada's position relative to continuing its program of challenge and leadership to encourage Canadians to sponsor families of refugees from Vietnam. His answer was so evasive and unsatisfactory that I want to take the opportunity this evening to take my question very clear, although I think it was very clear this afternoon, and to give the minister or his parliamentary secretary an opportunity to tell Canadians precisely what their government intends to do now that the 50,000 quota offered by the government has been met by almost a full response from the Canadian people, and where we go from here.

The minister takes enormous pride in the sponsorship program created by him and his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald), this summer. I think it is a good program. I am not critical of it, but I do not take nearly the satisfaction from it that he does.

Repeatedly he has said that it is the most generous program in the world for dealing with Vietnamese refugees. Those are not the facts, as I understand them. I should like to take a moment of my time to set out the facts which I had from a very authoritative source at a conference on the boat people last Friday. As of mid-October, the United States had admitted and Landed 260,000 boat people; China had admitted 250,000 people; France had admitted 59,000 boat people; Australia had admitted 25,551 southeast Asians of whom 19,000 were boat people; and Canada had admitted 22,348. That is a good total, but it is certainly not the world's record. It is not the world's record in absolute terms, per capita terms, nor in terms of accommodation per square mile of the host country. It is very far from it. I am not suggesting these criteria, but I want to remind the minister that this is far from being the most generous refugee reception program in the world.

This afternoon I asked him where the government was going from here, and this is what I meant by that. As he indicated, we have close to 20,000 private sponsorships. Now, 4,000 should be allocated from an earlier period. This is the way the commission is calculating this figure. In effect we are very close to having 25,000 private sponsorships. We may well have it within a week. That means the 25,000 public sponsorships to be matched on a one to one basis, which the government put forward as its challenge to the Canadian people, are virtually all committed. So the question arises: where do we go from here? I know they are not all here in Canada. I have figures which indicate that only 22,348 are here in Canada at this time.

Is the minister saying that no more private sponsorships will be encouraged from now on, and that until all of these already committed people arrive we cannot look to the government for any further leadership or challenge to the Canadian people? Is that what the minister is saying? If it is, I think he should just say it and accept the responsibility for it, instead of going off and talking about how complicated his program is and how busy he is handling the flow of Vietnamese refugees who are already committed.

I want the minister or his parliamentary secretary, who I am glad to see in the House, to tell us where the government is going from here in providing leadership and challenge to the Canadian people. If nothing more is being done, if there is not going to be anything more to encourage private sponsorships, will the minister assure the House that, having backed down on providing leadership and challenge, he will at least not prevent people in the private sector from continuing to sponsor new families of boat people or Vietnamese refugees?

The flow out of Vietnam is very low right now. The monsoons are on and we do not know whether, when the monsoons end, the levels of immigration will go up to the levels at the end of the Geneva Conference. We do not know if they will even go up to the levels they were at before that. The level may be high, but this government ought to have a policy. Instead of waffling and telling us how busy he is, the minister should tell us what the Canadian government plans to do next.

Mr. Paul McCrossan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to remind the hon. member opposite that in speaking for the minister on Friday I did not say, as he indicated in his question, that nothing more could be done until the 50,000 Indochinese refugees had arrived in Canada. I did indicate that we were now well on the way to receiving sufficient sponsorship undertakings from Canadian voluntary groups to ensure that our 50,000 refugee target will be met by the end of 1980 in accordance with the government-voluntary partnership formula announced in July, and that our prime thrust was to ensure that our goal was met and the program was seen to be a success.

Members will recall that the 50,000 target was composed of the 8,000 originally pledged by the government for 1979, plus 21,000 voluntary sponsorships matched by 21,000 government refugees.

It should be pointed out, however, that to date less than 15,000 Indochinese refugees have been brought to Canada, and a major challenge, therefore, remains in bringing the remaining 35,000 Indochinese to Canada and successfully establishing them here through the joint efforts of the government and voluntary groups. There is a question as to the implications of possible voluntary sponsorships beyond the 21,000 needed to reach the 50,000 total.

Mr. Kaplan: That is the question I asked.

Mr. McCrossan: This question is now under active study by the government and an announcement will be made at an early date once the voluntary undertaking target has been met.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

ENERGY

REQUEST GOVERNMENT FINANCE COAL DEVELOPMENT CENTRE IN CAPE BRETON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the energy shortage and the fact that the province of Nova Scotia has substantial coal reserves, and whereas the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated that the government is committed to increasing research and development, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen):

That the Treasury Board give immediate approval to the financing required to set up a coal development centre at the College of Cape Breton to do research into the liquefaction of coal and other research which could ultimately lead to increased uses for coal and to reduced dependency on foreign oil in the Atlantic area of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY

RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN—CALL FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my motion concerns the ongoing problems at the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency and the resignation of its chairman, Murray McBride.

I have been informed that the remuneration of CEMA's general manager, Max Roytenberg, is $105,000 a year plus expenses, which exceeds the salary of the Prime Minister by many thousands of dollars; and, further, that Mr. Roytenberg has made his wife and a company called Roygold Marketing Systems Ltd., which Roytenberg owns in whole or in part, the beneficiaries of translation contracts with CEMA. Because of that, I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House immediately call for an investigation of CEMA by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

CRITICISM OF MINISTER CHARGED WITH RESPONSIBILITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43.

Considering that, in his own words in the House almost a year ago, the new Secretary of State charged that federal cultural institutions were being neglected, and considering that, while the minister attempts to address cultural problems, he is also responsible for the critical communications and social policy fields, and considering that meanwhile Canada's largest urban community has virtually no representation in the inner cabinet, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson):

That this House urges the Prime Minister to relieve the Secretary of State of his social responsibilities to concentrate on vital cultural and communication issues in the inner cabinet, and at the same time urges the Prime Minister to consider appointing the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the inner circle to take over the social policy area and also give representation to more than two million Torontonians.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ELIGIBILITY OF CERTAIN SPOUSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

My motion deals with Bill C-6 and the amendments to the Old Age Security Act which have been proposed in the House. Given the fact that there will be discrimination against persons whose spouse died in the six months preceding the date of royal assent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Miss Bégin):

That the House direct the government to make eligible for the spouse's allowance all persons whose pensioned spouse has died after the introduction of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion can be put to debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PUBLIC WORKS

CALL FOR INVESTIGATION BY MINISTER OF LEASE FOR SPACE IN OTTAWA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to put forward a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the previous administration's signing of a $14 million lease, four days before the general election, for space it did not require, since the said property at 219 Laurier Avenue West, Ottawa, is owned by a company whose vice president is reported to be the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), and so that the people of Canada may be assured the contract was not, in fact, political patronage, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John (Mr. Ferguson):

That the Minister of Public Works immediately launch a complete investigation into the negotiations and signing of a lease between the Government of Canada and the Montreal Alouettes Football Club Inc. regarding the space at 219 Laurier Avenue West, Ottawa, Ontario, and report the findings of the investigation to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

PERCENTAGE OF GNP APPLIED TO FINANCE PROGRAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the fact the present government stated that it aimed to increase research and development spending to a target figure of 2.5 per cent of the GNP, and in view of its severe cutbacks in a number of research programs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of State for Science and Technology make a statement shortly as to what steps will be taken to meet this target of 2.5 per cent of the GNP for research and development.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

PENSIONS

REQUEST REIMBURSEMENT OF OVERPAYMENT PROVISION BE RESCINDED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It arises out of the hardship being caused at the present time to several poor persons and recently bereaved persons.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier):

That the government cause to be discontinued immediately the practice by which a surviving spouse is automatically expected to reimburse the treasury in the event of an overpayment of a pension to a person who subsequently dies, when that overpayment has been due to an error by a public servant; and, furthermore, that henceforth any attempt to recover an overpayment to a person afterwards deceased, no matter for what reason, should be directed exclusively to the estate of the deceased person.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion for debate can be presented at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—DETERIORATING BUDGETARY CONTRIBUTION BY SASKATCHEWAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that since the time medicare was instituted in Saskatchewan, many doctors traditionally have not participated in the medicare plan, that 30 per cent of doctors in that province now are billing patients directly, that less than 5 per cent of doctors in Manitoba are operating outside the plan, and that there is a significant decrease in the budget for hospital insurance and medicare programs in Saskatchewan, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare advise the recently appointed Hall commission to study immediately the reasons for the deteriorating budgetary contribution by the Saskatchewan NDP government for medicare, as well as the significant increase of extra billing by doctors in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OIL PRICES—REQUEST PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT CARTER ACT TO PREVENT UNNECESSARY INCREASES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that President Carter is coming to Canada next month, and that the multinational oil companies dealing in spot markets in Rotterdam, the Caribbean and Singapore are an important cause of the world oil price crisis, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the Prime Minister try to encourage President Carter to call a meeting with Japan and Germany to bring pressure to bear on these multinational companies to strictly forbid their dealing in this spot market.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

CANADIAN PREFERENCE FOR ROUTE—AIDE MEMOIRE TO U.S. GOVERNMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs based upon the aide-memoire which her government delivered to the American government on Saturday last, a copy of which we received today.

● (1415)

In view of the fact that the aide-mémoire refers to preference as stated last April 16 by the former government, preference as expressed on September 28, 1979, by the new government, and no reference to any expression of interest or concern in the intervening period, will the minister not agree that it would have reinforced the Canadian position had she referred to the alleged representations that were made throughout the summer according to the Prime Minister or, alternatively—as I believe—that her aide-mémoire is a very clear indication that the government lost the summer in making its views known to the United States government on this very important question?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member was not here the other day—or, at least, if he was here, he was not listening—when the Prime Minister very clearly outlined the number of contacts which this government had with the government of the United States over the summer concerning this matter.

It was raised on a number of occasions by Canadian officials at the embassy in Washington; it was raised on a number of occasions by direct representation from Ottawa, and the aide-mémoire which was sent to Washington last weekend confirmed the position that this government had taken throughout and had stated, namely, a strong preference for the Foothills option, and that it was very concerned—and reiterated that concern—about the possibility of increased tanker traffic on the west coast.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would tell the hon. minister that I was present and listened to the answer by the Prime Minister, in which he failed to indicate that the contacts made had anything to do with stating preference for the Foothills pipeline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: He said meetings were held; but the Prime Minister, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Hamilton East, said the American government understood, and there was no doubt. But never did he say these meetings had to do with Foothills.

I would follow up by referring to an answer given in the other place last Wednesday by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development in which he said that throughout the summer, members of the government had strongly encouraged and urged—and these are his words—"this preference on the American government". He included the Secretary of State for External Affairs as one of those who had strongly urged and encouraged the American government. I should like to ask whether she did this with Secretary Vance or, more generally, will she tell us to whom she made these representations, and where?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the hon. member that, obviously, I seem to have more faith in the officials of the Department of External Affairs—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: —to convey messages to the government of the United States than he has; and that is a sad reflection on the time that he was there in that position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I may also say that I raised this question, along with a number of other matters, when I had discussions with Secretary Vance.

Mr. Trudeau: When?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the minister that I also have faith in the officials of the department, but I see that the government now, instead of undertaking its ministerial responsibilities, is relying on officials in order to carry a message to the American government—and we find that unacceptable.

I would direct a final question either to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to the Prime Minister, also related to the aide-mémoire,he which seems to leave an escape-hatch to the government of Canada on the question of environmental damage on the west coast which might arise from a tanker route. Is the Prime Minister, or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, now prepared to tell us that under no circumstances will the government consider, support or recommend a proposal that involves tanker traffic on the west coast of Canada?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, I am sure, will be interested in knowing that this topic will be one of the major issues that will be discussed with the President of the United States by the Prime Minister of Canada when the President visits here on November 9 and 10.

There is no question of the position that will be put forward by the Canadian government, which will be that we do not want increased tanker traffic on the west coast because it would endanger the very precious environment along that coast. That is the position which will be put forward very strongly.

ALTERNATE ROUTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if that position can be interpreted to mean that the government will not support the Trans Mountain route.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Lalonde: Yes or no?

Miss MacDonald: —would want to know that the Government of Canada will accept a position that will make sure that there is no—

An hon. Member: Yes or no?

Miss MacDonald: Members opposite would like a yes or no answer to a position like that. It may be—

Some hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Miss MacDonald: —that the opposition will be putting forward, as its position, the northern tier route, but that is not the one that this government will put forward. I would like the Leader of the Opposition to know that our position, following the outcome of the NEB hearings, will depend on whether or not there is an application continuing from Foothills. That would be the one to which we would give our foremost support.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, surely, since the meeting will be in a couple of weeks, the government will have to tell President Carter whether or not they support a route which involves tankers.

The government has said that all summer they have not ceased supporting the route for which we indicated a preference, but now the hon. lady cannot seem to answer whether or not she will support another route which does involve tanker.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Leader of the Opposition has been out of office for a few months and therefore does not quite remember the way in which these regulatory processes work. However, in the case of the Foothills application or the Trans Mountain application, the hon. member should remember that they must go before the National Energy Board. When we see the outcome of that particular decision, we will then be in a position to decide the question which he poses.

Mr. Trudeau: So it has not been decided?

Mr. MacEachen: It is a possibility?

Mr. Chrétien: The "maybe" minister.

Miss MacDonald: I would say to the Leader of the Opposition that the preference which this government has stated throughout is for the Foothills pipeline, and I would hope that that is still a matter which will be before the government for endorsation. I should also say to the Leader of the Opposition—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes or no?

Miss MacDonald: —that if he had given as much support earlier on as his government should have to this matter, then it might have been quite a different proposition.

Mr. MacEachen: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You will be asleep at ten o'clock.

ENERGY

OIL PRICES—GOVERNMENT STEPS TO AVOID PROFIT RIP-OFFS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Given that the first nine months' profit figures of the oil industry, which were released today, show that Shell, Imperial Oil and Texaco had an average increase in profits of 52 per cent, precisely at a time when another government report indicated that real incomes of most Canadians were going down, can the Prime Minister indicate to the House what precise steps the government intends to take to stop these profit rip-offs; or does he still believe that even further tax handouts are required for the oil industry?

● (1425)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our view is that the Government of Canada should take every measure it can to ensure as much as possible the investment of the returns of oil companies operating in Canada in energy development in this country. That will be reflected in steps we will be taking as a government.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is very clear that the oil companies will continue to get the hand outs and the poor will get the crumbs from this government.

Considering that by the end of the year the five major companies in this industry will have accumulated $5 billion in profits in the last five years—precisely during the time they were under investigation by an agency of this government for price collusion and manipulation—can the Prime Minister assure the House that before the government takes any action that gives one further penny to these oil companies, it will make the formal investigation report public to the people of Canada and to this House?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party knows that there are certain legal processes that must be gone through in relation to the potential charge to which he made reference. I am sure he did not intend the implication that we should hold back any measures that might encourage further energy exploration until those legal procedures, which might take some time, are finished. I say "might take some time" because I do not know exactly how long they would take.

I can certainly affirm to this House and to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that it is a matter of very real concern to this government to see that as much as possible of the revenues that come to energy companies operating in this country are reinvested in Canadian energy development. Indeed, we want to see measures taken that will encourage a wide number of Canadians who are not now investing in the energy industry in a position where they can put their investments into that industry in a way that can move this country toward self-sufficiency.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary question—and the Prime Minister knows that he did not answer the question at all. Considering that, presumably, his government and the preceding government would not have maintained a five-year investigation into these companies unless they believed there were very good grounds for suspecting collusion on prices, it is not a frivolous matter. They made $5 billion in profits, when their taxes have been going down and those of Canadians of ordinary income have been going up.

Given the circumstance of multibillion dollar profits in this industry by a handful of firms, would the Prime Minister not agree that it is precisely at such a time Canadians need a publicly-owned and controlled petroleum company like Petro-Canada, over which they have control, to ensure some fair practices in the marketplace?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we will resist the temptation of the Leader of the New Democratic Party to rush to a conclusion on this question before the evidence gathered by the Government of Canada suggests that we should lay a charge. What he is suggesting is that because he thinks it might serve his interest in defending a particular concept of state ownership of an energy company, instead of citizen ownership of an energy company, we should move ahead quickly, pressing charges before it would be appropriate according to the law officers of the Crown to move forward with those charges.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PERSONS RECEIVING GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME SUPPLEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of the report which has just been made public by Statistics Canada and which now provides facts on distribution of income in Canada and loss of purchasing power, especially for older persons living alone, is the minister, after having introduced yesterday that bill which helps only 60,000-odd senior citizens, ready to tackle the real problem, that is, create a special allowance for single individuals receiving a guaranteed income supplement—600,000 Canadians—to make them rise above poverty level?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, indeed, the report yesterday concerned all of us. I should like to suggest to the hon. member that the review, of which I am sure she is aware, we are undertaking with respect to the pension review—as well as the general review the department has been undertaking which was started by her—is still under way. We hope it will bear some fruit that I can bring before the House.

FINANCE

DEPLETION ALLOWANCE TO OIL COMPANIES—USE THEREOF TO FUND SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I am so familiar with the review that when I left we already knew the cost of the special allowance needed for senior citizens living alone and receiving GIS, and it is only $200 million.

Is the Minister of Finance not ready to earmark $200 million from, say, the super-depletion allowance to oil companies in order to offset the effects of inflation for seniors by creating that special allowance for all those receiving the GIS?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad the hon. lady did not make the suggestion to her own minister of finance a few months ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Joker.

An hon. Member: You are in office.

Mr. Crosbie: I am open to any suggestion from the motheaten ranks opposite, and I will consider this one too.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTE TO INCOME SUPPLEMENT PLAN TO IMPROVE SITUATION OF LOW WAGE EARNERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. To help meet the requirements of small wage earners who are getting poorer, could the minister tell the House whether he has considered favourably the request of the Quebec Minister of State for Social Development who was asking the federal government to make a financial contribution to the income supplement plan in effect in Quebec for small wage earners. If so, what amount was granted by the department and what are the arrangements?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is talking about the Quebec income supplementation plan. If he is, there were two requests from the province of Quebec with respect to that plan. First of all, would the federal government accede to their need to have the income so directed, tax exempt? That request was acceded to by the federal government.

The second request was in relation to whether or not we could participate in the funding. We advised the province of Quebec that we would do so only in relation to its ability to come under the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan. Discussions are being carried out in that sense as of this moment.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT NEGOTIATE WITH QUEBEC AGREEMENT SIMILAR TO SASKATCHEWAN'S

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. Could the minister tell the House why his department is unable to reach an agreement as beneficial for Quebec as that concluded with Saskatchewan under existing programs?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, actually there are two or three programs other than the one for the province of Quebec which were talked about in terms of income supplementation. The specific problem with the province of Quebec is trying to find a way in which we could, indeed, participate legally under the Canada Assistance Plan.

In relation to whether or not the federal government ought to participate above and beyond the Canada Assistance Plan, that is a discussion we are having in November with respect to the other interested provinces as well as the province of Quebec.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

COST-SHARING WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Ray Chenier (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since women's employment is supposed to be a priority of the new government, is the minister now ready to cost-share under CAP the new Ontario work incentive program for single mothers and other welfare recipients, so as to get them out of poverty?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my answer is the same as the one given to the hon. member on the other side.

An hon. Member: A no-answer.

Mr. Crombie: It is a good answer, because it is a very important program to both the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. It is, indeed, one that will serve the population of those two provinces. We have been caught by the way in which the Canada Assistance Plan was drafted in that we are not able to participate except only in cases of need. Consequently, we have to redefine the matter, and that is to be the purpose of having the discussion in November with appropriate ministers from the provinces.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MORTGAGE TAX CREDIT PLAN—REQUEST FOR MODIFICATION TO ASSIST PERSONS IN NEED

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Statistics Canada has reported that the average income for Canadians has dropped by 3 per cent because of inflation and that the number of poor people or those in need in Canada is rising dramatically. Yet this government will be introducing a mortgage tax credit plan which will do nothing to assist Canadians in real need, such as tenants, and which will cost the country billions of dollars over the next three or four years.

Considering the apparent lack of concrete plans by the government to defeat inflation—which has been increasing since these statistics came out—will the Prime Minister tell the House if he will recommend modifying his expensive election promise in order to assist Canadians in need? In addition, will the Prime Minister tell us where he will find the funds to provide social assistance, if he is not going to help needy Canadians in his housing give-away of billions of dollars?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are not proposing to amend that bill, which will be introduced into the House of Commons later this week.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

"TRUCKING AFFAIR"—RESPONSIBILITY FOR CALLING MEETING OF CERTAIN MINISTERS AND OFFICIALS

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It relates to the trucking affair. I might indicate that as the issue progresses, it becomes one for the protection of the director of investigations under the Combines Investigation Act.

In the Senate, on Thursday of last week, a statement was made by the Minister of Justice that, indeed, the meeting that took place was not at his initiative, but was at the initiative of his own officials, and he did not know even the nature of the problem prior to the meeting being called that he had to be told to attend.

I ask the minister whether he knows the director of investigations, for whom he is responsible in this House, and I trust he takes his responsibility very seriously and will seek to protect the interests of the director—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Blais: —was instrumental in calling that meeting, or whether he was a reluctant participant, and whether he agreed with the subject matter of the discussions that took place?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in my view—although I had no hand in calling that meeting—the purpose and the motivation for calling the meeting was absolutely essential.

The hon. ex-minister appreciates that I am under some inhibition as to just what I can publicly indicate respecting the purpose of the investigation. It is a piece of legislation that was not presented to the House by this government, but under that piece of legislation I cannot explain fully the purpose of the investigation and its status at the moment.

Nevertheless, because there has been so much misunderstanding about this particular matter, and because many items have been raised in this House which should not have been raised in the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: —I feel that I am free at least to tell the hon. member that a meeting of that type was absolutely essential. That particular meeting had to have, as part of it, the Minister of Transport so that that particular minister could be informed of the purpose of the expected prosecution and, indeed, so we could obtain information from that particular minister about certain provincial government regulations and interference in the whole question of rate-setting and route-setting for transport companies in western Canada. For goodness sake—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nipissing, on a supplementary question.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased with the hon. gentleman's very lengthy explanation, but I am asking him whether, in effect, the information he sought from the Minister of Transport relating to very technical procedures within the province of Alberta could not have been obtained from the Minister of Transport—

An hon. Member: You mean, Minister of Justice.

Mr. Blais: —and while he is replying to that question, would he also indicate whether he has ensured that his responsibility under the statute to protect the independence of the director of investigations has been discharged? Also, could he assure this House, now, that at all times the director of investigations was completely independent in the pursuit of his responsibilities under the statute?

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the director of investigations certainly knew about that meeting ahead of time. He was at the meeting, obviously. He knew about it, and at no time was there any hint to me—or, as far as I know, to anybody else by the director of investigations—that that meeting should not have taken place. The director of investigations was there. He took part in that meeting fully, as I expected he would.

The hon. ex-minister has just misinterpreted, again, something I have just said. I did not say that the meeting was called for my information. The meeting was called for the information of the Attorney General of Canada, who has a perfect right, in his discretion, before he authorizes any type of a prosecution like that to get the fullest information that is possible.

● (1440)

As it turned out, the information that was desired was not presented to the Attorney General because it was not within the knowledge of any federal government official. Therefore, we shall have to carry this consultation process even further and consult with provincial governments before the prosecution is permitted.

AIR TRANSPORT

RADIO OPERATORS' DISPUTE—ACTION TO ALLOW CONTINUANCE OF BARGAINING PROCESS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport: it relates to the very dangerous and chaotic situation that exists in many of the nation's airports due to the withdrawal of service by the flight service radio operators.

Those services were withdrawn because of a number of recent directives from the Ministry of Transport. In all probability, if those directives were withdrawn the workers would resume service. In light of that, is the minister prepared to give this House his assurance that he will remove those directives and allow the bargaining process with Treasury Board to continue without interference?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the hon. member knows, the Public Service Staff Relations Board ruled last Saturday that the designated duties as prescribed by Transport Canada were, indeed, upheld by the Public Service Staff Relations Board. I am informed that where the prescribed duties are being carried out by the designated employees as per schedule, there are no difficulties. I have been informed, as well, that there has been no recorded case where flight safety has been knowingly compromised.

Management did issue a directive indicating the responsibilities of the designated employees and indicating that there are prescribed duties which they are required to perform. It reminded them of the importance of discharging that responsibility: failing that, they could face possible disciplinary action.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the situation is not quite as I hear it from the Minister of Transport. What is actually occurring, and I would take one of a great many examples I received today, was a case where—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary, he should put it.

Mr. Skelly: In light of the fact that we have a number of incidents, can the minister tell us what he will do to ensure that flight safety is taking place at airports where the service has been withdrawn?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, officials of Transport Canada are, indeed, monitoring the matter at all times. We are committed to ensuring that safety and security are preserved and not compromised. If the hon. member has any specific examples, I wish he would give them to me.

CONDITIONS OF LEASE RESPECTING BUILDING IN OTTAWA

Mr. Don Cameron (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. I would like to find out from him, regarding the lease on the building at 219 Laurier which still has several months to run until the end of this year—if, in fact, a new lease has been negotiated—

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have that matter currently under inquiry.

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY

REFUNDS OF EXCESS COLLECTIONS BY CEMA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. It has been alleged that the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency collected at least $3 million last year in unnecessary surplus. What is the minister doing to ensure that this $3 million of excess, unjustified collections from the public are returned to the consumers and the farmers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's question. It does not come as any surprise to me, knowing the hon. member's feelings regarding marketing systems in this country. I remind him that to protect the public interest as it relates to all national marketing systems, particularly the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, we have in place a supervisory body, the National Farm Products Marketing Council. I am certain that because of the very capable chairman we have in that position, the public interest is being safeguarded.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, my feelings toward marketing systems in this country are very positive, provided they operate in a way that is balanced in the interests of both consumers and producers. The minister has to demonstrate that is the case.

Inasmuch as CEMA has announced it is raising the price of eggs in order to pass on to consumers the additional interest costs to egg producers because of higher interest rates supported by his government, can he report to us, now, how much there will be in increases in the over-all cost of food generally that will result from these high interest rates paid by primary producers? What will he and his government be doing to alleviate this additional burden on consumers, especially low income consumers?

Mr. Wise: In response to the hon. member's supplementary question, I want to remind him that the annual report of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency has been tabled. It was tabled in the House on October 9, I believe. We want to make certain that we are not only tabling these reports but are making them available to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

If the hon. member feels that concerned about the situation, I invite him to make an appearance before the Standing Committee on Agriculture when the annual report of CEMA is before the committee.

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF EGGS—EFFECT ON FOOD PRICES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of reports that the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency is controlling the domestic supply so tightly that there are now shortages in the supply of eggs for processing in baked goods, does the minister have a plan to ensure that this shortage will not drive up the price of food items for the holiday season?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite might take some comfort in the fact that as late as this morning I met with a representation from the board, the chairman of the National Farm Products Marketing Council and the general manager of the board. We discussed these matters. It would appear that we do not have a shortage. I think it could be accurate to describe the situation as being a rather tight one in that the demand for eggs has increased greater than that forecast. However, after my discussions of this morning I feel quite satisfied that we can overcome this situation without any serious problems.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF NEW FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Hon. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It has become clear during the last several months that there is no effective competition between the two contending fighters for our new fighter aircraft and that the potential industrial benefits package does virtually nothing for Canada's high technology industry.

In view of this, will the minister indicate whether it is his intention to proceed with acquisition of the F-16 or F-18A, or is he prepared to add the F-18L to the short list?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to add the F-18L to the short list at this time. As far as the industrial benefits are concerned, we are rather pleased with the package that has been offered by those two companies. There is very active competition right down to the final offers that were made and are at present being reviewed in my department.

Mr. Buchanan: In an article that appeared in this morning's Washington Post, Representative Jack Edwards of Alabama, the senior Republican on the house appropriations defence subcommittee, stated that by the end of this year there will be a great deal of F-15s or F-16s delivered with holes where the engines should be, that because of persistent problems only half of these aircraft are flying at the time, and that if he were a member of a NATO nation considering the acquisition of this aircraft, he would be very nervous. In view of that, does the minister consider this a sensible aircraft to acquire for the Canadian forces?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his first question as defence critic of the official opposition. I point out to him that these two aircraft were put on the short list by his government. I believe he is aware of that.

I want to tell him that I have not read the article in question. I will be pleased to read it. I will ask for advice on such allegations. I know there is a lot of speculation as to which aircraft will be selected. I would not want to say anything in this House that would show any favouritism toward either one.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SEASONAL WORKERS—REQUEST FOR REVISION OF BENEFITS' SYSTEM

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In view of the fact that the majority of Charlevoix workers must resign themselves to seasonal work, which seldom lasts longer than ten weeks, thereby depriving them of unemployment insurance benefits, could the minister urge the task force, set up in his department to review economic boundaries, to report as soon as possible and demand that new boundaries be proposed for the Charlevoix region so these people will be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits?

[English]

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the task force in question is due to report to me some time at the end of November. I would be pleased to make the report of that task force available as soon as it is given to me.

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary, I should like to remind the minister that under the previous government that task force was to report and make its recommendations at the end of May. Could the minister speed up the process because, the tourist season being over, hundreds of persons are denied unemployment insurance in the riding of Charlevoix?

[English]

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am hardly about to provide an excuse for the delay of the previous government. I would be very pleased to provide the report of this task force as soon as it is available. I can assure the hon. member that individuals in my department are working very hard on this very difficult question.

I take this opportunity to offer the hon. member a chance to provide input into that particular process, because this is an extremely complex question of importance not only to his riding but also to many other ridings throughout eastern Canada.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CAMPAIGN PROMISE OF $2.2 BILLION TAX CUT FOR CERTAIN CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the distressing figures mentioned already by other hon. members which show the rich getting richer, the poor getting poorer and middle income earners falling behind, can the Prime Minister indicate to this House whether he intends to keep his promise of June 4 that his government will provide a $2.2 billion tax cut for middle and low income Canadians to provide stimulus for the economy and to help these important groups cope with inflation's effect on their standard of living?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we hope to keep that promise, but we are not sure when.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You sound like a Liberal, Joe.

COMMUNICATIONS

CONFERENCE OF MINISTERS IN TORONTO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSALS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Communications. It deals with the meeting of the communications ministers held in Toronto recently. Little news has filtered through about it, only enough to conclude that it was not an outstanding success.

I should like to know how it is that, as a member of a government that claims to be so well disposed towards the provinces, he managed to stifle the enthusiasm that existed in negotiations and co-operation to such an extent that a member of the group accompanying the Ontario communications minister is reported to have said: "We were better off with Jeanne Sauvé. At least we had a deal with her".

[English]

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to report to the former minister of communications that I think we had a very useful two-day session last week on a number of communications matters, which she would understand well. In many instances we made a considerable amount of progress.

I know the hon. member would welcome that, particularly in areas which have been most difficult in the past, having to do with the development of new technologies in satellite utilization, some further practical approaches with respect to cable regulation, industrial research in telecommunications and some of the competition industry questions which concerned her in office and very much concern this government as well.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I think that, with regard to the industrial aspects of the department, there is little controversy between the federal and the provincial governments. But the minister did not attend the press conference right after the meeting of the ministers. He delegated the deputy minister. Of course, I have nothing against the latter; he manages very well in everything he does but, in my time, the minister himself gave press conferences. For the benefit of the House, I should like the minister to tell us, a bit more specifically, what he offered the provinces, for instance with regard to the delegation of authority in the case of cablevision, pay television, the interconnection between systems and especially legislation which I would rather have seen discussed in the House instead of with communications ministers in another city.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, as you know, under the rules I would not be allowed to give a detailed answer to the hon. member's question. I do want to indicate to her that I think we have achieved a number of practical solutions in the areas to which she has referred. Specifically, just to mention two, in terms of developments with respect to pay television and satellite utilization we have a proposal before the provinces now which we would like to implement, and they are very seriously examining it.

In terms of cable jurisdiction, we have decided to take a practical route by working together through the means of a task force for an acceptable interim solution before some constitutional or other agreement is arrived at.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ADAMS COMMISSION REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO PRIORITY IN IMPLEMENTING RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Today the minister released the Adams report on paid education leave and productivity. Could he say, first, whether he intends to implement the main recommendations and, second, which he intends to implement first?

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for that very important question. As he knows, the report was just a release and it is our intention to hear from the interested parties, whether they be labour, management, provincial ministers or academics. There has been no position taken. We are looking for input, and after that it will be up to the government to decide in which direction it should go.

INQUIRY WHETHER RECOMMENDATIONS ADVERSELY AFFECT EDUCATION PROGRAM FOR WORKERS

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to integrate the recommendations of the report and the input of the consultations by the Adams commission in Bill C-8 that was introduced last week by the government? Further, could he tell the House if there is contradiction between these recommendations and the millions of dollars provided for the education of workers throughout the country?

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if that is a representation and a matter of concern, I will certainly give it immediate consideration and get back to the hon. member, particularly when he indicates that there is a contradiction. The extent of this contradiction is now known by me, but it is a point which I will have to consider.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID TO KAMPUCHEA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the news report of a major human tragedy taking place in Cambodia, I wonder if the minister can report on the accuracy of the report. Second, would the minister indicate to the House what initiative Canada is seeking to take diplomatically and in the provision of food aid?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members will know, the Canadian government announced over the weekend a contribution of some $5 million to the International Relief Fund to be distributed to those who are suffering from malnutrition—indeed, from starvation—in Kampuchea. The amount which will be distributed will be distributed through the aegis of the International Red Cross and UNICEF, the two groups which have been able to make a preliminary study of this major tragedy which is taking place in Kampuchea.

I should report to the House that the initial report by the Red Cross indicates that the disaster and the malnutrition which have affected that country have almost entirely wiped out the total population under the age of five, and that the age group between five and ten is now seriously threatened. We are, therefore, working with the United Nations, the International Red Cross and UNICEF to try to ensure that this contribution, which is in the form of medical supplies and food aid, will be received by those people who most need it.

Oral Questions

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

PERCENTAGE OF GNP APPLIED TO FINANCE PROGRAMS—EFFECT OF RESTRAINT POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Before the election, his party advocated the expenditure of 2.5 per cent of the gross national product on scientific research and development. This would have required an increase in the number of scientists by 1983 of 40,000.

In view of the restraint programs initiated by his government and most of the provincial governments, which have led to cutbacks in university research programs rather than increases, I would like to ask the minister what steps he intends to propose to reverse this very dangerous trend.

Hon. Heward Grafftey (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member on his nomination as official critic for his party.

[Translation]

May I take this opportunity to extend to him my best wishes.

[English]

The 2.5 per cent ratio between research and development expenditures and the gross national product remains a goal and a challenge to this government. Before the government at this point are propositions for tax incentives to industry, as well as the five-year council grants for universities. I am sure that when we arrive at a decision in this regard, very shortly, the hon. member will recognize that we are keeping the 2.5 per cent ratio figure as a goal for this government and he will be completely satisfied.

● (1500)

Mr. Orlikow: Under the much more modest proposal of the former government for reaching 1.5 per cent of the gross national product for R and D by 1983, we ought to have required from industry an increase in their annual expenditures of about 27 per cent. Given that the increase in industry this year is less than a third of that projected by the former government, which was in itself inadequate, what steps does the government propose to take to persuade industry, so much of which is foreign controlled and dominated, to play the role in this country which it plays in virtually all the other industrialized countries in the world?

Mr. Grafftey: I can assure the hon. member that I have already met with officials of NRC and of the industry branch of my department. I have consulted and am consulting the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of State for Economic Development and I have put all plans of our ministry before the cabinet committee.

I am sure that a decision in this regard and in all these areas will be reached in the very near future, and I repeat what I said in answer to the original question, that the hon. member will be satisfied that the 2.5 per cent goal is a very serious goal for this government in terms of its economic plans.

[Miss MacDonald.]

PENITENTIARIES

USE OF GAS TO SUBDUE INMATE

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General, to whom I have given notice. It concerns the use of gas against an inmate named Renaud in his cell in the Laval institution on September 3.

Since the use of gas against a single inmate in a confined area is, to put it in the most neutral way, not normal, what investigations have the Solicitor General or his officials caused to be made into this incident?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): There is no question in my mind that the use of gas under the circumstances referred to by the hon. member was quite contrary to departmental policy, and also quite contrary to one of the recommendations contained in the all-party committee recommendations which came before the House.

The incident occurred on September 3 of this year, I believe. On September 7, an internal investigation was carried out into the matter. As a result of that investigation, the conclusion was pretty direct: the inquiry had the opportunity of either firing the officer concerned or of severely reprimanding him. They took the latter course. I am convinced that that particular officer will not do the same thing again.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ROY (BEAUCE)—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) raised a point of order alleging that the House passed a motion which was out of order. He requested that that motion be declared null and void. The hon. member for Beauce quoted a few precedents to demonstrate that it was possible to declare some proceedings of the House null and void; it should be noted, however, that in such a case the presence of some irregularity should be clearly demonstrated. In this instance such a demonstration would require the determination by the Chair of a point of order concerning a motion which is not before the House at this time. The hon. member will understand that the Chair cannot make a ruling on such a matter.

Even if the Chair could take such a point of order into consideration, it could not make a decision in favour of the hon. member for Beauce. As a matter of fact, all we need to do is read some of the precedents in the House which are exactly similar to the situation to which the hon. member for Beauce is objecting. Among those numerous precedents, I refer more particularly to the precedent of September 12, 1968, describing an identical situation. Furthermore, it is important to note that the House did not object when the right hon. Prime Minister's motion was moved on October 9, 1979.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, there is so much noise that I can barely hear you. What you are saying is extremely important.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Of course, the hon. member for Beauce stressed then some difficulties with the language of Standing Order 65(1), but he did not raise the matter through a point of order on a procedural irregularity. Rather, he chose to move an amendment to the motion. Moreover, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) seemed to accept the procedure followed when he said, and I quote:

This is quite in order as it concerns a motion now before the House. The Standing Orders provide—

It is the hon. member for Beauce who was saying so.

—that a motion can be moved.

The Chair then accepted the motion as follows, and I quote:

There is no reason not to accept the motion under our procedures. So I must rule the motion in order under our procedure.

The motion was therefore debated and the hon. member for Beauce himself moved a motion which was later voted upon by the House. The Chair could not therefore find then any procedural defect with this motion when it was moved in the House, and neither can it now. Needless to say, such a defect would be necessary to allow the hon. member for Beauce to move a motion to declare null and void the motion which the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) moved on October 9, 1979.

SUPPLY

REPORTING FROM STANDING COMMITTEES OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) AND MAIN ESTIMATES, 1979-80

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue) moved:

That each standing committee to which the supplementary estimates (A), 1979-80 are referred, shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the said estimates to the House not later that Monday, November 5, 1979; and

That, each standing committee to which the main estimates, 1979-80, are referred, shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the said estimates to the House not later than Friday, December 7, 1979.

Mr. Speaker: The motion can be introduced and dealt with at this time only upon the consent of the House.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we have had consultations over a period of time with the House leader for the government, and we agreed to take this step. Of course, we reserve our full rights as to how we deal with the estimates and the appropriation bills when they are returned to the House of Commons.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we have taken the same position with respect to these two proposals contained in this one motion. Perhaps it might be indicated to the House that the reason one set of estimates has to come back so soon is that we are under a legal requirement to deal with the measure confirming expenditures by Governor General's warrant one month after the House has met, namely, by November 9. It is only because of that position that we agreed to the short time on the one set of estimates. The other provision seems reasonable.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear that there has been in fact consultations on an understanding for unanimous support to the motion that has just been put forward by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker). We shall not renege on our word. It has been given before the House opened, during a meeting of House leaders. But in view of the statement made a moment ago in this House by the Chair, and since the Chair does not interpret the rules the same way as we do on the procedure followed until October, I feel there is a most contentious situation in this House. I would not for any consideration—never in my life did I do such a thing and I do not intend to start now, I do not expect to do so unless obliged to—renege on my word. But so long as . . . Mr. Speaker, let me explain—

Mr. Speaker: There is one matter only before the House at this point, the motion put forward by the hon. the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker), namely a request for unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have allowed as always a very brief statement from every House leader on the matter of consent. But this is no occasion for debate. It is simply a request for unanimous consent. If the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) is looking for an opportunity to discuss the motion, he can do so later. But right now it is simply a matter of exploring whether there is unanimous consent that the motion by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) be put forward. If there is, the motion may be put forward. If not, this is impossible. I then ask once more if there is unanimous consent for putting the motion by the President of the Privy Council before the House.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Despite tyranny and oppression, I agree.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There being unanimous consent, the motion stands in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I agree to the unanimous approval to put the motion. On the motion itself I want to state that I will be opposed to the passing of it unless we have the agreement of the government or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) to withdraw his refusal to appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs at this critical time when we want to question him. We have been unable to make arrangements with him to appear before the committee at his time and disposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is talking through his hat. I have not refused to appear before the finance committee. I am quite willing to appear before the House of Commons finance committee.

Some hon. Members: When?

Mr. Crosbie: I will appear when I am in town and after the governor of the Bank of Canada has been heard by the committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Arrogance.

Mr. Crosbie: There is no one opposite whose questions I hesitate to answer. When I come before the committee I hope the hon. gentleman is there to ask a few questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion and the two very short speeches. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY FOR 1979-80

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-10, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1979-80, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues on this side of the House for their thunderous applause.

Mr. Chrétien: You feel alone.

Mr. Crosbie: It is a particular pleasure to introduce this legislation today because it was three years and five days ago that I was elected to this House, on the birthday of the former prime minister, October 18. I was never asked to introduce a bill by the former government, so this is my first opportunity to do so. This bill has to do with borrowing. I am afraid I am not following in the Shakespearean tradition because as I remember Shakespeare said, "Never a lender nor a borrower be." When one follows the previous government, certainly you have to be one or the other. In this case it is as a borrower that one follows the last government.

I want to approach this matter in a statesmanlike and dignified fashion.

Mr. MacEachen: That is impossible.

Mr. Chrétien: It is going to be difficult for you, John.

● (1520)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I know that hon. gentlemen opposite want to get on with the serious business of this country and with cleaning up stuff left over from the former government's days in power, and that we are going to whistle it through this House in a respectable period of short discussion.

An hon. Member: You are whistling in the wind.

Mr. Crosbie: This bill seeks borrowing authority of $7 billion for the remainder of the 1979-80 fiscal year.

An hon. Member: That is terrible. You have lost control.

Mr. Crosbie: I know that the former minister of finance is not used to these little figures. When the former minister of finance was over here he wanted $10 billion. He was not satisfied with $7 billion, as I am satisfied with $7 billion. He wanted $10 billion.

Mr. Chrétien: For two years; this is for only four months.

Mr. Crosbie: This is for the remainder of the 1979-80 fiscal year, and the bill provides that this new borrowing power will come into force, if the House passes this bill, on November 1, 1979.

It also does one other thing, Mr. Speaker. The bill would seek explicit authorization for the government to borrow in foreign currencies as well as in Canadian dollars.

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Mr. Crosbie: The only currency the hon. gentlemen opposite did not try when they were in power was the Zambian kwacha.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: They tried everything else. They borrowed in deutschemarks, they borrowed in lira and they borrowed in yen, but they never got to the kwacha. Luckily they were defeated before they got to the kwacha. This bill will enable us to borrow in kwacha, if we have to.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It does two things. Mr. Speaker, you will recall because of your very sharp mind that the borrowing authority the House was last asked to pass was contained in a bill relating to income tax for 1979-80 introduced by the hon. gentleman for Shawinigan.

Mr. Chrétien: Saint-Maurice.

Mr. Crosbie: I am delighted to see him back in the House.

Mr. Chrétien: I am always here.

Mr. Crosbie: He can learn how things should be done. That bill died on the order paper when Parliament was dissolved on March 26. That bill contained a request for $10 billion in borrowing authority which reflected the $10,750 million in cash requirements estimated at that time that was going to be needed by the hon. gentlemen opposite to run the country for a further year. This $7 billion is $3 billion less. I am not a mathematician, but I am pretty sure it is accurate to say that it is $3 billion less.

Why are we seeking $3 billion less than the last government that sat in this House, Mr. Speaker? It is not only because we have got the world's greatest President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), although that is one of the reasons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I tell you now, Mr. Speaker, those who have cost overruns are shaking and shivering in their boots when they know they are facing this President of the Treasury Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I doubt that we will need any money in future years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He is going to set new targets for whomever succeeds him. Why do we only need $7 billion? It is because we have been using unused borrowing authority carried over from prior years. This is a little secret that the government had hidden behind its back, that it had unused borrowing authority from prior years. Those powers obtained earlier were not subject to the automatic cancellation rule at the end of the fiscal year. However, Mr. Speaker, these unused borrowing authorities, secreted away for many years by hon. gentlemen opposite, were discovered by us, but they have been rapidly used up. If they were not rapidly being used up we would not be before you today with this bill, I suppose.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We require new borrowing authority to enable us to complete financial programs for this fiscal year and to provide a margin for contingencies.

Never in the history of Canada has a government announced so much in such a short time, particularly in the financial area. On July 26 I announced that the financial requirements for this year were then forecast and would likely be $10 billion, not the $10,750 million that the hon. gentleman opposite for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) had predicted. So far this year, and we hope this will still be true, we have raised $4.3 billion in new funds through the issuance of marketable debt. Now, do not ask me what that is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What an admission!

Mr. Chrétien: Is that the way you were running things in Newfoundland?

Mr. Crosbie: It is made up of $1.1 billion in treasury bills and $3.2 billion in marketable bonds issued in the domestic market. The borrowing authority now being requested—

Mr. Chrétien: What an admission.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the difference between me and my predecessor is that I admit when I do not know something and he never did.

Mr. Chrétien: I knew what I was talking about.

Mr. Crosbie: I have had to make very few such admissions in my long life.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The borrowing authority that we are now requesting, together with the remaining portion of the unused borrowing powers obtained in prior years and still available, should be sufficient for us to complete the financing program left to us by the hon. gentlemen opposite for the remainder of this current fiscal year with a margin for contingencies, such as the use of the standby lines of credit that the hon. gentleman arranged. The debt program for the rest of this year includes the 1979-80 Canada Savings Bonds campaign which is now under way.

All outstanding and unused borrowing authority provided by this new act for this year and in respect of which the cabinet—the governor in council—has taken no action to borrow pursuant to section 37 of the Financial Administration Act will be cancelled on March 31, 1980. We are not trying to get $7 billion in borrowing authority to leave it hanging around forever. It will expire on March 31, 1980, so we will have to come back to this House and ask for authority again, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We are not afraid to come back to this House, because we know that hon. gentlemen opposite, having been 16 years in government, well know that the business of the country must be carried on and will not attempt to delay unduly any matter that we bring before the House.

An hon. Member: No more than the Tories did.

Mr. Crosbie: I spoke last year on a borrowing authority bill that came before the House, but it was not this kind of a borrowing authority bill. I felt a sense of outrage when that bill was before the House because the then Minister of Finance—recalcitrant apparently; they were laughing about this tramping on the rights of Parliament, and I just saw him laughing and snickering—asked the House for borrowing authority for a year ahead when there were no estimates before the House. There was not one estimate before the House and there was no way of our assessing whether his financial requirements projections were accurate. Now I see that he is morose and his pangs of conscience are attacking him now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I was critical of that last year. When we are the government we do what we said in opposition. We are not inconsistent, and that is why I am bringing in a piece of legislation that ties my hands so I have to come back here again. I wish I had not spoken last year, but there you are.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We have to be consistent. As somebody in the other House has said, we have to be consistent, Mr. Speaker. We are asking only for specific authority for this year and on March 31 it will automatically be cancelled. Next year when we need borrowing authority for our next financial year we will have to return to hon. gentlemen. This carries out our campaign pledge to return more control over the financial operations of the government to the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Subsection (3) says that the new borrowing powers will come into force on November 1, 1979. The purpose of that is to ensure that we have sufficient borrowing authority on the effective date of the new Canada Savings Bonds campaign. We think we do have sufficient, but this is to make sure.

Hon. gentlemen and ladies should note that it is only the net amount of any increase in outstanding debt that is charged against the borrowing authority, and we anticipate that at the end of this month the amount of unused borrowing authority the government has available should cover net sales of Canada Savings Bonds. As hon. gentlemen know, these sales are quite volatile and you can easily make an error in predicting net sales. That is why we are asking the House to give us this borrowing authority as of November 1 so there will not be any question about whether we have the authority for that Canada Savings Bonds campaign.

The members of the House might be interested in some figures just to show some of the authorizations that have been given to Parliament heretofore. In 1970-71, $3 billion in borrowing authority was authorized. The same amount was authorized in the fiscal years 1971-72, 1972-73 and in 1973-74, $3 billion each year. In 1974-75 there was $5.5 billion in borrowings authorized. In the fiscal year 1975-76, $6 billion was authorized, and the same for 1976-77. But now the hon. gentlemen opposite were getting warmed up to their work. In 1977-78 and 1978-79, $28 billion in borrowing was authorized by this House, an amazing amount.

Mr. Chrétien: Three years.

Mr. Crosbie: It was over two financial years. There were four acts passed which authorized those total amounts, some of which have now expired. This year, the net debt that we have borrowed to date is $5.595 million. We are expecting that the gross public debt charges, the interest charges on our debt this year, will be $8.350 million; or 15.9 per cent of total government expenditures will go toward interest on our debt, a huge amount, an astounding amount of money, going to interest.

This, of course, is something that my hon. friend the President of the Treasury Board cannot control. He cannot control the interest on public debt.

Mr. Gray: You can.

Mr. Crosbie: I cannot control the interest on the public debt because I am left with a huge budgetary deficit for this year, and it will take three or four years to bring that down to a satisfactory level. Because of the debt racked up in the last few years, including the debt that we are left with this year, the difference between revenue and expenditures next year will likely have an interest cost of $10.5 billion. It is truly an astounding amount, and the difference between this year and the next year is something which the government can do nothing about. It depends on what happens with interest rates; and it depends on our past debt, because the past debt is what we must pay for next year in interest charges.

If those are the kinds of interest expenses we will have next year, somewhere over 18 per cent of our total government outlay in this country will be interest on the debt. That is why the President of the Treasury Board, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), myself and all of us on this side of the House are so aware of the fact that reducing our budgetary deficit and reducing our financial requirements is essential if we are to get inflation and our economic system under control in this country. That is why we are convinced that the only stimulative deficit now is a deficit that is reduced from what it has been in past years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Flip-flop.

Mr. Crosbie: We have many financial bills coming before the House, and if the House passes, as I hope it will, the debris left over from the last budget, the November 1978 tragedy, and if the House passes this left-over business, then we can get on to the new government's budget and with the business of Canada.

Therefore, I appeal to the hon. gentlemen opposite to help pass through the House their debris so that we can get on with our bright new future for Canada, so that we can get on with our own budget and can get on with dealing with this country, as the people of Canada showed on May 22 they wanted us to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) said a few moments ago that he wished he had not spoken last year. I say that the people of Canada, after hearing him this afternoon, will say that they wished he had not spoken today because instead of serious ideas and serious analysis of the needs of the country, he has given us nothing but empty jokes. The minister said that he wants to get on with the business of Canada, but he and his government wasted the first five months after the election when they could have been getting on with the business of Canada.

The Minister of Finance may want to take credit for himself and the new government, through Bill C-10, for asking for the power to borrow $7 billion for the fiscal year ending April 1, 1980; whereas in Bill C-7 as it was originally presented by the previous government last fall, authority was sought to borrow $10 billion to cover cash requirements for the same period. This portion of Bill C-7, as the House will remember, was dropped at the insistence of the Conservatives. They said that there should be no authority granted by Parliament to borrow for the 1979-80 fiscal year before a budget for that period has been presented.

The bill as passed, therefore, authorized additional borrowing only for the 1978-79 fiscal year. But are the Conservatives in this Bill C-10 showing greater restraint in the borrowing they asked to have authorized by Parliament for the 1979-80 fiscal year than did the previous bill of the Liberal administration? I submit they are in fact not showing more restraint at all.

I will tell the House why I make this submission at this time. Let us start by noting that more than six months of the current fiscal year have already gone by and yet this new Parliament first sat only two weeks ago. There has been no Parliament since the election was called last March. How did the government get the money it needed for its operations, the money required to fill the gap between its revenues and its expenditures during this period, almost all of which, except for a few days, was part of the current fiscal year beginning April 1, 1980? After all, Parliament, before it was dissolved, had not approved any supplementary borrowing authority for the 1979-80 fiscal year.

Did the government make use of authorities to borrow previously authorized by Parliament and which it could still use? The minister suggests that they did. Did the government use cash balances on hand and borrowings carried out in the previous fiscal year? I am told that at the beginning of this fiscal year, April 1, 1979, the government had cash balances on hand of $6.4 billion. As of August 1, 1979—the latest date for which figures are available—these cash balances had declined to $2.7 billion. This means that $3.7 billion of these cash balances were used to finance government operations over the past six months. I am also told that during that period there was, in addition, total new net borrowing of $2.8 billion. This means a total of $6.5 billion from government cash balances and new borrowings were used to finance the cash requirements of the government since April 1, 1979.

This new Conservative government in Bill C-10 is asking for authority to borrow $7 billion to finance its operations for the balance of the fiscal year. This means that a total of $13.5 billion will have been either spent or borrowed by the government or will be available to be borrowed by it to finance its operations and to meet its cash requirements during this current fiscal year. However, the Minister of Finance last July, in his major economic statement, said he was forecasting cash requirements for this fiscal year of only $10 billion, and he confirmed this again today.

Therefore, I submit that in asking for $7 billion in this bill, the minister is asking for $3.5 billion more than he has so far demonstrated he and his government require. That is a lot of money, especially when one calculates the interest at 11 per cent to 13 per cent to be paid on this $3.5 billion—all of which will have to come from the pockets of individual Canadian taxpayers—because of the high interest rates consented to and supported by this Minister of Finance and this government.

Why has the government in Bill C-10 asked for borrowing authority which, when added to the $6.5 billion I have mentioned, would give it $3.5 billion more than it needs to fill the gap that the Minister of Finance forecast last July would exist between government revenues and expenditures? If I am correct in my analysis, Bill C-10 is not an example of new Conservative restraint, it is just the opposite. In effect, it is asking for $3.5 billion in excess of any requirements the Minister of Finance has forecast and, as a result, there is $3.5 billion in padding.

This is the request he made in the bill he presented to us. This is $3.5 billion for which the new Conservative government does not have to account to Parliament through seeking new express authority for that amount of borrowing. The Conservatives have professed to stand for and be committed to treating Parliament with more respect, to making government more accountable to Parliament. Yet the first bill concerning financial matters that they have presented to Parliament, if my analysis is correct, appears to have done just the opposite. They have not been open. They have not made themselves more accountable.

The Minister of Finance just showed his contempt for Parliament and its committees by saying that if the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs wants him, he will come when he is in town and after the governor of the Bank of Canada appears. As far as he is concerned, the committee and this House have to dance to this tune. That is a fine way to show respect for Parliament. It is just the opposite to what they profess, Mr. Speaker.

One can ask, Mr. Speaker, exactly why they are seeking to follow a course of action which gives them more than $3 billion in padding—an authority to borrow for which, as yet, they have given no justification or accounting. I can see two possible reasons. One is that the government now has forecasts, which it has not given us, that economic growth for the balance of the fiscal year will be lower than what the Minister of Finance said it would be in his economic statement last July. If this is the case, it means that government revenues also will be lower for this period than he has forecast. This means the government will have higher cash requirements and a higher deficit than it predicted. Therefore, it will have to do more borrowing than originally intended.

There is another possible explanation of why the government is asking for borrowing authority of $7 billion, even though it seems to be more than it needs on the basis of the minister's forecast of requirements. It may be giving itself a cushion of several billion dollars in borrowing authority so that in the coming months it may borrow abroad if it desires to maintain the dollar at current levels, if there is new pressure against it on the foreign exchange markets because of this government's mismanagement of the country's affairs, or even to force it upward above current levels. After all, the Minister of Finance said at one time in the last Parliament that he thought the dollar should be at 90 cents U.S. In short, to achieve either or both these purposes, the government could carry out some additional borrowing up to the amount of the $3.5 billion cushion. It could do this without going to Parliament for approval of another supplementary borrowing authority.

Rather than using what appears to be a device to enable it to borrow to finance the activities of government if revenues fall because of economic growth being lower than predicted for the balance of the fiscal year, the government should move more quickly than it intends to present a budget. It should be a budget that contains measures of a focused and specific nature to help our economy become more productive and efficient and to deal with our deficit in current account.

While the government may argue it does not have a lot of room for manoeuvre—it has just given us a new explanation of its stimulative deficit, just the opposite of what it said before and during the election—I believe it does have some room in a budget for measures of the kind I have suggested, measures which would at least blunt and contain the adverse effects on the economy of the slow-down, the recession which is likely to be, unfortunately, already under way.

But there is another serious flaw in the way the Conservatives are proceeding with this first financial measure they have called for debate in this new Parliament. They are seeking this $7 billion in borrowing authority in Bill C-10 without first presenting their own budget to Parliament. We do not have from the Conservatives a statement to this House, in the form of a budget, on what they expect the revenues and expenditures of this new government to be, and what will be the resulting deficit and cash requirements to be financed by borrowing for the balance of this fiscal year.

The minister might say that it is not necessary for the House to have his budget statement before it makes a decision on Bill C-10 because the previous Liberal government presented a budget for 1979-80 last November and the Conservatives—he is suggesting this—are bringing it back to the House and asking that it be adopted. However, I say that is not good enough; that is not the whole story. The Conservatives are not saying they are going to leave everything unchanged in the areas of fiscal policy, of government spending and programs and of economic policy generally, from what they were when they took office some five months ago.

The Minister of Finance has already said that he is going to present a new budget some time before the end of this calendar year. He has hinted it will be presented this coming November. The new government has made clear this first budget will reflect its own approach to government spending and priorities of government activity generally. The Conservatives have said that the new budget will be used to confirm and implement changes in direction from what was in place when they took office five months ago.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives obviously did not find too much wrong with the economic policies put in place by the previous Liberal government, because they left them unchanged for almost half a year. They could have called Parliament and presented their own budget months ago. They did not do so. In this way, they gave an endorsement to these Liberal policies—an endorsement which those people who might have been impressed by Conservative criticisms of the policies before and during the election likely found surprising, to say the least. So much for the validity of those Conservative criticisms.

However, I am sure that the measures of the previous government's economic policy in the new Conservative budget expected next month will not, once announced, be kept in suspended animation; they will not be in a deep freeze till April 1, 1980, when the new fiscal year begins. They will, I am sure, come into effect on budget night or at the beginning of the next calendar year, January 1, 1980. In fact, some may even apply retroactively to the current 1979 calendar year.

One measure, which is really a budget measure, the Conservative mortgage and property tax credit scheme, had already been announced by the minister before Parliament met. When he made his announcement, he said he was doing so in order that it would apply to the current calendar year. We now understand it to be the subject of a separate bill to be introduced even before the budget itself. This mortgage and property tax credit scheme, as the minister has admitted, will add more than $500 million to the Conservative government's deficit. The Minister of Finance has admitted this but he has not been willing to take the people of Canada into his confidence and tell them how the revenue loss created by this new plan will be made up.

In spite of claiming to be a leader in a new crusade for open government, he would not tell and still will not tell the Canadian people what taxes would be raised or what useful government services would be cut to pay for that tax credit plan. So I think that I can adopt the words of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), another claimant to the right to wear the virtuous cloak of open government, when he was talking about Bill C-7 on October 19, 1978. He said:

> The minister chose not to explain why the bill included an authority to borrow $10 billion in fiscal 1980. We know nothing about fiscal 1980. The House has been furnished with no figures. We do not know what the expenditure and revenue forecasts are, or what the budgetary deficit will be for that year.

That was the President of the Treasury Board speaking in a somewhat different incarnation. Referring to the then minister of finance, he went on:

> Why should we be asked to hand him blindly an authority to borrow $10 billion during that year?

Surely these sentiments remain valid today if they were valid last fall.

We also do not know how the forthcoming budget will affect government revenues and expenditures or what forecasts will be in it about the level of the economy. We do not know what the budget will say about the state of the economy, about the oil price agreement the government is seeking and the effect a rapid increase in oil prices will have on the new cash requirements that have to be met.

This is strange conduct by a new government professing a new standard of openness in dealings with the Canadian people and Parliament and professing a new standard of accountability to Parliament. They are asking for the authority to borrow $7 billion in a way which may be giving them a cushion of borrowing room in the amount of several billion dollars without first presenting their own budget to show why all the borrowing authority sought in this Bill C-10 is actually required.

The minister's forecast at this point continues to be that the cash requirement for 1978-79 is $10 billion, and if this cushion I mentioned exists, he should not be asking for the authority to borrow $7 billion but instead a figure in the area of $4 billion. If the new Conservative budget shows a higher deficit for 1979-80 because of Conservative neglect of the economy—a higher deficit than the Conservatives have been forecasting—or if the government wants to borrow to support the dollar, it should come back to Parliament after presenting the budget to get specific authorization for the borrowing required.

Let us not forget that the Minister of Finance in his economic statement of last July admitted that, contrary to what he and the Conservatives were saying before and during the election, the actual deficit for the last fiscal year turned out to be less than had been forecast even by the previous Liberal government.

The President of the Treasury Board admitted in the House yesterday that the higher interest rates the government was now paying on Canada Savings Bonds to meet the over-all increase in interest rates his government had allowed the Bank of Canada to bring into effect would cost the taxpayers $215 million over the term of the new Canada Savings Bonds issue. He admitted that the extra cost to the taxpayer of these higher interest rates would be $62 million in the first year of the term of the new Canada Savings Bonds. Yet last October 19, 1978, in tones of outrage and indignation, the present President of the Treasury Board said in this House:

> The Canada Savings Bonds issue is now at over 9 per cent annually. Do you know that at a 9 per cent interest the cost of what we are now approving will double every eight years? That is the cumulative effect.

Where is that indignation today? Where is the President of the Treasury Board on this crucial issue?

While the President of the Treasury Board gave me the additional cost to the taxpayer of the higher interest rates on Canada Savings Bonds caused by the higher general level of interest rates approved by his government, he did not answer my second question of last Friday. In it I asked about the additional burden on the taxpayer of the extra cost to the government of all of its borrowing in addition to the Canada Savings Bonds loan in order to finance its cash requirements as a result of the three increases in interest rates by the Bank of Canada that it allowed to go into effect since it took office five months ago.

Last October 24, the present Minister of Finance when he was still only the hon. member for St. John's West said in this House:

> Does anyone care what all this does to interest rates? . . . Last March 8 the central bank rate was 7.5 per cent. That was the bank rate just seven months ago. That is what the central Bank of Canada charged, and probably the banks charged one half, three quarters or 1 per cent more. . . . Now we have had five increases, and in seven months it is up to 10¼ per cent. How does this correspond with the Prime Minister's great program of industrial and economic expansion and growth which was brought back by him from Bonn via Morocco?
> The Prime Minister cannot explain. He throws his hands up and says, "Look, we have to do whatever the United States Central Bank does. If they go to 8¼ per cent or 8½ per cent, we go to 10¼ per cent."
> If the Americans increase their interest rates once again, which they may well do—and it is being forecast down there right now—the central bank rate in Canada will go up again, and the interest rate at banks will go up to 12, 13 or 14 per cent.

How right he was, Mr. Speaker, and how quiet he is about what he said then and how it still seems to suit present conditions. But he is singing a different tune today.

On that occasion, the hon. member went on to say:

> Where will it end? Where will it stop? How can we have economic expansion in light of these interest rates? What will the small businessman do? . . . What will they do to meet these heavy, additional expenses?
> Is it not correct that one of the factors which make us uncompetitive compared to the United States is the much higher interest rates in Canada? Who is considering all this? Who cares?

Obviously the hon. member, now that he is Minister of Finance, has not done anything to show that he cares. He has not explained why those words of last fall are not equally valid today, as they are. Today, the hon. member for York-Peel is the President of the Treasury Board and the hon. member for St. John's West is the Minister of Finance. In spite of what they said before the election, they and their Conservative government allowed the bank rate and interest rates generally since they took office to go up three times to record levels, to the range of 13 per cent. This has happened as a result of their decision, their action or inaction. No amount of talk by the present Minister of Finance about the policy of the governor of the Bank of Canada being the governor's personal policy changes the reality that in law and in fact the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board and all in this new Conservative government bear the responsibility for the damage these interest rate increases are doing and will do to the economy, particularly to small business, the farmer and the consumer. The minister and the government are accountable for what is happening and what will happen, and they will be held to account by the Canadian people.

I think there are many questions that remain to be answered about this bill but I think enough is already clear from what is in it and what is not in it, and from the manner in which it is being presented, that the new government is not living up to its promise of more openness, accountability and good management. It is operating, instead, on a basis of evasiveness, ineptness and downright sloppy management. All this is not unexpected in light of the fumbles we have already seen from this government in the first five months it has been in office.

Therefore, we will be examining this bill in detail when it goes to committee. We have an obligation as the official opposition while this Conservative government remains in office—and I suspect the people of Canada will decide it will not be too long—to try to ensure that this Conservative government does the least possible damage to the Canadian people and to the Canadian economy.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the speaker who has just sat down, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), I realized once again how little difference there is between the Liberal party and the Progressive Conservative Party on economic policy. Nothing was said by the hon. member to suggest alternative routes that might be taken by the present government to get the economy out of the mess in which the Liberals left it, not a word. The hon. member quibbles about a lot of minor matters which I found tedious to listen to. There was not a single suggestion for the Conservative government—and it needs suggestions—as to how it can rectify the economic situation in this country.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), whom I have never had the pleasure of listening to before, is undoubtedly delightful, but he reminds me a bit of the captain of the Titanic—you know, laughing as the ship goes down! He says he is being consistent in his position, and yet it was the Conservatives in the election campaign who promised lower interest rates, who promised to stimulate the economy and who promised tax cuts for middle and low income groups. In other words, they promised those things the Liberals had failed to do. They promised to give a different direction to Canadian economic policy. Whether one entirely agreed with them, one had the feeling we would have a government in power, should the Conservatives win, that would put the economy more sturdily on its feet and take directions different from those pursued by the previous government.

What happened? It is not good enough for the Minister of Finance to say that he will get rid of all the mess and, as soon as he can, bring down a budget that will put us on our brave new path. There is nothing to prevent the Minister of Finance bringing down a budget earlier. There is nothing to make him wait until the end of November, as I think it now is. We would have been glad to see the government's financial and economic plans generally for the next year.

One of the reasons for the delay, and there are no doubt many, is that there is no chance for the government to implement the economic policies it outlined before and during the election campaign. It does not wish to implement them. It made a commitment that there would be lower interest rates. As we all know, interest rates have gone up and up. The Minister of Finance could have taken action on that and he knows it, but he failed to do so.

I am sorry to have to say this, but I understood the steering committee of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs had agreed that the Minister of Finance would be heard prior to the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): So what?

Miss Jewett: The Minister of Finance stated today he would appear when he was able to be here, after the governor of the Bank of Canada, and only then when he is in town. That puts the governor in the position of having to meet the committee first.

Mr. Crosbie: It was his preference.

Miss Jewett: The government is hiding behind the governor of the Bank of Canada on its interest rate policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Talk about the bill.

Miss Jewett: I am sorry to have to raise this, but it is a very important point if we are going to get from this government clear directions on its economic policies, including interest rate policies. We were told they would lower interest rates, but they have not done that. Nor have they given any guidance to the bank on that question. They are hiding behind the governor of the Bank of Canada.

It is a similar situation with tax cuts. We have not seen tax cuts. In fact, as was mentioned in yesterday's report from Statistics Canada, average family income has dropped in real purchasing terms for the second year in a row. Average pre-tax family income was $21,346 in 1978, up only 6 per cent from 1977. As inflation was up 9 per cent last year, the real purchasing power of family income actually dropped by 3 per cent. That follows a drop of 2 per cent the previous year. Where are the tax breaks for the average and low income earner in Canada which were to have been a part of this party's new economic policy?

There is another avenue the Conservative party might well have taken but declined to do so and is therefore following in Liberal footsteps once again. This is in relation to what some people have called our hidden welfare system. Our tax system is supposed to be basically progressive. You tax those with more income more than you tax those with less. It would do a great deal if the present government would find more money through the tax system, and therefore have to borrow substantially less. That is bang on the subject of this bill.

Our tax system is a haven for those with really ingenious accountants. It rewards the greedy, punishes the hard worker, favours certain companies, notably oil and gas companies, mining companies and banks, and penalizes the average worker. If the Conservative party really wanted to show a new direction for the Canadian economy, particularly our fiscal system within that economy, it would take a serious look at some of these tax breaks.

In the oil and gas industry, as hon. members know, the Liberals created the super-depletion for what it called frontier exploration. This is a write-off, not only for companies, but for individual taxpayers who invest in frontier exploration accounts. Dome Petroleum Ltd. has not paid any tax in ten years. Shell Oil did not pay any last year.

The money the government does not collect because of the exceptions and loopholes in our tax system we call tax spending. It means the public revenue is losing money that has to be made up by taxes somewhere else—that is, from you and me, Mr. Speaker. How much is it costing us? In the oil and gas industry last year it was about $3 billion. Some went to oil and gas companies, some to private investors who can write off their investment 140 per cent. The Tories pick on PetroCan which costs us $350 million a year and which we all own, and give billions to private corporations in which we have no stake at all.

The same is found in the mining industry. In Sudbury, Inco reaps the same kinds of benefits as Dome. As of 1978, Inco had accumulated a total of $318 million in deferred taxes. Add to that the benefits of tax legislation and they get another $10 million in tax credits.

What of the banks? We have all heard about the banks. Even they get tax credits. Last quarter the Royal Bank did pay tax, at 2.9 per cent. While Imperial got a tax credit in the second quarter, last quarter it actually paid 12.8 per cent. Banks used to pay 50 per cent. Five years ago the banks were paying tax at 50 per cent. The average rate for all banks last year in the last quarter was just over 10 per cent. Our tax system is leaking like a sieve.

One way in which the government could prevent future debt from accumulating would be to close some of these leaks in our tax system that so highly benefit the private sector, or are they so enamoured of every single aspect of the private sector that they are not prepared to take steps to ensure a more equitable distribution of the tax burden in our society?

Increasingly the Conservative government seems to be planning to depend on foreign investment to recoup itself. The Minister of Finance said that is his purpose, that one of the reasons for the increasingly high interest rates is to encourage more foreign investment in Canada. The services bill we are paying on that foreign investment is nowhere near compensated for by our merchandise trade surplus. Hon. members know that, and the situation is getting worse; 1973 was the last year that the surplus on merchandise trade came close to balancing our services account. The services deficit then was $3 billion. In 1974 it grew to $3.7 billion. In 1975 it was $4.7 billion. In 1976 it was $5.8 billion. In 1977 it was $7.4 billion. Last year it was $8.7 billion, and this year it is more than $10 billion. This is the amount of our deficit in what is generally called the services area, which includes, as hon. members know, dividends and business-service charges paid to foreign parent companies by Canadian subsidiaries and also the interest paid on foreign borrowings.

This year's merchandise trade surplus will fall short of balancing the service account deficit by at least $8 billion. This total current account deficit of $8 billion is the amount which must flow into Canada as short-term or long-term capital to keep the Canadian dollar from declining. It becomes a vicious circle. The more one borrows, the more one has to pay out. What is the government planning to do to encourage Canadian investment by Canadians? Does it have any plans, for example, or strategies?

If it is going to give tax breaks, will it ensure that the companies getting those tax breaks sign planning agreements with the government as to where new investments should go? For example, in the pulp and paper sector the Canadian government could require companies to buy Canadian machinery. MacMillan Bloedel in my own province of British Columbia signed such an agreement concerning its Dutch operations. It signed that kind of agreement with the government of The Netherlands. Does the Conservative party have any ideas at all for developing this kind of agreement in Canada to encourage investment here, or is it just going to go on taking in more and more from outside?

Has the government thought of a public investment fund? As it probably knows—I am sure the Minister of Finance knows—in Sweden companies which receive tax breaks have to put some of their profits into a public investment fund, and this money is used where the government feels investment is needed. Has the government given any thought to that kind of proposal?

Finally, has the government any strategy or plans for dealing with what, after all, is the real problem at the root of all these other problems, that is, the development of high technology Canadian industry? Does the government have any plans for helping this branch and perhaps certain other branches of Canadian industry to survive and advance? I mention the new high technology area because it is highly competitive. This is where Canada ought to have a natural advantage but it is a new and still fragile industry. It does need government support.

At the moment we are losing ground and losing it fast. This happened under the Liberals, but are the Tories just going to continue the pattern? Between 1970 and 1975 trade statistics in high technology industries showed Canada importing more than it was exporting in 18 out of 19 industries. A report on the telecommunications industry in Canada published late last year said that Canada's trade deficit in the electronics manufacturing sector was running at between $1.5 billion and $2 billion a year. This report went on to warn, and I quote:

> We believe that the telecommunications and information industries in Canada will be dominated by foreign interests or crippled by imports if nothing is done.

If there was some indication of a commitment by the government to help in the development of this industry, increased borrowings to help finance this commitment might make some sense. However, there was no suggestion of such a commitment as recently as last week's federal-provincial conference on the communications industry. Similarly, we have heard, both before the election and in the Throne Speech, that this government plans to expand research and development—we heard that again in answer to a question today—but have not seen any concrete action on this.

As hon. members know, right now Canada spends .9 per cent of its gross national income on research and development. The U.S. spends 2.3 per cent. West Germany spends 2.2 per cent. The results show, of course, in lack of productivity. Right now Canada's level of productivity in the manufacturing sector is about 20 per cent less efficient than that of the United States. Part of the reason lies in Canada's fewer economies of scale, but as everyone knows, nowadays technological advantage is the most critical factor affecting productivity, and that is where we are falling short.

I remind hon. members that we pay twice over for this. First, Canadian companies are not able to compete effectively and therefore do not grow as fast as they ought and do not employ as many Canadians graduating from our universities with high technology skills. Secondly, we increase our manufacturing trade deficit by the increasing levels of our high technology imports.

I have already mentioned the telecommunications industry. Let me give one more example. The computer data processing industry is a glaring example. The federal Department of Communications estimates that Canada will buy $300 million worth of data processing services from the United States this year. This is equivalent to exporting 7,000 highly skilled jobs, and the losses would be several times higher if the data processing business which foreign parent companies sell to their Canadian subsidiaries were included in the totals. In the absence of an industrial strategy to help the Canadian data processing industry develop and to prevent its systematic takeover by foreign interests, the deficit is likely to increase. Indeed, the Department of Communications suggests that by 1984 we will be exporting 23,500 jobs in this dynamic industry and increasing our trade deficit in it to $1.5 billion.

As hon. members know, this is the last thing we need. Because even with our trade merchandise surplus the emphasis is still entirely on raw materials. One of the things I did agree with was the paper of the Conservative party on economic development policy which was written in 1975. The Conservative party then said, and I quote:

> Canadians should not consider the merchandise account to be in a balance or a surplus position unless the balance or surplus is achieved on a basis that excludes trade in raw resources.

We are at the moment running an $11 billion trade deficit in end products. The fact that we have an over-all surplus is made up for by the fact that we are doing exactly what this paper proposed we should not do, namely, relying on export of raw resources. We have an $11 billion trade deficit in end products. We desperately need to turn that trade deficit around. We already know that trying to do so by increasing foreign investment and increasing raw material exports to finance that investment is a futile exercise. It amounts to chasing your own shadow, with the added factor that the more you chase it the longer the shadow becomes.

In my final remarks I would like to urge this government to reassess this tendency of its following along with the same tired out policies the Liberals followed for so many years. I remind this government that locking ourselves into high interest rates to attract foreign investment increases our foreign debt load. There is no stimulating policy for our high technology industries in Canada, and that is a direct foreclosure on Canadians being able to invest in their own country.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wondered what kind of a speech I was hearing while listening to the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett). I thought we were dealing with a bill to increase the borrowing authority of the government based upon Bill C-37 of earlier this year which was not passed and which actually covers the borrowing authority for expenditures which have largely been consummated. Yet we have heard a run down, prepared I do not know where, of all sorts of dribs and drabs concerning economic policy which have nothing to do with this bill.

An hon. Member: Let us hear yours.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would prefer, if the financial critic of the NDP is not here, that whoever substitutes would stick with the bill. This is a very limited bill and I do not think I should have to lecture a former university president about relevance and about not trying to throw all sorts of mud and water against the wall in the hope that a minuscule quantity will stay.

Miss Jewett: Let us have some positive policies.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was poor quality mud and very little stuck.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on behalf of my party about not throwing dirt at our party. Surely the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) can see that if there are failures in the borrowing position of this government, as we are pointing out, it is primarily due to their economic policies. This was the meat of the address of the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) and she is as free as anyone else in the House to use this occasion to introduce that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member will agree with me that the point he has raised is certainly not a question of privilege but rather a difference of opinion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to revert now to Bill C-10. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has been asking for authority to extend the borrowing power of this government to borrow $7 billion. If one goes back to the news release issued at the time of Bill C-37—and I invite the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) to do so—then one sees that at that time the government was seeking authority to borrow $10 billion for the fiscal year 1979-80.

This bill, some eight months later, seeks borrowing authority for only $7 billion. In other words, there has been some progress. Perhaps in the hon. member's mind $3 billion is little because his party has no ceiling on expenditures it will make when it wants to make them, regardless of where they are going to get the money. That never enters their mind.

Hon. members will recall that in November of 1978 supplementary authority for $7 billion had been obtained, but those of us on this side are very conscious of the fact that $7 billion was obtained by the presentation of a bill by a government that had been embarrassed into trying to slide through surreptitiously a borrowing authorization under a $1 item in a supplementary estimates appropriation bill. The Chair, of course, had, quite properly, when this was drawn to its attention, disqualified the item, and therefore the government had to come forward with a separate bill. At that time they got $7 billion. Most of the borrowing powers obtained prior to November, 1978, have been used but, as I pointed out in the debate on February 15, 1979:

> Last year the government tripped itself up over its own ineptitude in attempting to increase a borrowing authority in an appropriation bill under a one dollar item or some similar procedure. Of course, the Chair rejected it. Last November the government had to introduce a borrowing authority bill in which it sought authority to increase its borrowing capacity by $7 billion. Approximately four months later the government is back saying, "we have to borrow another $10 billion."

Now we say, just a minute—and we did say so—how is it that so much money is required? Any attempt by my colleague the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) to get information from the former minister of finance ran into a stone wall. Finally, the information did come out. There was then $2 billion worth of borrowing authority under legislation which expired on March 31, 1979. There was a further $3.8 billion worth of authority which was made valid under previous legislation. With the $7 billion sought in the bill for the fiscal year 1979-80 there was authority for approximately $13.8 billion.

Why was this money needed? It was needed for one reason and one reason only. The program managers of the government in 1978-79 ran out of control totally and utterly over the spending program of that government, and the only recourse was for the poor former minister of finance to come forward in the House and admit failure on the part of the government to control expenditures. The problem was the rate of increase in government deficit. They were financing borrowings to pay interest; not to repay capital but to pay additional interest as time went on.

Frankly, that is one of the most serious problems that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has inherited from the previous administration. Instead of $10 billion, the amount has been reduced to $7 billion, and on top of that the Minister of Finance has said that there is a terminal date on the credit and he will have to come back by March 31, 1980 to get any additional borrowing authority at all. That is a lot more honest than what prevailed heretofore. It seems to me that hon. members should recognize this fact.

I hope we are going to get far more details and a far more open disclosure by the Minister of Finance through the changes that have been implemented as a result of his examination of the problems he inherited as well as the examination of programs by the President of the Treasury Board, so that hon. members on both sides of the House will be able to understand the control that is required on the spending programs of the government.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to get a very explosive report from the Comptroller General. There is item A in the first section under the Treasury Board where the purpose, under the function of program activities of the Treasury Board, is to examine government programs, to assess their performance and to report. Time and time again I questioned the secretary of the Treasury Board before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and asked him to produce some of these reports. If they are of any value to members who are supporting government programs, surely to goodness they require the evidence of these reports to show their performance. But none was forthcoming, even though the secretary of the Treasury Board agreed it was desirable that they be available. But he is no longer there. The then president of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) agreed with me that this should be so, that it would be highly desirable, but "don't catch me doing it" was all he would say.

The point was that not one program was being assessed. The Treasury Board was totally deficient in its duties. However, their duties have now been pointed out to them and processes have been organized whereby these programs are being assessed, and we will find out about them. That is the question which faces the Government of Canada today, not all the little matters which were referred to by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam. The prime task of the government has been to gain control of its expenditures. That is not done overnight, but already we see the effect of what has been done in the interim.

Instead of coming to us for $10 billion or possibly more, taking into account inflation and increasing interest rates over which the minister has no direct control—anybody who wants to come and sit in and listen is welcome. I can assure the House that there will be a lot of pupils to listen to the Minister of Finance and to the governor of the Bank of Canada on that particular point. Talk about people not having cracked the book but being very ready to criticize! The louder are their protestations, the more evident it is that they do not know anything about the subject. We will see what will result from these steps taken by the government. The members in the opposition and the people of Canada will be in a position to judge my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and the administration which is being put into place under his direction in this particular field, if next March or shortly thereafter he comes before this House and, in the absence of any extraordinary circumstance, admits that he has to borrow more money in excess of what he is seeking now. In other words, if the demand for borrowing authority is greater than it is now and if no extraordinary circumstances exist therefor, then the Minister of Finance will have to admit to the House that he has failed in his mission. But I do not think he will.

I am satisfied that the people of Canada have recognized the fact that the prior administration had lost control completely over its expenditures and they told the incoming government: "That is your first task." Reasonable people will say, "We will give you a certain amount of time to do it". The proof of the pudding will be in the eating next year, at the end of the authority granted by the bill before us. The concept of the bill is very narrow and it does not cover the whole economic field.

I wish the New Democratic Party would come along and tell us what they see as the requirements for borrowing. Of course, they would want to borrow maybe $20 billion, $30 billion or $40 billion as they let go with some of their more irresponsible programs. No way, Mr. Speaker.

I recommend to hon. members that we accept this bill. It will go before committee where hon. members will be able to examine the Minister of Finance and his officials in greater detail. Then it will come back to the House. But it is required and I would therefore ask hon. members, in a spirit of fairness, to accept it. We are not playing games over the election, over what was said and what was not said. The former minister of finance, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), and I have verbally crossed swords many times across the floor of this House. He knows that I knew what he was trying to do. Sometimes I caught him out, but he knows that what I have said this afternoon is absolutely right.

Because he is a good Canadian, I am sure he will want to join us in getting after this particular problem. He knows it was there, that it was recognized at the time of the election. Unfortunately, it had been blown up too big and too fast and had gone beyond the control of the previous administration. I commend the bill to hon. members and would seek their affirmative vote.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make a very long speech because I know of the problems facing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). I went through this kind of experience when it used to be that these borrowing bills were just an item in the estimates and we did not have to present official bills and so on. I was forced for days and days to sit in the House listening to gloom and doom speeches for nothing. So I do not intend to do that. I just want to make a few points which in my judgment are important at this time.

The hon. gentleman knows I have a lot of sympathy for him because I too have been minister of finance in difficult times. I think sometimes we have to have fun but I did not find it too funny this afternoon when the Minister of Finance treated this problem in a very light way, trying to make a joke out of a very difficult situation. I think that he will gain nothing by trying to be funny in the face of the problems this nation is encountering at the moment.

I would like to make reference to a few points which are worring me very much. When one is under pressure, as the Minister of Finance is at the moment, I think it very important that one get as much support as possible. I feel very sorry for him when I see his present situation, because in order to have stability in the Canadian economy we need to have confidence in our Minister of Finance.

At this moment when the Canadian dollar is still under extreme pressure, the present government is facing many problems. They made brave speeches during the summer, especially the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), to the effect that they would bring expenditures under control and so on. Now we realize after only a few months that the Minister of Finance has to admit, as he did last week, that his predictions of last August were not right. Two months after making them, he has to admit that his predictions of August were off the target by $500 million. He gave me hell for the type of difficulties with which I had to cope. I do think that this situation is not one which calls for the Minister of Finance to be making funny speeches.

Everyone in the business community knows that the Minister of Finance wanted to keep his deputy minister because Bill Hood was a competent man. I heard what the minister said when he was a member of the committee in the spring after the prime minister had appointed Mr. Hood on my recommendation. He said to Mr. Hood in my presence that he was very competent, and that if there was a change of government in the coming months he would have an easier time with the new minister of finance. The first thing that Mr. Hood heard from the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) was that he was fired and that it was against the wishes of the Minister of Finance. I have never seen such a thing and I feel very sorry for the present Minister of Finance.

As I said in the House the other day, there is another problem that is in my mind very much at this time, and that is the future of the governor of the Bank of Canada. It took some time for the Minister of Finance to realize that, after all, he was responsible for interest rate policy and he could not just say that it was the responsibility of the governor of the bank, because since the Coyne affair it has been very clearly established that the ultimate responsibility is vested with the minister of finance.

When I was minister of finance I never tried to run away from my responsibilities. I know it is not pleasant for any minister of finance to accept a recommendation to increase the interest rate. That is not fun, but very often we have no choice because the alternatives are more difficult. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Finance say that he had complete confidence in the governor of the bank. That is the way things should be because the Minister of Finance has full responsibility. But if you are in the marketplace today and you look at the present situation, you will hear rumours that the government is planning to replace the governor of the bank.

An hon. Member: So they should.

Mr. Chrétien: The market should know what the view of the government is. It is not good for the stability of Canadian currency and the Canadian economy at this time to see the Prime Minister of Canada go to a press conference and say he does not know if he will or will not keep the man. When a man has responsibilities like that and has to be seen all the time he has to have the confidence of the government. If he does not have the confidence of the government, he should be told so and replaced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: That is the way the system should work, and I urge the Minister of Finance to start taking his responsibilities seriously. Of course, he and I can have a lot of fun on other subjects. I like to laugh once in a while. I am from rural Canada just as he is, and a good joke makes me feel good, but when we are dealing with this problem it is not the time to make fun of our institutions.

I understand his problem and I urge him to talk to the Prime Minister and make sure that the oil and gas pricing problem is resolved very quickly. I understand his frustrations. Members of the opposition who formed a new government in the spring were asking for a budget in March. We are now at the end of October. I know there is not much work that can be done on a budget, but how can the Minister of Finance predict the deficit for next year? How can he predict the inflation rate for next year if he does not know what the compensation program for oil prices in eastern Canada will be? With the huge increase in the price of oil internationally, this uncertainty puts a lot of pressure on the Minister of Finance in preparing his budget. He has to know these things.

What happened this past summer? Those first ministers were among friends, Mr. Davis and Mr. Lougheed. How come they did not manage to resolve this? When I felt last year it was my duty to ask Alberta not to increase the price of oil by $1 in January, 1979, I gave them five months' notice. We entered into negotiations. Now we are at the end of the period. My budget came in in November and now we are at the end and the poor Minister of Finance is sitting there alone not knowing what the government will do. That is terrible and I feel very sorry for him.

I hope members of the government will realize that they cannot leave the Minister of Finance high and dry like that. He needs the backing of the government, because what is essential in that role is to have some credibility. Yet in a matter of weeks the Prime Minister has pulled the rug out from under him by changing his deputy minister without his consent. He is now putting him in the position of having to say in the House that he supports the governor of the bank, while 24 hours afterwards the Prime Minister in a press conference indicates he does not know if he will keep him. The governor of the bank has a very difficult job to do. I know there are other things he could do.

If the government is determined to move on the deficit, and do something about it, we need more than grandiose speeches by the President of the Treasury Board, who does nothing but pretend he is going to kick 60,000 bureaucrats out in three years. He claimed he would cut the civil service by selling Canadair and de Havilland. I hope Canadair will have 20,000 employees. They are not bureaucrats, they are people who make planes. The same thing is true of de Havilland. This kind of nonsense does not satisfy those people who have put their faith in those responsible for managing the economic affairs of this nation.

What we need to know is what the inflation rate will be next year. There is a lot of planning being done at this time. Last year I said in my budget of November that we should move the date of the budget, always having it in the fall rather than the spring, so that the people could make plans for the year to come on the basis of a budget that would be known to everybody. How can they prepare against inflation next year without knowing the government's budgetary intentions?

The price of oil has to increase. That has been the policy of our government and our party, but it should increase in relation to certain standards. This idea that the price of oil has to be set side by side with the international price set by the OPEC cartel makes no sense. I was in Iran, in Saudi Arabia, in Venezuela and in Ecuador and none of those nations charge their citizens the price for oil which they charge the foreign market. Why do we have to do this in Canada? Not even the Americans do that. In Texas the independent oil producers still get $5.35 per barrel for old oil. It is not sold at the international price. People in the west sometimes complain about our policies on oil pricing. If you go to Texas, Mr. Speaker, and talk to the producer there, he will tell you that they hope to get the same generous treatment that is given in Canada. Why should we run the risk of having four or five more points of inflation next year? Who made that commitment for the nation? I hope the Minister of Finance will resolve this difficulty very quickly because very soon we will have been 13 months without a budget.

I remember when I had been the Minister of Finance for a week and members were up on their feet asking me when I would present a budget. Within a month I made an economic statement in the House. It was kind of a mini-budget in which I changed some of the policies. I presented another one in April and one in November.

We have to get ready to move now rather than pushing back all the problems until later. Of course, the Minister of Finance will be late. When I presented my budget in November of last year I based my predictions and my policies on the best information I had on increases in the price of oil. It was information I had gathered at the World Bank meeting, the IMF meeting in Washington. The increase was to be about 15 per cent, according to the consensus, but OPEC nations decided otherwise and the price went up in certain instances 40 per cent. That immediately led to a big change in the situation in the United States. My forecast was made on the prediction that there would be growth in the United States for 1979-80, but that it would be less than in previous years. Because of the OPEC increase in prices the United States is already in a recession.

In answer to those people who ask what is the difference between our economic policy and the Tories' economic policy, I would take as an example the statement made by the Minister of Finance the other day when he said that we were wrong in 1974 and 1975 in not letting the Canadian economy go into a recession. That is what he said.

That is the basic difference in our approach. We do not think it is necessary to let the Canadian economy go into a recession as the Americans have. We managed to prove that point in 1974 and 1975, and I hope that the Minister of Finance will keep that in mind. But at this point I have the impression that the government would be satisfied to see a recession in Canada. This, very often, has been their approach, and some would argue that it is the right policy. I see a smile on the face of one of the so-called red Tories, the Secretary of State (Mr. MacDonald). I know that there are problems within his party, but we Liberals do not think that Canada needs to be driven into a recession.

Of course, it is not easy to move at the right time, but since 1970 our government managed to run the economy in such a way that there was no recession.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You went into wage and price controls.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, we knew that wage and price controls were necessary.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Inflation was so wild.

Mr. Chrétien: We got out of the controls at the right time. When we introduced the wage and price controls, the members on the opposition side were telling us that when we took the controls off there would be a huge bubble in inflation. That is why I, as Minister of Finance, decided to end the controls; I felt that after two and a quarter years the conditions were right for getting out. In fact, when we left the government this year inflation in Canada was still four or five points below the American inflation rate, in spite of the fact that we went out of controls the previous year.

Perhaps it was pure luck. I do not think that it was entirely good judgment, but it was the right timing. That is why at this moment the delays caused by the inability of this government to make up its mind about an oil and gas policy, due to the difficulty of arriving at a consensus among Mr. Davis, Mr. Lougheed and this government, will force my successor to be too late with his budget. Already the minister is late by three to five months because the circumstances are not the same due to the American recession.

I hope that the minister will tell us when he intends to have a budget. It is very nice to make jokes, but the nation must know when he intends to tell us where we are. If there is an increase of $500 million more in the deficit, it means that there are influences affecting the economy, and we want to know what they are. We want to know where the government will be making its cuts. We hear the statements by the minister, and the same day we hear statements by other ministers telling us that they are going to be giving so much to that program and so on. We would like to know where the cuts are.

My party has been very kind to the government since it took power. We were not one of the parties pressing for Parliament to come back in May or June. In retrospect they might have been well advised to do so, just as Margaret Thatcher did in England, but they were too confused by their election promises which are now coming back to haunt them. I do not want to bicker on that matter, but we faced the electorate too and my party came along with the policy that it was not to make any promises. Of course, we did not win the election and even had we made exactly the same promises, we still might not have won. The point is we have tried to be specific and honest with the public at that time.

I urge the Minister of Finance to find other occasions on which to make his jokes because it is time he told the nation where he stands in terms of the economy, where he stands on oil and gas pricing, what the deficit will be next year, what the level of inflation will be next year, what the forecasts for unemployment will be for the next year and so on. This is what the nation needs at this time, not the flip-flop statements which he made at the beginning of his speech today.

I do not believe that the minister should be saying that he will go to the cabinet committee when he feels like going. I do not plan to keep the minister in this House for seven weeks at a time on bills, as has happened to me. I know that this is unfair to the Minister of Finance, and we do not plan to do the same thing. I will try to be serious and to the point. It is not important that I score petty points and so on. It is important that the nation know where it stands, and I hope that the Minister of Finance will tell us what he is thinking and what he intends to do.

