It means that, for example, Dome Petroleum has not paid a single cent of tax since it was founded some ten years ago. It means Shell Canada did not pay a single penny of tax last year. It means that while this government is screwing up its courage, to quote Shakespeare, to fight PetroCan which cost the public treasury somewhere between $300 million and $400 million, it is, at the same time, handing out money hand over fist to the oil companies, which is bad enough and stupid enough, without getting a penny of equity or of interest, or of guarantee of an interest in the long run for the Canadian taxpayer. This is the kind of "tough bargaining" which we can expect from the Liberals, but we hope for a better deal for the Canadian taxpayer from the Conservatives.

Not only that, it means also that the allowance and the loopholes go to those wealthy investors who are encouraged to shelter their money in a frontier drilling allowance. There are not many people in my riding who can afford even to know about or be aware of the meaning of a tax shelter like the frontier drilling allowance, but I think the meaning of these shelters should become crystal clear to the Canadian taxpayers. Not only are we subsidizing the takeover of our frontier resources by foreign multinational oil companies so that we are paying people to buy us out, it also means that we are paying wealthy Canadians to reap benefits from the exploration of resources. It means at the same time that while this is going on and while this unfairness is filtering through our tax system, the Conservative party has decided to pick on poor old PetroCan, the one foot in the door which the Canadian public has in the resource sector, in the oil exploration sector, and to give it back to the private sector as well.

Mr. Breau: Shame!

Mr. Rae: The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) says it is shameful. I ask him to look at the drilling allowance system which has been set up in the country. I ask him to look at frontier allowance shelters and to go back to his constituents and tell them how fair they are. That is what the Liberal government stood for, and he knows perfectly well if he went back to his constituents and told them about it, they would shake their heads in disbelief. I think people are entitled to know about it.

The second point is one that was already mentioned by the Minister of Finance, and that is the change in the term "preferred shares". Both inside and outside this House many members of our party have made the point that, even after the loophole has been closed, our banks are paying virtually no tax. The Minister of Finance says that is not true, he does not agree with my theories. He said the NDP is the party of the twenty-first century. I would remind the minister that the twenty-first century is only 20 years away. I would rather be in the party of the twenty-first century than the party of the eighteenth century.

When one looks at what has happened to term preferred shares, one realizes that although the door has been closed, the horse has already bolted. Even as we are in the third quarter of 1979, the average rate of taxation of the banks is 10.7 per cent. I think Canadians are entitled to an explanation. I look forward to an explanation from the minister. I look forward to him telling us what he is going to do. The hon. member for Saint-Maurice closed the loophole long after it had the effect of allowing an extraordinary benefit not only to the banks but to those large companies which took advantage of the system. Because the arrangements have been made, because they were entered into, and because the system of term preferred shares lasts on an average between six years and eight years, we have a long way to go before we will collect the taxes which have not been collected as a result of this device.

I think we are entitled to indicate that the door has been closed and the horse is long gone, thanks to the negligence and ignorance of the Liberal government, thanks to its lack of concern for the integrity of the tax system, thanks to its lack of concern for the fairness of the tax system. The question which Canadian taxpayers will be asking members of the House of Commons is: what will be done about it now that the horse is gone?

Finally we come to the one feature of the budget on which the minister wanted to put his own particular stamp. He wanted to make it a Conservative measure as well as a Liberal one. I have only described some of the unfairness in the budget. In addition is the fact that it did not provide for the personal tax cut which obviously was needed back in 1978. The Minister of Finance went a little further, but it is interesting that the only major change the Tories chose to make was to give high income professionals a tax break. It was given to high income professionals, not to the man in the street.

An hon. Member: What about the woman in the street?

Mr. Rae: It was not given to the person in the street. It was given to lawyers, doctors, and dentists, who are in positions where they can incorporate themselves. By the magic of incorporation, they can reduce their effective tax rate to 25 per cent. It is this illusion of unfairness that at least the Liberals realized created abuse. A special tax rate for small business was not created to give a ripoff to professionals. It was not to allow them to avoid taxes. It was not so that they would not be treated like everyone else in the tax system. It was in order to give a benefit to those people who will be going out and hiring people to start a small business and get the economy moving. That is why there was this 25 per cent rate.

Presto, what has the minister done? He said that the way they were going to change this was to switch it from a 25 per cent rate to a 33 per cent rate. The minister has said that this has a neutral tax effect, but I think he is kidding the Canadian public, and the figures will show it. The minister is kidding the Canadian public because it will not have a neutral tax effect.

The tax effect will be that professionals and members of their families, however they devise it and plan it through their tax planning arrangements for those family members who are engaged in so-called service arrangements with the doctors and so forth, will have far lower effective rates of taxation than if they were not able to take advantage of the incorporation loophole.

I think Canadians are entitled to know that the only thing the members of the Conservative caucus successfully pressured the Minister of Finance on was a tax cut for professionals, not a tax cut for all Canadians, not a means of helping lower and middle income people who are being shafted by high interest rates, not a means of helping pensioners who are struggling to make ends meet. The one group of Canadians whom this government decided to single out in its first act before Parliament by saying, "You people really need help", were the lawyers, doctors and dentists. They singled out high income professionals who are doing very well. Surely, in the name of goodness, they do not deserve the first break, the first act of charity and kindness to come out of the Conservative government.