I hope that the minister will get the support of his party when he states that he is supporting the governor of the Bank of Canada. I hope that the minister will get the support of the Prime Minister when he requests a particular deputy minister and that one hour after he has expressed his confidence in that individual, that person will not be fired. That was a shame. The Minister of Finance deserves more than that, and I will support him in his efforts to do the best for our nation.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed witnessing a very strange debate. For years while the Liberals formed the government, the Conservatives opposed higher interest rates. The government of the day said that they were necessary and that it would create difficulties for the people of this country. Now we find the Liberals opposing the increases of the Conservative government, which had previously opposed the rise in interest rates and which is now defending increases in interest rates by saying that they are necessary and something over which we have no control. When the Conservatives were in opposition they attacked the Liberal government almost monthly because the cost of living was increasing regularly and rapidly. They were calling on the government of the day to do something about the increased cost of living. Now we have the spectacle of the Conservative Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) arguing, as the Liberals did when they were in office, that there is nothing which can be done about the increased cost of living.

I found it interesting that the lead speaker for the Liberal party in this debate was good enough to be the lead speaker for that party today, but was not good enough to continue in the cabinet when the Liberals were in office. It was also interesting to hear the former minister of finance tell the House how successful their policies were and how they were able to protect Canadians against a recession when we have had more than three quarters of a million people unemployed for the last two years, and it will get worse as the American economy moves into recession. It was interesting to hear the former minister of finance tell us how successful the wage and price controls were. What the former prime minister ignored so carefully and so deliberately was the promise of his government when they instituted wage and price controls that inflation, which was running at 10.5 per cent when controls were implemented and which obstensibly was the reason for implementing them, would be brought down to somewhere around 4 per cent in the third year. The former minister of finance forgot to tell us in his speech that when his party left office inflation was almost back to the rate it was when they implemented wage and price controls.

What the Minister of Finance and the other representatives of the Conservative government are refusing to tell the people of Canada is that as the cost of living goes up—and we have almost double digit inflation right now—the policies which they propose to implement in moving this country to world crises—

May I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Public Service—Review of personnel management and the merit principle—Application of principles in report; the hon. member for Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette)—Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Inquiry whether underprivileged will benefit from housing policy; the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan)—Regional Economic Development—DREE commitment respecting Sydney Steel Corporation.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I believe, Your Honour, that it is well understood that items Nos. 1 and 3 cannot proceed at this time. Accordingly, the motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) will be dealt with now by unanimous consent, if that might be put to members of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Kilgour) has asked for unanimous consent to deal with motion No. 4 standing in the name of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and to stand motions Nos. 1 and 3. Is there unanimous consent?

SOCIAL SECURITY

MEASURE TO PROVIDE ALLOWANCE TO HOUSEWIVES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of having Parliament adopt a measure authorizing payment of an allowance to housewives who remain at home to take care of their family instead of joining the labour market, the purpose being to ensure a global income corresponding to the family's needs by providing an additional family income to that earned by the father.

He said: Mr. Speaker, do I have the floor? I have difficulty being heard, and I hope I can succeed in getting heard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member for Bellechasse has the floor.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank Divine Providence for doing everything right and allowing us to draw the lessons. When motions were drawn, at the beginning of the session, my group was favoured, and every group was favoured, by which I mean that four motions were drawn and each political party was favoured in turn. What men did since the beginning of the session took another turn. At any rate, if other members have something to say, I would invite them to do so later, they will have a chance to be recognized. For now I have the floor, and if there is any respect for democracy, we should be allowed to express ourselves. It is not that often that we have a chance to do so.

First I would like to pay tribute to Canadian women for their tremendous input in the building and development of our country. This week, under a motion by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) we had an opportunity to commemorate the recognition of the rights of Canadian women on the 50th anniversary of that event. It takes us Canadians a long time to get the picture and to recognize people's rights. That is what we did about Canadian women. Still, Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour and a duty for me to move a motion to favour the family by a policy of equity and justice toward the basic cell of society—the family—to whom we owe our being here tonight. Since the first debates in this House more than 100 years ago, the representatives of Canadians did not consider family policies many times. Sure, the House passed the Family Allowances Act and later on improved it through amendments, but changes made to it in the last session of the Thirtieth Parliament are still a controversial issue.

Mr. Speaker, it is hard to believe in 1979, in a free, democratic and developed society, that we did not more often give a chance to the basis of our society to grow and become stronger, in order that the family, the basis of our society, could benefit from the recognition of the law, with all its rights and also to be in a position to assume all its responsibilities.

We are all guilty, we can beat our breasts when we see the divisions within our families, because we have always ignored their importance or even their existence. And yet we all mention the importance of family life in our speeches at the time of an election. Yes, in the last election campaign we saw that the party which is now in the official opposition, and which was then on the government side, had included in its program the recognition of the rights of the housewife in the following sentence: "that a value be set on the work of housewives and added to the gross national product". I was very happy to hear the then prime minister say that this would be included in our legislation, in our statutes, that it would be officially recognized through legislation so that a value could be set on the work of the woman who decides to work at home.

Mr. Speaker, twice already I have had the opportunity to present the same kind of motion in this House. Last year, when I introduced that motion, a government member of that time made the following remark: This motion is exactly the same one moved by the hon. member in the previous session. At that time, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rose and said that he agreed that it was the same motion but he added: it proves that the hon. member for Bellechasse has a good memory, that he is convinced of the merits of his views and is ready to solicit again the support of all hon. members and to convince the government of the urgency of such a proposal so that we can at last recognize the rights of women working at home. Mr. Speaker, Canadians are watching us more critically than ever.

I hope that those who control the frail levers of power will work to this end. As for us, we hold the balance of power or whatever you want to call it. I recall the old balances used by our grandfathers with an arm on which you only had to move the beam to the extreme right to lift the weight at the other end. The balance is now going down! We used this balance not so long ago in the House on the amendment motion on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. We used it freely and objectively and we shall continue to play our role of opposition in the same way.

This is why I say that we are in a very special situation and that whatever the obstacles placed in our way, we are determined that the wheels will continue to turn. We have a duty and a mission to fulfil in the House and that is what we are doing tonight during this debate.

Mr. Speaker, in amending the basic motion that was tabled earlier—since we amended it somewhat to enable all our colleagues in the House to unite in making this a reality—we took into account the fact that this policy should be applied on a voluntary basis so that, as several members and ministers noted, women will not feel that they all have to leave the labour market. This is freedom. If a woman wants to work outside her own home, it is her business. On the other hand, if a woman decides to stay home, it is also her business. On this point, Mr. Speaker, we are proud to recognize wholeheartedly the principle of equality and freedom for both men and women in Canada.

This policy is one that gives access to the family, not only from a quantitative point of view, meaning its monetary aspect, but even more from its qualitative point of view, in recognizing the importance of housework. In my opinion, we should seriously think about it.

As everyone knows, the family is the first free enterprise in our country and we must recognize it as such. It has become evident that we must consider as a member of the labour force in our country each person who assumes the responsibilities of a family. Also, our duty is to ensure the profitability of the family enterprise, as we do every day for small and medium businesses and for the multinationals. We also must take an important step forward by including housework in our gross national product.

As indicated by Mr. Hawrylyshyn in his "Review of some recent propositions to modify and extend the measure of the GNP", I quote:

> Such an imputation must be included in the GNP as a measure of means since very important services come from this activity outside the market.

At page 56 of a brief addressed, I imagine, to all Canadian parliamentarians and entitled,"Women and Work—Five Million Women—A study of the Canadian woman at home", by Monique Proulx, one can read at page 56, and I quote:

That step would constitute solid quantitative evidence of the role of women in the productive activities of our economy, a role that has been reduced in the past because of the market criteria to which the GNP is geared . . . the officialisation of those estimates in the national accounts would even contribute to a certain extent to the legal recognition of women's contribution and consequently their rights to the economic value of the family heritage.

Mr. Speaker, we are not the only ones considering that question. All women's associations across this country have seriously examined at various conventions this step which should be taken by the Government of Canada. Those associations of Canadian women put forward considerable arguments which should draw the attention of all members in this House so we will really be taken seriously when we want to legislate to give all sectors of society, all social classes, the tangible recognition of their rights. Also, Mr. Speaker, at page 38 of the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada, published in 1970, one reads, and I quote:

The housewife who remains at home is just as much a producer of goods and services as the paid worker, and in our view she should also have the opportunity to provide for a more financially secure future. Canada has given some of its workers an opportunity to do this through the Canada and the Quebec Pension Plans. To neglect to do the same for some three and one-half million other workers in the home is to ignore the essential nature of their work.

It is all very nice, Mr. Speaker, on Mother's Day, to give them nice bouquets of flowers, to make beautiful resolutions and praise their merits if the day after everything is forgotten and we do not act like responsible people who can do better than tell them we love them and then forget about them. What is important is not just to hold out bright prospects to them, but give them the full means to fulfil themselves, and that means adopting that motion today. I would urge the government to introduce a bill which would give them the recognition I just referred to.

When we know that the workers' average income is $15,000, would it not be logical, Mr. Speaker, that through a housewife allowance that policy would guarantee to our families the Canadian average income as if it were the vital basic income? As for the families where the father's income exceeds the average income, the father could for the same reason benefit from a tax credit equivalent to the average allowance granted. That policy, Mr. Speaker, would thus help give a correct evaluation of the cost of such a measure and ensure its indexation. I know that on the government side they will ask me how we propose that could be evaluated. It is not up to me to make evaluations, but I am prepared to indicate which criteria to use to warrant that amount.

We can base ourselves on the three following criteria: first, the potential salary of the person; second, the cost of hiring one servant; they are hard to get nowadays; even millionaires have difficulty finding servants. Because we failed to recognize the fact that they perform an essential role in our country, we created that situation. And, third, the cost of paying for each job, separately. What would that cost be, Mr. Speaker? Every day we pay for work that is considered helpful for production as a whole, and is part of social, economic and cultural evolution and justice. Sometimes we forget to recognize the worth of those who choose the fundamental work of guiding the education of the children and running a home smoothly.

I remember how, last June, during a debate in this House, the hon. member for Kamouraska at the time, Mr. Dionne, whom almost everyone knew at least by name, a respected hon. member to whom I pay homage for having served his people and country very well, gave the following example: If a man hires a woman as a servant, he pays her a weekly salary; after weeks and months, if love steps in and he marries her, he no longer pays her a salary. Automatically, her work is no longer recognized as such, which it had been previously; after marriage, that falls through.

We should reflect on that behaviour and realize there is much to be done to change that state of affairs. Much could be added to this but time flies, I see. I should very much like my motion to be adopted. I do not want my colleagues to say that the hon. member himself killed his motion. I merely want to give an outline of it, hoping that it will be accepted and referred to a committee for further study.

I know there are some who will say it would cost us an eye and a tooth, that it would cost a lot. Mr. Speaker, let us face facts: those very same hon. members may have been the first in the past, and may be in the future, to vote blindly for budgets for arms, ammunition to destroy lives; not their own, mind you, but those of others: not me, oh! no, the others. So billions of dollars to make arms, that is not too costly. But billions for mothers, for the women who work at home, who deserve to be recognized by voting funds designed to pay her an allowance under a guaranteed annual income? They are going to waver but they will be the first to cast a blind vote in favour of the estimates in order to give billions of dollars to those who cash in on the credit of the nation to their advantage and put us into debt to the tune of billions of dollars. We only need to study our budget deficits of the last few years to realize that we are paying up to $9 billion a year in interest on borrowed money because there exists an institution, a monetary system parallel to that of the state. On that subject most people do not pay much attention. All they say is that the system is as it is and that we must bear with it. Yet it is that system which is driving us closer to bankruptcy and which we must change. While doing so we must recognize that we ought to grant to the woman who has chosen to stay home and carry out that splendid mission I referred to earlier, the recognition of her rights. I urge the present government which in the past gave the impression of endorsing that policy to show proof of their sincerity so that the motion be carried and a bill introduced to that intent.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) has brought this motion before the House at least twice before that I know of, and I was here both times. He is so eloquent that he has almost convinced me I should support the motion. When he gets to the full height of his speaking abilities, there are not many in this chamber who can equal his good voice and debating abilities.

The hon. member stated we should recognize the contribution of women in the building and development of this country. I compliment him on bringing forward this subject. He fully believes we are not recognizing the work done by mothers in this country in the fashion it should be recognized. He has strong feelings about this legislation and about the hope that this legislation should come before the House and he brings it before us at every opportunity. Hon. members must recognize these strong feelings about a piece of legislation. Many times I have had strong feelings about various subjects and from time to time have received welcome support from other members in these areas.

The hon. member referred to certain problems that could result from this proposed legislation, such as the fact that it could cost an arm and a leg. However, he stated there are many programs put forward by government that cost a lot of money but seemingly are not in the best interests of the people of this nation and, if they were cancelled, the money could be made available for such a proposal. I believe that is true.

Many members of Parliament become very discouraged over the fact that this is so because they have programs they believe are good for their constituencies and for the nation, but there is never enough money for them because it is being spent in ways which they would rather defer. I realize that money could be found for these programs if we were to cancel some of those we do not think are of benefit. However, as we participate in this chamber we realize the government has priorities, that there is only so much money and it has to be put to the best use that can be found for it.

I find difficulty in supporting the motion at the present time and I wish to outline a few of the reasons why. It is becoming more and more difficult for families to make ends meet. In my riding of Wetaskiwin, for example, the average home costs in the neighbourhood of $75,000 to $90,000. Many of those in my riding are commuters. They must provide food and clothing for their families as well as education for their children. It is very difficult for them to make ends meet. I realize one way to help them would be by accepting the very motion the hon. member is presenting.

I again emphasize that I believe the hon. member is bringing this motion forward because the government is not recognizing mothers in the way we feel they should be recognized. We are always reviewing the subject of what value to put on labour. It is not only the mothers of this country who do not believe they are getting adequate recognition for their labour, but how do we as politicians or as a government decide what value to put on labour? This can be done in many ways and it is a question that should be debated in this House. I realize our time is short but it is a very important subject that should be dealt with by the members of this House.

Is the proper manner of recognizing the work of mothers to give them a salary paid, I suspect, by the taxpayers? That proposal is not outlined in the hon. member's motion, but as I listened to his speech I think he meant that it should be paid by the taxpayers.

I propose that our money be moved to some areas that are more essential, and I wish to outline those areas. During today's question period in the House, the hon. member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Miss Bégin) questioned the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie). She stated that the bill discussed yesterday and given second reading did not go far enough and that the government should find $320 million, I believe was the figure, to increase benefits for the needy between ages 60 and 65, regardless whether they are single or married. Of course, we would all like to do that. She mentioned, as did the hon. member for Bellechasse, that a program could be done away with in order to find the money.

There are many statistics to show that elderly women are the poorest people in this country. Those statistics were again referred to yesterday in this House, and I want to emphasize them again.

There are many in this House and, I am sure, across this nation who would object to the term "housewife". That leaves out a group of people who are very important and should be looked at. I refer to the single parent and the fact that many times a man is in that role. Many have a definite need to help support their family resulting from, say, a family tragedy. In our material society families are breaking up for various reasons. Perhaps the most tragic is the loss of a partner.

● (1730)

Many single people are now demanding that they be allowed, through adoption, to have families as well. They are trying to remain in the labour force while supporting families. I do not think that we as members of this House of Commons should limit this motion just to the housewife. We should broaden the motion somewhat, if we contemplate passing it.

Many studies have been done on this very subject, and one to which I would like to make reference is the report of the Canadian Council on Social Development entitled "Women's Pension". I want to quote two of the early parts of this study to emphasize how this council felt. I believe this study was undertaken last year. One quotation is on page 126, and it deals with the concept and valuation of work. It states:

> —the pay for housework proposal does nothing to solve the sexual division of labour inside and outside the home. Indeed, it may simply serve to make it more rigid and legitimize it.

After reading the rest of the report, I think what the council was saying was that if we have such a proposal as the one before us today, we would put women in a position where they would feel that they could not enter the work force, and more and more women want to do that. They do not want any restrictions on them. We all hear very strong representations in this field, and many hon. members brought forward this very argument yesterday.

The report goes on:

—the energies of those with an honest interest in establishing sex equality may simply be diverted by this argument and should be directed to more meaningful reform.

I think this brings us to a discussion of reform which should be brought forward to allow families to redistribute incomes between husbands and wives. We in this House all remember the Murdoch case in my own province of Alberta. In a divorce settlement a woman who had worked on the family ranch, raised the family and participated in the running of the ranch, was unable to realize anything for her labour. There is a definite need for Parliament to deal with that kind of thing. The province of Manitoba and many of the other provinces have contemplated this matter but have not been able to come to grips with it. It is something with which we as parliamentarians should be dealing, and it is of major significance.

I realize that the matter of the opportunity for women to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan while being married was brought forward in an amendment last year. This is something with which we must deal. We must deal with changes in the family allowance, the child tax credit plan, and day care facilities. I spoke with an hon. member about this motion today, and he suggested that perhaps the government should amend the tax law—I know the hon. member raised this matter in his speech—to allow the sole earner in the family to divide his income. If he makes $20,000 and his wife contributes by raising the family, perhaps $10,000 could be her share of the income and $10,000 his share. By doing that they would pay less tax. The wife would be able to contribute to pension plans so that as she grows older she has some security.

As has been mentioned over and over again in debates—and I am not sure why this is—women tend to outlive men. At the far end of the scale many women are in the poorest categories because they have not been able to set aside any income for private pensions for their golden years. We as members of Parliament should debate this and examine whether there is room for legislation to deal with it.

This brings me to the matter of the government's looking seriously at making it possible for housewives and, more important, for women generally to plan for their old age. Wives who stay at home are often completely financially dependent on their husbands. However, only in the province of Manitoba are husbands not obligated to give any money at all to their wives upon separation. Many men are finding it increasingly difficult to manage on one salary. Because of this, in families where husbands earn low wages it is important that their wives work to keep their families above the poverty level. I point out that 51 per cent more two-spouse families would be poor if wives did not work outside their homes. In other words, wives are no longer working for pin money. They are contributing actively to the maintenance of their families. Because of that I think the government is obligated to help those women find roles in the labour force, particularly women from single parent families, as I mentioned before.

The increasing participation of women in the labour force is no longer regarded as a temporary phenomenon. Increasingly women who participate in the labour force are mothers of pre-school children, and the overwhelming evidence is that mothers enter the work force either as sole providers for their families or because one salary is insufficient to meet the rising cost of living.

This brings me back to the need for the government to look at such things as day care to facilitate the participation of women in the work force. The government should examine information and referral services to facilitate the access of women to community services. Perhaps there should be a crisis intervention service so that women who are victims of certain crises can be sheltered temporarily, and so that their children can be cared for. Perhaps there should be home support services for women whose family responsibilities include the care of the disabled, such as a disabled husband, a disabled child or elderly family members.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has stated over and over again that this government is devoted and will be devoting considerable attention to the development of an employment strategy for women. That brings me to the point of why I have difficulty supporting this motion. I fully believe that there are many pursuits into which the government can put its financial resources in order to work toward bettering opportunities for women in this country. I would like to see us develop such a process in the programs I mentioned, rather than put aside a great deal of money for financial contributions by way of salary.

With that, I will let other hon. members contribute to this debate, and I will be very interested in the points they bring forward.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I did not want to interrupt the member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) during his intervention. I listened carefully to what he said and he referred at one time to things I did not say. When he said I had not mentioned the role of the woman in single parent families, I would have to say that it is obvious that when I referred to women who work at home it was an all-encompassing motion. I could not let these remarks go into the record uncorrected because there was here a case of misinterpretation, and the persons concerned could feel attacked or even neglected by me. That is the correction I wanted to make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): I think the hon. member has raised an item which is more or less an item of debate. I think he has made his point and I hope he is satisfied with the results.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) on his praiseworthy intention, namely, that the government grant allowances to women who intentionally stay home to attend to family chores instead of entering the labour market, the purpose of the measure being to ensure a supplementary income to that earned by the husband and thereby matching the family needs.

Unfortunately, Statistics Canada shows that in the present context a certain category of citizens in Canada is becoming poorer and poorer while the rich are getting ever richer. I am afraid that we would harvest precious little from a new housewives allowance program and I think that housewives deserve much better than that. In fact, there are more than 700,000 unemployed in Canada, most of whom are women. There are also 2 million old age citizens of whom 54 per cent, that is 1,166,000, have no income other than their old age security pension and their guaranteed income supplement, which amounts to $325.95 a month or $602.44 for a couple. There are also seven million Canadians whose income is lower than $10,000 a year, while we notice in all provinces that more and more people depend on welfare assistance, 59,000 recipients of social assistance in Newfoundland, 10,000 in Prince Edward island, 73,000 in New Brunswick, 61,000 in Nova Scotia, 511,000 in Quebec, 395,000 in Ontario, 59,000 in Manitoba, 49,000 in Saskatchewan, 100,000 in Alberta, a rich province, 179,000 in British Columbia, 6,000 in the Northwest Territories for a total number of 1,508,400 individuals who receive social assistance in Canada and among them we note a high percentage of women and single parent families.

Mr. Speaker, I think that to assist women remaining at home, it would be advisable that the government set up at once a guaranteed income program and to ensure that such program would really assist the citizens with average incomes it will be necessary to consider first all administrative costs of our various social programs at the federal as well as at the provincial level, for example, the veterans' pension, the old age security pension, the income supplement, the federal and provincial family allowances, the child tax credit and social welfare. There is also a policy for public housing such as low-rent dwellings to assist low income-families. There is also in Quebec and other provinces the school tax. We note that most of those programs are useless.

It would be much better to review immediately all those programs to set up a guaranteed minimum income program which would enable us to cut heavy expenditures at the administration and management levels. The amounts recovered could provide some remedies to citizens. In addition, it would be urgent—to assist immediately that group of citizens—that the Progressive Conservative government as well as the hon. member for Bellechasse help the Liberal members prevent the government from increasing oil prices, because we know how important fuel and gasoline prices are for citizens with average incomes.

The government should also be made to establish rental aid programs. Third, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation programs designed to make homeownership easier for families should be maintained and improved; fourth, the government should set up a guaranteed income program encompassing the needs of housewives who remain at home, and of all low income Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Holmes) that my remarks will be brief enough to leave him some time to make his contribution.

I find it somewhat interesting that while we in this chamber are debating a motion which has to do with the rights of women, across the street from us a building, that for many decades has been a male bastion, is on fire. I heard the rumour and I went out to see if it is true that the Rideau Club across the street is on fire. It is only recently that women have been admitted to that place. I wonder if it means that some of the men are so upset about women getting into that club that they decided they had better do away with it. However, the Ottawa Fire Department is out there in force, so the building may possibly be saved.

I want to indicate my support for the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), and I do not intend to qualify that support with a lot of ifs and ands and buts such as we have heard during this debate. There still ring in my ears the speeches we heard last week in celebration of the fact that 50 years ago women were declared by the Privy Council to be persons. Surely if they are persons, one of the things they should have is equality with men. I believe we have a long way to go before we establish equality for women.

References have been made to statistics about the level of incomes, both in working years and in retirement years, which would show what a disadvantage women suffer. Those statistics are there staring us in the face. Indeed, if we are going to do anything about equality in retirement, we have to start by having equality all along the way.

The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) quoted a report which raised the question of whether paying women allowances to do work in the home might regularize that kind of employment, and might do something to the social structure. My view is simply that women should have the choice. They should be free to go out to work in the labour market outside the home or to choose to stay in the home, raise their children, and serve the family that way. Everyone says that women are free to do that, but in a world in which economic problems are so great, they are not free if the economic situation is such that they have to go out to work in order to supplement the family income. I should like to see, in addition to equal pay for equal work for women working outside the home, an arrangement whereby they get paid for their services if they stay in the home, raise their children and care for their family.

This is not some futuristic hope that will never come to pass. We complain about the slowness of our progress in establishing women as persons, in establishing their equality, but it is on the march, and I submit that the day will come when they will have the kind of equality that is expressed in the idea that a woman should be free to go out to work or to work in the home but should not suffer economically if she chooses to work in the home. I should like to see something like this developed.

It can also be said that this is not completely foreign to our way of doing things. The family allowance which we now pay is, in effect, a payment to mothers to help them raise their children. We can turn that into an allowance to mothers or to homemakers. We can put it on a different basis and make it a much larger amount. All this can be worked out, but the main point I want to make is that in this House where there are so few women, it behooves the rest of us to face up to the fact that women do not yet have equality—they lack it in many ways. This is one of the key ways in which they lack that equality. They are not free to choose whether to work in the home or out of the home. We would increase that freedom, that equality, if there were allowances for those who stay at home.

As I said, in addition to establishing equality in the working years of our people, men and women, we would also improve the chances of equality in pensions on retirement if women had this kind of income during their working years and, since pensions are still somewhat related to earnings in the working years, their pensions would also be better.

I am happy to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse on bringing this matter once again before us. I hope the overwhelming number of men in this chamber will some day face up to the fact that if we think of women as persons, if we think they are wonderful, we should support equality for them down the line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to participate for a few minutes in this important debate. Initially, I wish to compliment the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) on introducing the motion before us, one of great importance and one which he has placed before this chamber in the past. I must say I was a little surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would give his unqualified support to the particular motion before us. I say that in the context that he made a very important and pleading argument for equality for women across Canada. In my view there are important ingredients missing from the motion before us. It does not encompass some of the qualities I believe are important if we are really to see equality of women across Canada.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I know I am limited as to time. With respect to my background, I want to view the matter from the standpoint of a particular medical problem. I would like to speak specifically about the emotional health of women. I say this because it is very relevant in terms of the context of the motion and relevant, in my view and in my experience in the community, in terms of the situation and the reality which exist in Canada today.

If I may I will take the liberty of referring to some scientific journals, something which may not come as much of a surprise to Mr. Speaker. I would refer, first, to a recent study which was carried out at the University of Michigan. This involved a group of some 1,143 women and their transition from school to the working world. It has some very interesting results to report. An article appeared in the January 1, 1979, issue of Behaviour Today and I think it important to quote from that particular study as follows:

> Working outside, the home increases a woman's self-confidence and feelings of worth. The same is true for women who think of themselves as having or planning a career, whether or not they are currently employed . . . When we included age, educational attainment, marital status, number of children, length of employment, and salary, the salary variable proved to be the most important predictor of self-esteem. Marital status was a close second.

Given the results of that study, how large would the allowance proposed in this motion have to be to compensate for the loss of self-esteem that would be felt by women who gave up their jobs to become housewives?

Let me refer to a particularly important piece of work which was done by Dr. Janice Wetzel of the University of Texas. She found that women in general are three times more likely than men to suffer from acute depression, and that women now constitute three quarters of those living in American nursing homes. I am sure any hon. members in the House who have had experience in this area are acutely aware and conscious of this particular fact. It is not unreasonable to assume that this difference in the incidence of acute depression is closely related to differences in life patterns as between men and women. An adult life spent as a housewife may well lead to a greater likelihood of experiencing severe depression.

It seems unlikely that the proposed allowance would overcome this particular aspect of the problem. Another study which I felt was most important, and which I believe to be relevant to this debate, showed benefit to women's mental health of a move away from the traditional role as housewives. This was conducted by Dr. Srole and Dr. Anita Fischer in New York. It is rather interesting because this study showed that when men and women in the age groups of 40 to 49 and 50 to 59 were interviewed in 1954, women were found to be mentally impaired to a significantly greater extent than were men in the same age groups. But what is important is that when the research was repeated 20 years later among the same age groups, it was found that the mental health problems of women who had grown up in the latter, less restrictive years, were lower than previously and proved to be quite close to the level experienced by the men interviewed.

It is important to review the conclusions of these researchers. The change was attributed by them to the "radically different social climate", which the latter group of women had experienced. It had enabled them to escape the fate of their "briefly, premaritally, liberated mothers who had become quickly reined-in and subdued by the traditional halters of male dominance". In most cases the researchers reported most women growing up after the twenties "never again reverted to unquestioning acceptance of the submergence of their identity and autonomy with that of their husband and their own domestic role." If the connection is sustained, Dr. Srole and Dr. Fischer concluded that between the higher rates of well-being in later life and the sense of opportunity prevailing among women in childhood and adolescence, this would add weight to the case for extending women's rights to live their lives on a basis equal to that enjoyed by males. This is the very point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was trying to make.

It seems to me we must let the families choose their divisions of responsibilities. Children need both mothers and fathers. We do not automatically assume that one is the breadwinner. In my opinion that encourages the exploitation of women who are in the labour force, suggesting that they should not be there in the first place and therefore they are not entitled to equal pay and to equal opportunities. I am sure it is obvious to all in the House that only women can bear children and bring them into the world. But children benefit from parental guidance and attention by both parents when they are fortunate enough to have both parents.

Even if one looks at situations where divorce has occurred, one will find there is increasing evidence that divorced parents, in choosing who shall have custody of the children, both feel they have an important role to play in the life of their children, despite the divorce proceedings. Why should the government tell a mother it is only her job to devote herself to the care of her family? Are we trying to discourage young men and young women from training to fulfil their vital roles in society, telling them it is a waste of their time because the government will only recognize the housewife role as the legitimate one? I do not think that is the reality of today.

I would like to say, with great respect to the hon. member for Bellechasse, that recognition of the vital role women play in the family as mothers, grandmothers, wives, sisters or daughters cannot be given by the token gesture proposed by the hon. member. Young people of both sexes, and fathers, need more encouragement in the training and care of the young, of the infirm and aged, and all household tasks so that responsibilities for the care and well-being of family members and household tasks can be shared and enjoyed with pride of contribution, rather than by loading all of these duties on a woman no matter what else she may do, whatever else she might like to do or no matter what her interests may be.

In my view the majority of women are not asking for wages for housework, but they are asking for equal opportunities and for recognition and support service to families.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-10, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1979-80, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, before the five o'clock adjournment I pointed out that the present ministers are now following the policies previously carried out by the former Liberal government, policies which they opposed vigorously when they were in opposition. The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) attacked the former government for permitting higher interest rates. They attacked the former government for not implementing a program of tax cuts to the extent of $2 billion, as proposed by the present Prime Minister, for low and middle income earners. These are policies that are now being forgotten.

If I remember correctly, the present Minister of Finance indicated that in his opinion the people of Canda should not take promises made by political parties when they are in opposition too seriously. In other words, he was indicating that a very large number of the promises made by his party when it was in opposition would not be implemented by his government.

The Conservatives were opposed to deficit financing. It seemed to many of us, not just those of us in the NDP, that Conservative members of Parliament had not read a thing about economics since Adam Smith wrote his very good book on economics more than 100 years ago. Now they come here and ask for permission to borrow $7 billion.

We are not opposed to deficit financing. Indeed, we have spoken frequently about the need in certain circumstances to follow a policy of deficit financing, indeed a policy which has been followed for many years by many of the provincial Conservative governments. I need just point to the Ontario government which has been a Conservative government for more than 30 years and which, this year and last, has projected budget deficits of more than $1 billion.

We are not opposed to deficit financing if that deficit financing is part of a well thought out economic policy designed to meet the needs of Canadian citizens, and if that policy is part of a plan to develop an industrial strategy, so badly needed particularly in our manufacturing industry. We are not opposed if it is designed to meet the energy needs of this country without inexorable, sharp, and regular increases in the price of energy, such as the government is proposing and which we believe will have a very immediate adverse effect on the rate of inflation.

The rate of inflation is now running at just below 10 per cent. It has been accepted by most economists that the $4 per barrel increase in the price of oil, which it is pretty certain the government will announce in the very near future, will add at least 2 per cent to the cost of living. If we have an excise tax added to that, we can think in terms of at least a 3 per cent increase in the cost of living. That will give us an increase in the cost of living on an annual basis of somewhere between 11 per cent and 13 per cent by the middle of 1980. That is a sad prospect for the Canadian people who look to the new government to change the basic policies that were being carried out by the former Liberal government.

In asking Parliament to permit this $7 billion borrowing, the government is doing so without providing any answer to the basic problems facing the country. After all, those hon. members have been the government since May of this year. During the election campaign, and before that time, they told the Canadian people they had worked out policies which would better meet the needs of Canadian people. Yet here we are, six months later, with no definite policies. All we get are promises that studies are being done and policies will be announced in the near future.

One of the most serious problems we face is that the country has no industrial strategy. There is also the problem that the work force in the manufacturing industry, which is so basic to any modern economy, is gradually being reduced. The Canadian manufacturing industry cannot, has not been able and is not now able to meet the competition of foreign producers. Not only are we not able to compete for international markets, we are increasingly unable to meet the needs of Canadian people in competition with countries outside Canada. So the number of people working in the manufacturing industry has declined from 26 per cent of the labour force of some years ago to about 20 per cent of the labour force at present.

We believe that one of the most fundamental reasons for that decline, a decline for which there is no indication that it will be arrested, is the failure of Canadian governments in the past, both Liberal and Conservative, to establish a research and development program in the government, our universities and our industries, which would meet the needs of our Canadian people.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

In June, 1978, the then minister of state for science and technology made what he considered to be an important announcement. He said that by the year 1983 the governments proposed research and development expenditures in Canada would increase from the level at this time of 1 per cent of the gross national product to 1.5 per cent. In proposing that, the minister knew that most of the industrialized countries of the world were already spending 2 per cent or more of their gross national product on research and development.

That announcement was criticized by the official opposition at the time and, indeed, by the present Prime Minister, as well as by our party because we said, and quite correctly, that that objective would not meet the needs of the Canadian people. Within one or two months of that announcement, the then government, seized by the supposed necessity for restraint, whatever that meant, made substantial cuts in the already planned research programs in government, and because of the restraint imposed on its expenditures to universities through the provinces, it meant a further erosion of university research.

There is no indication that the plans of the former government and the plans of the present government will provide for the very sharp increase in research and development required from the private sector, and especially the industrial sector, to reach even the modest goal proposed by the former government, not to mention the higher goals endorsed by the present government when it was in opposition, and by our party.

Let me summarize the situation with regard to scientific research and development in this country at the present time. According to the OECD data, Canada ranks in the middle of ten industrialized countries in education variables conducive to scientific research, but it ranks near the bottom in terms of research and development employment expenditure and research production. While other countries were expanding their employment of R and D personnel at rates of up to 8 per cent per year, Canada's R and D employment per 100 population has fallen since 1968. In terms of 1970 dollars, total R and D expenditures in Canada have declined from $980 million in that year to $910 million in 1977. I am sure that when we get the figures for 1978 we will see a further decline.

The ratio of R and D spending to gross domestic product has declined steadily since the peak of 1.8 per cent in 1967. It is now probably less than 1 per cent. The attrition of scientific research goes back to at least 1971, well before the time of fiscal restraint in the federal sector. From 1971 to 1979 the increase in the Medical Research Council and the National Research Council budget in current dollars was less than twofold, whereas the total of federal expenditures in the same period increased by nearly fivefold. In terms of 1969 constant dollars, the average operating grant for medical research funding scientists has declined from $24,900 in 1971 to $18,700 in 1977.

It is no wonder that there is a steady and constant stream of the best trained medical researchers in Canada to other countries, particularly the United States. There is not a member here who has a university in or around his constituency, regardless of which party he belongs to, who cannot with a phone call prove to himself or to his constituents that what I have just said is true.

According to an ad hoc committee convened by the then minister of state for science and technology, the federal government's stated goal of increasing total R and D expenditures in Canada from .92 per cent to 1.5 per cent of the gross domestic product by 1983 would require annual increases of 27 per cent in industrial research development, 10 per cent in government research development, and 30 per cent in university research. This implies a growth in research and development spending of from $1.9 billion in 1977 to between $4 billion and $5 billion in 1983. None of these goals are anywhere close to being met.

Instead of university research increasing, it is decreasing. Research in government laboratories at best has been frozen in the last year or two, and industrial research and development are growing at not even a third of the figure which the ad hoc committee felt was necessary. Statistics Canada has calculated that federal cutbacks in science and technology totalling over $129 million in the next 18 months will mean that industrial research and development will only increase by 8.4 per cent instead of the 27 per cent which I indicated.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but the fact is the situation is not improving as the people of Canada had hoped. It is not improving as this government proposed it should when it was in opposition. In fact the situation is getting worse.

Let me spend a couple of minutes on the situation with regard to our universities. We all know that persuading industry to increase its expenditures on research and development is a very difficult thing, particularly when we realize how much of industry, especially our largest industries, is controlled by multinational corporations which traditionally want to do their research and development near head office, which usually means the United States.

The government plays a major role in deciding how much research and development will be done at our universities. It is obvious to anybody who has looked at the question, as it is obvious to most of the research organizations and researchers at universities, that in recent years the governments have had a very poor record of support for basic research at our universities. There seems to have been almost a deliberate attempt on the part of the former government to scuttle university research completely.

As was documented in a recent study by the Royal Society, there has been a dramatic deterioration of funding for basic research at Canadian universities. In 1974 funding in real dollars by the National Research Council dropped to 60 per cent of the 1969 level and by the Medical Research Council to 80 per cent of the 1969 level. The record since 1974 is not any better.

In trying to assess what our universities should do regarding scientific research, the Science Council of Canada in its eighteenth report stated that it is generally accepted that research is an indispensible element of the university for development of both teachers and students, and that Canadian education requires research in Canadian educational institutions. It stated that research at the universities need not and should not be limited to basic research alone and that, nevertheless, the search for new and deep understanding of the world which is inherent to basic research makes it particularly important to higher education.

In the years from roughly 1950 to the late 1960s, enrolment in Canadian universities was increasing steadily and regularly. In those years the funding arrangements made for financing the universities permitted an increase in funds given to faculties to conduct the scientific research they felt they should be doing. That was of tremendous value to this country. Since 1972, however, the number of students entering our universities has declined, and this is likely to continue for some years. The result is that the universities have been squeezed more and more with regard to funding. One of the first things to go has been support for scientific research and development. This has had a very adverse effect on our universities and the research they can do. The result has been less and less research.

As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, the same claim about medical research can be documented in every university in this country. The situation will not change for at least ten years, or probably longer. We need to look again at funding for scientific research and development in Canadian universities. They need more money if they are to continue doing the job they are doing and to help us meet the needs of the 1980s and 1990s. We have waited and, I think, patiently, and the university communities have waited patiently, for six months. There is no sign, however, that this government has developed a new policy. I have heard of no consultations between government and the universities about how to meet that situation. The prospects for our universities are indeed bleak.

Some hon. members may believe that the record I have recounted is not factual. Members on the government side may believe I am following the usual opposition party practice of damning everything a government, of whichever party, brings forward. I think I can verify that what I have said is true by summarizing some of the recommendations made by an ad hoc committee appointed by the former minister of state for science and technology. That ad hoc committee came to the conclusion that the 1.5 per cent target for research and development would require a tripling of research and development expenditures over the next five years. I should like the present minister to tell the House at an early date how close we are to that goal.

The committee suggested that federal tax incentives were inadequate to meet the announced target. The report stated as follows:

> We are convinced . . . in view of the enormous size of the challenge, that current incentives will not affect the major intensification of effort, and the major change of attitudes that are needed.

The committee also stated that present policies placed too much emphasis on promoting incremental research and development expenditures, and may penalize firms whose research and development effort fluctuates widely from year to year.

When this government was in opposition it said again and again, as it does now, that it was interested in improving the position of small business. yet that ad hoc committee reported to the minister of the day—and I am sure nothing has changed since—that since the incentives had no immediate value for funds without taxable income, the cash flow problems of small business were not recognized by the present policy of trying to encourage industry to do more in the way of research and development. The committee held that if the 1.5 per cent target for scientific research and development was to be achieved by 1983, real growth in industrially funded research and development of some 24 per cent per year must be attained over the next five years. What we are getting this year is about one third of that 24 per cent goal they recommended.

The committee also recommended that the federal government and Crown corporations should make better use of procurement policy to further technological advances in Canadian industry. It suggested that Canada will have to reduce the foreign investment induced technological dependence of Canadian industry by changing the way it imports technology.

These are just some of the recommendations made by a committee of experts appointed by the former minister, and nothing has changed since. I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, that Canada lags far behind other industrialized countries in the percentage of its gross national product devoted to research and development. While most other countries have been increasing funds for research and development as a percentage of their gross national product and nearly all of them are already substantially ahead of Canada, ours has been steadily declining. Since 1965 it has dropped from about 1.1 per cent to about nine-tenths of one per cent of the gross national product in 1978.

One of the reasons we believe there is less industrial research in Canada and that the amount of research done by the private sector in Canada is considerably less than in other industrialized countries, is because of the very high percentage of our industries, particularly large industries, which are completely controlled by the multinationals. If we examine our major national corporations, particularly the Canadian branches of the large multinational corporations which almost without exception prefer to do their research and development at home rather than in Canada, we can see how that works.

About a year ago the Toronto Star conducted a survey and published the results on October 12, 1978. This documents what I have said. Some of the largest corporations in this country were surveyed. The results showed that the Ford Motor Company, which in 1975 had sales of $4,400 million and employed 34,000 people in this country, spent well over $1 billion on research and development. But when a representative was interviewed by the Toronto Star this was said about its Canadian research and development program:

Most of our research and development is done in the U.S., Britain and Germany. We do some here but there are no figures available.

In another survey I saw it was reported that Ford Motor Company did not have a single person with a Ph.D. degree working in its research programs in Canada. Is it any wonder that researchers in Canada, when they finish university training, hightail it to the United States?

Let us take a look at General Motors. This company did over $4 billion worth of business in Canada in 1975. It spent about $1,400 million on research and development. When queried about its Canadian program, this is what was said:

We don't have any Canadian figure, partly because we are still trying to find out how Ottawa defines research and development.

Let us take a look at Canadian General Electric which had sales in Canada in 1975 of $822 million. In 1977 this company spent $463 million on research and development around the world and said this:

We spent $9 million on R & D in Canada compared with $463 million in the U.S.

Let us now look at Kodak Canada which did $182 million of business in Canada in 1975. In 1971 this company spent $351 million on research and development. What did this company say about what it was doing in Canada? It said this:

All pure and applied research is done at our Rochester N.Y. facility. We do some product development in Canada but no figures are available.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, but this is the situation which this government has to face.

Let me deal with one more illustration which the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) dealt with briefly earlier this afternoon. Surveys prepared for the government have indicated that the research intensive industries outperform low research and no research industries in providing a higher growth of employment, in increased output, in a higher growth of productivity for workers, and in a lower growth of prices. Yet what we now see, according to the most recent report tabled by FIRA, is that while we have been talking about the need to strengthen our manufacturing industry, and particularly our higher technology industry, the multinational corporations have been busy buying out our high technology industries. We are permitting them to be sold off to foreign investors.

Despite the supposed desire of the Canadian government expressed by the establishment of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, we find in its fifth annual report published last week that we have lost control of more than $1.6 billion of assets to foreign interests in the last year or two. The five industries in which foreigners have been most active, according to the FIRA report, are metal fabricating, machinery, transport equipment, electrical and chemical products, and the food and drink industry. These are precisely the industries which we ought to be encouraging to become increasingly Canadian and efficient if we are to meet the objective which I think all political parties should have, and that is to try to aim for full employment. And yet we are permitting their being sold out.

We are permitting sales in precisely the very areas that have been proven by government surveys to be the most efficient, the most likely to provide employment and the most resistant to inflation.

What did the Minister for Science and Technology (Mr. Grafftey) say, commenting on the recent FIRA report, from which I have quoted, as reported in the Toronto Star for October 18, 1979? He said this:

> I'd be less than frank if I didn't say I was worried about these takeovers . . . But the only solution is to try to ensure that more research and development is done in Canada in the long term and then there will be fewer takeovers.

That is the kind of statement that governments have been making for as long as I have been a member of Parliament, and that goes back more years than I like to think of.

The tax incentive programs of the former government and the tax incentive programs promised by the present government when it was in opposition will fail, just as the tax incentive programs of the former government failed in meeting the needs of the Canadian people. The multinational corporations will not devote increasing effort to research and development voluntarily. They will not devote increasing effort simply because the government asks them to do so or because we give them a few more carrots in the way of tax incentives. They will not do that unless the government has the courage to tell them that if they intend to operate in Canada, they must act as good corporate citizens here. That is something which they have not been prepared to do.

If we want the large corporations of this country, and particularly the multinationals, to play the role which they should be playing, then we need the kind of tax measures which no government in Canada has been prepared to implement up to now. We need a system of tax surcharges whereby those large corporations which refuse to do research in Canada would be taxed at a certain figure and the money so collected would be returned to them only if they were prepared to finance research and development here.

I suggest to the minister that he look at the tax program in Sweden which does precisely that, in that part of the corporation tax which companies pay in Sweden is set aside in a special fund which can be drawn out by those corporations only when they are prepared to expand their facilities and employment in Sweden. That is the kind of program that we need to apply to research and development in Canada.

In closing, I say to the minister that we have no objection to deficit financing if there is any indication—which we have not seen—that the government has an objective of meeting the needs of this country, or if the government has an objective of seeing that there is full employment or that our manufacturing industries, which have been employing a smaller and smaller percentage of the work force, are re-equipped, re-invigorated, and can begin to play the role which they ought to be doing. Until the government devises programs and policies which will ensure that Canada takes its place with other industrialized countries in expanding manpower and finances, and makes an effort to meet our needs in scientific research and development—which has not been done for the last 15 or 20 years—until that is done we see no real purpose in permitting or encouraging the government to continue with deficit financing.

Despite the words of encouragement expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) earlier this afternoon, we believe the deficit will be just as large next year as this year, and just as large under a Conservative government as it was under a Liberal government because this government, just as the Liberal government before it, does not have the desire or program to meet the needs of Canadians.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the brief remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) when he introduced Bill C-10. If you do not have much else to do, a bit of humour can help while away the time.

I find it difficult to understand why this should be the first bill the Minister of Finance brings before this House. The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) made it quite clear that the need for this borrowing authority at this time is dubious, and perhaps it is not needed at all since there is some borrowing authority left over from the previous Parliament.

It was almost seven and a half months that Parliament was not sitting, and it has been almost five months since this government took office. At times during the Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth Parliaments our ministers made small local announcements, possibly in Regina, Skeena, Prince Rupert or somewhere else. Usually it was an announcement that only had local significance. The Tories would stand up; including their leader, their former leader, and the one previous to that, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, saying how we had mistreated and insulted Parliament by making statements away from the House of Commons. That certainly went on for the six and a half years I have been here. I am sure it went on before that.

The four and a half months that Parliament was not sitting was the longest such period when any government was in power. What happened during that time? We had no budget for the eighties. We still do not have that. There was a whole series of announcements. Three substantial increases in interest rates were announced. It was announced there would be no tax cuts, even though the Tories promised during the election campaign they would implement a $2 billion tax cut when they came into power.

There was an announcement that the government's main fiscal measure would be the mortgage deduction scheme, which would cost half a billion dollars in the first year and probably $2.5 billion when fully implemented. There were several other announcements which tended to weaken the whole federal fabric. A board was set up to advise the government on PetroCan and it was announced the government would break up that corporation.

It was announced that several Crown corporations would be sold, and there were several announcements regarding transfers to the provinces, including the transfer of offshore resources. Even though Parliament was not sitting, they announced they would do away with the constitution in terms of offshore resources. They also announced they had given up lotteries.

There have been all kinds of leaks from this government which likes to leak things such as oil prices and large cuts they intend to make in social services. Last night I stated that I believe these leaks are deliberate. If the public is informed that gasoline prices will rise to $1.45 and then the increase is only to $1.20, the government believes that the Canadian people are a lot better off. Of course, the public is not fooled.

I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) about cuts that would be made. He said there is no truth in the story that there is going to be $1.5 billion in cuts. I knew that without asking the question. I should have asked what about $1.4 billion, $1.3 billion or $1.2 billion. I suspect there will be some severe cuts, but they will not total $1.5 billion and the government will look like a kind benefactor of the Canadian people.

There is discussion in Parliament about oil price hikes. There are all kinds of rumours. These hikes can be massive transfers to the private sector or to one or two provinces, again weakening the fabric of this country.

There is a major debate going on in this country because of the actions of this government. As Richard Simeon, the director of the intergovernmental affairs study group at Queens University, Kingston, indicated, there are two factors here. One is a sort of provincial building group, that party across the aisle; and the other is the federal building group, the party here. That major debate began before this Parliament came into being. However, the first bill this Minister of Finance brings forward does not deal with any of these major matters. It is a borrowing authority.

That is the party which prided itself on its adherence to, belief in and love for Parliament, yet this is what ministers hand us, a borrowing bill which is really not needed for the next few months. We do not get a budget which will tell us where we are going. Perhaps the government has no idea where it is going. What they do is try something and, if it does not go well, they try something else. Perhaps they want to listen to the NDP, and the Liberals will tell them where to go. Maybe that will help.

I wish to look more seriously at the world economic scene. I wonder where we should be going and what concerns we should have before making some of these very large moves. I mentioned three factors many times in the Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth Parliaments. First, most industrialized countries are facing massive problems that they never faced before, massive in both size and quality. These are problems that never arose before.

There is, for example, a global inflation rate of 5 per cent plus. We do not talk about zero, but about 5 per cent plus, sustained over four or five years and possibly the next ten years. We have high unemployment at the same time, something that has not occurred before. There is a whole series of social problems related to this.

Second, solutions that were traditional, such as the Keynesian solution, the use of fiscal and monetary policies, no longer apply. There is not sufficient strength to solve these problems, possibly because they are too large.

I think about the $2 billion tax cut which the Tories promised during the election campaign. This $2 billion tax cut was to stimulate the economy. In the fifties and early sixties—and I think the New Democratic Party should be criticized for this also—we used to think that $2 billion or $3 billion might really have some effect on the economy. It probably would have, when the gross national product was $45 billion or $50 billion, but when we have a gross national product of $250 billion, we are talking about an increase of something in the order of 1 per cent, not a very stimulative increase.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) was leader of the opposition during the election campaign, when he talked about what John Kennedy had done and when he said that he would do the same thing, he was talking about a totally different period, and what really worries me is that I do not think this government senses the difference between 1960 and 1979 and 1980. The earlier techniques do not work today because they are either too small or they are counter-productive. How can we use a stimulative deficit to deal with inflation on the one hand and unemployment on the other? It would not work.

The third factor which I think should cause a very significant change in our thinking is one of the principal causes of many of the problems we are facing. The idea that we are all of a sudden going to run out of energy, or that energy is a scarce commodity, is unique. We functioned until the early seventies on the basis that energy was a very cheap commodity and that all we had to do was use more of it. Of course, that does not hold today, so some very significant shifts have occurred. This government, the government before it, and all the governments of the world have to face up to the fact that there is a new set of factors which they just have not come to realize and with which they have not come to grips.

I dealt with one of the government's solutions to the present situation. Hon. members opposite talk about a stimulative deficit with a $2 billion to $3 billion tax cut. I think the government was wise in forgetting about that one. With an annual deficit of $11 billion or $12 billion, the extra $2 billion will not do much except add to the annual deficit.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Tell that to Herb Gray.

Mr. McRae: I tell that to everyone all the time. Hon. members have heard it three or four times in this House. This is the third or fourth time I have said it.

Hon. members opposite decided that maybe we could do something with a fancy scheme called mortgage interest deductibility. I do not want to use the evening to deal with that, but one of the things which really bothers me about the scheme is that the government has very little room to move. It chooses to put all its eggs in one basket for the next three years, and that really does not deal with the basic problems we are facing.

What was the next thing this government decided to do? Maybe it could stimulate the economy by handing out a little green paper labelled "one share of Petro-Canada" and worth perhaps $100 to each Canadian. The government could give away another $2.5 billion because, of course, it will be giving away the assets of Petro-Canada. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said that the government is going to privatize the assets, and that the government is going to assume all the debts of this company. At this point in time the debts are being discharged by the cash flow from the assets—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no!

Mr. McRae: Oh, yes! But that is not the way it is going to happen. The government is going to give away the assets and assume the debts. That is another little $2.5 billion item. Perhaps that is the way to stimulate the economy without giving a tax break; I do not know.

I would like to deal with another thing the government has brought in, and that is increased interest rates.

An hon. Member: You didn't do that?

Mr. McRae: I will say it again: increased interest rates. There have been three increases in the last three or four months, an all-time high, to something in the order of 13 per cent. I think this was the government which, when it was the official opposition, was condemning us for doing this kind of thing in the past.

There is a very marked difference in the times between when we were allowing interest rates to rise and today. Let me explain that. The difference may be subtle, but it is very important. Perhaps it is too subtle for the government to understand, but when interest rates were rising last year there was a relationship being kept between interest rates and the inflation rate. If the inflation rate was 9.5 per cent and the interest rate was 11.5 per cent, the actual rate minus inflation was about 2 per cent.

When the American inflation rate and our inflation rate were roughly the same and we needed a little difference between our interest rates and their interest rates to bring in capital, we had to keep our interest rates at least the same as, or a little higher than, American rates. However, that is not the situation today, and this is why I think this government does not understand the world in which we are living. Our interest rates today are 4 per cent to 4.5 per cent above our inflation rate.

Miss Jewett: It will soon catch up.

Mr. McRae: The American interest rate is roughly the same as the American inflation rate, so there is a big difference, a spread of about 4 per cent to 4.5 per cent. That is about the interest rate one would find in Switzerland. Now the minister says, "But we have to keep raising our interest rates to keep up with the Americans". However, there is a very important distinction between the two times to which I referred earlier. We do not have to keep raising our interest rates if there is a substantial spread between our interest rate and our inflation rate. There is a substantial spread today, and that is why the government should reconsider what it is doing.

We have a major deficit problem. We have a major problem when we raise interest rates. The Canada Savings Bond rate was brought up to 11 per cent. The interest the government has to pay is rising very rapidly. I think the minister used the figure of 15 per cent to 18 per cent. We will have to pay 18 per cent of the government's take to discharge interest charges on government debt. That will be within the next year, and this is the cause of high interest.

High interest rates are having a very bad effect. In addition, very high profits are having a very bad effect on the service part of our current account. I think it was stated by a member of the New Democratic Party that the service part of the account would be in deficit about $10 billion next year and would leave the whole current account in a deficit of about $8 billion. That is much more serious, I think, than the internal deficit. Some of these things are affected very severely by high interest rates.

What are we doing with high interest rates? The name of the game is to bring more capital in and eventually to send a great deal more out; borrow more, bring it in, and then have to pay interest on it. I feel that the government has to think very seriously about the times in which we are living and not just respond in traditional ways. It should not just ignore the fact that there is a relationship in most nations today between their current inflation rates and their current interest rates. These are extremely important factors, so I think the government must consider its position carefully.

I am very disturbed that the Minister of Finance comes into this House and brings in a borrowing bill. It is not one of the important bills he should be introducing. He should be bringing in a budget, but he brings in a borrowing bill. The major factor is the high interest rate for which he has been responsible. The governor of the Bank of Canada is not responsible for interest rates; the Minister of Finance is. He may get advice from the governor of the Bank of Canada, but at any time he can stop interest rates from rising.

There was a motion under Standing Order 43 that a committee meet with the governor of the Bank of Canada. The motion was accepted by all concerned, but we on this side ask a very simple thing of the minister. We ask that he appear. As the responsible person dealing with interest rates and with the financial structure of this country he should appear first, not the governor of the Bank of Canada. It was my party, when it was on the other side of the House, which always insisted that our minister be the first one to have anything to do with anything referred to a committee, yet this minister today comes into the House and says, "Well, I will go there some day when I am in town". Now this is the Minister of Finance speaking about what is perhaps the most important committee to meet here in the next few weeks. Certainly it is the most important thing he has to do.

● (2100)

So, as a result of this indifference to Parliament, to the body in which this party professes to believe so strongly, I should like to move an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chenier), which reads as follows:

That this bill be not now read a second time but be stood until the Minister of Finance agrees to appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs at the pleasure of that committee and preceding the appearance of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)): Order, please. I have some reservations as to the wording of this motion and I reserve the right to let Mr. Speaker make a ruling on it tomorrow.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering for a moment, when I saw the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) stand up, whether or not I would have an opportunity to speak this evening.

An hon. Member: Why don't you stand up?

Mr. Rose: The hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Whittaker) asked me why I do not stand up. I would like to advise him that he could see me if he would return to me that orchard ladder he once borrowed when I lived in the Okanagan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: I would like to say that this is the first opportunity I have had to speak since I was resurrected and allowed to return to this House.

An hon. Member: He even looks like Lazarus.

Mr. Rose: I suppose it is impossible to give a second maiden speech. However, if one can be maiden more than once, it would probably be a miracle, and if it were a miracle, then I would be all for it.

As I have been away for a number of years, it was interesting to see the changes in Parliament. I would say that the changes I see are most revealing. The people who are offering the solutions to our country's problems are sitting in the opposition and are called Liberals, and the people who are sandbagging what the Liberals are trying to suggest as solutions to our problems in this country are now sitting in the government. It is almost the same old gang—new faces but the same old policies. I am not, of course, the first one to have noticed that.

We hear the government claiming that they have a mandate for restraint, and I will congratulate the new government for winning a minority Parliament. But if winning a minority government is a mandate, then I do not know what it means not to have a mandate, because if you look at the particular voting pattern in this country, you will find that more people in this country did not want that government than voted for it. So what kind of a mandate is that? It is artificial, it is an assumed mandate, and it does not have the backing of even 40 per cent of the Canadian population.

Mr. Knowles: It has only 36 per cent.

Mr. Rose: As a matter of fact, the hon. member, who has been here since 1860, says that the mandate amounts to about 36 per cent.

Mr. Knowles: Parliament did not start until 1867.

Mr. Rose: I am sure you were here then, Stanley.

Anyway, I think a number of other people over this past couple of weeks during the throne speech debate have noticed the irony, almost the cynicism, of what has happened since the Conservatives have gone over there. The party across the way voted against cuts to UIC during the last Parliament. On July 1 they allowed them to come into operation. People notice those things, you know. People notice that there is a facade of new morality which is nothing more than a repetition of the old morality.

An hon. Member: They call it consistency.

Mr. Rose: Yes, I suppose you could. We have the nattily attired member who is the Minister of Finance. He is suggesting that maybe UIC has been too generous, that UIC competes with employment, that certain kinds of benefits discourage the incentive to work, and that unemployment is not as devestating as it used to be because a number of members of families have jobs when perhaps only the male breadwinner was unemployed. It is interesting to hear that coming from a member from the maritimes, or a member from the Atlantic provinces. I would imagine that the minister would prefer being called a member from the Atlantic provinces than a member from the maritimes.

We have heard a similar statement from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens). Since those two men are responsible for the direction of this country and we expect from them a lot of hard discipline and diligent work, I would like to ask everyone whether the fact that they have a good deal of backing in terms of finances or, to put it in plain terms, the fact that they are rich men, lessens their incentive to work? I think they would be the first to deny it, but certainly for the Minister of Finance, as the representative of a part of the country which has the highest unemployment in Canada, to go on television and suggest that UIC benefits should be cut down, or that perhaps we should look at them with a view to cutting them down because they destroy the incentive to work, is hypocrisy. It is unbecoming to the very humorous Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: Humorous?

Mr. Rose: His friends are laughing all the way to the bank.

Another matter is the raise in interest rates. Many hon. members have spoken about that and I do not intend to beat it to death, but I will tell you what it is doing to my riding. If you think it is odd or ironic that I should be talking about constituents who sell real estate, let me say that the mortgage interest rates today are causing a slowdown in that industry as well as limiting the opportunity for young people to acquire homes because they cannot make the monthly payments. To say the deductibility will help them is stretching the imagination, because you must at least have the down payment and you must have the mortgage before you have the opportunity to get the benefits of deductibility or the tax credits.

These are the problems affecting the country, problems which many people look to the new government to solve. But if the government is not committed to governing, how can it solve any problem? The government is committed to standing back and letting some other agency, usually the private sector, look after the problems of the country.

Members of my party sitting here tonight and members of the Social Credit party sitting opposite us are here because of the failure of the old line parties to deal with problems in the past 30 years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: Are you just a reaction to us?

Mr. Rose: Your reaction to us is zilch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. The hon. member should do us the courtesy to carry on with his speech.

Mr. Rose: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your intervention and protection, but I am accustomed to catcalls. I know that at least over there is a party of principles. I do not like their principles, but at least they have some.

• (2110)

I do not like the Gallup poll party opposite. Where will they go next? When they thought restraint was in, they moved to the right. Approximately ten years before that when they thought the new ethics, politics or counter culture was in, they moved to the left. Where will they go now? They will fall between two stools. They will get slivers. That is what will happen.

The third point I should like to make—

Mr. Kempling: What happened to the first two points?

Mr. Rose: I will go over my first two points again. I know the government whip has a very short attention span. So, for his benefit I will repeat what I said. Tories are going to cut UIC. They were against it. Tories are going to raise interest rates. They were against that too. They are going to cut short-term programs like Canada Works designed for people who need to work this winter, in spite of the fact that we have record high unemployment in nearly every municipality. Especially central Canada, Quebec and the maritimes are suffering high unemployment, including most of the constituencies located in the maritimes.

The government has presented us with a bill to authorize the borrowing of $7 billion for public works and general purposes. Just read the bill. We have not been told what public works nor even to what general purpose the bill refers. That is left deliberately vague. I assume what they are intending to do during the life of this Parliament—or at least this session—is to reveal these public works one by one and dazzle us with their revelation. It is rather like Pandora's box.

My hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), made a comment about the government's belief in deficit spending and that they will borrow up to $7 billion. We do not know to what general purposes the money will be put, nor do we know why Canada needs to borrow this money at all right now. I was not able to hear the justification for this borrowing, but I assume it is for some worthy purpose. But before dealing with question two as to what use this money is to be put, let me deal with questions one and three.

The government's answer to question one is to go futher into deficit spending and to borrow seven thousand million dollars to make up and to overcome the deficit caused by that spendthrift, drunken sailor govenment which just preceded them. That is not a bad line. In other words, they blame the previous government for all their own financial woes. Premier Bennett in British Columbia and Premier Lyon in Manitoba have been using this very effectively, so I take it that it is quite a good line. I expect we will hear more and more of it, as we have already heard it from the Minister of Finance several times.

The general philosophy of the government goes something like this in very, very folksy terms,"Folks, we did not want to be big meanies, we didn't want to be tough guys. We are sorry for the shape you are in because of that awful previous government that you elected. But you folks want too much. You want to take too much out of the economy and you do not put enough back in, so consequently all of us have to tighten our belts so that our government can make certain hard decisions in order for our system to survive."

I think that is true. It is important for the government to make tough decisions in order that the system we have lived under survives. In order to have it survive we have to cut health care. We have to cut human resources. We have to cut day care. We have to cut out the lunch program in day care in British Columbia, and we have to cut out the outreach programs for women. And as less money filters down through the provinces to the universities we have to cut educational spending. Why do we do all these things? We do it so the system can survive. Sure, it is said to be for our own good. Now, what is this system we are trying to preserve? It is a system which accords special privileges to the well-heeled sector of Canadian society.

An hon. Member: Like Bill Kempling?

Mr. Rose: Well, I would not be as gross as to name a particular member on the opposite side.

Anyway, certain segments of society certainly will survive because they are accorded certain privileges. Our system survives to help the greedy, notably the oil and gas companies, the mining companies, and the banks. Let me give a few examples.

Because of super write-offs Dome Petroleum Ltd. has paid no tax in ten years. That is why we have to borrow money. That is why we have seen heavy taxation loaded on to the middle and lower income earners. That is why we cannot give them the promised cut of $2 billion that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) promised during the campaign. It is because we give fast write-offs, depreciation allowances, and 100 per cent and 150 per cent write-offs to certain segments of our economy.

An hon. Member: Because they supply wealth.

Mr. Rose: Because they provide wealth? Partially, certainly. Because they supply employment? Partially, certainly. One would think those companies which are largely foreign-owned supply more in terms of the economy and jobs than small companies where similar kinds of write-offs are not accorded. The heart and soul of small town Toryism is in the small businessman. It resides within the main street businessman. What we see here is that our government will borrow $7 billion mainly to provide subsidies to the major corporations, most of them foreign-owned, and at the same time it is not willing to accord that incentive to the small businessman who employs far more people than do the large corporations in total. I think we should remember that. When people are concerned about what the Conservatives are doing as far as improving the economy and providing more jobs are concerned, they should have a look at their policies and see if they do that.

What we found in the past was that fast write-offs for machinery and equipment merely provided greater automation, and in fact did not produce jobs. If I had my druthers, if I wanted my own prejudices to apply here, I would say, "Sure, we will give you the money, all the tax money you want, and you just give the state an equivalent amount of equity. If we are going to give you that kind of money to run your business in terms of incentive, when you strike it rich then we expect to have that percentage of your equity owned by the people who gave you the money."

An hon. Member: Good idea.

Mr. Rose: Why should corporations get a free ride with the public taking the risks and the resource industry taking the profits? On top of that why should they pay no taxes? Shell paid no taxes last year. If one looks at the write-offs and wants to borrow $3 billion, $4 billion or $7 billion, the money not collected here amounts to $3 billion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are off your beam.

Mr. Rose: I beg your pardon? The hon. member said balderdash, or a similar and equivalent outburst, but I notice he is not in his seat. He is standing behind the curtain and making rude sounds.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I made my speech earlier.

[Mr. Rose.]

Mr. Rose: Yes, he is making rude sounds. I wish he would go away and sit down somewhere.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member should be ashamed of himself.

Mr. Rose: Well, that is half the amount of money that the Minister of Finance is attempting to have us agree to tonight.

The Tories say we should sell PetroCan, that it is costing too much. But not $3 billion. The annual cost of PetroCan is $350 million. Besides, PetroCan has the potential of earning a great deal of money. It reduced our foreing-owned petroleum resources from 96 per cent to 80 per cent, and I call that progress. Inco, the International Nickel Company, has had taxes deferred to the tune of $318 million since 1978. Can one imagine that ? I asked an IWA woodworker in my riding the other day if he had had any taxes deferred lately. This is a bit of a tear-jerker I suppose; some people might call me one of those dewy-eyed, sentimental New Democrats.

Mr. Blais: Resurrected.

● (2120)

Mr. Rose: A resurrected, dewy-eyed New Democrat. Someone suggests that perhaps we weep too long and too loudly for those people who are less well off than ourselves.

The President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) sits over there in his seat looking prim, true and blue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: At the same time that we have an income tax permitting fast write-offs and give-aways amounting to maybe $3 billion in tax breaks last year, the Department of National Revenue is hounding a married woman in my riding who filed an income tax return seven years ago and she was informed only a month ago she owes the treasury $200. It is all right to defer taxes for some outfits, but it is not possible for the average individual!

People make these comparisons. They know these things happen and they feel they are unjust. As far as this party is concerned there are times when we are not perfect. That is not very often.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: We tend to be like all ideological parties, frequently a bit self-righteous about things, but not often.

I think you will recognize, Mr. Speaker, that when you give billions of dollars in tax breaks to corporations that do not necessarily provide taxes ultimately, or employment, and in contrast you hound and harass a young family for $200, that is unexplainable, unjust and unforgivable.

Let's take the banks.

An hon. Member: Good idea, let's take them.

Mr. Rose: I think the banks in general are run by nice people. Of course we have finance companies and credit unions flourishing and proliferating, if people like big words, in our country. We have the near-banks in Alberta. They are socialistic enterprises and the Albertans sort of tolerate them. Despite credit unions and finance companies, the banks are still the major financial institutions in our society. They have a near monopoly. I know there are some amendments to the Bank Act to sort of increase the competition coming up—that is if you believe that competition in a cartel is really competition. Anyway, we have this monopoly and we have that nice collection of members in the other place, strategically located as directors of most of the chartered banks. They are not doing too badly. We have been raising interest rates ten and 11 times in the last year, and the banks—

An hon. Member: There may be another one coming along.

Mr. Rose: Do you think so? I have just been told by my hon. friend beside me that we can expect another interest increase tomorrow. If the Minister of Finance had been as true to his convictions while in government as he was in opposition it would be "bye, bye, Bouey".

An hon. Member: That sounds like the title of a song.

Mr. Rose: As a matter of fact, it is an old song, but then we have heard nothing but old songs from members opposite.

Anyway, let us have a look at the way banks have been doing lately.

Mr. Nowlan: The last rose of summer.

Mr. Rose: I would think that when the member has an interesting riposte I will pause long enough to listen to it. If he would get his hand out of his mouth I would hear him more clearly. Even if I did I do not think it would be worth listening to.

What I want to tell you, and remind members opposite of, is that we are authorizing the Minister of Finance to go and borrow $7 billion. He is going to borrow $7 billion for what purpose? It is for public works and general purposes. One of the reasons we have to borrow all this money is that the banks are not paying their fair share in income tax. We have made that point a number of times, but it seems to me that people opposite are impervious to this fact. I think they are well to ignore this because, as long as the people in Canada keep electing Conservatives in large numbers, they are going to ignore it. That is the only lesson they will ever understand.

An hon. Member: They should vote Liberal.

Mr. Rose: They might. Most politicians are deaf to the cries of injustice. Many have a very bad set of hearing bones in their ears. It seems that while politicians cannot hear the cries of injustice from 20 feet away they can hear a paper ballot falling in a ballot box from 200 yards. That is probably the nature of the beast. I do not think that kind of disease escapes any of us because we are responsive to what people want when they express their views electorally, aside from all the debate and the most convincing arguments put forward by this member and other members on this side of the House.

Let us get back to the banks. In the third quarter of 1979 the Royal Bank earned profits of $57 million and some small change, with after tax profits of $56 million, paying a tax rate of 2.95 per cent.

An hon. Member: They own PetroCan.

Mr. Rose: If they own Petro-Canada, does that account for the fact that it has made so little money?

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Rose: The member knows something I do not know. I did not know they owned Petro-Canada. I know the Royal Bank spends a lot of its money financing foreign takeovers in this country by American concerns. That is the part that bothers me, not whether it finances Petro-Canada. Good for them if they are. As a matter of fact, I will go down there tomorrow and make a deposit just on the hon. member's recommendation.

The Canadian Imperial Bank made a profit of $49 million, $42 million after taxes, with an effective tax rate of 12 per cent. The Bank of Montreal made a profit of $57 million in the third quarter, with an after tax profit of $58 and a tax rate of 14 per cent. That is not bad. The average person, of course, pays up to 50 per cent when he reaches a certain level of income. Certainly the small business tax on other segments of our society is much greater than what banks pay. I could go on and tell you about the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Toronto-Dominion, but the average tax rate on earnings for all chartered banks averaged 10.4 per cent for the third quarter of 1979.

I know this is very tiresome to members opposite. They think it is the same old song, attacking the banks. We have to sing the same old song because we have the same old injustices, and that is the problem.

Let us talk a little bit about the $2 billion the Minister of Finance is going to use over the next four years to subsidize mortgages, the banks I talked about, and the development industry generally. This was promised during the by-elections and confirmed the other day. I do not think the Minister of Finance is all that happy about it. Probably a subsidy of that kind is defensible under different times and under different circumstances, but when coming from a government that is constantly and publicly committed to restraint it is hypocrisy.

Whether we spend this $2 billion on mortgage interest deductibility or not, the fact is that if you add the $3 billion in giveaways through tax incentives, plus a number of other things I have discussed and the $2 billion in predicted mortgage interest deductibility you come close to the $7 billion the minister wants to borrow.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Rose: I did not see the Speaker stand; I know I was being called to order.

An hon. Member: He didn't stand.

Mr. Rose: I should like now to return to question number two that I posed earlier, and that is precisely for what public works and for what other purposes does the minister need this money? I have not heard him discuss this at all, so I am naturally interested.

• (2130)

I have a suggestion. We have cut out Canada Works for most of Canada by a manipulation of the labour surplus rate to change it from 7 per cent to 9 per cent. That will affect many ridings in Canada, and it has completely precluded my riding from getting any of the former benefits. That means that some $350,000 and from 30 to 40 jobs that we had in Mission-Port Moody, parts of which have a youth unemployment rate of something near 20 per cent, will be denied this kind of economic boost next year.

I am quite familiar with the arguments against band-aid programs, such as Opportunities for Youth, which we had about ten years ago, and various other kinds of make-work projects, including Canada Works. I am well aware that many people think that these programs have a lot of shortcomings and that make-work programs do not provide anything of a lasting value frequently because nobody picks up the funding after the short-term financing is over. Consequently, the people who were working on those projects are cast adrift again.

I would like to make one point relating to that matter, and that is that these programs do provide jobs for young people who have difficulty finding work because they have no experience. Therefore they provide young people with first job experience and some hope. I believe that this winter especially, since the government has withdrawn Canada Works without notice and without giving us any other kind of program in its place, the government will be forced to institute some kind of emergency program to deal with unemployment throughout Canada before the winter is out.

I do not think that I will impress the government in this way particularly, since they seem to be absolutely stubborn about putting a complete stop to give-away programs when they apply to people. When these programs apply to industries, resources and banks, however, they cannot give them away fast enough. But when the give-away programs apply to people, there is a great reluctance on the part of the government to put their money where the voters' needs are.

Certain parts of my riding are desperately in need of a crash employment program this winter, and we in this party think that it should be administered through the municipalities. I notice that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Nielsen) has just sat up and is listening—I thought I might have put him to sleep by now—and I would like to suggest to him that he discuss this matter with his cabinet colleagues because although there are a number of public works programs needed some are not necessarily federal.

The municipalities are equipped through their own experience, administrative capabilities and so on, and knowledge of the needs, to employ a great deal of money very quickly in programs such as pollution control and programs for roads, streets, lighting, sewers, and you name it, buildings, arenas, and the list goes on. These sorts of projects across Canada would provide great incentive to improve our municipalities and at the same time provide some hedge against the extremely destructive unemployment level this winter. I put that forward for the minister's consideration. It is a positive suggestion, but not a new one. I know that a lot of people will say that it is the same old nonsense and they have heard it before.

We are told we have to bite the bullet. The point is who will bite the bullet? Are MP's going to bite the bullet? Are corporation directors going to bite the bullet? Of course not. While we are in the Parliamentary Restaurant biting the filet mignon, the unemployed people in the street will be biting the bullet. I think that the government should consider those things and not be so hard and cruel and so bottom-line, because it makes people sick and it makes all of us on this side of the House sick, that the government could give away millions of dollars to pirates and buccaneers.

Mr. Nystrom: Buddies.

Mr. Rose: Yes, somebody has said buddies. The government gives away billions of dollars to these pirates and buccaneers while at the same time it is hard, cold, and unyielding to people who really need opportunities for work.

We need Winter Works projects and responsiveness from the government. I ask the government to restore these programs until they can develop the $300 million job-creating program for youth that they promised during the election campaign, and about which we have not heard a sound since the election.

I would like to discuss clause 2, briefly, which allows the government to borrow abroad in foreign currency and to repay that money in the same currency. It allows the government to borrow up to $7 billion. It allows the government to borrow almost the precise amount which the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) used a year ago to prop up the Canadian dollar. I do not want to argue at the moment about whether that was a wise decision. I happen to think that it was not a wise decision, but there are a number of people in this House who believe otherwise.

Nevertheless, we borrowed $7 billion to prop up the Canadian dollar and it did not work. So what it means is that we have $7 billion to repay at the rate of $10 million a year, adding to our balance of payments deficit. Some economists are saying that it is not the money that is owed by the nation, the national debt which is the problem. While our children will be responsible for that debt, if we borrow from ourselves, they are also beneficiaries of the profits accruing from that debt's interest.

For example at the end of World War II we had the highest national debt in history and subsequently the greatest prosperity. But we owed it to ourselves. The point that I am making here is that the $7 billion which was borrowed abroad by the former minister of finance, and the $7 billion borrowing which is proposed through this bill by the current Minister of Finance, constitute a very dangerous step because it means that massive amounts of money will be flowing out of the country to service that debt.

At the same time the argument is being used all the time that Canada's interest rate must be higher than that of the United States so that investment capital will flow into Canada. That theory has not worked either because if one looks at the figures of the last year, he will find that, despite our high interest rates, more money in terms of investments has gone out of the country than has come into it. I suggest that the $7 billion which the former government borrowed and the $7 billion which this government proposes to borrow could have been used to purchase the majority of the petroleum industry in this country for Canadians. If one is ideologically opposed to have that industry owned by the state, it could at least have been purchased through the use of that money from foreigners and owned by Canadian entrepreneurs.

I serve this as a particular warning to the Minister of Finance, and plead that he does not rush out to the money markets of the United States to borrow this $7 billion even though this bill would authorize him to do so.

We in this party would feel much better if this money were used to buy back our country, to stimulate development or, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) suggested, for R and D to create jobs. If that were the case, my party could support it with some, if not a great deal, of enthusiasm and despite the concerns which I have expressed. But at the moment with all the information before us tonight, which is meagre at best, we are not really enchanted with the bill.

I hope that when the minister does get around to telling us how he intends to use this money, it will be used in a way that this party can approve of because, regardless of the fact that we are sometimes critical, we too want this country to go ahead, we too want to create full employment, we too want to see our country owned by Canadians, and we too want to see this government succeed in improving our nation. With that, I will conclude my remarks and prepare the way for someone else who might have at least 20 minutes to speak, and I hope that it is the minister.

• (2140)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Some time this evening the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), seconded by the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chenier), moved a reasoned amendment while the Acting Speaker was in the chair. The latter did not make a decision but suggested that a decision should be made tomorrow. I have therefore arranged to be here early, before the minister takes the floor, so that a decision can be made before we conclude the debate on second reading of this bill.

The motion of the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan reads as follows:

That this bill be not now read a second time but be stood until the Minister of Finance agrees to appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs at the pleasure of that committee and preceding the appearance of the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, are we to understand that you are ready to make a decision without hearing the arguments on the admissibility of the amendment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was not there yet. I should say that even if the Acting Speaker who was then in the chair suggested that he had some reservations, he did not mention what they were. As for myself, I had the opportunity to consider the precedents and I want to advise hon. members that on four points at least I can hardly accept the amendment now under consideration. I could refer hon. members to the various sources of reference, but first I will merely indicate that, in my opinion, the amendment now under consideration is inconsistent with different principles which are the basis of reasoned amendments and the first principle which should identify such an amendment is that it should be declaratory and adverse to the bill.

[English]

Hon. members are referred to two different citations, Erskine May's nineteenth edition, and Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fifth edition. The first condition that has to be attached to a reasoned amendment is that it may be declaratory of some principle of the bill or adverse to the bill. That is found at page 499 of Erskine May and citation 744 of Beauchesne. On that ground alone the amendment could be rejected.

There is another reference that suggests a reasoned amendment should not set a condition for second reading of a bill. At page 500 of Erskine May's nineteenth edition paragraph (2) reads as follows:

The amendment must not be concerned in detail with the provisions of the bill upon which it is moved, nor anticipate amendments thereto which may be moved in committee (k); nor is it permissible to propose merely the addition of words to the question, that the bill be now read a second time, as such words must, by implication, attach conditions to the second reading.

Hon. members will find similar citations in Beauchesne who referred to more recent times, as reported in Canadian Journals. At page 226 of the fifth edition of Beauchesne, citation 745(3) reads as follows:

It is not permissible to propose merely the addition of words to the question, 'That the bill be now read a second time', as such words must, by implication, attach conditions to the second reading.

Beauchesne cites this decision from the Journals of February 17, 1970, and April 23, 1971.

If hon. members read citation 749 on the next page they will find it is more precise and reads as follows:

An amendment to defer second reading of a bill until the subject matter has been considered by a committee is out of order in that it does not oppose the principle of the bill but merely attaches a condition.

To my mind, by proposing that the bill be not now read but that it be read only on a certain condition, such amendment does not indicate to me that it opposes the principle of the bill but merely that it attaches a condition. At the same time, however, the amendment anticipates the committee stage where such a decision could be made. I do not think that the hon. member by his amendment can give that kind of direction to the committee.

This being said, I am ready to hear opinions from hon. members, but I am sure I will have great difficulty in accepting the amendment on the basis I have just stated.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to raise one small point. We realize, of course, that this is not a substantive amendment. We did not intend in any way to change the bill. We realize we cannot do that on second reading. We feel that it is very important, however, in a borrowing bill that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) should explain what he is doing. We think at this particular point that the most vital part of the background to this borrowing bill is his appearance first before the committee, so that he can explain the events of the last several months which led to this borrowing bill. It is because he refused to come to the committee before the Governor of the Bank of Canada that we made this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just spoken could well have proposed by way of an amendment what is commonly called, in Beauchesne's terms, a six months' hoist. Now, we have to know who proposed that six months' hoist during the second reading of the bill and its referral to committee?

It seems to me it would have been irresponsible to do so at this time, given the circumstances, because we on this side of the House do not intend to delay the passage of the bill. We do not want at all to prevent the government from having authority to borrow the funds which are needed to administer, except that the hon. member who moved the amendment acted in a much more responsible manner than permitted by the Standing Orders and by the tradition. When he suggested in his amendment that second reading of the bill be deferred until the Minister of Finance finally appears before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, we presumed that the latter would have the courage to do so before six months. But when we heard his answer today, Mr. Speaker, when he said that he would appear before the finance committee when he is in Ottawa, we thought that it did not sound very serious from a government which administers public funds.

The purpose of this amendment was, on the one hand, to avoid postponing the second reading of this bill to six months from now and, on the other, to show we are responsible people by requiring that before this bill is passed on second reading the Minister of Finance have the decency not to refuse to appear before the finance committee—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must nevertheless interrupt the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard). I could have intervened when the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atıkokan (Mr. McRae) was making his remarks. In brief, what he has just said is somehow a continuation of what the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan suggested, meaning that they are debating the substance of the matter, not the point of procedure before us. I think I do not have to make a ruling on the appearance or non-appearance of the minister before the finance committee at such and such a time, but I must at this time make a ruling as to whether the amendment being proposed by the hon. member is in accordance with the rules and practices of this House. If the hon. member reads certain citations by our authors, he will note that in recent years proposed substantive amendments were more and more intended in their form to postpone passage of a bill for six months. They took that form because it is about the only one allowed in our system. As long as the procedure remains unchanged, I must apply the rules, and if I refer to Beauchesne's citation 744, as I already suggested in English, substantive amendments that must be introduced in the form of a motion may take various forms, and the first one is that they must constitute a declaratory resolution on some principle contrary to those in the bill itself. So the amendment introduced by the hon. member does not run counter to any part of the bill. It quite simply lays down a condition requiring the minister to appear before the committee over which I, as Speaker, do not have jurisdiction, that committee being also able to call the witnesses it wants and organize its work as it wishes. So as far as I am concerned, unless the hon. member for Drummond has other points to make, I would tell him that what he just said does not convince me at all to accept his amendment.

Mr. Pinard: Briefly, Mr. Speaker, my argument is as follows: you have quoted from Beauchesne, citation 744, but if we read from the fifth edition, citation 740—

[English]

—there are three types of amendments that may be proposed at the second reading stage of a bill. These are, first, the six months' hoist—

[Translation]

Precisely as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Nielsen) is saying, that was not a six months' hoist. But my reasoning is as follows: if the Minister of Finance agrees to appear before the committee before six months, then we remain within the spirit of what is allowed under the rules to move an amendment, and I wonder why the Chair favours or seems to favour that form of amendment and fix a six-month time limit. If, according to the rules, we are allowed to delay the second reading of a bill up to six months, I do not see why we cannot be allowed to move an amendment to suggest a condition under which second reading could take place before the six months. We on this side of the House have presumed that the Minister of Finance will be courageous enough to appear before the finance committee well before those six months.

Now, as a solution, it would be that much simpler if the Minister of Finance were to stand up tonight and say that he is prepared to appear before the finance committee ahead of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I realize that it is not easy to move a reasoned amendment according to Standing Orders. I have been in the chair many times in recent years and very few hon. members, except perhaps the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), once, and also I believe the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) on another occasion, have managed to find a way to move such an amendment which was acceptable.

However, I must still apply our Standing Orders, which are based on the fundamental principle that the amendment must oppose the principle of the bill, and secondly, that the amendment must not include any condition aimed at preventing second reading of the bill. In the present case, the amendment does exactly what it should not do on both counts. There are also the other questions that I have examined concerning the operation of the committees and the fact that the hon. member has not succeeded in convincing me and did not even work very hard at it. I must therefore reject this amendment.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to speak about Bill C-10, but first of all I wish simply to say that I hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) and the government will learn something from what has happened in the House today. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance and the government think that they will be able to play the clowns and give replies such as the one they gave this afternoon to the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), who had asked a very legitimate question after our party had stated that it was ready to grant unanimous consent to allow a motion to be moved which would really have helped the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) to administer better the affairs of the House, then they are wrong. We said that we were ready to agree to that motion. We had granted unanimous consent even though we had not been notified beforehand. A private member, the hon. member for Vaudreuil, rose because he wanted to ask the following question: can the Minister of Finance now say whether he will testify before the finance committee and accept his responsibility for the financial policies of this country? Will the Minister of Finance tell the committee what he will do about the monetary policy of the governor of the Bank of Canada?

The Minister of Finance only played the clown and replied, "I shall come to the committee when I have the time and when I am in town". I must tell the Minister of Finance that if he wants to make some progress in the House, if he wants his colleague, the President of the Privy Council to be able to administer the affairs of the House efficiently, he should treat the members of Parliament as equals and reply to the questions asked by members on this side of the House like a Minister of Finance should do. I would also like to tell him that because of this, I have noted this evening that Bill C-10 requests the approval of the House to borrow $7 billion. I believe that if this is the attitude the government will adopt when myself, having been a member for eleven years and having taken part for five or six years in the works of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, I had the opportunity to see the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), the hon. member for St. John's West himself and other Conservative members at the time when they formed the opposition, come before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and, facing a bill as simple as this one, after the House of Commons had already accepted the principle of giving authority to borrow the money, spend hours, days, and weeks in discussions, I want to tell the Minister of Finance today not to think that other members on this side of the House and myself are going to accept stupid answers, answers from a Minister of Finance who thinks he can afford to show arrogance in the House of Commons like the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) last week who arrived—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps it is a good time to call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to put a question to the government House leader.

• (2200)

[English]

Can the government House leader tell us what the order of business will be for tomorrow?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we will be proceeding with amendments to the Post Office Act tomorrow. I presume we will not have the intemperate display of obstruction we observed from hon. members just a few moments ago, given the fact that what the House is really doing now is dealing with the former government's own bill. It is like spanking your mother; it is not supposed to be done.

Mr. Lefebvre: If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has learned anything tonight and he makes a commitment, he will see that his clowning days are over. Now that he is in a responsible position, he should start acting as such.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are already proceeding with the adjournment motion and perhaps the House would allow the hon. member for Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) to speak to the question before us this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—INQUIRY WHETHER UNDERPRIVILEGED WILL BENEFIT FROM HOUSING POLICY

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I come back to a question I put in the House, last Friday, to the minister in charge of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (Mr. MacKay). When I asked him for information of the Matthews task force report, he answered that the report would be politically neutral and objective because Mr. Matthews had married his daughter to a Liberal. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot accept that as a serious answer to so important a question. I therefore ask the minister, this evening, when he will release that report and what groups were heard, since I asked Friday who on the task force or what groups spoke on behalf of the humble people, and not in favour of both contractors and big business? I have heard rumors, Mr. Speaker, to the effect that the minister intended to change the president of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, very persistent rumors indeed which are working havoc again in Quebec and continue the witch hunt about political appointments in senior positions within Crown corporations. Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether the incumbent president has completed his term and fulfilled his mandate with the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or else whether he is leaving to make room for a future president from Quebec.

[Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton).]

Rumor has it that Mr. Mario Beaulieu would be offered the job. I ask the minister whether he could confirm that Mr. Beaulieu will be the next president of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. From there on, one obviously wonders whether the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will remain as we now know it today.

I should like to go back briefly on the important role played by the CMHC on the social, economic and national level. We in the Liberal party recognize that for many years, together with the private sector, the government has developed a housing policy which is endorsed by OECD as one of the best in the world.

It enabled low-income families as well as senior citizens to find decent housing, even if this task is not quite over. It also made it possible to draft national standards guaranteeing the quality of construction in Canada. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, the possible elimination of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation makes me wonder about the necessity for the National Building Code. As you know, enormous efforts and intensive negotiations have taken place to standardize building materials as much as possible. Would it not be possible that the disappearance of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation would create even more regional disparities and increase building costs by eliminating the important function of the National Building Code?

We should remember that the corporation was created in 1946 to administer the National Housing Act. Its responsibility was to co-ordinate and support housing programs after some very gloomy years. At that time we had been through a depression. Now we have a recession and I think that the role of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is even more crucial now than at any other time in the last ten years.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, there is still much left to do in the social housing field. About 400,000 Canadians have yet to find decent housing. What are we going to do in the absence of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation if we place the faith of those 400,000 Canadians in the hands of the private sector? I believe that it is in conjunction with the government that we can elaborate a national housing policy.

The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation did a tremendous job. Let me recall, Mr. Speaker, that in 1950 it had some 2,000 employees. In 1978, some 30 years later, it had 3,800 employees to serve all of Canada. Realizing that the corporation manages $10 billion and that some three million houses are covered by its services, I feel it is very well managed and for this reason it should remain a basic tool of development for our economy.

As you may know, the previous government channelled private funds, integrating as it did the role of private enterprise with that of government. On the other hand, housing policy was not one of laissez-faire and letting things go adrift. It was planned by the government.

Suffice it to mention, Mr. Speaker, that in the case of housing mortgage insurance alone the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation charges only $35 while the private sector is currently charging between $200 and $400. Is this the way small-income citizens and the 400,000 Canadians who need better housing will achieve ownership? Does the minister know that in the last few years a quarter of a million new housing units were built, and those 250,000 units created 250,000 annual jobs?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member that her time has expired.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, may I have another moment? I have just one more sentence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Well, just seconds, yes.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Would the minister now tell us whether or not he will dismantle CMHC?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to come here this evening and respond to the hon. member's questions. I will tell her at the outset that we are certainly not going to dismantle CMHC.

I want to explain to the hon. member that I do not want her to think I was being facetious the other day when she asked her question. I thought she was putting her question in a rather facetious way herself when she referred to the fox in the chicken coop metaphor, and I am sorry she did not have a chance for a supplementary.

I want to assure the hon. member that, as I said at the outset, we will not do anything to seriously impair or damage CMHC. Quite the contrary, we hope to strengthen the organization. The hon. member, who obviously knows a bit about housing, will recognize that the projections for future demand for housing will have changed, as demography has shown. In future we may be looking more on the question of rehabilitation or renovation of housing, questions such as revitalizing the urban core. The days of urban or suburban sprawl are gone because of energy conservation.

The matters she raises with respect to the task force report and when it will be made public, I can answer as follows. I have not yet seen the final report. When I do, I intend to study it carefully. It will be submitted to cabinet, and indeed so will the considered opinions of CMHC with respect to the housing strategy. It is my intention to make this report public as soon as it has received the proper evaluation.

Again I want to assure the hon. member that both we in the government and CMHC recognize our social responsibilities, and in no way do we intend to de-emphasize or diminish this commitment of providing and sustaining affordable shelter to those Canadians who do not have access to it.

I agree with her that there are nearly one half million families who pay over 30 per cent of their income for shelter. This group includes elderly people, single parent families, and young Canadians.

Hon. members, including the hon. member who raised the question, will have an ample opportunity to contribute their thoughts and their expertises to this government's housing policy. I think she would agree that my predecessor last year in Edmonton started the process of disentanglement, but what we are doing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—DREE COMMITMENT RESPECTING SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my first question concerning the matter of $50 million promised for Sysco during the last election, the minister mentioned the following:

Considerable moneys in the past, which were allocated, were not managed or used too wisely.

The minister, of course, is correct in his observation, but there is a danger that newspapermen and others will think the federal government has given much more money than it actually has to the provincial publicly-owned steel plant in Sydney since Black Friday on October 13, 1967. The fact is that for almost 13 years what the federal government allocated in grants to the steel plant until the recent $6 million from the present government, amounted to a combined sum of $25 million to $30 million. Before the 1974 election, the federal government gave a loan guarantee of some $70 million to the steel plant which, while very helpful, is not the same as a grant.

Of course it can be argued that the Nova Scotia government owns the Sydney Steel plant, but it was obvious to some of us that the logical buyer, once Hawker Siddeley pulled out, should have been the Cape Breton Development Corporation which was set up to rehabilitate Cape Breton's economy. With all of Devco's faults, it would have done a better job than the provincial government of Nova Scotia which appeared not to know which end was up in the hiring of top management personnel for the steel plant.

The minister is, of course, quite right, as everybody in Nova Scotia now knows, about the waste and mismanagement at the steel plant which has brought it literally to its knees, with an albatross of some hundreds of millions of dollars in debt.

I should like to ask the minister if he could find out for me what the actual debt is and how much of it is a result of strictly operating deficit and how much is interest payments for the loans by the corporation. On April 28, 1979, Mr. Tom Kent, the then Sysco president, was quoted in the Cape Breton Post as saying that the debt was $166.4 million. Sysco's loss for the last fiscal year was alleged to be $64.2 million, which included $29.2 million in operating losses, $22 million in interest charges, and $12 million in depreciation.

In passing, Mr. Speaker, I want the minister to know that many of the supervisory, middle management personnel and union members at the plant want to know why one whom they consider as very largely responsible for the present situation at Sysco is still kept on as a member of Sysco's board.

In my supplementary question I asked once again about the use of the submerged injection process at Sydney. It was a failure in the past and has been rejected by Stelco and U.S. Steel. Is it not true that the Davy-Ashmore report of 1971-72 recommended the tried and true basic oxygen furnace technology? The modified type is called Q-BOP and can cook a batch of steel faster and cheaper because, among other things, it does not need a special building and certain auxiliary services which a complete basic oxygen furnace shop would need.

The continuous casters are a later technology and assume the use of either of the above oxygen processes. Sydney Steel, to my understanding, is the only steel plant in the world with continuous casters tied to open hearth—hardly a way, I would think, to rehabilitate such an operation and attempt to make it competitive. I realize that we have lost the golden years since 1971 in an attempt to turn the plant around. The debt composition has to be rearranged or it will surely go under.

My understanding is that there was a request by the province of Nova Scotia to have the previous federal government absorb or wipe out at least the $70 million loan mentioned earlier, and they refused to do that. Is that correct? Some say there are no precedents for doing such a thing. It is my understanding that the provincial government of Premier Buchanan had promised to guarantee the borrowing of $100 million by Sysco if Ottawa were to write off the $70 million. I am sure an argument could be made to support the no precedent conclusion. It is my understanding—and the minister can correct me if I am wrong—that the last minister responsible for DREE negotiated from that position. However, the fact is there is ample precedent. In 1978 some $800 million of CNR debt was transferred by the government into common shares. Thus the debt and interest charges were cancelled.

In March, 1977, $625 million was cancelled from the St. Lawrence Seaway debt principle. Bill C-3 authorized the cancellation of some $600 million of Air Canada debt. The cancellation of airport debts for revolving fund airports—for example, Dorval, Pickering, Malton and Mirabel—is to be done in a new supply bill and will cost $660 million. Finally, the government is planning to cancel $742 million in debts accrued by the National Harbours Board. Of course this has not yet happened.

The net result of these debt cancellations is that all areas of transportation are more profitable and thus would be easier to privatize. The debt cancellation is accomplished by having the Treasury Board absorb the debt. All the operations noted here are owned by the federal government which makes debt cancellation a simpler process. Sysco is provincially owned, but I cannot see how the assumption by the federal government of the debts of a provincially-owned company should cause serious problems. I think the minister will recognize that Sysco has been the subject of much study. In fact it has been so studied that the reports would fill a section of a normal library. It is time for all concerned to get off the pot and to modernize the plant, instead of continually keeping the people in uncertainty and despair in that area. They deserve better.

[Mr. Hogan.]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to receive in the House of Commons this evening the comments of the hon. member opposite who is very concerned with the subject he has raised, as I am myself. We both recognize that there is perhaps no greater concern to our province from an economic standpoint.

First, I am glad to give to the hon. member my assurance that I will obtain a complete breakdown of the debt structure and meet with him to discuss it. It is not as straightforward as it might seem, because of the nature of the debt. But I certainly agree with him that there is ample precedent for writing off debts of various kinds in the jurisprudence of the federal government over the years.

The hon. gentleman did raise in his question specifically the submerged injection process. Perhaps I should put on record at this time that this process, as the hon. member knows, relates to introducing oxygen below the surface of the hot metal as opposed to introducing the oxygen or air from above on to the hot metal. Apparently this has caused difficulties in the past. I am assured, as a result of inquiries I had made, that none of the $7.2 million was used for any purpose related to the submerged injection process, but rather to rebuild certain parts of the open hearth furnaces and other structural work.

I should like to assure the hon. member opposite that, as far as our administration is concerned, we have a continuing commitment to doing what we can to modernize and improve conditions at Sysco. I think he would recognize that while it might be desirable to do so quickly, from a physical point of view it is not quite that simple, either.

First of all we must try to undo and, to some extent, rehabilitate some of the symptoms which were caused during the past few years of mismanagement. Once this is accomplished I am certain that we will, in accordance with the knowledgeable requests from management, and in accordance with the advice received from the work force, which is equally important, which is a very dedicated work force and which has in effect subsidized that plant over the years, as indeed the work force has in Trenton, Nova Scotia, at another important heavy industrial undertaking, and with the best advice we can get from that management and the work force, and under the instructions of the Nova Scotia government, undertake our responsibilities to the people of Cape Breton and of Sysco.

I am not so sure, although it is a matter for future discussion and debate, that Devco would necessarily have been able to effect what the hon. member suggests it might have, but conditions in Devco are improving because of the increased prospects for the use of coal. It may be that the member is correct. In any event, I want to assure him again that he has my co-operation in making available to him the kind of information he wants and, indeed, to all members of the House. I share his concern for the rehabilitation and eventual modernization of this very historic and necessary steel mill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST THAT PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES BE MAINTAINED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact, as we all know, that 1979 has been designated as the International Year of the Child by the United Nations and that October 24, that is today, has been selected as the Day of the Child by the ministers of education in Canada, I move, seconded by the member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc):

That the House urge the government to state unequivocally that family allowances paid to Canadian mothers for their children will remain universal.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House? Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED DEDICATION OF RIDEAU CLUB DESTROYED BY FIRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde):

That the site of the recently destroyed Rideau Club, which faces the Parliament Buildings in Ottawa, be dedicated to the construction of the central Canada branch of Petro-Canada to serve as a reminder to the government and the Canadian people of the importance of this vital Crown corporation.

REQUEST THAT LAZAR REPORT BE MADE PUBLIC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), I move:

That this House is pleased to learn that there is a government document known as the Lazar report which recommends that action be taken to provide substantial increases in pensions as well as other important improvements, and this being the day when a freedom of information bill is being introduced, this House calls on the government to drop the secrecy, to make public the Lazar report forthwith, and to indicate when it proposes to take action thereon.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the terms of Standing Order 43, the presentation of this motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

REQUEST THAT LARGE TRAWLERS NOT BE ALLOWED TO OPERATE IN ZONE 4T—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that the decision of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) to allow fishing vessels of 100 feet or more to fish 6,000 metric tons of cod in the 4T area of the Gulf of St. Lawrence from November 1 will have adverse effects on crab fishing because they will destroy crab stocks, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr):

That the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans be requested by the House to rescind his decision which favours large fishing companies to the detriment of all the independent fishermen of the Atlantic provinces and of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of pressing urgency.

Since the large offshore fishing boats based outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence have recorded increased landings in the last two years, and whereas the small inshore fishing vessels based in the Gulf of St. Lawrence have not yet attained their full catch rate and are subject to a shorter fishing season, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr):

FINANCE

REQUEST GOVERNMENT DISALLOW FURTHER INCREASES IN INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent necessity.

In view of the crisis that successive increases in interest rates have recently created in Canada; given the negative impact that interest rates of 14 per cent to 18 per cent have on small businesses and workers in general who run the risk of being laid off; and also in view of the urgency of putting an end to ever-rising interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ostiguy):

That this government refuse for the time being any new increase in interest rates and introduce compensatory measures such as tax exemption adjustment, now set at $1,000, on income originating from interest or dividends.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CALL FOR GUIDELINES TO ESTABLISH AIR QUALITY LAWS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the present efforts of the Pittston Oil Company, of New York, to locate an oil refinery in Maine which would produce unacceptable and intolerable levels of air pollutants in New Brunswick, and in line with the statement made in the House on October 22 by the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment (Mr. Fraser) that both the United States and Canada "were polluting each other and effective control could best be undertaken on a co-operative basis", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John (Mr. Ferguson):

That this House request the minister to consider a study which would establish guidelines for enforceable air quality laws and federal emissions requirements, complementary to those administered by the United States Environmental Protection Agency, which Canada does not have.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CALL FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF NORTHERN MINERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Northern Mineral Advisory Committee does not represent the broad range of interest in the north and, therefore, constitutes only one of the many sources of input which the government must consider when forming a northern mining policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That the report of the Northern Mineral Advisory Committee be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and that this committee seek representation from all groups involved in or affected by mining in the north.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF SPECIAL TAX ON PROFITS OF OIL COMPANIES TO FUND PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion whose urgency and national import are obvious.

In view of the news concerning the profits earned by two of the biggest oil companies operating on Canadian soil from January to September, 1979, to the effect that they have increased by an average of 50 per cent as compared with the corresponding period in 1978, an excellent year according to the leaders of the oil industry in terms of return on capital investment and net profit registered, and in view of the answer of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to a question put by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr.Broadbent) in the House yesterday, and I quote:

—that it is a matter of very real concern to this government to see that as much as possible of the revenues that come to energy companies operating in this country are reinvested in Canadian energy development.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren):

That this government introduce, in the budget to be brought down in the near future in this House, a special tax to constitute a working capital fund financed by the excessive profits of oil companies operating on Canadian soil to be used for research and development in the field of new sources of energy, and to be levied according to the following formula: 25 per cent of excess profits made in 1979 and the following years by said companies, as compared with 1978 as the standard year, to the extent where those profits exceed, as is now the case, a minimal return of 15 per cent of capital investments.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 that motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

U.S. RAISE IN INTEREST RATES—CANADA'S INTENTIONS FOR THE FUTURE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance who may fear that if he were here today there might be a snap meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affiars at which the minister would have to make an appearance.

Yesterday, several American banks raised their prime lending rates on business loans to a record 15 per cent. Will the Prime Minister assure the House right now that his government will not allow further increases in interest rates in Canada, which are already at record levels?

• (1415)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can reply to the hon. member's question. He commented upon the Minister of Finance being out of the House today. I can assure the hon. member that the Minister of Finance is away on government business in western Canada.

In answer to the hon. member's question, he is quite correct in indicating that there has been another increase in interest rates in the United States. This, as we all know, brings added pressure to the North American economy and particularly to our own interest rates. The government cannot give any assurance that interest rates in Canada will not go higher.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the acting minister, since he cannot give the assurance on interest rates which I sought, will he tell the House what estimate he and his government have made of the effect its high interest rate policy will have on the level of unemployment in Canada?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, we have not made a current estimate of the impact of rising interest rates on unemployment in Canada but, as the hon. member knows, such estimates are continually being made by officials of the Department of Finance and other economists. I am sure that when those figures become available, we will be very pleased to provide the hon. member with an update.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, it is surprising, in view of the seriousness of the matter, that a government which is committed to open government does not have a current estimate right now which it could give to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: In view of the government's policy of moving domestic interest rates almost in tandem with the American rates to record high levels, and in view of the professed desire of the government to see domestic oil prices rise quickly to world levels, are not the acting minister and his government in fact telling the Canadian people that their policy is to have this country move into a recession?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that that is certainly not the government's policy. I would draw to the hon. member's attention, since he has referred to the American situation so much today, what noted economists in the country have been saying. For example, last week an article stated that the Canadian government announced plans to encourage the development of a free market economy and to reduce the role of the public sector, and it went on to say that that policy boded well for the long-term prospects of the Canadian economy.

ENERGY

OIL PRICES—REQUEST GOVERNMENT ABANDON PLANS FOR FURTHER INCREASES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since, even at present rates, home owners with a $40,000 mortgage negotiated three to five years ago will have to pay, under the present rate, approximately $1,022 more a year, and since the government is pressing ahead with the largest increase in oil prices in our history at a time when multinational oil companies are registering record profits, will the minister agree to abandon his plan for oil price increases equivalent to an additional tax of up to $200 a year on every home owner and car driver in this country?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned on previous occasions the fact that any speculation on the part of the hon. member or anyone else with respect to any price increase is premature. In those terms, I would ask the hon. member to consider the implications of merely standing pat or doing a flip-flop with respect to energy policy, as his party has done.

I also want to point out that in our considerations of the implications of price increases we are concerned about the economic consequences. We in this government want to make sure that measures are put in place which will, in fact, in the event of an increase, address these particular problems.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, if the minister had done his homework and read up on the previous government, he would have seen that we had a policy which took care of the average Canadian consumer and the average Canadian citizen.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: If the minister will not act to protect the consumer and prevent the price of home heating oil reaching unconscionable levels, will he at least set up immediately the energy supply allocation board provided for by the Energy Supply Emergency Act passed by the previous Parliament, especially since his provincial colleagues in Calgary yesterday concluded that in view of the inaction of this government, they themselves would set up a purely interprovincial advisory committee on energy? Will he set up that board right now?

• (1420)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply reject out of hand any suggestion made with respect to the premise of that question. The fact is, and the hon. member knows, that my department has been working very hard in close co-operation with the provinces with respect to the Emergency Supplies Allocation Act and the background and support apparatus that may be required in the event of an emergency, real or apprehended.

The fact is that we are working hard. We have in our department taken the kind of support positions that will be available to us in the event of an emergency. I do not think it sits well with the hon. member to make accusations of the sort he has, because they are simply not true.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

INTEREST RATES—ORDER OF APPEARANCE OF WITNESSES BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the Liberals complaining about the government carrying out their policies; but that is another matter.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question about this important matter of interest rates that concerns every Canadian.

As the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is planning to hear both the governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance, will the Prime Minister reverse the decision forced upon two of his backbenchers by the Minister of Finance last night when he instructed them to support a motion that would have the governor of the Bank of Canada appear before that committee ahead of the Minister of Finance, when it should be the Minister of Finance who is there first to state government policy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have such respect for Parliament that I would naturally not reverse the position of a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, neither the Prime Minister, when he was in opposition, nor I were content to let his predecessor get away with such glib answers. I should like to ask him if he thinks it is appropriate for any minister of the Crown, particularly a prime minister who has talked about reforms of Parliament, to direct his own backbenchers to vote in a way completely contrary to their own independent desires, as happened last night?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what kind of relations exist in that party between backbenchers, as he calls them, and the leader. Certainly, in this party all members of Parliament come to their own conclusions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I must note that that principle, which has been long established in this party, is so remarkable to the others that it evokes surprise and agony.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My answer stands. We have a recommendation from a parliamentary committee. I understand it was made in part because it reflects the interest of the governor of the Bank of Canada in having the earliest possible opportunity to appear before that committee. Naturally, that is not a recommendation that I propose to reverse.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, most people thought that the government was elected to lead the governor of the Bank of Canada, not follow him. That is not the implication of the Prime Minister's answers.

On the important question of interest rates policy, for which he has responsbility as head of the government, does the Prime Minister not think that by this time Canadians are fed up with having their interest rates dictated by decisions made in Washington instead of in this country? Does he not think Canadians would like to have a government that pursues the kind of successful low interest rate policies that have worked so well in dozens of countries of western Europe?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is asking me for an opinion. My opinion—which, I think, by the rules of the House perhaps I should not be giving—is that the people of this country do not want high interest rates. Neither do we. But we know that as a national government we have to work our way out of a very difficult economic situation, and this will not be done by ducking the hard decisions.

● (1425)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: You had all the solutions in May.

Oral Questions

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

MEASURES TO PROMOTE CANADIAN EXPORTS

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, at an export conference yesterday, the Minister of State for International Trade forecast a record Canadian trade deficit for 1980-81 of $10 billion. On the other hand, in connection with the same conference, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is reported by the Canadian Press to have stated that government intervention on behalf of Canadian exporters has now ended, including market surveys and trade negotiations.

Can the minister of state please assure the House that there will be no cuts in measures to promote Canadian exports, including those specified by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, what I said at the conference yesterday was that the trade deficit, the current account deficit, could reach a level of $10 billion. What I was indicating was the magnitude of the size of the problem that we have. It is a problem of a long-standing nature. As the hon. member well knows, it is one where there is a considerable amount of momentum attached to the problems that we got into in the middle seventies under the previous government.

We have said that considerable effort will be made on the trade side. There are a number of programs under review right now in the areas of trade promotion and trade policy. We had hoped that we would have some announcements to make on these reviews before the end of the year. There will not be a diminution of effort on the part of this government to support trade in this country. I should say—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, may I take it from the answer of the minister of state that what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is reported to have said about specific cuts in market surveys and trade negotiations—that the government will remove itself from those areas—will not in fact now happen?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I believe the remarks that are attributed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce relate to a much broader area than just trade. There is no intention on the part of this government to remove itself from assistance on trade promotion or trade negotiations where it is appropriate for the government to be involved.

POSSIBLE MOVE OF CANADIAN EMBASSY FROM TEL AVIV TO JERUSALEM—EFFECT ON TRADE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, a number of Canadian businesses have deplored the consequences of the government's plan to move the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem and some experts have estimated that the cost of this loss in opportunity to bid will reach $5 billion worth of contracts to Arab states.

Based on the studies which have been done by his department, can the minister comment on whether this potential trade loss is accurate?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there have been studies done on the effect of the announcements in June of the possible movement of the embassy to Jerusalem. I cannot confirm right now the precise figure that the hon. member mentions. There is clearly a hiatus resulting in trade negotiations on contracts with those countries. We are concerned about it, we are following it closely, and we hope that the whole matter will be clarified shortly as a result of the trip made by the Hon. Robert Stanfield.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister of state would table the studies which have been done by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. At the same time, will he table the programs that he intends to cut out as announced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce yesterday?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the studies that have been carried out are, essentially, an ongoing review of the discussions that have been held between the department and interested companies who are doing business in that part of the world. I do not propose to make those public because they are confidential discussions between companies and officials in my department.

● (1430)

As far as the second part of the hon. member's question is concerned, I have said that I propose to have something to announce in relation to a trade policy and trade promotion activities.

FINANCE

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Finance. Over the past year or so, the President of the Treasury Board and other ministers, including the Prime Minister, have made many statements to the effect that if elected they would take steps to raise the value of the Canadian dollar to approximately 90 cents U.S.

In view of the terribly pessimistic forecasts by the Minister of State for International Trade for a deterioration of our trade balance in 1980—and, indeed, 1981—is this still the government's policy?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks if this is still the government's policy. I would like to correct him. It was never the government's policy.

In direct answer to the hon. member's question, I would say that the desirability of a stable dollar in relation to the American dollar is certainly something that all in this House surely seek. A higher dollar would be something that any government in power would like to achieve. As has been indicated time and again in the House, we are in a situation where, as the Secretary of State for International Trade indicated, the aftermath of the previous government's handling of our export position is something that will take some time to turn around. But I can assure the hon. member that it is being done.

Mr. Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I was really talking about the next two years, rather than looking at the past and reliving previous elections.

Since the trade minister forecast that the negative balance of payments would go from about $5 billion to $10 billion, we are looking ahead. What does the Acting Minister of Finance believe would be an appropriate level for the Canadian dollar in terms of the U.S. dollar?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that such a hypothetical question cannot be answered in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

STEPS TO SUPPORT CANADIAN EXPORTERS

Mr. Ray Chenier (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for International Trade, whose job is to support exporters in many ways such as by keeping political, external relationship harmonious and productive.

[Translation]

I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, what the minister's itinerary will be for the weeks to come, and if it will include the Middle East.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have no immediate plans to take any trips in the next few weeks. My intention is to be very active in support of Canadian exporters in other countries of the world and to support their business activities.

INTERNATIONAL DAY OF THE CHILD

SUGGESTED RECOGNITION BY ESTABLISHING CHILD-CARE CENTRE ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Today is the International Day of the Child. As a symbol of this government's commitment to children, and to the urgent need across this country for more accessible and affordable child-care for all sectors of our population, will the minister establish a model seven-day a week child-care centre on Parliament Hill?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I thank the hon. member for her question and, indeed, her preamble with regard to the International Year of the Child.

As to the specific request regarding a day-care centre, I will be happy to take that under consideration and report to the hon. member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST THAT PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES BE MAINTAINED

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Following the excellent proposal made by my colleague from the other party in connection with the celebration of this famous Day of the Child, could we ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he is in favour of universal family allowances for all the little Canadians?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, universal family allowances have served this country very well for a long time. When the hon. member occupied my position, she went through a number of models and options with respect to its use and brought in the child tax credit, a move that I applauded. She may therefore understand that I have been doing exactly the same thing in trying to deal with the child tax credit because I believed that was a good move on her part.

LOTO CANADA

INQUIRY WHETHER DISTRIBUTORS WILL SUE FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

Could the minister tell the House whether or not Loto Canada ticket wholesalers have just sued Loto Canada for $10 million because the new government has decided to dismantle the corporation and by so doing has not respected the contracts it had signed with them?

[English]

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that no legal action has been taken by any wholesalers as far as my department is concerned.

INQUIRY WHETHER PROVINCES WILL ASSUME SHARE OF POSSIBLE DAMAGES

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Since the minister has transferred Loto Canada to the provinces, can he tell the House if it is true that he will follow the fashion started by the new government and invite the provinces to participate in the payment of the sum which will be equitably distributed to the provinces?

[English]

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPMENT OF MINE IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. The former government committed $10 million toward the initial cost of the development of the Prince mine. To date, this money has not been given to the Cape Breton Development Corporation; in fact, the Cape Breton Development Corporation has had to spend $4,700,000 of its own funds to do this work. When is Treasury Board going to pay this money which was promised to the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): If I might answer the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker—which is a very relevant and good one—the answer is simply this: Treasury Board and the cabinet are considering this matter; it will be dealt with in due course and it will not take very long.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

FOOTHILLS' ROUTE—SETTLEMENT OF INDIAN LAND CLAIMS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the minister knows, there is a great deal of serious concern about the lack of progress in the settlement of the Yukon Indian land claims. This concern is being expressed not only by the Council of Yukon Indians but also by Mr. Robert Blair, chairman of Foothills Pipe Lines and the president of Foothills Oil Pipe Lines, a sister company, who cited this lack of progress as a reason for withdrawing his company's application before the National Energy Board.

Following the recent meeting with representatives of the Council of Yukon Indians, can the minister report to the House what plans he has to get negotiations going which will lead to a satisfactory settlement of this outstanding claim, a settlement which will open the door to economic development in the north?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): In response to the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker, I must first indicate to him that meetings have been held with the Council of Yukon Indians and representatives of the Yukon territorial government. I had two meetings with the Council of Yukon Indians yesterday, and one meeting with the representatives of the Yukon territorial government. We all agreed it was essential that land claims negotiations begin and that they move forward speedily. All hon. members are interested in an early settlement.

We have not concluded the various matters that were on the table. I will be meeting with the Yukon territorial council representatives today at 5.30 and with the Council of Yukon Indians today at seven o'clock.

Mr. Penner: Is it not the case that the government really has no policy for the settlement of northern native claims? Will the minister get busy right away and apply himself to this serious matter and announce to this House, without any more delay, exactly what is the policy of the government in the settlement of these claims? Exactly what is the policy of the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question contained not one, not two, but three argumentative points.

AIR TRANSPORT

SALE OF NORDAIR—INQUIRY WHETHER QUESTION WILL BE REFERRED TO CTC

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Last week he said in the House that he intended to make a recommendation to cabinet within a month concerning the sale of Nordair. In the meantime, does he intend to refer the matter to the Canadian Transport Commission?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be making a proposal to cabinet on the disposition of Nordair and it will, naturally, follow that this will have to be approved by the CTC in due course.

[Translation]

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the Minister of Transport aware that the Canadian Transport Commission has exclusive authority to issue licences for the commercial operation of air carriers and the sale of these transportation undertakings? Is he and his government going to impose a political decision on an administrative tribunal?

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: That is not at all the intention of the government. Any change in the ownership of Nordair will, naturally, have to be approved by the CTC.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

TRADE IMBALANCE—EFFECT THEREON OF LOSS OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of State for International Trade. Does his pessimistic view of the current account trade imbalance reflect his calculation of the loss of the Argentine contract, the loss of the Japanese contract, the loss of the Mexican contract, the disturbance to Middle East trade, all of which result from the actions or inaction of this government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): First of all, we have not lost the Japanese contract. The Mexican contract is still being worked upon: there is a study which was commenced two months ago and we expect it to take about six months; then we shall be able to proceed with further negotiations in connection with that contract.

The statement I made yesterday with regard to the current account balance next year is related primarily to the fact that trade with the United States is likely to continue to be poor in the coming year. The deficit with the United States this year is $1 billion, compared with a considerable surplus last year on trade alone. That, together with the continuation of their recession next year, will likely result in an increase in the current account deficit.

Mr. Andras: Can I take it the minister's answer is that he agrees his pessimistic view of the future trade picture is very much the result of the losses of those trading opportunities and contracts, which losses are the result of the actions of this government since May 22?

Mr. Wilson: I thought I made it clear that the deterioration in the trade picture is related to the recession which we are expecting will continue in the United States next year. In addition, the over-all current account deficit will be adversely affected by the increase in dividend payments next year as a result of the continuation of deficits from which we have been suffering for four years now.

Mr. Andras: Ten o'clock.

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY

INQUIRY WHETHER INVESTIGATION INSTITUTED—PUBLICATION OF REPORT THEREON

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It is my understanding that the minister has asked the National Farm Products Marketing Council to investigate some of the allegations and charges made against CEMA.

Is the minister in a position to confirm that he has asked for an investigation? If so, can he tell the House the scope of that investigation; and, further, can he make a commitment to the House that the report, when it is finished, will be made public and that he will also refer it to the Standing Committee on Agriculture?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): In response to the hon. member's question, I did not have to contact the Farm Products Marketing Council or its chairman in order to instigate that inquiry: it is already in motion.

As to whether or not the report will be made available to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I can give no commitment at the moment. I see no problem, though, in making it available. As I indicated yesterday, we have not only tabled the annual reports, but decided to have them referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that CEMA has confirmed that it has hired in the past a company called Roygold, which is partly or wholly-owned by the general manager of CEMA, and in view of the possible—and I underline the word "possible"—implications of such a practice as far as other Crown corporations and agencies are concerned, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not he might move to have the same conflict of interest regulations as apply to government servants and government departments applied to all Crown corporations and public bodies of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): I think that is a very valuable suggestion. It is one we are considering now. We shall want to see whether it has any implications which I might not have foreseen up to this moment. If there are not, it will be our intention to move in the direction the hon. member has suggested. Indeed, we have been considering doing so for some time.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

OWNERSHIP OF OFFSHORE MINERAL RESOURCES—FEDERAL OR PROVINCIAL

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister: it has to do with the policy of the government concerning offshore mineral resources.

I would remind the right hon. gentleman of his correspondence in September with the premiers and of the basic principles which he described in that correspondence as guiding this whole matter. The first, to refresh his memory, is that the province should own the mineral resources off the continental margin off its coast; the second is that such ownership would be consistent with, and subject to, the division of legislative competence between the Parliament and the legislature.

My question is: In this division of powers, is the Prime Minister retaining for the federal government the declaratory power and the expropriation power? In other words, would the federal government, in explaining its policy, indicate that in certain circumstances it would bring back federal jurisdiction over the offshore or might even bring back the ownership of the offshore resources as the constitution presently provides?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): The purpose of the move we are making with regard to jurisdiction over resources under water is to try to bring that situation in line with provincial jurisdiction over resources under ground. The declaratory provision would apply in both cases.

Mr. Trudeau: Which is to say that the declaratory power and the expropriatory power could be used to bring these resources back under federal jurisdiction in circumstances that Parliament wished. I want to make sure that the Prime Minister is saying this, and that the policy of giving those resources to the provinces applies only until such time as the Parliament of Canada wants to bring them back.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Clark: Of course, that emergency power resting with the Government of Canada will continue to rest with the Government of Canada. But I would make it clear—and I want this to be understood not only by the Leader of the Opposition but by the provinces—that we do not contemplate invoking this power.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLICY CONCERNING OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When the Law of the Sea Conference held its ninth session in New York last August, this government's lack of interest was deeply regretted, because there was not a single minister present. An important subject of major significance for Canada is the development of offshore mineral resources. In 1978, the Canadian delegation proposed a ceiling on the production of nickel extracted from offshore nodules. It seemed possible to have this production ceiling formula accepted, but some consumer countries like Japan and those in Europe will no longer accept it.

Could the hon. minister advise the House about the diplomatic steps she will take with those countries to make sure that they accept the Canadian formula concerning the ceiling on the development of offshore resources, in order to protect the mining industry in Canada and prevent the closing of nickel mining operations in Sudbury and copper mining operations in the Gaspé region?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this government attaches the utmost importance to the successful conclusion of the Law of the Sea Conference next year. My colleagues and I met the Canadian delegation both before and immediately after the last session. Concerning the ceiling to be put on the production of nickel, I must say that Canada continues to defend its interests and to exert pressures on other countries. In this connection, I have personally raised this question with the American Secretary of State, Mr. Vance, with the members of the European Economic Community and with other foreign affairs ministers.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL DISCUSS EXPLORATION OF OFFSHORE MINERALS WITH PRESIDENT CARTER

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the present state of our mining industry, does the Prime Minister intend to add this matter of overmining of offshore nodules to the agenda of his conference with President Carter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter I would be willing to take up with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and, if it appears in the interest of our country that I should discuss it with President Carter, I would certainly be willing to do so.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO POLICE KILLING OF CAUGHNAWAGAN

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it relates to the inexcusable police killing of a Caughnawaga resident last weekend.

Does the minister intend to ask the Solicitor General to launch an independent inquiry into this disgraceful episode; or do the minister and his colleague, the Solicitor General, intend to request the establishment of a joint inquiry into this sorry affair by representatives of their ministeries as well as appropriate representatives from Quebec?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to the hon. member and to members of the House that I sent my condolences to the bereaved family following the incident. A coroner has been appointed, Mr. Cyrille Delage, for the purpose of having a full inquest. We have been in contact with the chief of Caughnawaga, and we are trying to clear my schedule so that I can go down there on Monday or Tuesday not only to discuss the police issue but other issues.

AGRICULTURE

CORN DRYING—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO CAUSE OF PROPANE SHORTAGE

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Since this is harvest time for grain farmers, and since they must use dryers and there is a shortage of propane gas, can the Minister of Agriculture order an immediate inquiry to ascertain the cause of this shortage of gas which is harming Quebec farmers?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's interest. I must confess, in all honesty, that I am not aware of the fact that this situation exists. If the hon. member wishes to share some information with me, I can give him a commitment that I will consult with my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and will do everything possible to overcome the shortage, if indeed that shortage does exist.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

FOOTHILLS' ROUTE—CONSULTATIONS WITH U.S.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of our exchange yesterday. The minister was good enough to tell us that she has raised the matter of Foothills with Mr. Vance. Would she be good enough to tell me the date? Was it during the regular consultation at the United Nations in the fall that the Canadian foreign minister had with the Secretary of State for the United States?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This was among many other matters that I discussed with the Secretary of State, Mr. Vance, concerning both our east and west coasts during our discussions in Tokyo at the time of the economic conference.

The hon. member may also wish to be informed, at this time, that I have heard from the president of Foothills to the effect that the support accorded by this government to the Foothills' project has been very gratefully welcomed and that Foothills will again be submitting their application to the National Energy Board tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I am just a little puzzled by the hon. member's answer, because the Prime Minister told us not so long ago that the matter was not raised at Tokyo.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: The question is whether or not the Prime Minister had raised it. I had said that I had been the one who had spoken to the U.S. Secretary of State. I trust the hon. member will realize that there was more than one person at the Tokyo conference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

GRAIN—USE OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the port of Churchill shipped only 500,000 tonnes this year instead of the 600,000 tonnes which was the target, and since the first ship to Churchill did not reach there until August 9 instead of mid-July—and even at that time there was not enough grain at that port—would the minister inform the House of the steps the government will take to guarantee that this northern port is used to full capacity for the benefit of all Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the hon. member's question and I assure him and other hon. members of the House of this government's support for the greater utilization of the port of Churchill. To that end, we will be taking steps to encourage its increased utilization both in terms of providing better access and of improving the facilities on site.

We are distressed by the fact that the shipments are down this year compared with last year. However, it was essentially a matter of supply, and I have discussed this matter with the Canadian Wheat Board officials. I am sure that, together, we will be able to put our act together and ensure we will have record shipments for the next year.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is possible and efficient to use Canadian icebreakers in Canada's north and this would help to lengthen the season, would the minister provide a guarantee that icebreakers will be used next spring and that Canadian ships will be available, instead of our having to wait for weeks for foreign ships to come to our ports?

Mr. Mazankowski: That is a matter that has been considered. As a matter of fact, it had been hoped that we would be able to get a load out of Churchill prior to the regular shipping season; however, we were not able to get an order at that time. But that work is still going on and the marine administrator is in contact with officials of the Canadian Wheat Board and other interested parties to make the necessary arrangements to ensure we can work toward extending the season.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PRIORITIES OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FOR PROGRAMS

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Supply and Services. Since he indicated recently that a meeting between federal ministers and their Quebec counterparts would take place in Montreal or Quebec City, with a view to discussing certain priorities and projects that the federal government could carry out in Quebec with the $85 million that GM does not want to use for the moment, could the minister tell us whether he intends to apply pressure, or merely indicate to the Quebec government whether he intends to recommend that the decentralization program involving the Jonquière taxation data centre be carried out? Further, does he really intend to maintain the priorities of the federal government rather than those of the provincial government?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, obviously during his visit throughout Canada the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will discuss economic priorities with each province. The minister responsible for energy and commerce, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations and myself will discuss, during our visit, an economic scheme which would affect mostly Quebec and I would like to assure the hon. member that the present government knows what projects ought to be continued. But the right hon. Prime Minister agreed—and I think this is true to his policy—to consult with the provinces before trying to reconcile the objectives of both sides.

QUEBEC—INQUIRY WHETHER SUBSIDIES WILL INCREASE

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if the government really intends to spend more money in Quebec than was previously planned. Furthermore, is the $85 million in addition to what was normally going to be spent in Quebec, or is it just a transfer which in fact will add nothing to what was going to be spent in Quebec anyway? I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, because rumour has it that the federal government is going to spend more in Quebec than was previously planned, which I think must be inaccurate. I would like the minister to clarify that matter.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member got that information. What I know is that we are prepared to listen to the provinces, including Quebec, and to discuss with the Quebec government priorities in that province which would be in line with national objectives. As for saying whether the amounts will be more or less important than had been planned, I will let the minister responsible answer that question. The hon. member should know that we have already shown great generosity in the GM case, because while the former government had promised $50 million, we raised that offer to $80 million.

TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT PRIORITY TO IMPROVEMENT OF SERVICE BETWEEN MONTREAL AND MIRABEL

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, in view of the urgent need to improve ground transportation between Mirabel and downtown Montreal via Laval, and to help make international airport services at Mirabel profitable, is it the minister's intention when he meets with the Quebec government to consider that request as a priority, as something that is urgently needed and that would also provide jobs during the construction period and for future generations?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt we consider that project as very important, and in the views of some Liberals it is more important than the Place Guy Favreau project. At any rate, I would repeat for the benefit of the member that we want to hear the recommendations and submissions of the Quebec government, after which we will decide.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have received three notices of privilege, one from the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), one from the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and a third one just now from the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I presume the question of privilege of the hon. member for Algoma arises out of today's question period. Therefore I think I should take it into account now, and I will do the other two in the order I have just indicated.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FOSTER—LOST TRADE OPPORTUNITIES—REQUEST FOR DEPARTMENTAL STUDIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of the question which I directed to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) this afternoon. I put a question to him concerning the trade opportunities which were lost due to the Israeli embassy question. In his response he indicated that he was not prepared to make available to members of this House copies of the studies which had been done by his department, yet he indicated that he was making these studies available to the companies which were involved.

It would seem to me that on this day, when we will be debating freedom of information legislation in the House, the hon. minister would want to reconsider his position and make these studies available to members. Surely freedom of information legislation will give members a new privilege, in that they will have access to greater numbers of government documents on which to base their opinions and judge government programs. I am not asking for the individual documentation or the correspondence with individual companies. I am asking for the over-all studies which have been made available to companies, yet the minister has indicated that he is unwilling to make them available to members of the House.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of which studies the hon. member is referring to that have been made available to individual companies. What I said in answer to his question was that the studies which have been done are studies discussing the particular statements or comments made to us in relation to their own particular business in the Middle East. That is the information which I said that I could not make available to the House because it is strictly confidential.

MR. SKELLY—RADIO OPERATORS' DISPUTE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW REMARKS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an important question of privilege. I refer to an answer given yesterday in the House by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) concerning the withdrawal of designated services by flight service centre and coastguard radio operators. The statements made by the minister in the House yesterday led members to believe that designated services were being provided when in fact they are not. Also his remarks led members of the House to believe that there had been no recorded incidents where flight safety had been compromised. This is certainly not the case.

To substantiate my second point first, in the last two days there have been more than 50 major breaches of air safety in western Canada. In fact, these were reported to the Ministry of Transport. I would suggest that some of the more serious ones are very reminiscent of the scenario which unfolded in places like Tenerife and Cranbrook where equipment was left on the runway, where instances of aircraft taking off in different directions on the same runway have occurred.

On the second point I would suggest the minister's statement that designated services are still being provided is not the case. In fact it has been reported widely that operators have withdrawn all services except guarding emergency frequencies. I would ask the minister to withdraw his statements, conduct an immediate investigation and report to the House tomorrow on what he plans to do with this very serious situation.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the hon. member's question of privilege, because I think it might give me an opportunity to clarify what may have been a misinterpretation. If the hon. member looks at my answer, I think he will see that I said the following:

I am informed that where the prescribed duties are being carried out by the designated employees as per schedule, there are no difficulties.

I think that is the key word. Certainly it was not my intention to imply that in all cases the necessary services to be provided by the designated employees in fact were being carried out.

Furthermore, I indicated at the time that I had not been informed of any recorded concerns of matters affecting safety or security, and that if the hon. member in fact had some examples, I would be pleased to look into them. I have been informed by the department that the allegations referred to in a press conference yesterday in connection with Quesnel, Lynn Lake, Quebec City, Fort Chimo, Lac Rone Riviere, Schefferville, Uranium City and Toronto do not appear to be based on any fact or foundation. As far as the preliminary investigations are concerned, I want to assure the hon. member, the House and the public that these matters are being investigated currently by Department of Transport officials.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE OF PHOTOGRAPHERS IN CHAMBER

Mr. Speaker: Before dealing with the question of privilege of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), may I take this moment to inform the House that members will have observed still photographers on either side of the chamber during the last couple of days. Earlier in the week I had intended to indicate that last year this matter was raised with the special committee having to do with television in the House. As a result of the position the print media had been put in since the introduction of television, they are not able to take direct photographs which they can use in print, as is available to the television or electronic media. Therefore, they asked if we might try at some time to experiment with this.

Nothing could be done at that time. Recently I discussed this matter very briefly with the House leaders and indicated that we ought to experiment for a period of a week or perhaps two. During this time it is our intention to take these photographs. They will not be used in any way except for the internal use of the House, for examination by House leaders and discussion with the parties, to determine whether it is appropriate to carry this practice on or discontinue it. If it is appropriate to carry it on, we shall discuss upon what basis, under what controls and under what regulation.

I simply want to indicate to the House that there is this request that these photographs be made available, not only for journalists but for archival and related purposes—for library purposes, biographers and things of that sort. There have been quite a number of requests of this nature. Until we do an experiment of this sort, we are not really able to evaluate the difficulties or the advantages of it. Therefore, this is to be treated purely as an experimental period of approximately a week or ten days, at which time it will be evaluated by House leaders, and in turn, I presume, discussed with caucuses before anything further is done.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RODRIGUEZ—PROCEEDINGS OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege that I consider to be an extreme one which infringes not only on my rights as a member of this House but on the rights of the members of this House on either side.

The question of privilege arises from an incident which took place last evening at the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We are all aware that the standing committees of the House are in control of their own agendas and their meeting times subject, of course, only to this House.

The first meeting of that standing committee last Thursday gave its steering committee a direction by agreeing that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), as the person responsible for monetary and fiscal policy in this country, should be asked to appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs first, to be followed later on by the governor of the Bank of Canada. The steering committee meeting had in attendance the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ritchie York East), the chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and representatives from the major parties on both sides of this House.

The steering committee submitted its report last evening to the committee and, lo and behold, there was the parliamentary secretary presenting an amendment to that agreement that had been reached. The amendment proposed by the parliamentary secretary in effect reversed the order of appearance before the standing committee. It put the governor of the Bank of Canada first and the finance minister somewhere down the line.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we should keep in mind the statement by this government in the Speech from the Throne at page 4, as follows:

> Proposals will be submitted to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to strengthen the powers and resources of parliamentary committees, to accord more prominence to private members' initiatives, and to make my ministers more accountable to you.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the ministers are accountable to Parliament; it is not the committees that are accountable to the minister. That was the process followed by the previous government. Here we have a wonderful opportunity for this government to start off on a new beginning, on a new footing, but in fact we have the Minister of Finance pulling the strings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I resent that as a member, and members of this House ought to resent it. The committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) will realize that even if I accept his entire premise without any qualification, he is in serious difficulty in attempting to establish this matter as a question of privilege. He indicated that steps had been taken at the steering committee and that in turn the steering committee reported and dealt with it in a certain way, a way that he resents. I accept all that and his resentment is his right. Nevertheless, the proceedings of a committee remain the proceedings of the committee. As the hon. member understands, this House ought not ever to be considered as a court of appeal in respect of a committee's decision on procedural matters or on other matters taken in the committee.

If the hon. member wishes to reopen the matter before that standing committee, that can be done. If he wishes to take action when that committee endeavours to report, there are certain things that may take place. However, I have to accept what he has described and examine it to see whether on its face it constitutes privilege, but from what he has told me so far I am not able to do that.

Mr. Rodriguez: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not resent the report of the steering committee. What I resent is the interference by the Minister of Finance with an agreement that had been reached among members of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I do not appreciate this attempt to pull the strings of a standing committee of Parliament to which the minister is subject. It is not the committee that is subject to the Minister of Finance. If he wants to hide behind the governor of the Bank of Canada, let him go right ahead and do that, but do not make me a party to that kind of jiggery-pokery.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have indicated to the hon. member that he has raised what he considers to be matter of resentment. It may even be a grievance that he can air before the committee. However, I cannot find any basis for privilege in it.

MR. YURKO—MOTION ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—OMISSION IN OFFICIAL REPORT

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to draw to your attention and to the attention of the House a serious printing error in Hansard which I noted last night. This is an unfortunate printing error but it is necessary that I point it out and that Hansard should correct it, as it changes the entire meaning of a paragraph.

The error relates to notice of motion No. 2 which was debated in this House on Monday, October 22. In the Monday, October 22 order paper, the second paragraph in paragraph 10 read as follows:

> On the receipt of such validated petition, the Parliament of Canada shall, before the lapsing of two full years from the date of receipt of the validated petition, hold a national referendum on the substance of the petition and shall enact into law the substance of the petition if such petition receives a 75 per cent plurality of all votes in Canada and no less than a 50 per cent plurality of all votes in each and every province of Canada.

I should note that Votes and Proceedings of October 22, 1979, is identical in this respect to the order paper. However, Mr. Speaker, Hansard itself has an entirely different version and I shall read it as follows:

> On the receipt of such validated petition, the Parliament of Canada shall, before the lapsing of two full years from the date of receipt of the validated petition, hold a national referendum on the substance of the petition if such petition receives a 75 per cent plurality of all votes in Canada and no less than a 50 per cent plurality of all votes in each and every province of Canada.

The sentence "and shall enact into law the substance of the petition" was left out of Hansard. I brought this to the attention of Hansard and I hope the correction will be made.

MR. KNOWLES—ACTING MINISTERS—TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier today the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) responded to a question in his capacity as the Acting Minister of Finance, which leads me to suggest that it would be of advantage to all members of this House if the order in council indicating who are the various acting ministers could be tabled, so that we might all know. Perhaps if the government House leader arranged for the tabling of that order in council, it could be appended either to Votes and Proceedings or to Hansard so we could all have it.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I tabled that order in council on the second or third day of this Parliament. I have another one changing the acting capacity from one minister to another which I intend to table either today or tomorrow. I assure my friend that the other order in council was tabled here, I forget the day, but either on the second or third day.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is a worthy suggestion that either the previous order in council, or the proposed one, if it is comprehensive, should be—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are the same, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I was not certain whether the new order in council dealt with only one change or constituted a comprehensive list. In any case, I suggest that a comprehensive order in council covering all acting ministers ought to be printed at some time as an appendix to Hansard, perhaps today or as soon as possible.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) would indicate whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. de Cotret), who is in the other place, has an acting minister in the House of Commons?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I can deal with that in just a moment. The first acting minister for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development is the Hon. Michael H. Wilson, Minister of State for International Trade. In fact, there are two ministers in the House, and the second acting minister is the Minister of State for Small Business and Industry (Mr. Huntington).

● (1520)

Mr. MacEachen: I have one further point, Mr. Speaker. I have been puzzled again by the reply of the hon. minister. Did the minister take under consideration the unusual situation which was created by having Mr. Wilson, as he called him—and I do it respectfully—as the acting minister when he has not had assigned to him any statutory authority? I have been wondering how it is possible for the minister to operate not only as Minister of State for International Trade but also as an acting minister, when as far as I know no responsibility has been assigned to him by order in council except to describe him as an assistant to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would the minister consider that and give us some clarification?

Private Members' Public Bills

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the minister has authority under an order in council, so I am advised. In any event there is an order in council, 1979-2783, an order of the Government of Canada, designating the hon. gentleman as the acting minister. The hon. gentleman is a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada, and I think that that ought to satisfy my good friend with respect to the minister's capacity. Moreover, I want the hon. member and you, sir, to know that the Government of Canada is exceedingly proud of the Minister of State for International Trade and the way in which he has conducted himself in this House.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING ACCESS TO GOVERNMENT RECORDS

Hon. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF PUBLIC BILLS ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Speaker: May I refer hon. members to the practice which has been followed by the House invariably in the recent past with regard to the introduction and first reading of private members' public bills. On today's order paper there are listed some 285 bills standing in the names of various hon. members. It was, of course, not practical or possible for the Chair to review the provisions of each of these bills. Might I therefore suggest to the House that we adopt the procedure which was agreed upon in the past several sessions, namely, that we proceed to the introduction and first reading of these bills today so that each may be scrutinized between now and its calling for second reading, in order to allow the Chair to consider whether or not there are defects in the bills with respect to the practices and usages of the House.

I suggest that, by unanimous consent, all the private members' public bills listed for introduction on today's order paper be deemed to have been introduced, given first reading, ordered to be printed and to stand for second reading at the next sitting of the House, subject, as always, to a subsequent examination as to the procedural regularity of each bill.

Is the procedure to which I have just referred agreeable to the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. While perusing the list I found at approximately No. 275—actually it appears as the second item in the first column on page 20 of the order paper—a bill which is in my name. It reads:

An act to change the name of the electoral district of Edmonton West.

That is complete news to me. There has actually been a bill submitted with wording to the effect "An act to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act". It was Bill C-342 introduced last year. How on earth somebody would connect that with changing the name of Edmonton West, which is, I suppose, the most historic name in the province of Alberta, I do not know. Such a proposal would only merit that I be run out of town on a rail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I take it that in the sense of the hon. member's representation, that item will be deleted from the order paper as soon as possible, which we will do. It is so ordered.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MISS MACDONALD—FOOTHILLS PROJECT—RESPONSE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, earlier today in response to a question from the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen), I think I used the words, with regard to Foothills and their wire to me, that they would be submitting an application tomorrow morning. In order to clarify that I should read their actual words regarding what they will be submitting to the National Energy Board:

Tomorrow morning, Wednesday, Foothills will file with the NEB another four volumes of material including 1,150 pages and 60 maps. Thus we have complied with all the information requests of the board and the Foothills all land route application is ready to be heard when we make that formal request of the board.

ATOMIC ENERGY

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

October 22, 1979—The President of the Privy Council:

That a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to inquire into the economic, social, environmental, health and international considerations bearing upon the role of the Government of Canada in the development, use, regulation and export of nuclear energy, including but not limited to:

(a) energy and economic policy considerations:

(i) the costs, risks and benefits of nuclear electric generation in comparison with practical alternatives;

(ii) the role of fission power in the national energy economy;

(iii) the allocation of federal research and development funds for nuclear energy matters, including the potential for a Canadian role in the development of fusion technology;

(iv) the relation of Canadian nuclear science and technology to industrial strategy and quality of employment objectives;

(b) social and environmental policy considerations:

(i) the basis for the adequacy of national nuclear, health, safety and environmental standards and of compliance monitoring;

(ii) the responsibility for and adequacy of radioactive waste management, both high and low level;

(iii) public rights of access to information in nuclear matters;

(c) federal-provincial considerations:

(i) an examination of federal instruments, structures and responsibilities for the development and regulation of nuclear equipment, technology, materials and facilities;

(ii) the role of federal agencies and the adequacy of federal legislation in the event of a nuclear accident and in the prevention of harm to man and the natural environment;

(iii) the evolution of intergovernmental arrangements for, and views of the provinces on, the financing of nuclear energy;

(d) international considerations:

(i) an examination of Canada's nuclear export policy;

(ii) an examination of Canada's safeguards requirements for the export of materials, nuclear materials, equipment and information in the context of the development of an effective international non-proliferation system;

that ten members of the House of Commons to be designated at a later date be members on the part of this House on the special joint committee;

that the committee have power to appoint from among its members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate such sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House; that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

that the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons; that the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada; that the committee be empowered to retain the services of expert advisors and to commission studies or research to assist in its work and that it also be empowered to retain such professional, technical, clerical and stenographic help as may be required; that the committee submit reports from time to time and in any case a final report not later than October 31, 1980 which shall include recommendations for the revision or replacement, if need be, of the Atomic Energy Control Act together with such other matters within its general mandate as it wishes to report on or recommend;

that a quorum of the committee be 7 members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when 5 members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that that House do unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it to be advisable, . . . members to act on the proposed special joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section 2 of Standing Order 21, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS, 1867 TO 1974

REVIEW OF RULES BY STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

On the order: Government notices of motion:

October 22, 1979—The President of the Privy Council:

That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized pursuant to section 7, chapter 13, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, to review the Rules provided by subsection 51(1) of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1974, as amended by the British North America Act (No. 2), 1974, and to make recommendations with respect to any amendments, alterations or modifications thereto that appear to the committee then to be necessary or desirable.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

RAILWAYS

CANCELLATION OF TRANSCONTINENTAL PASSENGER RAIL SERVICE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), under the provisions of Standing Order 26, to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing an important and specific matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the cancellation of transcontinental passenger rail service to several important areas and centres across Canada due to take effect on Saturday of this week, despite a serious breach of the principles of democracy and federalism in the making of these decisions, specifically, the lack of opportunity for public appeal and the absence of provincial consultation, and in spite of the terrible inconvenience that will be caused to the people in the areas and centres affected, with service to New Westminster and Fort Langley in British Columbia being cancelled, service between Capreol and Winnipeg and between Edmundston and Quebec City being cancelled, and service in northern New Brunswick being drastically cut back.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 26, the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) gave me notice, as required within the rule, within the time prescribed and gave me also an opportunity, therefore, to consider whether or not this kind of matter is proper for discussion under Standing Order 26.

Hon. members will realize that it is with some difficulty that the emergency rule, as it is sometimes called, would be applied to a decision to be taken by a board. Obviously, there are circumstances in which that could take place, but on the face of it, it certainly does not appear to be the general area in which we would be looking for the application of an emergency.

I would like to refer the hon. member, with respect to the guidance and application of this rule, to the language of subparagraph 16(a) of the Standing Order which reads:

The right to move the adjournment of the House for the above purposes is subject to the following conditions:

(a) The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;—

S.O. 26

● (1530)

In this case it is difficult to see that a genuine emergency of that nature is contemplated when it is a decision before a regularly constituted board. Although I ought not to forever rule that out it certainly would not on the face of it appear to be the proper application of the rule.

In addition, in this particular case, of course, this matter can scarcely be said to come upon the House as a surprise. In fact, the hon. member's seatmate raised the matter by way of question on October 12, in which the hon. member then asked whether on that particular day the Minister of Transport proposed to redirect any of the deliberations that were then before the Canadian Transport Commission about this matter.

Furthermore, I would have to take into account the fact that it is now not only a matter of weeks or months but in fact a matter of years that the Via Rail service was established with the intention of rationalizing into one service the existing two service transportation facility. Obviously that contemplated the cancellation of certain runs. That has taken place over not only one set of hearings but several sets of hearings.

The hon. member, of course, is not alone in expressing her displeasure at the actual decisions and cancellations at the hearings and at the discussions that have taken place, or at the absence of the hearings, as the hon. member's deskmate now reminds me again.

In any case, in case there were any doubt about this matter, I have looked at the precedents for guidance and happily have been able to refer to a decision of my predecessor who, in his usual distinguished way, dealt with a similar matter on June 22, 1970. At that time the reasons had to do with matters before the Canadian Radio and Television Commission. The hon. member for Matane at that time had filed a notice pursuant to Standing Order 26 requesting that a similar kind of unhappy decision or treatment before that board be taken into account under this rule. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux then said the following:

May I suggest to hon. members that the decisions taken by commissions while carrying out their normal functions should not constitute matters for urgent discussions. Even under the circumstances which seem to cause the hon. member some concern, it would seem to me difficult to justify the adjournment of our proceedings to allow interested members to express their views. I would point out to the House that if the CRTC decision was only made public recently, the problem itself has been discussed and commented, even in a controversial manner for several months, so that hon. members have had many occasions to express their views and present arguments for and against the project in question.

That reasoning seems to me to apply very directly to the present circumstances. I would therefore have to conclude that while there may be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. While there may be many criticisms levelled, or concerns or many disagreements expressed, at the quality of the hearings or even in fact, as in this case, the complaint that there were insufficient or no hearings at all into this phase—this is, after all, a tertiary or at least secondary phase of a series of matters concerning rail transportation since the inception of Via Rail service—it would hardly seem appropriate to intervene now on the question of an emergency with this rather secondary or tertiary phase, as was exactly the case in the previous ruling to which I have referred. Therefore, I do not think this is a proper matter for consideration under Standing Order 26.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that they be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on a point of order.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I just heard the parliamentary secretary say there was to be no production of papers today. I should like to refer him specifically to two motions on which I thought at this first opportunity he would be most anxious to table the documents. The first is No. 3, which deals with the decentralization of the Department of Veterans Affairs to the province of Prince Edward Island. In view of the flip-flop of the government in changing its mind and deciding to follow through with the previous government's intention to decentralize to Prince Edward Island, I assumed automatically that the documents it must have in its possession to arrive at that conclusion would be tabled today. I suggest that since this is an important item for consideration, he should give consideration to tabling them next week at that opportunity.

I should also like to draw his attention to item No. 10. This item was much sought after by the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander) who presumably has access to this document. I suggest that since it is now in the hands of the government whose members were so anxious to get it in the last Parliament, he should also give his attention to producing this document for all members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Shall the notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POST OFFICE

MEASURE RESPECTING CERTAIN POSTAL RATES

The House resumed from Monday, October 22, 1979, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fraser that Bill C-11, respecting certain postal rates, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the other evening I was participating in debate on second reading of Bill C-11, which is really a bill in principle to retroactively approve by Parliament an order in council made under the Financial Administration Act to justify and legalize increases in postal rates. I said at that time, Mr. Speaker, that we agreed in principle with the bill. We have no quarrel with it. Indeed, we welcomed the new approach that, in effect, orders in council made under the Financial Administration Act be brought to Parliament. That was a good principle that was being established by this government and we had no problem with it.

We then turned our attention, Mr. Speaker, to problems we felt this government could have solved with respect to postal services in this country. We would have hoped they would place the same assiduity into solving problems in the Post Office as they had done in dealing with retroactive postal rate increases. We said first off that they were well aware of the importance of the postal service to the people of Canada. Indeed, they were well aware that it is probably the most important public service problem in this country today.

We further pointed out that, in effect, knowing that problem, we now have a ministry related to postal services—a Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser) who has been given dual responsibility. One would have thought that the Postmaster General would have his hands full just dealing with problems in the Post Office and trying to bring about harmony in the post office which would result in good postal service for the people of Canada for the taxes they pay. That is the first problem.

Why did the government lay on the Postmaster General the onerous task of dealing with post office problems? It seems to us on this side of the House that there should have been one minister with that responsibility. We said that, in effect, while they were in opposition the Conservative party knew well the problems in the Post Office. Indeed, their speeches could fill books and books of Hansard in which they properly identified the major problem in the Post Office, which is a human problem—the relationship between management and workers in the Post Office. The government therefore had an opportunity, a golden opportunity, to make a new beginning. They did not have to apologize for the government of the past. It was not of their political stripe. They could have dumped the problem on the previous government and had a new beginning. Why did they not wipe out the 60,000 grievances which are hanging fire and which are the cause for much of the abrasiveness in management-personnel relationships within the Post Office? They are allowing those grievances to stand.

• (1540)

We also raised the question of the leadership in the Post Office. In particular, I will be emphatic in saying that the deputy postmaster general, Mr. J. C. Corkery, and Mr. J. A. Paré, the assistant deputy postmaster general, personnel, ought to have been removed from their positions. What a wonderful opportunity it would have been for the government to have removed them. It could have blamed them for being Liberals. Maybe someone found out they were Tories, I do not know, but it would have been a wonderful opportunity to wipe them out.

Mr. Fraser: The hon. member made this speech the other night.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am just recapping so that it will read with some continuity in Hansard.

Mr. Fraser: It is appreciated.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad that the minister is here, Mr. Speaker; I make these suggestions in all honesty and fair-mindedness. I think that Mr. Corkery and Mr. Paré have been the bones of contention in the Post Office. Indeed, the insights that Mr. Corkery had are well documented in transcripts of the trial of Jean-Claude Parrot. I will quote from that transcript because it gives us an insight into the kind of leadership in the Post Office, the leadership of Mr. Corkery. At page 221 of the transcript of the trial it deals with the impressions Mr. Paré said he had. Indeed, it was part and parcel of the strategizing to deal with the latest incident of industrial dispute in the Post Office. The question asked was this:

Did you have any particular, apart from this information gathering technique, did you have any other strategy at the point of the legal strike call?

Mr. Corkery answered:

Well, I think our strategy basically had to be based, was based on the assumption that the majority of the employees would not support a full-blown strike. Whether that was valid or not nevertheless it was the strategy on which we based our planning, and really, in that situation, it was a "wait and see" kind of strategy—the extent of it, the degree of it, could they sustain it, or would it die of its own accord.

Here we have management of the Post Office entering into negotiation with a strategy in mind that, in effect, the workers could not sustain a strike anyway, so why should they have to negotiate in good faith? In my opinion that is very eye-opening, and I recommend to the minister that he read this transcript. If I had a person responsible to me as a manager, I would fire him on the spot after reading this transcript.

At page 224 of the transcript the question asked was:

So your assessment, let us say by the 17th October, would be what, in relation to the over-all operation?

The answer given by Mr. Corkery was as follows:

We had misjudged, miscalculated our strategy, and basically they had been able to launch a full-blown strike, and we were out of it.

Finally on page 254 the question asked was this:

And it was your view, when you found out what was going on in the field, that legislation would not be required? When you found out what was going on, as you indicated this morning, you were of the view that the majority of the employees of the Post Office, CUPW, would not support a strike?

The answer to that question was this:

Our original recommendation to our minister was on the basis that we thought that if we went the legal strike route they would not be able to sustain the strike.

So the advice and the whole strategy for negotiations that the minister was getting from chief personnel in his department was based on the fact that they believed the workers could not sustain a strike. That is bargaining in bad faith. Mr. Speaker, that is absolute bargaining in bad faith.

I make this suggestion again to the minister, that in my opinion the top brass of the Post Office should be removed. If he wants to shuffle them off to Buffalo or send them to the Senate or promote them to the level of their incompetence, go right ahead. But I think these people have been abrasive in terms of human relation in the Post Office and ought to be removed. That is the only way we can create any sort of harmonious industrial climate in the Post Office. I make those suggestions to the minister in good faith. The minister has a golden opportunity to start again.

My last point concerns the question of the Crown corporation. I heard those phonies on the Liberal opposition benches asking the minister when he will bring in the Crown corporation bill. Those people had 16 years to do it. There were several recommendations by way of royal commissions recommending the establishment of a Crown corporation in the Post Office. When was the bill brought in for a Crown corporation in the Post Office? It was in the twilight months of Liberal office before the last election. So those people were not serious about the Crown corporation.

I say to the minister that it gives me some cause for concern when he says that the Crown corporation bill will be brought in after Christmas. He did not say which Christmas. I wish the minister would indicate which Christmas. Will it be the Christmas of 1980, the Christmas of 1981 or the Christmas of 1983? The workers themselves in the Post Office agreed to the suggestion that the Post Office ought to be made a Crown corporation.

There is one further thing that gives me some cause for concern. I asked the Postmaster General—and he is a fine chap—if he would hold firm because in his back benches he has a gentleman, now elected to this House from York East, who undertook a study for the Conservative party when it was in opposition with respect to the Post Office. Among his suggestions I find two of them which are totally odious and would indeed exacerbate conditions in the Post Office at this time. One suggestion he proposed—and I am speaking of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Ritchie), who I think has a following in those back benches—was the removal of the right to strike by postal workers. I cannot think of any action that would throw the Post Office into even more turmoil than we have experienced over the last 16 years than this one. I urge the minister to ignore that recommendation completely.

The second recommendation which gives us concern on this side of the House is the one that proposes that those sectors of the Post Office which are flexible or viable should be sheared off to the private sector—in other words, those parts of the Post Office which generate surplus so that we can cross-subsidize those parts of the Post Office that are predominately service. In effect, he is promoting privatization. I cannot think of anything more detrimental to the Post Office than shearing off the potentially profitable sectors of the postal service into private hands. In effect, what will happen is that the deficits in the Post Office will rise, Parliament will be asked to increase postal rates continually and, of course, it will discourage public usage. That is a dead end, a cul-de-sac. I suggest that the minister ignore those two particular recommendations of the Ritchie report completely because they are two of the most dangerous proposals in the report.

I do not know what can be done in this regard, although I think the Postmaster General recognizes the problems, but how the previous administration could have proceeded against the leader of CUPW, a very brave union leader in this country, I cannot understand. The workers were given the right to remove their services, they were given the right to collective bargaining, but the minute they acted as a trade union, based on misinformation and miscalculation by Mr. Corkery, lo and behold, Parliament forced those workers back to work 24 hours after their strike began. That legal action by the previous administration has aggravated and created a festering sore for years to come. I urge the minister that if there is anything he can do to halt this whole process of Mr. Parrot going to jail to do so. I think it is unseeming that the power of Parliament was used to crush the leadership of 20,000 workers. All they were doing was acting in the manner which was consistent with good trade union leadership, and that was to represent their leader as vigorously as he was elected to be their leader.

I do not know what can be done from a legal standpoint. I ask the minister to look at the possibilities as to what can be done. I see the minister rising, so I will resume my seat. Hopefully, he will have something to say.

Mr. Fraser: I take it that the hon. member has—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister rising to participate in the debate or to answer a question? It is not the practice for a member who has the floor to direct a question to another member. The minister will have an opportunity when closing the debate to answer questions. Otherwise we will have confusion. Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fraser: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Certain questions have quite clearly been put to me in the hon. member's closing remarks. I am prepared to meet some of those directly at this time if it is the wish of the House that I do so. I will not be long. If it is not the wish of the House and Your Honour is ruling that I rise at the close of debate, that is what I will do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister has the right to reply at the end of the debate. He has already spoken. If another member seeks the floor, there may be like questions from other members and the minister would be standing up regularly. It would be like Committee of the Whole and that is not the normal procedure when the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will not keep the minister long from replying to the very pertinent questions put to him. However, there are a few comments I wish to make in this debate. What the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) said may in the course of my remarks provide a very useful prelude.

I first want to congratulate Your Honour for sitting where you do. The wisdom of that has been shown by the remarkable perception you just showed in your comments on the point of order.

This is a rather traumatic experience for me. I will be compelled during the course of this debate to say something complimentary to the minister. After 16 years in opposition, that is rather hard to do. During the 16 years I sat in opposition, I tried desperately to find ways and means to compliment ministers then sitting on this side. Unfortunately, they gave me little opportunity to do so. I want to put on record that I am not going to make a practice of this, that even on this side ministers will have to earn the right before I say things which are satisfactory and complimentary.

In this bill the minister has been wise to repair an omission which took place during the aegis of the former administration. He has also been wise as a lawyer to take a decision to regularize attempts made by the previous administration to fix postal rates by regulation and order in council under section 13(b) of the Financial Administration Act.

The government won the first round in the court of first instance, the Federal Court. I read the judgment and the reasons for judgment. Over the two or three years this has been an issue, I have examined the statutes and regulations. In my opinion, the government would have lost and deserved to have lost on appeal in connection with this particular trial.

Let me put on record very briefly the circumstances leading up to this amendment. The Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser) has already done that, but I would like to elaborate to some extent. The fixing of postal rates has, over the years, been the prerogative of Parliament. It so intimately and in such detail affects the lives of ordinary people that, to all intents and purposes, it is akin to a form of taxation. If there is one principle which should abide in this House, it is that taxation of the public and the taking of money from the public in the form of fixing of postal rates should not be done until there is an opportunity to redress grievances.

That is the crowning feature in the process of legislation and taxation by legislation. I am not going to go into the details of the problems we have had with the Post Office. They are there. No doubt they will be discussed and debated for some time and new legislation will be brought forward. However, there is no doubt that over the past three or four years, if the government had seen fit, as it should have, to bring in legislation to fix postal rates, as has been the custom since confederation, it would have provided an opportunity for members of this House, the public, the unions and consuming public to have ventilated their grievances. There would have been a fair chance from 1974 or 1975 on for bills to be brought into this House to increase postal rates and for representations to be made during the course of debate and committee hearings.

I am not naive enough to believe that this House has the magic cure for all problems. I recognize its virtues as well as the fact that it has warts and defects, but it does provide a forum in a situation of this kind. I suggest to members of this House and the government that they not neglect in future any opportunity to provide to the members of this House, representing the public, the opportunity to debate and discuss at length and in detail problems which arise. I have every reason to believe if that had been done, it would have alleviated or smoothed over some of the problems.

For many years I practised law in a small town. I had people come to me and say "Mr. Baldwin, I have a problem with my neighbour. If I get a good crop next year, I will pay you some money if you will sue him." I said I did not think they could sue because they would not win the case. They informed me that all they wanted was their day in court. The public which use the mails wanted their day in court through the medium of a committee of this House.

The unions could usefully have had a day in court five, six or seven years ago. I am by no means condoning some of the things the unions have done. However, if they would have had that opportunity, it might have been better. The management of the Post Office should have been before a committee of this House to explain and justify what was being done. I am not going to blame the last postmaster general. He received advice from officials in the Department of Justice. Anyone who reads the law reports will accept the fact there are many decisions in the courts that are against the government. That suggests that advice given by officials in the Department of Justice is not always right. I have a friend in Montreal, Peter Treu, who is a shining example of that fact.

In 1974, the then postmaster general, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), said the following in response to a question:

● (1600)

Rates of postage for domestic letter mail are set out in section ten of the Post Office Act. Changes in those rates therefore are only possible by Act of Parliament. Any proposal for amending the Post Office Act will be announced in the government's legislative program at the appropriate time.

So there was a clear statement, a good statement, a proper statement, a legal statement by a member of this House who had responsibility for the Post Office, that the only proper legal way to fix postal rates was by coming to the House. But two years later we find the then postmaster general, Mr. Mackasey, I think, succeeded by others from time to time, saying: "We have found a new way; we can bypass Parliament, we can do it by regulation". And they proceeded to introduce a regulation under section 13 of the Financial Administration Act. Mr. Speaker, I say this as a warning to other ministers: that is a section of the act whose use is not justified in circumstances of this kind.

I have read the debates in 1968 and 1969 when the present section 13 of the Financial Administration Act was introduced. Mr. Drury, then president of treasury board, introduced this amendment and made it clear during the debate that there was no intention section 13 would ever be used for such a purpose as the fixing of postal rates. I took part in that debate. If his intention had been otherwise I would have had a lot more to say and the bill would not have carried as quickly as it did; a storm would have been raised in the House, and rightly so. However, the amendment was introduced. From 1968 to 1976 no attempt was made to use it. Suddenly, though, the government discovered it had a problem with regard to postal rates and thought: here is an easy way of doing things; we can change postal rates without going to Parliament.

This is no small, piddling matter, Mr. Speaker. The estimates of the Post Office run in the neighbourhood of a billion dollars. The deficit is very substantial and that deficit is taken care of in part by income from postal charges. I say this to the minister: it may well be that having regularized by statute what I consider to be irregularities and possibly illegality in the actions of the previous government, the present administration might desire to go ahead and secure an amendment to the Post Office Act giving it the right to fix rates by order in council until such time as Parliament comes to a decision with regard to the possible setting up of a Crown corporation.

If that were the case I would have no objection to its being done, but I suggest to the minister that attached to any amendment to the Post Office Act giving the government the right to act by regulation there should be provision for a negative resolution so that this House and the other place would always have the authority to consider the feasibility and propriety of changes which may have been made. This House should never cut the umbilical cord of its responsibility to hold government accountable when it comes to changing the law to effect the imposition of taxation or the fixing of rates. When we give the government the right to act by order in council, there remains with us a responsibility to ensure that we have the authority to take another look at the situation if we wish.

I pause there for a moment. Mr. Speaker, I have been very impressed by the calibre of the new members of the House, though I retain my affection for the older ones as well. There are 157 new members. This is a minority Parliament; it appears that the people of Canada like minority Parliaments and are not prepared to give one government a massive majority enabling it to do whatever it likes.

I hope that in the course of the operations of this Parliament members on all sides will watch with great care the use made by the government of regulations and orders in council even though such a practice is probably a necessary part of our administration today, government having seen fit to intervene so massively in every aspect of human life. It would be literally impossible to legislate all the things it is thought desirable to legislate, bearing in mind the infinite variety of human circumstances affected. But when we give the government the right to act by order in council, it is up to us to see that it is used, not abused. It is a responsibility which rests with every member of the House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the speaker who was just preceded me I intend to intervene only very briefly. I am pleased to follow the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who now sits directly opposite me. Like him, I am happy to see so many new members and so many young members in this Thirty-first Parliament, and I join him in welcoming them to this very important institution and to a very significant experience. I might add it is also a pleasure for me to see some of the older members of the calibre of the hon. member for Peace River back here to take part in the proceedings of this Parliament.

With respect to the measure now before us, the second reading of Bill C-11, all I want to do is to bring a bit of perspective to the situation so that it will not appear that it is a case of the saints being over on the government side correcting what has been done by the sinners who now sit in the ranks of the official opposition. I would remind the government that not many years ago an almost identical thing happened, but in reverse. In that case it was the Tories who were the sinners and the Liberals who were the saints—it is hard to tell the difference between them.

Mr. Baldwin: We have been absolved.

Mr. Knowles: In any event, what has happened this year is that the Liberals, while in power, used the Financial Administration Act to increase postal rates, a practice which seems highly questionable—in fact, I think it is illegal. And the Tories, having come to power, are proposing to correct that situation by bringing in a statute to validate those rates. Incidentally, it is being done rather early in the game because of a court case.

Back in 1962, only a week after the election of that year, which was held on June 18, perhaps less than a week, the Conservative government of the day, led by the late Mr. Diefenbaker, brought in an order to raise certain import duties. As you know, Mr. Speaker, customs duties can only be raised by act of Parliament. But Mr. Diefenbaker and his cabinet found a way of doing it by using the Financial Administration Act. What they did was to use a provision in the customs tariff so as to transfer all rates of duty from one column to another. But that process produced higher rates than they wanted, so they forgave part of them by using the Financial Administration Act so as to bring in the amount of increase they wanted.

Throughout that Parliament the Liberals and New Democrats contended that this was an abuse of the powers granted by the Financial Administration Act. Mr. Diefenbaker and his Conservatives stood firm, however. They said the course they had taken was a correct one and they refused to budge. But in 1963 there was an election and the Liberals came to power. In the meantime, there was a court case just as there is now; persons affected by the higher rates were challenging the validity of the order in council which had been made. So the Liberals, when they came to power, brought in an act to correct the situation by validating the customs changes which had been made by the Tory government under the Financial Administration Act. So it is simply the case of the saints and the sinners having changed places. What surely is apparent by now is that any government must exercise extreme care about the use of the Financial Administration Act to bring about changes which ought to be brought about only by acts of Parliament.

In that connection my friend, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), was quite within his right in drawing attention to some other things that might be done under the Financial Administration Act, particularly in terms of privatizing certain Crown corporations, and that this experience and the experience of 1962 and 1963 should underline the point that where there are things that are required to be done by an act of Parliament, no government should slither around that requirement by using unfairly and unjustifiably the provisions of the Financial Administration Act.

As I said, I simply wanted to add this bit of perspective and thus to point out that mistakes have been made on both sides, and in each case the other side has had to correct it. Let us hope that this is the last time the provisions of the Financial Administration Act are used improperly, as has been done in the instance I have cited, by both the Tories and the Liberals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to express my appreciation to the last two gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate and whom I have found very helpful in my new role as member of Parliament. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who assisted in the seminar for new members, had comments that were very useful, particularly the comment about setting some priority on our time. In my own party, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has been more than helpful—

Mr. Baldwin: I commend to you the virtues of rebellion too.

Mr. Miller: —in allowing us to sort out some of the paper work which we are obliged to go through every day in our jobs.

I am particularly pleased today to make some comments on the bill before us, Bill C-11. I found very quickly that usually we do not get a great deal of warning before having to rise to speak in the House. I have some comments to make which I thought would be useful to the minister who, I know, is sincere in trying to reorganize the postal service so that the community at large can have more confidence in it than it has had in the past.

I am also appreciative of the short comment which goes with this bill and explains the bill in terms that many of us can understand.

It states:

This bill would confirm the amendments to postage rates that were made by regulation.

This short statement allows us to find the germ of the idea in this bill. I think the public has some reservations about legislation, about legislatures and also about members who draw up that legislation. The public is somewhat confused about the laws and is searching for some simple way of regulating their lives around the kinds of regulations that are often imposed upon them.

I think the minister should be given credit for bringing this bill before the House because it gives us an opportunity here to debate postal rate increases so that the public can have an idea of why they may be justified. Often the public is simply told that the postal rates are going to go up by two cents on first class mail, and really we in the House of Commons do not have an opportunity to debate the reasons for that increase nor to give the public, through the House, a justification for it.

I think other ministers in the new government can also take note of the direction which the Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser) has given in the House. I think in particular of the area to which I have been assigned as critic, namely fisheries and oceans, and the amount of regulation that comes out of that department for people in the industry who are immediately affected by the regulations and who have no notification of them. Certainly any changes in the regulations do not receive great publicity. The Post Office Department is therefore setting an example to all other government departments.

Our party is in favour and supports the principle of bringing these postal rate increases before Parliament. We have no argument whatsoever with that and we hope that this practice will continue and that, as a result, the public will be better informed about the reasons for having to pay increased postage.

However, at a time when the public is expected to accept an increase in postal rates, they should continue to receive equal service, if not better service, for those increased rates. Unfortunately, the public is not getting that kind of service at present. The postal rates are going up but postal service does not improve.

Let me give an example. All members in the House, particularly those from the west coast, can appreciate the difficulties we have in responding to our constituents promptly when it takes seven or eight days for a letter to get from our constituencies to Ottawa. If it takes the same time for the response to reach our constituents, it takes at least a two-week period for a particular matter to be dealt with.

We hope the minister will receive the co-operation of the House when he starts negotiating with the Union of Postal Workers with the purpose of improving their morale and showing them that he is committed to improving postal service so that the public can get the same or better service.

Now I should like to deal with the concept of the privatization of some areas in the postal service. The business community is particularly concerned with getting efficient and rapid postal delivery, particularly of items that go by parcel post between businesses in this country and businesses abroad. There is an erosion of that service as a result of the inefficiency of the Canadian Post Office. The service providing delivery of packages is now being taken over by private enterprise. To some extent, it has been taken over by Air Canada and, I understand, there is an encroachment in that service by U.S. delivery firms which wish to get into the Canadian market. This party hopes that this will not be encouraged by the government.

We hope that the government will use the prospectively profitable parts of the postal service to support the less profitable ones, such as advertising brochures and first class mail for which we cannot afford to charge a sufficiently high rate to make it profitable. If we do not protect the consumer, the individual who is dependent on mail for personal correspondence and for mailing bills, if we do not protect community organizations and groups that are dependent on mail service for bulletins, brochures and communication with their members, the result will be a weakening of the community spirit and of the organizations that depend so much on keeping their members informed through mail. We urge this government to maintain and improve postal services which the community finds inadequate at present.

I am sure the minister is aware of some of the problems within the Post Office. We hope he will deal with them in such a way as to restore people's confidence, because at present people do not have confidence in the Post Office for many reasons. It may be strange for a New Democrat to be speaking about the business community in this House, but we do so often. In our speeches we refer often to what we would like to see for small businessmen. The small businessman in this country is suffering because the postal service is inadequate. In my community in Parksville, British Columbia, a rapidly growing community, many small businesses are dependent on the mail service. At the present time Parksville has been faced with a situation where for over a year and a half small businessmen and the general public have been unable to obtain post office boxes. In fact they are required to pick up their mail at general delivery points. There are over 250 names on a waiting list in Parksville. These people are hoping to obtain postal boxes so that they do not have to wait in line for their mail. It would require an expansion of post office facilities. Applications have been made but no positive response has been received from the Postmaster General at the present time.

What does this mean? It forces small businessmen to seek other ways of receiving deliveries or meeting deadlines for the delivery of mail. Small businessmen are not prepared to stand in line for 15 or 20 minutes, nor are they prepared to have their staffs do that. The postal services should meet the demands of small business and the growing public of Parksville who have been waiting very patiently for a good length of time.

An hon. Member: It has been 16 years.

Mr. Miller: It could have been a lot longer if there had not been a change of government.

Mr. Benjamin: We will see how much longer it will take.

Mr. Miller: Certainly we will look at that closely.

An hon. Member: Do you want to come over to this side?

Mr. Miller: I have no intention of crossing the floor. Probably we will be over there soon as legitimate New Democrats in a new government.

I congratulate the Postmaster General on his appointment. I assure him that my party is prepared to co-operate in any way possible to improve a very crucial Canadian public service. The comments I have had from colleagues dealing with the Post Office and the Postmaster General indicate that there has been good access to information and that the Postmaster General is attempting to meet the needs of our community. I hope he will continue to do that. We will support him in his actions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by echoing the remarks of my colleagues regarding the principle of the bill, the principle of parliamentary approval of increases in postal rates. Because I want to keep my remarks brief, I will not say anything more about that.

In my view, a bill respecting an increase in postal rates provides us with an opportunity to talk about the level of service which ought to accompany those increases. Also it provides us with an opportunity to suggest, at the very least, that services ought to be maintained, if not increased.

I have two concerns with regard to service that I wish to bring up at this time. As we move to approve rates already in place, we should reflect on the level of postal service available to Canadians at this time. These concerns may not seem to be of national importance, but I submit that in city after city, place after place, town after town, and business after business, an accumulation of inadequacies in postal service constitutes one of those problems that, although it does not receive national attention, relates very concretely and practically to the lives of many Canadians. It ought to receive attention in this House in the same manner that any other issue receives attention.

Specifically I am concerned about the latest efficiency program of the Post Office, an efficiency program which has led to the removal of many letter boxes in Winnipeg and in other major Canadian cities. Much attention has been paid to this issue in the local Winnipeg media, and rightly so, as many people, particularly senior citizens, have been affected and will be increasingly affected as winter comes on by the imposition of a greater distance between them and the location at which they mail their letters.

On this issue I must say that I have had negotiations with the Postmaster General. He indicated that some of the removed letter boxes in the riding of Winnipeg-Birds Hill will be replaced. I have submitted a list of the missing boxes brought to my attention by constituents to help him decide which ones should be put back, as I understand that the efficiency program is not to be abandoned entirely. I trust this will happen, that the letter boxes I submitted for reinstallation will go back up some time next week. So far the only ones reinstalled, with a few exceptions—and I mean a few—have not been in Winnipeg-Birds Hill or any other area in Winnipeg but those areas which are popularly recognized as ones in which the social and economic elite of Winnipeg live. This would be a situation, should it continue, that I hope the minister would find outrageous. At least, I know my constituents would find the situation outrageous. Therefore, I am confident that the letter boxes will be put back in place.

In my view, efficiency and rationalization must not obscure the fact that postal services exist for the people, not the other way around. The use of the postal service must not be discouraged by bad service. One almost sees a parallel here between what happened with regard to postal service and what is happening to services provided by Via Rail, for instance. The more people that use a service, particularly an energy efficient service, the better it will be for all of us in the long run. The gas saved by mail trucks not having to go to as many boxes as they used to will not compare with the energy and human effort which will have to be expended getting letters delivered for people who cannot do it themselves, people who otherwise would have mailed them independently.

This brings me to my second concern, and that is home delivery service to new areas. Winnipeg-Birds Hill has many new housing subdivisions which do not yet have home delivery postal service. Some of those areas have been around for a long time, yet they do not have home delivery. Bringing home delivery to these areas will not only bring to the people concerned the service they had the right to expect when they bought their homes in those new areas, but also it will create employment. I will have more to say on this at a later time, as I do not have the details at this time to put before the House. I will be watching to see what happens in this area. I recommend government action in respect to this concern.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I will not be long either because I know the minister is anxious to close this debate. I should like to congratulate the Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser) on bringing this bill dealing with a retroactive increase in postal rates before the House. Also I congratulate him for the indication that future increases will be legislated in this House, rather than by orders in council as in the past.

I am sure the minister is upset about the idea that we are now paying 17 cents to mail a letter, yet we are receiving poorer postal service than ever before. I suppose we are in the age of computers and high technology.

Mr. Rodriguez: The age of Aquarius.

Mr. Peters: I think we have passed the age of Aquarius. Much has been said, but I think we should look at what has been done in the Post Office. People in the Post Office have told us for a long time that it was necessary to accelerate the sorting, collection and delivery of mail. I should like to ask hon. members individually if in their own experience there is less first class mail today than ever before. Most people do not use mail services any more. They use the telephone. We have probably become the most wasteful telephone service anywhere in the world. We make more telephone calls; we make more business telephone calls than ever was the case before. Certainly we are among the leaders in the world in respect of telephone service.

● (1630)

Not long ago the Post Office put out a beautiful brochure with a lot of b.s. in it indicating how well they were doing and how much mail they were handling—

An hon. Member: What does "b.s." stand for?

Mr. Peters: You can interpret it yourself in whatever language you use. That brochure contained a number of things. In the middle it showed sorting boxes as part of its operations. We operated in this country for years with only that part of the operation. Today we have boxes on the street that indicate that if you put your mail in that box at a certain time it will be picked up at a certain time. We have other boxes which indicate that if you put your mail in it will be picked up sooner or later, and I suppose we have other ones that just state "later".

I am sure the minister can remember when a former minister decided there was not going to be any first-class mail, except for postage purposes. All the mail, as indicated by this brochure, is automatically dumped in together with parcels, large brown envelopes, envelopes with little green markings on the side that indicate whether it is first-class, second-class or third-class, or some other kind of class, and occasionally with a few small first-class envelopes. If we were to take those envelopes out and handle them in the most appropriate way they could be delivered expeditiously. If we were to bypass the regional post office and all the terminal post offices we would have a decent first-class mail service in Canada again, one that would probably live up to the representation developed in years gone by by the Post Office Department in Canada.

I am sure other members of Parliament have carried out an investigation to determine the fastest possible way of sending mail. I have found that if you have a bunch of boxes, a bunch of Hansards or whatever else you want to send out and you put them in a bag with one first-class letter and mail the bag to yourself at your home address, you will get the mail quickly. I did this one Friday afternoon. When I arrived home by air on Saturday afternoon I picked that mail up off my porch where the mailman had delivered it.

Had I put that first-class letter through the post office in the normal way it would likely have gone from here to the main post office terminal and then through a lot of processes. Somebody would probably have looked at it, it would have been sorted four or five times, and someone would decide that if it should have a yellow dot on the front of it, they would send it to a different section. It might even have some typing on it which would involve something else. I ask hon. members if they have not found this to be true. Chances are it would take five days to reach a destination in northern Ontario. It may well take longer if the employees at the Post Office here decided to send it to the terminal in Toronto. That would involve a week or perhaps two. We really do not have much mail any more of a first-class category. If we handled that mail on a first-class basis it could be delivered expeditiously, but it would have to be sorted.

I can remember talking to some postal workers who said that on Monday morning they had stacks of mail to deliver. It was noon before they got halfway through their walks. They took the remainder of that morning mail and put it back in the box. They picked up the afternoon mail and started again on their walks. Often it was Wednesday before they finished delivering both the morning and afternoon mail from the Monday.

The hon. member shakes his head. He has not been here very long and probably has not had much experience with the mailing service here, but he will learn. Mail service to a member of Parliament is damned important, and it is damned important to the businessman. Much of the business of this country is done by mail service. Much of that mail involves bills, orders and other kinds of letters, but it is all mail that businessmen want delivered in an expeditious manner.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please.

Mr. Peters: What I am saying is that if we decide to provide real first-class service, then 17 cents is a reasonable cost.

For years in northern Ontario if a farmer wanted a part for an engine or some piece of machinery that he could not buy locally, he would phone Toronto or send a night letter. If the supplier had the part he could send it by mail. He could have it put on the train that night in Toronto at six or seven o'clock and that order would be back in northern Ontario at six o'clock the following morning and the farmer would get it at eight. That was an excellent way of doing business.

Today if you send a letter to Toronto ordering a part you might as well send it via Tokyo because you probably will not get that part back for two weeks. The delay may not be entirely the fault of the Post Office but certainly the shipper will say it is and most people would back him up.

The previous government privatized mail service a long time ago. I have a former postmaster general sitting very close to me and he represents a riding right next to mine. He has the district post office in his area. It was very interesting to see how his government privatized this service.

Not long ago a newspaper man asked all the government departments in North Bay how they sent their mail, and, with the exception of the Department of Veterans Affairs, everyone that wanted the mail delivered as first-class mail sent it by courier. That former government privatized mail services by allowing these couriers to become engaged in a post office operation. Even the Post Office sends its mail that way. The Unemployment Insurance Commission sends its mail that way.

An hon. Member: Say that's not true, John.

Mr. Peters: If hon. members think that is untrue I will let them have a copy of the Nugget. Perhaps the hon. member does not read his home newspaper. An article in that paper indicated that the only department in North Bay that did not use courier service was the Department of Veterans Affairs, and even employees in that department said they did not think they did; they had considered it and decided against it. We as veterans have always waited a long time so we have not really pushed for faster service. Business people have pushed for faster service and take advantage of courier service.

What I am saying is that I think most people in this country would not be opposed to paying 17 cents for the expeditious delivery of a letter. However, a first-class letter cannot be handled expeditiously if it is going to be included with parcels, third-class mail, flyers and all that junk mail that people receive. That junk mail is delivered as fast as first-class.

There was a time when all the mail in a district post office had to be dealt with on the day of receipt. What the employees did was take all the mail left over at night, bag it and send it to another distribution point in the same part of the country. That meant that the mail would perhaps go to North Bay for redistribution. If it was left over that night in North Bay it would perhaps be sent to Timmins. If they could not handle it they bagged it and sent it back to North Bay. Often it was the middle of the week before that mail was handled at the original district office.

● (1640)

If I can find a way to send a letter from Ottawa to northern Ontario within 15 hours, then why does the Post Office take so long? I think it is up to us. I think we have allowed them to put all of the junk mail together. This brochure points out that they are handling many hundreds of tons of mail a shift, but that is not first class mail. It is true many organizations send out their junk mail. That is part of their business procedure. However, they are not paying to send out first class mail, yet they have their junk mail delivered just as fast as any other mail.

Mr. Rodriguez: What about the householders?

Mr. Peters: There is nothing more important than householder mail for members of Parliament. I hope that it is always in white envelopes and mailed in the most expeditious way. I am afraid that it does not matter whether it is packaged mail or parcelled mail because there is no such thing as preferential treatment.

If the government wishes to improve the mail, it should not be misguided by Post Office officials. It should not be misguided by my friend or the workers in the Post Office. The government wants to make the Post Office a Crown corporation. I do not want it made a Crown corporation until it is cleaned up. I am of the opinion that if the Post Office is made a Crown corporation, with the mess it is in today it is merely transferring the problem and calling it something else. The Post Office must be cleaned up, and as a department of the government it would not be very difficult to clean it up.

I know that the minister has been critical of the way the Post Office operates and of the staff, both union and managerial. These are things which can be corrected. The system can be adapted to where it is again sorting out mail so that those who are paying for first class mail will be guaranteed first class delivery. It is not for the Post Office to set up additional courier service to the 17 or 18 national courier services which are now in business. I know that the Post Office is contemplating this idea, and I believe they are experimenting with it.

I believe that we can design a system by using the means which are available to us in this very large country for moving mail expeditiously. If first class mail has a premium price, it should be given a premium position in the delivery system. If we can guarantee to businessmen that the post office will deliver the mail, it is a step in the right direction.

I am sure that the present mail service affects all members of Parliament. How many members in this House have been faced with the problem of getting a passport to someone in a very short period of time? In the first place, you do not want them to send the information by mail because it will never get there, so an alternative means must be found, usually by air. To ship a passport by air to Toronto costs $25, and to send it by bus costs $2.75. Surely the Post Office can find a way of supplying that kind of service at a more reasonable price and with the same guarantee of delivery. That is what the Post Office is for.

I am sure that all hon. members will remember as children hearing the saying "the mail must go through", and remember seeing the man on horseback delivering the mail. If we were still using that method the mail would probably still be getting there. It is not the fault of the employees. The Post Office has a very large network of employees, and not all of them are working in terminals. The employees working in the terminals are probably going crazy because they are dictated to by the machine which they are trying to operate.

Those people who deliver mail by truck, aeroplane or on the rural delivery systems all across this country make the effort. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, live in a rural area the same as I, and that you can say as well as I can that there are very few days in the year when the rural delivery man does not make every effort to drive on every back road on his route to deliver the mail. That employee makes the effort, and the government and members of government are not making the effort to provide that employee with the mail to be delivered in a reasonable period of time to the people for whom they are responsible.

Guaranteed mail delivery may have to cost more than 17 cents, but I am sure that it will not cost as much as what the bus company charges, and certainly not as much as what a courier service charges. I am also sure that the minister can do these things under the auspices of the Canadian postal service. It is something which the minister can aim for, and I will not oppose him, when he comes back in a few months—after he has had a chance to get rid of most of the bottleneck which occurs in the distribution centres—in his efforts to get first-class mail into a position where it can be delivered expeditiously and be guaranteed.

When the minister has achieved that, I think most members of the House and most people in this country who want guaranteed mail delivery will be very happy to have delivery shifted back to the Post Office and away from the little red courier service and Wells Fargo or whoever is travelling up and down the highway delivering that mail today. It is a challenge for the minister, and I am sure that the Canadian public will pay the price if the Post Office is able to provide the kind of delivery which people are asking for. We should not allow the Post Office to be substituted by a private mail system, as we have allowed in Canada under previous governments, if we do not have a solution to the problem of first class mail delivery in this country.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member who just had the floor made a comment—and I did not want to interrupt while he was speaking—relating to whether I read the North Bay Nugget. I can advise him that I read the North Bay Nugget religiously, and I can vouch for the comments which the hon. member made relating to the use of private couriers by the government as related in that paper.

My comments were across the aisle to the Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser), challenging him to indicate that the comments made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) were not true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order. At this time I must inform the House that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I indicated earlier in the debate that I would deal directly with some questions raised by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Before doing that, however, I want to thank all hon. members who took part in this debate and especially the new members, whom I want to compliment on their speeches, on how rapidly they have become accustomed to this House and on their contributions thus far. I also want to thank hon. members for the expressions of good will which I have received.

The problems in the Post Office are well known to all of us. They did not occur yesterday, they occurred from decisions taken some years back. It is my own estimate that in terms of recovery probably the corner was turned in a better direction about two years ago. But we have a long way to go yet. As Postmaster General I intend to be a champion for the people in the Post Office. There are 63,000 Canadians who are trying very hard to do their duty for the Post Office, and the vast majority of them have not had any commendation for a number of years now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: The general assumption is that somehow the problems in the Post Office are there because the people working in the Post Office want them to be there. That is not true.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: I know that hon. members will remember that in our desire to improve the postal service there are 63,000 decent Canadians trying to do their very best. It is my intention to try to give them as much help as I can, and in that way serve the public interest.

I want to speak very briefly on a couple of points raised by my friend, the hon. member for Nickel Belt. I want to make it completely clear that I have no intention of bringing in a Crown corporation bill that removes the right to strike for workers who presently have that right to strike and are organized labour in this country.

I want also to tell the hon. member that I have no intention of taking the present Post office and hacking it up, taking its profitable parts and abandoning the essential service that the Post Office gives as a great Canadian institution.

I want also to say to the hon. member with respect to the grievances that he mentioned that the matter has been addressed although not resolved. The number of grievances is now much lower than the hon. member mentioned. I will be meeting with one of the union officials on Tuesday to discuss it further. I have already had discussions on that. I have had meetings with leaders of the unions and on November 7, under the aegis of the Canadian Labour Congress, there will be the first serious negotiating meetings for the structure of the Crown corporation. It is my hope that the bill we will present after those discussions have taken place will be more acceptable to both management and unions in the Post Office and I hope to this House, than was the previous bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: The hon. member for Nickel Belt made reference to bargaining in something other than good faith. I do not want to go into the past but I want to indicate that it is my determination that there be bargaining in good faith. As long as I am Postmaster General and can elicit any control whatsoever, that bargaining will be in good faith.

I want to indicate to the hon. member—and some hon. members who were in the House the other day know this—that because this would be the last contract for most of the unions under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, I have offered to the unions a short contract of one year under that act. This would deal with a minimum number of matters and leave the substantive matters aside to be dealt with after the Crown corporation is created and they can bargain under the Canada Labour Code.

I have gone further, Mr. Speaker. If they want a shorter contract of six months, I am prepared to bring legislation into the House which would amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act for the specific purpose of giving them that short contract. I am doing this to try to indicate that, as Postmaster General, I intend to deal in very good faith with the people who work in the Post Office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, this concludes my remarks, and I thank hon. members. I should like to move that the motion now before the House be amended to go through all stages of second reading and third reading at this time.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to delay the work of the House this afternoon. I only want to ask a question of the minister, if I may be allowed to do so at this stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister willing to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde)?

Mr. Fraser: Of course I will answer the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I noted with great interest the commitment of the minister to keep the Post Office together as an integrated whole, and in particular his clear and categorical statement that there would be no question of selling off the profitable aspects of the Post office and keeping only the unprofitable and bad aspects of it, if you wish.

Can we count on the same positive attitude on his part vis-à-vis cabinet and his colleagues, when they are going to discuss the question of Petro-Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Out of order.

Mr. Lalonde: —and be sure that Petro-Canada will remain as an integrated whole, and that the same philosophy will be applied by the minister to Petro-Canada as the one he is stressing so strongly for the Post Office?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member does not expect me to get into a debate on Petro-Canada. We have before us a bill. It is a serious bill and I should like to get it through the House as quickly as possible.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a friendly point of order. I think it is very clear that the motion before us can hardly be amended as the Postmaster General suggested. But if he is, in effect, requesting the consent of the House that, following second reading, we go into committee of the whole and then on to third reading today, for our part we are prepared to give that consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, Mr. Speaker, a separate point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think I should recognize him and settle the question of procedure afterwards.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if he would permit a question. I certainly appreciated the very strong statements and strong commitments he made to this House and the people of Canada and to the workers in the Post Office. I want to ask him one question although he did not deal with the other one I asked him.

Can he give the House the assurance that those in the top management of the Post Office who have really been an aggravation to good, healthy industrial relationships in the Post Office—the evidence of which we have presented to the minister and to the department—and I name two of them, Mr. Corkery and Mr. Paré, can be eased out of those positions as quickly as possible? I ask that in all seriousness.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the hon. member for Nickel Belt asks the question in all seriousness. I have to say that I have no intention at the moment of removing either of those gentlemen. So far as the relationship between management and union is concerned, as long as I am Postmaster General I will work for improvement and the bargaining will be in good faith.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. To come back to the request of the minister and the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I believe the minister is requesting leave for the bill to be proceeded with through all stages today and thus is asking the unanimous consent of the House to first, modify the motion which is in front of us so that it can be referred to committee of the whole and at the same time, by the same consent, permit the House to go through all stages in the completion of the consideration of this bill. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I had better read the motion to the House as changed.

Mr. Fraser, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves:

That Bill C-11, an act respecting certain postal rates, be now read a second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion as amended, agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

On clause 1—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know from the Postmaster General if he intends to do anything about the problem that has been created by the inability of the Post Office to meet the needs of the general public and the business community, resulting in the establishment of all these courier services travelling up and down our highways. I refer particularly to the fact that government departments use those courier services in Ottawa and from coast to coast. Does the minister intend to do anything about that?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the hon. member that all of these matters are very much under study. I have a much greater understanding of the difficulties the Post Office is facing, both through competition from the public and the private sector, than I had when I became Postmaster General. I am addressing my mind to many of the matters, in fact I would say to all the matters, the hon. member raised in his speech.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I should like to pursue basically the same question. At the time when I had the privilege of occupying the position presently occupied by the hon. minister, we instituted a pilot project involving premium mail which was designed to remove as best we could some of the "bleeding" of our most remunerative mail through the private couriers. At that time an arrangement was made with certain government departments to have them act as part of the pilot project in terms of using premium mail to hasten the implementation of that program. Could the hon. gentleman indicate at this time whether the Post Office is in a position to use the experience it has gained through the pilot project in order to implement a national program?

• (1700)

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, we have a priority post program under way which stems from the study which the hon. gentleman is referring to.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question about the location of post office boxes for the purpose of mailing letters. This matter has been raised by two or three of my colleagues.

Rather than having the Post Office make strict locations of post boxes according to distance, could the location of boxes be done more on a sociological basis or on a study of the make-up of the population? In Regina, for example, there are three or four areas where half to three-quarters of the population are senior citizens who now have a longer distance to walk through snow banks. Surely it would make more sense to have a higher concentration of mail boxes in an area such as that and a lower concentration in areas of high income.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I understand exactly the point which the hon. member is alluding to. In the city of Winnipeg, as hon. members know, I have given orders for a number of post office boxes to be returned to places to meet that specific problem.

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt, but I have a point of order from the hon. member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps you can clarify a matter of order. I understand that we are now supposedly discussing clause 1 of Bill C-11. Clause 1 is very specific. It deals with certain orders in council that were made. I see no reference in clause 1 to the matter of post office boxes or any of the other matters that have been brought up by certain members. Could you direct us as to whether or not we are to actually debate only the specifics of clause 1?

The Chairman: The practice in Committee of the Whole has been that, whatever the content of clause 1, we allow general discussion. Of course, it should remain within the confines of the Post Office, or the particular subject matter. The hon. member will recognize that it is not easy for the Chair always to be on its feet to request an hon. member to speak specifically to a bill. If we did that, half the time of the House would be lost in a dialogue between the Chair and the hon. member who perhaps would speak longer trying to make a case about how his mail boxes are related to something in the bill. By giving some latitude and by allowing this practice of general discussion which has developed over the years, it has proved to be the best way to get results.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, my question is for the minister. It concerns courier post, premium mail or, as he calls it, priority post. This system was also dependent on ongoing negotiations with the main unions relating to putting that program in place. If I recall correctly, a great deal of co-operation had been obtained from the Union of Letter Carriers and this co-operation has been most helpful in carrying through that priority post. Has CUPW also joined in in offering that sort of co-operation so that the system can operate smoothly?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware this afternoon of any particular difficulties with respect to any of the unions in the Post Office in that regard.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman, also in reply to a question from the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), was offering his support to his senior officials; at least, that is the interpretation I got from his answer. I welcome that support. It is well needed because I think all workers in the Post Office, including the administrators, have to receive the minister's support.

I ask the hon. gentleman whether he recognizes, having said that two years ago was approximately the time when the Post Office came around the corner and started to climb upward, that he did not recognize as well that that was the period of time when the two gentlemen mentioned by the hon. member for Nickel Belt were employed in their present capacities.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member would not want to pursue a question of particular individuals in the Post Office, whether they be in unions or in management. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has had experience in this area that it is the duty of the Postmaster General to stand by his employees whether they are in management or on the labour side, unless there are particular reasons why disciplinary action or other measures should be employed.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, may I say that I do not think the minister has any position that he could take at the moment, when asked in public about a couple of names, other than to defend those particular individuals. The minister has to defend his department whatever view he might hold privately. It is to be hoped that the minister will take a fresh look at the management and negotiating teams of the Post Office.

I reveal no particular confidence, because I do not intend to name anyone, but a number of years ago a former postmaster general revealed to me that his efforts to improve the Post Office and the management staff relationships within the Post Office were frustrated by appalling management attitudes and skills that existed at that time.

I recommend to the minister that, while I understand why he would choose, as he must, to defend two individual names, he look very thoroughly at some of the things relating to management skills, attitudes and negotiating attitudes that may have caused the kind of hostility, foot-dragging, entrenched positions, poor service, unhappiness and poor morale in the past. We must hope that in the future there will be a new attitude prevailing. In my view, most workers employed by the Post Office, regardless of their level, want to do a job for the public and are getting mighty tired of being the whipping boys for poor relations, business practices and working conditions about which they have little or no say.

May I conclude by saying that I welcome the sign that we have at least one minister on that side of the House who supports the addition of one more Crown corporation, rather than eliminating them right left and centre, which some of his colleagues seem dedicated to doing.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, may I say to my hon. friend that when so many are going, if one stays behind it will do no harm.

With respect to the hon. member's specific reference to the attitude of management in negotiating for a contract, let me assure all hon. members that, whatever the situation has been in the past, there is a very conscious awareness that the difficulties of the past were partly due, at least, to mistakes in judgment on the management side. There is a great consciousness of that, and I can assure all hon. members that I am satisfied that while we may not have developed all the skills necessary, the attitude is very much improving. I want to assure all hon. members again that I regard that improving attitude as a very essential ingredient of better relationships in the Post Office.

• (1710)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I want to follow up on my first question to the minister. His response narrowed down to what he has done in Winnipeg. Can we take it that the principle for the action he has taken in Winnipeg will be applied generally across the country, that the whole move regarding the location of mail boxes will be reviewed and those errors that occurred will be corrected in the areas I mentioned?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, let me tell all hon. members that the Post Office has been operating under a very stern edict to operate as efficiently and effectively, from the point of view of cost, as possible. The consequence of that has been that where there were service functions that were not being utilized or were redundant, these were examined and studied. Steps were taken to cut them back or eliminate them altogether.

What happened in the city of Winnipeg was that a program was instituted to cut back on the number of boxes. What was found after that had been completed was brought to my attention by hon. members, originally by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine and the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, namely that too many boxes had been taken away. The consequence was that old age pensioners and older people were in a very difficult position.

I considered with care the representations brought before me. I am fully aware that this is a winter country and as a consequence I made changes. If the hon. member has a situation in his constituency or city which he thinks I should consider, I am prepared to do so. I am not prepared to say in this House that we are suddenly going to put back all of the post boxes taken away in a program designed to eliminate those not being used.

Mr. Benjamin: Just so we will not have to go through it all again, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister can go through the correspondence he received from not only Winnipeg and Regina but other cities. If he looks at that, we will not have to do it all over again.

Mr. Fraser: I suggest the hon. member speak to me. I have heard a lot of complaints about postal service this afternoon. The complaints I have received from my colleagues in the cabinet, and from those outside the cabinet on the other side of the House since we have come back, are as to whether I can do anything to cut off the mail.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I have six questions. I will begin with the sixth one. Very shortly CUPW and the Post Office employees will start negotiating a new contract, I believe in December. Rumours are going around that somehow or other the Department of Labour will take over the negotiations on behalf of the Post Office Department. Will the minister advise whether there has been any change in terms of persons who will be negotiating on behalf of the Post Office Department with the workers?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I can say to the hon. member that I will take every step to ensure that the most appropriate people are engaged in the bargaining.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am not going to be brushed off that easily. There are rumours to the effect that moves are being made by the labour department to take over negotiations on behalf of the Post Office Department. Is that rumour true or untrue? If it is true, will the minister tell us what role Treasury Board will be playing and what role his negotiators will be playing? That is extremely important, or we will be back to square one again.

Mr. Fraser: The Department of Labour will not be taking over the negotiations. With regard to the role of Treasury Board, we all understand that is one of the basic questions of contention. As I say, I have put to my friends in the union the short contract. I hope this will be a way of resolving the serious difficulties that have occurred in the past.

I assure the hon. member I am acutely aware of the problems that any negotiating team has under the present structure when it does not know whether what it says is a final offer is really a final offer at all. Always there is the shadow of Treasury Board behind the bargaining table.

Mr. Rodriguez: I thank the minister for that precise answer. My next question relates to noise levels at Gateway in Toronto and other major terminals. Under the Public Service Staff Relations Act there is no part IV as there is in the Canada Labour Code. The minister is well aware of that because he was labour critic when he was in opposition. Has this very serious problem been brought to his attention? I know the minister is concerned about occupational health and safety in the work place. Will something be done with regard to studying very quickly what can be done to alleviate the noise levels?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I have to apologize to the hon. member. I cannot give a detailed answer. May I take the hon. member's question and return to him perhaps tomorrow or in the next few days with an adequate answer.

Mr. Rodriguez: My next question deals with the trial of Jean-Claude Parrot. After having been found guilty and sentenced, he is appealing the sentence. I spoke with the minister informally. Other leaders were also charged with having breached the Criminal Code. Those charges can be dropped by the Crown if it so desires.

I say to the minister in all seriousness that those responsible for the security of this nation who did such serious things as burning down barns and stealing were not exposed to that kind of sentencing. In the minister's desire for a more harmonious relationship between the department and those who work for it, will he assure us he will look into the possibility of dropping charges against those who have not yet come to court?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, as Postmaster General I have not felt it my place to interfere with charges that are before the courts. That entire matter is one for the Department of Justice. The hon. member realizes that, with regard to Mr. Parrot's case, the sentence is under appeal. I understand the judges of the Court of Appeal have reserved and are considering this case. I do not want to say anything in this House that may be deemed to be interference in one way or the other with their deliberations.

Mr. Rodriguez: My next question is with regard to something the minister is concerned about, the practice in the past. There is documented evidence of this. Certain middle management tend to run around the ends of the collective agreement, particularly the very contentious technological change clause. Will the minister assure us that a memorandum will go to all levels of management in the Post Office instructing them to observe the collective agreement and not try to run around the ends of it, even though they may think it is in the best interests of the Post Office.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I want to assure all hon. members that I believe collective agreements should be honoured. That applies equally to the union that enters into the agreement and the management side that enters into the agreement. My answer has to be that I will do everything I can to ensure that collective agreements that are made will be honoured.

Mr. Rodriguez: The other question I have is with regard to grievances that are still pending. The history of these grievances shows that in many, many instances the cases were lost by management at all three stages, after which management appealed for adjudication. History has shown that on the eve of adjudication—and we have examples which I can provide—the Post Office withdraws its appeal for adjudication. The minister tells us that he will be meeting the leadership of one of the unions. Would he take a first step by seeing that these cases which the Post Office had lost at all three stages and appealed to adjudication, especially where the decision of an adjudicator had been given in a previous instance, will not be left hanging fire until the eve of an adjudication, that they will be dropped by the Post Office?

Mr. Fraser: As I told the hon. member, I have already met with representatives of one of the unions on this point and we shall be meeting again. I will take the hon. member's representations into account—they are similar to representations I have heard from union officials. This is certainly something I shall be looking into.

Mr. Rodriguez: My last question deals with superannuation delays. Many postal employees have decided to take their pensions and have applied for superannuation. In some cases they find delays are running in excess of six months. Is the minister prepared to look into this problem and try to alleviate it—to speed up payments—in whatever way necessary?

Mr. Fraser: I can give the hon. member the assurance that I will look into the matter immediately. I am not sure, though, that any delay necessarily is the fault of the Post Office.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I should like give the minister an opportunity to make a comment about an area of the Post Office which has traditionally not experienced much difficulty in management-labour relations, and that is the service dispensed by the Post Office in rural areas and the incredible anomalies and discrepancies which exist in the type of service the Post Office dispenses in rural communities by comparison with the type of service dispensed in the cities. For example a person living in the concrete jungle expects a postman to come to the door every day and complain if he does not arrive or if he is five minutes late.

I should like to draw a comparison with the service provided to a person living in mid-Canada or northern Canada in a small community where temperatures go to 40 below. These people have to start their automobiles to drive to the post office to get their mail. When they get there they have to stand in line and often suffer the abuse and the hardships that are related to that kind of activity, and at the end of the year they get a bill for using the post office in that fashion, the bill, of course, being for the post office box. Obviously there is a serious discrepancy there.

I wonder if the minister wants to make a comment on this, whether the terms of reference that are to be issued to the new Crown corporation will recognize the needs of rural areas, whether thought is being given in the department to charging for the service that is dispensed in the cities commensurate with or similar to the service that people have to pay for in the rural areas.

All of us are painfully aware of the incredible cost of postal service in the country and all of us are committed to bringing these costs in line. But we cannot have it both ways. If the box rentals and the services that are provided in the rural areas continue to go up and if there is a continuation of eliminating many of those services, as has, of course, been the case in many of the northern areas of our country, then I suppose the people in the northern areas have a right to expect that people who live in cities will pay an equal share of maintaining this essential and proud service. I should like to give the minister an opportunity to comment and to assure us that he is cognizant of the situation.

Mr. Fraser: I want to thank the hon. member for raising this issue. He comes from a riding in which a great many people live in rural areas and he is cognizant of the situation he describes. I invite the hon. member and others to bring to my attention anomalies which come to their attention. I have noticed there is no hesitation on the part of hon. members to approach me directly with regard to problems in the Post Office.

I will say this: the cost of providing a national postal service is high. However, hon. members will be pleased to know that, as stated in the annual report—and I am generously giving some credit to the former postmaster general who is here with us in the House—the deficit is going down. It is down again by another $70 million or $80 million. The total deficit, if one includes the revenues the Post Office produces, is about $450 million. There are departments in the government which cost much more than that to operate. I am not saying the cost is not high; I am saying the cost is going down.

I can also tell hon. members that in some respects the service is actually increasing and getting better, though I know there are serious difficulties and some anomalies. I thank the hon. member for bringing them to my attention.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? Now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Fraser moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): As the first speaker on third reading, I shall not delay the House but I do believe some closing remarks are in order before we pass this bill.

First, I want to say that the performance of the Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser) this afternoon augurs well for the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I can only hope when they split his personality between Environment and the Post Office that common sense will prevail and that the powers that be will allow him to maintain his role as Postmaster General. I think he may have an easier time dealing with postal problems than with Inco.

• (1730)

The answers which the Postmaster General has given this afternoon were positive in tone, and I want to say that if this attitude is carried forward, then I think the people of Canada can expect an improvement in postal services. I was particularly impressed with the emphatic way in which he dealt with the question of keeping the Post Office together as an entity and his determination to transform the Post Office into a Crown corporation. Indeed, it was a welcome statement from the front benches these days which runs contrary to the neo-Conservative movement on the other side, according to which, instead of privatizing, we are now seeing a move toward Crown incorporating. That is indeed a most welcome statement.

It seems that the Postmaster General has come down firmly on the side of service. He recognizes that in a mixed economy there is a role for a Crown corporation to play, a Crown corporation that has unitary management and that can indeed cross-subsidize from those operations that are profitable to those that are mainly providing a service, and hence will oftentimes run a deficit. That is indeed a welcome principle to be established.

One would only hope that his sweet voice of reason with respect to the Post Office can sway those neo-Conservative minds on the other side with regard to Petro-Canada, because, in the same way, one can see Petro-Canada as being a service to the people of Canada. Indeed, it is a very appropriate comparison. It can be readily compared to the securing of energy for the Canadian people, in the form of the very oil that lights our industry and that keeps this great country going. When one compares it to mail delivery, one recognizes that it is equally, if not more, important.

I was also very pleased with the minister's attitude, certainly a very open attitude, towards those who are unionized in the Post Office as well as toward postal workers who are not unionized. The minister has an openness of attitude toward the work place which is in contrast to what we saw in the revolving door policy of the previous government with respect to the position of the postmaster general. Indeed, how can one develop a meaningful relationship based on trust and communication when every six months the door is revolved and, lo and behold, a new joker jumps up and becomes postmaster general? In the space of eight years we saw six postmasters general. Before we even became accustomed to one postmaster general, lo and behold, he would be gone to run the RCMP while another postmaster general arrived to succeed him. It seems that this is vastly different from what we saw previously.

What I was also impressed with was the minister's decisiveness with which he intends to deal directly with the trade union movement in the Post Office. In the previous postmaster general we had an isolationist. He prided himself on having effectively run the Quebec City administration without a strike. That was easy because there was no trade union in the Quebec City administration. He believed slavishly every single thing his top bureaucrats told him. He was new to the position, he did not trust his own judgment, and he was not prepared to be open and speak out truthfully on the situation.

The answers given by the present minister today show us that there is hope that he at least will get to the bottom of the problem and seek the source of it, whether it be in management, whether it be one of the workers, or whether it be a technological problem. That is most helpful indeed.

The last point I want to make before sitting down is on the question of bringing an order in council under the Financial Administration Act so Parliament can have a say on it. That is extremely important when the government which sits on the other side has only 38 per cent of the vote.

An hon. Member: No, 35 per cent.

An hon. Member: No, 36 per cent.

Mr. Rodriguez: I hear 36 per cent. I heard 35 per cent and I have also heard 38 per cent, so I will stay in the middle and keep to 36.5 per cent.

Mr. Knowles: How about 35.6 per cent?

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, somewhere between 35 per cent and 38 per cent of the vote. It is a very important principle. We all recognize the limited mandate that this imposes, in effect. The principle that this bill establishes, which is the principle of Parliament having a say on orders in council made under the Financial Administration Act, is an extremely important principle as we move toward "privateering". I refer to privateering de Havilland and privateering Canadair.

An hon. Member: "Buccaneering".

Mr. Rodriguez: We know full well, and I bring this to the attention of hon. members and to people's attention, that the union leadership of de Havilland met with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) who, when asked whether he would bring the decision of privateering to Parliament, said no, he would not. I think that that would really be flying in the face of the principle which this government has started with Bill C-11.

So I urge members on the other side—and note that I am being reasonable today—

An hon. Member: You ought to see him on other days!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: It is very obvious that the Postmaster General brings out the best in me. That is more than I can say about the previous "Evel Knievel". Therefore, I would urge that principle upon members on the other side and ask that they remain constant with that principle which the bill envisages. Sure, the government might adopt the position of privateering, but there are others in the House who oppose it, and there are people in the country who may have another opinion. After all, all of them did not vote for this government. Therefore, that principle should be preserved and Parliament should be allowed to decide. Let the people's elected representatives decide. I wish the minister well and I want him to know that my services as Post Office critic on this side of the House are at his disposal. Should he ever require them, I will certainly be available at any time and will co-operate in trying to develop the Post Office as a useful and serviceable institution for the people of Canada.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I will not delay the House very long but I want to commend the minister for what he has already done and express the hope that a great deal more will be done in order to get our mail moving the way we and the people of Canada expect it to move.

There are two points I would like to mention. My observations of the Post Office system since I have come here are, first, that there is not a definite chain of command throughout the Post Office. I find that there is authority at many of the local levels allowing the man in charge to make decisions and to have them carried out, but there has been so much red tape in the laws and regulations that have evolved over the last several years that it is not possible to hold a man responsible unless he is given authority to act, and if reference to Ottawa is required, which takes a period of three or four months, this does not lead to good administration at the local level or at any level, particularly at the regional level. These are able people, I believe, and if they are not, they should not be there.

● (1740)

I have been impressed with the ability of many people in the Post Office. If they were given the authority to deal with items at the local level, I think they could do so. Also, that chain of command has another effect. If something goes wrong, the minister or the deputy minister can put his finger on the responsible person. That person must hold that responsibility and rise up to it. If a change such as this was made, I believe we would see a tremendous improvement in our postal service almost overnight.

We should not expect the hon. minister to press a button and suddenly cure all the ills of the Post Office today. I commend him for the manner in which he is looking at every problem in an attempt to solve them one by one. If the chain of command and responsibility at the local level are put together, I believe there will be a tremendous improvement in the Post Office in very short order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the minister and his department. I am pleased with his change of style in that he is attempting to respond fully to questions raised by various members, which I am sure the House appreciates. I should like him to know that.

My original intention was to say that the cabinet indicates that all the red Tories occupy the front benches and that all the prehistoric reactionary ones are in the back benches, but I realized that I was forgetting about the finance portfolio and could not make such a statement.

Some members urge an abandonment of the revolving door postmaster generalship and at the same time wish the minister greater longevity in his portfolio. That ignores the possibility when the Post Office is turned into a Crown corporation that there will not be the position of Postmaster General. Perhaps there will be someone in the House answering for Crown corporations, and the title "Postmaster General" will become part of our history. Members on this side will be pleased about that because we believe, as do the unions and other political parties, that perhaps the establishment of Crown corporations will result in a solution of some of the problems and will overcome the limitations in the current Public Service Staff Relations Act. Perhaps it will allow access to better breaks in terms of labour legislation and other matters. I am not debating that at the moment, but it is somewhat contradictory to wish the minister a long and happy life in his portfolio and to wish for an early start on Crown corporation legislation.

Someone mentioned the schizophrenia relating to the joint portfolios of Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment, but I think it was a very shrewd move on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). As Postmaster General the minister can be in charge of distributing all the litter, and as Minister of the Environment he has responsibility for cleaning it up.

Someone mentioned that essentially the Post Office is a service, and I think a lot of members would agree. Also I think the minister mentioned that he was proud of the reduction in the deficit.

Mr. Benjamin: The deficit is being reduced by a reduction of service.

Mr. Rose: The government is reducing the deficit by reducing not only services, but by increasing the first class letter rate. Perhaps it could be justified, but equivalent increases should be applied to the other classes of mail. Many of the second and third class pieces of mail are flyers that are distributed by businessmen.

Mr. Rodriguez: And members of Parliament.

Mr. Rose: Yes, members of Parliament. I am not suggesting that these classes should be cut. God knows, we are inundated daily with business flyers and the like. Perhaps they should be subsidized to some extent, because they provide people with an opportunity to comparison shop in their homes. But I think second and third class mails should bear their share of increases in an attempt to reduce the deficit. We should not restrain ourselves right out of the post office business. Second and third class mail should bear equivalent cost increases, depending on the proportion of the post office costs they represent. The first class rate has been increased on two occasions in the last year. Perhaps I am wrong in that comment, but that is my recollection.

In conclusion, I should like to indicate that someone seems to be in doubt about the exact percentage of votes accorded to the government in the election results of May 22. I think the government has done exceedingly well, because with 36 per cent of the vote it achieved nearly half the seats, whereas our party got 18 per cent of the votes and 9 per cent of the seats. If that is not a call for proportional representation in the House, I do not know what is.

Mr. Blenkarn: There are too many of you as it is.

Mr. Rose: Someone is suggesting that there are too many of us. I hope that is not an example of Conservative arrogance. Regardless whether the hon. member opposite likes it or not, the people put us here.

Mr. Blenkarn: The people put me here as well.

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, after spending a few hours listening to the remarks about the Postmaster General (Mr. Fraser) and, in the final analysis, the congratulations extended to the Messiah-minister, to the miracle worker Postmaster General, and also while waiting for my friend for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to address us a few last words in French, probably to bring the debate to a close, I think I should merely like to say that I listened very closely to the advice the Postmaster General got from the New Democratic Party.

I also took good note of the answers of the minister, and I can assure hon. members that they will be pinned up in my office; every time his intentions are transformed into actions and results, I shall be very pleased to cross them out, to show that the problem has been solved. I do not particularly want to congratulate the Postmaster General because, in a sense, that is his work, his responsibility and I know what responsibility that is; all I hope is that next year, when he tables his annual report for 1979-80, it will show that the year has been as efficient and productive as was the one of which we gave an account in our own last report.

Federal Business Development Bank

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

RENUMBERING OF CERTAIN SECTIONS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry) moved that Bill C-4, to amend the Federal Business Development Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I commence second reading debate on Bill C-4, a bill to amend the Federal Business Development Bank Act, I should like to start with a short summary of the bank's history. In 1974, the Federal Business Development Bank Act was passed by Parliament. It contained a section which provided for a maximum amount of paid-in capital to be provided by the government, $200 million. The act also provided a formula for the maximum lending commitment by the FBDB which effectively limits the bank's outstanding loan commitments to about $2.2 billion.

● (1750)

The FBDB Act provides that the bank can make loans where financing is not available under reasonable terms and conditions from private lenders.

Small business financing has been growing very rapidly in the past few years and this has been reflected in chartered bank loans and those of other private lenders. In addition, the strength in small business activity has been reflected in increasing amounts of funds being demanded from the FBDB by small and medium-sized businesses which cannot obtain the necessary term financing from private lenders.

As a result, the bank now has grown from approximately 24,000 customers on the books of the Industrial Development Bank, its predecessor, which had $1.2 billion outstanding at the time of the parliamentary consideration of the FBDB Act, to nearly 38,000 customers and $2.1 billion outstanding today.

Thus, after five years of operation since the passage of the FBDB Act, the bank is approaching the $2.2 billion lending ceiling. This is not surprising; in fact, it was almost traditional that such ceilings in the successive revisions of the Industrial Development Bank Act be set at a level which would cover about five years' operations, after which the bank's legislation would be reviewed.

A review of FBDB's objectives and policies is currently under way, but a housekeeping amendment is required in the interim in order to allow the FBDB to continue to service the financial requirements of small and medium-sized businesses. In any event, the government's position is that it is preferable to come to Parliament with the results of a thoroughgoing review of small business financing and the implications for the range of federal programs involved, rather than proposing extensive changes to the FBDB Act alone.

In summary, we have a Crown corporation for which some absolute financial limits were built into its legislation five years ago, and these are now being reached. While review and consultation on the future direction of federal intervention in business financing is timely and is being undertaken, there is no reason to impair the corporation's current operation during this review process. Therefore, the government is recommending that Parliament adopt interim legislation to allow the corporation to continue to operate on a "business as usual" basis for an additional period of time, pending the broader review of federal programs in the business financing field including, of course, the Federal Business Development Bank.

The route proposed for increasing the lending authority of the FBDB is to increase the ratio of outstanding loans to paid-up capital. The advantage that this would have is that no additional federal budgetary expenditure for paid-in capital would be required. This would be in keeping with the general policy of restraint on federal expenditures.

The Federal Business Development Bank is currently lending $75 million per month on average. At an average of just over $50,000 per loan, this represents 1,500 Canadian businesses per month which get term loans approved by the bank. If this amendment is not passed, the FBDB will only be able to lend an amount equal to the repayment of existing loans. This would cause the FBDB loan approvals to drop to one-third of their current level so that only 500 rather than 1,500 small and medium-sized businesses would be assisted. This would be at variance with generally accepted policy at the federal level that government intervention should be designed to reduce obstacles for small businesses to obtain funding on reasonable terms and conditions.

The provisions of the proposed amending legislation would automatically raise the Federal Business Development Bank's maximum lending authority to $2.6 billion. Depending on both the level of the bank's loan authorizations in the coming months and the timing of the review of FBDB and other programs, this may or may not be sufficient to meet the bank's cash requirements until a more extensive revision to the legislation occurs. Should the bank's financial requirements exceed the $2.6 billion level during this review period, the current amendment would empower the governor in council to make a further upward adjustment.

Any limitation on the bank's ability to make loans would have adverse effects on the Canadian economy. The bank's financing is estimated to assist in the start-up of over 2,000 enterprises per year in Canada. In terms of employment, FBDB financing in 1978 was estimated to assist in the creation of some 20,000 new jobs the preservation of 16,000 existing jobs. To the degree that the bank's lending operations are restrained, its beneficial effects on the Canadian economy will be lessened. This would be particularly important in small towns and rural areas because the bank's penetration is higher in these areas which are not as well serviced by the private lenders as are the major metropolitan centres.

The bank's loans and equity investments have other beneficial economic effects. For example, there are positive trade balance effects when FBDB customers are successful in producing goods and services which replace imports or enter the export markets.

The bank has grown from four branches in the early 1950s to 25 branches in mid-1969, and now has some 100 branches and sub-branches scattered across Canada. In contrast to other sources of financing, and in particular the chartered banks, over 66 per cent of the bank's branches are outside major metropolitan centres. This year the bank is opening branches in Clarenville, Newfoundland; St. George de Beauce, Quebec; Cornwall, Ontario; Yellowknife, N.W.T.; Fort St. John, British Columbia, and Whitehorse in the Yukon. Few of these locations can be regarded as "profit centres" in the conventional sense. They do, however, reflect the current developmental character of the bank. The bank also routinely conducts over 8,000 visits each year to bring its services to communities where it does not have a branch.

Looking at the ratio of FBDB customers to the number of businesses, the bank's penetration rates are highest in the coastal provinces and territories, Atlantic, Pacific and Arctic. For example, in Newfoundland and the Northwest Territories about one business in five uses the bank for part of its financing requirements. In the maritimes and British Columbia the ratio is about one in seven. Conversely, in the span of provinces running from Quebec to Saskatchewan, FBDB clients represent only about one out of every 18 firms. This is undoubtedly a reflection of the fact that the private financial sector, including co-operatives and credit unions, is better developed in central Canada and, therefore, there has generally been less requirement in central Canada for the FBDB.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should like to ask whoever is responsible for the business of the House what business we have for tomorrow.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, government orders for tomorrow will be Bills C-10, C-3, C-5 and C-14. If my colleague wishes me to give the names I will do so, but perhaps the numbers are sufficient.

Mr. Knowles: They are sufficient.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): It being six o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AGRICULTURE

CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to put a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the dislocation to agricultural production that will result from the declarations made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. de Cotret), and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on Friday, October 19, establishing import quotas for chicken without proper consultation with the provincial governments, the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency, or the provincial chicken marketing boards, and based on a non-representative period of importation, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy):

That the House instruct the government to properly consult the provincial governments, the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency and the provincial chicken marketing boards, and then, at the ministerial level, to renegotiate the chicken import quotas with the United States in order to obtain an import quota of 1 per cent of Canadian production, as recommended by the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency and based on the GATT principle of a previously representative period from 1969 to 1973, and that if the U.S. does not agree to the revision, the matter be placed before GATT arbitration in Geneva.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion could be debated at this time only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

CLOSURE OF WEATHER STATION—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON AIR SAFETY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to introduce a motion on an urgent and pressing matter, namely, the decision of the Department of Supply and Services to terminate the contract for the weather observation and recording services and closure of the weather station at Geraldton, Ontario.

The Geraldton weather station is one of the top three in Ontario and serves a large area between Thunder Bay and Kapuskasing. With the opening of a new airport at Geraldton next month, air traffic will increase significantly and the closure of this weather station presents a problem for aviation safety in the area.

Therefore, sir, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras):

That this House direct the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment, and the Minister of Transport, to intervene personally in order to prevent closure of the Geraldton, Ontario weather station which would jeopardize air safety in the area.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES—CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43 regarding an extremely urgent and pressing matter.

As the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) stated when in opposition, the Atlantic region is the hardest hit when the government increases its interest rate to record levels, causing increased unemployment, extensive bankruptcies and economic stagnation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House condemns the Minister of Finance for his betrayal of Atlantic Canada and urges his immediate resignation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SENIOR CITIZENS' HOMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

In view of the increasing housing needs of the old in Canada, in view of the fact that there are not enough housing units for our senior citizens, and in view of the alarming number of retired people on endless waiting lists of existing homes for the aged, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané):

That the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), when he brings down his budget in November, allot additional, considerable and the required funds for a larger number of housing starts to meet the needs of our senior citizens with a view to achieving the double objective of reducing our seasonal unemployment to a large extent and reducing the ever-growing number of old people in need of decent housing.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SMALL BUSINESS

PLANNED REDUCTION OF PUBLIC SERVICE—ADVERSE EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESS— MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the current plight of small business in the Ottawa-Carleton region, and of the drastic implications for these small businesses as a result of this government's plans to cut 60,000 jobs from the public service, and in view of the fact that the federal government is about to sign the Eastern Ontario Rural and Economic Development Subsidiary Agreement with the government of the province of Ontario and to exclude the Ottawa-Carleton region from assistance under this agreement, contrary to the expressed desires of the province, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin):

That this House instruct the government to amend this agreement prior to signing, so as to allow small businesses in the Ottawa-Carleton region to qualify for assistance.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate could be done at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

SECRET TRIAL OF FIVE CZECHOSLOVAK HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVISTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Earlier this week, a behind-closed-doors kangaroo court In Prague, Czechoslovakia, convicted five human rights activits to a total of 19½ years in jail. In view of the fact that both Canada and Czechoslovakia, amongst other countries, are signatories to the Helsinki Agreement, which in this case has once again been grossly abused, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray):

That this House express its very strong concern to the government of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic for allowing its so-called courts to neglect the basic decencies of human rights and, further, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs request of the Czechoslovak government that it abide by the Agreement signed in Helsinki in 1975 by both countries and repudiate the decision of that court so as not to further undermine the Helsinki Agreement orginally intended to protect and support human rights activities around the world.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion at this time, in accordance with the terms of Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REQUEST LEGISLATION ON REFERENDUM BE REINTRODUCED TO PROTECT CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on an urgent and pressing matter.

In view of the fact that Quebec Premier René Lévesque wants a "yes" to his referendum question, that we do not yet know the wording of the question, although we know for sure that it will be ambiguous, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren):

That the House urge the right hon. Prime Minister to "resurrect" the proposed federal referendum legislation in order to protect all Canadians.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT TAKE STEPS TO SECURE RELEASE OF BULGARIAN, DIMITER KOLEV—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of the utmost urgency.

Given the plight of 69-year old Dimiter Kolev, who is imprisoned and in failing health in a Bulgarian concentration camp for the offence of campaigning on behalf of an opposition political party, and given the refusal of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) to meet with Mr. Kolev's son, Stefan, who is in Ottawa at this time, on the grounds that she lacks a basis under international law to intervene on his behalf, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan):

That this House urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to meet with Stefan Kolev forthwith as a first step in a campaign by the Government of Canada to secure the release of Dimiter Kolev from detention, consistent with the gospel of human rights espoused by the Secretary of State before the United Nations last September.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—HARMFUL EFFECT ON THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. How could the minister have agreed to the advice of the governor of the Bank of Canada to raise interest rates yesterday to 14 per cent, when the governor today told the finance committee he was unable to give to him or the committee his forecast of the effect of this interest rate increase on such matters as jobs, economic growth, mortgage rates, housing starts and small business?

An hon. Member: Resign.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me the opportunity to say that I support absolutely the statement that Governor Bouey made to the committee this morning.

While I have not got the transcript of the committee proceedings here yet, I certainly can tell him this, that the move that the governor recommended—and which I accepted and which I accept responsibility for—is one taken after very serious consideration. Because I believe, and the governor believes, that it is in the long-term interest of this country and the Canadian economy, the Canadian people and the small business community whom we represent on this side of the House and whom we are concerned about, that this policy be adopted and that the battle against inflation and the battle to retrieve our economy from where the hon. gentleman's party left it, this is the only way we can proceed today.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Finance. I want to start by saying that the Prime Minister, speaking as leader of the Progressive Conservative Party to the Canadian Construction Association last March 2, said:

Record high interest rates work against confidence because they work against growth—

He went on to say:

Interest rates must come down if we are to get the Canadian economy growing at its full potential. It would be the policy of the Progressive Conservative government to gradually bring these interest rates down.

In light of these commitments I would ask the minister how he and the Conservative government can do just the opposite and agree to these record high interest rates.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is right on: that is our policy and that is what we are going to do. We are going to bring these interest rates down when we have got inflation in Canada under control and when the other western industrialized countries have it under control. We are going to bring the interest rates down when the huge trade deficit of over $7 billion left by the hon. gentleman's government is brought under control and when the budgetary deficit of $11 billion is brought under control.

Our policies are aimed, Mr. Speaker, at bringing interest rates down as soon as economic conditions permit. That is what we are dedicated to. What prevents us now is the record left by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister's policies are just the opposite. He is following the policies of the Mad Hatter in Alice going through the looking-glass.

I want to ask the minister if he will bring in a budget immediately which will state the government's fiscal policies to deal with the country's needs in the face of these high interest rates and the very high increases in energy prices his government is promoting and agreeing to, or is he going to continue on a course of vagueness and evasiveness indefinitely, a course which he has been following and the government has been following for the past five months?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if it is the Mad Hatter and looking in the looking-glass, the hon. gentleman only has to look in the glass himself to see the Mad Hatter, because he was associated with the minister of finance who also had to agree to interest rate increases because of the shape that his government brought the economy to.

As far as the budget is concerned, I am very anxious to bring down the budget. One matter that is preventing me is this, that there are a number of pieces of legislation left over from the Liberal budget of November, 1978. We cannot bring in our own budget until they are cleared up, because we cannot have our own ways and means motions before the House until that legislation is cleared up. So if the hon. gentleman would co-operate to put through the remnants of their own budget, left shamefully from November to March without any action, then we would bring down our budget. I am very anxious to bring that down and get Canada on a new course and to protect us from the effects of the last budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—EFFECT ON MORTGAGE RATE

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. On October 18, 1978, as reported at page 238 of Hansard, when in opposition the minister said:

These people are being crucified with an 11½ per cent mortgage rate—

Would the minister make the judgment now that, as a result of his policies and his government's policies we have the mortgage rate going up to 14½ per cent, the people of Canada are not being crucified but are being drawn and quartered by an unmerciful government that no longer has a care for those ordinary people? Does he realize the housing industry is in severe recession; building starts are down 30 per cent?

• (1420)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Order.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will give the hon. gentleman this opinion that, yes, people are being crucified now with high interest rates because of the record of that last ten years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: But, Mr. Speaker, the crucifixion they are having now will be a lot less than they will have in a year or two's time if we do not run this economy properly. That is what our program is dedicated to achieving.

The hon. gentleman should read the statement of Governor Bouey today and see why interest rates have had to continue to go up, and why they have gone up in the United States, and see how serious this issue is.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. In the statement of Governor Bouey where he said that he has been making recommendations, is it not true that it is this Minister of Finance who is agreeing with those recommendations, and is it also not true it is this Minister of Finance who refuses to take any action whatsoever to help the consumers of housing who are facing a 30 per cent increase in carrying costs? Is it not this Minister of Finance who refused to take any action to stimulate the housing market, and is it not this Minister of Finance who acquiesces with the minister of housing, whose only action in the housing field is to take people to jail?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should be devastated by that question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I introduced into this very House, Mr. Speaker, just two days ago the mortgage interest and property tax deductibility bill that is going to help stimulate our housing industry—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is a joke.

Mr. Crosbie: —and help the Canadian home owner, whom the hon. gentleman opposite left unaided and who opposed that measure in the election. I call on the hon. gentleman to whip through this mortgage interest and property tax deductibility bill so he can help the home owners he says he is so concerned about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—AUTONOMY OF CANADA IN SETTING RATES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. I realize that being Prime Minister is never having to say you are sorry.

Can the Prime Minister reconcile two statements that he made? The first statement was one he made in this House February 13, 1979, that Canada should not be a follower of the United States interest rate policy, but should be a leader in its own interest rate policy. The second statement of the Prime Minister at that time was that the high interest rate policies of the Liberal government were leading Canada to the most expensive monetary policy in its history.

Could the Prime Minister explain to this House whether things have now changed to the extent that this is no longer true, and how does he reconcile these statements and the statements that were made this morning by the governor of the Bank of Canada and in the House today by the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government of Canada as expressed by the Minister of Finance is that this government has a heavy obligation upon it now to show leadership, which the former government refused to show—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You will go to 15 tomorrow.

Mr. Clark: —in dealing directly with the very tough economic decisions that have to be faced. That is the only way, by taking tough decisions now, that we can avoid much more difficult problems for Canada in the future.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, in one of his "Elliott Ness" statements the other day, the Prime Minister said that inflation was public enemy No. 1. If that is true, will he please explain to the House the logic of increasing energy prices to the world level, the logic of the mortgage interest tax credit of which the Minister of Finance is so proud, and is clearly inflationary, and the logic of high interest rates which the Hon. James Gillies, in his previous incarnation as a critic of the government, said were causing inflation? How does he square the circle which he has presented to the House of Commons these past three weeks?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I should not let go uncontested the suggestion about energy prices which, of course, reflects speculation on the part of the hon. member. Once again, the purpose and the view of this government is that what we have to do, if we are going to restore confidence in the Canadian economy and take serious steps toward reducing inflation and, in time, reducing interest rates, is to face tough decisions now. That is what the governor of the Bank of Canada is recommending. That is the advice with which this government agrees and on which we are acting.

● (1425)

Mr. Rae: It is the same advice the governor has been giving for a long time, and both of the old-line parties have been following it. I would like to ask the president directly—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: God forbid!

Mr. Rae: I would like to ask the Prime Minister directly to give the House a clear statement on whether it is the policy of the Government of Canada to restrict credit and cause a recession. If it is, how does he square the circle this time? How does he square that with a statement in the House last week that it is the intention of his government to get the economy working again? How can he do that and have the highest interest rates in Canada's history at the same time?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it is the policy of this government to avoid recession in this country, to restore confidence in this country, and to get enough confidence in the economic policies of the Government of Canada that we can begin to move the country toward a reduction in interest rates, a reduction in inflation and a general sense of confidence in not only the strength of the Canadian economy but in the determination of the Government of Canada to deal directly with the tough problems this government inherited from the former government.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONTRIBUTIONS OF CROWN CORPORATIONS TO PRO-CANADA

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, last October 10, I asked a question of the right hon. Prime Minister concerning the policy followed by the previous government, which was to allow Crown corporations to subscribe generous amounts to the Pro-Canada committee. I should like to ask—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Roy (Beauce): I understand the nervousness shown by the official opposition about the question. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, who had said then that he would examine the matter and report back to the House, whether he is now ready to inform the House of the decision taken by his government on this matter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is the position of the Canadian government that a Crown corporation should not subscribe to a campaign pertaining to a referendum in the province of Quebec. We are now preparing—

An hon. Member: Guidelines!

Mr. Clark: No, not guidelines, but criteria and perhaps also some changes to be brought to the Canadian legislation. I have already written a letter to the presidents of two Crown corporations, namely Air Canada and the CN, to explain to them the position of the Canadian government.

REQUEST MINISTER TABLE COPY OF LETTER SENT TO TWO CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Considering that the Prime Minister is referring to a letter he sent to two presidents of Crown corporations, I want to ask him whether he would agree to table a copy of that letter before the house. I would also like to know whether specific directives have been given with relation to a drive to raise funds in the name of other corporations.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have those letters with me today, but I will probably have them tomorrow and I will table them. I should add that no specific directives have been given to the other public servants referred to by the hon. member.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

PROSECUTION OF PERSONS IN DEFAULT ON MORTGAGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

[English]

The government seems intent in cutting off its nose to spite its face. On one hand it is raising the bank rate, and thus mortgage rates, to unprecedented levels, and then threatening legal action and a tough policy for people who default on their mortgages, on the other. Does the government seriously propose to take people to court for mortgage defaults caused by its own high interest rate policy?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that this minister does not wish to be unduly harsh on anyone, particularly if part of the cause is high interest rates. On the other hand, it would appear that there were some unfortunate conditions and policies which have placed CMHC in the position where to fail to enforce ordinary legal remedies would not be in the best interests of the taxpayers of this country.

MEASURES TO ASSIST MORTGAGE DEFAULTERS

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

[Mr. Clark.]

After only three months, the additional charge due to the mortgage rate increase on a $50,000 mortgage is $1,700. What does the minister intend to do to help people who cannot assume this additional charge because they live on a very tight budget?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is not only Canadians who have particular problems with housing who need assistance; the problem is wider than that. The government is not unmindful of what has to be done, but I would say that some of the policies which have been introduced, including the tax credit on mortgage interest and municipal taxes, will alleviate the unfortunate effects of these high interest rates.

It is all very well to say it does not affect everyone, but neither do child tax credits help childless couples. You do not see too many young people benefiting from old age pension cheques, either. It is not that simple.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT IN FAVOUR OF CONSTRUCTION OF RENTAL HOMES

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I wonder if he is aware of the fact that the property tax deductibility bill will greatly encourage the conversion of apartment buildings into condominiums. As the rental housing sector has deteriorated and its share has been reduced by 32 per cent since September, have any provisions been incorporated into the act to prevent the conversion of apartment buildings into condominiums and to encourage new starts in rental homes to protect tenants who are often senior citizens or small-income families?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): There are measures which would be very helpful for the kind of Canadians to whom the hon. member refers. She will get the exact details of the legislation, along with everyone else. We are looking for ways to address this problems but, again, as she will understand, it is not possible to do as much in the way of housing policy as we would like. There are many in this chamber who would favour some sort of shelter program: some of the provinces have already begun to act along these lines; but we cannot do everything at once.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY WHETHER COMMITTEE WILL STUDY EMPLOYMENT AND LABOUR RELATIONS LEGISLATION RESPECTING PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of Privy Council.

A few days ago the minister indicated in the House that the D'Avignon report had been referred to a cabinet committee on the public service. Could the minister advise the House whether a special study group or committee or task force has been set up within his department to review the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act? If he can confirm that such a committee exists, would he be prepared to table the guidelines which this committee will follow, and name the members of this committee?

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there is no task force set up within my department to study the D'Avignon report, although I must say I am looking at the recommendations myself and there are officials within the government who are looking at them as well.

It is my intention to take the matter to the cabinet committee on the public service as soon as I am in a position to do so. I should inform the hon. member that later this week I shall be sending to each of the public service unions a letter indicating my interest in getting some feedback from them with respect to the report. I am doing the same in the case of the Public Service Commission, and if the hon. member or any hon. member has any helpful suggestions to make, I would certainly welcome them as well.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question will be addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. This morning, the Comptroller General appeared as a witness in one of our committees. One theme which I think is common to both the D'Avignon report and the Lambert commission report is that training and development for both employees and managers in the public service should be increased in order to help these people create a more productive, efficient and effective public service.

How does the President of the Treasury Board reconcile these recommendations, which are made in both reports as well as by the Comptroller General, with the fact that departments in government right now have been forced by Treasury Board to cut back by 50 per cent funds allocated for training and development; and how, in the hon. gentleman's own department, has he coped with these cuts on the financial managers, the people we most need today with new techniques in management? How will he keep training these people so that they can effectively enforce the methods proposed by the Comptroller General?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): I should like to assure the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier that we have no intention of cutting back on the training process which is available within the public service to assist people in being re-employed within the public service.

As to the suggestion that there have been cutbacks in some departments to the extent of 50 per cent, I would appreciate it if the hon. member would inform me in specific detail what he is referring to, whereupon I will look into it.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

ACTION TO PREVENT FURTHER MORTGAGE DEFAULTS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for CMHC. In view of the fact that today's interest rates will mean an increase in mortgage rates from the current 14 per cent level to 15 per cent, an increase of some 3 per cent since this government came to power, can the minister tell the House what action he is taking to prevent additional thousands of mortgage defaults under CMHC, the number of which, I understand, totals around 31,000 and which are taking place in Canada today due to the government's high interest policy?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked a very interesting question. I think that if he studies the matter, he will understand that the people who are defaulting on mortgages at the present time are defaulting on money borrowed at much lower rates of interest in previous years, not because of today's interest rates.

CAMPAIGN PLANK TO REDUCE COST OF HOMES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): My supplementary is to the Prime Minister. During the election campaign, on April 11, the right hon. gentleman promised to cut the cost of buying homes by some 20 per cent, yet we have seen mortgage rates increase from 11 per cent to 14 per cent; in fact, they have increased some 25 per cent to 30 per cent annually.

Can the Prime Minister explain to the House why he has reversed his promise to the Canadian people, making it almost impossible for the ordinary person to own and purchase a house?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat alarmed that so many of those fellows over there have been reading so many of my speeches. They may well end up crossing the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My undertaking during the election campaign was to introduce a program which would reduce the effective cost of housing to Canadians. We shall be doing that with the tabling in this House of the tax credit proposal.

Oral Questions

ICEBREAKING SHIPS IN THUNDER BAY

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport: I have given him notice. It has been the practice, for the purpose of expediting grain handling—a matter of concern to us all—to station an icebreaking ship in Thunder Bay in advance of the freeze-up. I ask the minister, now, if this practice is to be continued. The Alexander Henry is the icebreaker which has been used in the past and although it is better than nothing, we really need a larger vessel like the Sir John A. Macdonald.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. It will be the intention of the department to dispatch the Alexander Henry to Thunder Bay for this season.

I might add that the vessel is currently undergoing repair in Quebec and that it should be ready to sail by the middle of November, or the end of November—somewhere around that period. I might also say that it will be equipped with an air-cushion icebreaking bow which will improve the effectiveness of its operation.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—CONNECTION WITH FUTURE INCREASES IN OIL PRICES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Minister of Finance. Because the spread between the U.S. and the Canadian inflation rate is 4 per cent, and in view of the fact the governor of the bank said this morning he had to move because of the anticipated rate of inflation which he related very much to the increase in the price of energy, did the Minister of Finance tell the governor of the bank before the increase in the interest rate what the increase in oil prices in Canada would be next year?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the governor of the Bank of Canada knows as much about any projected increase in energy prices as does the hon. gentleman opposite. The point being made by the governor of the Bank of Canada was that the difference between the inflation rate in Canada and that in the United States—the American rate is now some 4 per cent ahead of us—is due to the fact that they have been experiencing higher inflation costs for the last 12 months as their gasoline and oil prices have gone toward the international level.

This is something we have yet to come to, but we must come to it so that we can get it behind us and get the economy working and expanding for the future. That is why energy prices were mentioned at all. On a comparison of our inflation with the American rate, when we take out energy factors our rate is just about as bad as theirs.

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. Chrétien: How can the governor of the Bank of Canada anticipate the rate of inflation if he does not know what the increase in oil prices next year will be? He spoke at length this morning about this factor and its moving him to suggest to the Minister of Finance that the anticipated rate of inflation will be much higher next year than it is today.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the governor, in his statement today, gave several reasons why he believes the inflation rate is going to be higher next year. The money supply has been expanding quite rapidly, despite higher interest rates. Food prices are increasing, and there will likely be an increase in energy prices, which all hon. members know is coming. We do not yet know how high they will go, but an increase in energy prices is coming.

We are importing inflation from the United States; 70 per cent of our imports are from the United States. Wages and salaries are starting to increase. For all these reasons, the governor sees a strong push toward further inflation in Canada. We are determined that we are going to stop inflation in its tracks in the next year or two and get our economy back on its feet again.

Mr. Trudeau: Wrestle it to the ground?

NORTHERN B.C.—ALTERNATE MODES OF TRANSPORTATION WHILE RAILWAY BRIDGE UNDER REPAIR

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It is with regard to a very serious accident and tragedy, namely, the accident in connection with the destruction of a railway bridge across the Peace River, in northern British Columbia, the result of which is the isolation of the entire northern section of the BCR from the main line.

I would like to ask the minister if he is aware of this problem. I am sure he is. If so, will the Government of Canada be prepared to join with the province of British Columbia in planning a strategy to mobilize other modes of transportation during the time the bridge is repaired? Second, would the government be prepared in the usual manner to join with the province and share the cost of this disaster?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly share the concern of the hon. member about this disaster. I am not aware of any representations which have been made by the provincial government to our government or, indeed, to my department. My understanding is that meetings have been held between the officials of the railway companies, government officials and shippers.

It is my further understanding that a decision has been made to put in place a prefabricated bridge at Pine River which will be installed within a period of a week or ten days.

This will go a long way in alleviating the difficulties created as a result of the burning of the bridge.

PENITENTIARIES

INQUIRY WHETHER INVESTIGATION WILL BE HELD INTO ESCAPE OF TWO INMATES

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General I shall put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Is an investigation taking place at present, or going to take place, following the escape of two dangerous inmates who were held prisoner in a federal institution in Quebec, and what measures does the government intend to take to avoid such incidents and protect people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I am not in a position to answer the question of the hon. member. Later today I will see the Solicitor General and seek a precise answer to the two questions put by the hon. member.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

INQUIRY WHETHER COMMISSIONER'S REPORT WILL BE REFERRED TO JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Serge Joyal (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Considering that when the Prime Minister was sitting on this side of the House he expressed several times his intention and agreement to refer the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages to a joint committee of the Senate and the House, and considering that that commitment has been renewed in the Speech from the Throne delivered last October 9 by the Governor General of Canada, is the Prime Minister prepared to refer immediately to a joint committee of the Senate and the House the report tabled by the Commissioner of Official Languages of Canada in March, 1979, and not wait for the tabling of the next report which will be presented to the House in March, 1980?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's interest in the discussion of Mr. Yalden's report by a parliamentary committee. I would be prepared to agree to a referral of the last report for consideration by such a committee without waiting for the presentation of the next report.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister say whether he intends to refer that report to a committee of the House or whether it will be sent to a joint committee made up of representatives of both Houses?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we intended to set up a committee of this House, but I would be willing to consult the hon. member and other members, and if there is a consensus to set up a joint committee made up of members of the House of Commons and of the Senate, it would be acceptable to the government.

AIR RADIO OPERATORS' WALKOUT—REQUEST MINISTER INTERCEDE IN DISPUTE

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious nature of the illegal walkout by air radio operators, and in light of the crash at Cranbrook, can the minister inform the House what action he is taking? Will he involve himself within the scope of his responsibilities to bring this serious situation under control in so far as air safety is concerned?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to point out that under the provisions of the collective agreement, designated employees are obligated and required by law to carry out certain prescribed functions. The fact that employees are not doing that indicates that they are breaking the law.

Reference has also been made to the fact that there have been some alleged violations of safety and security. These alleged violations have been brought to my attention, and they are being looked into. Officials of my department have investigated all the incidents which have been reported, and they have indicated that there has been no substance in so far as any alleged violations of safety and security are concerned. There are slowdowns and some cancellations. About 15 stations are not operating at the present time, but essentially all operations are safe, although somewhat abnormal. Safety and security are not being compromised, according to the reports I have been receiving from my officials.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, in view of the seriousness of the safety aspect of this whole question, will the minister indicate to the House that he will at least consult his seatmate, the Minister of Labour, to see if some action can be taken to alleviate this serious safety concern of the travelling Canadian public?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I understand that a mediator is meeting individually with both parties. Of course I will consult my colleague, the Minister of Labour. I will consult, also, my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, because we view this as a very serious matter.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—ACTION TO AVOID SMALL BUSINESSES DECLARING BANKRUPTCY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Prime Minister. It might normally go to the Minister of Finance, but he looks rather unhappy today so I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

The latest increase in interest rates means that small businesses in Canada will have to pay somewhere between 16 per cent and 20 per cent in order to carry on business. In view of the current astronomical—some might prefer not to exaggerate the situation and say "increasing"—level of bankruptcies in small businesses, can the Prime Minister indicate any special measures his government is planning to assist thousands of small businesses from going under due to the government's current high interest rate policy?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the lot of the Minister of Finance is not a happy one when he succeeds a Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I have had the unhappy experience twice. I am very unhappy with the present high interest rates and their effect on small businesses, because we are the party which represents and cherishes small business in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1450)

Mr. Crosbie: But, Mr. Speaker, we say to the small businessmen of this country that the action we take now is action calculated to help them in the longer term, and that we will have thousands more flourishing small businesses when we get over this period of temporary high interest rates.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister of Finance that his party enjoys the support of small businesses, and many of them. Also, I would like him to realize that his particular tax policies are well accepted, the give-aways of about $20 billion a year, by the big businesses in this country. I do not know how long he will have the support of small businesses, if this sort of thing is allowed to continue.

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): I should like to switch my questioning to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since small business is a traditional source of employment, especially in regions of underdevelopment, can the minister say what his department will do to ensure that further economic stagnation will not continue in the have-not areas of the country?

Further, will he urge his cabinet colleagues to bring in a special winter works program to help the thousands of unemployed and the increasing unemployment we will experience undoubtedly this winter due to this high interest rate policy?

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that high interest rates are not in the best interests of regional economic expansion either. But it is something we have to live with.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: To the extent of the resources available, we have tried to compensate for them in various fields. I will take what the hon. member said as a representation, and I can assure him that we will be trying to maximize the resources of regional economic expansion. One way we can do this more efficiently than in the past, hopefully, is to get greater co-operation with line departments and to focus economic development themes in a more unified way.

AIRPORTS

POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT OF AIRPORT AT PICKERING—EXPANSION OF TORONTO INTERNATIONAL

Mr. Alex Jupp (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport and the Ontario minister of transportation and communications recently released a joint discussion paper on major intercity passenger transportation issues in southern Ontario.

Would the minister give his assurance that no expansion of the Toronto international airport will proceed without consultation with the municipal authorities and, further, would the minister assure us that the lands at Pickering and the adjoining lands will be maintained to protect the long-range option for the development of a major airport at Pickering?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is that I can assure the hon. member that there will be no decision taken on any airport expansion without full consultation with the municipalities involved. At the present time I am considering the best vehicle through which that consultation can take place.

In answer to the second part of the question, that matter is still under consideration. I hope to be in a position to make a statement relative to the Pickering airport within the next 15 to 20 days.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS AGAINST RAPID INCREASES IN COST OF LIVING

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the statements by the governor of the Bank of Canada that the prospects for economic activity and employment in the months ahead are less than ideal, and in view of the fact that the year-on-year rate of increase in the consumer price index has now reached 9.6 per cent, even with the lull in the rising price of food, can the Prime Minister say whether his government is considering any special measures to protect consumers with low and moderate incomes against rapid increases in the cost of the necessities of life?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, without getting specific as to the measures which are being considered, I can assure the hon. member that such measures are being considered, with the goal in mind of trying to ease the particular burden of price increases upon lower income Canadians.

An hon. Member: Give us some examples.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Davenport.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, my question has just been answered.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—EFFECT ON DISADVANTAGED PERSONS

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare: it falls in line with the further increase in interest rates.

As a result of this steady increase in the interest rate, has the minister ordered a study of the impact of those increases on the poor, the working poor and those on social assistance? If he has done so, has he brought those studies to the attention of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada? If he has not, why not?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the effects of interest rates, and indeed economic conditions generally, of course, are always of concern to me and my ministry with respect to the effect on low income Canadians. As a consequence, that is why the provinces have particular roles to play when it affects those sectors of the population, the people at the low income level.

In November we will be holding a preliminary meeting, and later on a general meeting, with respect to all matters relating to the welfare part of the ministry. At that time the effects of these conditions will be dealt with not only by me but also by other ministers of the provinces.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, can I ask the minister whether he has discussed with his colleagues in cabinet, or in any other forum, or whether he has been asked by them, to consider the impact of the increase in interest rates? In other words, in his responsibility for health and welfare and all the implications of that, had his advice been sought by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister before those interest rates were increased?

Mr. Crombie: Of course, the responsibility in that regard is my own. So my own response to it, Mr. Speaker, was to bring it to their attention, which I did.

ENERGY

PROPANE GAS SHORTAGE FOR DRYING AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul-André Massé (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that some propane gas retailers in the Montreal area are now experiencing difficulties in getting their supplies from the refiners, and in view of the fact that it seems that the supplies they were entitled to are being diverted towards the United States and that because of this situation some farmers are unable to dry their crops, will the minister tell the House if he intends to make representations to the refineries so that eastern retailers, and in particular those of Quebec, are supplied on a priority basis, thereby enabling farmers to save their crops?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member on what is apparently his first question, and to tell him that in fact the matter has been raised concerning a shortage in terms of propane. There have been discussions with the National Energy Board, which establishes the level of propane exports.

Members of the propane industry now are indicating that the problem is essentially one of transportation logistics. Sufficient propane is available, but difficulty has been experienced in lining up the tank cars to move the propane. The board now understands that assistance from a variety of other propane suppliers will alleviate the situation and reduce the problems with respect to the supply of propane.

[Translation]

Mr. Massé: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

Could the minister give the House the assurance that there is no link between the percentage increase in export sales of propane and the lack of that commodity in eastern Canada, particularly in Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think the first part of my reply answered that particular supplementary.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

TRANSFER TO PROVINCES OF JURISDICTION OVER MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, but since the senator-minister does not sit in this House, I will put it to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations.

At the last first ministers' conference, the previous government, in its desire to decentralize power, agreed with the unanimous consent of the provinces to surrender to them the authority in matters of marriage and divorce. Will the minister tell us if his government intends to carry out this transfer very soon and hence do away with the scattering of jurisdictions?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am just coming out of a conference with my provincial counterparts responsible for constitutional matters which was held last Monday and Tuesday in Halifax. This government's position is the same as that taken by the former government. In Halifax, I took the same stand and I think we just about all agree on it now.

I believe there will be a meeting of four ministers in November and I hope to settle that issue before the conference of first ministers. I am not sure I can do so, but I am hoping.

NARCOTICS

REQUEST THAT POSSESSION OF MARIJUANA BE DECRIMINALIZED

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, since the minister is in such good spirits, I should like to ask him whether he intends to introduce, on behalf of his government, as early as this fall, a bill to reduce the penalties in the case of simple possession of marijuana as well as a bill creating the office of ombudsman, and whether he has looked into their financial implications?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, that bill is now the responsibility of the Minister of Justice, who, in fact, is now in the process of consulting his cabinet colleagues. I am not sure whether or not that bill will be introduced during this session, but it is a policy we are now looking at.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—EFFECT ON FARMING COMMUNITY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and it is on the 14 per cent rate of usury in this country. I think the Prime Minister knows that the increase in the rate of usury, or the rate of interest in this country adds immensely to the farm debt, and the farmers need money to expand their farm operations, buy equipment and purchase land and if they do not get it we may have some shortages in the production of food.

The question I want to ask the Prime Minister is the following: can he give us a commitment today that it is not the intention of the government to privatize the Farm Credit Corporation but, instead, expand its financing to provide loans to farmers at lower interest rates?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are very much interested in helping Canadian farmers, through a variety of means which are under consideration by this government, to expand their operations and to secure a position in which their security as operators will help this country to develop the very real resource we have as a food-producing nation.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is learning very rapidly from the Leader of the Opposition. I want him to answer the question. Can the Prime Minister give us a commitment today that he will not privatize the Farm Credit Corporation but, instead, will expand it and make sure we have more money available to farmers at low interest rates? Will he give us the commitment that he will not privatize the Farm Credit Corporation?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we are certainly not planning to privatize the Farm Credit Corporation.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PAPROSKI—LOTO CANADA—CLARIFICATION OF ANSWER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with a question asked by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) which appears at page 551 of Hansard for yesterday. It arises from a difficulty in the translation of the supplementary question, or from the rapidity with which the hon. member asked it.

I should like to make it very clear that there is no plan to approach the provinces to share in any damage claims, as I indicated yesterday, because the corporation has not received any claims by wholesalers. I say that just to clarify the answer to that particular supplementary question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, this being Thursday, I should like to put a question to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) about the business of the House. Can he give us the order of business for tomorrow and next week? I should like to ask him to be as specific as possible to spare us asking the same question every day, which we unfortunately had to do all week.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will be as specific as I can, and in that specificity I will emulate the House leader of the opposition when he was in my position.

We will continue today with Bill C-10, which is the measure to revise the supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1979-80. When that is completed, and I hope that will be today, we will move to Bill C-4, continuing the debate on the bill with respect to the Federal Business Development Bank. Because it is a short bill, only one clause, following that we want to move to the Municipal Grants Act. We believe it is quite important to get that bill started, and I am sure that view is shared by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton.

Hopefully we can proceed tomorrow with the bill to amend the Breton Woods Agreement Act and the bill to revise the Bank Act. As hon. members know, the bill to amend the Bank Act has been the subject of extensive hearings before the parliamentary committee which has virtually concluded its deliberations, and we ought to have no difficulty in dealing with it. If there is any time left on Friday we will deal with a motion on the order paper in my name in respect of televising the proceedings of the committees of the House of Commons. I assume there is no disagreement in that regard, and if there is agreement I might call it earlier than late Friday.

Moving into next week, we will be dealing with the tax bills. We will be introducing the property tax credit bill the Prime Minister referred to in the course of the question period, and we will hopefully be dealing with the following bills, and I will give hon. members an extensive list so they will have them in mind: Bill C-2, respecting the Department of Labour, Manpower and Immigration; Bill C-7, regarding two-price wheat; Bill C-8, occupational training; Bill C-9, livestock feed assistance; and Bill C-12 dealing with the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act amendment. That will be followed by Bill

C-13, a measure to adjust the accounts of Canada, and Bill C-15, relating to freedom of information. I understand there may be some disposition to deal with that quickly. We will then deal with C-16, an amendment to the Petroleum Administration Act. Bill C-17 we intend to introduce tomorrow; it is a bill respecting the commissioners of internal economy which was dealt with in the Speech from the Throne.

I wanted to give hon. members that extensive list so they will have these items in their minds. Our purpose, however, will be to begin the week with the tax bills that will be standing in the name of the Minister of Finance, as the Minister of Finance says it is important that these bills be dealt with before he can introduce his own budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Could the President of Privy Council indicate to us clearly whether he intends to proceed with the uninterrupted study of a bill until it is passed at the appropriate stage or whether he intends to shift from one bill to another, notifying us only the previous day? In other words, if we begin to consider Bill C-2 next Tuesday and do not complete second reading, are we going to continue with the study of that bill on Wednesday or is the President of Privy Council going to advise us at the last minute that there will be another bill to consider the following day?

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will do my best to better the example of previous years with regard to that matter. I indicated the balance of the legislation for this week, and I clearly indicated that it was our intention to start with the tax bills next week. The Minister of Finance has indicated to the House the importance of completing those bills. It is my intention, to the extent that this is humanly possible, to stay with those bills until they are completed. I am as anxious as the Minister of Finance to clean up those things that have been hanging around since the budget of 1978.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, first may I ask the government House leader whether he can give a more precise answer than he gave me last Thursday in respect of the bills to amend various pieces of veterans legislation? They have been mentioned in the throne speech; the Minister of Veterans Affairs has told us they are coming and the President of Privy Council says they will be dealt with soon. Can he tell us when they will be on the order paper and how soon we might proceed with them?

The other comment I wish to make, and I do this with all the friendship and goodwill there is between us as Commanche Drive neighbours, is that I hope he will really stay with the proposal that he has just announced to proceed with certain legislation.

• (1510)

We have been told several times that once we got through various pieces of legislation we would go to the tax bills, but each time the tax bills are put off and something is put in their place. Several times, including today, the Minister of Finance, in almost a fit of temper, said that we cannot do all the fine things the government has in mind until the opposition quits dragging on the tax bills. There has been no dragging on the tax bills because they have not been called.

The government House leader has said today that the tax bills will be called for Monday, and if he means that, I hope that he will say so, that we will start the tax bills at three o'clock on Monday and stay with them until they are finished. Some of us who have been around the House for a while are accustomed to the schedule being changed, but some of my new colleagues think that we are crazy in jumping around the way we do from day to day. I believe that they are right, and I suspect that some of the ministers have been told the same thing. I ask the government to not play it both ways, by telling us that we will not get any good legislation—and I am still looking for it—until we get away from the tax bills and then not calling the tax bills.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I thank my friend, Mr. Speaker, for his neighbourly advice. We do intend to call the tax bills next week and to continue with those bills along the line which the Minister of Finance indicated was important to him from the point of view of the budget. I recognize the difficulty with respect to shifting, but sometimes that is necessary. I do not like it any more than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I will try to avoid it as much as possible.

I must say, though, that I am impressed with what has happened with Bill C-6. It has gone to committee. We have dealt with the Post Office Act. I think we are starting on the right foot, and I would like to see it continue.

With respect to the veterans bill, I cannot give the hon. member any different information than what I gave him last week. I think that I attempted to tell him that it was a matter which we regard as important as well. I shall certainly bear in mind his representations in the spirit in which he presented them.

Mr. Knowles: Do something before November 11.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, considering the unanimous wish expressed by the spokesmen for the opposition on Bill C-15, the freedom of information bill, and given the fact that the minister himself said that he hoped that bill will be enacted before Christmas, and considering the litany of bills he put on the legislative menu for next week, before proceeding with the study of Bill C-15 could I call on him to be so kind as to put that Bill C-15 on the priority list so that it can be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, so that the necessary comments on it can be made and so that it comes back eventually before the House to be passed before Christmas?

[Mr. Knowles.]

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I too am very interested in that bill, and I am glad to see that the hon. member is also interested. I do need some agreement from the other side with respect to the progress in legislation. I am prepared to sit down and discuss any proposals in dealing with these tax bills and other bills with the other side through the usual channels, so that we can allocate a certain amount of time upon which we all agree to those bills. I am quite open on that matter.

I should alert hon. members to the fact that there is a reference on the order paper now dealing with the nuclear investigation committee. There were four select committees announced in the Speech from the Throne on subjects which I think will be of interest to all hon. members. When we get down to discussing these matters, I would like to discuss a fixed time within which we might consider them, giving a reasonable time for debate so that the committees of the House can get working as well. I thank the hon. member for his suggestion.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MACKAY—HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS—CLARIFICATION OF ANSWER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the week when being questioned by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) on the matter of home insulation, I indicated to him in my answer that home insulation had recently been classified under the Hazardous Products Act. I should have been more accurate and for the record I would like to inform the House that it was cellulose insulation which has recently been classified under the Hazardous Products Act.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RODRIGUEZ—PROCEEDINGS OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—CLARIFICATION BY MINISTER

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, while I was away yesterday there was a point of privilege raised by an hon. member due to a misapprehension. At no time have I refused to appear before the House of Commons finance committee or refused to appear before the committee if I were summoned, before the governor of the Bank of Canada. The finance committee has never asked me to appear before Governor Bouey.

I had my representative tell the finance committee that in my view it would be better if Governor Bouey appeared first. It was the governor's request that he appear before the committee first; he was anxious to have the matter go forward because he felt that any delay would have a bad effect on the financial community here in Canada, the financial markets and the like. Therefore, I had suggested through my representative to the House of Commons finance committee that it would be better if Governor Bouey were to appear first and I appear after the governor.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot appear before the House of Commons finance committee when I am out of town. As far as this week is concerned, I had a previous engagement to meet the four western provincial ministers of finance on Wednesday. I could not appear before the House of Commons finance committee on such an important matter on Thursday without having some time to be briefed. In my brief experience on the finance committee during the previous Parliament, it always accommodated itself to the fact that the previous minister of finance would try to arrange his schedule in order to appear. The committee knew of the busy schedule which the minister of finance keeps, so they tried to accommodate him when he was in town and not here in the House with all his legislative responsibilities.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am not in defiance of any committee of this House, nor do I intend to be in defiance of any committee of this House. If the House of Commons finance committee had ignored my suggestions to them and had told me that they were inviting me to come to the committee before Governor Bouey and would not consider anything else, what option would I have as a member of this House but to go? I would have therefore gone as requested, but it would have been unreasonable.

If hon. members opposite are upset because I am supposed to have refused to go before the House of Commons finance committee, they have nothing to be upset about. I hope that my explanation will put their minds at rest. I am and always will be a humble servant of the House of Commons finance committee and of this House.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FOSTER—NORTHERN PIPELINES—INQUIRY WHICH MINISTER TO APPEAR BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) would clarify which minister will be reporting to the House of Commons concerning the northern gas pipeline. A statement from the Prime Minister's office a few days ago indicated that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Senator de Cotret, would be responsible for this project, but it did not indicate which minister would be responding to questions within the House. Nor is there an indication in another statement from Senator de Cotret whether this matter has been delegated to one of his junior ministers here in the House. I find it passing strange that the largest private enterprise project in Canadian history would be turned over by a minister here in the House to a minister not present in the House. I would like to know who will be responsible for this matter in situations such as appearing before the Standing Committee on Northern Pipelines. Could the President of Privy Council clarify that matter for me, please?

Hon Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would assume that the minister responsible will be appearing before the committee, if that is what is concerning the hon. member. If there is any question which I have missed, I would be happy to discuss that matter with him.

Mr. Foster: The matter of questions in the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): With respect to answers in the House, I can be responsible for those answers, subject to whatever change may follow.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RODRIGUEZ—PROCEEDINGS OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—CLARIFICATION BY MINISTER

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question of privilege spoken to by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) if I am not mistaken, and if my memory serves me correctly, he just told the House that he was never invited by the finance committee to appear before the committee before Governor Bouey. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) is present in the House, and he is the chairman of the finance committee.

Mr. Crosbie: I never said that.

Mr. Rae: Hansard will have recorded what the minister said, but that is my recollection of what he said. The clear understanding at the meeting of the steering committee was that the Minister of Finance would appear first. We then went away for the weekend. When we returned I read in the notice of the next meeting that on Tuesday night we would be considering the future program. I immediately phoned the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and asked what was happening, because I had understood that on Tuesday night we would be considering estimates. At that time the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra said, and I am quoting him from memory, "Crosbie wants Bouey to go first."

That is what the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra told me. Is the Minister of Finance telling this House that he did not have conversations with the member for Vancouver Quadra, at which time the hon. member had a moral obligation to tell the Minister of Finance what the unanimous wishes of the steering committee were? Is the Minister of Finance telling this House that he did not express some concern to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra about the order in which people would be presented to the finance committee?

● (1520)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): To settle that point, Mr. Speaker, the point I made was that I have not refused to go before the House of Commons finance committee. The House of Commons finance committee originally suggested, after I had written and told them what days I was available on, that they wanted me to appear before Governor Bouey. I sent back a message—I was not speaking to them myself—to say that Governor Bouey would wish to appear before me and I agreed with him, and I would like Governor Bouey to appear before me. It was my preference. I did not say it was not my preference that Governor Bouey appear before me. Therefore, the members on the House of Commons steering committee who belong to my party—presumably the other members were unreasonable and did not agree—voted to change the House of Commons finance committee invitation so that they invited Governor Bouey first.

The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that I have not refused to go before the House of Commons finance committee and I do not refuse to go. Because I am anxious to get before the House of Commons finance committee, I will go there next week as planned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are other members who want to participate in this non-point of order. I ruled yesterday when it was first raised with respect to the business of the committee and with respect to dealing with a steering committee report and how that report is formulated, but more important, how it is taken into consideration by any committee, that that is the business of the committee.

It is always the function of a standing committee to accept or reject or otherwise deal with in the whole committee any steering committee report. The steering committee report, as is well known, has no validity in and of itself unless some action is taken upon it by the committee.

More important than that, it is a clear and well established point that this House does not sit in a procedural court of appeal on the proceedings of the standing committees. The matter was first raised as to whether or not invitations had been extended. Whether the report of the steering committee was accepted or rejected or acted upon or followed properly in the standing committee is, in fact, none of the concern of this House and I think it should stay that way.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order deals directly with the record of Hansard and an apparent desire on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) to correct what is recorded in Hansard where it says "I will appear", and then he added "after the governor of the Bank of Canada has been heard by the committee."

The statement he has made just now appears to imply that he wants Hansard corrected. I should like to know if that is what he means or did he—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Rae.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) raises a point of order as to whether or not the Minister of Finance asked for a correction in Hansard. The minister did not ask for a correction in Hansard.

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY TO DEBATE WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Hon. John C. I would ask you to designate orders of the day necessary for the consideration thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Motions. The hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) on a point of order.

Mr. Speyer: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I tried to be recognized with respect to tabling of documents. I take it that time has now passed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is seeking to table a document in his capacity as a parliamentary secretary. Perhaps he might want to consult with his House leader to see whether or not that properly could be done tomorrow.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have received two applications this morning pursuant to Standing Order 26. Both relate to the question of interest rates. The first was given to me by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras) and the second by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, relevant to that notice of motion which we gave you this morning, pursuant to Standing Order 26, I move that this House do now adjourn for the purpose of debating a specific and important matter affecting the nation's economy, namely the increase yesterday of Canada's interest rates to 14 per cent, the highest level in this country's history.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I intend to move the following motion this afternoon. I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing an important and specific matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the latest increase in the bank rate announced by the Bank of Canada last night, pushing interest rates in this country to record levels at a time when economic growth is declining and economic stimulus is needed, and specifically the approval by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) of yet another interest rate increase at a time when the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is attempting to determine whether such monetary policy is in the best interests of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Both hon. members, as I indicated, gave me notice this morning, in proper form pursuant to Standing Order 26, which gave me the opportunity to consider the matter. Both have now read, as is proper within the terms of the standing order, the motion which they would propose, or at least the reasons for which they would propose to move the adjournment of the House, as is the proper form pursuant to Standing Order 26, to consider a matter which in their opinion, pursuant to subparagraph 16(a), may qualify as an emergency.

I do not have to go to that paragraph to set aside these applications at this time. Subparagraph (5) reads as follows:

In determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration, Mr. Speaker shall have regard to the extent to which it concerns the administrative responsibilities of the government or could come within the scope of ministerial action—

Order Paper Question

Here are the important words:

—and he also shall have regard to the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means.

Obviously, it would be impossible under the terms of that section to ignore the fact that on one of the first days of this session, upon an application, as I recall, by a member of the official opposition pursuant to Standing Order 43, a motion was put before the House to have this matter of interest rates referred to a standing committee of the House. That motion was put and upon unanimous consent it was adopted.

As a result of that vote of the House the matter is now before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, which is meeting to consider this matter. In fact, only today reference was made to the fact that a meeting was held this morning and that a witness testified there. Several questions have been directed to the attendance there by the governor of the Bank of Canada, and in turn the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). For me to ignore that the House is now considering that matter in that forum would seem to me to run entirely contrary to the sense of paragraph (5) of Standing Order 26. I therefore do not think it would be proper to use Standing Order 26 in this way while the matter is being considered by a committee of the House.

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY FOR 1979-80

The House resumed, from Tuesday, October 23, 1979, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-10, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1979-80, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, when I noted that it was ten o'clock on Tuesday, October 23, I was saying that one of the main reasons why I wanted to speak about Bill C-10 was that even though this bill looked quite simple since it only authorizes the government to borrow some money, it was still quite important as it mentions confidence in the economic and fiscal policy of the government.

And when there is reference to that, Mr. Speaker, attitudes should be mentioned, and our position in the official opposition, the position of other members, is that of defending oneself against the attitude of ministers.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that one of the reasons why I am taking part in this debate is indeed the attitude of the Minister of Finance on October 23, when early in the day he answered a very simple and polite question put by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) pursuant to standing orders. The Minister of Finance today tried to give explanations, and I recognize his humility. If he wants to remain as humble, he might very well have less difficulty in the future having such simple bills go through.

On this subject, I would like to say we would like to help his House leader and the Prime Minister, who indicated they wanted reform in the House of Commons, not only in our structures but in the attitude of the government in the House. It is for this reason among others that I am acting today to teach a small lesson to the Minister of Finance. He tried to explain this away by stating he never refused to get involved with the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[English]

It is very nice for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) to find his humility all of a sudden and become a humble member of this House by saying that he never refused an invitation from the finance committee to attend its sitting. That is not the issue. First of all, the issue is the attitude of the Minister of Finance with regard to members on this side of the House and with regard to the finance committee. His attitude in sending to the committee his parliamentary secretary, who is a new member of this House—one cannot blame him because he does not understand the traditions of this House and the sensitivities of hon. members—I cannot understand. He sent his parliamentary secretary to a finance committee meeting last Tuesday evening, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are discussing a borrowing bill, are we not? What do the remarks made by the hon. member have to do with the borrowing bill?

Mr. Breau: You will find out.

Mr. Kempling: Let us get on with the business.

Mr. Breau: Do I have the floor, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the intervention made by the official government whip because I do not believe it is relevant enough for me to spend much time on it.

A new member of this House is parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. What I am saying is relevant because we are talking about the attitude and behaviour of the Minister of Finance and we are now discussing a bill brought forward by him. Therefore, the House of Commons and Parliament is being asked to approve the policies of the Minister of Finance and decide whether or not we give him the authority to borrow $7 billion. In my opinion, it is crucial that we examine and criticize the attitude of the minister.

What does the minister do? The steering committee had decided—and please note that the Conservative party had a majority in the steering committee—to invite the Minister of Finance to attend the committee meeting. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Ritchie) had this to say at the meeting of the committee on Tuesday evening:

> Mr. Chairman, some indication of what we are going to be debating has already been given, although earlier today I did not know that would likely be the case.

"Earlier today" meant when the steering committee met and drafted a report. At this time the committee was considering the report of the subcommittee. The hon. member went on to say:

> As you all know, at the time that this report was being prepared by the steering committee one of the prime actors—

And the prime actor had to be the Minister of Finance. The hon. member went on to say:

> —to which it referred was unaware of what it was going to say, and he had some opinions on it which he has since indicated. I would like to give some of the reasons for those opinions if I might.

The parliamentary secretary went on to explain to the committee that, because the Minister of Finance did not wish to come before the committee, he was going to change his mind. After the steering committee had made a report the Committee went on to force a vote and voted against its own subcommittee report. That is what the Conservative party did last Tuesday evening.

The finance minister called him his representative; he said his parliamentary secretary had changed his mind. I am not concerned about the substance because I thought the Minister of Finance's substantive reason for not going before the committee, while I disagree with it, was reasonably good. But why did the Minister of Finance not have the courage to let the steering committee make a decision? Why not let committees of this House operate with some independence, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) said they would? Why did the Minister of Finance not allow the committee to invite him, then write a letter and say: No, for such and such reason I do not think I should go?

Let the committee and this House of Commons judge his conduct, instead of going behind—derrière les coulisses—the halls of Parliament in a private meeting with his parliamentary secretary and telling him to go to the committee and change his mind. That is not the way Parliament works.

I must say to the Minister of Finance that I was impressed by some things the Prime Minister has said about reform in Parliament. For 11 years I have been a private member in this House. I have never been part of the cabinet. Therefore, I was happy to see the Prime Minister recognize that reform of Parliament did not only deal with its structure but with attitude. He stated his government would have an open attitude toward Parliament and would respect members of Parliament and give them an opportunity to obstruct. During the throne speech debate he stated members of Parliament would be given an opportunity to be independent, that they would have some degree of automony and would be able to force the government to do certain things.

I wish to deal briefly with something the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) said on Tuesday evening regarding my participation in this debate. I quote from page 539 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, we will be proceeding with amendments to the Post Office Act tomorrow. I presume we will not have the intemperate display of obstruction we observed from hon. members just a few moments ago, given the fact that what the House is really doing now is dealing with the former government's own bill. It is like spanking your mother; it is not supposed to be done.

This bill is not the former government's bill. The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) explained that on Tuesday. Last winter the former government asked Parliament to increase the borrowing authority of the government to $10 billion. The Conservatives said that could not be done before a budget was presented and as a result the bill was split. The Minister of Finance now has to come and ask for a $7 billion authority because he and his colleagues forced the government to split the bill. The former government then asked Parliament for an authority of $3 billion.

On June 4 this government took office and at that time there was an ample cash balance. There was no need for a borrowing authority. There is now a need. Therefore, I do not accept that this is the doing of the former government.

I appreciate that the Minister of Finance wanted to be humble today and explain that he really did not want to refuse an invitation by the committee. The committee should be allowed to do its work. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) is in a very difficult position because of the actions of the Minister of Finance. That member is a very competent chairman of the finance committee. Members on this side supported his election. When he sat on this side of the House he was a very hard working member. He is a professional chartered accountant, a man who can really do a good job in the sense that the Prime Minister says he wants to reform and thereby give more independence to members of Parliament.

The Minister of Finance has humiliated this man, having him vote against his own steering committee report. The minister will learn that is not the way to deal with the steering committee or the finance committee. Nor is it the way to deal with members of Parliament, as he did the other day with the hon. member for Vaudreuil. In his explanation today, the minister tried to say that it was not so bad. However, as recorded at page 504 of Hansard the hon. member for Vaudreuil rose during a legitimate debate. We had just agreed to give unanimous consent to a motion to cut off the study of estimates in committee. The hon. member for Vaudreuil stated that now that the minister had changed his mind and we on this side were being co-operative, would the minister accept his responsibility for fiscal policy and appear before the finance committee. The jolly old Minister of Finance then became arrogant. This is what he said:

> Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is talking through his hat. I have not refused to appear before the finance committee. I am quite willing to appear before the House of Commons finance committee . . . . I will appear when I am in town and after the governor of the Bank of Canada has been heard by the committee.

Who the hell is he, at three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, to decide who the finance committee is to invite? The finance committee only made its decision close to ten o'clock in the evening. The minister was being arrogant with Parliament. If the finance committee was going to invite him, was he going to say no? The minister went on to say:

> There is no one opposite whose questions I hesitate to answer. When I come before the committee I hope the hon. gentleman is there to ask a few questions.

The minister comes here and says that he is the boss and will appear before the committee when he is in town. I will not accept that. The hon. member for Vaudreuil and this party will not accept that arrogance. The Prime Minister wants to reform Parliament and the President of the Privy Council wants the business of this House to run smoothly. Therefore, we have to signal something here. The Minister of Finance tried to bully members of this House, even those of his own party. He had his parliamentary secretary do that. And he has answered a private member in a very arrogant manner.

I firmly believe that what the Prime Minister said about the attitude of the government is very important. Over the 11 years that I have been here, the House of Commons has run on mood and attitude. The structure does not matter. If the mood is good, legislation goes through. However, that is not the case when the minister tries to get tough. Therefore, because of what the Minister of Finance has done, and in order to teach him a lesson, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil:

> That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 25, such a motion is not debatable. I therefore will put it to the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Breau), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the quickest way to evacuate the House is for me to get up to speak.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nystrom: I obviously do not have the charisma of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) or the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), Mr. Speaker, but I could not resist getting up to speak for a few moments on a bill that is presented to the House by an old friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie)—old "Scrooge MacCrosbie" over there who is bound and determined, now that he is on the treasury benches, to do all he can to make things tougher and tighter for the ordinary people of this country.

I have spent a lot of time reading old Scrooge MacCrosbie speeches made when he was sitting in opposition. He spoke then of the inflation rate being too high and how it was hurting little people, how the interest rate was too high and was hurting ordinary people, how the high interest rate was hurting the maritime provinces and Newfoundland. He said that when he got into government he would wave a magic wand and remedy all these problems. All of a sudden he is in government and he has turned into a real Scrooge. He is tightening the screws on the treasury.

Mr. Ferguson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saint John (Mr. Ferguson).

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, the words "old Scrooge" do not seem to sit very well with me as a new member. I wonder if this is really parliamentary language.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Nystrom: Well, Mr. Speaker, I see you are not going to rule on this but if you did I would change the word to "clown".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I have learned all these things from watching the Minister of Finance when he was in opposition, listening to his rhetoric and reading his speeches. It strikes me as strange that there would be such a conversion on the road to Damascus as we have seen by this minister across the way. Before the election he and his party were the progressive party; after the election they became the Conservative party. Perhaps we can now call them the regressive Conservative party, Mr. Speaker.

Just before the debate the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) remarked to me that perhaps the new name for the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) should be "R. B. Clark" because of the economic policies he is following in this nation which perhaps are leading us into another recession that might be even more serious than the great recession. But it strikes me as rather strange that the Minister of Finance should pick as his first bill to introduce to the Canadian Parliament and the Canadian people a bill to borrow $7 billion. It is especially strange because the Conservative party spent so much time in opposition talking about the national debt being too high and how it would wipe out the national debt. It said it would not have deficit financing, yet the first bill that has been brought into the House is a bill to increase the national debt.

I did some research to see whether or not the Conservative party really believes in reducing the national debt in Canada. I looked at what some Conservative party governments were doing in comparison to other political parties across Canada. For instance, in Alberta, which has a Conservative government, despite its wealth the average per capita debt in 1976 was $1,880. But in the province of Saskatchewan, which has had a NDP government for years—and we are always being accused of having grandiose schemes; even an Alberta friend of mine accuses us of that once in a while—its per capita debt was only $980.

Then we have wealthy Ontario, where "Big Billy" is now dancing and fighting against "Little Joe". With about 40 years of Conservative governments, what was the per capita debt in Ontario? It was $2,059. And what about Newfoundland, where the Minister of Finance cut his teeth and did his training? Under that tremendous leader, Joey Smallwood, and later on under another tremendous leader, Frank Moores, the per capita debt in that province was $3,274. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that those statistics show where the Conservative party really stands. It will not keep the debt where it is. It will increase the national debt in this country and put an even larger burden upon the children of the nation who will be growing up, working and living here in the years ahead.

I ask why. Why is Scrooge MacCrosbie doing this? Why is this guy, this gallant Newfoundlander who is taking food from the children and making it difficult to put clothes on their backs, doing this? He says, "Well, we have to borrow money; we have to increase interest rates." Interest rates are the highest ever in this country. The rate is 14 per cent. They are the highest ever in the country. He says, "We have to do that because we have to support the Canadian dollar; we have to borrow that money so we can pay off the debts which the previous government ran up."

We are borrowing money to pay off our debts. We are increasing our debt so we have to borrow even more money to pay it off. That is like taking an enormously obese person and trying to remedy his obesity by feeding him with candies and cake. This government is making the problem worse by borrowing more and more money in order to pay off the debt which the Liberal government for years and years ran up. Unfortunately, my friend from St. John's is following and pursuing exactly the same course as his predecessors.

Why do we have the problem? Why does the dollar drop? Why is the Bank of Canada increasing the interest rate? I think the reason is relatively simple. The dollar is a reflection of our economy. It is a mirror. When the Minister of Finance gets up in the morning he looks in the mirror and sees himself. So too is the dollar a mirror. It reflects the economy of this country. The currencies of Germany, Japan, France and Switzerland are strong because the economies of those countries are strong. They are strong because they have had some sound economic planning. They have done their own things. They have manufactured their own goods and they have made the best possible use of the manpower and skill they have. Yet in this country we have not been doing that at all. Just look at the outflow of money in dividends and interest from Canada because of the tremendous foreign ownership that we have. I hear some Conservatives interjecting across the way, defending once again the policies of the former Liberal government, I suppose.

Mr. Benjamin: No difference.

Mr. Nystrom: But I look at the facts. It seems the hon. member is concerned about being in bed with the Liberal party. I suggest if he goes to bed with the Liberal party he had better keep a firm hold on his pyjamas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We are speaking from experience.

Mr. Nystrom: I do not know which interjectors are easier to handle, the one from my own caucus or the ones from across the way.

I am trying to be serious. In 1977, for example, there was an outflow from Canada of approximately $240 million in the form of dividends and interest because of foreign ownership and foreign equity. In 1978 that figure increased to over $2 billion. I say again $2 billion. So we have a government across the way that is borrowing more and more money to pay off all these debts. It is allowing more and more foreign ownership in this country. It intends to privatize more and more firms and turn over more and more control of our economy to private and foreign hands. We see this as having a negative effect on the economy.

We in this party say that we need a real change in Canada. We need an economic and an industrial strategy to start doing our own things. We need to take control of our economy by processing our own goods from our own raw materials. We need to start to manufacture the things we are using. We need that industrial strategy. Unless we have it we will have more of the same thing. This means a sagging dollar, more and more borrowing, more and more foreign ownership and control and more and more increases in the bank rate.

I suggest that we do nationally what is being done in the province of Saskatchewan, that is, to plan the economy, to take control of resources, to develop them for ourselves, to keep the profits from those resources at home and to keep the jobs in processing those resources in the hands of Canadians instead of having raw materials processed elsewhere. The province of Quebec is devising an economic policy based on cheap hydro power from the James Bay plants that are coming onstream. Even before the days of James Bay, hydro rates in Quebec for industry were 50 per cent cheaper than they were in Ontario and 100 per cent cheaper than in many parts of the United States.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Veterans Affairs—Prorata pensions for certain widows—Introduction of amending legislation; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Public Service—Review of personnel management and the merit principle—Application of principles in report; the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr)—Fisheries—Cod quotas in Gulf of St. Lawrence.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, private bills, public bills. There being no items on the order paper under the heading "notices of motions (papers)" and "private bills", the House will proceed to public bills.

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The first item of business is notices of motions (papers). As you have correctly stated, there are no items on the order paper at the present time under notices of motions (papers). I do not think this point should be lost as there are over two dozen notices of motions for the production of papers that have been on the order paper since the start of this session. The government has introduced an access to information bill. The government does not seem inclined to produce either the papers or to account for the fact that it is not introducing those papers.

I just want to bring that to Your Honour's attention. The first item of business should have been consideration of the item "notices of motions (papers)". There is no consideration of such a motion because of the inaction of the government in producing papers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): I say to the hon. member for Vaudreuil that there has been no transfer of motions to the order paper at this time. Therefore, order No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) will stand at the request of the government. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Shall item No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The House will now proceed to item No. 3.

FOREIGN ECONOMIC BOYCOTT REQUESTS REPORTING ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR REPORTING OF INFORMATION

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved that Bill C-203, to provide for the reporting of information relating to foreign economic boycott requests, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the first period in this Parliament for private members' public bills. I am honoured and lucky—because it partly results from the official lottery held by the Speaker—to be able to speak on the first private member's bill and to have my bill respecting foreign economic boycotts be the bill for consideration in this first hour.

I am particularly happy to be able to do this because I am delighted to recall for the government and members opposite commitments made in the last Parliament by members of the Conservative party, including its leader, and during the election campaign by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), to take seriously, as he put it, bills put forward by private members. This is such a bill. Too often in the past it was the practice for private members' bills to be talked out and not permitted to be referred to committee or be discussed. I hope that in the spirit the Prime Minister showed before the opening of this session this bill will indeed be referred to committee for consideration. I look forward to that consideration.

There are other members who may want to speak on the bill and a lot will depend on my being brief. I will be as brief as possible in order to give those members a chance to speak without the bill being talked out at six o'clock and so that it can be referred to committee instead of dropping to the bottom of the list. I hope that will not happen.

I have good reason to be confident that will not happen because Bill C-203 ought to look very familiar to all members of the House. It is an exact copy—both the French and English are identical—of Bill C-32 which stood on the order paper at the conclusion of the last Parliament.

Bill C-32 had a very special procedure associated with it and a very special history. In the closing days of the last Parliament, that bill was accepted by members of the opposition who are now the government. Their official party position was in support of that bill. Therefore, we have the government committed in advance to support Bill C-203, not only in principle but in effect every word in the bill. I say this because they indicated they were prepared to give their unanimous consent to dealing with that bill in one day and seeing it passed.

At the same time my own party, the Liberal party, was also in favour of the bill. I am glad to be able to report that my party remains committed to what was Bill C-32 and is now Bill C-203. Therefore, the two principal parties are in favour of it.

Furthermore, in the last Parliament the NDP indicated that they too were in favour of this bill. They would have given it the three readings in one day. Therefore, what we have before us is not an ordinary private member's bill but one which was a public bill of the government at the end of the last Parliament. It had been unanimously accepted by all parties in the House. It did not proceed as all parties would have wanted because two or three members, certainly not more, withheld the unanimous consent which was required to deal with the bill under the special procedure being proposed by the then House leader.

This bill does not need to be discussed very much before reference to committee, but I do want to say a couple of things about it. First, I know that it is not entirely satisfactory to many members in the House. The government proposed four amendments which I did not include in the bill because I did not want to alter it from the state it was in when it had unanimous consent. I too had proposed some amendments to Bill C-32. I would still like to see some amendments when it gets to committee and we discuss it. I did not put my amendments into it because I did not want to diminish the unanimity this bill had when it was on the list of government bills.

I read in the newspapers, and members opposite can speak about this, a statement attributed to the House leader that the boycott legislation no longer has the high priority the government indicated it once had. I want to take a moment to urge the government not to consider Bill C-203 as part of the issues being dealt with in connection with the move of the Canadian embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem or with the Stanfield mission.

The bill refers to the Arab boycott and it derives from events in the Middle East, there is no doubt about that. However, it is an entirely internal piece of legislation that has to do with the civil rights of Canadians. It does not have anything to do with the relationship between Canada and countries in the Middle East. It has nothing to do with the conflict. Is has nothing to do with the primary boycott, which is the business of Israel, not Canada, the business of the Arab countries, and not directly the business of this Parliament.

Bill C-203 is designed to do what my earlier bill which received unanimous consent and party approval was designed to do, simply to assure that the Arab boycott had no internal application in Canada to diminish the civil liberties of any Canadians. That is the issue. The issue is not the resolution of events in the Middle East.

I recall the Prime Minister saying he believed the move of the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem would contribute to bringing peace to the Middle East. I have a text of those remarks. I did not agree with him. Events have shown it was a regrettable decision that he reached. However, we are not going to consult with parties in the Middle East, as Mr. Stanfield is doing, regarding the civil liberties of Canadians within Canada. I do not think Mr. Stanfield asked the PLO whether the civil liberties of any groups of Canadians should be protected. I do not believed he asked the Prime Minister of Israel or the President of Egypt about that. It has nothing to do with issues between parties in the Middle East. It has everything to do with the civil liberties of Canadians.

The tertiary effect of the Arab boycott would require companies complying with the boycott to discriminate against their employees, customers and suppliers on the ground that they were Jewish. I look forward to hearing the support of all members for the protection of civil liberties on something as fundamental as that.

• (1710)

Since, there are others who wish to speak on the bill, I should like only to remind members that in its present form this is a reporting bill. It is not a bill which requires trade not to take place, it is not a bill which prohibits the entering into of contracts and so on. It simply requires that Canadian enterprises which are asked to comply with an Arab boycott as a condition of conducting business should notify a government agency. It is a very mild piece of legislation. I have indicated what its direction is, and I have indicated that I would be ready to consider amendments when it reaches committee. In that spirit I urge the government to follow the policy it indicated it would follow, that of not automatically stamping out private members' bills, by allowing this bill to proceed to committee for consideration.

Finally, I note that according to the order paper the bill, if passed, stands to be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. It was my instruction that it ought to be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, which I think is the more appropriate committee since it deals with civil liberties legislation. I do not want the bill to be held up on that account but, if appropriate, I might at a later stage seek Your Honour's consent to have the bill referred to that committee.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for having the wisdom to resurrect this bill from the order paper of the previous Parliament and present it as a private member's bill.

As far as the draw is concerned, I was there when the draw took place and it is rather interesting that the first two bills were stood and the hon. member's bill is the first to be presented in this Parliament in private members' hour. I would have preferred that the hon. member's bill had been drawn further down the list because that would have allowed time for certain changes the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) is contemplating in the conduct of private members' business.

I have a great deal of sympathy for this bill. I believe the hon. member for York Centre knows my views on the whole area of boycotts, and economic boycotts in particular. I took a month's trip through the Middle East in the course of which I visited several Arab countries as well as Israel, and on my return I produced a paper for the Prime Minister on the subject of economic boycotts. In fact, I myself put forward a private member's bill in the last Parliament dealing with this subject, but unfortunately it was not in a position to proceed and never saw the light of day.

When this bill of mine was put forward, the internal details of the measure were not presented. I withheld them on purpose. I held them back as long as possible while I was awaiting a call from the desk to tell me that the bill was likely to come up and be sent to the printer. This was a conscious procedure because I know this was a very delicate subject then, as is the case today. I delayed the internal content of the bill from the printer's hands in the hope, first of all, that the central issues would be resolved. I had a great deal of hope when President Carter and Mr. Begin got together; I thought that they and the President of Egypt were really going to make a lot of progress in a hurry. Perhaps I was over-optimistic at that time.

In trade and commerce we like to see the least possible amount of regulation so that trade is allowed to move in normal fashion. I found varying degrees of concern. I found, first of all, that the Canadian companies which were on the boycott list had apparently been drawn from an old issue of the Directory of Directors put out by the Financial Post and that many of the companies listed were no longer in business. Others had been merged and consolidated and their names had been changed, so the list was not very accurate.

When I talked with officials in Iraq and Syria I found varying degrees of concern—the feeling in no way resembled that which I encountered among business people I talked to in Cairo. The attitude seemed to be: if we want what you have, we shall find a way to get it regardless of any boycott. For example, if hon. members would look at the original boycott list they would see that the Ford Motor Company is listed. Yet the Ford Motor Company today has a plant in Cairo where it produces trucks and tractors. We have had an ongoing concern with the progress of events in the Middle East, and with that in mind the Prime Minister, as everyone knows, has sent Mr. Stanfield over to look not only into the proposed move of the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, but into the whole matter of the boycott.

It is the intention I believe, from the information I have, to introduce a bill dealing with this subject in the New Year. I do not know whether the content will differ greatly from that which the hon. member has outlined. I look forward to having his co-operation and input at that time because I know he has a deep concern with these matters, as we all do. But I must tell the hon. member now that it is our intention to talk this bill out today because we believe the report to be presented by Mr. Stanfield will have an impact on whatever legislation we bring forward in the New Year. Thus, while I have a great deal of sympathy for the hon. member's intentions and appreciate his bringing the bill forward, we cannot at this time refer it to a committee.

From my experience, people engaged in commerce have always considered themselves above the politics of a situation. In fact, if one looks to history one finds that the traders have usually preceded the diplomats. The problem which arises here is that actions taken by certain countries in the Middle East appear to be transgressing the civil rights of Canadians. The hon. member may be interested to know that my first experience with this so-called boycott was when some people who were selling for cash to a Middle East country found that the enforcer of the boycott was actually the bank through which they were doing business. I found it surprising that they had a sale. The deal was completed and they had not complied with any of the boycott requests. They stayed clear of them. They said, "No, we don't want to sign that," but when it came to collecting on the letter of credit and getting their money, in order to get their money they had to sign some documents or they would not have been paid. That was what sparked my interest in the whole matter.

● (1720)

My own view is that we should proceed something along this line: we should respect the human rights of Canadians in this matter. I would prefer to see a bill in which there is no reference at all to any particular ethnic group. In other words, I do not want to see a statute on our books which refers to Arabs, Jews or any other racial group. I think it would be wrong. I think we should look at it in this sense: we should prefer to see a prohibition on the transmission of any information regarding a Canadian citizen's racial origin, religion, political affiliation or the racial origin, religion or political affiliation of any Canadian director, employee or officer of any company.

I would like to see this prohibition put into any legislation dealing with trade and commerce. In other words, in a commercial transaction between a Canadian company and a company outside Canada there should be a prohibition in Canadian law against any mention whatsoever of an individual's race, religion, political affiliation or anything of that nature. If we leave it as open as that, that would pretty well cover the situation.

We recognize that a state of war exists, theoretically, between Syria and Israel, Iraq and Israel and some other Arab countries and Israel. That is a fact, we recognize it, and they have a right to say who they do business with. If they do not want to do business with a certain nation, they have a right to a primary boycott. They have a right to say which shipping lines come into their ports. They have a right to be suspicious of a shipping vessel which stops at a port of their theoretical enemy, and they have a right not to allow that ship to go from the port of their enemy to their own port without serious restrictions. However, beyond that we should prefer to see the whole matter as free and open as possible, because commerce finds a way to handle these matters. I think that if we leave it there we will be able to serve Canada best.

I am upset when I read reports about what is going on in the Middle East. I think some of the statements made in Canada by people who are not very well informed on events in the Middle East tend to inflame the situation. Constantly keeping the matter in the headlines works against a solution. I am a great believer in quiet diplomacy. I have a great respect for people of the calibre of Mr. Stanfield. I know he has a great and deep feeling about the difficulties in the Middle East, and I know he will bring in a report which is detailed and comprehensive. It will be something upon which we will be able to base some solid and meaningful legislation which will be fair to all concerned.

This subject is charged with emotion, and I think we reach a time in these things when we have to cool our feelings, sit back and look at them calmly and coolly and listen to the wisdom of those who have been there, gathered details and listened to the wisdom of our embassy people and our trade people. Only then should we put together and bring forward a piece of legislation which would help us deal with this problem as we go down the road.

[Mr. Kempling.]

I do not think we are going to solve the problem totally. There will always be some people inside and outside Canada who disagree with what we do. I note that many states of the United States have brought forward anti-boycott legislation. The United States has brought forward anti-boycott legislation. We could rush into this right now, but perhaps after we have read the report which will be made by Mr. Stanfield we will wish we had let matters rest for a few more months.

This matter has been on the table for a long time. It was on the table for the previous government for a long time, and we urged several times that it be brought forward. We talked about it very seriously in our caucus. I think the hon. member will agree that we really should wait and hear what Mr. Stanfield has to say. I do not think that waiting for another 90 days or 120 days will be too difficult for us. I know the Prime Minister is greatly concerned about this matter. Several of my colleagues have expressed their concerns several times. I know that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) is very concerned about potential losses of trade in the Middle East.

I talked with our trade people in Iraq, in Syria and in Egypt about the boycott, and they all told me more or less the same story. They said that every time the subject of boycott legislation is raised in the House of Commons, whatever trade negotiations are going on between Canadian companies and companies in the Middle East come to a standstill. In other words, the fact that we are even thinking of introducing boycott legislation causes many deals just to stop. The fact that we are talking about this causes a slowdown in negotiations or causes them to be stalled. It was two years ago now, but when I was in Iraq I believe there was a contract being negotiated for aircraft refuelling equipment and tanks in a system. One of the members of the government of the day, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), asked a question about when the government was going to introduce anti-boycott legislation. He also asked a supplementary. At the time I was told that two days later there was knowledge of the question in Iraq, and the deal which was being worked on came to a halt. The parties were ready to sign a contract but they came in and said "It's all off".

The whole matter of legislation and its introduction is being used as a tactic in commercial negotiations, and that is a tragedy in itself. I think the wise position would be to wait for the report of Mr. Stanfield.

Mr. Prud'homme: An ambassador extraordinaire.

Mr. Kempling: My colleague says he is an ambassador extraordinaire. I have a great deal of confidence in him, and I know he is going to make a report on which we can draft some meaningful legislation. That is all I have to say about it. I commend the hon. member for bringing it forward. I just wish it had been a little further down the list so that perhaps we could have got together with him on it and made some changes. But such is the way the draw is made. He has come forward with it at this time and, while we have sympathy for his position, I hope we can talk with him at the time our legislation will be brought forward, and get his support.

• (1730)

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, in making his remarks, the hon. member opposite referred to me and said that he was sure I would agree that the matter was a difficult one and that it should be given more consideration. I want to assure the House that I do not agree with that assertion. As I proposed the bill, it is totally a matter of civil liberties within Canada. That is all it touches. I cannot understand why consultation should be necessary to determine whether we should protect the civil liberties of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I think the hon. member is participating in debate.

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I shall be brief. At the beginning of this debate, we asked if it was acceptable to proceed with Bill C-203, but I think you also said that such was the government's request. It seems this is not completely accurate because the government did not request such a decision from you, sir. I would suggest that Bills C-201 and C-202 are not ready for discussion at this point, and ask whether hon. members would be agreeable to discuss the bill put forward by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), with unanimous consent, pursuant to Standing Orders 18, 19 and 49, and the finding by Mr. Deputy Speaker of December 5, 1977.

[English]

In a word, Your Honour, I think it was a misunderstanding that we proceeded with this bill at the request of the government. As members know, the government can do this but twice in a session; that is my understanding. Therefore I would ask Your Honour to ask hon. members to agree unanimously that we proceed with this bill now, rather than at the request of the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member has asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. Lachance: On the same point, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: This is a nice way to take up time.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, we all realize why the parliamentary secretary has been asked to do this. He mentioned it in his request, so that the postponement is not put under the request of the government. Under the rules, if these bills are asked for twice in the name of the government, they cannot come back.

We will agree with this, provided the Chair and members of the House realize that from time to time there may be members on this side of the House who will have bills in the order which come up for discussion when those members are away for very valid reasons. I should remind the House that we would expect the same courtesy from the parliamentary secretary, who cannot divorce himself from his duties in representing the government. Therefore, we would agree, but I hope the Chair and the House remembers that it could happen to members of the official opposition or of the other parties as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is there unanimous consent that the record shall show Bill C-201 and Bill C-202 have been stood by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The record shall be changed to record the two changes as requested and approved.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) I did not know whether to laugh or cry, because his recounting of the history of this bill was very selective, to say the least.

It is true that Bill C-203 is exactly the same as Bill C-32 which was introduced in the last session of the last Parliament by the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, Mr. Horner. Also it is true that at one point there was agreement on the part of opposition parties to let the bill go through. I will not thrash old straw as to why it did not go through, but the only reason there was agreement to let that bill go through, without extensive debate on the part of a number of opposition members, was that we knew very well the then government had no real desire to get anti-boycott legislation on the books.

The bill introduced by the government of the day was the most to which that government would agree. What that bill did in the last Parliament, and what the bill now before us does, is simply to require individuals or companies, which co-operate with countries involved in boycott operations against Canadian citizens or Canadian companies, to report it to the government, and the government would make it public. There would be no penalty, there would be no censor except publicity.

In the last session we agreed to let that bill through quickly because it was the best we could get. I know the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) was unhappy with the meagreness of that bill, and I assume the hon. member for York Centre was unhappy. Now that he is no longer a member on the government side, I would have thought he would have brought forward a bill which would really do the job. The bill before the House does not really do anything.

I recognize that we are dealing with a very difficult situation. One cannot live in the late 1970s and not realize the tremendous power which oil-producing countries have in our modern industrialized world. One just has to look at the difficulties in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and his government have become involved as a result of the Prime Minister's pledge, when he was leader of the official opposition, to move the Canadian embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. We recognize the difficulties. It might sound like hindsight, but I say to the government whip who has spoken on this bill that I wished at the time, and I still wish, the then leader of the official opposition, the present Prime Minister, had not made that proposal.

I hope I am wrong, but everything I have read to date, and the speech I heard by the government whip today, confirmed my fears that because of the very active opposition of the Arab countries to the proposal to move the embassy, hostility will be expressed in the same manner and to the same degree if there is a proposal to implement real anti-boycott legislation. I hope I am wrong and I hope time will prove me wrong, but I am afraid the government will backtrack on the kind of approach it had when in opposition. The government whip shakes his head. I will be the first one to congratulate those on that side if time proves me wrong.

● (1740)

Let us just spend a few minutes considering why we need boycott legislation. I want to say to the government whip that we agree with him completely when he suggests that legislation should not single out any country or any group of countries. That was not the case in the old Bill C-32 proposed by the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, or Bill C-203 proposed by the hon. member for York Centre, or the case in respect of my Bill C-288. My bill is quite a way down the list and I think it is a much better bill. I do not say that because I have any pride in its authorship. Indeed, it is almost word for word the same as legislation enacted by the province of Ontario, which now has Premier Davis, and has had a Conservative government for more than 30 years.

I agree with the government whip that no legislation should single out one country or any group of countries. If we are going to have legislation of this kind, what we want is legislation that applies to everybody in the same way. What we want is legislation which protects the rights of Canadian individuals and companies, and protects them from being discriminated against because of race, colour or creed, or because they do business with one country or another.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, let me say that we are discussing this kind of a bill because there is an Arab boycott against Israel. That boycott has existed since the creation of the state of Israel in 1948; and since 1973 and the sharp increase in the price of oil, together with the fact that Arab countries control so much of the world's oil supply, that boycott has become much more formidable. It operates at several levels.

The primary boycott is a direct boycott of Israel by the Arab states, by which they refuse to do business with the state of Israel. Canada is not involved in that boycott and has no role to play in it. That is their business, Mr. Speaker.

The secondary boycott is an attempt by Arab states, firms and individuals to pressure firms of other countries, in this case Canada, to refrain from dealing with Israel, or to end certain relationships with Israel, as a condition of trade with Arab states, firms or individuals. This, in effect, compels a Canadian boycott of a country with which Canada has friendly relations and against which Canada has not itself authorized a boycott. We say that is improper if carried on by another country. Another country should not be interfering with the rights of Canadian citizens or companies.

The tertiary boycott is an attempt to prevent firms of other countries, in this case Canada, from dealing with firms of their own or other non-involved countries because of the latter firm's relationship with Israel, as a condition of doing business with Arab states, firms or individuals.

The secondary and tertiary boycotts constitute direct interference in Canadian economic affairs by the extra-territorial application of Arab laws and regulations. That is what so many people in Canada object to, and we feel that no country has the right to tell us what to do.

As far back as 1975 the then prime minister expressed the views of most Canadians, here in Parliament, when on May 8 of that year he said:

> I think it is sufficient to say that this type of practice is alien to everything the government stands for and indeed to what in general Canadian ethics stand for.

Having said that, the then government completely ignored the feelings of the prime minister and simply refused to take any action to implement those feelings and views expressed by the prime minister. Repeated requests for such legislation were ignored or turned down. Requests that companies involved or co-operating with a boycott by the Arab countries should have that information publicized were turned down. It was not until the dying days of the last Parliament, when seized with the realization that there was an election coming and they might have to account to certain groups for their failure to act, did the then government bring forth a bill, to which the hon. member for York Centre has referred and copied.

What does that bill do, Mr. Speaker? That bill simply says that any government or any company in Canada which co-operates in a boycott with another country—we are talking about the Arab countries, but it would be true of any other—should be required by law to report that co-operation to the Government of Canada which would then publicize it. We know from experience that even if we required that, there would be no penalties. Companies would be free to do that. They would get a little bad publicity, but many Canadian companies are used to bad publicity. They get bad publicity when they are found guilty of breaching the anti-combines law. They get bad publicity on many occasions. The desire to make a profit would, I am sure, persuade many companies and many individuals to get involved and co-operate.

It is clear that the former government's frequently reiterated commitment to combatting boycott-related discrimination has become a charade. In the three or four years since the former prime minister stated that the boycott was alien to everything the government stood for, concerned groups and individuals attempted to persuade that government that firm and explicit policies were needed to prevent serious infringement of Canadian sovereignty and human rights. That government contented itself with meaningless statements and some half-hearted policy guidelines which served to obscure the issues and confuse the corporate community. Instead of showing more courage, that Government of Canada chose to dodge the issue.

We have to face up to the issue. I am not suggesting for a moment that this is an easy problem. In fact I know there would be some retaliation on the part of some Arab states.

When we talk about real legislation, I should point out that the bill on the order paper in my name is almost identical to a bill enacted by the legislative assembly of Ontario, brought forward by a Conservative government, which I have been told is modelled after similar legislation in the United States. The United States has had legislation on its books for a number of years now which prohibits American companies from co-operating in the boycott against the state of Israel.

What I am suggesting to the government whip is that if similar legislation has been enacted by the United States and by the province of Ontario, this Parliament should do at least as much. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this bill going to the committee if that would permit some real discussion. I hope that after the government gets the report it has asked Mr. Stanfield to make, it will not forget the arguments it put forward when in the opposition. I hope that the government will not renounce those principles of equity and justice which the present Prime Minister expressed so eloquently when he was leader of the opposition, and that we do not get another waffling or sweeping under the rug like we got from the former government.

Mr. Ken Binks (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the hon. member who has introduced the bill, and to tell this House how much I sympathize with the reasons which give rise to it. If this matter is as important as I believe the proposer in all sincerity says that it is, then it is my view that it would be most advantageous to wait until the government brings in a similar bill, to which the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) has already referred.

There are good reasons for waiting. If this bill is as important as the proposer says that it is, I find it difficult to understand why he would call it a very mild piece of legislation. If this matter, which has been before the press and the House for a number of years, is important, then it is not a very mild piece of legislation. Certainly if it is as the hon. member says, that it is primarily a matter of the civil rights of the citizens of Canada, then there is no way that it is a mild piece of legislation. I am sure that there is not a member in this House or a citizen of Canada who is not sympathetic to the subject matter of this bill, and who would not like to see the matter corrected.

This government is committed to dealing with this matter through legislation in 1980. When it does so, it will not introduce a mild piece of legislation simply because this matter does affect the civil rights of all Canadians. It will not be, as the hon. member has said, a recording bill. What use is a bill which affects the civil rights of all Canadians if it is a recording bill? I would have thought that someone proposing a private member's bill would speak on the matter with some feeling, if the bill is so important, on the simple basis that he who asserts must prove. However, the hon. member rose in the House and denied that he wanted the bill given more consideration, and I believe he even told this House that he wanted the bill sent to committee so that it could be amended.

It would seem to me that any member who introduces a bill for serious consideration in this House would not want that bill amended and that he or she would have given serious consideration to what they wanted in the bill.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the hon. member is imputing improper motives in my introduction of this bill. I introduced it in the form that it was on the Order Paper in the last Parliament for very particular reasons which I have stated, and none of which had to do with any feeling on my part that the bill was satisfactory in the form that it was introduced, but all of which had to do with the fact that this bill had received the unanimous agreement of the parties in this House. So, to suggest that I did it for any other reasons is unreasonable, and inaccurate.

Mr. Binks: Mr. Speaker, if I have directly or indirectly imputed any improper motive to the hon. member, I withdraw it. I did not mean to say that he was insincere. Certainly I have a constitutional right to point out that any member who introduces a bill usually speaks with greater fervour about some of the conditions recited in it.

There is another reason why this bill should be looked upon somewhat askance by this House. The question of the economic boycott relates to what has happened over the past six months in this country and to our foreign policy, and is of such a delicate and sensitive nature that it would be irresponsible not to wait until the Hon. Robert Stanfield makes his report. Regardless of what is considered to be separate from the matter that Mr. Stanfield is dealing with, there is no way that it would be inseparable in the public mind.

I agree with what the hon. member for Burlington said when he suggested that there are means by which international commerce can satisfy whatever trading aims that commerce may have. We might ask ourselves if there is any way that the provisions of this bill, even if amended by committee, could hope to do what it sets out to do. There is no way whatsoever that what Mr. Stanfield has been asked to report would be dissociated from this bill in the public mind, and certainly not in the points of views of those countries which have been upset by this matter, which was originally thought to be a matter of domestic politics in this country. It was a principle of French foreign policy, and the most urgent thing to do—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): It is now six o'clock and the hour provided for consideration of private members' business has expired. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) on a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I want to be on record as saying that this is the first time in my career in this House that I have agreed entirely with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Now I have to go out and take a valium.

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY FOR 1979-80

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-10, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1979-80, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, before the dinner hour I had a few minutes to talk about the bill that is before us today. I was concerned that the Conservative party across the way is borrowing too much money. It has not started off with its priorities straight in terms of the bills it is bringing before this House. My particular concern was the high interest rate policy of the party.

In its five months of government the Conservative party has become known as the high interest rate party. I see a friend of mine from Saskatchewan nodding in agreement. I believe his riding is Kindersley-Lloydminster. He confirms that the Conservative party is the high interest rate party. I am sure that his constituents will be interested to know he is confirming that his party is the high interest rate party. I will be in Prince Albert very shortly where an interesting activity will be taking place. I will make sure the people there know that the Conservative party is the party of usury. It has set the rate of usury at 14 per cent in this country. It seems to be proud of that, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it is necessary at all.

In my riding, and right across the country before the election, that party talked about the interest rate being too high, the inflation rate being too high, and that we had too many unemployed. "If the interest rate is increased to slow down the economy there will be more unemployed," that is what they said. But once it came to power the Conservative party did a double take, and increased the interest rate. It watches the inflation rate going up and does nothing at all. It does nothing about the high rate of unemployment. Because political parties do double takes like that and break their word, this is a reason why there is a lot of cynicism about this place and about the political process in general.

I am concerned about the effect that the government's high interest rate will have on farming and on food prices. In the Toronto Star for October 12, 1979, a headline reads, "Interest rate increases will boost costs of dairy products and meat, official says". Another article has as its headline, "Food-price boost seen over interest-rate rise".

The Cattlemen's Association are saying that the high interest rate means that consumers in this country are paying about 18 cents a pound in interest rates when they buy a pound of meat. In other words, 18 cents of what they are paying goes to pay interest. The same thing is true for other farm products.

I am concerned that Canadian farmers have a real debt problem. Farmers are caught in a real squeeze. They will have to borrow a lot of money and because interest rates are high it will be very difficult for them. Perhaps they will not borrow some of the money they need to maintain efficiency on their farms. Perhaps they will not buy new equipment, repair their equipment, expand their operations, or purchase items they need to produce food. Later on this could create shortages of some food products which will further drive up prices charged to consumers. I am concerned too that this will put a lot of farmers out of business.

I know the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is buddy-buddy and has a love relationship with a lot of the large corporations. And he is very familiar with large corporations, I know that. It is much easier for large corporations to cope with high interest rates. All they do is reinvest a lot of their profits and they do their own financing. On the other hand, a small company cannot do that; neither can a farmer nor a fisherman. If a farmer needs to borrow money now he will have to borrow at a high interest rate.

I want to remind the House that we are not dealing here with a small segment of the population at all. In the year ending 1977 the total outstanding credit for farmers was approximately $10,400 million. My guess now is that that figure is probably past the $12 billion or $13 billion mark. These Statistics are from Agriculture Canada. And there were lower interest rates then; so what is going to happen now that the interest rate is very high?

There are other statistics that affect farmers. We find, for example, that the total borrowed by farmers for farm needs in 1979 is estimated at approximately $8 billion. That is a lot of money, $8 billion. About 60 per cent of that, or roughly $4.5 billion to $5 billion, is for short-term loans. The Farm Credit Corporation has a low involvement in short-term loans. Most of these loans come from banks or from supply company credit. About 27 per cent or 30 per cent, or approximately $2 billion, is in intermediate term loans from 18 months to ten years, but most of it is for less than ten years. Again, most of this is from private banks and lending institutions. Only 10 or 12½ per cent, or approximately a billion dollars, is in long-term loans. Most of this, of course, is from the Farm Credit Corporation.

● (2010)

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced a few weeks ago that another $50 million was being added to the capital budget of the Farm Credit Corporation. Let us not forget that the bank rate since January 1 has gone up by some 2¾ per cent. This increase in the prime lending rate will mean that the actual cost of interest to farmers will be about $200 million per year. That is an additional cost in interest rates alone.

That is exceptionally high, and will mean a lot of very serious problems for the farmers of this country. It comes at a time when the government should be trying to ensure that young farmers have the money to stay on the farm and that they have, as an objective, food self-sufficiency in this country. The Department of Agriculture can tell you that if we take away grain and oil seeds, our deficit in food production last year was about $1.8 billion. That is very severe. If you are not going to produce more food, you make cash more difficult for the farmers to obtain.

I appeal to the sanity of the government to stop its ridiculous policy on interest rates. Perhaps ministers have no sanity. I do not know. If they have any left, I appeal to them to roll back the bank rate and ensure that farmers can get loans from the Farm Credit Corporation. They need loans to expand their operations. These must be at a much lower rate than today. Loans are needed by farmers in order to build farms, renew their equipment, remain efficient and produce food for the Canadian people at a reasonable cost.

Something that concerns me very much is that the spread between the rich and the poor of this country is widening instead of narrowing.

[Translation]

I read in the newspaper Tuesday, I believe, that the poverty rate substantially increased in Canada in 1978. The average wages of Canadian families went up by 6 per cent, but it should not be forgotten that the inflation rate of our country last year was 9 per cent. With such an inflation rate, the real wages of the average Canadian family have been reduced by 3 per cent. In spite of that, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance with the governor of the Bank of Canada has raised the interest rate of the Bank of Canada to 14 per cent—highest ever in the history of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there are in Canada today many families living below the poverty level. For example, in 1977 there were in Canada 659,000 families living below the poverty level and last year there were 7,000 more. That is 666,000 Canadian families. As for individuals, the situation is the same. In 1977, 842,000 individuals were below the poverty level and last year or the following year there were 886,000. However, in spite of that, as I said, the Minister of Finance has just raised the interest rate to 14 per cent.

[English]

That is the highest it has ever been in Canada. He is getting off to a very bad start as a new Minister of Finance, particularly when you read his old speeches where, before the election, he was very concerned about keeping the bank rate down. I wonder how many backbenchers in the Conservative party really support him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: One or two over there are having difficulty. I see three members who applaud the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I am really happy. Only two applauded the Minister of Finance, and about 15 are applauding me. The Minister of Finance should look over his shoulder because the long knives might be coming out very soon. I am interested in knowing where the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) is. I hear he has some very interesting comments to make about the bank rate.

An hon. Member: What about Edmonton West?

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps, too, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I know quite a few members of the Conservative party who came here full of vigor and enthusiasm who are not very happy with the Minister of Finance for raising the bank rate. Perhaps the true colour of the Conservative party is starting to show. The Minister of Finance who represents the big boys, the corporations, is an extreme right winger. Perhaps the true colour of the Conservative party is coming through.

I will be very interested in seeing some of the new backbenchers getting up in this House to tell us exactly where they stand. The hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) has already stated that his party is the high interest rate party. I would like him to get up in this House and tell us the philosophy behind that statement, so the Canadian people can get directly from his mouth that the Conservative party is for the fisherman, home owner, or the person who wants to build a house—the average Canadian. The Minister of Finance is more than just a bit of a hypocrite when he introduces policies like that, considering his past record as a critic in the opposition.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, this week we have been treated to an extraordinary example of the attitude of the new government toward democratic parliamentary operation. It is fitting that we should have this opportunity in this House on this borrowing authority bill to be talking about a new government's approach to open government. An extraordinary situation we have found coming from a man who was probably the number one outspoken critic of the previous government for what he termed their arrogance. It was he more than anyone else who liked to talk about the arrogance of the former prime minister, yet this week we have seen an attitude that goes far beyond anything that can be termed plain arrogance. I was even searching for a word that would adequately describe the attitude of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) toward parliamentarians.

An hon. Member: Impossible.

Mr. Herbert: Because we have been treated to some stale jokes, maybe a word like pomposity is the best way to describe the attitude of the Minister of Finance. I find it almost impossible to believe that a minister would reach so far down to try to get his own way, to try to control what are and always have been accepted as independent committee activities.

By our tradition, the committee has been master of its own fate, yet we saw a deliberate attempt to interfere with the committee operation, I believe rather foolishly a futile attempt because, in the long run, it will not help either the Minister of Finance or the present government. Unfortunately, as one of my colleagues commented, it has seriously embarrassed members of his own party. It must have particularly embarrassed the chairman of the finance committee whom I might personally term one of the good guys on the other side. There are not many, but he is one of them. In fact the vice-chairman must have been embarrassed too because he voted with the members of the opposition parties in the finance committee supporting what I looked upon as a vote of censure of government ministers who could not find the time to appear as witnesses before the committee. But let me, after those introductory remarks addressed to the Minister of Finance, make some comments on the borrowing bill itself.

● (2020)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: The Minister of Finance has stated in this House that the borrowing authority he has requested in this bill has been reduced by some $3 billion. He says one of the reasons is because the Tories have the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) as President of the Treasury Board, thus inferring spending cuts. But the Minister of Finance then states that the reduction is possible because the government is using unused borrowing authority carried over from previous years. I find there is a little bit of conflict between those two statements simply because the fiscal year is now some six months gone. Government cash balances in this six-month period have dropped by nearly $4 billion and new net borrowings in the same period amount to nearly $3 billion. Thus, some $6.5 billion has been used up by the government in the first six months of this fiscal year. The Minister of Finance himself admitted that the figure was in the order of $5.5 billion, and I suppose between the Minister of Finance and me we shouldn't quibble about a billion dollars. Adding to this amount the $7 billion requested in the authority bill gives us a total for this fiscal year of some $13 billion, far greater than the $10 billion requested in the last Parliament by the previous government.

This increase in borrowing authority, the $6 billion—$5½ billion, $6½ billion, depending on the way we count the figures—plus the $7 billion in the bill can only be attributed to one of two alternatives, either an increase in spending over that anticipated by the previous government, or a decrease in revenue from that originally forecast. Or, of course, it could be a combination of the two.

However, it occurs to me that there is another possibility. The Minister of Finance could be padding his borrowing authority in order to take care of an increased deficit caused by unwise, unwanted, and ill-conceived spending programs. As one example, I refer to that incredible folly, the mortgage interest deductibility program which, by the minister's own conservative estimates, will cost the nation $2.3 billion in a full year. Add the inflationary factor and the probability that each and every spending estimate is on the low side, and we can anticipate in a few years an unconscionable and totally discriminatory give-away from the public purse of three or four billion dollars a year. Using the minister's low estimate, the cost to each and every taxpayer in this country will amount to 15 per cent of the personal income tax they presently pay, that is, 15 per cent more to be paid, or the elimination of an opportunity to reduce taxes by 15 per cent.

The tragedy of the plan is that the cost must be borne by every taxpayer in the country whether they own homes or not, and whether their homes are mortgaged or not. Every taxpayer, tenant, pensioner, single family head, as well as the wealthy, everyone who pays tax will be contributing 15 per cent of their personal income taxes to those who have mortgages on their homes.

We acknowledge that mortgage interest rates are now too high. As a builder I am well aware of the problem which present high mortgage rates present. We know that construction costs are making it extremely difficult for lower and middle income level persons to buy their own homes. But there are a multitude of better ways to help those who are really in need, without resort to a give-away program which could be so costly for renters, pensioners, and those who have strived for years to pay off their mortgages. It is this total irresponsibility on the part of the present government which is to blame, together with the attitude of the Minister of Finance that, come hell or high water, election promises are going to be kept, no matter that only 2 per cent of the population voted for the Tories because of their mortgage interest deductibility program, no matter that Quebec French-speaking residents will receive scarcely more than half the per capita amount received by their English-speaking fellow Canadians who have mortgages on their homes.

The Minister of Finance is going ahead despite the advice of senior departmental officials and is, by so doing, building even larger future deficits which are going to require even larger requests for borrowing authority than that which is contained in this bill. Of course, there is another alternative. The minister who was responsible for social programs until he was transferred or demoted—I don't know what the reason was—would cut old age pensions. Pensions or mortgage interest deductibility? Could any person of sane mind opt for a campaign promise at the expense of the poor?

A moment or two should be taken to consider another of the Tory election promises which is both highly discriminatory and ill-conceived—the measure introduced in this House on Monday to extend the supplementary pensions of widows aged between 60 and 65. This popular piece of legislation has a relatively small price tag attached to it and I suppose, when we are talking in billions in the present borrowing authority bill, the few million dollars involved to help widows and widowers is not a particularly large item. On the surface, this legislation is not likely to be criticized. What I want to do is to illustrate again just how discriminatory and unjust is the Tory approach to popular government.

Take, as an example, three widows of the same age, say 60 or 61, living side by side in similar small apartments. None of them ever worked when they were raising families, and none of them has any appreciable income. However, only one of those widows will benefit from the legislation which the government introduced on Monday. Why? The widow in apartment No. 1 was 59 when her 65-year-old husband died. The husband of the widow in apartment No. 2 died before his 65th birthday. Only the widow in apartment No. 3 is entitled to a pension, and the other two ladies must ask for welfare from the provincial government in order to live. It is surely infinitely preferable that all persons in similar circumstances are treated alike. It is this discriminatory attitude of the Conservative government which I find to be so abhorrent.

Let me ask what has happened to the budget of the new Minister of Finance? The Tory government could not have found too much wrong with the budget of the previous government. It is reintroducing the measures contained in that budget and taking some six months to introduce its own ideas. Do the Tories have any new ideas?

● (2030)

Mr. Stollery: No.

Mr. Herbert: Why are we not given the government's forecasts of revenues and expenditures for this year? I ask this question specifically because of this request for additional authority to borrow funds. Should we not first ask the Minister of Finance what he is going to do with the requested borrowing authority? Was it not a seatmate of the minister's who suggested to the previous minister of finance that Parliament should not blindly hand borrowing authority to the government?

While I am referring to the colleague of the Minister of Finance, the present President of the Treasury Board, is it not extraordinary what a flip-flop he has done since the last Parliament? He was the critic who stoutly maintained that our dollar should be boosted to a level of 88 cents to 92 cents U.S. He was the man who stated that it was his party's economic strategy to boost our dollar to that level. Yesterday in the House he suddenly saw the light. The President of the Treasury Board, now in power in the government, said he had no choice but to admit that the fiscal policy of the previous government as it pertained to a floating dollar was the right policy, and that which was being adopted by his Tory party. What a change of heart from the criticisms he levelled at the previous government right here in this House!

Certainly interest rates are at an unprecedented level. If the Tories were indignant when the rate was 9 per cent, should they not be doubly indignant now that the rate is approaching double that figure? Only this week the prime bank rate in the United States reached 15 per cent, and last night the governor of the Bank of Canada raised the bank rate to a record 14 per cent. What is it going to be like in Canada in the bleak winter months ahead?

At the meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs this morning the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Gerald Bouey, defended his actions and the actions of the Bank of Canada in his usual, calm, and efficient manner. I have been a member of the finance committee for seven years, and having listened to Mr. Bouey regularly year after year and having tremendous esteem for this man—not necessarily always agreeing with his point of view but respecting his ability—one thing was sure. We knew when Mr. Bouey came to the meeting this morning just about exactly what his position was going to be, what position he was going to be taking, why he was doing what he was doing, and what his responsibilities were.

Mr. Gerald Bouey naturally defended his actions and the actions of the Bank of Canada, and he did so in a very calm and a very efficient manner. However, it was abundantly evident tht Mr. Bouey's statement and arguments related to his specific responsibilities. He said, and I quote: "The government must take the ultimate responsibility for the general thrust of monetary policy". Mr. Bouey went on to add also that the government must explain its policy to Parliament and to the people.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we also thought that. That is why we members of the opposition parties were very anxious to hear from the Minister of Finance in committee. That is why we thought it was he, and he alone, who should explain the general thrust of monetary policy and why he, and he alone, should explain to the people of this country the government's policy concerning monetary policy. Also, interestingly enough, the views of members of all parties were represented in the steering committee report, which was ultimately rejected by the government majority.

I might say here, as I said earlier in my opening remarks, that it is certainly contrary to any rules of this Parliament, and certainly contrary to any past practice, that a minister of the Crown would dictate to a standing committee of this House. I must say, and I have said this to several hon. members opposite, that there have always been difficulties in the past in getting ministers to attend committees, and we are well aware that ministers will always find some excuse for not turning up on a particular date, but it is the manner in which this was handled that I find so extraordinary.

It was not a question of the minister's saying, "I am going to be out of town". In fact, the way it was presented to him was simply, "When can you appear, on what date and at what time?" I suggest that that is about as open an invitation as can be extended to any minister of the Crown. Interestingly enough, the only decision made in the steering committee was that we wanted to see the Minister of Finance first.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. I was hoping he would come back to the subject matter of the motion before us, but I cannot let him continue what he has been attempting to do, discussing the proceedings of a committee of the House. In this regard I wish to refer the hon. member to citation 312 of Beauschesne's fifth edition at page 102 which says:

The proceedings of a committee may not be referred to in debate before they have been laid upon the Table.

I was willing to let the hon. member refer to the committee, but to analyse and examine committee work in detail in the House is not acceptable.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for my digression. If I could explain my digression, it was simply because I had, as Your Honour is well aware, raised this matter personally in the House, and there was a House intervention. However, I accept your admonition and will continue my remarks.

Mr. Friesen: Seven years here and he does that.

Mr. Herbert: Nevertheless, in seven years one learns a lot, and one learns to get in one's licks before one is chastised.

To get back to the subject under discussion, we were discussing the relationship between the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada. I think this is relevant to the bill. The Minister of Finance acted and responded in this House in a fashion which I considered—and I have stated this—irresponsible. I suppose this would at least serve as a suggestion of resignation, although the minister probably will not be taking my suggestion. However, the subject of resignation is probably in the mind of every one at the present time. It is causing some consternation in the country. I refer, of course, to the fact that the term of office of the present governor of the Bank of Canada will terminate at a fairly early date.

Personally, I find our present governor to be a man of extraordinary competence, and with that competence he certainly exudes charm and efficiency. If there is any suggestion in the mind of the present Minister of Finance that Governor Bouey is continuing policies of the previous government which he, the minister, might himself find unacceptable, then he should make that clear to Mr. Bouey. I am sure Mr. Bouey would not suffer any loss of prestige or pride from any early retirement.

The point I want to make very clearly, and to reiterate, is that Mr. Bouey stated this morning—and I will not refer to committee meetings because he has made public statements—that his policy is substantially the same as it was last year and the year before. In effect, he has not shown any change of mind. The Minister of Finance and the present President of the Treasury Board have been highly critical of that point of view in previous sessions, and I think it behooves the Minister of Finance to make it very clear to this House whether he now has done a flip-flop, whether he now agrees that the general approach of the governor of the Bank of Canada, which has not changed over the years, is acceptable to him and that he will be fully and unequivocally supporting the governor of the Bank of Canada. Alternatively, the Minister of Finance should cease attacking the general policy approach taken by the Bank of Canada during the term of the previous government.

● (2040)

There is nothing to prevent the Minister of Finance from bringing down an early budget. He does not have to wait until the end of November.

An hon. Member: He has to ask the provinces.

Mr. Herbert: That is exactly it. He has to ask the provinces and get the agreement of the provinces on oil pricing. Somehow I seem to doubt that he will have much success. Probably he will find that eventually they will have to come to some decision, as the previous government did, and impose some sort of policy on the pricing of energy which is good for the nation as a whole.

An hon. Member: The provinces are writing the federal budget now.

Mr. Herbert: I have a couple of points I should like to bring out before I make my closing remarks. I have never been particularly ultra nationalistic in my point of view. Perhaps in some way that is because I have a large number of multinational corporations in my constituency which are foreign-owned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Herbert: Nevertheless, that does not get away from the fact that too much of our enterprise in Canada is foreign-controlled. I am not suggesting any punitive steps. After all, these multinationals came here freely. They were invited to come here, and they are still being invited. Quite obviously if we are to increase Canadian ownership in the country, and if we are to have more control over our own affairs, then we will have to start tearing ourselves apart a little bit from our association with the United States and its influence on our economy.

We cannot assist the domestic fight against interest rates unless we make some effort at co-ordinating foreign borrowing. At the present time we are a federal state which has given extraordinary powers to its provinces. Generally this is not realized. It is not talked about too much. More power has been given to the provinces than in any other similar country in the world. We are absolutely powerless, at the federal level, to have any say in the foreign borrowings of the provincial governments. Until we find some way—preferably by agreement with the provinces—to co-ordinate our foreign borrowing, then we will be looking at continuing difficulties such as we have experienced in the last day or two with interest rate problems, and the feeling that we must do, in turn, whatever the Americans do.

Capital can be obtained more cheaply by the federal government. The borrowing can be arranged in a more orderly fashion. Eventually it will be to the benefit of the country as a whole.

Another measure we should attempt to take, in order to decrease our dependency on the United States and its influence on our economy, is to encourage greater Canadian ownership by encouraging Canadian investors to invest in their own country. There are many ways that this can be done. One is to have the Government of Canada actively participating in segments of our economy which are presently foreign-controlled, or substantially foreign-controlled. Certainly the previous government went a long way toward ensuring, for the first time, a domestic presence in an almost entirely foreign-controlled sector of the economy, the oil industry. Now our friends in the government tell us that that was the wrong way to go, that we should not displease our American neighbours who control that segment of the economy.

I wonder what Canadians have to look forward to from the present government. We know about soaring heating costs, and soaring gasoline prices. We have rapidly increasing inflation which perhaps will result in fewer available jobs this coming winter. Of course that will result in substantially increased unemployment. By its policies the government has already sacrificed thousands of Canadian jobs to the order of Conservative policy.

In their campaigns, Tory members promised to stimulate the economy, but what has happened since? We lost out in Argentina.

I should like to say on the floor of the House of Commons that I received a telephone call sometime ago from a private company involved in negotiating the sale of Candu reactors. The gentleman wanted to know why the government was directly intervening in the negotiations going on then which undoubtedly would have some disastrous effect on the sale of Candu reactors. It was approximately three or four weeks after that telephone call that the Argentina deal fell through.

Despite the fact that the press has attributed, to some degree, that lost sale to the actions or statements of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald), I have no doubt that it was the division in the government cabinet between those who were for and those who were against the production and sale of nuclear reactors. The holdup in making a decision and the desire to ensure a "go-slow" until a government policy was finally adopted, perhaps were the real reasons why we lost the Argentinian deal. Also we lost out in Mexico and Japan.

We sure lost out in the Middle East. Again I received a telephone call. This time it was from an executive of Bell Canada, one morning. He said, "Hal, what are you going to do? We have over $500 million worth of contracts in suspense at the present time in the Middle East; it involves thousands of Canadian jobs."

I asked a question in the House of the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) because we do not have a minister in the House of Commons who is responsible for that particular area; he is in the other place. The Minister of State for International Trade answered in such a fashion which indicated he was aware of some difficulties, but he was not aware of any cancelled contracts. Then on the following Monday, the next working day, he stated that some $4 million worth of contracts had been cancelled. The point was that the question did not relate to $4 million of cancelled contracts, as serious as that may be. It referred to the $500 million worth of contracts that were in suspense, that were being negotiated, held up, and possibly lost. In my question I also mentioned the fact that, in Iraq, Canadian companies were not even allowed to submit bids. That was particularly difficult in the case of the airport in Tehran.

An hon. Member: That is $4 million down the drain.

Mr. Herbert: That is correct. The professed intent of the Tory government members during the campaign to stimulate the economy has resulted so far in losses of contracts and jobs to Canadians throughout the world, and obviously has had serious effects on the economy.

In conclusion, I can say only—

An hon. Member: He is concluding finally.

Mr. Herbert: Perhaps it is just as well, because there are so many things one could bring up that one could talk for hours about what the government has done wrong in the short period of time it has been in office. It is beyond belief that a government, which had so much time without the glare of publicity in the House, could have made such a mess of things from an economic point of view.

• (2050)

I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that we really have no choice with regard to this borrowing authority. It does not involve a matter of us saying we refuse that borrowing authority. We do not know whether the Minister of Finance really needs that $7 billion, but eventually he is going to be able to find some way of putting in programs to use it up, and he will be back for more. I suggest to him that this is the first time he is asking this House for this spending authority. The next time he comes into this House asking for money he will have to present his own estimates on spending, along with revenues, and he will clearly have to indicate how he arrived at a figure such as the present $7 billion, and what he intends to do with that money. I say in all sincerity to him, although he is not listening to me, that I for one will not vote again in favour of a spending authority without getting answers to those relevant questions. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted a moment of indulgence, let me say that it was a year ago that I arrived in this place. I arrived here on October 25, 1978, and for the first time was able to speak in this place. Ironically, the subject on which I spoke was borrowing authority for $17 billion requested by the then Liberal government.

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Rae: It was $17 billion. I would like to refer members of the House to an interesting speech of that day. It was not my own, although it was very interesting and I commend it to hon. members. They will be able to read it at their leisure. I want at this time to refer to the speech of the then leader of the opposition, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). He spoke of many things, including the way in which these borrowing authority bills are presented to the House of Commons. It might be worth-while for the hon. members of the House, particularly new members who are trying to develop a sense of history, to look back and read what the Prime Minister had to say when he was in opposition. He said:

> The Minister of Finance, with his absolute faith in keeping secret from the people of Canada information which they have a right to know, even though his officials are probably telling him, refuses to tell this House of Commons what revenues the Government of Canada expects in this fiscal year and, consequently, we do not know how deep the deficit will be. We do not know how much deeper into debt this country is going to be plunged by the incompetence of this government. All we know is that today they are seeking the authority to borrow an additional $17 billion.

He then went on to say, and how familiar these words sound:

> We are told there is going to be a budget. They will not give us a date—they rarely give us dates—but sometime in the middle of November there is going to be a new budget. Why is the Government of Canada rushing through this demand to increase its borrowing authority before it gives us a budget? A budget should contain a projection of spending estimates, it should contain a statement of the revenues expected by the Government of Canada, and it should contain an indication of the priorities the government is going to follow. That is coming in three weeks, so why do we have this extraordinary request for an additional $17 billion borrowing authority right now? Why not wait three weeks? What is so urgent? What is being hidden? Why can they not come forward now and give us the information that would be part of a budget or, if they are not prepared to do that, why do they not let this matter wait until after the budget is before the House of Commons?

The Prime Minister went on to say that it was a disgrace for the government to come before the House of Commons and request a blank cheque. He was right then, and the government is wrong now.

We say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) that he has had a long period of time in which to present a budget to this House. A budget should have been presented in June. Had he presented a budget in June he would have had the opportunity at least in June of getting rid of the Liberal budget measures we are being weighed down with now. He could have presented us with an indication of what he expected revenues to be and why he presents a request to Parliament for $7 billion with no accounting, and with no more indication today than we had on May 22 of what this government intends to do with that money which it is asking us to approve.

I do not care whether it is $17 billion, which was eventually reduced to $10 billion, or $7 billion. The principle is exactly the same, and that principle is that this House should not be so abused by a government as to be expected to give the government a blank cheque when it comes in with these requests, and we should not be expected, as the leader of the opposition, as he then was, said so well, to give a blank cheque to a government that is coming before this House now and asking for $7 billion.

It simply is not good enough for the Minister of Finance to come before us saying he needs the money because he needs the money because he needs the money, and that is exactly what the Minister of Finance has told us. It was gobbledygook we got from the minister two days ago, explaining why he needed the money. He told us nothing about the government's projected spending plans, he told us nothing about tax expenditures, he told us nothing about the revenues which the government is not collecting, and he asked us to give the government a $7 billion cheque with no indication as to what the revenue forecast is or what the spending forecast is.

I am sorry the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) is not here to hear this because he is the man who has been going around Canada as the pillar of fiscal responsibility, the Savonarola of free enterprise, the Rex Humbard of capitalism, the man who is supposed to be the master of the bottom line, and the man who is going to bring, single-handedly, the civil service of Canada to its knees and end big spending in government forever. Where is he? Where is the happy hacker when we need him? Where is the happy hacker when we want to know where we are going to be putting our $7 billion? He is not here.

An hon. Member: Who wrote your speech?

Mr. Rae: I write all my own material, which is more than I can say for some members in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Nobody else would take credit for it.

Mr. Rae: I want on this my first—

An hon. Member: What an admission.

Mr. Rae: I will get to the Minister of Finance in a moment. I have been gentle with him so far during this session. This is the first speech I have had the opportunity to make, as I say, and since this is the first anniversary of my arrival in this House, and the same year in which I made a speech on supplemental borrowing, I could give exactly the same speech again tonight, but I would be depriving members of another variety of what I have to say.

An hon. Member: We really wouldn't mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: The points I want to make this evening, and there are only two or three, will characterize the interventions from this side concerning financial, tax, and budgetary matters in the House of Commons.

The first point is that we take just as seriously as the Conservative party did when it was in opposition the fact that questions of supply come to the House of Commons, and the House of Commons should have control of supply. We are tired of the haphazard, sloppy, ineffective, inefficient, dissimulating accounting which has been so characteristic of the Liberal government, and which is in danger of becoming characteristic of the Conservative government. We will not accept the principle that the government can come before this House telling us it needs billions of dollars on a supplemental basis without telling us where the money is going and how it is being spent.

The second point we want to make, and which we will make consistently in this House, is that we will not accept any longer the lack of accounting for tax expenditures, and which again has been characteristic of the Liberal government and is in danger of becoming characteristic of the Conservative government.

● (2100)

Even though the government has deprived me of a private member's bill, I am glad to hear that its intention now is to bring in a tax expenditure bill. This matter is a critical feature of our budget, and it is a critical feature of our deficit, all of which has been emphasized in speeches by my colleagues since Tuesday. Some of the prime causes of the deficit in Canada are that our tax policies have been helter skelter, we have one of the weakest corporate collection tax rates in Canada, and our policy of oil depletion allowances, MURBs, tax shelters of all kinds, investment credits and so on, all strike at the very heart of the ability of the Canadian government to raise the money necessary to do the job which it is required to do.

That tax policy, and that system which has a weak, soft centre, is the legacy to the people of Canada from the Liberal party. If anybody wants to know whose pockets the Liberal party is in then we only have to look at the tax revenue system in Canada and there will be no question in anybody's mind as to what kind of support the Liberal party has looked for over the years for its policies.

The weakness of our manufacturing base, our problems with respect to the balance of trade, the fact that we have such a heavy outflow of dividends and interest payments, the fact that we are now sending more interest payments out of this country than we are dividends—which means that our companies are relying more on debt than they are on foreign equity investment—all go together to make up the legacy the Conservative government inherited from the Liberal government. It is the task of the new government, and I am sad to say that they are obviously not equal to it, to turn that legacy around.

That is where the question of interest rates comes in. I would like to refer hon. members to an old speech made by the Minister of Finance when he was speaking on what his party would do if they were the government, with respect to interest rates. I hope that the minister will take a look at Hansard dated Tuesday, February 13, 1979, one day before the St. Valentine's massacre. Of course, the minister will not find much in his speech as it was largely a speech of rhetoric, bombast, and the kind of buffoonery we expect from members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: You are right there.

Mr. Rae: There are always certain wise exceptions to the rule.

Mr. Lefebvre: They will be back here soon, don't you worry. You did not make a mistake.

Mr. Rae: I do not have that feeling. The minister in his speech of February 13 did not even mention the syncrolift. I believe it is the only speech which I have read of the minister's that he did not devote to the syncrolift.

I want to refer to a speech by Mr. Gillies, the former member for Don Valley. Mr. Gillies is now the Rasputin of this government, who, while he was here, complained that the Liberal party did not believe in Parliament, and who showed his faith in Parliament by leaving it and gaining more power by staying outside it. Mr. Gillies said in his speech as it is reported in Hansard, February 13, 1979, at page 3188:

> The second thing which the government has done is to raise interest rates. Presumably it does not care about high interest rates, high consumer borrowing costs, high mortgage costs or high costs for starting business. Every economist in this country and, indeed, the governor of the Bank of Canada, has said that a high interest rate policy, given the high domestic economic situation in the nation today, is wrong.

Mr. Gillies was about as accurate about the governor of the Bank of Canada as he was about some other things. Nevertheless, he went on to say:

> The last thing Canada needs right now is a high interest rate policy, yet since the beginning of 1978 the bank rate has gone up 50 per cent, from 7.5 per cent in the beginning of 1978 to the current level of 11.25 per cent.

That is peanuts compared to what we are paying in interest rates now. Who would not beg now for interest rates of 11¼ per cent? Every time interest rates go up, mortgage rates and rates in general go up. It is inflationary.

Mr. Gillies then went on to make a number of serious points about the impact of the high interest rate policy, and why it is wrong. I want this to get on the record because I do not want this government to get off the hook, or leave the legacy of the positions they took in opposition, and daily leave them behind them like yesterday's socks. We want to stick those socks on this government and make them live with them. Mr. Gillies went on to say:

> Why has the government taken the direction that it has on interest rates? Incidentally, it is interesting to compare the bank interest rates of other countries around the world with Canda's interest rates Here are some interest rates: West Germany, 3 per cent; Switzerland, 1 per cent; Japan, 3.5 per cent, and U.S.A., 10 per cent. The reality is that the countries with strong economies have the low interest rate structures and a strong balance of payments. We are going in the other direction, because the government argues that we have to keep capital flowing into the country or the dollar will fall even further.

That message has not changed with the ushering in of the present government. The only things that have changed are the faces of the people across the way. The policies are exactly the same.

Mr. Gillies went on to say:

> If one looks at the figures, which some people never presume to do, the rise in interest rates has really not caused a change in the rate of the flow of funds. We have the peculiar situation that even though we have moved the interest rate up seven times, it really has not done anything for the net flow of capital.

That still applies today. The policy of the Government of Canada has not changed. The policy of Governor Bouey has not changed. At least one can say for Governor Bouey that he is consistent. He has given exactly the same advice to the Liberal government as he is now giving to the Conservative government, and both parties have bought it. I think we are entitled to ask why the Minister of Finance continues to hide behind the arguments of the governor of the Bank of Canada and why all those policies, which in 1978 and early 1979 made so much sense, suddenly make no sense.

I think that we are entitled to ask of our friends in the Liberal party that there should be a special room in this House, a room of penitence. They should not be allowed to come into this House and make statements about the interest rates because they were following exactly the same policies, and buying exactly the same arguments, while they were in government. There is nothing like opposition to give these people a little courage. Where was the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau)? He was sitting down at the end, but where was he when the interest rates went up? He was not doing anything. Where was the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)? Did he once ask a question in the House of Commons about the high interest rates?

Mr. Crosbie: Not a word.

Mr. Rae: Not a peep, not a whistle, nothing. Suddenly they have gained the courage which comes from merely seeking to take advantage of what they know is a very genuine public preoccupation, the welfare of our economy. The Liberals did nothing about the economy for 16 years, but suddenly they discover it.

Before the Minister of Finance lost his sense of humour and his principles, he would come into this House bouncing with good humour and bounding with poetry. Since he is no longer able to bubble forth with those doggerels, I have one for you tonight, Mr. Speaker:

The member for St. John's West
Used to know what was best,
But now that he's a cabinet minister
His actions are far more sinister.
High interest loans he used to hate,
But now he's known as "Crazy Rates";
His answers now are much less merry:
"Don't blame me, I'll have to ask Gerry!"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: I wrote that myself. That is the policy of this government, of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

What do we hear about an industrial strategy? We don't hear a peep about industrial strategy. What do we hear about the weakness of our manufacturing base? We don't hear a peep about the weakness of our manufacturing base. What do we hear about the reality of our current account deficit and about the fact that this deficit is growing because our trade is declining, and because our interest rates are going out of the country to beat the band? We do not hear a thing from the Minister of Finance any more. We do not hear any strategies or any proposals. All we hear from the Minister of Finance is justification for the same old policy of tight money, restriction and high credit, which we in Canada associate with Tory times and which have always been indicative of Tory times.

• (2110)

An hon. Member: Usury.

Mr. Rae: You can take the Tories in the Liberal party, you can take the Tories in the Tory party and put them together and you have a conventional wisdom that has produced the highest interest rates in our history, a rate of inflation which is unheard of and which is not generated by excess demand but is generated by cost push in the economy and which has been encouraged by the Minister of Finance.

We have a continued policy of tax expenditure which strikes at the guts of our revenue collecting system. We have the same policy of blank cheques, of coming into this Parliament and asking for authority to borrow $7 billion anywhere in the world, regardless of the time, regardless of the cost, regardless of the interest rate, regardless of our knowing what the revenue forecasts are, and regardless of our knowing what the expenditure forecasts are.

I say to the people of Canada that they have been tricked, they have been duped, because they thought they were electing a new government. On May 22 they thought they were going to get a new team. They did not get a new team; they got the second team of the old team that was in there before.

An hon. Member: Same old coach.

Mr. Rae: That is all we have, Mr. Speaker, the second team of the same old team.

You can take the Tories in the Tory party, the Tories in the Liberal party, stick them together and what you have is a conventional wisdom that does nothing for the people of Canada, that has increased our deficit, that has dramatically increased inflation, that is causing unemployment, and that fails to take those tough decisions which are necessary in our economy, which are to going to get at the problem of fairness, which are going to get at the problem of a weak industrial base, and which are going to get at the problem of our need to export and provide some kind of economic leadership for our people.

It is a sad day for the people of Canada when they wake up one morning and realize that all they have done is change weathermen. When the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) was minister of finance he used to say there was nothing they could do, that there were storms in the United States, hurricanes that were unbelievable, and that members of the opposition knew nothing about how serious the storms were. He claimed there was nothing they could do. He used to sit back and say, "You will just have to batten down the hatches and wait for the storm to blow through, and when the storm is over the sun will come up in the morning and everything will be bright and merry." Instead of one weatherman we have another. The only thing that has changed, Mr. Speaker, is the accent of the weatherman. Nothing else has changed. It is exactly the same philosophy.

Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that 50 years ago that philosophy was espoused by the Mackenzie Kings and the R. B. Bennetts. That philosophy was espoused by the Herbert Hoovers, and that philosophy was eventually rejected throughout the western world. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that that philosophy, of our government coming before us and simply telling us there is nothing we can do when faced with the economic situation, that we have no choices, that high interest rates are inevitable, that there is nothing we can do but bite these hypothetical bullets the minister keeps talking about—I say as sure as tomorrow follows today, that policy is going to be rejected by the Canadian people. It is not what anybody wants to hear. It is not what anybody really thinks any more because it does not reflect all that is good and all that is generous, all that is intelligent, and all that is courageous in the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I get the feeling that the previous speaker does not admire the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie).

Not wanting to hold up this bill, Mr. Speaker, as I realize that the purse of the Minister of Finance is empty and he wishes to fill it with somebody else's money, I should like just to make a few remarks which really follow up what the speaker before the last from the New Democratic Party was talking about. He was very critical of the Minister of Finance, and went through his history. He said that the minister really did not know what he was doing. In fact I have the feeling, after listening to that member of the New Democratic Party, that he feels the minister would define a floating debt as a boat that has not been paid off!

I want to assure the New Democratic Party that this Minister of Finance knows everything there is to know—everything—about deficit financing. The previous speaker did not really finish what he started to say. He spoke about debt, and went through the per capita debts of many provinces in Canada and the national debt, but he really did not continue to the logical conclusion. Perhaps he does not know the logical conclusion, but he was using a good example.

That hon. member mentioned Newfoundland several times, and the per capita debt there of $3,274. That is interesting, when you realize how important that figure is compared to expenditures of government and what happens to the money. In the province of Newfoundland, with which the Minister of Finance is very familiar, there is a yearly expenditure of $1 billion by the provincial government, and $1 billion by the federal government. That is $2 billion for a half million population—$4,000 for every man, woman, and child in the province. Someone might point out that the per capita debt is only $3,274 and remark that it seems pretty good. But when we analyse debt, Mr. Speaker, and this particular bill which is before the House to borrow $7 billion, we have to consider the fiscal manoeuvrability of the nation or the province in question. One has to be balanced against the other.

To really examine the situation in Canada and the situation in the provinces as that member from the New Democratic Party did, and refer to the financial experts who analyse this continuously, we should refer to the last report of the Economic Council of Canada which examined the debt positions, borrowing positions, and spending positions of all provinces, specifically four, as it dealt with regional disparity and high unemployment in those particular provinces. The council suggested that some of the burden be lifted from the shoulders of the federal government and placed on the shoulders of the provincial governments to alleviate high unemployment. They also suggested that they use their own fiscal manoeuvrabilities. But in that report the Economic Council of Canada offered the final resolution that each provincial government—except the Newfoundland government—could use its own fiscal manoeuvrability.

To understand why they said that and why it is so important, we must go back to the previous studies, in which they showed that to service the debt alone was a massive problem. They showed, for instance, that the direct and indirect debt less the sinking fund, as a proportion of the personal income of Newfoundlanders, was too high. It was very high. We must then come to the conclusion that, in a situation like that, there is no fiscal manoeuvrability whatsoever—or very little, if any. That is something that must be considered when discussing this bill to borrow $7 billion.

The most important thing to be considered, however, is how that money is spent—what is done with it. In other words, priorities must be established. If we are to believe the Minister of Finance in his recent public statements, then we accept that the government must spend money to increase productivity in Canada—that must be their most important objective.

Politically speaking, I suppose it is a good thing for the Minister of Finance to go down to his own riding of St. John's West, as he did last week, and open a $55 million arterial road that he was partially responsible for getting. I suppose it is politically advantageous for him to turn around next week and open up a $44 million water system for which he negotiated when minister of intergovernmental affairs in the provincial government. It will do his soul good in another couple of months to announce as step one for an outer ring road in the same city a $35 million expenditure. That is fine, Mr. Speaker, politically speaking.

Apart from the fact that there are a lot of municipalities in Newfoundland who believe the old farmer's adage that money is like manure, of very little use unless it be spread, there is the question of the wise use of money and that of productivity. It is not nice at this time of year to see on the northeast coast of Newfoundland incredible dumping of fish every day because it cannot be sold and markets cannot be found. It is bad enough to know that when that fish is sold, 80 per cent of it goes to the United States and other countries to be processed into a finished product. That is bad enough, but when you have an action, the first one taken by this government, to cut out and freeze boat building subsidies, and to cut out wharf construction affecting the primary producer, that is worse. It is interesting that the Minister of Finance is able to rationalize those decisions when he asks for $7 billion to be okayed by this House for his borrowing purpose.

It should also be very interesting to find out how the Minister of Finance will rationalize the recent cuts of his bosom pal, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) who decided to cut out filling job vancancies, to cut out term employees from being rehired, to cut out capital expenditures for construction in Newfoundland, which were all across-the-board decisions. I do not know how one can rationalize that when one looks at the figures and realizes that the federal government has spent less per capita on wages and salaries for federal employees in Newfoundland, that is, less per capita than any other province in Canada, and yet the across-the-board cut was taken.

It is interesting that just one week ago the President of the Treasury Board in answer to a question posed by one of my colleagues from Quebec said he was going to re-examine a departmental cut in light of the economic conditions in that hon. member's riding. The President of the Treasury Board said he had an open mind, and he repeated that statement. I thought, as many other members from high unemployment areas thought, that the President of the Treasury Board would then go to work and cancel all cuts in every high unemployment area in Canada, especially in Newfoundland. He had an open mind, he said. Yet, two days after that, he reiterated his policy of continued cuts, non-hiring for job vacancies, and continued the freeze on construction jobs.

It is obvious that the President of the Treasury Board has an open mind, in fact so open as to be totally vacant. It is important for the Minister of Finance to rationalize those decisions that affect those high unemployment areas of Canada, and especially in Newfoundland, when he asks for permission to borrow $7 billion. It would also be interesting for the Minister of Finance and for the government to remember that the people of Canada now believe that as government politicians it is a very good example of those who shake your hand before the election, and shake you after the election.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in partaking of this debate, I would like to read some items into the record. In many ways I think the bill placed before us by the government is a contradiction of the statement that inflation is enemy number one. We are being asked to provide the government with some $7 billion in borrowing, and yet one of the major causes of inflation is the imbalance that we have in our service charge, being the interest that we have to pay out. This is probably one of the major reasons why the Canadian dollar has fallen in value, and in turn is the major reason why we see the rise in inflation. In fact, going through my notes I notice that Mr. Rob Douglas, when he was director of the now defunct centre for the study of inflation and productivity, said that an analysis of the impact of the dollar's devaluation on domestic inflation shows that about one-third of the inflation was caused by the dollar's drop.

There is an insanity which seems to be at work here. In order to solve that insanity we just create more insanity. In order to wrestle with inflation, we take the steps which create even more inflation. It is an insane situation, and one I do not think members of this House should support. Obviously members of the government knew they should not be supporting measures of this kind when they were in opposition, but now they seem to go along with the pattern that was established by the former government.

I do not understand why they are caught in this type of rigid reality. I do not understand why they have not been able to introduce some new thinking, or bring some new imagination or put new light on the problems, including economic problems, which this country faces.

For the record I would like to read part of an article written in the Financial Post. Normally I am not a great fan of the Financial Post, but in the October 20, 1979, edition an article appeared posing some interesting questions. The writer suggested that members of Parliament should be asking these questions of the governor of the Bank of Canada and of the government as a whole. The questions read as follows:

1. Bouey stressed the need to reduce inflation when announcing the latest bank rate increases. But would he have raised interest rates (as he has done three times since the Tories came to power) if the U.S. had not first raised its rate?

2. Assuming, for now that Canada must generally follow the upward sweep in U.S. interest rates, does Bouey agree with the recent hikes by the U.S. Federal Reserve Board?

3. What's needed, and how long would it take, to give Canada an independent monetary policy?

4. How can a credit crunch that especially hurts small business cut inflation? Indeed, how, precisely, will high interest rates make the North American rate of inflation come down? Hardly anyone would quarrel with the idea that money-supply growth is closely related to inflation over, say, five years. But doesn't the high U.S. inflation rate (consumer prices up 11.8 per cent in August from a year ago) have more to do with oil prices and higher food costs than a money supply that's out of control?

● (2130)

5. How long and deep a recession will it take to cool out inflation? Will wage demands really be any lower even at 8 per cent, 9 per cent or 10 per cent unemployment?

6. To move inflation down to, for example 6 per cent from 9 per cent, someone has to take less of an increase in profits and wages. Who will this be: Small companies? Large companies? Unionized employees? Other workers? Farmers? Everyone equally?

7. Even though the bank rate was increased seven times, from 7½ per cent to 11¼ per cent, between March, 1978 and January, 1979, short-term interest rates in Canada for a time fell below rates in the U.S. and the Eurodollar market. Allowing for the various factors that influence the flow of money, does the Bank have any evidence that the lower short-term rates during this period directly prompted a shift of money away from Canada?

They are good questions, and I hope the minister will be able to supply answers. It is the net outflow of capital that is pretty well the major source of the economic problems that we have. In 1975 the balance came in at a $4.75 billion deficit, up 225 per cent from the year before. In 1976 it dropped to $3.8 billion, in 1977 increased to $4.1 billion, and last year was a record $5.2 billion. These deficits have created heavy pressures on the exchange rate, and the Canadian dollar has thus become worth less.

As I pointed out before, the devaluation of the Canadian dollar has become a major reason why we are in an inflation type of spiral. The devaluation of the dollar, the increase in food costs and the increase in oil costs are the major reasons why we are facing inflation, not some monetary policy that the governor of the Bank of Canada was trying to explain to us earlier in the day.

Since Canada is a major importer of food, some $3 billion last year, the loss of value of the Canadian dollar increased food costs. In 1978 the food price index was 216. It hurts the whole economy, increases unemployment and welfare rates and strikes at the viability of many small businesses. For example, in Saskatchewan some 51,000 new jobs were created from January to August, a pretty good rate for Saskatchewan. The premier is quoted as saying most of those increases occurred in the small business sector.

What will higher interest rates proposed by this government do to the small businessman? Banking acquaintances in Regina tell me there has been a general slowdown in business in my constituency because of the increase in interest rates. There is a general fear and sense of insecurity. There is no sense of certainty. There is no ability to predict and plan. How high will interest rates go; 15 today, 16 tomorrow, 17 next week, 18, 19, 20? Is there no end in sight?

The people of this country want some assurance, some predictability, and some leadership. We keep floundering along following the same impotent policies introduced by the former government. This government in its own madness is continuing those. All at once we see members of the former government being relieved of this insanity, and in fact demanding that this insanity be stopped. Why is it this only occurs on the opposition side and never on the government side? It would be better for the people of this country if the government were able to snap itself out of the foolish reality in which it is caught.

Major economic problems result in the over-all balance of payments deficits which cause devaluation and in turn exacerbate other problems such as large price increases. This continues to increase the problem and feeds itself. What caused the imbalance in the first place? We are made to understand the service trade is the major problem, some $5.2 billion last year. What is the origin of that? The origin of that, unfortunately, is the economic history of this country, the type of development that both the Liberal and Conservative governments sponsored.

We have had quick development for the sake of quick development. We sold our resources. We allowed foreign capital to come in and develop our resources. They took the resources out and left us with a debt. Now the chickens have come home to roost. Now we have to pay off the debt.

Let us look at the scope of foreign ownership in this country. StatsCan reported in 1976 that of the 230,262 non-financial enterprises in Canada, 3,630 or 1.5 per cent were classified as foreign owned. In terms of statistics, 1.5 per cent is not a very large number, yet the 1.5 per cent, the small handful of foreign-controlled corporations, had 34.9 per cent of all Canadian sales, 31 per cent of the total assets, and 46 per cent of the profits generated in this country in 1976. That blows my mind.

An hon. Member: That wouldn't take much.

Mr. de Jong: The hon. member says that would not take much. Does it not blow his mind that 1.5 per cent of all non-financial Canadian companies that are foreign-controlled take nearly half of all profits in this country? Is that not disturbing? Is it not obvious why we have the type of economic problems that we do in this country? All that profit is sent outside our borders. It is the return on past investments, and that is the price we now have to pay. That is why we have a deficit in our balance of payments, a devalued Canadian dollar, and spiralling inflation.

What is the solution? More borrowing, more indebtedness to foreign banks, more interest rates to be paid? It is the insanity that keeps repeating itself, insanity upon insanity upon insanity. Do we need a crash to wake the government up and make it realize that we are set on a course that will result in a great amount of human suffering? Small businessmen, farmers, working people and old people trying to exist on meagre incomes, living on the edge of economic survival, will be swept under by the forces the government opposite is setting loose.

An hon. Member: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. de Jong: The hon. member mentioned Saskatchewan. I did want to close with that. Saskatchewan, a small province of less than a million people, under an NDP government has taken an initiative in tackling this basic economic problem. They have tried to control resources developed in Saskatchewan so that the benefits of those resources stay in the province and stay in this country. That is why the people of Saskatchewan own nearly 50 per cent of the potash. Members opposite might claim that this is communism, and put that government down.

• (2140)

I am reminded of the day when the present Secretary of State (Mr. MacDonald) was in my home city of Regina. When asked what he thought of the takeover of potash by the provincial government, he said the only criticism he had of it was that it took so long. Mr. Speaker, he knew the solution to Saskatchewan's economic problems. But where is his voice now? Where are the voices of those Conservatives who know better? We heard them when they were in opposition. Are they to be stilled?

What sort of force is it in cabinet and in government which makes the voice of reason, understanding and enlightenment silent in a moment of need? Is there some hidden force which obliges people to do things they know do not make any sense at all?

In Saskatchewan we are involved in potash and in the development of our resources such as oil. The people have a stake in this development so that when profits accrue they stay in the country and they help with the balance of payments rather than become an irritant and create a problem. The members who sit in this little corner have the solution to the Canadian economic problem, and that is Canadian ownership in which the public and government play an active part. Until we are willing to tackle the basic problem of foreign control we shall go on and on, I suppose, until a crash occurs. Is that what it takes before we learn? I hope not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, addressing myself to this bill I want to make it clear at the outset that my approach to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is somewhat different from that of some of the speakers on my left.

Mr. Knowles: I hope so.

Mr. Johnston: I want to deliver a message of encouragement, of optimism, of hope, even of charity. I have a well-known company in my city—it's head office is in my riding—and I propose to borrow, if I may, a term they use. They have a motto "Steinberg's is on your side". I should like the Minister of Finance to know that many of us are very much on his side as he accepts the difficult challenges which face the country, as well as the many opportunities which lie ahead for Canada in this his first year as minister.

Benjamin Franklin once said that those who gave up an essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety deserved neither liberty nor safety. That statement is very appropriate for politicians in the late seventies and eighties here in Canada. I say this because we have to make difficult decisions.

In some areas the Minister of Finance has made difficult decisions. In others, though, he has not done so. He has, if you like, traded essential liberty, which I would define in certain circumstances as being equated with a sound economy, for temporary safety which in some respects is equivalent to political credibility.

The minister was faced with making a decision on a very difficult problem, that of the mortgage interest deductibility scheme advocated by his party during the election. It is our impression that it was only with great reluctance that the minister put forward even his modified version of that scheme, but that scheme is an example of what I mean, of giving up something which is in the interests of all Canadians, in the interest of a sound economy, in order to purchase a certain amount of political credibility. That is a black mark on the minister's record.

In addition, the hon. gentleman is supporting the position of the government in other economic areas, such as its stand on oil prices. It is an article of faith on the part of hon. members opposite, this thesis of letting oil prices rise to world market levels. I am myself a great believer in the marketplace; indeed, I am very supportive of the principle of free enterprise. But in the case of oil we are dealing with an international cartel. We are not dealing with a normal market situation; we are dealing with circumstances which are probably unique in recent history. This being the case, the concept of looking always to the market place is completely out of place in the current economic scheme. It is pushing us into inflation, pushing us inevitably into difficult times. The governor of the bank, according to the statement he delivered, expects an increase in oil prices and contemplates a rate of inflation considerably more than we are presently seeing.

Then there is question of the government's attitude to PetroCan. This is another policy which the minister indicates he supports as an article of faith. I find it difficult to believe that members opposite uniformly support the principle of privatization as an article of faith. As a matter of fact I recall the maiden speech of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) when he talked about the experiences he had had with Crown corporations. It is small wonder, because we know that the government of Alberta which carries the Tory colours probably has as many Crown corporations as any other government in the country, if not more. So I find it hard to believe that privatization per se should be regarded as an article of faith.

But, again I do support the concept of privatization. Private ownership of the means of production is an article of faith with me. But there are certain areas today in which the private sector cannot be expected to meet the challenges which face society. In an earlier speech I made here I drew an analogy between PetroCan and other kinds of ventures into which governments are necessarily being drawn. Take, for example, space exploration in the United States. Should that be the concern of the private sector? Does anyone seriously suggest that individual investors could invest in a project of that kind from which the rewards, even if they were tangible, could easily be delayed for a hundred years? That is not the kind of investment which private investors in this day and age are prepared to make. I suggest in the case of the energy sector in this country, and for that matter in many countries, that we are dealing with a similar situation.

As a government hon. members opposite have an obligation to make certain kinds of investments which are investments for society as a whole. That is what we are dealing with in the case of Petro-Canada, and I hope that eventually hon. members opposite will abandon some of these articles of faith and look at the reality of Canada and the necessity of having a strong Canadian public company in the energy sector.

We have heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) himself identify our public enemy number one as inflation. Who could disagree? Inflation sets class against class and groups against groups. Everybody is trying to maintain or perhaps increase their share of the national income. Inflation indeed is a social malady, as Carl Beigie recently wrote. It is a terrifying prospect. Panic all of a sudden has beset our own community and other nations, and it must be addressed and arrested. Tough decisions are going to be required to bring that about.

I might say that beginning in 1975 the previous government started making many tough decisions. One of the tough decisions was to establish a monetary stance of some kind and to establish targets for monetary growth, and that policy was consistently followed. Another tough decision was to reverse trends which had been established with regard to the expansion and growth of the public service. Those decisions were carried out, but those trends continued, and they were in play and effective on "black Monday", May 22.

Then another area in which the government acted was that of reducing the rate of government spending. This was also a tough decision, finally culminating, on an accelerated basis, in what is sometimes referred to as the August exercise of 1978. That was not a popular decision. It was difficult, and no minister and no government can expect to be popular when faced with that kind of choice. There are always serious trade-offs for those kinds of decisions. The Minister of Finance will be expected to continue in that tradition as he carries out his responsibilities. That is what we are looking to him for. That is what all Canadians are looking to him for.

We are not looking for cop-outs like the mortgage tax credit scheme, and I say that as a member who at one time supported an idea of limited mortgage interest deductibility. But with study came enlightenment, and I know the minister has suffered through the same pangs of realizing that he is faced with a scheme which is not only neutral in its application but also detrimental, particularly in the current economic climate in this country where we are faced with inflation. What kind of scheme do we have? We have one that is likely to put even more upward pressure on mortgage interest rates, and one which all observers conclude is definitely going to put pressure on housing costs and increase housing costs. So the minister did not make a tough decision. He was not prepared to take political credibility on the chin with regard to that decision.

On the other hand, I have to be fair in my judgments, and I must also say that nobody wants high interest rates. I deplore high interest rates. We have heard the NDP deploring high interest rates. The minister has made the decision to impose high interest rates. I am sure he made that decision with the best of good will and intention. This problem must have been studied. We have Governor Bouey. We have the Minister of Finance. The decision was a tough one. I am not prepared to say at this point that it was the right decision, but I admire the minister for having the guts to step up and say, "We have to make some tough decisions, and this is one of them".

Within the context of the statement by Benjamin Franklin which I cited earlier, the minister has not backed down, but he needs help. He needs help from everybody. He needs help from us, and I hope we are going to be able to play a creative and positive role in helping him to develop the policies which are required to meet the number one problem of inflation.

We see what the minister is doing on the monetary side. We see increases in interest rates. We are not satisfied. At least I am not satisfied that that in itself is going to solve the problem. It seems to me that monetary policy may be somewhat deficient in that we continue to have great liquidity and do not seem to be curbing credit, but nevertheless he has established his monetary stance and monetary position.

What about the fiscal side? We can look forward to the minister's budget, and we look forward to it with great anticipation, but unfortunately he is on a bad wicket with his mortgage tax credit, and let us hope that the cost of that program, which is estimated to be in excess of $2 billion when it is in effect, will not pre-empt and compromise other programs which the minister inevitably must introduce if he is going to come to grips with the problems which face this country.

I have a number of suggestions for the minister—none of which he will probably accept—and they are not to be introduced immediately in any event, but I do think that the minister has to offer us programs destined to stimulate the supply side of our economy and get more capital—Canadian capital, preferably—into plant and equipment and into research and development. We do not need any greater stimulation of aggregate demand at this time, as this mortgage tax scheme is likely to create. What we need are sound fiscal programs designed to attract Canadian savings into productive sectors of our economy, not into the real estate sector, not into MURBs at this point, but into those areas where we can expect to improve efficiency, produce goods, and supply services at reduced cost. I certainly do not think I am alone in putting that forward as a sound proposal in terms of one approach at the fiscal level to deal with this incredibly difficult problem of inflation.

We hear a lot of rubbish, sometimes amusing rubbish, from our friends on the left. We hear a lot of criticism. Our friends on the left try to put hon. members opposite and ourselves all in the same category, which I do not accept. I think there are very major policy differences. Nonetheless, I cannot let this opportunity pass without making reference to some of the extraordinary arguments and propositions I hear coming from my friend, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae), who was elected to this House at the same time I was. There is no doubt but that he should know better. I see he has disappeared from the House.

An hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. Rae: I am listening carefully.

Mr. Johnston: I read an attack by the hon. member on bank profits, and one thing you must be aware of when dealing with people in the NDP is the extraordinary capacity they have to personify corporations, to the point where you almost expect to meet Exxon on the street.

Any economic analysis—and the hon. member undoubtedly has made one—would substantiate and prove to everyone's satisfaction—it was virtually accepted in the Carter commission report—that you can no more impose a tax on a corporation than you can impose a tax on a dog. Who pays the tax, the dog? Certainly not, and yet a dog is much more capable of paying that tax through work, labour—watchdogging or whatever—than a corporation. The only people who are taxed when a corporation is taxed are the shareholders of the corporation who have to accept a reduced return on investment, or the people to whom the corporation renders goods and services.

With that I would like to come back to the situation with banks, but perhaps I should call it ten o'clock.

An hon. Member: Right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PRORATA PENSIONS FOR CERTAIN WIDOWS—INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon) for being here tonight to comment on my question which I asked on Wednesday, October 17, as reported at pages 298 and 299 of Hansard.

Before I get into the question, and certainly before we get any further into this session, perhaps the minister would be happy to join with me in paying tribute to the work which was done in this field by his predecessor, the Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: We all know of the difficulty he had getting money for veterans out of the cabinet of the last few years, but he fought hard and won quite a few gains for our veterans. We all know that there were a number of things that Mr. MacDonald hoped he might yet win, and that leads me to say that I hope his successor will finish the job he tried to do.

On October 17 my question was in two main parts. Principally I asked about amendments to the Pension Act which would make it possible for widows of veterans to receive the widow's pension where the veteran's disability pension was below 48 per cent. This is a cutoff which has been most unfair through all the years and for all the decades it has been there. Time and again there have been recommendations by outside committees and by standing committees on veterans affairs that this be changed, at least to the extent of having a prorata pension for widows where the veteran's disability pension was below 48 per cent. My hunch and my feeling is that we are getting closer to it. I hope the minister might be able to give us that assurance tonight. I realize he cannot give us the details until he presents his bill, but if he can assure us that the bill will be coming in soon, that would be deeply appreciated.

[Mr. Johnston.]

When I questioned the government House leader today about future business, I said that I hoped something like this could be announced and put before us this year before November 11.

When the minister responds, I hope he will also say anything he can about other measures which ought to be considered. One is to put the basic rate of the disability pension on a basis which ties it to the average income of the five designated categories in the public service. As the minister knows, we tied it to that level some years ago, but provided only for its indexing according to the rise in the cost of living. The result has been that year by year the amount of the 100 per cent disability pension gets behind the composite rate which was accepted as fair. We adjusted it once. Why not put it on a fixed basis so that it will always keep pace with that composite level?

Also there is the question of certain improvements which still need to be made to the compensation for former prisoners of war. I am sure these have been drawn to the attention of the minister. I hope that some time during this session something might be done in that area.

The other very large area where something needs to be done is in revising the War Veterans Allowance Act. This is an old piece of legislation which was brought in back in the 1930s when on the civilian side we had an old age pension with a means test. The war veterans allowance matched that and did something a little better for veterans than what was done for civilians. Times have changed. The old age pension situation is a little better. We got rid of the means test, at least for the basic amount. But some of those old trappings are still there with respect to the war veterans allowance. It seems to me the time has come, especially in view of the other social changes and in view of the years since two or three wars were fought, for the war veterans allowance to be turned into a guaranteed annual income for veterans at a certain age below the age at which ordinary people go on pension.

There are a number of issues of that kind about which I am concerned, and I am hoping that in this session, with the minister's keen interest in veterans, and despite the fact he has got two jobs, he will be pushing hard for the kinds of improvements to which I have been referring tonight. There are others, but I believe I have named the main ones, namely, altering that 48 per cent rule so that widows where the husband's rated disability was below 48 per cent will get a pension as of right; doing something about fixing the 100 per cent basic disability pension so it will stay with the composite level that was agreed upon; improving the compensation for former prisoners of war; and bringing the War Veterans Allowance Act up to date so that it will meet the needs of our veterans today.

I am happy to welcome the hon. member for Victoria to this important post of veterans affairs, and I look forward to working with him and with other members who are interested in veterans affairs so that we can make some real progress during this session on behalf of Canada's veterans, their families and their survivors.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise at this time to reply to my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

I cannot add a great deal to the answers I gave the other day, but I would not like this opportunity to pass, while we are passing out kudos, without mentioning the sterling work that was done in respect of veterans' pensions by my predecessor, in a fashion, the former member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, who has now gone to the other place and is a senator. Jack Marshall's work in the pension field has been outstanding. He is still held in very high regard across the country, and is receiving all kinds of requests to make speeches and appearances, and is working closely with me advising me in my portfolio of DVA.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: I hope to continue using his services in that regard as well as, and I do not want to say "use", the services of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) because I am sure he is volunteering them. I am looking forward to working with him.

As to the timing of the bill, which was the first part of his question tonight, one of our problems is that this government has so much good legislation it wants to get before the House our drafting crew is falling a bit behind. That is holding us up on this particular bill at the present time.

The bill is going to amend two or three, and maybe four, statutes and, consequently, requires careful drafting. There will be many clauses to it, and they will approach, perhaps sometimes not in exactly the same way as the hon. member would like, the problems he has mentioned and would like rectified. As I said the other day, we are moving in the same direction.

I do not expect it will include the tying in of the basic pension, but I will be asking my advisers what the cost would be at the present time of tying the basic pension to the five lowest grades of the civil service. The hon. member informed us it was tied in once before but somehow or other the knot slipped. The fact that the pay of the lowest five grades in the civil service is increasing faster than the cost of living is a problem because a gap appears, and I expect there is a gap again now. The last time the gap was closed was about three years ago. I will be looking at that but, as the hon. member knows, we were not left with exactly a bank full of money when we took over. The money is short and we are trying to set our priorities to help those who are the most needy. We are doing that through some of the amendments. The 48 per cent amendment, while it will not cure the problem overnight, is a start in that direction. There will be some movement made in that direction.

Mr. Knowles: There will be something done about the 48 per cent rule?

Mr. McKinnon: That is right, and as far as the War Veterans Allowance Act is concerned we are going to take some important steps there to cure some of the inequities.

Mr. Knowles: Good.

Mr. McKinnon: I see that my time is up.

PUBLIC SERVICE—REVIEW OF PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT AND THE MERIT PRINCIPLE—APPLICATION OF PRINCIPLES IN REPORT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, last week I rose in the House to ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) about the curious new rulings which have been made by the deputy commissioner of corrections regarding the disposition of so-called surplus employees at the B.C. penitentiary. I put the question to him that he has added an additional principle to the D'Avignon report in which he now invokes a "reverse order merit" principle. I suggest somewhat facetiously, but not entirely facetiously, that if we applied that principle to the administrators of the penitentiary service in the Pacific region, the quality of work would go up dramatically.

I say that because I wonder if the regional director of the penitentiary service in British Columbia has any other qualifications beside the fact that his brother is the senior officer in the Solicitor General's department here in Ottawa. His sidekick, Babalouie, or whatever his name is, worked with him in Kingston. The inspector general who was sent out to do an audit on the work methods and the number of employees there, was as effective as sending lettuce by rabbit. I wonder if the man who is in charge of the penitentiary has any other personal interests except the fact he is a retired man from the military and feels that this is a good way of supplementing his military pension. One does not get a very sanguine picture of the administration in the Pacific regional district.

Specifically, I have been dealing with the case of a constituent of mine who has ten years of service at the penitentiary and who held a senior position in his classification. This man was acting supervisor of that area for two years. He has taken the management course offered to him by the penitentiary service. He also received a letter from the acting director general of the Public Service Commission saying, "we hope that you will soon be getting a promotion".

However, when the previous government instituted a firing policy of 5,000 employees, the B.C. penitentiary service decided to do an audit and to check on these employees and, lo and behold, this man who has ten years service is the first to go, or at least almost the first to go. I wonder why? An evaluation was done on him, but when he asked to see that report, he was refused. He appealed it and his appeal at the regional district was turned down, whereupon he appealed to the commissioner here in Ottawa. This is what the commissioner had to say with regard to the force reduction committees. They:— —assess the qualifications of persons so identified and rate them in accordance with the reverse order of merit principle.

He says rates them, he does not say dismisses them. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark when there is that kind of evaluating going on in the public service. My question to the President of the Treasury Board was to the effect: how long can we have a public service when we have that kind of assessment being done on the public servants? What kind of sense of security will there be in the public service when that kind of chopping is going on? Everyone will be wondering who will be next.

Perhaps one of the liabilities of this gentleman was that he was one of the 16 hostages at the time of the Mary Steinhauser affair at the penitentiary. Perhaps he knows too much of what is going on inside the penitentiary. It may be that one of his liabilities is that he had the audacity to protest some of the decisions made at the penitentiary regarding staff and the lack of promotions to officers.

It seems to me that any administration that tries three times to hire a person and put him in an acting supervisory position when that person does not have the qualifications is hardly the kind to qualify for judging this person, who has all the necessary qualifications on paper, who has the experience necessary, and who has done the things asked of him. But he is released. As I say, something is wrong in the state of Denmark.

● (2215)

Two things are wrong with the disposition of this case, according to the act. First, he was not allowed to see his assessment. It was secret; he never saw it. When he complained, they made another one. Finally, he appealed to the deputy commissioner. The act says that he is supposed to receive a response from the deputy commissioner in 30 days but, Mr. Speaker, it took 95 days for that response to get back to this individual.

I suggest that if the D'Avignon report is dealing with the merit principle—and I say this in all seriousness and not at all facetiously—the regional director, his deputy, the man who is in charge of the penitentiary, ought to be subjected to that principle of reverse order of merit that they are now invoking with respect to this employee. In that way the system in the specific regional district would be cleaned up in a hurry.

I have sent notices to the Solicitor General (Mr. Lawrence) regarding some of the activities which are occurring in the hiring practices, and some of the inequities that the employees feel are carried on. It is time that we invoke the merit principle in order of merit and keep those people who have seniority, who have proficiency, and who have shown consistency in their work patterns—keep them, and deal with the administrators who are perpetrating this act of injustice on the employees.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question touches on an issue which is of great importance to us, that of the application of the merit principle in the hiring and dismissal of public servants. I should like to review briefly where we stand at the moment.

The Public Service Employment Act, in respect of lay-offs, states that where the services of an employee are no longer required because of lack of work or because of the discontinuance of the function, the deputy head, in accordance with regulations of the commission, may lay off the employee. The specific regulation concerned is section 33.1B of the public service employment regulations. Where two or more employees are employed in similar positions and one must be laid off, the deputy head must lay off the employees in order of merit. The order of lay-off begins with the employee lowest on the list. This is known as the "reverse order of merit" and should ensure that the best employees are the last to be laid off.

The government recognizes the subjectivity involved in this process, and would be pleased to draw to the personal attention of the Chairman of the Public Service Commission any cases such as that referred to by the hon. member where it is felt that the process may not have been implemented fairly. The minister will meet to review the situation with the chairman in the near future. I would encourage all members to write the minister with details of these cases as soon as possible. The government does not accept that abuse has necessarily occurred, but believes the matter to be of such importance to the fair practice doctrine which underlies government employment that detailed scrutiny of its operations by members of the commission is clearly justified.

As we all know, the D'Avignon report on the review of personnel management and the merit principle was tabled in this House recently. This will provide an opportunity to hon. members and the government to themselves consider the broad application of the merit principle within the federal public service, with a view to safeguarding its continued and even expanded application throughout the federal departments and agencies of the Crown.

FISHERIES—COD QUOTAS IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, on October 17 I put questions to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) about supplementary cod quotas in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the matter of allowing boats 100 feet and over to fish in those water. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in the previous government prohibited boats over 100 feet from fishing in Gulf waters to preserve the stocks for Gulf-based coastal and deep sea fishermen. That measure allowed New Brunswick and Quebec fishermen to increase their catches in the past two years. As an example, Mr. Speaker, Quebec catches increased 30 per cent a year in the past two years.

The minister said there were consultations with the Atlantic provinces and Quebec at a meeting held in St. John's, Newfoundland, in mid-July. According to my information, supplementary cod quotas in the Gulf of St. Lawrence for the years 1979 and 1980 were discussed but the committee never agreed to let trawlers 100 feet and over in the gulf. The representatives of the province of Quebec suggested at that meeting of the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee a supplement of 10,000 metric tons of cod. No province expressed objections to the increased quotas.

The minister was informed by the advisory committee on July 11 that a supplement for boats over 100 feet could be challenged by certain provinces and, of course, coastal fishermen. Here, Mr. Speaker, is an excerpt from the minutes of that committee, and I quote:

Cod stocks in area 4T seem in better shape. Members are generally in favour of an increase in the current TAC (total authorized catch); however, the possibility of a TAC increase and allocations to boats over and under 100 feet bring out contradictory opinions—

A few days later, the minister received a working paper entitled "The Minister's Briefing Notes," in which the civil servants bring up the same problems. I quote:

[English]

If the quota is increased by this amount in 1979, the inshore fleet segment will be happy. However, knowing that the scientific advice suggests we can increase by as much as 13,000, the offshore segment will be most vocal in their objections. Conversely, allowing the large vessels to catch up to this amount of fish in 4T (an area currently excluded to vessels greater than 100 feet) would be totally unacceptable to the inshore fishermen, . . . and such a policy would be violently opposed by the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, and P.E.I.

● (2225)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the inshore fishermen are against increased quotas for vessels greater than 100 feet, and rightly so. For them, and those who work in the processing plants, their families, the towns where they live, access to those resources is indispensable.

In his press release of August 27 advising the fishermen of higher quotas, the minister took them by surprise, and especially the governments of Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, by authorizing vessels of more than 100 feet, which belong to big companies, to catch 6,000 additional tons in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and that, to the detriment of inshore fishermen.

Mr. Speaker, a few days after making his decision on August 27, the minister stated at a conference on northern cod, and I quote:

Our policy, my policy on this matter is simple and well-defined. Coastal fishermen have priority access to this resource.

You will certainly agree, Mr. Speaker, that this minister wears many hats.

Like several other members, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the hon. minister has one policy for the coastal fishermen of Newfoundland, another for those of New Brunswick, another for those of Quebec, and finally another favouring large companies. Indeed, why did he authorize vessels greater than 100 feet to catch 6,000 metric tons of cod in the Gulf when no, I repeat, no favourable recommendation to this effect was made by the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee or in the working paper that he received from his officials?

Mr. Speaker, the government has often boasted that it could come to an agreement with the provinces on any subject. I can therefore not understand how the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans can decide to let trawlers of 100 feet or more into the Gulf of St.Lawrence knowing that the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, as well as the coastal fishermen of the Gulf, including those of Newfoundland, have expressed disagreement about his new policy. Mr. Speaker, the minister has unilaterally made a decision which is unacceptable to eastern Canada.

Since this new policy will have unfavourable effects on the fishing industry of Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, as well as Cape Breton Island, I ask on behalf of my colleagues from eastern Quebec and eastern Canada that the hon. minister postpone his decision until the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry has studied the matter.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Gaspé for outlining these problems.

[English]

I am pleased to comment on the issue raised by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) and, in so doing, to establish the facts and events as they happened. The management of all the Atlantic groundfish fishery is based on recommendations made by the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee. The provinces, the industry, and the fishermen's associations are all represented on that committee.

At the July 11, 1979, meeting of AGAC, the possibility of increasing the 1979 total allowable catch for the southern Gulf was discussed. Scientific advice indicated that there was room to increase the total allowable catch by some 13,000 tons over the 36,000 already allocated for that fishery. Following that meeting, further consultation with representatives of vessels under 100 feet indicated that they required 4,000 tons to carry their fishery to the end of the fishing season. This means in effect that 9,000 tons were left to be allocated, and representatives of vessels over 100 feet were quite anxious to have all that quota. However, in order not to affect the 1980 total allowable catch and to be on the safe side, the Minister of Fisheries decided to authorize the allocation of only 6,000 tons to the larger vessels. These vessels will not commence fishing until after November 1.

I think it would have been irresponsible for the minister not to allocate at least part of the recommended increase, when the scientific advice suggested this could be done in accordance with sound conservation principles. The hon. member would probably have criticized the minister if he decided not to allocate that quota. In allocating Gulf stocks, the minister has made it clear that the priority should go to the small inshore fleet. However, one must not confuse priority and exclusivity.

The hon. member should also recognize the very important benefits of employment which will accrue to those shore based industries which will process this increased quota. I wish to emphasize that consultations were held and that all parties were consulted before the decision was made. It is clear that no amount of additional consultation could have resolved differing views. Therefore it was the minister's responsibility to make the final decision on the basis of those consultations and the best scientific advice available.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that trawlers based outside the Gulf have always fished from this stock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST STAFF OF CANADIAN EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION COMMISSION BE INCREASED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 and as a matter of urgent and pressing necessity:

That the President of the Treasury Board take immediate steps to increase the allocation of manpower to the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission so that the serious problems of overworked officials and lengthy backlogs in the Canadian immigration offices around the world can be eliminated, and so that the illegal inflow of immigrants can be better patrolled, together with fuller screening to ensure that foreign criminals and foreign government agents not be admitted to Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

REQUEST LARGE TRAWLERS BE BANNED FROM OPERATING IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE UNTIL FISHING INDUSTRY CONSULTED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the seriousness of the problem resulting from the decision of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) to allow trawlers of 100 feet or more to take 6,000 metric tons of cod in the 4T area of the Gulf of St. Lawrence as of November 1, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold):

That the minister keep those large trawlers out of the Gulf until such time as the spokesmen for thousands of fishermen who have not been consulted can appear before the committee on fisheries and forestry in order to express their views.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43 such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

This being the first anniversary of Arts Day, and considering that another Canadian success story, the world renowned National Film Board, an institution which has brought Canada international recognition, winning five Oscars and 40 Academy nominations and many other awards, an institution which has recently lost 125 skilled artists and technicians and which is in desperate straits because of an effective 25 per cent cutback imposed by the previous government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That the Secretary of State seek approval from his generous colleagues on the treasury benches for an immediate $1 million transfusion of supplementary funds in order that Canadians not lose this 40-year old cultural resource through a lingering death caused by financial starvation.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROTEST AGAINST SOVIET PROPOSAL RESPECTING 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent necessity concerning the 1980 Olympic Games to be held in the Soviet Union. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That this House affirms its belief that the Olympic Games must always be above the field of political ideologies of any kind whatsoever, and that it therefore request an explanation from the government of the Soviet Union on the apparent infringement of human rights by the proposed banishment of all Moscow children between the ages of seven and fifteen from that city during July and August of 1980 for the apparent, expressed concern that visiting outsiders would contaminate their minds with ideas contrary to ideology taught in Russian classrooms.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The introduction of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CANADA WORKS

REQUEST GRANTS BE ALLOCATED ACCORDING TO NEEDS OF RIDINGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering the large number of senior citizens who have taken advantage of the services made available through several Canada Works projects in the constituency of Verdun and in almost every Canadian constituency; considering that the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta were entirely excluded from the program; and considering that the funds made available to Quebec have been reduced in comparison to last year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Blainville-Deux Montagnes (Mr. Fox):

That the House direct the government to review immediately the criteria for the allocation of funds to ridings so that the funds benefit those with the most pressing needs.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. The introduction of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CALL FOR REVIEW OF PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO SURVIVING SPOUSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), I move:

That this House urges the government to review all the employee pension plans that come under its jurisdiction, and to take the necessary steps to provide that in all cases the pensions of surviving widows—or of surviving widowers where applicable—will be not less than 75 per cent of the contributor's pension, and that the eventual goal be a full 100 per cent pension for either survivor, in accordance with the principle of equality between men and women.

TRANSPORT

FOREIGN CAR RENTAL COMPANIES—INVESTIGATION INTO OPERATIONS BY HOUSE COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the new policy announced October 19 which unfairly permits large, foreign car rental companies to qualify as Canadian in the allocation of booth space at Canadian airports, and considering that booth space for foreign car rental agencies has already been generously supplied, and in view of the statements of legitimate Canadian competitors whose existence is threatened by this policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne):

That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and report upon the effect of this policy on Canadian car rental companies, and that its implementation be suspended for 60 days until the committee has completed its recommendation.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR DEVICES

REQUEST THAT SOUTH AFRICA DISCONTINUE TESTING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that United States intelligence services have reported that the government of South Africa has exploded a nuclear device in the atmosphere, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House demand that the government of South Africa discontinue all nuclear testing.

EQUALITY OF BENEFITS FOR WIDOWS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That the government recognize the desirability that all Canadians in similar financial circumstances be treated equally, and that to this end all widows with little or no income and who are between the ages of 60 and 65 receive the same access to federal pension benefits as are presently accorded or are to be granted only to those widows whose husbands have died at a certain age.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASES IN INTEREST RATES—ADVERSE EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board, who always told us about his concern for the private sector and for privatization.

Will he really do something to help the private sector, especially small business, to cope with the serious problem and the concern that the government's policy of high interest rates has created for Canadian business?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Windsor West that we constantly have under review various measures that would help the small business sector in this country. I am very, very pleased that at last the hon. member is becoming alerted to the sad consequences of the deficits his former government ran up in this country.

● (1115)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, last December 13 the President of the Treasury Board, speaking in this House on behalf of the Conservative party, said, "For every one-half point the interest rates go up, it costs businesses $375 million."

Does he realize this means the Conservative high interest rate policy has already cost Canadian business over $2 billion? Why is he abandoning the promises he made before the election to bring down interest rates? Why is he not doing anything to help Canadian business, especially small business, instead of giving us this empty talk?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again, as the hon. member knows as a former ex-cabinet minister, it is not primarily the responsibility of the Treasury Board to take such measures as he is referring to.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: But I can assure him that this government is the friend of small business in this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: —and if ways and means can be taken to assist the small businessman, they will certainly be taken.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, if the Conservative government is such a friend to small business, why, according to press reports, is John Bulloch, president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, expressing fear that a downturn of consumer spending due to the Conservative high interest rate policy will leave small retailers with large inventories of unsold goods, and thereby increase the number of business bankruptcies?

Why has the government taken no steps to help them deal with this problem and just given us this talk? What estimates does he, or his colleague the Minister of Finance, have of the number of business bankruptcies anticipated because of the Conservative high interest rate policy?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again I would reply to the hon. member who raised similar questions at the finance committee meeting yesterday, I understand, that when that information is available—as I have already indicated—we will certainly make it available to members of this House.

In short, we have explained—certainly my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has explained—why interest rates are rising in this country and I cannot understand why the hon. member persists in indicating that it is this government's fault, as opposed to his own former government's fault.

Mr. Chrétien: If you do not want to talk responsibly, get out.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister said, yes, people are being crucified now with high rates but they will be better off in a year or two as a result of this policy. I must say this reminded me very much of the American general in the Vietnam war—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Phillips: The question is this, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister has said that high interest rates are needed to prevent the dollar from falling, and to combat inflation, can the minister answer the question which the acting minister refused to answer two days ago as to what the government thinks is the appropriate level for the dollar—90 cents, 85 cents, or 80 cents? What does he believe is the appropriate level?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, while it may be that some people are being crucified by high interest rates, obviously the hon. gentleman has not been, because he looks quite well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: You are getting tired already, John.

Mr. Crosbie: As a result of our policy, and with the steps we have taken now that will improve the economy, the people who are suffering now will be rising again in a year's time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What about the dollar?

FUTURE POLICY RESPECTING INTEREST RATES—EFFECT OF OIL PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the government is planning to raise the inflation rate to over ten per cent next year by raising the price of oil sharply, I ask the minister, can we look forward to even higher interest rates for a prolonged period of time and many more crucifixions of individuals and small businesses in the next year or two?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what we can look forward to is that this government is going to do what is right in the long-term interests of the economy of this country. The steps that are being taken now have to be taken now because of the weakness of our present economy and because of events that have occurred over the last few years.

The steps that have to be taken now are going to be painful for a short time. There is no way of trying to improve our economic situation which is not going to be painful to many people now. We are confident that taking these steps now will mean that in the next few months and in the next several years Canada will realize its inherent strengths which have been pointed out by forecasters and economists such as Mr. Grant, of Wood Gundy, who said that "Canada has a lot of pain to go through in the next five years. However, we probably have the strongest economy among the western countries and we are best equipped for survival." With the right policies now, we will succeed.

● (1120)

CREDIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT IN FACE OF ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which goes to the root of the central question of government, that is, of credibility as a whole. Given that the Canadian economic reality just before the May election with high inflation, high unemployment and a low economic growth rate was precisely the same as it is now—as was acknowledged by governor Bouey yesterday—can the Prime Minister explain to the people of Canada why he thought it was appropriate, given that economic reality before the last election which has not changed, to promise low interest rates then but to implement high interest rates after the election? Do we not have a very serious credibility problem here?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to deal with that question which the Leader of the New Democratic Party has raised for three days in a row, and to give him an answer which remains the same and which I hope will be clear to him: when this government came into office it found an economic situation which was more severe than we had anticipated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: The Minister of Finance just said it was the strongest in the western world.

Mr. Clark: It was more severe than we had anticipated. This was as a result of the mismanagement of the former government.

Mr. Chrétien: You are the government now.

Mr. Clark: The former minister of finance, who was shunted aside to federal-provincial relations in the hope he would be quiet, says that we are the government now. The problem is that they were the government then. They created a series of problems with which we have to deal and which require the kinds of policies we are now following.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that answer was utter rubbish. There has been no change in the economic reality from the time before the election as it pertains to the present time, and the governor of the Bank of Canada acknowledged that yesterday before the committee. No amount of rhetoric from the Prime Minister will get around that. The five principal chartered banks in Canada, whose profits last year amounted to almost a billion dollars, up some 33 per cent from the year before, have now announced their intention to raise their rate to Chargex holders to 21 per cent—a further gouging of the public on top of these profits. Will the government take concrete action with the banks and stop this new act of gouging on their part?

An hon. Member: Usury.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that question was raised by a member of the New Democratic Party some days ago and directed to the Minister of Finance. He indicated that we would not take the action recommended by the NDP. I repeat that answer.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister said in the House a few days ago that inflation was public enemy No. 1. He has ruled out a subsidy on bread prices, ruled out a subsidy on milk prices, cancelled his election promise of a tax cut for middle and low income taxpayers, and today reiterated that they are not going to do anything about exorbitant bank profits. What, precisely, does he intend to do for the ordinary person in this country?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, what we intend to do for what the Leader of the NDP calls the ordinary people in this country is to face, now, the tough decisions which exist for the Government of Canada either to face or to ignore. They were ignored in large measure by the former government. We will not ignore them: we will face them head on. That is the only way we can bring order, growth and confidence to the Canadian economy and assure our future.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF THE GOVERNMENT LEADER IN THE YUKON TERRITORY

Mr. Speaker: Before continuing the question period, I invite hon. members to join with me in signalling the presence in our gallery of a distinguished visitor in the person of Mr. Chris Pearson, the government leader in the Yukon territory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF SUGGESTIONS TO ASSIST UNDERPRIVILEGED AREAS

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Matapédia-Matane): As the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is absent, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tolerate being treated in this way! There is a time-honoured tradition established in this House and I should like it to be adhered to.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Bellechasse rises on a point of order at this moment, I shall consider him at noon today. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I do not accept being treated this way. I do not accept our being treated as though we had not been elected.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane.

Mr. De Bané: In view of the absence—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, there is a question I want to ask and I want to ask it now.

Mr. De Bané: As the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is absent, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Considering that the Prime Minister has stated on several occasions—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I insist on being respected and recognized in accordance with the tradition of the House! I do insist—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to remind the hon. member for Bellechasse—and he is fully aware of this anyway—that hon. members may not rise on points of order during oral question period. That is to conform with the recent practice of proceeding with question period without any interruptions. I understand very well that the hon. member for Bellechasse should seek the opportunity to put a question. Yesterday, I recognized him so that he could put a question after that of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and today I shall recognize him again later in the period because he is an hon. member just like all other hon. members. Still, it is always up to the Chair to choose the order in which hon. members will participate in the oral question period. I shall now recognize the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane once again. The hon. member for Matapédia-Matane has the floor.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I did not rise on a point of order, but to be recognized as tradition would have it, and I insist upon it. I do not want to be disrespectful, but I insist that I be recognized; I think it is quite normal.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Matapédia-Matane has the floor.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister who has repeatedly stated his intention of having all hon. members participate more actively in the business of the House. As the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion will be meeting next week, would he agree to having the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board appear before the members of the committee so that all its members can make suggestions on the means that should be taken to help the underdeveloped areas of Canada, and so that those suggestions can be reflected in the budget speech promised by the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a suggestion I would be prepared to discuss with the ministers. However, it should be stressed that there is some problem with the ministers' schedules, particularly the Minister of Finance, because he has several bills listed in his name in the House of Commons. Considering the principle and the possibility of all hon. members in the House of Commons having the opportunity to make positive suggestions on regional development, I find the hon. member has made a suggestion which is really valid for the government. So we want to try to find some means to meet such an objective.

INQUIRY WHETHER MEETINGS WILL BE HELD AT HIGHER LEVEL WITH PRESIDENT OF GM ON ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW PLANTS

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I thank the right hon. Prime Minister for his positive attitude. Considering that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion recognized last week in this House that there was, to use his expression, a serious imbalance between Ontario and Quebec as far as location of the automotive industry is concerned, and considering the investments already announced by Ford and GM, can the leader of the government tell us whether he himself or other cabinet members intend to meet GM's head soon and what proposals the government can make to the company to correct that anomaly?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Prime Minister.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a meeting will take place between, on the government side, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of State for Economic Development, Senator de Cotret, and the representatives of General Motors on Monday, October 29. I cannot indicate the exact position the government will want to take in the discussions but the meeting has been requested by the government to discuss a plan with General Motors.

• (1130)

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In the Speech from the Throne, the government said it intended to expand the role of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. In light of that statement, can the Prime Minister assure the House that during the current fiscal year and the next there will be an increase in the budget of that department?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret telling the hon. member that I do not have the figures in my hand right now, but I will consult with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to determine exactly what the situation is concerning the various sectors of economic development.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to present a motion pursuant to Standing Order 29 in order to be recognized, and I ask that the motion be put to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) rising on a point of order? The hon. member for Beauce.

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I refer to Standing Order 29 which says that when two or more members rise to speak, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who first rose in his place. I am not too sure but I believe a motion may be moved so that any member who has risen "be now heard", or "do now speak", which motion shall be put forthwith without debate. I want to move that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) be heard now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Beauce and the hon. member for Bellechasse are fully aware that motions may be moved only during periods specifically reserved for that purpose. They referred to Standing Order 29 concerning the rules of debate. But this is oral question period, to which the rules of debate do not apply. Moreover, a motion cannot be introduced during oral question period. That is understood.

REQUEST FOR GREATER CLARIFICATION ON ROLE OF MINISTER

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question.

How can the Prime Minister state in the Speech from the Throne, that the mandate of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be strengthened, when he has just told me that his government has not taken any decision at cabinet or at Treasury Board level, without necessarily giving me the exact amounts that his government intends to spend, until the end of this fiscal year and during the next, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have with me today the exact figures from the budget of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The hon. member has raised another matter. He suggested that the only way to have an efficient regional economic development policy is to spend money. In our view, a more efficient way of ensuring economic development is for the government to consider all the implications of every action aimed at regional economic development. That is the policy of our government, which I am forced to recognize is a change from the policy applied by the former government with which the hon. member is associated.

[English]

AGREEMENTS SIGNED WITH NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of any new agreements which are being signed with the province of Newfoundland, and whether these agreements will follow that provincial government's priorities totally?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any agreements which are being signed with the government of Newfoundland. That is not to say that there are not agreements which are ready for signature and which might be within the specific knowledge of the minister who, unfortunately, is away from the House, in Nova Scotia.

DISCUSSIONS WITH NOVA SCOTIA ON STEEL INDUSTRY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this series of questions on regional development to ask the Prime Minister about discussions which have taken place between his government and the government of Nova Scotia with respect to the steel industry in that province, with which the Prime Minister is familiar.

The Prime Minister may recall that at the request of the government of Nova Scotia, the former government allocated the sum of $50 million for rehabilitation of the plant. I would like to find out whether that obligation is still in existence and whether that money is still available to the government of Nova Scotia for the rehabilitation of the plant.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret that, once again, I am not able to give as detailed an answer as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion could give. I do not know the exact state of the discussions between the government of Nova Scotia and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, except that there remains a continuing commitment on the part of this government to aid in the strengthening of the steel industry in Cape Breton.

REQUEST GRANTS BE GIVEN TO ASSIST ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW INDUSTRIES IN QUEBEC

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Around 1975 the Department of Regional Economic Expansion signed a subsidiary agreement with the province of Quebec under which eight cities in the province of Quebec were to be selected as sites for regional industrial parks, and the infrastructures are in the process of being completed in those eight cities, those eight industrial regional parks.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to go along with that policy so that industries will get grants to fill those industrial parks which, in certain cases, are white elephants, and to that end is the Prime Minister prepared to state clearly in the House today that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion will have an increased budget because he is not a member of the inner cabinet but, rather, a member of that scattered outer cabinet which meets only about once a month and does not seem to have all the influence he would require to implement the principles he states publicly?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not want at this point to go into the organization of the government. We now have some 30 ministers with influence whereas there was only one in the former government.

As to the specific question of the hon. member, once again I will have to consult with the minister responsible to find out exactly what the situation is with respect to the commitments that were made or are being made by the government. I believe the hon. member knows there will be a meeting between the representatives of the Government of Canada and the representatives of the province of Quebec, on November 5, to discuss priorities in the economic development of Quebec which both levels of government could pursue together.

ENERGY

BEAUFORT SEA—EXPLORATION DRILLING BY DOME PETROLEUM

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question is to my friend, the informative Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. My question concerns the decision by on-site and regional engineers to suspend drilling by Dome Petroleum in the Beaufort Sea due to the environmental risk of heavy ice build-up. This decision was overturned by Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development officials in Ottawa, thereby undermining the authority of the local engineers.

● (1140)

Can the minister tell the House on what basis the decision of local authorities was reversed, and did a telegram from Dome Petroleum to departmental officials in Ottawa have any influence on this decision?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's concern in terms of protection of the environment in Canada's north.

Under the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, a field officer can suspend operations on the drill sites in the Beaufort. That communication is then passed on to the regional engineer in Yellowknife. Due to the build-up of six-inch ice in the drill area, it was recommended by the field officers that operations be suspended.

I should indicate to the hon. member and to the House that at the time of the order, drilling was not taking place. In fact, they were production-testing and the area was completely encased. The order went to Ottawa. After discussion, not only—as the hon. member has indicated—with Dome but also with the regional officer in Yellowknife, the order was modified in order that the production-testing be completed. We need approximately two days, or a maximum of five days—that is the window we need—and then the well would be suspended for the winter period.

Mr. Ittinuar: My supplementary is for the Prime Minister of Canada. Does his Minister of the Environment, who is not here today, unfortunately, stand by his earlier stated concern over our lack of preparedness in case of a major oil spill in the Arctic, and was his department consulted by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development about this latest decision concerning drilling in the Arctic; and what are this minister's concerns?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to answer the question fully. I have spoken with my officials today, and I am not satisfied with the communication which took place in terms of the incident to which the hon. member has referred and with the fact that there was a lack of communication between the Ottawa office and the various departments and our field officers

This morning I have given instructions that the communication system be examined and improved in order to avoid the indecision and also the apparent conflict which has taken place.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

OVERPAYMENT OF BENEFITS—STEPS TO PREVENT CONTINUANCE

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The 1978-79 annual report of the commission indicates that in addition to $71 million of unemployment insurance overpayments found by the commission, the Auditor General found $290 million.

Can the minister indicate to the people of Canada what he is doing to ensure that these unprecedented overpayments are halted immediately?

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The overpayments in question, as reported by the Auditor General, were overpayments in the calendar year 1978 and, of course, are of great concern to me and to this government.

I should say that the new Government of Canada has taken three specific steps to deal with this very serious problem. The first step is to constitute a new record of employment which will ensure greater accuracy in the filing of information by employers in Canada. The second is to institute a report of hiring procedure on a pilot project basis to ensure that there will not be continuing instances of abuse by some employees who collect unemployment insurance at the same time as they acquire new work. The third thing that this new government has done is to establish an on-line computer system which will be operational in Ontario and the west by the summer, and in the Atlantic provinces by next fall. This will ensure greater accuracy in the compilation of data and will ultimately lead to a rather sizeable reduction in the rather large overpayments which now exist.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EFFECT ON CANADIAN ECONOMY OF POSSIBLE MOVE OF EMBASSY IN MIDDLE EAST

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, so that the Prime Minister may catch his breath, I shall ask my question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Wednesday, some of my Liberal colleagues echoed in the House the concern of businessmen who export to Arab countries about the situation resulting from the proposed transfer of the Canadian embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. I must say that certain Progressive Conservative politicians have also expressed such a concern, namely Mr. Stanfield, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the Minister of State for International Trade. He stated:

Trade negotiations with the Arab countries are seriously affected.

And he added on Wednesday:

—we hope that the whole matter will be clarified shortly.

In view of the foregoing, and with a view to protecting our foreign trade as always, I ask once again whether the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs could not dissociate the problem of moving the Canadian embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem from the general government policy review on the Middle East. It seems to me that such a dissociation is possible, and I strongly urge that this be done as soon as possible, as the Minister of State for International trade suggested, in the interest of our foreign trade.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to send the hon. member a copy of the terms of reference which were handed to Mr. Stanfield at the outset of his mission, which include a broad look at the relations that Canada has with the Middle East and include, of course, the question that was put there in the first place and which the hon. member mentioned, that of the move of the embassy.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL MAKE DECISION CONCERNING MOVE OF EMBASSY

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am of course quite aware of this document, but it states very clearly:

[English]

We are now not working to deadlines.

[Translation]

My question is this: How long shall we have to wait before knowing the government's decision on a matter which is obviously quite urgent? What is it that the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs want to know that they do not know already? They know quite well that foreign trade is seriously affected since the minister confirmed this recently. They are also well aware that Canadians do not agree with this policy. What more does the government want to know?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be aware that Mr. Stanfield has already completed a good part of the study he has undertaken. It is his intention to visit with provincial ministers across the country in order to ascertain their point of view and to visit as well the countries of North Africa.

An hon. Member: Will he visit the Middle East?

Miss MacDonald: In that connection, he intends to have his study completed before the end of the year and to report to the government at the beginning of the new year.

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

STRENGTH OF LEGISLATION TO BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. First, I want to welcome the commitment of the government to introduce the international economic boycott legislation early in 1980, especially in view of the government's failure to honour certain other commitments.

I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the hon. member for Ottawa West was stating government policy when he assured us all yesterday that it would not be a mild piece of legislation that was going to be introduced.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had the pleasure of reading the speech made by the hon. member for Ottawa West. I read his speeches regularly and attentively and look forward to having the opportunity to do so this weekend. But this government does not introduce mild pieces of legislation.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, if the government knows that the legislation will not be mild, why does it claim to be waiting for the Stanfield report to make up its mind about what legislation to introduce? If it does know that it intends to introduce effective legislation, why does it not do that now and thus relieve the uncertainty to which my colleague referred?

Mr. Clark: We intend to introduce legislation which, while not mild, is informed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S INTERVENTION IN CASES OF FOREIGN DISSIDENTS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is about the case of the Bulgarian dissident which I raised under Standing Order 43 yesterday and which did not receive unanimous consent from the opposite side of the House.

Would the minister please tell the House why she agreed to intervene in the case of Ida Nudel, a Soviet dissident, yet refused to intervene in the case of a Bulgarian dissident, Dimiter Kolev, whose son is a Canadian citizen?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the hon. member knows, I have intervened in a number of cases. Following his representation and those of others, I did, indeed, contact Bulgarian officials to look into the case of Mr. Kolev. I was advised by Bulgarian officials that Mr. Kolev is in prison because of possession of a false passport which, as the hon. member will know, would also be an action not condoned in this country.

● (1150)

While I would understand the reason for his trying to obtain such a passport, it does not allow any legal ground on which I can proceed to intervene in another country. On humanitarian grounds, however, I would inform the hon. member that we have made representations to the Bulgarian government that all necessary medical attention be given to Mr. Kolev, and also that he be relieved from any physical responsibility.

TRANSPORT

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—REQUEST REPORT OF TASK FORCE BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have questions for the Minister of Transport. In view of the efforts by the private grain trade, the CPR and a number of Conservatives in recent years to destroy the Crowsnest Pass rates, and in view of reports that the hon. member for Lisgar, the chairman of the task force set up by the minister, said yesterday in his report to the minister that he will be requesting that the Crow rates be reviewed, I would ask the minister whether he has received the report from the hon. member for Lisgar; does it contain any such recommendation; will he make the report public; and will he assure the House that if the hon. member for Lisgar did say that, it will not be government policy?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Crowsnest Pass freight rates is a matter on which I have received representations from interested parties in the grain trade, producer organizations and, indeed, members of the NDP. In so far as the report of the task force is concerned, I have not yet received it. I expect it will be in my hands within a couple of weeks or so. It would be my intention to make that report public.

I have not seen the report, so obviously I cannot tell the hon. member whether there is any reference to the statutory rate; but I can assure the hon. member that matter was not within the terms of reference or the task force mandate.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that three successive royal commissions said the Crow rates should be retained, and in view of the fact that the Hall commission—which made the definitive recommendation—recommended that the Crow rates be retained and the nation as a whole pay the railways the difference between the Crow rates and the compensatory rate, does the minister realize that the difference between the Crow rate and the compensatory rate is 13 times the Crow rate and the commercial rate from Wakaw to Vancouver, which would cost farmers another $1.73 a bushel? Will the minister urge the government and his Prime Minister, and quit being obstinate and stubborn like his predecessor, to have—

[Mr. Flis.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN INTEREST AND INFLATION RATES IN CANADA AND U.S.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance dealing with the difference between the real, prime interest rate and the inflation rate. At no time in the last five years has the real interest rate spread between the United States and Canada exceeded 3 per cent. It now exceeds 5 per cent. Will the minister look at this significant difference to see whether interest rates are really too high in this country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. gentleman opposite, that interest rates are too high. I would like to see lower interest rates. The point is that there is no reasonable alternative at this moment. I am quite prepared to look at what the hon. gentleman wants me to look at, the difference in the real interest rates between the U.S. and Canada. That is constantly being reviewed and looked at, in any event. I would ask the hon. gentleman to remember that our inflation rate and the U.S. inflation rate, once you take out the energy factor, is pretty much the same.

NATIONAL REVENUE

POLICY ON DUTY-FREE SHOPS AT BORDER POINTS

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. I understand he is now considering a change in government policy which does now allow duty-free shops for land travellers at border points such as Windsor. Would he tell the House whether he is prepared to announce a decision on that and, if not, when he might be in a position to do so?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, legislation has been on the books to allow that since 1975, and I often wondered why the former government did not do it.

I wish to inform the hon. member, however, that at cabinet yesterday approval was given to the principle of providing duty-free shops at land frontier border points, and in a relatively short period I will be announcing the criteria for applicants. I want to thank the hon. member for giving me this opportunity of announcing new government policy.

PUBLIC WORKS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT SUPPORTS PRINCIPLE OF FRENCH LANGUAGE SCHOOL

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. I would first like to congratulate the Prime Minister's government on the position it has taken with regard to the secondary French language school at Penetanguishene.

I understand that $100,000 has been invested to improve the premises. Does this represent support in principle by the Prime Minister's government for the creation of a separate secondary French language school in Penetanguishene?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what this represents is a decision by the Government of Canada, which we had the opportunity to discuss on an informal basis with the government of Ontario, to make repairs to a public building that was in need of repair.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, would the repairs have been made in the absence of the requirements of the school, because I understand the repairs were made to enable the building to be used for the functions of a school? Therefore, I would again ask the Prime Minister if this is not an endorsement of the existence of such a school.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking me if the government knew what it was doing when it made the repairs. The answer is yes.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER CONSULTED PROVINCES BEFORE MAKING CAMPAIGN PROMISE ON MOVE OF MIDDLE EAST EMBASSY

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. It follows from the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to my colleague from Ottawa-Carleton about the consultation that Mr. Stanfield intends to have with the provinces. Can the Prime Minister tell the House what kind of consultation he had with provincial premiers before he promised during the campaign to move our embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that consultation with the premiers is not a problem for Liberal spokesmen since they have no opportunity to speak with the premiers. However, I believe that if this is a serious matter, if Mr. Stanfield wishes to consult the provinces, I do not have to discuss with him the need for such consultations as the decision is up to him. He can hold such consultation by phone or in person.

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I ask the Prime Minister what kind of consultation he had with the premiers before the election and during the election campaign when he made that promise to move our embassy. I am not interested in knowing how Mr. Stanfield will consult the provinces. I want to know what consultation he had himself before making that promise?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, before the election I could not, like the leader of the hon. member, speak officially as government leader with the premiers. Of course, during the election campaign I was closer to the premiers than the opposition leader because they were pleased to see me. But as to whether or not I made the decision to discuss every item of our electoral platform with each premier, indeed not, because we are a federal party and as such we make our own decisions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Because of some time used in considering points raised during the course of the question period so far, we shall continue the question period for a few minutes. I would think that we could appropriately conclude the question period by recognizing the hon. members for Vancouver-Kingsway, Sherbrooke, Spadina and Kenora-Rainy River.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—ACTION TO MAINTAIN FUNCTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State. May I say that the minister comes to his office with a very good reputation amongst the artistic community. I hope he can keep that reputation and obtain some money from the President of the Treasury Board.

Since we did not beat the Americans in the war of 1812 with words only, what actions, if any, will the minister take to save the dying National Film Board and to stop this terrible situation which was pointed out earlier by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his kind remarks. I can assure him that I am very much aware of the increasing difficulties encountered by the National Film Board, particularly with regard to the very substantial cuts which took place in the budget last year.

I have already had meetings with the commissioner of the Film Board and with my own officials to see if we cannot work out a much more effective, immediate solution to their problems in order that their outstanding work—which was referred to in the motion presented by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody—can be pursued. I think that the Film Board is an outstanding landmark of cultural achievement for this country.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the minister still has not told us whether he is prepared to give them any money, which is the bottom line.

The National Film Board employs Canadian artists and is made up of 100 per cent Canadian content. Yesterday, the minister advocated to the Canadian Broadcasting League a policy of going into pay-television. Will that policy not mean more Americanization and fewer jobs for Canadian artists in the long run?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the whole intention of this government, with respect to the development of this new marketing system of pay-television, is to ensure that there is adequate development of the Canadian production industry. I happen to know, from earlier representations, that the National Film Board itself is very much interested in the possibilities in terms of the board's enhanced activities in this area, which will certainly be one of the matters very much under consideration.

LOTO CANADA

INQUIRY WHEN TERMS OF AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES WILL BE PUBLISHED

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism. Since Loto Canada has been transferred to the provinces and the minister seems to have already completed his tour across the country and met with his provincial counterparts, could he tell this House when he intends to make public the final agreement and the specific terms of that agreement?

[English]

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I expect to bring the final agreement to the House right after the first of the new year.

PETRO-CANADA

DISTRIBUTION OF REVENUE IF CORPORATION SOLD

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Many Canadians believe that the only reason the government is proposing to sell the profitable parts of Petro-Canada is in order to pay for the housing mortgage credit scheme.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Stollery: Could the Prime Minister tell the House if the government has, indeed, conducted studies to see how much revenue would be collected by the government if, in fact, the profitable parts of Petro-Canada were sold?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians believe that if we were to put on sale the hon. member who has just raised a question, we would not yield great profits to the Government of Canada, although we might to the House.

There have not been any of the kinds of inquiries to which the hon. member has referred. I would be very interested in receiving from him the evidence on which he bases his assertion as to the belief of Canadians.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Speaker, I will not raise a question of privilege at this time, because I know that they cannot start until after the question period is finished. I think that the kind of insulting answer which the Prime Minister has just given to me is unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Stollery: I would like to ask the hon. gentleman: if, in fact, this is true—and I can assure him that a great number of Canadians believe it is—would the Prime Minister consult with his Minister of Finance, in view of the fact that we now have Shylock interest rates in this country, in view of the fact that the housing tax credit is only applicable to a small number of Canadians, and consider abandoning his proposal to sell the profitable parts of Petro-Canada and his proposal for an unequal tax program and, instead, give a tax credit or tax cut to all Canadians because of the high interest rates in this country?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to answer, in what I thought was a humorous way, what I thought was a humorous question. Obviously, my humour was not interpreted humorously by the hon. member.

Mr. MacEachen: Non-existent.

Mr. Clark: I want to assure him that I intended no insult. The opposition House leader, who is an expert on these matters, tells me that the humour was non-existent.

Mr. MacEachen: That's right.

Mr. Clark: Relative to the particular question put forward by the hon. member, no, I do not intend to withdraw the tax credit proposal. We will be making an announcement in due course—in two or three weeks, I would hope—in relation to the government's decision in response to the task force on Petro-Canada. We intend to review that report very seriously. I would genuinely hope that all members of Parliament who are interested in bringing the institutions of government closer to the people of Canada, and who are interested in giving Canadian citizens a broader opportunity to play a direct role in the country, will also consider the task force report.

ENERGY

REPORTED POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF EAST COAST EXPLORATION BY MOBIL OIL

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns a statement that is alleged to have been made by the president of Mobil, one of the oil companies exploring off the east coast, to the effect that he was thinking of withdrawing his company's activities there.

Has the minister been in touch with the president of Mobil, or has Mobil been in touch with the minister, to ascertain what the difficulties are and whether they are thinking of withdrawing from this exploration?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I have only this week had discussions with representatives of Mobil, and that particular intention was not drawn to my attention. I am not aware of any intention on the part of Mobil to withdraw its explorations from offshore-Newfoundland. If the hon. member has any information in his possession to that effect, I would be glad to receive it.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in that case, I would suggest that the minister might want to go back to Mobil and ask them if there are any questions, dealing particularly with the situation which they now face in terms of the jurisdictional problem.

The difficulty here is that there is jurisdictional ambiguity between now, when the jurisdiction is under the authority of the Government of Canada, and potentially when it will come under the government of Newfoundland. There is a problem here, as I understand it, in terms of "grandfathering" in the obligation which Mobil has taken with respect to the Government of Canada.

Would the minister go back both to Mobil and the government of Newfoundland to ascertain if there are any jurisdictional problems, and with a view to assuring that these ambiguities will be cleared up as swiftly as possible?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, questions relating to regulatory matters and offshore drilling in Newfoundland were discussed between myself and the representatives of Mobil. According to my recollection, they did not indicate that there were any great problems in that regard.

Concerning our relationship with the province of Newfoundland, we intend to carry on in co-ordinating with them the matter of regulatory authorities and the terms of federal and provincial jurisdiction. I am sure that we will be able to carry on in a proper spirit, as we have in the past, with respect to these matters respecting the provinces of Atlantic Canada. Obviously, there will be problems in terms of jurisdiction, but these are matters which can be resolved between us in the spirit of co-ordination and co-operation to which this government is dedicated.

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: I have a notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

PRIVILEGE

MR. BERGER—DENIAL OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, some questions were raised in this House earlier this week concerning a government lease for a building at 219 Laurier owned by a company that belongs to my family. Some hon. members called for an investigation so that "the people of Canada may be assured it was not in fact political patronage".

I should like to inform this House that our dealings and my involvement in them prior to any thought of becoming a candidate were entirely proper. At the time I became a candidate in March I resigned as an officer and director of this company—of our companies, I should say—and had no further dealings whatsoever with respect to this matter.

I think, if I may say so, that it is outrageous that assertions or insinuations were made in this House and in newspapers without any attempt whatsoever to obtain the facts. I find that I and, more important to me, my father who has led a life of distinguished service to the people of Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec and Canada, have had aspersions cast upon us for no reason. I must say that for a young man entering politics it is not encouraging to be subjected to slurs of this nature. I would wonder how responsible people are going to be attracted to government if they are subjected to treatment of this kind. Do we expect people to live in a vacuum, to have no interests anywhere?

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Nielsen) has indicated that the matter is currently under inquiry. I should like to say to this House that I welcome this inquiry and indeed I invite him to make his findings public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have received a notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery).

MR. STOLLERY—NOTICE OF POSSIBLE QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, at this time I should like to give notice that when I have had the opportunity to look through Hansard and examine the reply of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to me today, in which I believe he used unparliamentary language, I should like to reserve my right to bring to you that question at the first available opportunity, presumably on Monday next.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on that request to be given the opportunity to consider a question of privilege, let me simply indicate in advance of any evidence that may be adduced or any finding to which you may come that if I engaged in language that was not parliamentary or indeed if I said something that caused undue offence to the hon. member, I withdraw those remarks without any qualification and express my apology to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that the House, as always, accepts the unqualified and generous withdrawal of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) as exemplary under any circumstances. Certainly it happily lays to rest any possibility of any such tension or grievance in respect of the language used today. I am sure the House welcomes the action of the right hon. Prime Minister.

The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) on a question of privilege.

MR. ATKEY—REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF REMARK OF HON. MEMBER FOR SPADINA

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I very much regret rising on this question of privilege but before the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) leaves the House, I want to raise a matter of privilege which I think is an offence to my privilege and that of all members of this House.

The hon. member for Spadina made a reference to "Shylock interest rates". That, Mr. Speaker, in my submission, is an anti-semitic remark. It offends my sensitivies and my privileges. It is a term which has been adjudged in history, in literature and in contemporary terms an improper remark.

In keeping with the spirit of withdrawal by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), I think the hon. member for Spadina might seriously consider the implications of his remark and a withdrawal may well be in order.

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, certainly in the spirit of co-operation I would withdraw the word "Shylock" if it would give offence to any people and substitute the words "loan shark". I hope that will satisfy the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). "Loan shark" should go into the spot in Hansard and "Shylock" taken out, and I apologize if I offended.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not know if this kind of excessive generosity is going to continue for very long but it certainly suits me.

REQUEST THAT POSSESSION OF MARIJUANA BE DECRIMINALIZED—EXPLANATION OF ANSWER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I answered a question put to me by the hon. member for Jonquière (Mr. Marceau). He asked whether the government was considering measures on marijuana and the ombudsman. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear his question on the ombudsman and my answer addressed only his question on marijuana. Immediately after question period I explained my error to my colleague the hon. member for Jonquière, but I would like today to indicate to the House that the government has no intention at this point to introduce legislation on the ombudsman in the near future.

RAILWAYS

CONTINUATION OF RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

Hon. John M. Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I appreciate the very kind words of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). I should also say that I appreciated the representations that came from him and from the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner) as well as the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR FULL REPORTING OF CHANGES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-485, to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1979-80

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY FOR 1979-80

The House resumed from Thursday October 25, 1979, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-10, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1979-80, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, as a new member, and in view of the tremendous responsibility we have in this House to consider supplemental supply in the order of $7 billion, some 7.5 per cent of the total Canadian supply, it is important in my view to consider seriously the situation before passing such legislation. At this point, after reading the legislation and of course without any other information than that provided by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), I feel this legislation is in a way a blank check for this government.

Since it is my responsibility, Mr. Speaker, to give my constituents an account of this government's expenses and obviously, through Parliament, to take part in the discussion of those expenses, I would like to remind the House that we now reportedly have a $12 billion or $13 billion deficit, but with this government in power for six months, I cannot take without discussion that additional $7 billion policy. I must say that this government has expressed its intention to give up some income sources like Loto Canada, Petro-Canada and other profit making corporations such as Canadair, and I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether getting rid of those companies, which bring profits to this country, will help reduce our supplementary estimates. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, with unemployment being what it is today—and I am referring here to an article by Mr. John McCallum, published in the chartered accountants' magazine, which states that the unemployment problem is as serious today as it was in the 1930s.

Mr. Speaker, in the 1930s—of course, it will be obvious that my knowledge of those economically sad days is derived from what I read and heard from my parents—but I must say that, today, when we are asked to pass supplementary estimates of some $7 billion, when government services are being cut right and left, when we are not told what those extra $7 billion will be used for, I can only ask for more explanations, and though I am not on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs I feel that I should, just the same, look into the matter very closely because my constituents are the ones who will foot the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the present government has had 16 years to reflect on the direction to be given our economy. Last year, the previous government managed efficiently and without drastic cuts in the public service to reduce expenditures by some $2 billion. That, to my mind, is good management. In my past experience as chairman of a school board, I had to manage a $30 million budget.

On the other hand, I think that the principles applying to a local government are exactly the same for the federal government, and it seems to me that, because the deficit is likely to be increased by their tergiversations about Petro-Canada and their promise to give Loto Canada back to the provinces, we are taking wrong decisions which will only add to the difficulties and the recession in Canada. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, exactly what does the Minister of Finance intend to do. The private sector is supposed to co-operate closely with this government. What measure does this government propose to lower this $7 billion figure, since it is a well known fact that a healthy economy would yield additional funds to the government and allow it to lower the deficit? According to the Toronto-Dominion Bank report, the most recent rises in interest rates and especially the payment of a bonus on Canada Savings Bonds will accelerate the debt service which will tower above the 19 per cent rise indicated in the budget. So as a concerned citizen and as the representative of a riding which is home to low income people, I think that it is my duty to remind this government that it is governing in the interest of all Canadians and that every dollar and every cent that is spent by the government must be spent for useful purposes.

I think that some cuts could be made if the present government, after six months of pondering over and analysing previous budgets, could some day direct its policy in keeping with its electoral promises. I still think that the former government made a praiseworthy effort and if the present government which succeeded the Liberals would analyse these programs one by one, it would then be in a position to see to what extent spending cuts could best be achieved.

I am referring, Mr. Speaker, to the new steps taken by this government to conduct public affairs. I do not know as of yet what is the positive impact of these changes but I must say that I do not see what benefits will be derived by voting an additional $7 billion, or at least they do not transpire from the Minister of Finance's remarks. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Finance to reconsider the amount and to bring his policy in line with his election promises to restrict government spending to $51.1 billion, since most optimistic economists are now predicting that this government will have to increase its expenditures by $2 billion or $3 billion.

Of course, I note also, Mr. Speaker, the increase in interest rate which was announced by the Bank of Canada, and I think that such a rate is definitely unfair to the taxpayers of Mercier. We must not let consumers foot the bill for an irresponsible government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Rosemont is on his feet, but another member was already standing behind him. So, I think I will recognize him. The hon. member for Comox-Powell River.

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate concerning Bill C-10. My comments will be fairly brief this afternoon, but I do wish to express my concern about the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) within this bill in attempting to obtain a blank cheque for $7 billion from the people of Canada.

I reflect back to things said during the election, and to a commitment made by the Conservative government. As its members travelled from one end of this country to the other, they complained about the high interest rates encouraged by the previous government. Bitter complaints were made about the deficits run up, what these things were doing to small businesses, how this country had a lack of direction and how throughout the country people lacked confidence in the government.

I would suggest today that these things apply in spades, that as typified by the $7 billion attempt to borrow, we now have the highest interest rates this country has ever seen. These high interest rates, instead of preventing inflation, will be a main factor in the rise of inflation in Canada. These interest rates could in all probability, in an attempt to cure, bring about a far worse disease, the recession that everyone predicts and expects as a result of them. The impact of this borrowing and its complications in the country will be felt in every industry in Canada. I am very concerned about this kind of interest rate and the borrowing that is advocated. It will cause a very serious situation.

The government opposite has often professed to be the friend of small business. I have a very large number of small businesses in my riding, a number of large industries, single industries in the community. When they are cut back, the only opportunity for employment and economic well-being is the base of small business that we have.

The present government's economic policy, reflected by the borrowing bill and a number of other gestures, particularly their move to drive up energy costs, will be felt directly in my riding. Small business must be able to transport its goods. Anything produced there has to be transported to market. The price of the cost of goods in my riding will be driven up, as well as competitiveness, as a result of driving up the price of energy.

I have received numerous letters, phone calls and items of concern from small businessmen in my riding who feel that their friends in government have abandoned them completely. I am very serious about this. Many of these businesses are not large, employing only five, six or seven people. In order to keep an inventory over the winter, they have to borrow. The bank on a daily basis is switching interest rates, driving them up. In some cases the banks are concerned about whether, with the interest rate and economic confidence that exists, some of these businesses can continue. In fact, it is calling in loans. This is not based on the viability of businesses in my riding but on a lack of confidence in the moves of this government.

Energy costs and interest rates are causing havoc. I believe the term Mr. Bullock of the Federation of Independent Businessmen mentioned the other day was that it was creating a horror show for small businessmen. This is typified in my riding. It will be interesting to see how they react at the time of the next election to the kind of confidence the Tory government has inspired.

Apart from interest rates and their effect on small businesses as well as the energy problem, the government is requesting a $7 billion blank cheque. That is interesting in view of their claims during the election campaign. Corporate tax deferrals far exceed this $7 billion and future sums the government will have to borrow. In spite of bank profits, they continue to increase interest rates. The banks have been given a licence to shovel money. There is profiteering. There is no attempt to rectify the situation and place fair taxation upon the profits of these banks. We are literally giving away money that properly belongs to the people of Canada and which would remove the necessity of borrowing this money.

The same kind of tax policies prevail with regard to the oil companies. Reports of windfall profits have recently been expressed in the paper with regard to multinational corporations. We have forfeited our obligations to tax these companies which are earning enormous amounts of money. Fair taxation of these companies would remove the necessity to continue borrowing sums such as the $7 billion the Minister of Finance is currently after.

The banks, oil companies and large corporations in this country have been allowed to get away with a tremendous avoidance of taxation. However, knuckle busters from the Department of National Revenue have been visiting households in my riding, people trying to raise children between jobs, and attempts are being made to impose a 90 to 100 per cent garnishee on their incomes.

I recently heard of a family on a dairy farm in my riding with a modest income who have been trying to pay back at a very reasonable amount per month. National revenue officials visited them and stated they would be required to pay 90 per cent of their income. With our tax policies, we do not mind letting off the corporations. However, a taxpayer trying to meet his obligations and look after his family is visited by the equivalent of the Mafia.

This same gang visited a business in my riding which employs 100 people, a major industry in a small coastal community in Comox-Powell River. They decided it was time to collect the overdue tax. They went to the business and said they would garnishee the business accounts. The bank justifiably became panicky and decided to close down the company. One hundred jobs were placed on the line because of the kind of tax policies this government is adopting. They were quite prepared to get rid of a small business even though it would have a terrible impact on the surrounding community. If the tax policies of this government or the previous government were in any way equitable, we would not be requiring moves against small businesses and individuals in rural Canada that can be compared to moves the Mafia would make.

I wish to talk about a few other matters I have heard raised in this House. However, I would be repeating many of the arguments put forward more articulately by other members. These facts are well known to members opposite. They are aware of it and it would certainly be repetitive.

I have listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Finance, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) and other individuals responsible for this government and its policies. They have been asked whether they were concerned about rising inflation and, if so, would they provide subsidies on bread and milk. The answer was "absolutely not". When asked about the prospect of providing a fair prices review board to control some of the outrageous price increases, the Prime Minister either does not answer or is not in favour of that. He has continuously dodged the question of what they are going to do about interest rates. They keep trying to foist off that problem on the previous government, while at the same time implementing the same procedures of that government. Their remarks are coupled with phrases such as "a lack of sense of direction in this country" and "a lack of confidence". I suggest when they again visit the people to seek a mandate, something they do not now have, that that mandate will not be forthcoming.

An hon. Member: Blame it on the gang of four.

Mr. Skelly: The gang of four are like saviours compared to this group. We are being asked to approve the borrowing of this money even though we have no idea of how these funds will be applied. I see the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKinnon) in the chamber. The other day I asked him a question about search and rescue. A great many people have died in my riding and along the coast of British Columbia as a result of a lack of resources to rescue them. Before I vote for any such proposal as this I should like to know whether there is any intention of going ahead with something like a national search and rescue plan. I understand many of its aspects have been cut because the government refuses to spend money on it.

● (1240)

I am curious as to where this $7 billion is going. I understand that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Howie) visited representatives of a number of shipping companies in Canada and put forward a proposal to repatriate foreign flag ships owned by Canadian companies, and that in the process they were going to forfeit some income tax. Before we spend any money in that direction, give away more of our taxes to acquire things like this, I, personally, would like the government to lay before the House a policy on the direction it intends to take the country in regard to merchant shipping. There is no indication of what we are going to do.

According to the throne speech, we are apparently going to relax some of our taxing power in order to repatriate foreign flag ships, but what we need before we attempt to do any of that is a statement in this House giving some policy direction on how we are going to establish merchant shipping in this country, what we are going to do about maintaining shipping in the Arctic and developing ports. Before we go giving any further tax amounts away and requiring that we have to ask again, after this $7 billion, for another $7 billion, I would like to know where we are going in that regard.

I should like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me this opportunity to put forward some of my concerns about this borrowing bill and the economy in the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to take part for the first time in a debate on a bill presented by a government minister while I sit on the opposition benches. However, it is less of a privilege than it should be on a measure such as Bill C-10 which amounts in fact to giving the government a $7 billion blank cheque. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if you have ever tried to imagine what the sum of $7 billion represents. I doubt if Canadians can imagine it either. It is so huge, so extravagant a figure that it remains an abstraction. That figure 7 followed by nine zeros is something absolutely incredible and I am convinced that neither you nor I, Mr. Speaker, will ever have it in our pockets. In fact, if I had it, I do not think I would be in the House this morning.

In any event, we are expected now to give this amount of $7 billion to the Minister of Finance to do God knows what, since we have not yet seen the colour of the famous budget he has announced high and low and we do not know when we are going to get it.

This $7 billion authority therefore is the money that this House is going to give to the government, as it can rightfully do, to finance its operations. What operations? I wonder, Mr. Speaker, especially when I consider this new Progressive Conservative government which has made such great promises and painted such brilliant and bright tomorrows to the Canadian public that all hon. members, without fear of making mistakes or being confused by the intricacies of supplementary estimates, should decide, after serious examination, to grant the government the money it needs to finance its priorities.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, after having seen to this date the performance of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) in and outside this House, whether we should thus so easily give him that confidence. During the past three weeks, we have witnessed the sad sight of a government which not only is in deep waters as far as budgetary matters are concerned but also does not know where it is going. We have had the most glaring example when the Minister of Finance refused to appear before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to tell the Canadian people about his objectives, those new and famous objectives which the Progressive Conservative government once more promised the Canadian people in the last general election would put the country back on the right track and turn the wheels of our economy. He refused to appear, and had Governor Bouey, a qualified official of course whose job is to advise the government and the Minister of Finance, stick his neck out to have it chopped. Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned about Governor Bouey, he is an economist and a distinguished finance man who I am sure is doing his utmost to get us out of this mess. However, Mr. Speaker, it was not governor Bouey whom we wanted to see before the committee on finance so much as the Minister of Finance so that he could explain these new criteria or parameters which will guide the budgetary policy of this government for the duration of its mandate, which I must say, had a very bad start.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the Speech from the Throne contained all sorts of promises to the effect that the government would introduce a whole set of measures to help our legislative body, the House of Commons and Senate, to make more enlightened judgments about government expenditures. We had been promised a whole set of measures! We had been promised the famous sunset laws through which we could re-evaluate government programs every ten years and go back to the basics regularly and periodically and decide whether these numerous programs, budgets, votes and credits were justified or not. We had been promised a revamping of the estimates format, and we had hoped that the supplementary estimates could have been submitted in the same format.

Finally, we had been promised three-year estimates of government expenditures and projects so that this House could have a more comprehensive view of such estimates and be in a better position to judge the government's general orientation. We had been promised that the budgetary envelopes would make it easier to allocate the budgets required for the operation of the administrative machine for each major sector of government business.

We have had many promises! But where are those documents, those bills, those mechanisms which were supposed to make us go back to the basics and allow us to make enlightened judgments? Mr. Speaker, in Bill C-10 we have the same formula of a blank cheque for $7 billion and we are asked to decide out of thin air once again, because, as I said earlier, $7 billion is such a large and incredible amount that no one can imagine what it really means in dollars and cents. Once again, we are presented with a bill which will allow the Minister of Finance to decide according to his own criteria and priorities, that is the government's and not those of the House of Commons, what the government will do until a budget is rendered. And this budget, what will it include, when, why, and under which format will it be presented to the House?

Mr. Speaker, I am greatly disappointed with the fact that this renewal which we had been promised with such clamour is unfortunately so very long in coming.

I am one of those parliamentarians who have suffered in the past from the complexity of the estimates submitted to us in committee and from the difficulty in obtaining the required information. No particular government is to blame. That was the way things were, and the tradition being what it is in this august assembly, it is often quite difficult to keep in mind what is essential, the purpose or the main reason for our presence in this House, namely to give the government the financial means to achieve its aims.

I suffered from that, Mr. Speaker, and I viewed of course the government's promises as a formula to be discussed, a technical means, a mechanism that would enable us to do our job better. I am disappointed because the new government which promised the Canadian people to make a clean sweep of all those practices, all those old mechanisms and all that antiquated budgetary machinery, is still operating like all the others and is content with obsolete procedures without putting before us, before you, Mr. Speaker, the new proposals they were flaunting so much during the election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, in all probability the Minister of Finance will most certainly get that borrowing authority of $7 billion. There is no other alternative in any case. There is nothing we can do because the government must keep on operating. But having said that, let the government put forward what they promised, let it establish its credibility. Once again, the performance of the Minister of Finance to date has not been good enough to make us feel confident about putting such large amounts in the hands of this surging, sailing government, as I said earlier—

Mr. Breau: Winding.

Mr. Lachance: Winding, indeed, my colleague from Gloucester said the word I was looking for. Winding, that is the proper word for this kind of devious government that comes up with amounts, that changes its direction, that comes up from one day to the next with inconsistencies and particularly that refuses to meet with the elected representatives of the people in a committee of the House to discuss specifically with the Canadian public and before them its general orientation, the great changes it had proposed. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no alternative, we shall have to give them $7 billion, but I urge the government, particularly the Minister of Finance, to spend wisely this money that the House of Commons is going to give him to keep the government machinery in operation. I urge him to be accountable for that amount he will receive, more accountable than with the kind of devious and evasive answers he gives constantly in the House to the legitimate questions of the opposition parties, whether it is my party, the Liberal party or the NDP. He should give us answers, Mr. Speaker, instead of saying all the time that it is Tom, Dick and Harry's fault, that it is the fault of the previous government. How long is he going to play the same record, Mr. Speaker? One year, two, three or four years? I feel he is going to play the same record until the Canadian people are tired of the attitude of the government, Mr. Speaker.

• (1250)

[English]

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for giving me an opportunity—

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want the record to show that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) was not here to move his motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I refer the hon. member to another citation in Beauchesne which says that it is not permissible for hon. members to raise points of order to signify to the House the presence or absence of members.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Stollery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to make a contribution to this very significant debate on borrowing authority. I think it is worth noting that one of the reasons we are discussing at some length the ability of the government to arrange credit of $7 billion is that none of us has any idea what kind of budget the government will be bringing to Parliament. We are having pretty much of a replay of the debate which took place a year ago. I think any taxpaying citizen should look through the House of Commons debates for Tuesday, October 24, 1978 and read the speech by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), who was then just the hon. member for St. John's West.

I do not think we should make too much of the fact that the government is floating without any real sense of direction. We cannot comment too much on that until we see a budget, but we can comment on the way the then hon. member for St. John's West went on with regard to this same bill. What day is it today?

Mr. Knowles: October 26.

Mr. Stollery: On October 26 of this year we have an exact reversal of speeches which were made last year on October 24. At that time the present Minister of Finance was giving a grandiose performance with regard to the collecting of taxes from one John C. Doyle. I gather there has been some settlement of this matter, but as I read through the minister's remarks I wondered whether now that he is Minister of Finance he has actually pursued the matter about which he was so accusative of various governments a year ago. We all know the Minister of Finance is a very colourful and entertaining member of the House of Commons. He has had to bear some rather grim burdens for the last little while, which he blames on everyone but himself.

If there is one characteristic of this government about which the public is very aware, it is that for five and a half months we have been treated to a bag of clichés about strengthening Parliament, but we are now seeing the opposite. We are seeing that in many ways. We could read Hansard, specifically the remarks made by the Minister of Finance when he was first elected to the House. I am sure that what we are seeing now will be going on for months. On March 9, 1978 the present Minister of Finance was talking about exchange rates, and he asked the then minister of finance the following question:

Is the Minister of Finance now stating the government of Canada has no responsibility for the monetary policy and that only the governor of the Bank of Canada has that responsibility, and does he agree with the governor of the Bank of Canada in his statement yesterday—

My goodness, for years Hansard has been filled with such remarks! We could change the names and reverse the comments, but the questions would be the same.

Mr. Rae: That is exactly what we have been saying for the past 30 years.

Mr. Stollery: Members of the New Democratic Party, of course, have other solutions, but we never hear what they are. We hear about things like the West German economy. In West Germany, of course, there are wage and price controls, and that is one of the reasons the West Germans have a low rate of inflation, but the New Democratic Party certainly is not propounding wage and price controls in Canada.

Mr. Rae: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Stollery: There are examples and more examples of questions, comments and debate in which positions have been reversed.

The inconsistent, confused and vague group of individuals who make up the Government of Canada were elected on May 22 because they told the people of Canada that they had new ideas. Where are they?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

• (1400)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be noted that the governing party does not have very many members in the House this afternoon; I see only one cabinet minister. If this is an indication of what we can expect from this government, they should take notice that as the official opposition we on this side will continually make the following point to the Canadian public. After all the talk about parliamentary democracy, and after all the rather meaningless and inane comments by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) about returning power to the House of Commons, we find on this parliamentary day only one minister of the Crown present in the House.

I should like to continue the remarks I was making just before the luncheon break about the way this government, the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance, have continually told us for the last two weeks that all of the problems of Canada were created by the previous government, yet at the same time this government continues those policies of which it says the previous government was guilty. I believe that is one reason the Canadian public is disenchanted with this government that was elected on May 22 with a mandate to develop some new ideas. The Canadian public has a right to expect some clear and new directions from this government rather than this repetition of the platitudes and banal comments of the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. Presumably that is why the people of Canada gave that party a mandate on May 22. I suggest this is a very real criticism of that group.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stollery: I hear a word from the "gas works" in the back. If they will be quiet I will continue my remarks.

One can look at Hansard and find the words of the Minister of Finance when presenting a motion under Standing Order 43 on December 8, 1977 regarding the manufacturing sector and an industrial strategy. He made accusations against the government in 1977 in a Standing Order 43 motion of the kind often moved by the present Minister of Finance when he was just the hon. member for St. John's West. That was before he rose to these spectacular heights in high finance, from whence I gather he was chased in Newfoundland. In fact, he remarked last year that in Newfoundland he was known as public enemy number one. In the rest of Canada he is now becoming known as public enemy number two.

We appreciate that minister's sense of humour, but the people in my urban constituency cannot find any humour in the kind of interest rates that are supported by the Minister of Finance, in direct contradiction to anything he said before becoming the Minister of Finance. This government has shown a total lack of new direction, the kind of direction the people expected from the new minister.

We now have a situation where the government and this minister decide, on the one hand, to sell the profitable parts of government enterprise, retain the unprofitable parts, while on the other continue with this increasingly absurd housing tax credit scheme. That is a scheme that is meaningless as far as any kind of incentive to the housing industry is concerned, particularly when interest rates keep going through the roof. I cannot believe that even the Minister of Finance, with his very great wit, can explain away the high interest rates, or explain the importance of this tax credit scheme which will benefit a relatively small group of Canadians. It certainly will not benefit the people in my constituency, who are mostly tenants, and others who have already paid for their homes. Those who will benefit will only benefit to a small degree from this tax break. Surely the minister will reconsider this hair-brained scheme.

The minister is proposing to give a $2.5 billion or $3 billion tax break to one group of people and is totally ignoring those who have to pay these loan shark interest rates that his government supports. No one seems to be clear yet exactly how much this will cost. I have to be careful to use the right word as I certainly would not want to provoke a response, but I have heard it mentioned that the loan sharks in Canada are sending a delegation to the Minister of Finance because of unfair competition by the federal government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Stollery.]

Mr. Stollery: One just does not know what to say when a government promotes this kind of mindless exercise. When we ask members of the government about this scheme, we get the same answers we heard from the previous government. I am sure that members on this side—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Crosbie: Where were you when the last government was here?

Mr. Stollery: I was in the last government caucus. In fact, at one time I was the chairman of that caucus.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stollery: I am fully aware of what must be going on in this government's caucus meetings on Wednesday. None of us on this side would ever suggest there were no vigorous discussions in our caucus meetings when we were the government. There were things on which all our members did not agree. We had vigorous discussions and debates. We had double doors on the caucus room, as does the present government, to stop the sounds of our discussions from being heard outside. It would be silly to suggest that the members of a government party like the one in power that endorses actions that produce the consequences that have followed the actions of this government would support those actions unanimously. I wonder whether any of the members of this government party will have the courage to tell us what they really think. Those hon. members actually campaigned during the election as being in favour of lower interest rates.

Mr. Pepin: Some of them must remember their speeches.

Mr. Stollery: As the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin) says, some of those members must remember the words of their election speeches. We on this side of the House will undertake to review some of the election speeches made by members of the government party on the opposite side, especially those of the men and women who are now ministers.

I think the feelings of many Canadians have been summed up in a letter I had the opportunity of reading when I was in my office during the luncheon break. It was written by a constituent I have not met and was directed to the Prime Minister. This letter says what probably millions of Canadians are thinking. Let me read part of it:

Dear Mr. Clark;

As the new party in power, I was willing to accept and co-operate with different ideas—in other words, give you a chance to prove yourself. As a matter of fact, I welcomed the opportunity for a clean sweep of cobwebs from the last party, a lessening of the deadwood in the top-heavy bureaucratic machine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

Mr. Stollery: Paragraph 2 reads:

> Now I am disillusioned beyond belief with your latest proposals concerning the so-called return of public corporations to private enterprise. PetroCan was something I had hoped you would reconsider, merely a rash electoral promise like the moving of the Israeli embassy. Our future energy supply is too important an issue to leave with short-term opportunists. Consider the way Exxon delegated our country to have lesser priority for its oil than the U.S.A. We need champions, not uncontrollable multinationals.
> Furthermore, you propose to turn over the invaluable and controversial nuclear power industry, Eldorado, to private enterprise. Have you not learned anything from Three Mile Island in the U.S.A.? Must we make all their mistakes?
> To add insult to injury, you declare this to be the "deadwood" civil servants you promised to clear out. It is more likely that you are leaving the parasistes in government and clearing out those who are actually paying their own way.

So here we are, discussing a bill that this government has brought to Parliament requesting the authority to borrow $7 billion, a bill which we all know we will have to approve. We will have to do that without hearing anything from the government on its energy policy, its international trade policy—other than failure after failure—or its policy on industrial strategy, which was the subject of one comment by the Minister of Finance when he was in opposition. We have not heard a word about industrial strategy.

It is hard to believe that a government which is raising interest rates to all-time historic highs has not given this House any indication of its position vis-à-vis the referendum campaign of next year and has been so vague regarding anything concerning substantive provincial-federal issues. In fact, their only response has been to give in to the provinces. The two best examples are the offshore resources issue and the Loto Canada issue.

When one looks at the history of the Canadian dollar, one can see that it started to drop following the referendum in 1976. In September, October and November of 1976 the value of the Canadian dollar in relation to the U.S. dollar was at par or $1.01. Following the Quebec election and the victory by the PQ, the value of our dollar in relation to the U.S. dollar was 98 cents by December, and then it went down to 97 cents. By March, 1977 it had dropped to 95 cents. In April, May and June it was 95 cents and then 94 cents.

The minister's reasoning for following the United States in maintaining these very high rates of interest is that he has to protect the Canadian dollar, but in all the comments we have heard from the government, we have not heard any comments of any substance about what the government is actually going to do about improving national government and getting away from increasing provincialism in Canada. This provincialism is having an economic consequence in that it is affecting very clearly the value of our currency, and the value of our currency is apparently a significant factor in Canada's achieving the highest interest rates in its history.

How can we possibly continue without having a serious discussion about just what we are doing with national economic policy and with this trend to provincialism in Canada, so as to protect our currency and create a climate in which the Minister of Finance does not have blindly to follow the United States in the way in which he once said he would never do.

Mr. Crosbie: I never said that. You can't find anywhere where I ever said that.

Mr. Stollery: The minister has said that I cannot find anywhere where he actually said that. One of the charming characteristics of the minister is that he talks a lot when he makes these speeches.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, but I never said that.

Mr. Stollery: He probably talks more, if one were to look through the index of Hansard, than any other member in the entire House of Commons, and he says a great deal of things.

Mr. Crosbie: You point it out. Where is it?

Mr. Stollery: The minister has said a great deal of things, and it would take more volumes of Hansard than I have here today to find those comments; but I will be doing so, and I am sure that other members will do so before this debate is over.

I would like to switch for a moment to trade. As far as I understand it, we have "Stanfield the Magnificent" making his way from souk to souk.

Mr. Crosbie: He is in the souk.

Mr. Pepin: From tent to tent.

Mr. Lachance: From tea to tea.

Mr. Stollery: I have a vision, Mr. Speaker, of the former member for Halifax, "Stanfield the Magnificent", going from Levantine capital to Arabian souk. They have an expression in the Middle East, which is a very interesting and complex area, as we all know, and as the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) found out to his dismay, which is, "the word is around the souks". The word that the former leader of the opposition in Canada is "around the souks" is out. As a result, I guess one could call him "Hadji Bob". Has "Hadji Bob" been to Baghdad yet, because if he has it is our understanding that he had his pockets picked by the "thief of Baghdad".

We in Canada were not even allowed to bid on a $4 million or $5 million airport project.

Mr. Breau: Billion.

Mr. Stollery: Four billion bucks down the drain! We have our intrepid traveller making his way from capital to capital, and the sum and substance of it all is nothing, zero. It is also well known that we may even lose the largest project that we have ever managed to promote with Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Wilson: Even Mirabel wasn't that big.

Mr. Stollery: The largest project that we have ever managed to promote with Saudi Arabia is in danger, and who knows how many thousands of Canadian jobs are endangered along with it? I think that the story should be told to this Parliament before this government comes to us for borrowing authority, before in fact this government comes to us with a budget, as to just what are the results of these negotiations with the various capitals of North Africa and the Middle East. If "Hadji Bob" is actually having some success, we would like to hear about it, because so far all we hear about is project after project being lost.

One is hard put to give names to this group of characters across the way, but last night I spent some time looking through my copy of "Pickwick Papers". I remember that the former member for Hillsborough, who is now in the Senate, was "Mr. Pickwick" of the House of Commons. Dickens certainly had a better way with names than I have but I wonder if we could put some of these names to some of the ministers we have here. For example, who would "Old Lobbs" be or the "Shepherd"? I guess the Shepherd would be the present President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens). He would be the Shepherd, the "Rev. Sinc Stevens (the Shepherd)". Sitting two doors away from Old Lobbs, the Minister of Finance, is "Angelo Cyrus Bantam, Esq". That could only be our present Prime Minister. You can just see it, Angelo Cyrus Bantam, Esq. trying his best, but his best just is not good enough. Who is "Gabriel Grub"? I will save that for another afternoon. All of these visions come to mind, I suppose brought on by the picture of "Hadji Bob" on a trade mission making his way around the souks.

Because trade and energy are so intimately connected, we cannot leave this subject because we are told the reason we have no budget is that we have been unable to get an agreement with the provincial ministers on price increases for oil in Canada. That again is connected by the fact that we have not really heard from the government yet just what their approach is on federal-provincial relations, other than to just give in to the provinces. It appears to us that what we are doing right now is giving in to the province of Alberta in the area of world oil prices.

I think Canadians are confused about world energy prices because of their effect on the ability of the government to bring in a budget. This is really quite remarkable. What Canadians can understand and what the government does not seem to appreciate is that world prices have continually changed over the last eight years. They have nothing whatsoever to do with the production of a barrel of oil. World oil prices are purely a political decision made by countries who have oil. It costs about 20, 21 or 22 cents to produce one barrel of oil. It is less than a quarter. One barrel is 35 Imperial gallons of Arabian light crude. That barrel of Arabian light crude sold for about $1.80 in 1972, and it has been steadily moving upward, from $13.33 in January, 1979, to $14.00 in April, and now $18.00. I think it has gone up again, but as the price base is Arabian light crude, sometimes the numbers that one hears are not relative to the actual world price.

It is my view that Canadians would like to know from this government—and it is something that they have been unable to find out—just how much they will be paying for heating oil this winter and how much of what they will be paying for heating oil is a completely phony political price that has nothing to do with the production of heating oil.

For about five years we were told by those who are experts that it cost about $8 or $9 a barrel to extract oil from the tar sands. That was the cost of extraction. They did not want to be too specific because there was an enormous capital investment going on. It was about $9 a barrel, I remember that very well. Why must the Canadian taxpayer, the consumer, when he buys a gallon of gas or pays for heating oil have to pay what is a totally political price that has no relationship whatsoever to the cost of the production of that petroleum product? When will we get more specific information on the cost of heating oil?

If there are many people who believe that a lot of jiggery-pokery is going on, it is probably not in the gas you buy for your car so much, because everybody buys gas all the time. Every time you fill up your gas tank the pump registers what you are paying for a gallon of gas. But what you do not recall and have difficulty remembering is what you paid last year for your heating bill. Usually people pay their bills once a month or once a season. Before we have any decisions or agreements by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), I believe strongly that there should be a hard look taken at just what is going on in the heating oil department. We should not be diverted by the gasoline question. Of the two important subjects, surely heating oil would have to come first.

The Minister of Finance, charming man that he is, before he comes to us wanting us to give him $7 billion borrowing authority, first of all should be coming to us with a budget giving a clear indication of where this country is going, a lot clearer indication than we had in the throne speech. I never read a throne speech any faster than that one; it took me about six minutes. The substance of it all, I think, was putting the word "multicultural" in the Immigration Act. That was the major commitment of this government in its throne speech.

Before we start authorizing this government to borrow money, we should have a budget. This budget should give us a clear indication of where this country is going financially. It is all very well to listen to clichés about the fact that we must control inflation. Of course we must control inflation. But surely the point is that the cost of controlling inflation should be borne more by those who can afford it than by those who cannot afford it. So far as the housing tax credit is concerned, people who cannot benefit from it are paying taxes and their money is going to people who are in a better position to afford this terrifically expensive fight against inflation.

Words were flying around here earlier during question period. It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to say that everything will be all right in two years. But, will everything be all right in two years? If we are still around in two years, if we have an industrial sector and if our trade balances are genuinely going to improve, will everything be all right? This government took office five months ago and they are saying that five months is nothing; but four and a half months without Parliament meeting is a significant amount of time for a group of men and women who presumably had some sense of direction when they ran for Parliament.

Surely when the Prime Minister wanted to become Prime Minister he had a reason. Surely it did not take him five, six or seven months to tell us why he wanted to be Prime Minister. So far we have not found out. I think the people of Canada are asking themselves why they changed the government and what benefit are they getting for this change, since this government is doing exactly the same things the previous government did when given a mandate on May 22 to go in a new direction. If they are not going to take new directions, I do not think we should be approving their request to Parliament. The whole point of the operation is that they are supposed to have some new ideas and they have not. As I said earlier, one can go through Hansard and just change the names.

I do not think that was meant by the people of Canada. They asked for more. How long are they expected to put up with this? When are we going to get a budget that says something? So far all we have is a placebo, one of those funny coloured pills—the throne speech with nothing in it. It has been platitudes, government by cliché and lots of roly-poly jokes. Meanwhile small businessmen are in serious trouble. One can only presume we will see a large increase, not only of bankruptcies of small businesses over the next half year or so, but a decline in borrowing to promote new business, a decline in industrial direction to create new jobs for Canadians.

We have to look at the two major problems because they are interconnected. One is inflation and the other is unemployment. The argument seems to be that inflation will create more unemployment. That is great, but is it true? One would think that when we have a lower rate of inflation in Canada by four percentage points than the United States, we should be more competitive. The dollar is at an all-time low since the Diefenbaker government. We have a government with no direction as to where it is going. Canadians have a right to expect a newly elected government to give them some sense of direction. It is not good enough for a newly elected group of men and women to sit for five and a half months and give us no indication of where they are going.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have before us a bill presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) to borrow $7 billion to run the affairs of state. We in the New Democratic Party have some objection to the way the bill was brought in and the explanation given to us by the Minister of Finance as to why he needs this money. The first argument is that it is really a blank cheque we are giving the government. We have no idea exactly how the money would be spent. That criticism has a familiar ring to it because we heard it from the Minister of Finance when he used to be in the opposition.

I was interested in listening to the minister introduce the bill in the House. In the speech that he gave he waxed quite eloquent and reminded us of the former effervescent member for St. John's West when he was in opposition. It gave me a bit of worry in terms of the levity and lack of really serious analysis that I noticed in the minister's presentation. I was particularly struck by the minister's opening remarks. He quoted from Shakespeare and said "Neither a borrower nor a lender be". He admitted he would prefer not to borrow but had to because of the mess in which the former Liberal government had left the country.

It would have been enlightening had the minister read the full quotation from Shakespeare which, of course, comes from Hamlet, act I, scene III, when Polonius is speaking to his son, Laertes. It reads as follows:

Neither a borrower nor a lender be,
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry;
This above all, to thine own self be true
And it must follow as the night the day
Thou canst not then be false to any man—

Had the minister read the full quotation, he would have been embarrassed with the very telling line, "This above all, to thine own self be true". The minister is in an embarrassing position because he is not to his own self true. If we read some of the statements the minister made while he was in opposition, it becomes evident that this is no longer the hon. member for St. John's West that we knew in the Conservative opposition benches.

Was he true to himself then, and is he true to himself now? It was almost a year ago to the day, October 24 last year, when the present Minister of Finance, then the opposition finance critic, stood on this side of the House and ranted, railed and castigated the Liberal government for doing exactly what he is now doing. I quote from Hansard of October 24, 1978, on this business of bank interest rates, which are closely associated with this whole question of borrowing. The present minister then said:

Where will it end? Where will it stop? How can we have economic expansion in light of these interest rates? What will the small businessman do? What will they do to meet these heavy, additional expenses?

Is it not correct that one of the factors which make us uncompetitive compared to the United States is the much higher interest rates in Canada? Who is considering all this? Who cares?

That question posed a year ago by the present Minister of Finance is just as relevant today. Indeed, when we look at the kind of policy that this Conservative government has been following since its election on May 22, any unbiased observer has to conclude that it is identical to the policies of the previous Liberal government which got us into the economic mess the Minister of Finance says he has inherited. The rationale the present minister uses for having to increase interest rates and borrow $7 billion is that his hands are tied, that because of the mess the Liberals left the economy in, he has no other course of action.

One of the reasons we are in this economic mess today is that the previous Liberal government followed exactly the same policy. It followed the policy of continuing to raise interest rates. That slowed down the economy and caused more and more bankruptcies, unemployment and inflation for the ordinary consumer. I thought Canadians wanted to throw out the Liberals because of the economic mess they were creating. I thought Canadians believed the new Conservative government would change policy and swing things around. Most Canadians are now beginning to realize that the old adage is indeed true—Tory times are tough times.

● (1450)

Just since the election of a few months ago the bank interest rate has gone up to a record high. It is now 14 per cent, which means consumers and lenders are being charged somewhere around 16 per cent by the banks. "Who cares?" I quote the minister's words right back to him. It seems to me that what happened in the election of May 22 is that we just exchanged the black cats for the white cats. They are still cats. They are still wedded to the same economic philosophy which created the problems we have today and which will not get us out of the problems we are in today.

This minister is wedded to advice from the governor of the Bank of Canada, who is convinced that a policy of high interest rates and of foreign borrowing is the only way to proceed in terms of keeping the economy healthy. Where is the health in this economy? Canada, among western countries, has one of the highest unemployment rates, one of the highest interest rates, a very high inflation rate and an economy which has no over-all industrial strategy. We are wedded to the old concept of exporting our raw materials and, hence, exporting potential manufacturing jobs which could be created here in Canada.

It seems that there has been no change. There are new faces on that other side of the House, but they certainly do not have new policies. It is hypocritical of the present government and the present Minister of Finance to argue that they did not realize things were so bad when they were in opposition but now that they are in government they have discovered things are so bad that they have no choice but to proceed with the disastrous economic policies they were condemning only a year ago. That is not good enough. It will not fool the Canadian electorate. What was wrong when the Liberals were in power is just as wrong today. Economic circumstances have not changed. The factors the Liberal government was dealing with are the same factors this government is dealing with. Where are the dramatic changes which could make things different? I do not see them. Therefore, how can the government argue that it cannot strike out with new initiatives and new solutions to the problems it analysed only a year ago?

I think it is hypocrisy of the highest order to argue one thing when you are in the opposition and then when you are in government to reverse yourself because of political expediency and carry on the same policies you were railing against only 12 months ago. I think it points out the shallowness of the criticism the Conservatives made of the economic performance of the Liberals when the Conservatives were in opposition. One can only conclude that they really did not mean it when they said that a high interest rate policy was wrong and damaging to small business and consumers. I think they were only saying it because they wanted to say something different or look different from the Liberals when they were in government. Now, of course, the Conservatives are in government, and their true colours are showing.

When we look at the amount of borrowing sought by the bill which is before us, we see that the Minister of Finance wants to be able to borrow $7 billion. Our criticism is that we do not know what he is going to do with it. What is he going to do with this $7 billion?

When he was leader of the opposition, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) used that same kind of argument in criticizing the Liberals in the first place.

Mr. Crosbie: If you don't want to pass this bill, you tell us what you want cut. What part of the $7 billion do you want to cut out?

Mr. Symes: I hear the minister asking how he can avoid borrowing $7 billion from foreign markets or from wherever it is he has to borrow. Well, I ask him to look at the income tax system as it is presently structured. My latest calculations show that large corporations in this country owe the federal government $12 billion in deferred taxes, taxes which have not been collected by the previous Liberal government nor by this present Conservative government. He is saying he has no alternative, because federal revenues are down so much, but to go out and borrow $7 billion and, of course, pay a very high interest rate which we as taxpayers have to fund. The federal treasury lacks close to $12 billion in taxes which it has not collected from the corporations of this country. This was a deliberate policy.

It was argued that these tax concessions and deferred allowances had to be given to corporations in all sectors of the economy to encourage them to expand and hire Canadians in order to keep our unemployment rate down. It obviously has not worked. We have one of the highest unemployment rates in the industrialized world. Something went wrong, but this government would never think of collecting taxes which have been deferred indefinitely and which accountants indicate in annual reports of corporations are unlikely ever to be collected.

Never do we as individuals have a chance to defer our taxes. Come April 30, the Department of National Revenue wants those taxes; but for corporations the story is not the same. We as individual taxpayers have to bear the burden and make up revenue that this government and its predecessor have refused to collect from the corporate sector, in spite of record profits in certain sectors of the economy. I think the most dramatic recent examples are the profits of oil companies, which are at a record level. Those profits amount to incredible sums, yet their tax rates, depletion allowances and other factors are incredibly low. Despite the millions of dollars of profits Shell has made, Shell does not pay any federal income tax because of the write-offs allowed. The taxpayers of Canada are funding, on the average, about 65 cents out of every dollar that oil companies spend on exploration.

In addition, we give them all kinds of other depletion allowances, etc. Then, as the government does not collect taxes from them at the normal rate, it is little wonder that this government has a revenue problem and has to seek more borrowing authority.

As I have indicated, the minister has changed his tune now that he is on the treasury benches. He is arguing that he has to borrow and that he has to keep interest rates high. What is the rationale behind the high interest rate policy? One of the arguments—and we heard the governor of the Bank of Canada before a committee yesterday reiterate it—is that interest rates need to be kept high so that we can attract foreign capital. What is the result of foreign capital being attracted into Canada? Surely if high interest rates attract capital, not only should Canadian investment be attractive to foreigners but it should also be attractive to Canadian investors. Despite this high interest rate policy we still find capital flowing out of the country. In 1978 the net capital outflow was $2 billion. Something does not gibe here. The argument does not always work. There are other factors at work. The government never likes to talk about this, but when it keeps attracting foreign capital, it also attracts foreign ownership.

Foreign ownership of our economy is, indeed, at the root of many of the problems we face, because as long as 80 per cent of our oil industry is foreign-owned, as long as 60 per cent of our manufacturing industry is foreign owned—one can go through it sector by sector and realize that the majority of it is foreign-owned—how can the national government ever expect to implement policies for the benefit of Canada?

Endorsement of a high interest policy and dependency on foreign capital are an admission of bankruptcy in terms of any strategy which seeks to regain Canadian control and initiative in the development of our economy. The foreign ownership syndrome into which the government is locked, following exactly the same bias as the previous Liberal government, means we shall never be able to develop a healthy manufacturing industry since foreign ownership is mainly designed to extract raw materials for manufacture into final form elsewhere.

What is happening to our manufacturing sector? In 1953, 26 per cent of all jobs was in manufacturing. By 1979 the proportion had declined to 19 per cent. Do we ever stop to think why there is such high unemployment in this country? In the job intensive sector, manufacturing, employment has gone down. We depend more and more upon the extraction of raw materials and the export of raw or semi-processed materials, and we are providing fewer jobs in Canada. This is reflected in declining employment.

A further consequence is that we have to import foreign goods which are always more expensive in the long run in terms of their effect on the balance of payments; the only way we can get our balance of payments back into equilibrium is by exporting more oil, natural gas or raw materials. Hence the vicious circle continues and Canada goes on suffering from unemployment, a weak dollar, and high inflation.

The policies the minister is following are identical with those of the previous government, and our economy has been in serious trouble for the past decade so I cannot see how those policies followed by the Conservatives can extricate us from the predicament in which we find ourselves. The Conservatives are ignoring the structural weaknesses in our economy, the need for an over-all industrial strategy, and the need to help the weaker sectors of the economy regain some strength.

In the context of this very high interest rate I am thinking in particular of what is happening to small business. We see on the order paper a bill in the name of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry (Mr. Huntington) to increase funding for the Federal Business Development Bank. Hopefully, we shall get to that bill later on, because I have some comments to make on it. But this kind of tokenism does not get to the real problem facing small business. The real problem facing small business today is the cash flow problem, the difficulty of finding finance at a reasonably low rate.

The high interest rate policy adopted by the Minister of Finance flies in the face of all the Conservative promises to small business. Small business has always had trouble in ensuring an adequate cash flow. Through its high interest policy whereby 16 per cent or more has to be paid for loans, the minister is driving small firms out of business. Inventories are down because small business cannot afford to build them up in the circumstances. Bankruptcies, which were at a record rate last year under the Liberal administration, are going to be even higher this year because of the high interest policy of the Minister of Finance.

Again and again we see the rhetoric on one side and the economic reality of the policies of the government on the other. I do not think the small business community is fooled by the bland assurances of the minister or of the Prime Minister that a high interest rate is necessary now because the economic problems have to be solved that way before the Conservative party can carry out its pledge of bringing down interest rates in the long term. I wonder how long the long term is going to be. I would be prepared to bet that even if the government survives four years in office the interest rate will not go down. Structural problems in the economy and the monetary thinking of the governor of the bank, supported by the Minister of Finance, indicate that, if anything, the interest rate will continue to rise. This will lead to more bankruptcies and more unemployment.

Economists were predicting a very bad situation for the economy over the winter months late in 1980 before the present government came to power because of the structural weaknesses I have described and because of the spill-over of the recession in the United States. We have now embarked on a record high interest rate policy and it would seem to me that this prediction will come true in a much more dramatic and negative way, and that we shall move into a deeper recess.

As hon. members know, the government is wedded to moving the price of energy up, in a dramatic way. The current thinking is at least $4 a barrel. Again, this is going to add to the inflation rate and will probably, using the figures from the last first ministers' conference, if they move up the price of oil to $4 per barrel, throw another 80,000 Canadians out of work, reduce the growth of the gross national product by at least 1 per cent, and move up inflation by 2 per cent. All this has the makings of a serious economic recession, yet I do not detect any sense that that is the direction in which we are moving. I do not detect any concern on the part of the Minister of Finance that the policies he is pursuing will inevitably lead us into that severe economic downturn.

We get assurances that the budget is to be somehow a cure-all for the problems the Conservatives have inherited from the Liberals. I cannot see it, because if one accepts the logic that the Liberal policies contributed to the economic mess in which we now find ourselves, how will the Conservatives get us out of that mess by using the same kind of policies?

I am dismayed at the hypocrisy of the minister and his cabinet colleagues saying one thing in opposition and then, when they get into government, doing exactly what they have criticized.

● (1510)

For these reasons we oppose this kind of borrowing policy and high interest rate policy which we think will be disastrous to the Canadian economy, not only in the short term but in the long term.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the bill introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) which asks for an additional borrowing power for the fiscal year 1979-80. I would be inclined first of all to answer the previous speaker, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), who referred to the economic performance of the former government and seemed to suggest that the actions of the former government and those of this government were almost similar. It is quite a different record as the Canadian people will realize.

After scarcely a few months of this new government, inflation has never been worse in Canada, the Canadian economy has never been in such a bad way, interest rates have never been higher and the concrete measures taken by a Canadian government to solve our economic problems have never been so weak. I think that our party which is now the official opposition will have the opportunity to return to power and take steps to correct the economic conditions. I think that the performance of a socialist party in British Columbia or in Manitoba has really not convinced anyone that they had the proper policies to meet our needs. But enough of that. I wish instead to deal this afternoon with the Minister of Finance's proposals which I find surprising, to say the least. On October 23 last, the Minister of Finance made a speech that bordered on buffoonery. I realize it is not very amusing to be Minister of Finance nowadays. I realize also that his leader, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), in spite of all the good advice given to him by economists in the Department of Finance and economists from the business and academic world, I repeat, in spite of all the good advice given to this government, the right hon. Prime Minister and leader of the Minister of Finance persists in going ahead with his mortgage interest deduction program which will cost billions of dollars to Canadian taxpayers to no purpose, implementing a program which will actually not benefit housing at all.

I know the Minister of Finance has tried to convince his colleagues, and particularly his leader, not to go ahead with that wasteful expenditure, but he had to submit to his leader's orders and to endorse this measure which will squander public funds in Canada. I understand why he jokes his way around the difficult and thorny questions relating to the Canadian economy every time he rises in the House instead of dealing with them in a serious and responsible manner. That is why his speech of October 23 is much more of a joke than a serious, factual and positive statement of the measures this new government intends to take in order to solve the economic problems facing all Canadians. At the end of his speech, the Minister of Finance went as far as to say, as reported at page 507 of Hansard for October 23, and I quote:

Therefore, I appeal to the hon. gentlemen opposite—

That is, members of the opposition.

—to help pass through the House their debris—

—their debris. This is how he speaks about this bill asking for the authority to borrow an additional amount of some $7 billion. The Minister of Finance dares call that debris. He goes on to ask us to support and pass this bill—

—so that we can get on with our bright new future for Canada, with our own budget and with the affairs of this country, as the people of Canada showed on May 22 they wanted us to do.

I say to the minister that, on this side of the House, we are quite willing to deal with what he called the unfinished business, but we consider this to be a particularly important and significant measure which must not be dealt with lightly and which calls for some $7 billion in additional borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1979-80. I must say I am amazed to note that what hon. members of the Progressive Conservative Party are saying now is quite another tune from their claims when they were in opposition. Why is this bill, one of the very first to be introduced to us, calling for additional borrowing power? Why? This political party which is now in power used to claim that the Canadian government was spending too much, that government spending had to be reduced, that a balanced budget was to be our goal. Well, in one of his first moves as a member of the government, the Minister of Finance, instead of tabling a regular budget has decided to seek an additional borrowing power of $7 billion; there is no consistency between what the hon. gentleman used to say when he was a member of the opposition and what he is now saying as the new Minister of Finance. And it is more serious than that, Mr. Speaker. What makes it worse is that the new government that enjoyed the support of Canadians on May 22 has waited an unprecedented five months to call Parliament after the election; such a long delay had never been seen in the whole history of Parliament. When it was in opposition, this political party used to boast it was ready to act and form a new government on one hour's notice, that it had a whole array of measures on ice that were best suited to Canadian interests. Just imagine! That same party waited 5 months to face the House and, when finally it did, all it could deliver is a wishy-washy Speech from the Throne that is neither fish nor fowl, that contains no financial and economic commitments and, to top the lot, seeks additional authority to borrow another $7 billion. And they ask this without giving any explanation, and this is quite serious in my opinion, Mr. Speaker. In reply to the Minister of Finance, one of my colleagues in the House, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), in a brilliant and timely speech—

Mr. Rae: What do you mean brilliant? This is too much!

Mr. Ouellet: —reminded this government that when the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), the hon. member for York-Peel, was the opposition critic and was sitting on this side of the House, he said he could not allow the former government to borrow large sums without knowing everything about estimated expenditures and revenues and budgetary deficit. Of course, as the hon. member for Windsor West rightly noted, the Minister of Finance took care not to give any clear explanation about what he plans to do. And no more than the Progressive Conservatives, when they sat on this side of the House, would give the government a free hand to borrow large amounts of money without providing any explanation, do we now, as the true official opposition in this House of Commons, intend to allow this new government to borrow such large amounts as $7 billion with no explanation other than a semi-facetious and humorous speech made by the Minister of Finance on October 23 last.

I congratulate my colleagues, the hon. members for Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) and Spadina (Mr. Stollery) who spoke earlier today. I have been impressed by their serious approach to public affairs, especially in the case of the hon. member for Mercier who was newly elected to this House and who made a brilliant speech and gave evidence of her seriousness and desire to serve well not only the people whom she represents in the Canadian Parliament, but also all Canadians, who are entitled to more respect and more information from the Minister of Finance.

What we regret, Mr. Speaker, is that we are asked to pass this borrowing authority while a budget should have been introduced instead. We should be informed of what the budgetary forecasts are concerning the economy. We do not know what the government will have to say in its budget about the economic situation and the agreement on the price of oil. The government has been in charge for five months now. Ministers have been in the opposition for years and presumably they were preparing themselves to assume power. They had all the time they needed to get ready and bring forward original solutions to present economic problems. Especially on the fundamental problem of oil pricing, they had all the time they could have needed to consult with the provinces and to reach a decision which is of vital importance for all Canadians. If the rumours are true, if the price of a barrel of oil is going up by some $4, the economic implications of this move will be tragic and unacceptable for all Canadian consumers. I cannot accept that this government leave us in the dark.

After five months, this government has not had the elementary decency to tell us what the price of oil will be. The Minister of Finance hides and does not even dare appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. He should have been its first witness but he did not even show up. At this point in time, Mr. Speaker, the only public statement he made to the hon. members in this House was his speech of October 23 in which he did not deal with anything serious but only made jokes.

Will he appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs? I hope he will. In any event, Mr. Speaker, we, on this side of the House, will speed things up and see to it that he discharges his duties fully by appearing before our Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. It is inconceivable, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance should have shirked his responsibilities by not showing up before that committee; it is really quite incredible, Mr. Speaker, that at a time when he is asking the House to grant him authority to borrow $7 billion, he should not even be in the House to fight for his bill and hear the parliamentarians say what they think of his bill. Where is the minister? I point out to you that he is not at his seat. I also point out once again that he is hiding—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, come off it! What utter nonsense!

● (1520)

[English]

Mr. Kempling: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the rules clearly show that it is not proper for a member to mention in the House that another member is not in his seat. I would think the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) should know that, having been a minister of the Crown. He should recognize that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is at a cabinet meeting and will be here shortly before four o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I am very pleased to learn that the Minister of Finance is at a cabinet meeting. I accept the hon. member's remark and I forgive the Minister of Finance for having been forced to be absent. However, I hope that in the discussions in the cabinet meeting he will be able to make concrete decisions which he will submit to Parliament as soon as possible, because since the beginning of the present session we have been unable in fact to ask the minister the questions we wanted to ask him, and in particular to hear from him what policy the government intends to follow in the economic field.

It was too easy for him to hide behind the governor of the Bank of Canada. It was too easy for the Minister of Finance to say that it is the fault of the previous government, that things are bad. Those explanations are all too simple and easy; they do not correspond at all to the present situation. What the Canadian public wants to know is what he is going to do now that he is the Minister of Finance and what the new Prime Minister is going to do now that he is the Prime Minister. A few months ago they told us that they had the solutions to all the problems, and that it would be easy if only they received a mandate from the Canadian people. Interest rates would drop, inflation would go down, the dollar would go up, unemployment would be lower, the sun would shine on a brave new world if only the Progressive Conservative Party could take over the government. Well, the people have been had. They have elected this new finance minister, this new Prime Minister and we find that not only did they fail to come up with concrete proposals but one of their first measures is to ask us, in this House, to borrow some $7 billion more. And what for? We do not know since he did not tell us, since he did not go before a parliamentary committee to answer questions from the members. All we know is that he will sink Canadians further into debt. We will have an additional debt of some $7 billion thanks to the good work of this finance minister.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept this situation and I tell the members of this government, you have had time and opportunity to take decisions in the best interest of Canadians, and every time you had to deal with a specific case, you missed the ball and struck out, to use baseball parlance.

And now on to the contract we were supposed to sign with the government of Argentina. Of course, the new minister, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), came to the House to apologize and explain to us that, unfortunately, this contract had been lost and consequently the government would lose jobs and this would obviously cause a major loss of revenue for Canada.

Strike two, the famous Foothills project. Thanks to the lack of concern, the lack of responsibility on the part of the ministers in this new government, the government of the United States could not know what was actually the position of the Government of Canada. And, once again we realize this country struck out and this project will not take place and will not bring the economic benefits we were hoping to get for all Canadians.

And just recently, again, we learned that General Motors would not be coming to invest in a plant in Montreal. Strike three. This government, once again, in a short time bit the dust on three issues most important for the economy of this country, the creation of jobs in Canada, economic stability, and those lost revenues which might, in fact, explain why the Minister of Finance now has to come before this House and ask for an additional borrowing authority of $7 billion for the fiscal year 1979-80. If that is the kind of performance this government is capable of, if every time it gets involved in an issue it has only a negative impact on the economy of this country, at the rate at which we are going it is not $7 billion that the Minister of Finance will shortly seek from us permission to borrow but maybe $20 billion or $30 billion. I find that unacceptable and I ask the Minister of Finance to introduce his budget at the earliest to meet the present needs of the people, especially the low-income groups who suffer infinitely from the increasing cost of living. It is unacceptable to see this government more concerned with setting a price for oil that is going to suit large corporations, and particularly the producing provinces, but that is going to cause irreparable harm to all Canadian consumers.

There is talk of a $4 increase—I do not know what the increase will be—but I have this to say, Mr. Speaker. Whether it is $2, $3, $3.25, $3.50, $3.75 or $4, I think it will be too much and it will be unacceptable for the good interest of Canadian consumers. They are playing hide and seek now concerning the increase in the price of oil. There are secret meetings in the backrooms of large oil companies and in the offices of the energy minister of Alberta and of a few other Conservative organizers, probably, but I say this, whatever the price of a barrel of oil, whatever the amount of the increase, I think it will be too much because Canadian consumers are already being smothered with the inflation we have in Canada. The Canadian consumers are being crushed by this Minister of Finance who is letting the interest rate increase inconsiderately. The interest rate is now at 14 per cent and soon will reach a level of 15 per cent and even 16 and 17 per cent. And when I mention these rates, of course—

An hon. Member: You would have done exactly the same thing!

Mr. Ouellet: I am talking not only about the bank rates, but also about the prices that will have to be paid by the small consumer, the modest customer who will have to borrow money to buy the car he needs to go to work, and who will perhaps have to pay a 17 or 18 per cent interest on a loan in order to get it. Not only will he have to pay an interest rate that is unacceptable, excessive though lawful, proposed, tolerated, and even accepted in a complacent manner by this Minister of Finance, but this same government will come back very soon to tighten the rope around the poor Canadian taxpayer's neck, because, of course, he will have to buy gas if he is to use his car to go to work. Not only will he have to pay usury rates on his car loan, he will also have to pay an unacceptable rate on the gallon of gas he will have to buy to go to work.

● (1540)

Those are the direct consequences of this government alone, the Progressive Conservative Party which just came into office. We did not allow this. I heard a member from the New Democratic Party suggest we did the same. Under the Liberal government interest rates did not reach 15 per cent, and if we were now in office we would not tolerate 15 per cent rates. Were we now the government, we would not allow such disgraceful increases in the price of oil. This is a Progressive Conservative government. They should have all the blame for those unjustified and unacceptable increases in interest rates, the cost of living and very soon the price of oil, the price of heating fuel, the price of gas Canadian consumers have to buy. Mr. Speaker, I have this to say: the Minister of Finance needs a better budget, a much more serious budget than what he has indicated until now in this House, because he will not remain very long as Minister of Finance. The people themselves will rise and send back into the opposition that bunch of dimwits who have given the people nothing positive since they were elected. There are a government that is adrift, a government that is carried away by events, a government without any concrete measures to deal with economic problems.

Mr. Rae: Will the hon. member who just spoke allow a question?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rae: Among his suggestions at the beginning of his remarks, because later he went another way, he mentioned he shared the concerns we have expressed in this party about information lacking in the bill put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). I would like to ask him a simple question. In what way does this bill differ from the other bills that were introduced by his Liberal colleagues, and especially by the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien)?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the hon. member to the speech made in this House by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), who dealt with the matter on October 23 last. He clearly showed there was a world of difference between the legislation introduced by the former minister of finance and the new legislation by the current minister. I suggest the hon. member should improve his education by reading the remarks made by the hon. member for Windsor West. They deal very eloquently with the matter, and very clearly explain there is nothing similar between the two.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this debate particularly because I know that the Creditiste members will return. They are interested in this kind of a bill and will want to take part in the debate.

We are being asked in this country to raise another $7 billion by way of borrowing, much of that borrowing from outside of the country, Mr. Speaker. I listened with great interest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) introducing this measure and I listened while he ridiculed the previous government and to his assertion that all of the responsibility for the $7 billion borrowing need was the fault of the previous government. I have just now listened to a cabinet minister in the former government who was so little interested in the operation of the finances of his own government that he told my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), that if he wants to find out anything about it he should ask the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). The hon. member for Windsor West was not allowed to participate in that cabinet for some time. All of this must confuse the country no end.

Where is this money coming from that we are going to raise? Would it not be wise, instead of raising $7 billion, to curtail some of the expenditures? This was a suggestion made by my colleague, the hon. member for Sault St. Marie (Mr. Symes). Immediately the Minister of Finance asked the question how? There are lots of ways we could do it. Although it would hurt the Conservative party and the Liberal party, but not my party, one way would be to get rid of the other place. That is the place where politicians are pensioned off who have never really served in a political sense except as that of bagmen. It would mean that we would have to do something about several of the cabinet ministers who would no longer be able to serve there. This would save a great deal of money. It would save a great deal now, and the expenditures for which we must borrow in another land would be saved, as well as the interest that must be paid on the borrowing. There are indeed many ways we could save money, many of them which this government does not intend to carry out.

It has been interesting listening to members of the new government speak because, in operation, there is very little difference between a Conservative and a Liberal. It is no more easily ascertained than to look at the zeal being expressed by the present government members in supporting the budget and the financial arrangements of a previous government. This government had four or five months but it did not bring in a new set of estimates. Not one penny was changed; nothing was changed.

One could say that it would cost thousands of dollars to reprint the estimates to put them into line with the thinking of the new government. Sure it would. It might cost $100,000. Is the government of the day telling me that in those estimates that it criticized as widely, violently and as strongly as we did, although probably not in so many areas, that it could not save the price of the printing? Now there is the exhibition of the finance minister defending the financial arrangements of a previous government rather than having any of his own. One of the ways to save money obviously is in the estimates of the previous government that have already been partially spent.

There are, of course, other ways. It seems to me that one way is to keep the interest rate down. The present government follows the same pattern as the previous one did. It is saying that we need, as the governor of the Bank of Canada said to the committee the other day, to maintain an interest rate higher than the American interest rate so that we can do business in Canada by importing foreign money.

We are not importing foreign money, we are exporting Canadian money. We export more dollars than we bring into this country. We are a net exporter of dollars, not importer. If that were cut out, the government would not need to borrow this money. This would equalize the $7 billion it wants to borrow and the $7 billion it gives away to foreign markets. If we did that, we could eliminate the need for borrowing this amount of money. Not only would that affect the present deficit, but it would hold for a number of years to come.

We have slavishly gone along with the idea of raising our interest rate every time our American neighbours do so. The Canadian public are told that in terms of the manufacturing industry, multinational corporations, in terms of oil and so on, that we need to have a continental policy. We tell them we must follow that policy and, if the Americans raise their interest rate, that we must do the same. The same applies to the price of oil. We are told that if the multinational corporations do something in one country, they should be allowed to do the same in this country, under the same circumstances. That is not really true.

While we go out of this country to borrow money, we have always balanced our payments. We have always been able to balance our payments. We have always maintained our standard of living by robbing and raping our resources. The manufacturing sector of this country has never carried its share in the production of wealth in Canada. It has flowed from our mining industry, forest industry, and agricultural industry.

Mr. Kempling: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: If the hon. member doubts that, that may partly explain the bad shape we are in. His small companies may have done very well, but they do very little in terms of the total national economy. The parliamentary secretary may disagree if he wishes, but every time there is an ad in my area from the forest products industry, it points out that 27 cents out of every dollar produced in Canada comes directly or indirectly from the forest industry.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to remind the hon. member that the information he has just given to this House is erroneous. Forty-two per cent of the GNP is a business component and 25 per cent of that comes from businesses that have sales of less than $2 million, or 2.5 million people employed in the labour force sector which serves that business component. Of 6.6 million people, 42 per cent of them were employed in small business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I think the minister has made his point.

Mr. Peters: He made a point, but it does not apply to anything. Small businesses are in the mining industry. They are also in farming. Many farmers consider themselves to be small businessmen.

I do not take credit for the figure I mentioned. It is the forest industry that stated 27 cents out of every dollar in the economy of Canada is directly or indirectly from the forest products industry. I presume some small businesses are involved in that. There are very few major businesses in the forest products industry. It proves my point.

Mr. Huntington: Your point is erroneous.

Mr. Peters: We allow our American neighbours to set the price on everything, including oil and hydro. If we need more money, we rob our resources and export them in as raw a form as possible. This country should take an independent point of view. Because I live on the North American continent, I do not consider myself an American citizen or to be involved in the American economic milieu.

The hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) keeps telling us that he is doing very well. I do not know if he is using American technology, research and money. The hon. member gives us the impression that he has developed some leadership and prominence in his industry. He may be a leader in his field, but it must be a small field. He must have a good staff because it has run without him for years.

There is absolutely no justification for raising interest rates in Canada. When the government gets into the field of raising $7 billion, it means the rest of the Canadian economy has to scratch. In many cases it does not have the collateral the Canadian government has because of our resources. That is because we still have forests, mines, and agricultural potential that has not been squandered. This can be put up as collateral to borrow from foreign banks.

Interest rates continue to rise because our American neighbours are in a severe economic bind, having put up more than can be supported by their collateral. Because there are $240 billion worth of Eurodollars floating around destroying faith in the American economy, that is no reason for us to raise our bank interest rates and create a similar situation. The banks are making a huge profit. They do not need to raise the interest rate in order to make more money for themselves. The oil companies do not need to raise their prices because they, too, are making a profit.

May I call it four o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being four o'clock, this House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Item No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). Shall the item stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Stand at the request of the government. Item No. 2, the hon. member for—

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is not at the request of the government. I think everyone knows that we want to deal with the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The others are allowed to stand by unanimous consent of all members. That is certain.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed by unanimous consent that all orders up to order No. 6 shall stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I think I have to make myself clearly understood. I believe the Chair said that the House would hear the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) at the government's request. I do not think that is the case. It is at the request of the members of this House that the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will be heard. I think the Chair said it was at the government's request, but that is not correct. Are the other—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This has to be corrected then. It should have been by unanimous consent.

PENSIONS

SUGGESTED LOWERING OF ELIGIBILITY AGE AND INCREASE IN BENEFITS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan to provide for the pensions payable under these two acts to be available at age 60 to all persons who meet the other requirements of the said acts and who are not in or are prepared to withdraw from the labour market, and also to provide for the basic amount of the pension payable under the Old Age Security Act, at age 60 for those not in the labour market and to everyone at age 65, to be increased to $350 per month, for this basic amount to be escalated each year by an amount that will enable pensioners not only to keep up with rising living costs but to share in rising living standards, and also to provide for the elimination of any means or income test from the Old Age Security Act, so that the full pension thereunder will be recognized as the established right of all our people.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in saying a few words on the motion you have just read from the chair I should like to begin by saying two things which may seem inconsistent or contradictory. I assure you they are not. On the one hand I should like to express great pride in what Canada has done in the last 50 years or so to improve the lot of our senior citizens. On the other hand I present this motion and I raise this subject again because I think there is so much we still need to do for our older and retired people.

If I may return to my first comment, I do feel very happy with the changes we have effected in the last 50 years. It is not necessary for me to tell my colleagues in this chamber how old I am. I sometimes point out I am 71, so members do not think I am 81 or 91. My real reason for making that statement is to establish my credentials for talking about the situation in which older people have found themselves for the greater part of the twentieth century. I still remember what a stigma it was when the old age pension came into being for persons to be on that pension. The amount was pitiably small, only $20 a month, and it was payable only at age 70. Further, there was such a severe means test attached to it that if a person was on the pension it meant he was really one of the miserably poor.

I have on occasion told of the experience I used to have as a young minister on going into the homes of people in my congregation and finding therein old folks, grandma and grandpa, of whose existence I was not aware. Why? Because they had no clothes suitable for wearing outside the home, for going to church or going anywhere. That was the condition of the old folks not only prior to the introduction of the old age pension but as long as it carried with it a severely restrictive means test. But thanks to my predecessor, the late J. S. Woodsworth, and those of us who have followed him in this House, a fight was carried on in the forties and fifties and we got rid of the means test.

We have done other things for older people. We have increased the amount of the pension, we have established hospitalization plans, medicare, and senior citizens' apartments. But I still feel very strongly that the thing we did that was most beneficial was getting rid of the means test from what was then the entire pension and from what is still the main part of the pension so that no stigma is attached to it.

Members of the older generation, the generation to which I am proud to belong, are not ashamed to be on a pension. They are glad to show their identification cards and be recognized as part of today's senior citizen group. This is largely because we went for the principle of universality, because we decided we ought not to give pensions to older people just because they were poor but because they are people, because they have played their part in building up the life of this country and deserve a pension in the years of their retirement. I am pleased, too that the efforts, mainly from this quarter of the House, have resulted in other things I have talked about such as hospitalization and medicare for seniors before these benefits were available for others, senior citizens' apartments, and many things in terms of recreation and so on which are now provided. This is good.

I was pleased to hear the new Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) use the word humanity the other day. He talked about a certain element of humanity that is in our legislation respecting older people. I am asserting today, as I have before, that the main aspect of humanity in our legislation is the recognition of older people as persons and not just as poor people who should be the object of our charity. My plea is that whatever review takes place of our pension programs we should not lose sight of that central element of humanity, and that we keep it there.

I know all the talk there is about selectivity and let's-make-the-money available-to-those-who-need-it-most, and so on, but the minute we start saying to older people "you get pensions if you can prove you are poor", we take away some of the dignity we have given to senior citizens by what we have achieved in this country in the last 50 years—I use that figure because it was in 1927 that pensions first became payable under the first act in this sphere, an act that came into being because of the pressure exerted on Mr. King by my predecessor, the late J. S. Woodsworth.

Well, it is a tremendous and existing story, what we have done. As I say, I run into people now in my constituency, particularly some older men who are by themselves and who are living in senior citizens' apartments, and who say to me that in physical terms, in terms of comfort, life is better for them today than it was in their working years. So, we have done well. But let us not retreat from that by going back on the principle of universality, by going back on the proposition that Canadians are entitled to decent and dignified retirement in their older years, not on the basis of their poverty but on the basis of their being persons.

Having made the plea that we not lose any of the gains we have won, I move on to say that even with all of the assertions I can make about how much better things are today than they were for my parents or grandparents, the fact of the matter is that our older people, in the light of today's standard of living, in the light of what is needed today and in the light of what is available today, are having a difficult time.

Every study and every report which is made on the condition of older people comes to the conclusion that something must be done to improve their lot. I am hoping that in a day or so we may see that Lazar report, about which a motion of mine under Standing Order 43 was passed the other day. The word is that it recommends quite a number of things which should be done both by governments and out in the private sector. However, the point I make in reference to that is that there is not a study anywhere, whether it is by a social agency body in one of our metropolitan cities, whether it is by the Canadian Council on Social Development, whether it is by departments of the federal government or departments of the provincial governments, whether it is by the trade union movement or what have you, which does not say that improvements need to be made.

One of those improvements is a very simple one, that the rate of the pension should be higher. That is why, in my motion as it is before the House today, I suggest that it should be a minimum of $350 a month. Before any one says, "Where is the money coming from?" and before anyone says, "Why give that to the wealthy, those who do not need it?" I remind hon. members that those arguments have been answered many a time.

Where will the money come from? It is not something which has to be saved up. It is not something which has to be borrowed through the kind of legislation we have been discussing here for a couple of days. Pensions are paid out of current income, out of current production, and all we are saying when we decide that a certain amount should be paid in the form of pensions to our people, is that a certain percentage of the wealth society is able to produce in 1979, in 1980, in the decade of the eighties, shall go to our senior citizens.

Those of my generation who are over 65 represent about 8 per cent or 9 per cent of the population of this country, but the amount which comes to the 2 million people who are over 65 is running at about 4 per cent of the gross national product, so today's senior citizens are not getting the share which should be theirs. I am speaking for my generation, and I say that any arguments about piling up debts for the future are sheer nonsense. What counts, and what has to be looked at, is the capacity of society to share what we now produce so that the young will get what they need, so that working families will get what they require, and so that senior citizens will get theirs as well.

As for the argument that paying pensions on a universal basis means that some who do not need it will get it, the answer to that is in the income tax structure. It is not enough now that we charge older people who may not need the old age security payment, but that could be jacked up, and I say it is far better to do it that way, to take it back in taxes, than to apply a needs test first, because every time you apply a needs test, you are invading privacy and saying to individuals, "You will get this money only if you can prove that you are poor".

The minute you require Canadians to prove that they are poor, you are robbing them of their dignity, a dignity which we gave them in the early 1950s when we said that old age pensions are for everyone who has reached the required age.

In addition to increasing the amount of the pension and extending the principle of universality, I believe very strongly that the time has come to make pensions available at age 60. I do not argue that they should be paid to everyone at age 60 the way they are to everyone at age 65, but I do argue that both old age security and the benefits under the Canada Pension Plan should be available to persons between 60 and 65 who are out of the labour market. Thus far the only people in that age bracket who get anything in the way of a pension from the federal government are spouses who get the spouse's allowance. I need not take time to go into that today because I spoke about it last Monday when that legislation was before us. I believe that the principle of saying to women in that age bracket, "You get a pension only if you can prove your attachment to a man, alive or recently dead", is totally wrong.

I would accept a needs test in that area before I would accept a marital test, but I think even better would be a work test. If people are out of the labour market they should be able to apply for and receive both old age security and benefits under the Canada Pension Plan.

Incidentally, if we went in that direction, there are many people, particularly in the heavy industries in my constituency, who find that racket pretty hard to take, and they would retire early and open up jobs for younger people. I urge strongly that this House move in that direction.

Hon. members are aware from the speeches that I keep making and have been making—not in all of my 71 years have I been talking about this, but for many of them—

Mr. Pepin: Almost.

Mr. Knowles: I see my friend, the hon member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin), smiling at me about the years. I simply tell him that the very day I was born, June 18, 1908, was the day when this House debated at second reading and passed the Government Annuities Act, which was the first piece of legislation providing anything looking like a pension for the Canadian people. With me it was a birthright right from the beginning to be concerned about pension legislation. That concern leads me into the position of women, as I have just said, and I presented a motion today under Standing Order 43 calling for women, when they are survivors of their husbands, to get the same pension the husband would get if he survived his wife. I just cannot buy at all any longer that if a man and wife live together, build up their estate and their equity and go on pension, under the normal rules if the wife dies first the husband lives on a 100 per cent pension but if the husband dies first she lives on a 50 per cent pension. It is just utterly unfair and completely lacking in any respect for the position of women.

By the same token, pensions for veterans need to be improved. I still think they should be a little ahead of the rates and provisions we make for the civilian population and at an earlier age. Also by the same token I think we should be doing much better for the widows of veterans. I am hopeful from what the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon) said to me in the late show last night that something is going to be done in that area.

Public service pensions need to be improved. So do those of retired RCMP personnel and those who are retired from the Canadian armed forces, as well as pensions for the blind and disabled. Outside of these pensions which come directly under the government, there are such pensions as those of the Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific, and then there is the whole question out there in the private sector of requiring private sector employers to meet the same kinds of standards we are trying to set for the public sector. That includes indexing. In some quarters that is an offensive word, but if we agree that people in their working years have the right for their incomes to go up to keep up with the cost of living or to keep up with the rising standard of living, it is completely wrong and unfair to say that when you are retired, "Do not expect that any more."

Whether we are talking about retired public servants, retired personnel from the RCMP or the armed forces, retired railways workers or people retired from private industry, that principle of indexing so that pensions enable people to keep up with the cost of living is one which we must pursue, if we believe, as I think we do, judging by the rhetoric I hear in this place, that our older people are not just cast-offs. They are not just there until the day they die but are still persons, are still Canadian citizens with all the rights and privileges pertaining thereto, if I may use a phrase that I use sometimes when I wear another hat.

● (1620)

I welcome this opportunity to make this case again today. It is good to see a few members present who were not here in the last Parliament, so I do not feel that everyone who has listened to me has heard this speech a dozen, 50 or 100 times.

Mr. Rose: It is one of my favourites.

Mr. Knowles: My good friend, the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), says it is one of his favourites. He has been away for five years and he is enjoying it like an old song from days gone by.

I am prepared to admit that we should not take all the credit over here. We take all we can. But I am prepared to admit that the generation that came to maturity in the 1930s was a generation that resolved we would do something better in the social field, something better for older people. For a while every organization, all the political parties and all the churches asserted that we must move in this direction. There was consensus which came to fruition in the legislation that is now on the books. But it took some of us to do the prodding and the pushing to get it done, and that is what I am still doing.

If hon. members say I am too futuristic when I talk about a high pension on a universal basis, when I talk about widows getting just as much pension after their husbands die as husbands get after their widows die, I say that I remember long ago being back here in the last row arguing for the removal of the means test, and some friendly Conservative sitting nearby said to me, "That is a good speech, Stanley, but it will never come to pass." Well, it did. We got rid of the means test; we improved the lot and the dignity of our people. We can go on doing it, and I hope that this House of Commons in this Thirty-first Parliament has the will to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paul McCrossan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am most honoured to join the ranks of the many who, in the past, have debated a motion to increase the old age security pension and to lower the age of eligibility. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has, with this motion, again demonstrated his unswerving dedication to older Canadians.

I support his motives, as I believe do all hon. members in this House. Let me say that as an actuary I have long been concerned by the inadequacies in our pension systems, both public and private. Let me also say that my government cares about senior citizens. We would like the retirement of every Canadian to be totally secure and fulfilled. We have, over the years, pressed for and supported changes and improvements in our social programs that would help reach that goal.

The most recent evidence, as the hon. member indicated, of this government's commitment to older Canadians was the introduction, on October 17, of a bill to amend the spouse's allowance provisions of the Old Age Security Act. If approved, this bill will allow us to amend what was one of the most poorly designed pieces of legislation ever to be introduced into the House. We condemn the practice of creating false expectations, of giving a spouse's allowance to an OAS pensioner's spouse, and then withdrawing it arbitrarily with wanton disregard for that spouse's emotional state and financial circumstances.

I spoke a moment ago of the quality of retirement that we would like to see for older Canadians. By "we" I do not mean we, the government, nor we, the members of this House. I mean we as Canadians—government and citizens. It is together that we must strive to realize our objective.

In looking today at these proposed changes to the Canada Pension Plan and the old age security program, I am reminded of misconceptions that often give rise, or at least relate, to suggestions such as those contained in this motion. I would not suggest that there was any such misconception on the part of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he formulated these proposals, but I do think it might shed some light on this debate if we looked at these for a moment.

[Translation]

The first concept to which I refer is that the problems of senior citizens can be solved by merely increasing the basic old age security pension. Without mentioning the cost of implementing the formula, I consider this as a rigid perception of the issue: all pensioners need the same retirement income and the state assumes all responsibilities. I urge hon. members and all Canadians, particularly older citizens, to examine carefully and seriously with me what the implementation of such a measure would cost. The hon. member would like to raise to $350 the basic old age security benefits, but he does not ask himself if Canadian taxpayers are prepared to pay almost twice the cost of the existing old age security program, which means annual expenditures exceeding $9 billion. This amount does not include the huge cost of benefits paid because the eligibility age will have been lowered and the means test abolished, as is also recommended in the proposal of the hon. member. Those $9 billion will have to be paid not just for one year but year after year and this amount will continuously increase. I do not believe that our economy or the Canadian taxpayer have the financial means to pay for it, or that senior citizens wish to impose such a heavy burden on their children and grandchildren. In fact, everyone has different retirement needs. It depends to a large extent on the income level you had during your active life and on your standard of living. This is why the retirement system in Canada has undergone the changes we have seen.

The government, rather than merely implementing a single program to meet all the income needs of retired people, preferred to develop a three-fold formula. This formula recognizes both public and individual responsibilities concerning retirement and faithfully reflects, I think, the values and attitudes of Canadians on that matter.

[English]

But let me once again stress that it would be completely irresponsible to increase our deficit by over $4 billion at a time when our deficit exceeds $10 billion. Day after day we hear from hon. members opposite about their concern over the fact that interest rates are too high. Increases of this magnitude in government spending would seriously impair at this time the financial credit of the country.

As I was saying, we have a three-tier pension system in Canada. The bedrock of the system is the old age security program. This is a pension scheme that provides basic benefits to everyone who meets the requirements of age and residence in Canada. In addition, a guaranteed income supplement is made available to OAS pensioners who have relatively little income beyond the basic pension. This benefit is income tested to ensure that the largest benefits go to those with the lowest income, a concept supported by the House in the recent introduction of the child tax credit. In addition, of course, is the spouse's allowance for the spouse of an OAS pensioner who is between 60 and 65 years of age, in order to ensure that low income pensioner couples have an adequate income to meet their basic living needs. Our hope is that hon. members will agree that we will no longer deprive the spouse of this assistance at a time when it is needed most.

The next level of the system is the Canada Pension Plan. The CPP is a compulsory, contributory, and earnings related social insurance program. Thus, rather than being a flat rate universal benefit, the CPP retirement pension is related to the career earnings upon which the CPP contributor and his or her employer have made contributions. Together, the CPP and OAS programs have the effect of providing Canadians over the age of 65 with benefits that guarantee a basic amount of income to all pensioners, and at the same time provide income that is related to their earnings prior to retirement.

• (1630)

As well, the pensioner's income from OAS and CPP is protected through cost of living indexation from the effects of inflation. Thus the first two tiers give the pensioner a solid base of real income on which to build the third tier, which consists of private income sources such as pension plans, investment earnings, and registered retirement savings plans.

In this regard I should touch on another misconception about our national retirement programs in Canada. That is the idea that these benefits should go beyond basic needs and by themselves provide whatever level of security and comfort in retirement might be desired. Such an idea ignores the basic responsibility, and the right of the individual, to make personal provisions for his or her own retirement.

It is one thing for the nation to wish to ensure that everyone has enough to live on. That is a proper and necessary concern for government. But to go beyond that with even the most charitable motives and try to provide completely for every individual through the largesse of the state has far-reaching implications. If we begin to discourage individuals from saving for their own retirement and encourage them to look to the government to provide everything, then we may be destroying initiative and self-reliance. If we allow unions to think that the public programs will look after all retirement needs, then they will quite rightly ignore pension benefits in collective bargaining and concentrate instead on direct pay increases.

This leads directly to another misconception about pensions in Canada, and that is the belief that any and all improvements in the system must come in the public sector. It seems that every time the problems of pensioners arise, the solution that is offered is an increase in old age security or Canada Pension Plan benefits. The suggestion that perhaps there could be improvements in other areas, such as private pensions, is usually brushed aside. With our current severe financial difficulties we must look at all parts of the pension problem to consider the most effective solutions.

Perhaps it is time we realized that not only is it possible to expect improvements in private pensions, but that there may be more room in this area to make improvements than there is for increasing public benefits which result directly in an increased burden on the taxpayer. Private pension plans are widespread and numerous. They are intended, ostensibly at least, to ensure that the employees of both private and public employers can look forward to a secure income when their working career is over.

Enormous amounts are tied up in these funds and the total invested in them is growing at the rate of several billions of dollars annually, yet there is evidence of many problems with these plans which I will outline later.

Another area where retirement income can be affected is that of personal savings and encouragement to increase these savings. The growth in registered retirement savings plans in the past few years is testimony to the fact that people will put money aside for retirement if they are given the proper encouragement to do so. Literally billions of dollars are now being placed in these plans every year, and the money invested will in large part be used to improve the future income of retired Canadians.

The success of RRSPs suggests that other areas in the private sector, such as private pensions, could be made more effective in providing Canadians with retirement income. Yet the member opposite seems to have ignored private plans as a source of adequate pensions. The Canadian Labour Congress has in the past advocated that private pensions be replaced by a vastly increased Canada Pension Plan. Instead, perhaps we should be looking at these private plans more deeply to see if they cannot be improved and strengthened.

As I mentioned, certainly it is quite evident that there are problems with the pension industry at the moment. One of the major difficulties is that pensions simply do not cover enough of the Canadian work force. Even though the percentage has been rising the figures published by Statistics Canada at the beginning of 1978 indicate that only about 44 per cent of the labour force is covered by a pension plan. Admittedly, the percentage is considerably higher if we include only the full-time workers, then about 54 per cent of the full-time labour force was covered. Nevertheless, on a national scale any objective observer would admit that there are too many people without such coverage.

Furthermore, many of those persons who are ostensibly covered by pension plans will not be entitled to benefits. Instead, because they will change jobs at some time in their career, in a large number of cases they will lose the entitlements they have accrued because their pensions are not adequately vested.

Even if they retain the entitlement, they usually will not be able to transfer the credits into a new pension plan. This year the pension industry made a start in providing a mechanism for transfer of pension credits between plans. It is a start that should be encouraged directly by government.

These two major problems of vesting and portability may mean that only the employee who spends a major portion of his working years with a single employer currently stands a good chance of retiring with an adequate private pension. Even then the adequacy of the pension may erode very rapidly because some pension plans make no provision for inflation. The real value, that is, the purchasing power of these benefits will only remain stable if the inflation rate is low.

It is a major objective of this government to lower inflation. However, the high inflation experienced in the recent past has dealt a severe blow to the fixed incomes of these pensioners and has caused many to lose confidence in pension plans in general. The government will encourage post-retirement adjustments against inflation. I hope personally to be able to assist in putting our own plans for the public service and forces on a sound financial basis, a basis which will serve as a model for pension plans to cope with this problem.

There is another problem as well with survivor benefits. Widows in general are not adequately protected by the private pension system, and often, as is pointed out in studies, they are left in dire straits. We must encourage the rapid growth of survivors' benefits in pension plans.

Clearly, then, there is room for improvements in the area of private pensions, improvements that will eventually affect the incomes of a very large number of Canadian workers and their dependants. The whole area of pension adequacy is one of high priority with this government. As hon. members are aware, it was announced in the Speech from the Throne that we will ask Parliament to establish a committee to review the retirement income needs of Canadians in the 1980s.

Along with the performance of the private sector, there are specific areas of our public pension system that are of grave concern to us; the plight of many old age pensioners, the lack of protection provided for women, the position of the disabled and handicapped, the protection offered to the families of deceased persons, the need for greater flexibility in the age of retirement, and the maintenance of the purchasing power of benefits.

We are all aware that a great deal of research and study has already been done in these areas. We will draw upon the work that has already been done and review it in light of our own priorities. We will add to it what we learn from our consultations with Canadians, with the pension industry, with provincial governments and special interest groups.

An interdepartmental review on pensions that has been going on for the past three years will shortly be available to us. We will as well refer to major provincial studies such as the Quebec Cofirentes Plus study on pensions and the Ontario Royal Commission on pensions. I hope that as a member of this new government I can bring a fresh perspective to the pension area. If our review indicates the need for major overhaul of the pension system, I hope we will be free to develop and carry out such an overhaul.

I have one other reservation in reviewing the proposals contained in this motion, and that is in respect of the advisability of lowering the retirement age. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested that OAS and CPP benefits be available to any retired person who is more than 60 years of age. However, it is not certain that the majority of people want to retire at 60, or that society can afford to assist the minority who want to retire early in doing so. This may become even more clear if predictions about the changing age structure of our population prove out.

The time may come when we will have to think in terms of raising the retirement age, or at least of encouraging people who want to continue working to do so. We may find, much to our surprise, that such an idea would be welcomed by many older Canadians and that our entire society would benefit as a result. We will be particularly interested in the findings of the Senate Committee on Retirement Age which is now in progress.

There is one other common misconception, Mr. Speaker, which I should mention so that members may give careful consideration to the implications of this motion. That is the view that the Canada Pension Plan is funded through the general revenues of the Government of Canada. Of course this is not the case. The CPP is financed entirely through the contributions of Canadian workers and their employers. Already there are indications these contributions may have to be raised during the life of this Parliament.

Consequently, when we consider lowering the eligible age for CPP benefits to age 60, we must remember that we would be requiring CPP contributors to raise their contributions so that some may receive their retirement benefits five years earlier than others. We know that some workers are forced by ill health to retire before age 65, but I should point out that in many such cases CPP disability benefits may be available. I wonder, however, whether it is fair to ask those contributors who continue to work to age 65 to subsidize those contributors who chose to retire at an early age.

In summary, I recognize the concern of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for the plight of the elderly. However, his solutions are completely impractical financially at this point in time. That is not to say that nothing should be done, however. We will have to change the CPP in the next five years. We must deal with the problems of portability, vesting, survivor's benefits, and protection against inflation in the private sector. We must deal with the problem of a lack of coverage for many employees in the private sector. These problems, the problems of the aged, are real and serious. However, it is my belief that the solution outlined in this motion is not the proper one.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which is most welcome in this year of 1979, and especially after the elections of May 22 which brought this government into office, because the election platform they circulated throughout the country had a commitment to lower the pensionable age to 60 for all Canadians.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) just tabled legislation, Bill C-6, which will bring very little change to that election promise made last spring by the Progressive Conservative Party. Long before that, my party which was the administration for a number of years amended old age security by lowering the pensionable age from 70 to 65. Of course, deficiencies remained. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made his motion, and the people I meet regularly in my constituency remind me of that deficiency, which is the following: among people between 60 and 65, most of them, at least the greater majority are women who cannot join the labour force because of their physical condition or cannot find work, and they have no alternative but to ask for welfare, which is not altogether normal.

In his motion the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proposes that the pension be paid to all Canadians aged 60 and over. This may be going far, as was explained by the hon. member who spoke before me. Monetary factors and the ability of Canadians as a whole to pay should at any rate be considered.

A minor amendment, as I said earlier, is proposed in legislation that will come later, giving the spouse or rather maintaining the spouse's allowance after the husband dies. This means, Mr. Speaker, that in the case, for example, of a woman aged 62 whose husband aged 66 gets pension she is entitled to the spouse's allowance, and when her husband dies the pension will still be coming to her. But what do we do for the other person, the person I was referring to a moment ago, who most of the time is a woman between 60 and 65 who cannot join the labour force? I suggest this is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should have emphasized in his motion, in order that Bill C-6 be amended to give more help to that group of Canadians of both sexes.

It would have been possible of course in this bill which is soon to become law to phase down the pension; it should be remembered that it was the previous government that brought the pension down from 70 to 65. That government intended to phase down that pension gradually by reducing it year by year, that is down to 64, then 63 and so on until the age of 60. And by the time all those people who are entitled to the guaranteed income supplement get that pension, it is an expenditure, but if you look at it from the other side, it is not a real expenditure because, of course, those who will be retiring at the age of 60 will be making room on the labour market for younger people, people between the ages of 40 and 60, young people coming out of universities and arriving on the labour market now and who really have difficulty in finding a job. People between 40 and 60 regularly have that problem, and when they do not have a job, they have no other choice but to go on unemployment insurance and they are paid unemployment insurance benefits ranging between $100 and $180 a week depending on the salary or the stamps that were paid.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I say that on one hand it is a payment, if you want, that would be made to those people when we ask the government to give that pension at 60 but, on the other hand, it is a saving and I do think that in a country as vast and as beautiful as Canada when the economic climate is doing well, the social climate of course feels the effect—and I am not the first one to say that.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point I would also like to deal with. With respect to the motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in anticipation of the bill that will come later, I noticed earlier a release issued by the Minister of National Health and Welfare which says that all people living alone applying for the annual guaranteed income supplement must have an income below $3,528 for a single person and $5,904 for married couples. Mr. Speaker, today with an income of $3,528 for a person living alone you must figure out the cost of living and think about the various government programs, including the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation which is putting out residential construction programs for retired people with a rent between $225 and $250 a month. If you figure that out, at $225 a month, that makes about $2,700 to $2,800 a year for rent alone. That is one item. Then you must add service costs. And what about food costs considering the increase in the cost of living and all the increases this government is letting go by and that consumers and Canadians have to pay now? Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we should certainly increase this minimum or this maximum of $3,528 for single people and the ceiling of $5,904 for married couples. When a businessman or someone else applies for the guaranteed income supplement, it is unthinkable that they be told that if they have an income of $3,528 they are not entitled to the guaranteed income supplement. I think that this is unfair and unacceptable for Canadians and shows once again the irresponsible attitude taken at the present time by this government towards Canadian men and women.

• (1650)

Mr. Speaker, I listened earlier to my colleague, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), when he spoke of the neglectful attitude of this government as concerns interest rates, the oil price increase, lost business and contracts abroad, the rising unemployment rate, and so on. When the price of oil goes up $1 a barrel, the cost of living index jumps by 5 per cent. Senior citizens and retired people are of course also affected by higher interest rates. They must suffer the consequences of oil price increases. They must suffer the consequences of the borrowing of this government which adds to the debt of each individual Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, Bill C-6, should be amended. For my part, I plan to attend the committee meetings and suggest amendments so that I may represent effectively the people of Saint-Hyacinthe riding. Once again, I am glad to support the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I do not agree with him that basic pensions should be raised to $350 a month for every Canadian man and woman. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this would be going too far. However, it remains that there is a group of Canadians who really need this increase. Others have other sources of income. Of course, every Canadian man or woman is now entitled to the basic pension. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I was happy to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre say earlier that he was not speaking for himself because even though he did not tell us his age, we can see that he does not need any guaranteed income supplement. I am thinking of young people like yourself, Mr. Speaker, like myself and like my colleague for Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), who will be very happy when they reach the age of retirement to have a decent pension on which to live.

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying earlier, I visit friendship groups and golden age clubs in my riding almost every week and we meet women between 50 and 55 and maybe more often between 60 and 65; these women cannot consider going back on the labour market. It is unthinkable. It would be irresponsible and disrespectful to ask them to go back on the labour market. These people must be provided for in the bill so that they should be allowed a pension enabling them to live in this country to which they have given their work, their time, their life and their health.

Since they are not entitled to any benefits, Mr. Speaker, we must take action or initiate programs to provide for their needs. Mr. Speaker, that just about covers everything I had to say for now, and I hope the government will consider the motion of the member for Winnipeg North Centre and that the backbenchers will convince the Minister of National Health and Welfare that his bill does not go far enough. That is only a small part of the promises and the brain-washing the men and women of Canada were subjected to when they were told during the election campaign that a Progressive Conservative government advocated a pension or intended to amend the law so that every Canadian aged 60 would receive a pension.

They now realize that it is unthinkable since, as we saw today, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is asking for the authority to borrow an additional amount of $7 billion. Of course, Mr. Speaker, that situation can be blamed on the irresponsibility, the inefficiency of the people across the way. We need only think of all that was lost recently. The hon. member for Papineau mentioned it earlier. Whether it be the Foothills affair, the Candu affair negotiated with the government of Argentina, or even the problems born out of the promise to transfer our embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, we know for a fact that many Canadian companies are losing contracts in the Middle East; naturally, every time a Canadian industry loses a contract, it means that much less money in the pockets of the taxpayers.

[English]

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to participate in this debate initiated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), even for a few moments. It is a special pleasure for me because he initiated it. Certain members of this House, both past and present, highly respect those whose memories will linger on long after we leave here, such as the late right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). But indeed in that same class in my opinion is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He will be remembered for two things. One is the contribution he has made to the procedural aspects of the House, and second, the great deal he has done for the disadvantaged of this country.

[Mr. Ostiguy.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Halliday: That is not to say that the rest of us are not concerned. I am sure the hon. member will agree that we too have concerns for people in this country.

I want to remind the House that as recently as in the last month or so we have seen the government indicate concern for elderly people in the same way as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has. We have initiated not only Bill C-6, which has been before us this week at the same time as this motion, but also we have word in the Speech from the Throne that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) intends to set up a special committee of the House to look into the problems of the disabled. The Prime Minister is indicating in these moves that we are concerned not with taking just an age limit and arbitrarily saying that at that given age we will help people, but rather we will identify people who really need help. That seems appropriate in this age of financial stress that Canada is under right now and so well indicated by the questions raised in the House over the last few days.

One area that particularly intrigues me about the arguments brought forward not only today by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—I have heard them often before so I am almost tempted to say "methinks he doth protest too much"—relates to the means or income testing and the concept of universality that the hon. member has brought to our attention. I am not taking issue with those concepts particularly, except that I might suggest there is a little inconsistency in the motion before us today. In the last sentence the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests this:

> —and also to provide for the elimination of any means or income test from the Old Age Security Act—

The hon. member thinks he is eliminating income testing, but he has introduced into this motion a new form of income testing, namely, if one is working and earning any income, one does not benefit. I object to that because that is inconsistent. There is another inconsistency in that we have moved away from the concept of income testing. Indeed, all Canadians have pride in their country—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OVERSEAS TRIPS BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the free trip and the hospitality accepted by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) from the government of Libya, in view of the international reputation of that country as a haven for international terrorism, and in view of the reported approval of this trip both by the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) and the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), I move, seconded by the hon. member for London West (Mr. Buchanan):

That this House request the Prime Minister to make a statement as to the criteria on the basis of which he approves such free trips for members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE BE INCLUDED IN INNER CABINET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that we in the Liberal party consider agriculture as one of the most, if not the most important industry in Canada, and in view of the fact that the future of many segments of this industry is presently threatened by the cavalier and relaxed attitude of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his negotiations with other countries concerning import quotas, I seek leave of the House to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That the right hon. Prime Minister consider restructuring his inner cabinet so as to include the Minister of Agriculture, so that in further discussions concerning the inner cabinet there be a voice representing the hardworking producers of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent? Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR DEVICES

REQUEST CANADA CALL ON U.S.S.R. TO STOP ALL NUCLEAR TESTING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to rise today on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Over the weekend we learned that the Soviet Union has detonated a nuclear device. This is the sixteenth such nuclear test this year. These tests all add further radiation to our environment and jeopardize the health of all citizens of our planet. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House calls on the government of the U.S.S.R. to stop all nuclear testing.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR INCREASED GRANTS FOR ENGINEERING, HEALTH AND NATURAL SCIENCES IN UNIVERSITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

S.O. 43

In view of the fact that the government stated in the throne speech that it intends to give greater importance to development and research; in view of the fact also that the chancellors of Canadian universities pointed out in their memorandum dated October 5 last the failure of Canada to attain these aims as far as research and development were concerned, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette):

That the House urge the government to grant high priority to university research by providing financial assistance for pure and applied research in engineering, health and natural sciences in our universities.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. The introduction of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

IMPROVEMENTS TO MOUNT HOPE AIRPORT, HAMILTON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, under a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro):

That the government implement as soon as possible the commitments made by its predecessor with regard to the Mount Hope airport, in Hamilton, to not only proceed immediately with the over $1 million improvements to existing roads, parking area, runway 11-29, etc., but also with the new parallel runway, additional taxiways, a new passenger terminal and co-operation from Air Canada to bring airline services into the Hamilton airport, in view of the improvement program.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF CERTAIN MINISTERS RESPONSIBLE FOR ECONOMIC STABILITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

[Mr. Allard.]

In light of the fact that we are celebrating today the fiftieth anniversary of the 1929 crash and given the fact that several things in the last few weeks have indicated that the danger of another crash still exists, that the steps taken by the present government do not help to stabilize the Canadian economy at all and that in spite of all their rescue manoeuvres, the ship is sinking, I move:

That the House severely blame the present government and request that it take certain steps to improve the situation, namely, to ask the Minister of Finance, the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and others to resign.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE MEETINGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the current hearings on interest rates before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs have drawn such interest from the media and the public, and in view of the fact that the steering committee of that committee has approved such an action, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray):

That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, if it deems advisable, be authorized by this House to arrange, with the broadcasting media, for coverage of its meetings on Tuesday, October 30, 1979, and Friday, November 2, 1979, at which the Minister of Finance is scheduled to appear in connection with the committee's review of interest rate policy, and that any such broadcasting be done on principles similar to those under which the proceedings of the House are broadcast.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It can only be introduced and dealt with at this time with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

OLD AGE SECURITY

CALL FOR EQUIVALENT OF SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), I move:

That this House urges the government to introduce, without delay, an amendment to the Old Age Security Act to end the discrimination therein against persons of single status between the ages of 60 and 65 by providing for the equivalent of the spouse's allowance to be available to all persons between the ages of 60 and 65, regardless of marital status, provided they are out of the labour market.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

REQUEST COASTAL FISHERMEN RECEIVE GRANTS FOR BOAT-BUILDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that in the Speech from the Throne the government has undertaken to study the expansion of the fishing industry in Canada, that the new Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) has failed to award grants to build boats 75 feet long or less, and that coastal fishermen have an urgent need for funds to replace their boats to take advantage of the new 200-mile offshore fishing zone, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr):

That the President of the Treasury Board transfer forthwith funds to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to make it possible for our fishermen to obtain grants to carry out and complete the construction of their boats in time for the new fishing season next spring.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASES IN INTEREST RATES—ALTERNATIVES TO FOLLOWING U.S. INCREASES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister based on his admonition in the Throne Speech debate concerning people, notably myself, who were expressing concern about the future of the economy. He said, and I quote:

—I believe this is a time for Canadians to raise their expectations, not to lower them.

● (1415)

Within two weeks of that—last Thursday—the Prime Minister talked of very tough decisions that he had to take. In three answers on October 25, he used the word "tough" four times. Apparently what he is advocating now is tough decisions that his government has to make, but perhaps even tougher on Canadians than they are on his government.

My question is this: Since, in the view of the government, we have to follow American interest rates up to 11, 12, 13, 14 per cent, at what rate do we begin to look at alternatives? I just remind the Prime Minister that at his press conference on Friday he said:

—given the situation that we face in the economy now, we literally have no alternative except alternatives that will make the situation worse in time to come.

At what point will the government look at these alternatives, rather than following the American interest rate up to 13, 14 per cent and God knows how high?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are looking at alternatives now. As I have indicated several times in this House, I hope that members of all parties—and, indeed, members of the public—will take advantage of the fact there is now a standing committee inquiry into interest rate policies, to put forward alternative policies they think might be more effective than those which have been proposed by the governor of the Bank of Canada and supported by this government.

Mr. Trudeau: The Prime Minister is inviting the public to put alternatives in front of a standing committee. I remind the Prime Minister that on February 13 last, when making a speech precisely on the high interest rates—which I believe then were around 10 per cent—he proposed a number of alternatives. These are recorded at page 3174 of this year's Hansard. I will not read the proposals, but they had to do with currency swaps, borrowing from the IMF, revaluation of Canada's gold reserves, a reduction in the rate of monetary expansion, and raising the chartered bank secondary reserve ratio. He had a whole series of alternatives he was proposing then.

This is the question he asked our minister after proposing these alternatives, and which I now ask the Prime Minister:

When he rises in his place today, will he explain to the people of Canada and to Parliament why these alternatives I have listed are not acceptable, whether they are being considered and, if so, whether there is any intention to follow any of them? Can the Prime Minister tell us which of these alternatives that were so brilliantly set out last February he is looking at now.

Mr. Lawrence: What was the answer we got then?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Leader of the Opposition's retrospective description of my proposals at that time as brilliant. I will have to refresh my memory. I believe those remarks were made in relation to policy having to do with the value of the Canadian dollar. I can review the record.

The fact is that we are, and have been, reviewing various alternatives since we were elected as a government. Our judgment, which confirms the view of the governor of the Bank of Canada, is that the most appropriate policy for the Government of Canada to follow, now, is to follow the advice put forward by the governor of the Bank of Canada. He stated his reasons for giving that advice. The Minister of Finance will be stating again his reasons for following that advice.

We continue to welcome any suggestions that might come from anywhere in the country, including the official opposition, as to policies that will work, that should be considered and that might be preferable alternatives.

Mr. Trudeau: The Prime Minister says that he is now following these policies. I recall quite distinctly that when we were following those policies, it was seen as a sign of abject servility to the United States.

In what sense does it take more courage now to apply those policies, when we have already gone up to 14 per cent? They might have been appropriate at 7 or 8 per cent, but surely at some point one begins to look at new policies. Since the Prime Minister listed a whole ream of them, I would like to know which ones the government is looking at, and why they have been discarded.

• (1420)

Mr. Clark: I am pleased the Leader of the Opposition can remember when his party was following those policies, because his finance critic is doing his best to forget.

The right hon. gentleman has made a very valuable suggestion. It may be we have not examined each one of the proposals I put forward in February as closely as we should. We have reviewed certain of those policies. I will go back and read my speech again and see whether there are any suggestions we should be looking at more assiduously than has been the case.

I repeat, we feel it highly important that, in the circumstances this country faces today, we need to call on all Canadians with proposals for a better approach than the one that has been criticized by the Leader of the Opposition. If they can come up with a better proposal than the one we are following, we will consider it. But having looked at the alternatives, our judgment is—and this is also the judgment of the governor of the Bank of Canada—that the policies recommended by the governor, even though they are tough, even though they are not popular, are the best policies available.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Why is the Prime Minister trying to get the Canadian people to forget that when he was speaking as Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, he said a Progressive Conservative government would bring interest rates down? What is wrong with that policy today? It was all right when he spoke on March 2. Why is he abandoning it today?

Mr. Clark: The goal of our policy is to bring interest rates down. That will not be done if we duck tough decisions today. We are facing tough decisions today dealing with interest rates as a means of creating the kind of stability and strength in the economy which will allow us honestly and with some security to bring interest rates down in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: It was reported today that officials of the U.S. Federal Reserve Board have disclosed that another $800 million error has been discovered in the monetary supply of that country, in addition to the $3 billion mistake discovered last week. Representative Henry Reuss, chairman of the House of Representatives Banking Committee has called the miscalculation of the money supply "a monumental goof equivalent to a monetary Three-Mile Island."

How can the government continue to justify supporting a policy of following American interest rates so closely, to what are record levels in Canada, when the soundness of the basis of the American policy has been called into question by U.S. experts? Why does the government not act now to prevent our economy from becoming another Three-Mile Island?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman is a slow learner. Last year, in 1978, his government approved interest rate increases of 3.25 per cent. This year, to date, we have had to approve increases of the same amount, for several reasons. Among them is that interest rates in the United States have increased this year, and despite the mistake in the calculation of the money supply in the United States the fact remains that interest rates went up in the United States, they were higher in the United States than in Canada, and that even today the prime rate in the United States has gone to 15.25 per cent: Citibank increased their rate on Friday to 15.25 per cent, higher than the prime rate in Canada.

So whether or not a mistake was made in the calculation of the money supply in the United States is irrelevant. The fact is that their interest rates are higher than ours, so to protect our dollar and to stop the surge of inflation which would affect us here in Canada if we did not do so, we had to raise our rates too. The hon. member for St. Moritz understands that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —from Saint-Maurice; the former minister of finance. I suggest that the hon. member for Windsor West consult with his colleague; he will explain the situation to him.

• (1425)

FIGHT AGAINST INFLATION—EFFECT ON STANDARD OF LIVING

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, reluctant as I am to interrupt the internecine conflict between tight money's first team and tight money's second team, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Volcker, who is chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in the United States, has said that the standard of living of the average American has to decline if inflation is to be fought in the United States. I wonder if the Prime Minister is going to come clean with the Canadian people and make a statement as to what is going to happen to the standard of living of the average Canadian, and what he is going to do about it in his fight against inflation.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what we are interested in doing in our fight against inflation is taking steps now which will ensure that in the long term the standard of living of Canadians across the country is one which is as high as possible and as reliable as possible. The hon. member knows, and I am sure he is concerned about, the particularly difficult conditions which are imposed, particularly on low income Canadians, by present circumstances. Those circumstances also worry this government very much, and they are circumstances with which we hope to deal in a budget.

Mr. Chrétien: When, next year?

Mr. Rae: We now have inflation running at 9.6 per cent, and we have projections—but the government is not prepared to tell us exactly what it is going to do—that the price of energy will be going up substantially in order to face certain problems.

How much unemployment, and how much of a reduction in the standard of living over the short term—because we live over the short term, not over the long term—is this government prepared to tolerate in its so-called trench warfare against inflation?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, as little as possible.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, governor Bouey said that a rise in interest rates discourages borrowing and spending, and that slower economic growth is the price we all have to pay in the fight against inflation. Instead of talking about biting bullets and making tough decisions, and instead of talking like Superman and acting like Clark Kent, I think it is time the government gave us some figures and an understanding as to what the cost of the government's policy will be both in the energy field and in the interest rate field, and as to how the government intends to distribute these costs to the Canadian consumer—because it is the little guy who is getting screwed by the government's policy.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure there was a question there.

Mr. Rae: You wouldn't know it if you saw it.

Mr. Speaker: I have equal doubts as to whether there was not an infringement of some parliamentary language, but it depends on the interpretation the hon. member wants to put on that term. I hope that, in an abundance of caution, if he has an interpretation of it which is parliamentary, to be on the safe side he would simply avoid using it in the future. In that way there would not be any problem.

HIGH INTEREST RATES—RENEGOTIATION OF MORTGAGES CAUSED THEREBY

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. By this time, the Minister of Finance must be aware that as a consequence of the high interest rate policy of his government, thousands of Canadian families are facing the horrendous prospect of renegotiating their mortgages at a time when rates have gone up anywhere from 30 per cent to 50 per cent. To put it in other terms, where mortgage rates have gone up, carrying costs have risen as much as $1,500 a year.

Under those circumstances, and now that the Prime Minister has agreed it is time to review policies, is the Minister of Finance also prepared to agree that it is time he took some action to relieve those hardships? In particular, is he prepared to give directives to banks and lending institutions that they provide short-term loans for people caught in those circumstances?

More importantly, is he prepared to provide some short-term, emergency assistance or low-rate mortgages to enable people to carry over until those great halcyon days when interests rates may go down?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are very conscious of the fact that when interest rates go up, someone suffers. Therefore, we are hoping that the interest rate increase will be as short term as possible.

I am also aware that we are introducing into the House a mortgage interest and property tax credit plan which, if this House passes it before Christmas, will better enable 3,800,000 home owners in Canada to bear the increased costs of mortgage interest, the increased costs of looking after a home, increases in property taxes, or whatever. They will be in a considerably better position to do that if we pass this legislation as quickly as possible. I point out to the hon. member that 76 per cent of Canadians support the mortgage proposal, as shown by a Gallup poll reported in the Toronto Star on October 20. So I move that we help that 76 per cent as quickly as possible.

• (1430)

Mr. Axworthy: I wish to ask the minister a supplementary question, but first may I point out that he has not introduced the bill for which we have been waiting and, second, any benefits that have come from that mortgage taxing plan have been eliminated.

Is this the new kind of Tory economics, when you say that $300 benefits are comparable to $1,500 losses on your mortgage? How do you figure out those economics, Mr. Speaker? I should like to know from the minister whether, first, he is prepared to introduce, within that plan, something to help those who are faced with the short-term hardship of renegotiating their mortgages; and, second, is he prepared to ask his colleagues to shelve all plans to transfer the mortgages back to the private sector, which will only result in higher interest rates and will not allow CMHC to do something about direct lending to people? When is this government going to establish a decent housing policy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: —and when is it going to start helping people?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak calmly, because the hon. member is obviously suffering from incipient hysteria.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The situation is that, despite increased mortgage interest rates, they do not affect all mortgage holders in Canada. The mortgage rates of many of them need not be renegotiated for anywhere from one to five years as yet. Those people who are affected by what we hope are temporary higher mortgage interest rates, just as they are in the mighty United States of America, will be assisted considerably by the members of the House if we pass the mortgage interest and property tax credit scheme promptly before Christmas so they will get the tax relief they need this year.

ALLEGED CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY TO CURB INFLATION—REASON FOR LONG RECESS

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Since the credibility of this government has been grossly undermined by the reversals in policy since the last election, and since the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have repeatedly stated that they were not aware of the state of the Canadian economy until they had fully assumed office, would the Prime Minister be specific and tell the House exactly what economic factors have caused him to continue his flip-flop policy?

Would the Prime Minister also advise the House why he waited five months to recall Parliament, when his Minister of Finance had stated that he cannot bring forth his own budget until the budget from the last Parliament has been enacted?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure which one of those questions the hon. member wants answered.

An hon. Member: Try any one.

[Mr. Axworthy.]

Mr. Clark: He was obviously trying anything he could. We felt it important to give the ministers of the new government time to learn the complexities that they were going to be facing as a new government.

An hon. Member: On the job training.

Mr. Clark: On the job training; that is quite right. That is what our system involves. We believed that it was going to be essential for the new government to take the time to learn the complexities of departmental matters on which they would be questioned here in the House of Commons. That is why we took that time over the summer to prepare ourselves, to ensure that the new government was in a position to introduce new measures that we hoped the House of Commons would deal with as quickly as possible.

Naturally, we are left with the embarrassment of some of the measures from the old government still hanging over Parliament. We hope that those can be dealt with as quickly as possible so that we can get on with passing the tax credit measure, get on with passing the freedom of information bill, and get on with passing some of the other legislation that this government prepared over the summer for introduction.

Mr. Lumley: The Prime Minister has very carefully avoided answering the first part of my question with respect to what are the economic factors that he has seen since assuming office that he did not see before.

I would remind him that even during the pre-election period, when the Prime Minister was making promises which would not only add to the over-all budgetary deficit but would be inflationary, he was also saying that there was going to be a budgetary deficit far in excess of what was actually incurred by this government.

Mr. Clark: I do apologize, Mr. Speaker. There was such a distance betwen the start of the question and its end that I overlooked the first question. We did not know the exact nature of the extent of the Government of Canada's obligations until we had an opportunity to become the government and look at information which was not then available to us. There was information in relation to the obligations, the extent and nature of activities of certain Crown corporations which was not known to the government until we had an opportunity to look at information which was not available publicly.

There was a range of other questions which, because the former government did not believe in openness of information—which we believe in—had not been available to Parliament and to the public at that time. It became available to us when we became the government. That changed our view as to the nature of the economic problems with which we are dealing, and that is part of the reason why we have taken the decision on the particular question of interest rates to support the position put forward by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

RATE OF GROWTH OF THE ECONOMY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in light of the admission by the Prime Minister that he did not know what he was talking about during the campaign—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —I would like to ask the Prime Minister when he will tell the public that he will not achieve the goals he promised the public during the campaign, that growth in the economy would reach an average of 5.5 per cent in four years.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I did say is that it was not possible for us to have the same degree of information before as after the election because the previous government did not have the same attitude concerning the publication of information as the present government. As to the economic objectives of the Government of Canada, a statement on this subject will be made by the Minister of Finance in his first budget.

Mr. Chrétien: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Considering the present difficulties of the government, does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to ask the Minister of Finance to delay his budget until he can give all the information on the economy in relation to the increase in oil prices?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we hope we shall be able to secure an agreement on matters relating to oil prices as soon as possible. We are in the middle of negotiations and discussions with the provinces. It will be much easier for us to plan a budget with such an agreement, and I hope it will be possible. However, if there is no such agreement, there will be a budget before Christmas.

THE ENVIRONMENT

OIL DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—HARMFUL EFFECT ON ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, given the failure last week of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to answer my question, would the Prime Minister please answer it?

Given the fact that the recommendations of on-site experts in the Arctic, who were engineers of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development there, have been ignored and that the Department of the Environment guidelines which recommend that all drilling be stopped in the Beaufort Sea by October 5 have been ignored, and that insiders in the whole industry have stated publicly that the Dome Petroleum drilling program is operating on the very edge of the risk factor, will the Prime Minister explain why it is that Dome Petroleum was allowed to continue its production testing in the Beaufort against all advice and common sense; and what action does the minister plan to take to ensure that a disaster such as the Mexican oil spill does not happen in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question, although I think he was a little ungenerous in the description of the answer given by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The hon. member put a question which had to do with some problems relating to administrative procedures within the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, as I recall it. That was answered by the minister and I cannot elaborate on that answer.

In relation to the question concerning the Beaufort Sea, I had heard reports of the same allegation to which the hon. member made reference. We are looking into that. I can tell the hon. member and the House that drilling in the Beaufort Sea has ceased as of October 3.

Mr. Ittinuar: My supplementary question is again directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister, then, set up a regulatory body including officials from the Department of the Environment, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and others, to oversee offshore drilling in the Arctic; and will this body ensure that future decisions concerning offshore drilling are based on technical expertise rather than political pressure?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that apparatus is now in place, and certainly the standard that will be followed by this government is that those decisions will be based upon technical expertise and not upon political pressure.

REASON GOVERNMENT ALLOWED DRILLING TO CONTINUE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I have read very carefully the answer given by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the hon. member for Nunatsiaq last week, on October 26, and I find that at no time did he give the basis for the decision in Ottawa which overruled the technical experts in the north to whom he referred.

Can he tell the House on what basis the people in Ottawa overruled the technical experts in the north in allowing production tests to continue? He talks about information and says he will give more information to this House. So far he has not answered the question. He did not answer the question on Friday, and we are still left in the dark as to why the technical experts were overruled.

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the former minister is asking me a technical question. I do not have any answer to that technical question today. I will get it and I will provide it to the House.

Mr. Allmand: Why did you not say that in the first place?

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETINGS CONCERNING SPENDING OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State. It deals with federal-provincial agreements on the teaching of the official languages and the financial commitments the federal government negotiates every five years to renew those programs. Hon. members will recall that the last agreement expired March 31 last.

Can the minister tell the House whether he has met the provincial representatives and whether negotiations are making good progress? Can he also tell us whether his government will see to it that the provinces are accountable to the Canadian public for those expenditures, the way the money is spent, the criteria that apply and the rules of the game, generally, so that all Canadians and, in particular, those who live in minority surroundings, know where those amounts of money go, what they are used for and how they are spent?

[English]

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows—and he has taken considerable interest in this particular program—there has been a hiatus of some time with respect to negotiations on the next five-year agreement.

I am pleased to report that as a result of meetings a week ago today with provincial ministers of education—this was mentioned in the communiqué published after the meeting—we have arrived at an important new understanding in the development of federal-provincial relations and support to second language and minority language education. Negotiations will now be resumed with respect to the next agreement, and I hope those negotiations will start very shortly.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the issue I raised concerned the funds paid to the provinces by the federal government in support of teaching in both official languages, and dealt mainly with the present lack of accountability of the provinces to the Canadian public, the lack of specific objectives and the necessary criteria which should be put in place so that we know exactly how these funds are spent.

Is the minister telling the House that he will hold firm to these criteria of accountability, the criteria and objectives being clearly put out to the provinces, or is he telling us that he is backing down on these things? This is what I want to know.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised important questions, particularly about the matter of accountability which had been an outstanding issue of dissent among the previous government and the provinces. I think it was creating a rather unproductive relationship in terms of negotiating the next agreement.

What we did discuss a week ago today, and what we are continuing to work on, however, are the important principles and objectives with respect to the program. Initially, there was some very strong agreement on having a package of principles and objectives to which there is unanimous support provincially and federally. Beyond that we hope we can set up a program of support which will ensure the objectives that I think would satisfy all members of the House when they meet in achieving the kind of opportunities for second language and minority language education the program was originally constructed to achieve.

PUBLIC WORKS

CHARGE-BACK PROGRAM FOR SPACE OCCUPIED BY DEPARTMENTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. During the last Parliament we advocated a revenue dependency policy for the Department of Public Works. This would be a charge-back policy to the departments of government for the space they occupy, and would be a built-in incentive for cost savings and would ensure the efficient use of government space.

Can the minister advise us if he is heading toward such a policy, what progress is being made, or if it has been forgotten?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, certainly it has not been forgotten. Since that recommendation was made, a pilot project has been under way in the Pacific region. The project is very much alive and we should be in a position to bring it forward for current consideration very soon.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

PRICING POLICIES AND COMPETITION PRACTICES OF OIL COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATION

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is public knowledge that an investigation has been commenced relating to pricing policies and competition practices amongst Canadian oil corporations. Also, it has been admitted by the Attorney General of Canada that he is considering the results of that investigation, undoubtedly in order to contemplate a potential or possible prosecution.

In view of what I have just recited, has the right hon. Prime Minister advised the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is an interested minister in this investigation, to stay away from the Attorney General of Canada while that gentleman is considering his responsibilities under the statute?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He did not have to tell me.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have given no advice to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with regard to that matter.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, in an article in the Toronto Star of Saturday there was a very revealing description of the power of the oil lobby on Parliament Hill. That article indicated that not only is the new national director of the Conservative party a former member of the company known as Imperial Oil but, indeed, two of the assistants of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are former employees of Imperial Oil.

In view of the Prime Minister's evident condoning of meetings between interested ministers and the Attorney General prior to that minister exercising his responsibility under the Combines Investigation Act, and in view of the evident proximity between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the industry, I ask the hon. gentleman whether he would not now review his position and give express directions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to stay away from the Attorney General of Canada.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are an embarrassment to Parliament.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I will not try to deal with the allegations which the hon. member could not find it within himself to make directly. Certainly, I will take a look at the matter or have a conversation with the Attorney General of Canada to see if there is any instruction which he thinks would be helpful for me to give to any minister. If the hon. member has any accusations he wants to put, I hope he will make them in a direct fashion, if he is capable of directness.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT LIABILITIES AS RESULT OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary to the Prime Minister, I would like to pursue the line of questioning of my colleague, the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas. I would ask the Prime Minister to clarify one answer. I take it he did not deny that statements were by his colleagues, prior to and during the election, that the domestic deficit was higher than it actually turned out; he is not arguing that point. But in his answer there was an allusion to something about a problem he had identified since assuming office, a hitherto unknown problem, with regard to Crown corporations affecting the deficit. I would be grateful if the Prime Minister could elaborate a little on that answer, because I find it very confusing.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the liabilities which can lie against the Government of Canada as a result of some of the obligations that appear to lie directly against certain Crown corporations.

An hon. Member: Like Via Rail.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister honestly telling the House that that line of investigation, followed as we can assume by the introduction of Bill C-13 to adjust the Public Accounts, will actually have any effect on the cash requirements of this government in terms of the domestic deficit? Is he really saying that?

Mr. Clark: What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that some of the information which became available to us after we took office, including information having to do with the potential obligation of the Government of Canada as a guarantor in relation to certain Crown corporations, changed our view as to the extent of freedom that we had as a government.

There was a long list of other surprises to us. I will try to consult with some of my colleagues, and if the hon. member would like us to present a more lurid list of them, I am sure we can arrange that.

ENERGY

SUBSIDIZATION OF PRICES IN NORTHERN CONSTITUENCIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact gasoline prices and home heating fuel prices in northern constituencies are the highest in the country, would the government consider bringing in a program of subsidization of oil and oil products in Canada's northern areas to alleviate the current injustices and discrimination against all northern residents?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Public Works, indicates that he gave that question to the hon. member to ask. But on a serious note, clearly we are, indeed, very much concerned with respect to the implications of any price increases in heating oil, gasoline and general petroleum products. These matters are under consideration. I would be glad to take the representations made by the hon. member into consideration in terms of our total energy package.

● (1450)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister of Public Works, since he has not been able himself to ask that question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

My supplementary question is to the Minister of Finance. Since the cost of living figures show that northern areas in Canada have an inflation rate almost double that of southern areas of the country, would the Minister of Finance consider, in his forthcoming budget, bringing in a program of subsidizing essential goods and services, such as stove oil, gasoline, milk and bread, to overcome the particularly hard impact of inflation in Canada's northern areas, including the Yukon?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly very sympathetic to the problems of northern residents, and I am particularly conscious of their situation because of Labrador, in my own province, which is such an area. I would certainly consider the hon. member's representation to see what might be done.

I would point out to the House that at the present time power rates in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, I believe, are subsidized by the Government of Canada because of the fact that their electricity comes from a very expensive source. It is generated by diesel power and the like. The hon. member has made a good point, and if we can do anything to help I will certainly look for a way.

PENITENTIARIES

REPORTED RIOT AT KENT INSTITUTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General confirm or deny reports that there was a riot at the Kent institution last night and tell us, if there were damages, to what extent and whether or not an investigation is going on?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can give the information that there was a prisoner in B block who at about 4 a.m. Ottawa time started a fire in his cell. The fire was put out. The inmate was returned to his cell some time later, at which time all the inmates in B block began smashing up the interior of their cells. This eventually spread to A block and C block. That is the extent of my information at the moment, except that I can indicate that everything is under lock and key, and that they are all confined to their cells.

LOTO CANADA

DISBANDING OF CORPORATION

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport tell the House whether or not it is true that some of the provinces have returned their contracts to the federal government concerning the agreement on dismantling Loto Canada with, in some cases, very important alterations?

[English]

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): No, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH PROVINCES—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO CULTURAL ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary. Can the minister tell the House whether or not it is true that, contrary to the statements he made in the last few months, we still do not have, and that barely a few weeks before the last draw, a signed agreement with the provinces on this matter?

[English]

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, all the provincial ministers have signed the agreement. I see no difficulty in the agreement, and I will be glad to table it at the first of the year.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. Could the minister tell us whether part of the agreement entailed retaining the use of the name Loto Canada, or whether there is some reference to Canada in the continued agreement on the lottery?

Mr. Paproski: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sport is saying that they do have an agreement and that Quebec has not sent back its contract asking for changes within it to the name Canada. If that is the case, I want to ask the Secretary of State if, considering the representations made last Friday, Arts Day, by the Canadian Conference on the Arts that $12 million minimum would be forthcoming from Loto Canada funds, he can assure the House that that will be the case, and those funds will be to supplement budgetary commitments already made for federal cultural institutions, as that group asked, rather than to supplant planned budgeting already in place?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows, as do many hon. members, that when the announcement was originally made by the former government with respect to the use of these funds, it was very clearly enunciated that these funds would not be taking the place of funds normally made available through the general public revenues but would, in effect, achieve further accomplishments both in the artistic field as well as in the sports field. That is very much the intention of this government.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, implicit in the minister's answer—and I thank him for it—is that those funds will go in other directions at the federal level. Considering the minister's statement of last November, that indeed the federal cultural institutions were starving for funding, and considering reports that the inquiry mentioned in the Speech from the Throne will not even begin until late spring—and it is almost a year since he made the "starving" statement—can he assure the House that there will be additional moneys forthcoming very soon in the future for federal cultural institutions?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, of late I have had a number of meetings already with representatives of the cultural institutions as well as with provincial ministers. There is very great concern, I believe, at both the federal level and the provincial level that adequate funds be made available for the very important work of these agencies. What we are trying to do is look at an expanded basis for financial support and not rely solely on one means of support which, unfortunately, to date has been very much the case.

TRANSPORT

EXTENSION OF RAIL SERVICE OVER NORTHERN CNR LINE

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It concerns his recent decision, which I welcomed, to extend train service over the northern CNR line from three days to six days. I also want to thank the government for their courtesy in making available the $2 million to $3 million to allow the service to continue.

There has been some concern expressed that we would be going from seven days of service to six days. Can the minister tell the House if there is a possibility that when the CTC and VIA Rail begin to re-examine the route structure with the possibility of bringing in a regional service that would be more akin to the requirements of the region, the seven-day service should be one of those items discussed by the CTC and VIA Rail?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, indeed, that was one of the options which was considered during the course of the deliberations on this very important subject. Of course, that would have meant postponement of the implementation of the final plan and would have entailed several disruptive factors, such as the schedules. More than 20,000 reservations had been booked, and train crews had been booked. It was virtually impossible to go along with the extension of the existing service. That was done in full consultation with Mr. Roberts of VIA Rail.

We did proceed with the implementation of a six-day week service for a six-month period. It is an interim service during which time the CTC will hold public hearings and VIA Rail will consult with various officials within the communities in an attempt to develop the best regional service to meet the needs of the northern Ontario residents who are affected.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST THAT CASE OF STEVEN TRUSCOTT BE RESTUDIED

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Justice is not in this House, I shall put my question to the Prime Minister. It may be that the question should be put to the Prime Minister, in any case.

In view of the mounting evidence that the crime of which Steven Truscott was convicted may well have been committed by someone else, and in view of mounting evidence that all aspects of this case have not been thoroughly investigated, will the federal government make a thorough study of the case to see what can yet be done to exonorate this young man, so that he will not have to live his entire life as one who is out on parole?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly consult with the Minister of Justice to determine whether there are any steps which could be taken by the Government of Canada and which should be taken in light of the information that has become, or is becoming, available. If there are steps, and if there is information, we will certainly act on that information and take those steps.

● (1500)

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for that response. Will he permit me simply to remind him that the federal government did become a party to this case in 1966 when an inquiry was ordered, and also that at the present time Steven Truscott is under the authority of the National Parole Board. In other words, there are federal angles to the case.

NATIONAL UNITY

PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL CIVIL SERVANTS IN QUEBEC REFERENDUM CAMPAIGN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. It stems from a recent press conference during which he made some rather disquieting remarks when questioned on federal civil servants taking an active part in the separatist referendum in Quebec, as when he submitted in particular that federal civil servants were free to do whatever they wanted after office hours, to the extent that this was legal. Was he giving a free hand to those who are already involved in the "yes" campaign so that they may intensify their activities, and was he by the same token asking the others to get involved in that campaign, which is contrary to section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has already suggested in this House that some federal civil servants were giving active support to the separatists, the PQ and the referendum. We have already asked the hon. member to give the names of the persons involved, if he has precise knowledge of them. I can also state that the previous government he supported introduced legislation, Bill C-60, if I am right—in which there was a specific provision, if I remember correctly, under which the section he referred to would not have applied to federal civil servants.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Prime Minister rightly stated there was no law introduced to that effect, but that is not the point. We are now caught with section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act, under which it is not a nine to five but a 24-hour a day provision precluding any political activity. Does the Prime Minister intend to ask for a legal opinion on whether political activity also includes the referendum campaign?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Public Service Commission has already requested such an opinion from the Department of Justice. I believe, and I can check on that, that the act affects support to a party and it is not clear as far as federal civil servants are affected in the case of a referendum. Strictly speaking there are no parties, but a group in support of the "yes" answer and a group in support of the "no" answer. But I can ask the chairman of the Public Service Commission and give a more precise answer to the hon. member. As far as I am concerned, I can repeat the request by my ministers for a list of the names of civil servants who are now working against the interests of the Canadian government.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—TABLING OF INTERIM REPORT ON LOCATION OF CANADIAN EMBASSY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the permission of the House to lay upon the table a copy of an interim report in both official languages from the hon. Robert L. Stanfield, special representative of the Government of Canada and ambassador at large.

[Translation]

ISRAEL—LOCATION OF CANADIAN EMBASSY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I tabled a preliminary report to government by the hon. Robert L. Stanfield, special government representative and ambassador at large on the subject of the location of the Canadian Embassy in Israel.

[Mr. Clark.]

[English]

As part of his mandate, Mr. Stanfield was asked for a recommendation on the implementation of our policy on Jerusalem in a way that would be compatible with the efforts that are being made to achieve a comprehensive peace settlement in the Middle East.

As a result of extensive consultations, Mr. Stanfield has concluded that a change in the location of the Canadian embassy in Israel could be seen as pre-judging negotiations among parties in the Middle East and might, in fact, work against progress to a just and lasting peace settlement.

The purpose of this government is to encourage that peace. Consequently, the government accepts the recommendation that no action be taken on the location of the Canadian embassy until the status of Jerusalem is clarified within a comprehensive agreement between Israel and its Arab neighbours.

We look forward, sir, to receiving Mr. Stanfield's final report so that the government might consider other matters involving our relations with the Middle East.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what we seem to have now is the latest instalment in the series of withdrawals and flip-flops which were alluded to by the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley) today. I do not suppose he knew he would be getting this recent instalment today. I must say, however, it is no surprise to the country and to Parliament that this had to come.

This is a very laconic and brief statement and I commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) for making it now, as soon as he received Mr. Stanfield's interim report. When you are going to reverse your position I suppose the best thing is to do it quickly and quietly and sit down, as the Prime Minister has done.

It would have been interesting for Parliament to know why this policy, which is judged to be misguided now, was really adopted in the first place. Did the Prime Minister really think he was helping the cause of peace in the Middle East? We recall that last January when he was visiting that area he said it would be a misguided policy. By the month of April he had changed his mind. Did he change his mind really because he thought he was helping the cause of peace? Did he think he was improving relations with the Middle East? Did he think he was making the job easier for the Canadian peacekeepers in that area? If so, why did he change his mind now? After all, Mr. Stanfield's mission was, in the Prime Minister's own words, "To find recommendations on the way to implement" that policy. We find that now Mr. Stanfield is recommending, not ways to implement it, but clearly a withdrawal from that policy.

The question Canadians must ask the government is: was this really a considered policy by the government? What did it cost? I do not mean only in terms of economic loss, which the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) has told us about, not only millions lost in real contracts but perhaps billions lost in terms of expectations. What did it cost in terms of Canada's credibility in the world?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Did it really call for an extensive tour by the right hon. member's former leader of all these various countries to find out that the policy was wrong, that it was misguided? He had been told that not only by members on this side and other parties, he had been told that by his own department. Why did he not change his mind sooner, Mr. Speaker, if there was going to be this loss of credibility, loss of face and this loss of financial considerations?

More important, and what the House would like to know, is what was the price paid to try and save the right hon. Prime Minister's face and that of his party? What price did Mr. Stanfield pay? I think we are beginning to see that there was a heavy price to pay, not only for Canada, once again in prestige and economic terms, but a price which was paid by this government in terms of reversing its policy on the move from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. This is a policy which the government of Israel was justified in believing was made in sincerity, with an intent to carry it out and with the consequent weakening of our relations with a friendly foreign country. Not only, therefore, had Mr. Stanfield the price to pay of saying that he would get his Prime Minister to change that policy, but he also had to pay a much higher cost than that, Mr. Speaker.

• (1510)

I think we had the evidence on Thursday, when we were debating the anti-boycott legislation in this House, that Mr. Stanfield obviously gave another commitment on behalf of the government. The Liberal member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) presented a bill which was talked out. This was a bill bringing in anti-boycott legislation, a bill which the House will remember was not passed last spring because the government side, which was then in opposition, refused to give unanimous consent to proceed in one day. We were told on Thursday by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), a spokesman for the Conservative government, as reported in Hansard at page 613, that:

—it is our intention to talk this bill out today because we believe the report to be presented by Mr. Stanfield will have an impact—

I suggest that that is the second price paid, Mr. Speaker; not only a withdrawal of the policy of moving the embassy and the consequent embarrassment and disappointment of our friends in Israel, but also the second price, a more serious one, of talking out anti-boycott legislation which could have been passed had that government not deliberately decided to talk it out in the name of some future pie in the sky in the New Year, we are told. But, Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. Prime Minister is sincere in saying that they want to do something in the New Year, nothing would have prevented their coming in with some different kind of legislation. I am sure the House would have given unanimous consent if the hon. Prime Minister would have wanted to improve that legislation, but at least we would have something now. So that is the second serious cost of this prime ministerial blunder.

I see you are impatient, Mr. Speaker, because the right hon. Prime Minister did not have much to say, but I think the House has a lot to say on this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think the most serious price of all paid by the Hon. Robert Stanfield is the apparent commitment he gave, and the carrying out of that commitment, to meet the PLO. There was no hint from the government that they were going to recognize the PLO. The government, in an answer to the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), lamely tried to explain that it was not really a recognition of the PLO by the government because somehow Mr. Stanfield was an ambassador extraordinary; presumably he was not representing the government when he talked to the PLO, but presumably he was when he was talking to the other countries. This new theory of international law has never really been explained by the Prime Minister. But I think from the point of view of Israel and the people in Canada who are sympathetic to Israel, the de facto recognition of the PLO by this government as a price paid by the Hon. Robert Stanfield to cover up the right hon. Prime Minister's blunder is a very serious price indeed, I think one which will have lasting effect on the relations of Canada with the Middle East.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I can only conclude that this series of reversals is a further indication of the government's incompetence in the matter of foreign affairs. Since there was a reversal between January and April and now another reversal between April and October, I wonder if the information I have received from a high official in one of these Arab countries is not correct when he reported the Hon. Robert Stanfield as having said to some of these governments, "Don't worry, we will change the policy but also we will change the Prime Minister pretty soon".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the question of the possibility of moving the Canadian embassy to Jerusalem has to have been one of the most serious decisions—and I will come to that in a minute—and possibly one of the most serious reversals that this government has been involved in since May 22.

Our position as a party has been very clear on this issue. Not only do we see the very legitimate and real interests of the people of Israel and the historical claims of Jews to the city of Jerusalem; we have also recognized the very profound historical, religious and current political claims of the Arab countries. It is by no means a one-sided case that can be made about the fate of Jerusalem. Therefore, we took the position in the election campaign that it was an irresponsible action. In the context of jeopardizing very serious peace negotiations it was possible for the Government of Canada, or for a candidate at that time for the prime ministership of Canada, to suggest that we would move our embassy unilaterally when the Camp David agreement between the two most important nations directly affected, Egypt and Isreal, had specifically said that the future of Jersualem was something to be resolved later on between the Israelis and the Arabs. We think it was a promise made irresponsibly in the campaign and repeated irresponsibly after the election.

It seems to me that we cannot simply pass these things off with the acknowledgment that an error has been made. I think responsible politics presumes that if you do not have enough information or knowledge about a position, then you do not announce a decision. That is that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It seems to me that the Progressive Conservative leader, now Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), made an irresponsible commitment involving a lot of emotional responses from a good many people of Canada, namely the Jewish community, and for understandable reasons. A good number of them thought this was a positive move. For equivalent reasons a good number of Arab Canadians had contrary views, and certainly the Arab states expressed that view as well.

I want to stress that a good deal of attention has been paid in Canada to the economic reaction. I want to underscore that the Arabs have a religious, political and historical claim that is as profound as the Jews, and it has to be recognized as legitimate. I want to say it was an irresponsible decision to make it an election campaign promise and it was even more irresponsible to carry it out in the days immediately following the campaign.

Having said that, I will come to the Prime Minister's position because I am not yet perfectly clear about it. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) may be, but if one reads the Prime Minister's statement it certainly needs some clarification for me.

Mr. Stanfield in his report is unequivocal on the point. He made the recommendation that: "It is my view the question"—please note the words—"of the relocation of the embassy must await the resolution of Jerusalem's status as part of a just and lasting comprehensive peace settlement". He said that after pointing out that the Arabs have "vital religious and political interests", as well as the Israelis.

Mr. Stanfield's position is clear. It seems to me to be the kind of position that every thinking Canadian who did not have profound, expert knowledge but elementary knowledge in the spring would have taken.

I turn to the Prime Minister's statement today, and that is what causes me concern. Unlike Mr. Stanfield, who says that the resolution of the question of the relocation has to be left to the future to be determined ultimately by a settlement reached by the states involved there, the Prime Minister used very different words in his statement. He said that "consequently the government accepts the recommendation that no action" be taken on the location of the Canadian embassy, etc. Maybe the Prime Minister will clarify this in the time we have to pose questions and receive answers. Why did he not say no decision will be reached now, no decision to move or not to move, until after the future is resolved? The implication at least is that the Prime Minister is holding to his old commitment that at some point a move will take place. If he had chosen the words of Mr. Stanfield, any possible ambiguity would have been removed.

• (1520)

Mr. Stanfield made it clear that the whole question of a move, even at some time in the future, has to be made in the context of a settlement reached by the states in the Middle East. I want to stress that my party is in full agreement with that position. It is in full agreement with Mr. Stanfield's position on this.

In conclusion, while it is clear that the future position about our embassy in the state of Israel, namely its location, has to be left until the future of Jerusalem is in fact determined by the states in the area, I wish to underscore the rights of the Jewish community in Canada to put as much pressure as any other group on the Government of Canada for what they believe in. That is very important.

I want to take this opportunity to dissociate my party from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau), who said vis-a-vis the Jewish community that they have "opened the way to growing anti-Semitism"—and that is from the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons—because of the pressure they are putting on the Government of Canada. I want to say the Jews of Canada have the same right as anyone else to push as forcefully as they wish, as forcefully as any Canadian citizen, for any policy they want, whether the Government of Canada ultimately agrees with it. To suggest the contrary is to indulge, or seem to indulge, in the course of action to which the Leader of the Opposition was objecting. I hope he reconsiders his words.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that under the rules we may now ask questions. I must take great exception to the statement by the leader of the New Democratic Party. It is a question of privilege on which I will ask Your Honour's guidance as to when it should be raised. However, I want to say now that he was presumably quoting from some press report which was not quoted accurately. It was not even given in an interview, but at a background briefing; in short, an interview in which I was asked about the actions of Mr. Moshe Dayan.

It is just as unfair for the leader of the New Democratic Party to take it out on me now when he knows I do not have a right under the rules to answer for perhaps a press release issued by some other members of the Canadian community. If the leader of the NDP had a point to make which is not on this particular policy, he should have chosen another way to make it.

My question to the Prime Minister is simply this. I indicated at the beginning of my remarks that Mr. Stanfield had a mandate to say how we could implement the government's policy. We hear now that implementation is not proceeding. The question I have for the Prime Minister is: has the policy been changed or is it merely the implementation of it which has been delayed?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention now to move the Canadian embassy in Israel to Jerusalem.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the word "now" is very, very crucial. I take it, and the Prime Minister can answer me, that the policy has not been changed, that they still want to move the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, but they will not do it now. These are the words he used; I ask the Prime Minister to clarify them.

Mr. Clark: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, what I should have said is "it is not now our policy". We do not intend to move the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. If there is a just and lasting peace settlement that settles and clarifies the question of Jerusalem, that may allow us to reopen the question. Until there is such a clarification within the context of a just and lasting peace settlement, the Canadian embassy will stay in Tel Aviv.

CONSTITUENCY RECORDS ACT

PRESERVATION AND SURRENDER OF CONSTITUENCY RECORDS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-486, respecting the preservation and surrender of constituency records.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which appeared before and was once debated. It deals with the passing from one member to his or her successor any information, especially original documents which might be received from constituents.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ASSISTANCE FOR CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-487, to amend the Federal Business Development Bank Act (corporate objects).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, this bill is drafted so that any funds which the Federal Business Development Bank might loan to clients would be restricted to clients who are Canadian citizens, landed immigrants or companies beneficially owned by Canadian citizens or landed immigrants.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PREVENT DISCRIMINATION AGAINST PERSONS SUFFERING FROM CONTROLLED ILLNESS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-488, to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (controlled illness).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I perceive there may be a weakness in the Canadian Human Rights Act in that it does not properly define people with certain handicaps. This is to define more clearly certain handicapped people as those with a disease which can be controlled by drugs in order that they will not be discriminated against.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF POLL OFFICERS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-489, to amend the Canada Elections Act (partisan poll officers).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to overcome a very obvious inequity in the Canada Elections Act and to bring it more in tune with modern times, such as legislation in Ontario, Quebec and other provinces where the polling clerk and DRO are required to be from two different political parties.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AND CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO RESTRICT PERIOD WITHIN WHICH BY-ELECTIONS MUST BE HELD

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-490, to amend the House of Commons Act and the Canada Elections Act (by-elections).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill which I hope will one day pass. It restricts the time the government would have for calling a byelection. It should be noted that Canada has the slowest procedure for calling a byelection of any country in the democratic world. This would restrict the time in which this must come about.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT PROHIBITING PUBLICATION OF IDENTITY OF ACCUSED PERSONS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-491, to amend the Criminal Code (reporting names of accused).

He said: This is a bill introduced almost in the sense of a devil's advocate but on what I consider to be a very important topic, one which ought to be considered, and that is that the name of an accused should not be allowed to appear in the press until the accused is convicted.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 66.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

DOMINION COAL BOARD

Question No. 66—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who (a) is the president (b) are the vice-presidents of the Dominion Coal Board?

2. What is the annual salary in each case?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. The Dominion Coal Board was dissolved by the Dominion Coal Board Dissolution Act which was proclaimed in force on May 1, 1970. Subsequently, some of the staff, duties and responsibilities of the Dominion Coal Board were transferred to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

2. Not applicable.

[Mr. Dick.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1979-80

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY FOR 1979-80

The House resumed, from Friday, October 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-10, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1979-80, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committe on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, that spontaneous outburst by my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) reminds me of a 90 years old gentleman visiting here from Britain a few days ago who was shocked when he heard everybody clapping; he wondered what had happened to the Canadian Parliament and its following of the tradition of the British house where nobody is ever heard to clap.

The reason I participate in this debate is that along with a lot of other Canadians I am concerned by the fact that we are going outside the country once again to borrow very large sums of money, in this case about $7 billion, knowing full well that if we did not have a trade balance that carried a deficit of about $8 billion we would probably not have to borrow that money.

In the second place, like anyone who has to go to Household Finance we are going to find as a people that the interest rate is likely to be disastrous, that we will have to pay at least the prime interest rate, probably more, and that part of the reason we are paying it is because the Americans cannot add. It is really extraordinary that the governor of the Bank of Canada should appear before the finance committee and tell us we have to raise our prime rate because the Americans raised theirs, only for the public to find that the Americans raised their interest rate because they had made a mistake in their calculation of the money supply in their country.

So, Mr. Speaker, if I go to Household Finance for money to buy a television set, I have to suffer because of the inability of some people in America to do arithmetic. It seems idiotic that I should have to pay for a mistake the Americans made. We talk about Canadian identity. Surely our financial structure has not got much if we depend on another country to do the proper calculations and come up with the appropriate interest rate I should pay on money I borrow to buy a television, a car, or whatever else I might buy in my own country. I believe most Canadians, like myself, disagree with the proposition that we must become continental in setting the price of our money, interest rates, the price of oil, of cars, and of almost every other commodity we use just because the American set it.

The government is now proposing to borrow this money knowing full well we are not following the philosophy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) urging privatization, because privatization, he believes, is the best way of doing things. This philosophy goes out of the window. There is no competition among the banks. We do not find one bank charging one price and another bank charging another. Once a decision is made by the Bank of Canada, all the banks raise their interest rates to the same rate because they all borrow from the same source. All these banks are making a good profit and some of them could probably afford to drop by half a per cent the amount they charge on their loans for houses, farms and so on with a little push from us. That would be possible and they still would be able to make a profit. But they have no intention of doing so. They decide, as a great monopoly, that everybody has to pay the same, no matter what bank they go to.

It is not without interest that some of the staff of the House of Commons have recently decided that they will no longer deal with ordinary banks. Many of the staff in this building have decided to put their money into the Province of Ontario Savings Office. I have never heard of it before myself, but it has a small branch on Sparks Street. The reason they give for doing so is that though there are no frills, no big buildings, there are no extra charges, they get the interest on their money and if they want to write cheques against the whole of the amount in their account it does not cost them extra. I do not know whether the Province of Ontario Savings Office is making a huge profit or not, but even that does not constitute real competition.

The other day we got into a discussion with the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry (Mr. Huntington). It was an interesting discussion and I may have missed some of it, but I am not sure why he made an interjection. He did so after I had stated that according to the advertisements put out by the pulp and paper companies we should not burn down the forests of Ontario, because in Ontario out of every dollar that changes hands in the province, 27 cents comes directly or indirectly from the forest industry.

Apparently the minister disagreed with that statement. According to him, the major factor in the Canadian economy was the manufacturing sector. Well, Mr. Speaker, he has only been minister for a very short time and he probably does not know much about the situation yet. I listened to him debating on television with the former minister of industry, trade and commerce and I think he ought to take a few lessons before he starts lecturing anyone else.

I was surprised to find that the primary industry is not the big producer in Canada I thought it was, but neither is the manufacturing industry. According to Statistics Canada, the manufacturing industry dropped from 26 per cent in 1970 to 19 per cent now in terms of our gross national product. Its production is going down, not the other way, and this is very much reflected in the deficit we have in our estimated balance of payments for this year, which will be about $8 billion. That figure may increase before the end of the year.

Surprisingly enough, the largest sector in this country is the third sector, the service industry. More transactions take place in that industry, and it is in that industry that the largest percentage of the gross national product is involved. Its production is considerably greater than that of the manufacturing industry of this nation, and it is also much greater than that of the primary industry.

If we want to eliminate our $8 billion estimated balance of payments deficit—and I am sure the minister would like to do that—there is a way of doing it. In this country today we are producing about 1.5 million ounces of gold. That gold was produced by the same mines at about $35 an ounce not too long ago, and the government was subsidizing $15, $20 and up to about $55 an ounce. On the average the country lost about $15 on the gold it was subsidizing, but it is interesting to note that at the end of the emergency gold mines assistance program Canada held enough gold and the increase in the price of gold was sufficient that we were able in one swoop and with a very small amount of gold to write off the total deficit of emergency gold mines assistance. The amounts over 15 years were considered sufficient to keep the mining industry in operation.

Not long ago the Ontario government, the federal government and the municipalities involved participated in the Kirkland Lake area in a magnetometer survey, an electronic survey involving ground evaluation and magnetometer and electromagnetic surveys. As a result the maps for that area now show that there is considerably more wealth in the ground in the Kirkland Lake area than has been mined.

If the Minister of Finance was to decide to mine gold again, he would have to mine only 20 million ounces a year to eliminate the balance of payments deficit. Gold is being mined today in the mines which are already in operation. According to estimates the cost of production is about $115 an ounce. That gold is now selling for something over $400 Canadian. If we were to take 20 million ounces plus the cost of production, we could wipe out the total trade deficit we have, the whole balance of payments deficit, for the next year. This is possible. The government would have to make the decision that it would be its development and that it would mine the gold for the specific purpose of getting rid of the balance of payments. It would mean that we would not be out borrowing in the market. We would not be out looking for loans in the countries of the world, including the United States and Europe. We would be able to balance our payments through the simple operation of mining gold.

When we talked about the gold bullion coin, immediately the people in the Department of Finance tore out their hair because of all the work they had done on the Bretton Woods Agreement. I understand that we are going to discuss the Bretton Woods Agreement shortly. The Bretton Woods Agreement was drawn up after the war to get rid of the gold standard. It resulted eventually in the establishment of the International Monetary Fund. It was decided that the base of international currency was to be the American dollar. A new unit of borrowing was established. That meant that United States banks lent so much money around the world that if those loans were called, there would be bankruptcies. It is interesting to know that the federal reserve in the United States is smaller than the loan to one country, Turkey. Turkey owes American banks $13 billion. The federal reserve fund is only $9 billion. If the banks were to call that particular loan, obviously the federal reserve fund would be bankrupt. That would mean that the banks in the United States would start to fall because the only thing propping them up is the federal reserve insurance.

That will not happen because the secretary of state and the secretary of defence in the United States will not allow that to happen. If Turkey was put into bankruptcy, Turkey would no longer be in the NATO camp. Therefore, there obviously will not be any effort to collect that loan. In fact, the American people will eventually pay off the loan for defence purposes. The International Monetary Fund did not work. It was set up by people like the minister in charge of small business. They really did not understand the whole problem or its ramifications. They really believed that people would be able to trade on script forever. That meant that the United States was able to print money like it was going out of style, to the point where Nixon, when he was president of the United States, had to declare that there would no longer be a reclaiming of American dollars for gold. When he said that the reclaiming of those bills for gold could no longer be done, that meant that those dollars would never be back in the United States and would in effect be floating around in Europe to be used for whatever purpose the Europeans desired.

It is very interesting to note that those Eurodollars which probably carried an actual value of six cents or seven cents on the dollar were used not long ago by the Reichbank in Germany to buy all the gold that the United States put on the market. The Reichbank bought the total amount, and it would not have mattered what the price was. The bank could have paid $500 or $600 an ounce, it really did not make any difference, because the gold was worth something. The paper was hardly worth the cost to print it.

The Minister of Finance is obviously not going to consider the mining of gold. He is not going to recognize the interest in gold because in financial circles it is considered to be a disaster to look at a base in gold today. However, he really should look at how some countries have balanced their payments. We sell our wheat to Russia. Until very recently Russia has paid us with gold, and we bought that gold at $35 an ounce when gold was selling on the open market at considerably higher prices. Now Russia is asking a number of countries to bid on supplying their currencies against gold on the international market. That will mean that Russia will be selling its gold for acceptable currency with which Russia can buy commodities from other countries, such as our wheat, and give us in return the currencies of other countries.

The reason the Russians have not played around with transferring roubles to Canada and establishing the value of the rouble was very simple. They did not want to debase their own currency. They did not want to put their currency against that of any country in the world. For years they have mined gold and used it as their method of external exchange and foreign trade. They have not played around with the rouble on international money markets. This means, of course, that whatever the value of the rouble, it is not devalued by putting it against any other currency in the world. South Africa has mined gold at great cost, I am sure. I am sure that they have mined gold at a considerably higher price than the $35 they were getting two years ago for that commodity. They mined it simply because they could go to the international marketplace and buy the goods, services and all their needs in such a way as to balance their trade with the gold they produced.

I am sure that we in this country are in a position to produce very easily the 20 million ounces of gold which we would need to balance our payments so that we do not end up with a deficit and have to borrow money. Any sensible government would take means to protect its economy. For instance, one could stop the flow of money out of the country. It was very interesting to read in a U.S. paper that the Americans are very concerned about the control which Canadians have on their money supply. Most people do not realize that we send out more money than we bring into this country. We own many of the financial institutions in the United States through our control of insurance companies. We are the best savers in the world. When we are at the height of prosperity we still prepare for a depression. When people save, they save themselves into a depression. Much of this is done by sending our money out of the country through insurance companies and depositing it in another country at its face value, to be used by that country, such as the United States. We allow Americans to use the inflationary period to reap the benefits of that money, and we are still covered for the face value of the insurance policy which we bought when our dollar was worth $1 rather than the 40 cents or 50 cents it is now worth.

We are probably not going to mine gold, but I would like the minister to look at this question because I am sure he has some new ideas. I am sure he is well aware of the fact that the mining industry is perturbed by the fact that gold is not being mined. One of the reasons they cannot mine gold is that an immense outlay of capital is necessary for any mining company to go into operation today, not so much for underground mining because in many cases the mines are there, the reserves are known and so are the values. Samples have been taken and diamond drilling has been done. All possible ways have been explored to ascertain the value of that mine. In fact, all these things have been done in general years ago. But one of the expenses will be the building of a mill, and to make that kind of expenditure, it is necessary for the government to step in.

I am glad to see the Minister responsible for DREE (Mr. MacKay) here. Perhaps the minister will have to give some consideration to providing a long range financing structure for the establishment of mills. I see in this country the establishment of a big mill in a mining community, the establishment of a custom mill, and the government would be the only entity which the mining community would trust because it is generally believed by the mining community that all mining companies cheat. I worked in the gold mining industry for 15 years as an underground miner and I also agree that generally mining companies cheat and are dishonest. They have nothing to recommend them. Of course, that can be corrected. They do not trust each other, and certainly I did not trust them when I was a miner. I struck against them many times. I did not believe their financial statements because I figured they were loaded against me as a worker. Workers still believe that.

The gold mining industry as had a bad reputation. However, over the last 15 or 20 years they have been closely supervised by the government. Because their books have been looked at by the government, because all emergency gold mining assistance was paid only after the mine showed the government its books, I am sure the situation which I knew 25 years ago has changed. I think that now those mines can be trusted, but I believe they are doubtful as to whether they can trust each other. The same is true of cobalt. They send their assays to a mill owned by the provincial government, and they send their ores there which are tested. The mining company which sends its ores there knows full well it will get exactly what they sent; there is no question about the honesty of that particular mill. But there have always been questions about some of the other custom mills.

However, in my opinion, the government cannot guarantee the price of gold. To do that, it would have to go back to the gold standard; it would have to establish the gold standard for Canada, and people are not yet ready for that. Most individuals in the world who are well off today have gone back to the gold standard. They have decided it is better to buy the Kruger Rand, the Maple Leaf coin or the old English guinea because governments back those coins so far as their quality and weight are concerned and they are better deals than the American dollar, treasury notes, mortgages, debentures, or other such things.

For that reason, the price of gold has risen to unreasonably high levels. I suggest that if this government enters into the mining industry and finds a way to start operating gold mines, it would be able to buy offshore oil without the price escalating one iota. Probably the total reason for the inflationary rise in our dollar is the escalation of the price of gold, and that is probably close to the inflationary factor in the world today. The government might find that they would get the same amount of oil for one ounce of gold today as they did ten years ago when the price of oil was considerably lower, and so was the price of gold. It might even be able to buy more oil than it did then. But it seems to me that we should not let those people in the Department of Finance who have studied under Keynes, who believe sincerely in the Bretton Woods Agreement and who were involved in the setting up of the International Monetary Fund, dominate our thinking on what you and I would like as a hedge against inflation. Rather than going out and borrowing $7 billion at 14 per cent tomorrow, we could use a small amount of that money for developing a gold mining industry in conjunction with the government so that we as Canadians could use that gold to make the lot of future generations in Canada much easier as a result of the elimination of much of our foreign debt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I must inform the House that if the minister speaks at this time, he will close the debate.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no more speeches. Having waited so long for the end of this debate, I will not speak for very long, but I think I have to reply to some of the points that were made.

Let me come back first to the principle of this bill to authorize the government to borrow $7 billion up to the end of this financial year. One of the features of this bill is that if $7 billion is not borrowed by the government by March 31, 1980, the borrowing authority will die and we will have to come back to the House to ask for further authority to borrow funds.

Why do we have to borrow $7 billion? We have to borrow that amount because the previous government—I know hon. members opposite do not like to hear the previous government mentioned, are ashamed to hear it mentioned—brought down a budget last year. In that budget there is a deficit. What is the deficit? Well, the deficit in the budget brought in by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) last November 16 was $11,300 million.

If one spends $11,300 million more than one has, one has to get the $11,300 million from somewhere. Where does one get it from? One gets it from people who lend money. How does one get people to lend money? You ask the House to give the authority to borrow the necessary funds. Why are we not asking the House for authority to borrow $11,300 million? It is because we did not need the authority to borrow $11,300 million. Due to the authorities given by this House in previous years, it was tucked away here and tucked away there, in this pocket here or that little cubbyhole there. It was borrowing authority that had never been cancelled by the House. So we discovered that we only needed to borrow or to ask the House to give us authority to borrow $7 billion, because the government had previous authority from other sources to borrow the rest. So we are only asking the House to give us the authority to borrow what appears to be absolutely necessary, although we could have come in, as our Liberal predecessors did last year, and asked the House to authorize $10 biilion.

It was hon. members opposite who are now members of the official opposition that asked this House in the income tax legislation earlier in 1979 to authorize them to borrow $10 billion. So we are coming in and asking the House for the authority to borrow $3 billion less than the official opposition requested when it was the government. Lo and behold, members of the official opposition are on their feet condemning us; it is a shocking thing we have done, to ask this House to let us borrow $7 billion. It is dastardly; it is absolutely astounding that we have the audacity to do this!

If we do not do it, where will we get the money to spend in accordance with the estimates that they prepared for the House? Are we going to manufacture it out of thin air?

Mr. Peters: From gold mining.

Mr. Crosbie: Where are we going to get it? Do we ask members to surrender the gold from their teeth? I hear the hon. gentleman talking about gold mining. We had to ask the House to authorize this $7 billion borrowing, because we are carrying out the budget left to us by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

I was shocked and amazed. I will not describe it with an adjective because I want to get on with everybody in the House, particularly in view of the fact that they take so long when they are discussing a bill. I will not describe how unusual that behaviour is. We are talked at for four days because we asked for $7 billion to do the job that hon. gentlemen opposite wanted $10 billion authority to do. Certainly it is most peculiar. One would almost think that they are playing partisan politics.

An hon. Member: Never, never.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. Crosbie: I would never suspect them of doing that. Let us look at some of the things that were said by hon. gentlemen opposite. It reminded me of the old admonition that the criminal always returns to the scene of his crime. That is just what hon. gentlemen did; they returned to the scene of their crimes. They are chastising us because we asked for $7 billion of borrowing authority. They had the—what can one call it? They had the unmitigated gall—

An hon. Member: That is putting it mildly.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, that is putting it mildly. They had the unmitigated gall to say that we should not ask for this borrowing authority before the budget. They came here some 12 months ago to ask for some borrowing authority before they brought down a budget and before they presented any estimates to the House. The House had no estimates before it. We are asking for a borrowing authority. Not only is there a budget of last November, a year ago, but the estimates have been before the House since before the House was dissolved, if I remember correctly. So all the estimates are before the House, and the supplementary estimates.

Everyone knows how we plan to spend the money, there is no confusion about that.Yet it is suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, such as the new finance critic—where was he when he was needed? Where was he when he should have been minister of finance? Where was he when he should have been putting his new views before the people of Canada? Where was he for the last four or five years? He was relegated to another role. Certainly he was not in cabinet, and now he is being trotted out. He is being trotted out because the hon. member for Saint-Maurice is afraid to get up in the House and ask a financial question. He dare not ask one, knowing how silly he will sound if he does. The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) was the one who said that we should not get borrowing authority because we do not have a budget yet.

I suppose there is not much point in getting into the debate on interest rates at this stage, although a lot of members opposite raised it. We will have other occasions. As a matter of fact, I have been attacked in the House because it was alleged that I did not want to go before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

An hon. Member: When did you want to go?

Mr. Crosbie: It was wrongly alleged that I did not want to go there until after Governor Bouey had been there. I did not want to go there until Governor Bouey had been there because Governor Bouey wanted to go before I was there. He wanted to do as had always been done in the past, to appear first and the minister would appear after. But I am more than willing to go. I am going to be there tomorrow morning.

We had a motion here today to allow the whole matter to be televised. These ferocious lions opposite have been attacking me because I will not go before the House of Commons finance committee, implying that I am afraid to answer their questions. We want the television cameras there so that the people of Canada can see what is being said and asked there.

We requested that and moved a motion today. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) moved the motion. The member who accused me in the House of refusing to go before the committee, a member from Montreal, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), said no and would not allow the motion to be approved.

I am neither afraid to go before the committee nor afraid to go before the committee televised. But apparently the hon. gentlemen in the official opposition do not want that. They do not want the people of Canada to see the clarity of my answers, the way in which I handle their questions, and the way in which I will point out to them what they said a few months ago, a few weeks ago, a year ago, two years ago, and what the hon. member for Saint-Maurice said and did not say. I could stand up in this House any day of the week and just copy the answers of the former minister of finance.

An hon. Member: You have done that.

Mr. Crosbie: No, I have not needed to do that. I have been able to dream up the same reasons myself! I say that I hope hon. gentlemen tomorrow will allow us to have television cameras in this committee.

One of the hon. ladies from Vancouver talked about the Titanic. I guess it is like the Titanic. We have a crew over here that is pumping her out. The Titanic was on her way down, if we want to compare the Canadian economy to the Titanic, and the captain and the crew over here are pumping her out as fast as we can. When we are able to bring in our fiscal policy to complement the monetary policy, then we will get Canada on the way again. We are not expecting that governor Bouey and his monetary policy can do this job. It cannot be done with monetary policy alone. It has to be done with a combination of monetary policy and fiscal policy.

Two great things which are so hurting the economy of this country and causing the huge budgetary deficit which we must start eliminating in a healthy manner are overspending and too much tax reduction, leading to a great deficit. That must be cut back if there is going to be a chance to get ahead with the huge deficit in the balance of payments in our international account. That has got to be dealt with. These things take time. What is the good of hon. gentlemen getting up in the House and saying that we should not pay interest, that we should not pay dividends to outside investors, that we should stop doing this? So what? If we stop doing this right now, if from tomorrow onward we pay no extra interest or no extra dividends to outside investors, we would still have to pay those who have already invested and lent us money. We would still have this problem. It would still be a problem for another two, three, four or five years. We were a long time getting to this position, and we are going to be a pretty long time getting out of it. It is not something anyone can cure overnight.

The hon. gentlemen from the NDP say that we should stop this, that we should stop foreign investment and that we should stop borrowing more money abroad. What are we supposed to do? Are we supposed to wave a magic wand so that we can suddenly stop paying out these billions of dollars which Canadians and governments in Canada owe to foreign investors and foreign lenders? We cannot do that. This is a problem that nobody has a magic wand to cure. Since 1945 this country has been allowing itself to become more and more economically dependent on the United States of America. It is not something that started on June 5 when we became the government; that is a situation which has been building up and building up for the last 30 or 40 years. Now 70 per cent of our exports go to the United States and 70 per cent of our imports come from the United States. We have a lot of our industry owned by the Americans and outside investors. We borrow huge sums outside Canada. So that is not something we can reverse overnight. That is not something we will reverse this year. That is not something that can be reversed this year and next year together. It will not be reversed the year after or the year after that either. It is something which we start with now, and if we are successful we may have a good chance at starting a reversal and bringing the current account deficit down over the next four or five years.

That is our message to the Canadian public. We cannot undo all this damage overnight, no one can. There is no magic wand. That is the course we will start on. Because if we do not start somewhere we will never get there. If one does not start on the road, one will never get to the end of it. I will not go into any more detail now, it is not the proper time. We will have lots of time to debate that matter in the coming budget debate.

I was chastised because I was a bit lighthearted when I debated the introduction of this bill. While debating in this House, I try to enjoy the debate, to poke some fun at the other side and so on. A number of sourpusses opposite got up and attacked me as though there was something unhealthy or wrong with trying to enjoy oneself when debating a measure in this House and trying to show one's sense of humour. God knows, I have little to laugh about. If I cannot get up and attempt a jest or two in this House, I will be in pretty bad shape. It will be pretty gloomy.

As the hon. gentleman from British Columbia pointed out the other day, I was not looking happy, and I explained the reason why. I went through this before, starting back in 1972. I did not smile for three years while I was minister of finance in Newfoundland. Now I am trying a different approach and I am being attacked in the House for taking this matter all too lightly. If the Canadian Minister of Finance must go around looking like the hunchback of Notre Dame, I will do it to avoid being attacked. You have seen my last smile or chuckle in this House, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member for Saint-Maurice got up the other day and said there was nothing funny about this matter. He said that the situation was not funny. The hon. member should certainly know that the situation is not funny because he left me this unfunny situation. If I am to listen to his advice, I will have to be lugubrious. One must be very lugubrious if one is to be Minister of Finance in this House. From now on "lugubriousness" is the order of the day.

What else is there? Did anybody else say anything of any note? The hon. member for Saint-Maurice said that the countries that have oil do not charge the full price for their oil. He gave the example of Venezuala. That may be true. I have not checked out Venezuela, but I know that the United Kingdom has lots of oil in their North Sea, and that if anybody visits the United Kingdom they will find out what they charge for oil and gasoline. The western industrialized countries that have their own indigenous supplies of oil are paying the full international price. That will come to us over the next three or four years, also under our carefully worked out policy, which will be expanded on in every detail once the final flourishing touches are put to it after the first ministers have met.

We will tackle the pricing of oil because it was never attacked by our predecessors. We know that until that problem is tackled and resolved there will not be any major improvement in our economic activity. It cannot be done until we have dealt fairly with Alberta and with this country and put before the people of Canada, and had accepted by them, a policy that will lead us in three to four years' time—always keeping in mind U.S. prices—to the full value of our oil and gas products. We are going to tackle that problem. We are not going to evade it. We do not want to do that, because the Canadian public do not want cosmetic improvements, they want action.

I want a budget, Mr. Speaker. I have been waiting since June 5 to have a chance to bring a budget into this House. I plead with hon. members opposite to help me in doing that by passing, for example, this legislation, after reasonable discussion and debate, and the bills remaining from the last budget of the previous minister of finance, so that we have the decks clear and can get on with discussing it.

If that can be done within a reasonable period of time, I am hoping to bring a budget into this House before the end of November. My budget will outline what we think the fiscal and monetary answers are to the problems of this country. I do not want people to think that the solutions will not cause some hurt. There is no painless way to overcome inflation or these other economic problems we face in Canada. We only hope that the process will be as short as possible. We will have a budget as soon as this honourable House permits us to have a budget and to get on with it.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said he had no objection to deficit financing. That is a well known fact and I will not even comment on it. We know that the hon. members in the NDP have no objection to deficit financing. It is the only kind of financing they understand.

After having been criticized by hon. members opposite for not going to the House of Commons finance committee and after their having said how eager they were to have Governor Bouey and myself come to the committee, the other afternoon, in the middle of this debate, an hon. member moved that the debate adjourn. He interrupted Governor Bouey in his testimony before the finance committee, and interfered with all the questioners because we were brought back to the House. As a result, an hour to an hour and a half's time was lost in questioning Governor Bouey. That shows that perhaps it was not strict impartiality with which they were approaching this matter.

The hon. member from Saskatchewan who is sometimes called "Nasty Nystrom" or "Nosy Nystrom"—I have forgotten the name of his riding—said that I had had a conversion on the road to Damascus. Apparently I am allowed to move there. The hon. member said he did not want the government to borrow $7 billion and he accused me of being a right-winger. I say that the hon. member is a "left-footer". He wanted to know why we should need to borrow $7 billion.

I would like to know what the NDP would like us to cut out of our budget to offset this $7 billion in spending. Should we cut out the social security cheques? Should we do away with the child tax credit? Should we do away with payments to veterans? Is that what the hon. gentlemen of that party want us to cut to make up the $7 billion? We are borrowing this money to carry out these programs. The hon. member did not say exactly why we do not need this $7 billion, and he would not tell me what to cut out of the expenditures.

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), who is not here today, talked about the arterial road water supply system in the riding of St. John's West. I plead guilty to giving my constituents good service. I can promise them that if they keep returning me to this chamber, as long as I have a breath left in my body I will certainly do the best I can for my constituents in St. John's West, just as the hon. member is doing for his constituents in the riding of Gander-Twillingate. But just because the hon. member is not doing as well as I am, there is no need for him to point a finger in scorn at me. The only advice that I can give to the people in his riding is that they get rid of a member who cannot get them as much as the member for St. John's West can, and try and do better. I have to admit that it took seven to eight years before those expenditures were made on this arterial road, the metropolitan water supply system and the like. I can also say to the member for Gander-Twillingate that if he needs a hand to find his way around the new government, give me a call. The hon. member is a good friend of mine, and I can remember when we were together in previous times. He ran for our party in the provincial election in 1971.

Mr. Peters: Which party?

Mr. Crosbie: He ran for the Conservative party. It was after my conversion. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate converted to the PC's, he reconverted to the Liberals and God knows where he is now. He is reconstituted somewhere. It would do the hon. gentlemen opposite some good to get converted. I suggest they come over here and see what it is like and get off that left foot.

I think that I have pretty well touched on everything, Mr. Speaker. There was a lot of talk about loan sharks and the like but I will let that subject go until another time. The member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) asked "Who cares?" Obviously the one who cares is me. I am asking the House to provide the $7 billion because we care. Next year we hope to approach the House for less. That will be part of our approach to the economic problems of Canada.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said this afternoon that we are paying high interest rates because there was a mistake in the money supply figures in the United States of America. That is absolute, unadulterated twaddle. There was a mistake made in the United States in the money supply figures, but that does not mean that they would not have raised their interest rates in any event. The Citibank raised its interest rate to 15.25 per cent last Friday, just after that mistake had been discovered. If the Americans would drop their interest rates this week, we would be able to consider where we are and hopefully drop ours. But just because they made a mistake in adding up the total of their money supply several weeks ago, has nothing to do with what interest rates are here today in Canada.

Nobody in the opposition asked a question today about whether the seven economists quoted in The Globe and Mail on October 29 were correct when they said that Canada may be able to escape double digit inflation. We did not hear any questions like that. Nobody on the other side asked whether these economists were right when they warned against overemphasizing energy prices in considering inflation. When we listen to hon. gentlemen opposite we might think that if energy prices go up, the cost of living is going to go out of sight. These seven economists—and there will be a hundred more to join them—say we should not overemphasize the importance of energy prices in considering inflation. The Globe and Mail article reports these economists as giving the following warning:

—in the consumer price index itself, energy prices have a direct weight of only 6.2 per cent, equal to the weight assigned to sales of tobacco and alcohol.

Let us get this in prespective. Hon. members on the other side of the House should not get hysterical. Let us keep this in perspective. I refer particularly to those members who were once in the government. They were there for 16 years so they should have learned something. The article continues:

Various other items have a far greater importance, such as food (21.5 per cent), housing (34.1), clothing (10.1) and transportation (15.8).

The economists point out that when we talk about increases in energy prices we should keep it all in perspective and that other matters are far more important in causing the cost of living to go up.

Mr. Speaker, 76 per cent support our mortgage proposal. I did not make that up; that is the result of the Gallup poll. It is the mortgage and property tax credit plan that hon. gentlemen opposite have been scoffing at for the last three or four days, particularly the hon. member from Manitoba. As I say, 76 per cent support the mortgage proposal—76 per cent, Mr. Speaker. I hope hon. gentlemen are going to help us get it through the House, Mr. Speaker, so that we can have it all in effect by Christmas.

The Bank of America predicts that Canada's economy will show moderate acceleration in 1980 after three years of more modest growth. They approve what we are doing in Canada. A report in the Toronto Star of October 19 refers to the Bank of America's opinion that this government has taken the following action:

—announced plans to encourage the development of a free-market economy and to reduce the role of the public sector.

This has resulted in spending cuts, a reduction of government transfers, and lower taxes, all of which bode well for the long-term prospects of the Canadian economy.

That is the view of the mighty Bank of America, Mr. Speaker. The bank also expressed the view that spending should accelerate in Canada next year, bolstered by continuing profit growth. The Bank of America has more faith in Canada than hon. gentlemen opposite. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, but I just have a small selection here. The October 26 edition of The Globe and Mail had an editorial in support of the attempts we are making to get this economy back on the track.

I have here an article by a rare bird, a Liberal, who gave his views frankly and honestly. I believe Mr. David Greenspan is a Liberal. He ran for them, so he must be a Liberal. I do not know whether he would run for them now. He is a Toronto lawyer and author of the report of the federal-provincial land prices study done for the government. He gives the mortgage tax credit plan full support, saying that a mortgage plan will help tenants acquire new homes and owners to carry existing houses. I would ask hon. gentlemen to read this, particularly those in the official opposition. This is their expert whom they appointed to head a royal commission, the federal provincial land prices study, and who supports this plan fully. In this article he wrote:

A mortgage relief scheme would help not only one large group of tenants to acquire new housing, but also homeowners to carry their homes. They are struggling with the triple whammy of high interest rates, high house prices and high mortgage amounts (made possible by low downpayment requirements).

He went on to deal with some of the objections that have been made to the scheme. He wrote:

Mortgage-relief schemes will continue to be attacked, by bureaucrats, economists and upper-middle-class trendies.

That is the group we have been hearing from across the House—the "upper middle class trendies" with their shot cuffs and whatnot, their lace cuffs. They are against this mortgage tax credit scheme of ours. When we come to that bill I will deal with this article more fully. I just want to point it out to hon. gentlemen now in the hope they will change and be more helpful at that time.

I think that is all I should say at this time, Mr. Speaker. I will note the points worth noting made by hon. gentlemen opposite. This will not take too long. Quite seriously, Mr. Speaker, I will try to keep my ears open to hear what they are suggesting that is worthy of an attempt to carry out. I shall be glad to have any advice from them privately any time they want to give it. I hope that by working together—we will not always agree—and with hearty debate, this House of Commons will be able to do something for the people of Canada that will be of some value as long as it lasts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, on division, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Knowles: It must be the same speech!

Mr. Crosbie: No, Mr. Speaker, this is strictly attending to business in my new morose, lugubrious style.

This is a piece of legislation, which I will be moving should have second reading and be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, over which I do not want to take too long but just give some of the main measures contained in the legislation. Essentially the bill contains the income tax measures of the last budget of our predecessor administration. It was introduced in the budget of November 16, 1978. After reviewing these measures last summer, I announced on July 26 that I would be reintroducing most of the tax measures proposed by our predecessor. This was a statement made to attempt to eliminate uncertainty for taxpayers who were already conducting their affairs on the basis of that budget.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is the practice, once a budget is brought down in the House, that most of the changes are instituted and go into effect from the night the budget is brought down. Of course, many of the measures in the November 16 budget were of that nature.

The major measures in this bill include the following: first, the 3 per cent employment expense deduction will be increased once the measure is passed from $250 to $500, commencing with the 1979 taxation year. That is an improvement for individual taxpayers.

Second, the income tax credit and research and development tax credit will be enriched and extended. The credits will be extended indefinitely beyond the present July 1, 1980 termination date. The present rates of the investment tax credit of 5 per cent, 7.5 per cent and 10 per cent will be increased to 7 per cent, 10 per cent and 20 per cent respectively. The highest rates of credit would apply in the Atlantic provinces and the Gaspé region of Quebec, the middle rates will apply in the rest of Quebec—excluding the Montreal-Hull corridor—northern Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, northern Alberta, northern British Columbia and the Yukon and Northwest Territories. The 7 per cent investment tax credit will be extended to transportation equipment. That is defined to include commercial aircraft, railway and shipping assets, intercity buses and long haul trucks.

The basic tax credit of 5 per cent of current and capital expenditures on R and D will be raised to 10 per cent for most regions and to 20 per cent for the Atlantic provinces and the Gaspé region. The tax credit will be increased to 25 per cent for R and D expenditures by a Canadian controlled private corporation which qualifies for the low small business tax rates. So that is the investment tax credit in R and D.

The third major item is that the drilling fund incentive allowing a 100 per cent write-off for Canadian exploration expenses incurred by individuals and non-resource corporations will be extended to December 31, 1981.

The fourth measure is a very important item. Financial institutions—and that includes, Mr. Speaker, banks, life insurance companies and trust companies, among others—will become taxable on their earnings from term preferred shares and income debentures issued after November 16, 1978. That became a very serious problem, Mr. Speaker, and when we get into Committee of the Whole no doubt hon. members will want information on what use was made of those kinds of instruments in the months and years leading up to the budget of November 16. We will see that truly astounding amounts of financing were being done by the use of so-called after tax instruments, term preferred shares and income debentures. That had a very significant effect on the taxable income of banks and other companies that were using them. We are continuing with that provision which makes it impossible for this kind of financing to be used, except for its original purpose, after November 16 of last fall.

• (1630)

The bill also contains a number of other important measures. These include tax relief for the RRSP funds, passing on death to dependent children when there is no spouse—that is to assist dependent children; the ability to deduct immediately interest and property taxes on land awaiting development; to permit the deductibility of underwriting expenses; changes in the valuation of inventories to prevent a deduction for both depreciation and capital cost allowance; changes in the tax treatment of payments on termination of employment; and the taxation of income from deferred annuities.

One area where there is a fairly major change from what was originally contemplated in the legislation of the last administration has to do with the question of taxation of small business.

In addition to that change, which I will come to in a minute, there are a number of other changes of a technical nature which are to remove ambiguities or improve clarity. Most of them are as a result of representations made by taxpayers since the budget of last November, but some include measures themselves that were in the budget. For example, under this bill, interest-free housing loans may be made to both the husband and his spouse, and if the combined loans are within the existing $50,000 limit, there will not be a benefit for income tax purposes. In other words, you will not be taxed; you will not be treated as though you had a benefit. Previously the loan could not be divided between husband and wife, but this bill will permit that.

Also, the measures regarding deferred life annuities will now have effect only for contracts entered into after November 16, 1978, rather than after the end of 1977.

As I indicated a few moments ago, and as I indicated in my press release of October 23, we have conducted a further review of the measures contained in the Liberal administration's bill relating to the small business deduction. Under the proposals introduced in the budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), aside from income from property, the benefits of the special corporate tax rate on small business would have been denied to three categories of business income. First, you could not get the benefit of the small business tax rate of 25 per cent under the last budget provisions if your company's income was from property in the form of interest, or interest just from property, not active business. That is one area that was affected. Under the proposed legislation companies not permitted to get the small business tax rate of 25 per cent went back up to the normal tax rate of anywhere between 46 per cent and 50 per cent.

In addition to companies that receive their income simply from ownership or leasing of property, the benefits of the special corporate tax rate on small business would have been denied to three categories; that is to say, professional income of lawyers, doctors, chartered accountants, income from certain personal services as well as income from the provision of certain management and other administrative services. For a small business that came within one of these defined categories, the tax rate was changed from 25 per cent to the tax rate that applies to corporations generally, which would range in amount, I think, from 46 per cent to 51 per cent, depending upon the province in which you are situated.

As hon. ladies and gentlemen of the House will know, the small business deduction is available for Canadian-controlled private corporations that carry on an active business. They get a rate of 25 per cent. For a manufacturing or processing business it is 20 per cent. Those reduced rates apply to $150,000 of eligible income annually until the corporation's accumulated income exceeds $750,000. Income in excess of that amount is taxed at the full rate.

The reason for making a change in this area in the first place I will try to explain now. The small business deduction represents forgone federal tax revenue of about $1 billion annually. It costs the Government of Canada approximately $1 billion annually to give the small business tax rate. Our existing tax system recognizes a partial or total integration of corporate and personal taxes. That is achieved through the dividend tax credit. Under that, a shareholder is required to gross-up any dividend he receives, and he is allowed a tax credit in the amount of the gross-up. Until 1977 the dividend gross-up was 33⅓ per cent. There was full integration between personal and corporate income achieved for corporate income which had been subject to the corporate tax of 25 per cent. If the corporate tax exceeded 25 per cent, then there is only partial integration; there was some double taxation.

In 1977 the dividend tax credit was increased from 33⅓ per cent to 50 per cent. The result of that was that the tax credit on dividends exceeds the amount of corporate tax paid, wherever the corporate tax is less than 33⅓ per cent. In other words, there was overintegration in that kind of situation. After 1977 when the dividend tax credit was increased to 50 per cent, if there was a situation where the corporation paid a tax rate of less than 33⅓ per cent, there was overintegration compared to the personal tax system. So it was much to the benefit of a person to incorporate for his personal services if he could do so. By doing this he would save taxes, and in addition he would have a tax deferral.

This was a device that came to be much used by the categories of people I have mentioned, and by people just getting income from property. It did not fit into the original reason for giving the small business tax rate, which was to encourage entrepreneurs, risk-takers and small business to go into processing and manufacturing and the service industries where more risks had to be taken than the usual professional takes. I will not go into all the reasons at this stage.

There came to be two significant tax attractions in trying to incorporate. One, there was a tax deferral as long as the income was left in the corporation. Second, even when the income was distributed through a dividend, you were still getting a tax benefit.

The method chosen by the Liberal administration to try to correct this with certain groups of people was to target them, and to say that they would have to pay the full corporation tax rate, not the 25 per cent rate. There were a lot of people very much upset by that. This applied specifically to incorporated employees, namely taxpayers who usually provide services in master-servant relationships. They might be executives, athletes or salesmen on commission. These were people incorporating and using the lower rate although the real form of their activity had not changed. There were incorporated professions, such as doctors, lawyers and other professions who could incorporate and did so wherever the provincial laws or professional ethics allowed them to do so and get the lower rate. There were a lot of incorporated service companies, corporations in most cases, established by the wife of a professional who would provide management and administrative services to his particular profession and siphon off the professional income which would then qualify for the lower tax rate.

There were a tremendous number of objections to the proposals made by the last administration and there were a great many representations made to me by members of our government caucus to take a different approach. Members of the caucus wanted this loophole plugged, but wanted it done in a more fair and equitable manner for the people involved.

There were also several alternatives which the Liberal administration could have chosen. There were three ways of approaching this problem. We have chosen a different alternative. With regard to these categories of business activity, we are going to establish a third tax rate to apply to the incorporated employee, the incorporated professions and the incorporated service company. The tax rate will be 33⅓ per cent. They will not be put back in the tax bracket of anywhere from 46 to 50 per cent. They will not have the advantage of the 25 per cent small business tax rate. They will have a new rate of 33⅓ per cent as a recognition of their special position.

The result will be this. Because the corporation will pay 33⅓ per cent when they pay their dividends out, and the dividend tax credit was in effect since 1977, the amount of tax for which they are receiving credit will approximate the amount of tax paid by the corporation. Therefore, there is no immediate tax advantage to paying dividends to themselves in that way. In addition, those new rules are going to be in the statute and not in the regulations.

There is still an advantage to persons in this category, because as long as they leave the income that the corporation is making in the corporation, they will be deferring tax. It will only be subject to the 33⅓ per cent new small business rate. As long as they are income tax payers who earn a taxable income in excess of $15,000, they will get a tax advantage by leaving the income in the corporation. In other words, if the person who has such a corporation is a taxpayer earning in excess of $15,000 in taxable income a year, it is an advantage to him to leave the income in the corporation for the purpose of the corporation rather than take it out. There is still an advantage in tax deferral for such a person.

This is the method we are suggesting to solve the problem of the small business tax rate. The changed provisions will be found in the legislation before us. These changes would apply to taxation years that commence after 1979 for corporations that were in existence on October 23, 1979, and to all taxation years for corporations formed after that date.

All Canadian business income other than investment income in those three categories of corporations affected by this change will be subject to a 33⅓ per cent small business tax rate and also given time to rearrange their affairs so they can receive the benefit of this small business tax rate on eligible active business income. Some of them may not be able to arrange their affairs before the end of the year. When that is the case, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) has indicated he is prepared to allow them to reorganize in light of these amendments so that they can change their fiscal year end in 1980.

There are a lot of other provisions in these income tax amendments before hon. members. After second reading and when this bill goes to Committee of the Whole, we will deal with it clause by clause. I do not want to be too long today. I want to conclude by saying that the one major change we have made to this legislation is a definite improvement. We hope hon. members opposite will agree with us.

The proposed legislation has had a very long delay. It was introduced in the budget almost a year ago. This has created a lot of confusion and uncertainty in the minds of taxpayers. It is to be regretted that these measures were not put before Parliament and given priority to ensure their passage before the House dissolved last March.

I wish to remind the House that taxpayers who filled 1978 returns on the basis of measures in this bill have not yet had their returns processed. There are thousands of taxpayers who filled their 1978 returns based on the changes contained in this bill. The Department of National Revenue cannot process these returns until this bill is passed, until they know whether this House is going to make the changes announced a year ago and pass them into law. For that reason, it would be well for us to pass this bill as soon as reasonably possible. I believe the taxpayers certainly have had their patience pushed to the limit in having to wait this long. Hopefully it will not happen again. I remind hon. members that it is necessary for us to try and clear this out of the way before a new budget.

I hope we can count on the support of members in the official opposition whose legislation in large part this is, with the exception of one major change that I have outlined and which I hope they will also be able to support. I also hope that my confreres in the New Democratic Party will see fit to do this as well. If they have any objections, they should make these known and make their points; but I hope they will let this bill through in a reasonable period of time so that we can get on with the next budget.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill obviously is to pass into formal law the proposals in the budget of November, 1978 presented by the last Liberal government. It is not necessary for me to outline the measures in that budget because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has done so. He has done so with approval. He has put forward with approval all the measures in the last budget, except perhaps one which he has changed somewhat. However, basically he has retained the essential objective of that measure as well.

As the minister pointed out, the measures in this budget as a practical matter have been in effect since the date of the budget even though the legislation had not been passed at the time the House was dissolved for the last election. As we know, generally budget measures are considered to be in effect from the time the budget speech is read, unless the speech specifies otherwise. The idea behind this is that a government is supposed to command enough support in Parliament to ensure the budget proposals are passed into law, even though the legislation for that purpose is not passed until some months after the date of the budget speech. However, a change in government creates some uncertainty. That is an understatement when it comes to this new Conservative government. In any case, uncertainty was created as to whether this new government would proceed with the measures in the last budget.

The Minister of Finance stated at his press conference last July that he would remove this uncertainty. He announced at that time that the new Conservative government intended to enact into law almost without change the measures proposed in the last Liberal budget. It is now almost half a year after this new Conservative government took office. The Minister of Finance, as his initial solution to the problems and needs of this country, is asking this House to enact into law the budget of the previous Liberal government.

What better confirmation could there be of the value of these measures? What better endorsement could there be of these measures than the actions today of this new Conservative government? What a contrast with the scorn heaped on these measures during the budget debate last November by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, now the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), when he was official spokesman on financial matters in the official opposition. He concluded his speech by saying: "In short, in great contrast to the budget last night, we would bring in a budget, given the opportunity, which would restore for Canadians the visions they see for Canada." Here they have done so by presenting to this House with approval and endorsement the budget of the preceding Liberal government.

In allowing the budget measures of the previous Liberal government, and in fact allowing Liberal economic policies generally, to continue in place for the five months since they took office is, as I have said, a confirmation and endorsement of those measures. This is not a case where a new government has taken office at the end or almost at the end of a fiscal year and where a budget statement had been made prior to that year's beginning with measures taking effect immediately on the date of the presentation of that speech. If that had been the case, the government would have had no practical alternative but to ask Parliament to pass into law the budgetary measures which had been in effect, to all intents and purposes, for that whole preceding period. But that is not the case here. The new Conservative government took office after only about two months had elapsed in the current fiscal year. It has had the opportunity and the authority to change the framework set by the last budget had it wished to do so. Instead, the budget has been allowed to remain unchanged for almost half a year.

● (1650)

This is one confirmation that at the time the government changed Canada's economy was in better shape than it had been for some time due to the kinds of policies to be found in the budget presented to us today by the Minister of Finance with a request for its speedy approval. That this was the situation and that it continued for several months after the election has been confirmed as well by the cost of living figures which were trending lower at the time the government changed than for some time previously. The unemployment rate was also trending lower at that time than had been the case.

Letting the budget continue virtually unchanged for almost half a year also shows that, contrary to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) is saying, there was no new information of substance which would justify statements that the incoming administration had found the economy to be in worse shape than had been expected before taking office and as a result of which it was not possible for them to carry out their pledge to reduce interest rates, or to implement other promises of immediate action with respect to the economy, made during or immediately before the election campaign.

Had there really been such evidence it would have been the obligation of the new government to call Parliament together immediately after the election and to put forward measures to deal with the serious situation they would have claimed to have found. After all, Margaret Thatcher and the British Conservatives were able to call the U.K. parliament into action only one week after their election; she was able to present a budget to that new parliament only four weeks after it had begun its sitting. But this did not happen when the new Conservative government came to power here. It did not take this step. Obviously this showed that not only was the economy in better shape than the Conservatives had claimed, but that they had no real idea what to do once elected to office.

Let us bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that there have been some important changes in the economic situation since the presentation of the last budget in November, 1978. There has been the substantial OPEC oil price increase, confirmation of an economic downturn in the United States, and the beginnings of a serious economic downturn in our own country. This means important changes in the assumptions on which the previous budget was based. It means there is a need for the new government not simply to implement the budget which had not been passed at the time of the last election, but also to add to the useful basis it provided for the economy by presenting a new budget. So far it was failed to do so. A new budget has been needed to take into account the changed circumstances I have mentioned.

The new Conservative government may feel it does not have a lot of room to manoeuvre, but it certainly had some room. There is room for specific measures to help our economy become more productive and efficient, for example. In spite of the inactivity of the past five months and the appearance of inability to act that the new government has given, there was no need for it to be immobilized.

We should remember that it takes six months for budget measures to work their way through the economy. By the time the Conservatives get around to presenting their budget and by the time any useful measures in it take effect, it may be too late for them to have any beneficial effect, bearing in mind the harm the inaction and neglect of members opposite has already begun to do to Canada.

The new Conservative government has wasted the past five months. All they have done is allow interest rates to be raised to record levels even though, before the election, they said they would bring interest rates down. When he was leader of the opposition before the election, the Prime Minister did not say that a Conservative government would lower interest rates only after allowing them first of all to go to record levels. He did not say it would lower interest rates only if it found the economy to be in a certain position. That pledge was made without qualification or equivocation. The Conservatives now say they have information showing the state of the economy to be worse than they had thought, but they have been unable to present such information even though they were urged to do so during today's question period. If there is such information, I challenge them to present it. But they cannot do so.

In fact, the Minister of Finance has undermined and contradicted the Prime Minister on this essential excuse they offer for their inactivity and for failing to carry out election promises on key issues, such as the lowering of interest rates. For instance, last Friday he made a special point of telling us how a leading economist, John Grant, had been quoted as stating that the Canadian economy was the strongest in the world. And today he took great pleasure in telling us that the Bank of America was saying nice things about the good state of the Canadian economy. Where does this leave the Prime Minister and his argument that there is some horrendous information about the shape of the Canadian economy which is in the possession of the government and which prevents them carrying out their election promises?

The Minister of Finance proved to us on Friday and again today, by his own words and the authorities he was citing, that that is just a lot of nonsense. All that the inactivity which has followed the election proves is that the Conservatives did not know what they were talking about before and during the election. It shows they did not have a clear idea of Canada's needs and what to do about them. They still do not and they have failed to show they have any capacity to carry out their responsibilities and serve the needs and interests of the people of Canada.

The Prime Minister admitted this today during question period. He explained why the government has done nothing at all in five months. He said he and his ministers needed some on-the-job training. What is wrong with that, he asked. I say there is plenty wrong with that. Before and during the election he said, in effect, that he had an experienced team of people ready and willing to take over the government of Canada immediately after the election and to give it new direction without delay. Instead, when his party was called upon to form the government nothing happened for five months except for the raising of interest rates and the spending of a period of on-the-job training for himself and his ministers at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers and the Canadian economy. Because of the need for this on-the-job training, the Conservative government has wasted the last five months. This is also shown by the emptiness of the Speech from the Throne with regard to such matters as the economy and energy.

The Minister of Finance cannot present a budget because he does not know what the price of energy is to be. Yet the government which pledged itself to institute a new atmosphere of federal-provincial co-operation is just standing back and letting its Conservative friends in Ontario and Alberta squabble among themselves, to the detriment of the whole of this country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais)—Consumer and Corporate Affairs—Dissemination of information gathered on possible prosecutions; the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille)—External Affairs—Meeting of Hon. Robert Stanfield with PLO; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong)—Hazardous Products—Remedial action by CHIP to protect homeowners from hazardous insulation materials.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED TAX PAYMENT TO OFFSET WITHDRAWAL OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke) moved:

That when the government sells an asset such as a radar station or other public complex, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of requiring the department concerned to pay at least one additional year of property tax to a small municipality in order to help offset the sudden economic demands that are placed on the community which arise out of this transfer, sale arrangements and maintenance related thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, from time to time federal and provincial government facilities are built in very small municipalities. Sometimes these are built in sparsely populated areas for very good reasons, but they have a tremendous effect on those small communities. If one of them were to close down in a large city or major populated area, the effect would not be very great because there would always be something to take its place. However, when a military base, prison complex, radar station or any other agency of government of any size which is located in a small rural township, village or small town, closes down, there certainly are bad social and economic consequences.

First, the government moves in and purchases land. Preparation of the land for construction takes place after the design work has been done, and immediately the lifestyle of the local community starts to change because of construction jobs. Great hopes are raised for the future. New people come into the municipality and mix with the old. This changes lifestyles with regard to education, skills and trades, and it affects every facet of everyday life, right down to the grocery store in the local village or town.

The government puts in new community services. It puts in, for example, water lines, sewer lines, sewage disposal plants, storm drains, filtration plants, schools, recreational facilities, housing and the major project for which the facility is meant. This alone creates a boom in the area. The nature of the land is very important, whether it be rock, sand or soil. The adjustment later on from a government institution or facility to a municipal institution or facility may be even more difficult because of the nature of the services. Today, with greater requirements imposed by departments of environment on sewage disposal, for example, it makes a great deal of difference whether the location is in the Canadian Shield, on good, solid clay ground or, indeed, on sand.

The federal government carries the financial load for keeping up all services and administration—budgeted through the Parliament of Canada—with all its financial and human resources, and those human resources also include expertise in various trades, right down to engineering services for the operation of the total complex. These are not the kinds of services small municipalities have at their disposal, nor indeed can they afford them.

Everything goes along well for a number of years, but if there is a situation in which the facility becomes outdated because it is no longer required or for some other reason, rumours start floating around that the total facility is going to close down, and a state of depression sets in on the over-all community and surrounding communities.

Elected people and other community leaders lobby to keep the facility open a little longer. They may gain one, two or three years' extension, but eventually the crunch comes. The government announcement about closure by a certain date brings about a series of events leading to a final disposal of the total site. First of all, if any federal department can use the establishment and wants it, then it does not go up for sale but simply begins the neat and tidy transfer from one department to another, with big government still footing the bills. If no federal department wants it, it is offered to the province for any of its departments which might be interested. Third, if no department of the provincial government wants it, then it is offered for sale to the municipality or to a group of municipalities such as those represented by a county council, in the case of Ontario. It is in the best interests of the local government, whether it is going to buy it or not, to put forward some ideas as to how it wants the facility used afterwards.

If the local government wants the facility to stay intact, it should request this, and this should go into the agreement with whoever buys the facility thereafter. There may be a real problem if it is not stated clearly how the transfer should be handled or what is wanted for the future of the facility in the municipality. I suppose we could say we are talking about a community here in the sense that the facility is really superimposed on the community by a senior level of government.

It is important to have the desires of the community written into the agreement of sale. That is a must. If provincial or municipal governments do not want the facility, it then goes up for sale to the highest valid bidder who is willing to follow the guidelines laid down and who can meet the financial commitment of the down payment or deposit with the bid. The bidder must also demonstrate that he is financially capable of paying for the site in the long run.

From this point on the over-all community feels that it has a new lease on life, but in fact what has happened is that it is going through another major change in human environment. Adjustments will be necessary because the municipality is going from big government-supported facilities to dealing with an entirely different organization, and the facility is used for entirely different purposes.

● (1710)

We are beginning to realize how easy it was for a senior level of government to maintain and operate this new section of the community that is suddenly superimposed on the local municipality. Subdivision plans have to be drawn up, but a municipality may not want to take over the subdivision because they may not be able to afford to take over the services of the community, such as the water lines, sewers, filtration and sewer plants, and so on. All of us who are familiar with municipal politics are certainly aware of the cost of these facilities today. You might have a small municipality refusing to accept this responsibility, and certainly they cannot be blamed for that. Other ratepayers may accuse them of being irresponsible if they took that responsibility without having the wherewithal to pay for it. Furthermore, if the new owners do not live up to the agreements with the municipality and with other people, then the municipality is left holding the liability. The whole procedure can end up in messy lawsuits and in a feeling of instability and frustration.

I have discussed this matter at some length with many people at both levels of government. I find that no one has come to grips with the problem, but I think that as time goes on it will be more and more important that we do so. My recommendation in this motion today is that the municipality concerned should receive a grant in lieu of taxes at least equal to one year's taxes.

Second, there is a need for some instrument or instruments to take over to ease the burden on the municipality and help them on the road to a stable community and to become established by way of long-term rather than short-term solutions. The federal and provincial governments should provide personnel with expertise to advise and assist the municipality through the difficult period of change, because the smaller communities are not equipped, as I said before, with this type of professional and technical experience. Public instruments should come into play immediately whereby federal and provincial governments can come to an agreement of a type that will require the province, with federal assistance, to provide the expensive services for a period of, say, three to five years or until such time as an adjustment is made and the new community has evolved out of the old. With plans such as these, to thrust large institutions into the lap of small communities is simply like trying to float the Queen Mary in the Madawaska River, because small communities are in no way capable of raising that kind of money or setting up that kind of institution.

Another problem is that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as it is now called, and provincial governments do not give grants to communities where the water and sewage services are already established. There are only programs through CMHC and the provincial governments for such facilities to be started, and this creates a real block. If the development of a community is rapid, then you do not run into the same problems, but it is not rapid in sparsely populated areas.

I raise this issue because I feel that senior levels of government must come to grips with this serious situation that is created, and when they build an institution they do in fact create the problem in the beginning. They bring in all kinds of infrastructure, and then end up walking away from it and leaving all kinds of problems or repercussions behind. There are relatively few such cases but they do occur from time to time. It would not cost the two senior levels of government very much over a period of readjustment because, in checking the property sections of the Department of Public Works and Crown Assets, I learned that there are not many cases, but they do come up from time, and when they do they are serious.

I hope that my main motion and my other suggestions will meet with the approval of members of the House. I know that when we put forward motions in the House, it is not common practice for a private member's motion to be adopted; but I want to say to my colleagues on both sides of the House that I air this problem because I think it is one that could be common to all of us in all parts of Canada. It is very important, if we are going to think nationally in this Parliament, that we get away from the idea of dumping things on small communities and walking away. It is not fair for any federal government, I do not care what party label it might carry, to do this, and I think this is a matter which could well be discussed at some federal-provincial meeting. It would not take a great deal of discussion, it would not take a great deal of money, and it is a solution which would take a great deal of pain out of municipal politics and in sparsely populated regions of Canada. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank members of the House for their attention.

Mr. Alex Jupp (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation for the very reasoned argument that the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) has presented to this House. I appreciate his concern because I have also spent some time in municipal government and appreciate the problems that actions of senior government can create for municipalities.

However, I should like to respond to the hon. member's motion at two different levels. First, I wish to address specifically the essence of the motion he has presented to the House and, second, to address in a more general sense the more serious implication which the motion raises within my mind.

First, the motion implies that a municipality will suffer if the federal government sells real property within the municipality. I would say that that is not necessarily so. In fact, the opposite would be the case. The resolution gives no examples of the kind of "sudden economic demands" which would be placed on the community. But from the tax standpoint, it is hard to see where there would be a problem.

First, we should bear in mind that when the government sells real property, normally it becomes taxable as of the date of sale. The new owner becomes a regular taxpayer, and the municipality does not lose any tax revenue. Indeed, local government could well gain if the property is being sold to be transformed into some new commercial or industrial activity. We should bear in mind that federal grants in lieu of municipal taxes do not extend to cover business occupancy taxes levied by the municipality when the building is used by business. The new owner could well be adding to the building occupancy revenues of the local government when it is taken over by a private industrial concern.

We should not assume, as I think this resolution does, that the sale of government property inevitably creates economic demands on the local government. Indeed, the situation could be quite the reverse if the new buyer used the property for productive purposes. So, on this score, the resolution does not place much confidence in the ability of private enterprise or the private sector to generate new economic activity in Canada.

It is possible that in a particular situation the sale of some federal government property might create some demand on local government. But that does not mean we should assume such expenses will arise in every case and therefore we should provide a quite arbitrary cash transfer to local government of an additional year's federal payments in lieu of real estate taxes.

● (1720)

The resolution does not mention what could be an even greater problem for the municipality. That is the case where the government does not sell the property but rather closes down the activity being carried on previous to the government having to change the status of the property. Such things inevitably happen from time to time, but I do not think any hon. member of the House would try to argue in principle that particular activities of the federal government should never be closed down but should go on forever. When this happens in some municipality—that is, the closing of a federal enterprise or institution—surely it is preferable to try to sell the property for private business activity rather than simply close up the federal installation and see the federal employees move away from the community.

We cannot consider this issue in isolation without taking account of over-all financial relationships among different levels of government. In fact, this resolution argues for a special kind of federal aid to municipalities, something which no other local taxpayer is required to do. If aid is required, why should it be provided through a program of grants in lieu of taxes? This is not a relief program. It has a completely different purpose. The real purpose of the program is to pay grants to municipalities equal to the real property taxes that would be payable if federal property were taxable property. If a private property owner sells property, his liability for taxes stops as of the date of the sale. Therefore he pays taxes up to that date only. Why should the federal government be different? Therein lies the point of my concern.

The attitude of some members opposite is implied in this motion, that there is a basic difference between whether the federal government or any government owns a piece of property or whether it is privately owned. No one would seriously suggest that if a private company owned a piece of property, and if circumstances were such that it had to close that property up, there should be some kind of a law or provision where it would have to pay to the municipality taxes beyond the date of the transfer or sale. Yet that is what is implied in this motion, that there is a basic difference between the federal government and private enterprise, and that the federal government should be expected to do that which we would never expect a private company to do.

It is the provinces, not the federal government, which have created the financial situation municipalities find themselves in today. They have limited the taxing powers of local governments almost entirely to property taxes. They have used the broader range of provincial taxes to finance transfer payments to local governments. Indeed, a whole range of municipal activities is closely circumscribed by provincial laws and regulations. Therefore, if some special financial aid is required by municipalities, should it not be more a concern for provincial governments? This is particularly so when one considers the size of the federal deficit against the relatively strong position of Canada's provincial treasuries.

This is the second over-all point of my concern. This is the aspect of the motion which disturbs me most. On reading between the lines I see that somewhere or other there is a public trough, and if we can only get some money from the federal treasury, it does not really count; it is not really money in the normal sense. When I hear some of the proposals of members opposite during emergency debates and question period, sometimes I become astounded. It would be very interesting to Canadian taxpayers if every time an hon. member proposed an expenditure of an additional sum of money to the Government of Canada, somewhere over the head of that hon. member there was a little calculator, and the calculator would shine in neon lights the cost of that provision across the country.

An hon. Member: It sure would have killed you guys in the last election.

Mr. Jupp: I think not, and I think the hon. member will find that out when we bring in our budget.

Certainly one of the major issues in the election was government spending. If what the hon. member across the way is saying is true, then I suspect we would find that it would not be this party that is the Government of Canada but it would be the socialist party that would be the government. On May 22, Canadians very clearly communicated that one of the things they wanted less of was excessive government spending and excessive waste in government which led to a deficit of $11 billion. I think of the hypocrisy which I have heard over the past several days when members opposite have prolonged debate on the borrowing bill, outlining their concerns over a bill to borrow $7 billion. We have a deficit in this country of $11 billion. That works out to the sum of $21,000 per minute. Every minute we proceed along the way in Canada today, we go another $21,000 into debt. Even in the ten minutes or so which I intend to speak in this debate, our country will be a further $210,000 in debt.

Mr. Knowles: You had better sit down!

Mr. Jupp: The only reason that I prolong it is that I realize other hon. members opposite will take up time and it will cost the country a good deal more to fulfil the implications of what they would have to say than what I would have to say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jupp: As a nation we are confronted with three real choices when it comes to government spending: A drastic reduction in expenditures, including cuts in programs which none of us really wants to see; a major increase in revenues, largely through increased taxation; and finally, national bankruptcy. The mindless spending of the previous administration had the effect of fueling inflation, debasing our currency and robbing our citizens of their savings. It is the difficult task of this administration, the new government, to restore common sense to government spending notwithstanding the opportunistic posturing of some members opposite. Certainly this motion does nothing to alleviate the very serious problems of fiscal balance and responsibility.

Already the federal government has major responsibilities where property sales lead to unemployment. Of course, these relate to unemployment insurance, the cost of retraining unemployed people and finding new jobs for them. Every time an enterprise in a community must close down, whatever the reason, we expect the federal government to be a party to moving in, to providing unemployment insurance to those who are displaced, to working with manpower counsellors on necessary retraining programs, to finding new jobs for those who have been dislocated from their former employment. The federal government has a very major role to play. It discharges that major role, in terms of enterprises which must close down, without assuming the cost of enterprises from which they will have no additional revenues, but from which there will be a net debt for Canadians.

Nothing that I have said should in any way be meant to denigrate the importance of municipal government. Local government bears a major share of the responsibility for shaping the environment in which people live. It provides many vital public services, including elementary and secondary education, environmental protection, local transportation, police and fire protection and recreational services.

As a former municipal councillor, I appreciate the great pressure under which municipal governments find themselves today. Their costs are all greatly affected by inflation because municipal services, such as those used to employ teachers, civic workers, road builders and repairers, policemen and firemen, are largely labour-intensive acitivities. Largely these costs are in the form of increased salaries and wages. The only way municipalities in Canada can raise these funds, other than through transfer payments, is through taxes on real property. Perhaps this is a real gripe of the municipalities of Canada.

• (1730)

While the senior governments, the federal government and provincial governments, are obvious benefactors of the inflationary process in that their revenues tend to increase with inflation or even in excess of inflation, municipalities are different. Municipalities levy their rates in absolute dollars having regard for the assessment of property. The only way that municipalities can increase their revenue is to increase the mill rate, and the taxpayers then receive a notice indicating precisely how much more they will be paying for their municipal services than they paid the year before. This procedure puts real pressure on the municipalities, and they recognize that fact.

We know that the municipalities are looking to the senior governments and that there is a difficult situation. But I believe that there is no way implied in this motion that this problem can be redressed. It is neither logical, practical, equitable, or administratively sound, and it is based on the notion that the federal government is basically the public trough. That may have been the philosophy of the previous government, but it is not the philosophy of this government.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard two different points of view, and I can see why they are different. The previous speaker comes from Mississauga, one of the fastest growing areas in the country. If a government facility such as Malton were to close down, that community would be able to put houses on the tarmac within a matter of two or three months. On the other hand the problems in northern Ontario, although Renfrew is not in northern Ontario, are different.

I know of the problems at Freemont where they have a little radar base, and I am aware that Landry Crossing was closed. Perhaps it has not closed entirely, but it has certainly slowed down. There were not more than seven dozen people in the area affected by the radar installation, but in areas where it was much more advisable for people to work for the government than it was to continue farming, the residents will certainly suffer. They probably cannot go back to farming, but there is nothing else. I know that this has happened in my region in the Ramore area and at Lowther, just west of Kapuskasing. It has happened in a number of areas.

[Mr. Jupp.]

Lowther was particularly important because the United States were in there as well as the Canadian service. As a result more money was brought into the area. Many of these small communities made a sacrifice in rising to the occasion. In many cases the communities purchased firetrucks which they could not afford. They had to put in a water system. In the case of Matheson, in order to accommodate the base at Ramore, it put in a number of trailer sites complete with pads, septic tanks, and a water system. As soon as the base closed, it was no longer of any value and now has become a liability. The lots cannot be sold, they are not usable, and they are probably still under debenture.

These communities made great efforts to meet the requirements of the government and they did it at great expense. The radar base mentioned by the hon. member was very small. Very few people were involved, but those who where made an immense effort to ensure that it was successful and that it worked. The government has a responsibility to these people. They cannot say, "we do not need it, we are closing it; goodbye".

When these bases were abandoned the municipalities were not interested in purchasing what was left behind. As a result, most of what was left behind was sold privately, or dismantled and taken away. The communities could not afford to buy anything because they did not have any money, and instead of creating a tax base the items left behind became a liability. For example, I recently viewed the airport at Ramore, which had been put in by the Americans while they were there. It had grown in and there were trees growing four and five feet high. The municipality had to go in and spend $1,000 to cut down the trees in the hope that some day the airport would again be useful and necessary to the area. There is also a building there which they have to protect. The municipality does not want to see this facility destroyed because they have hopes that something will replace the industry which has just left.

I have heard that the government intends to close the facility at Landry Crossing. I have noticed lights there when I drive by, so presumably it is not closed. The facility is a minimum security penitentiary set out in the area of Petawawa army base. I am sure that the people located around that area have had to make some concessions in order to attract the facility to their area, but when it disappears they will be asked to take it over and do something with it, otherwise the government will suffer a total loss. Communities such as Landry Crossing do not have a ready use for such facilities. In many cases the facilities have been torn down and taken away, leaving a vacuum in the area. As a result, many of the services offered by the community are a total loss, but they are left with paying the debenture.

The hon. member is simply asking in his motion that we cushion the withdrawal for a period of one year by paying the property tax. He mentioned in his speech that perhaps five years for withdrawal on a graduated basis would be better. The five-year term on a graduated basis is probably the better idea because the communities will need less as time goes on.

In many case these communities were asked to make contributions and to participate as municipalities in the government development. They did not want the government to build a fence around the facility because then nobody would associate with the facility, and as a result they were sucked into setting up such things as recreational facilities and the like. One facility which almost all communities provided was firefighting equipment. Now with the government gone they can no longer afford it. In many cases we are talking about a community with approximately 20 families, and in some cases less, but they were stuck with being big sister to a relatively larger facility having probably more employees than the community had citizens.

Now the government has gone. My hon. friend, the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jupp), has said, "let them go. We are not giving them welfare". In the first place it was the government that wanted the bases, and if the communities had been hostile it would have had a heck of a time moving into those areas. The people of these communities could have made it very difficult. The reason the bases were chosen was because it was best that the bases be located in areas where the radar would be most efficient. Now the government is saying, "Don't worry about them; they do not need handouts, it is not the Conservative way". I suggest that the hon. member will find, after he has been here for a while, that there are other things besides philosophy. There are such things as geography, and what is good for Mississauga is not necessarily good for Sioux Lookout, Lowther and Freemont. The situation is not the same.

It would not be satisfactory in Toronto. I remember many years ago, when you went up Yonge Street and north of Toronto on a streetcar, by the time you got to where Highway 401 is now, you were picking up milk cans and chickens, and after that you went on to Thornhill and Aurora. Now it is very hard to find those communities at all—they are downtown, and every time you go there are another ten buildings. I suppose the hon. member does not have to worry about it. He has enough trouble keeping the water system and the sewers and the streets growing fast enough to keep up with the population.

That is not the problem in most communities in northern Ontario, Mr. Speaker. We are just trying to service the ones we were asked to build as a favour to somebody else. We were anticipating, as we always do, the ultimate—that they were going to be there forever and we thought we could probably help them out by providing these facilities. We are not asking very much in this motion when we ask that those areas that have been asked to make that kind of contribution now receive a contribution that would be very valuable to the wind-down of those communities.

In your own case, Mr. Speaker, you may represent an urban area where you would find this to be a Mickey Mouse concession. You would find it to be undesirable and regressive. In fact, it would tie up property for one or two years and you could not get the high taxes out of it that you now do, so you would have to find a substitute for what may have been a long-term contract with the federal government, producing a limited revenue. This could be the situation in northern Ontario, in many cases.

If this motion is accepted the cost will not be very much, but it will certainly benefit those very, very small communities that have made a contribution, as Canadians, to the defence of this country. This is particularly so in the case of radar bases. These were built in very small isolated communities where, to the best of their ability, the people provided the services for the military personnel resident there and participating in community life. We are only asking for a small contribution from the general purse to assist the communities in the one, two or five-year periods when they are winding up their business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have seconded the motion of the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). In my opinion, the motion addresses itself in a substantive way to a very real problem which exists from time to time in parts of this country. I think the response of the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jupp) was nothing more than a bookkeeper's response to a very serious human and social problem that, from time to time, exists in the isolated and less advantaged regions of this country.

In terms of this debate, I am much more in sympathy with the words of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who, with myself, shares with these communities the kind of agony and travail that they go through when there is a closure of one kind or another, be it a radar base, a small or large industry. We know, all too well, the sense of crisis that develops whenever this happens.

As my contribution to this debate, I think instead of speaking in generalities I should share with the House what could loosely be described as a case study. I lived through the closure of a radar base in a small, unorganized community in a constituency that I represented for more than ten years. It is no longer in my riding, because of the readjustment of the boundary lines. I am referring, of course, to the Canadian forces station at Armstrong, Ontario, a radar station. I know the hon. member for Timiskaming is fully conversant with the problems that existed as a result of that closure. The manner in which it was done can only be described as shameful.

It is true that there was a great deal of good will and a lot of fine intentions displayed by government departments at the time the community was going through this agony. But, sir, good will and fine intentions did not result in any positive action. A $1 million payroll was lost to this small community, and there was no time for adaptation to the change, for adjustment to the new situation. Civilian employees of the Department of National Defence who did not want to move or could not move, were left without jobs. Those who were prepared to move and had relatively inexpensive housing in Armstrong were asked to go to some other part of Canada.

They were not provided with a house for a house, so it was just beyond their economic capacity to accept.

In brief, the closing of that radar base was done in a manner which, I would suggest, was not at all an example of good corporate citizenship. It was a public sector enterprise. No one argues about the fact that technology had overtaken the radar base and closure had to come, but the manner in which it took place should have set a good example for private companies which, due to various circumstances and conditions, must sometimes close their operations. The Department of National Defence was sympathetic. The member of Parliament had a good hearing with senior officials in the Department of Defence, with the minister, and with the parliamentary secretary who now sits near me. I refer to the hon. member who moved this motion. The Department of National Defence was primarily concerned about its own costs and its own personnel as well as the civilians who were being affected. There was not much they could do, however, because what had to be done was beyond their authority and competence. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion was also involved in a very serious way, and was prepared to assist if a clear-cut proposal with accurate cost estimates was put forward. This did not happen. The department endeavoured to do what it could but, in the end, there was no action they could take.

Ontario Hydro, another agency of government, was willing to consider putting in a power line to replace the diesel power produced by the radar base that had provided electricity for the citizens. They could not do it on their own, however, They needed the pulp companies to throw in some money. They needed the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to add something and, as well, they needed something from the CNR which was producing power of its own. There were varying degrees of interest, but none of the parties offered the money that was required.

The Crown Assets Disposal Corporation became involved in a rather interesting way. There was a snow plough and a fire truck that this little unorganized community needed, and which DND was prepared to transfer to Crown Assets, so that they somehow could come into the possession of the community. Crown Assets presented a formula which provided that the community could have these two pieces of equipment if it was prepared to pay market value for them. That sounded logical. My bookkeeping friend over there would ask, what is wrong with that? What was wrong with it was that the community of Armstrong was an unorganized municipality. It had no tax base, no revenue. It could not manufacture the money out of thin air. On their behalf I put a counter-offer forward. I thought we could raise at least 10 per cent of the market value if Crown Assets was prepared to accept that. They finally did.

Meanwhile, however, the Department of National Defence had second thoughts. They felt they could use this beat up, secondhand, worn out equipment somewhere else, and sent in a couple of military personnel to pick it up. In the middle of a busy afternoon, I received a phone call advising me that two military personnel had come to take away the snow plow and the fire truck. I was asked what I could do about it. There was only one thing that could be done, Mr. Speaker. There was only one road into the town, and with the co-operation of the Ontario Provincial Police a roadblock was set up. The equipment was not allowed to leave until I had the opportunity of speaking to a general or two. They said there had been some kind of misunderstanding, some sort of error, and that the equipment was to remain there. The Ontario Provincial Police took down the roadblock and then provided a police escort to the military personnel so that they could get out of town safely. These are some of the absurd situations and problems that were caused by this kind of a poorly thought out closure of a radar base.

There are many other problems I could cite in this case study, but let me tell the House about the response of an hon. Tory minister in the provincial government. He said that we should not be bothered with all of these problems related to unorganized communities. What we should do is bite the bullet, and let these communities die. Mind you, he did not go to a public meeting in Armstrong and make that statement. He made it in the safety of Queens Park in Toronto. To the best of my knowledge he has never gone to that community.

● (1750)

These small unorganized communities, as the hon. member for Timiskaming knows, do not die. They often have serious economic set backs. They go through a crisis when some job-creating industry or other public or private enterprise leaves, but they do not die. They just linger on and suffer, and the people are a little poorer and worse off for it. But one cannot, by any kind of government action, cause the death of these communities.

What do these communities need? They need a plan for future development. They need someone in these times of crises to help them out. Many government departments, agencies, and even the private sector should get involved. For example, a representative on behalf of one private company said, "We think we can help this community get over this difficulty that it is facing." But when a wood cutting operation was started up it was found that adequate accommodations were not available for the workers. It was not possible to attract new skilled labour into the town because facilities were few, if they existed at all.

My hon. friend has proposed that there be a modest program of assistance for these kinds of communities to help them over difficult times. We are not talking about some large, new social program added to our present structure. Of course not. We are all aware of deficits, and we are concerned about them at the various levels of government. But certain expenditures can be justified if there is a real human problem and social need in play, or if it has something to do with nation building or maintaining.

I suggest in addition to what my hon. friend has proposed to this House that there ought to be a co-ordinating committee of government and private enterprise to help communities in crisis overcome these difficulties. Many agencies of government could be involved. The co-ordinating committee could apply itself with determination and expertise in helping "one industry-small town-unorganized communities" face the crisis of a closure. I would think that such a co-ordinating committee should be activated by an order in council. Having assessed the situation, one minister could be designated to press the button in cabinet which would get the committee functioning. It does not need to be a continuing committee or a big costly operation, but it could exist interdepartmentally and include people from the private sector so that when such a problem comes into existence, an order in council could be made to establish and give authority to a committee to help these communities.

I conclude by saying that what my friend, the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, has proposed is an admirable motion. I am delighted to support it. It is a step in the right direction, and I hope it will have the approval of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Jupp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege. I am used to being insulted in the course of my political career, but no one has yet called me a bookkeeper. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw that remark. If one lets those kinds of comments go by in this House, the next thing that could happen is one might be called an economist. If one lets that go by then one could be called a lawyer and so on. I would like to have that comment withdrawn.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of privilege. Once again the hon. member has failed to listen to what another hon. member has said. Nobody called him a bookkeeper. I have no idea what he does or what he ought to be doing. I said in his contribution that he was presenting to this House a bookkeeper's approach, and that is a little bit different.

Mr. Joe Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the first time in this honourable and distinguished House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): I find it a privilege to come here, but having served a goodly number of years in matters of local administration and having served on local government, I find it preferable to address myself to matters of debate of a specific nature.

Local government is an area of government where many of us here have served people of communities for many years in a variety of ways. I come here with the full intent, having once served the people of my community, of now addressing myself to the Canadian community, and addressing myself from wherever I sit or stand in what I consider the national interest.

I am somewhat inclined to sympathize with the proponents of this motion, but it is rather ironic it comes before us at a time when Bill C-3 is on the order paper. Bill C-3 is about to make major changes in the program of grants in lieu of taxes. I suggest to all members of this House that that bill will be of benefit to local municipalities. There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that the impact as presented by the proponents of the bill, does change one's lifestyle.

Those who have had to meet budgetary requirements within time periods know what changes come about when there is a change in the assessment rolls by reason of a discontinuance of a major activity, be it an industry, or an institution of governmental change. But that institution came to the municipality concerned, as has already been said, practically at the urging of the municipality. While it leaves an impact, there is no good reason why the federal government should be locked in and be subject to rules and regulations not applicable to other taxpayers or grantors in their particular areas.

May I be so bold as to suggest to the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) that he might better be advised to address himself to Bill C-3 and the Municipal Grants Act when that bill is being discussed before the committee.

The existing program of grants to municipalities in lieu of property taxes is already a substantial item to this country of ours, amounting to about $148 million in the case of department-owned property, and an added $110 million from Crown corporations.

Under the new government bill, grants on departmental properties will be increased by $25 million by bringing into the grant program properties which are now excluded from the grant formula. This will benefit many municipalities across the country and it is a measure that I am sure will be supported by all members present.

This particular motion is unusual in that one of the parts of the country that will benefit most from this bill is the constituency of the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke. The federal government has a large defence base there, namely Canadian Forces Base Petawawa. At the present time, grants on this base apply to married quarters and land. Bill C-3 will remove this restriction and allow a larger tax base and for a larger grant in lieu thereof.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member—

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member for Niagara Falls—

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): St. Catharines.

Mr. Peters: —excuse me, St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) is a new member. However, he is probably familiar with his party's decision not to kill these bills. Because he is a new member, maybe we can give him the benefit of not talking this bill out, by letting him resume his seat before we see the clock and calling it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The only way we cannot now see the clock is by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the House does not see the clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. Therefore, I have to conclude that the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the debate was interrupted at 5 p.m. the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) had the floor.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I was talking about the fact that the Conservative Speech from the Throne was very empty when it came to policy on matters related to energy and the economy. I was saying that one reason the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has not been able to bring down his own budget as yet is because he does not know what the price of energy will be. He has been hinting that a budget will be presented in November, but today the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) seemed to suggest, during the question period, that he was hoping for a budget by the end of the year. This would mean further delay when what is needed is prompt action to strengthen the Canadian economy.

In the field of energy prices, the action the Minister of Finance appears to favour is one which, in my view, would harm the Canadian economy rather than help it. He seems to be promoting a rapid increase to world levels of energy prices in Canada, which would mean increases to $1.30 or $1.40 a gallon for gasoline, an increase of four dollars a barrel for petroleum. All this means an increase of at least 2 per cent in the Canadian cost of living which is already being pushed upward by the Conservative high interest rate policy.

I was informed just before the House resumed that even Premier Lougheed, who at one time was considered such a close friend and supporter of the Prime Minister and his party, has complained, in Vancouver, I believe, about this high interest policy saying, if I recall correctly, that it was a short-term expedient not in the interest of the Canadian economy. The rapid increase in energy prices to world levels apparently sought by the Conservatives would take away most, if not all, of the competitive advantage Canadian industry now possesses when it comes to selling goods both here and abroad because they are able to pay for what are, after all, Canada's own energy resources at prices lower than world prices.

The minister today tabled his mortgage tax credit plan. I think we have to recognize that his high interest rate policy, the Conservative high interest rate policy, will cancel out whatever benefit people might have expected from it. It is not the plan which he and the Conservatives promised before the election. A lot of people will get less than they had expected from the old plan. He has admitted, though, that the present tax credit plan is simpler and fairer to lower and middle income people than the one promised by his party before and during the election. We shall, of course, be discussing this matter in greater detail, hopefully within the next few weeks. As I have said, though, the Conservative plan promised not simply to help people keep pace with the high Conservative interest rates—which it will not succeed in doing, anyway. People got the impression before and during the election that the Conservative promise of deductibility of mortgage interest rates and property taxes would make them better off than they were at the time that promise was made. But the high interest rates cancel out the benefits completely.

In spite of what the Conservatives said about the budget measures presented to us today during the budget debate last fall, in presenting these measures again they are confirming their value, they are endorsing them, and they are admitting so far they have nothing better. We in the official opposition will therefore not extend debate unduly. We shall, however, insist that the Minister of Finance note and explain clearly what changes, if any, he is making in these measures as compared with what was in the original budget. Our main objective, though, is to have the Minister of Finance present his own budget because action further to what was outlined in the budget of last November can and should be taken in a new budget to help the Canadian economy to make industry more productive and efficient as part of an industrial strategy, as well as measures to help specific sectors of society, for example, small business, farmers, consumers, lower income groups. We in the official opposition will continue to press for measures of this kind.

Let the Minister of Finance bring down his own Conservative budget. When it comes, like everything else since the new government took office, there will be a lot less in it than the Conservatives promised the public and the public expected from them before and during the election.

• (2010)

An hon. Member: We will be responsible.

Mr. Gray: My hon. friend says that they will be responsible. If what has happened in the past five months is an example of Conservative reponsibility, heaven help the Canadian people and the Canadian economy!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we come to this debate somewhat as we come to last year's breakfast, and I am afraid that so far the debate has been just about as edifying.

In his remarks introducing this budget bill the minister could provide no justification for its specifics. He did not give us any analysis of why the Liberal measures were regarded as the right ones to take, and he emphasized that the only change the Conservatives were going to be making to the Liberal budget of November, 1978, the last budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), was that a loophole which had finally been closed by the Liberals was going to be reopened by the Conservatives, and that professionals will be able to continue to incorporate themselves and, by the magic of incorporation, thereby reduce their effective rate of taxation.

Then the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) could find only words of praise for the budget, without analysing one single iota of its features, without analysing one single measure which it put forward, and telling us that the only problem was that the government had taken a long time to bring forward its measures. Then he went on to talk about energy.

What I want to do in this debate is to look at the bill and to ask the Canadian people to consider why it is that the first measures which are brought to this House by the Conservatives are measures which were put forward by the Liberals, and why measures which are completely and perfectly palatable to the Liberals are also acceptable to the Conservative party?

I think we should want to ask ourselves what we are doing to our tax system when we allow the kinds of changes and developments which are so favoured by the government. When I listen to the hon. member for Windsor West, I am reminded that just as there were two kinds of Tories before the election—there were red Tories and blue Tories—we now find that there are two kinds of Liberals.

Mr. Kempling: And two kinds of socialists, the pink ones and the yellow ones.

Mr. Rae: There are black Liberals and grey Liberals. The black Liberals are those who thought that what governor Bouey did was right up until May 22, and they have to agree that what he did was right after May 22. The black Liberals are those who are prepared to admit that they followed the same advice of governor Bouey up until May 22 and that they are prepared to carry the can and support governor Bouey after May 22. While I disagree and have disagreed with the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley) and the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), I at least have some respect for their consistency. I at least know that they will not have worked with the governor of the Bank of Canada, accepted his policies and philosophy for many long years, and then turn around and stab him in the back.

However, the politics of some other Liberals whom I have described as grey Liberals are not so consistent. They are very selective in the Liberal tradition which they decide to present to the House as being the new, revised, reformed, revivified, and enlightened Liberal party that they would now have us believe is going to lead Canada to halcyon days.

The problem with the Liberal party is that it is not at the moment an opposition; it is a government in exile. It has not lost that sense that it has, deep in its members' hearts, that somehow on May 22 the Canadian people made a terrible mistake, that all they have to do is snap their fingers and wake up and this horrible nightmare will be over, and once again those who are fit to rule will be ruling over Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: That kind of arrogance is exactly what led to May 22 itself, and that same spirit of arrogance is what will guarantee that the Liberal party will quickly evaporate.

Mr. Axworthy: This is not arrogance; it is sanctimoniousness. You are sanctimonious when you have never had power, and you don't know what it is about.

Mr. Rae: I have obviously upset some of the sleeping giants in the Liberal party, and I am quite happy that I have wakened them.

An hon. Member: The black ones or the grey ones?

Mr. Rae: They will have to declare themselves as to whether they are black or grey.

I want to look at the measures put forward by the Conservative party and the Liberal party in an effort to solve our country's economic problems. Let me suggest that our country's economic problems are many. Our prospects and our chances for the future are also many. We in my party have been criticized for being too negative, for being too carping, for being constantly critical, and for not looking at the positive side of things.

Let me say that the pessimists in this House and in this country are not those social democrats who have a conviction that Canadians can do better, that Canadians deserve more and that we have tremendous capacity and strength in our country. The pessimists are those like the hon. member for Saint-Maurice when he was minister of finance, and like the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), or those people who say there is nothing we can do. What I have described is the weatherman theory of politics and economics; that really what we elect a government to do is to tell us to batten down the hatches and that there is nothing we can do about these natural hurricanes which are taking place throughout the economy.

I think there are two points which need to be made about our economic problems. The first is that they are structural and serious and that they cannot be solved overnight. The second point to make about our economic problems is that their solution must be fair and be seen to be fair by the Canadian people. In our tax policies, in our interest rate policies—in what are called our fiscal and monetary policies—the Canadian people from Newfoundland to British Columbia must have the sense that they are not being taken advantage of by the powerful and that there is in our tax system an element of fairness which pervades that system.

There is much talk these days about biting the bullet, about austerity, and about how to fight inflation, and I say to hon. members opposite in the Conservative party that all of us in this House and all of us in the country are prepared to fight inflation. The critical question which we continue to put to the government is; who will bear the cost?

The interest rate policy is a redistribution of wealth by another name. It has that effect. It has that impact. It is that unfair, and just as we criticize the interest rate policy because it is unfair, because it does nothing to solve our long-term problems, because it does not deal with the fairness problem and because it does not deal with the structural problems of our economy, so too these tax measures which have been left to us by the previous Liberal government do nothing to face these problems of fairness and structural change. That is why for the most part we are opposed to them, and that is why we have put forward suggestions as to how they should be changed. That is why we will be making what I hope the minister will agree are constructive comments having to do with the way these programs have been implemented.

We deal, first of all, with the investment tax credit and the research and development tax credit. There is a basic question which the previous Liberal government was asked several times and which, I suggest, we will be asking this government as well. That basic question is: what is the integrity of our tax system when it is so filled with loopholes, with special provisions, with exceptions, with advantages given to some groups and disadvantages to other groups so that it has no integrity? Indeed, it can be argued that it has even lost its capacity as a revenue collecting system; it is leaking like a sieve, and members opposite know it very well. That is at least three quarters of the reason why we have a deficit that is as large and as uncontrolled as the one we currently have.

When you look at the investment tax credits that have been given, when you look at the mining and drilling allowance that has been given, when you look at the artificially high rate at which certain industries are allowed to write off capital cost allowance, when you look at the other havens that have been created, you realize that not only do we have a system that is unfair, but we also have a system that is ineffective.

It is to these two points, the fairness and the effectiveness of our tax system, that I think members opposite might address some of their attention. I had hoped the Minister of Finance would have addressed some of his attention to them.

What has been the experience with the investment tax credit? Where are the studies to tell us whether these are the incentives which in fact rather than in theory lead to greater investment? Is this spending of public money—because every loss of revenue from a credit is as much a spending of public moneys as if the government wrote a cheque—having the effect that it should have? Is it encouraging regional development? The answer is, no. We have tried the tax credit route, it has been used before by past Liberal governments, and study after study over the last two years has told us that the regional tensions in our country are greater than ever before, that the disparity between the Atlantic provinces and Alberta, for example, is far greater than it was before.

I think we are entitled to ask ourselves: are these kinds of regional tax credits really the reason why businessmen decide to invest in a certain part of the country rather than in another? Do they simply go to companies that would have invested there anyway and, if so, why are we spending that much money? Is that an effective use of government money? I would have thought that those members opposite who pride themselves on cost effectiveness might want to ask themselves that very simple question, and I am glad to see that the Minister of Finance has agreed to bring forward a system of tax spending which will allow us at least to start on the road toward looking at the tax spending system in our country and at how it is attacking the integrity of our tax collecting system and of the revenue capacity of the federal government.

So the question we ask ourselves with respect to the investment tax credit and the research and development tax credit is quite a simple one. Is this adequate? Is this the way to redistribute investment in this country? If that is what the government wants to do, why not do it directly? Why not establish an investment fund? Why not have a national investment strategy? We have asked these questions before, and the Liberals were not able to give us an answer. If the Minister of Finance is serious in what he said earlier today that he wanted to start the country on the long road to national economic independence—this was implied in his remarks—I suggest to him that the way to do this is not by taking the route of giving a handout to every company which comes along and asks for one, or every company which uses the route of the tax credit which cannot be controlled or surveyed, but by using this means to direct investment in our country and to encourage the growth of regions as well as to discourage the amount of regional disparity which we have seen in our country.

There are three other measures to which I want to devote a little time. The first is the drilling allowance. The drilling allowance is, without question, the biggest loophole in our tax system at present. It is a national disgrace because it means—last year we did not have the exact amount for it but we hope the government will give it to us—that the federal government is paying for virtually all frontier oil and gas exploration and is not getting a penny in return.