I think Canadians expected something a little different and better than they received from the government. I will not engage in the kind of hypocritical criticism which we have heard from the government in exile, the Liberal party. Consistently we have opposed the unfairness of Liberal tax measures, the loopholes which have almost become synonymous with Liberal tax measures and the tremendous benefits to the multi-national oil companies which we have described. We say the same thing to the Conservative government, the tight money second team as I described them earlier.

We expected something different from the tight money second team than we have received so far. The people to whom they made promises during the election, those Canadians who remember that the Conservatives in their ridings promised a tax break, will be wondering why they did not receive the same tax breaks as lawyers, doctors and dentists. I do not think the government will have an answer for them. The government is responding to those same special interest groups, those same people who think giving a few more breaks to those who have will somehow stimulate the economy and that they will convince every other Canadian that what is happening is fair.

One message will come back and haunt the government. Not only does it have to deal with structural problems of the economy, it will not have Canadians behind it unless they are satisfied that everybody in society will be bearing the burden, and that not only doctors, lawyers and dentists will be receiving a little relief. It cannot deal with structural problems of the economy with a high interest rate and a laissez-faire government which leaves everything to multi-national companies. Canadians will have to be satisfied that pensioners, industrial workers, clerical workers, persons with a little education, and those persons who do not have enough get up and go to start a business, according to Conservative philosophy, will receive equal benefit. They deserve just as much a break and just as much fairness from the tax system as doctors, lawyers, dentists, chartered accountants, and insurance salesmen, who are so beloved by the Conservative party and the Conservative government.

The Liberal budget is worthy of the Liberal party. The black and grey Liberals can unite on this one. I am afraid it is worthy of what we have come to expect so far from the Conservative party which has ignored the great traditions of a national policy, but it is not something which is worthy of the House taken as a whole. We will be putting forward amendments during consideration of it in Committee of the Whole. We will be opposing these benefits because we think that they provide too great a share of the national wealth to a few Canadians. We will be asking that this government demonstrate two things: economic leadership, and compassion. A party which does not combine economic leadership and compassion will very soon find that it is out of favour with the Canadian people. I hope that those so-called "blue Tories" on the other side of the House remember what I have said because, if they do not, it will come back to haunt them.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be in the House tonight and to have this opportunity to enter into this debate. It is interesting to follow the comments of the financial critics for the Liberal party and for the NDP. The financial critic for the NDP was not here on May 23, 1978, but the whole day was spent debating a review of the tax structure for Canada. My party wanted to refer the matter to committee, but this was criticized by the Liberal party which, assisted by the NDP, talked this motion out. The two opposition parties were no more interested in reviewing the tax structure then than they are now.

It is a full-time job to keep up with the statements made by the New Democratic Party members, particularly their statements about what oil companies pay with regard to taxes. Of course, I have another statement which I will have to check out tomorrow, that being the statement by the NDP financial critic that Dome Petroleum does not pay taxes. That statement is probably just as false as all the other statements which they have made and which I will be reading into the record tonight.

There has also been discussion on the high interest rates. I will be going into some detail later in my speech as to why we have these terribly high interest rates. It has nothing to do with policies which my government has introduced, it is simply that we are forced to pay off the Liberal debt. I shall be going into these figures in a moment to remind the Liberal financial critic of the debt his government left this Canadian nation and how it trapped the Canadian people. One of the reasons why we must have these high interest rates is to attract money to pay off the Liberal debt. I will be going into the exact figures.

The financial critic of the NDP has made statements to the effect that all my party is interested in are professional people. That is not true. We have introduced legislation to deal with veterans, pensions, spouse's allowance, and aid has been granted to the municipalities in lieu of taxes, to mention but a few. The Liberal party has continuously criticized our tax credit plan for homeowners. If it is so interested in homeowners, it could have implemented this policy in 1965 because that is when my party first proposed the idea. However, at that time all we got from the Liberal government were taxes on building products. It is no more interested in home owners than it is in flying to the moon.

The Liberal financial critic was held in high esteem in the last Parliament, after he was removed from cabinet. He was quite credible in the House, and the hon. member asked many pointed questions of the government at that time. But now that the hon. member is a critic he seems to have a convenient memory. I would like to remind the hon. member of a bill which his party introduced on January 27, 1978, to bring Canada's oil up to world prices. They have since reversed their stand on this policy, but there has been no explanation as to why. As yet, this government has not said anything about bringing our oil up to world prices because we have not reached a final decision as to what the price will be. The then minister of energy, mines and resources is reported as saying in Hansard at page 2313, January 27, 1978 with regard to his Bill C-19:

> The principal purpose of this bill is to enable the government to fulfil its commitment to provide international prices for the synthetic oil produced—

Then he goes on to say:

> Steps which have already been taken by the government include the following:
> 1. A commitment to move Canadian oil prices toward international levels in order to encourage conservation and resource development.

If that party has changed its mind and its policy, I would like it to give an explanation, and never mind its negative criticism about what the government is doing with regard to oil prices. Similar comments can be found throughout this debate which carried on until April 10, 1978, where the Liberal party said that it would bring Canadian oil prices up to world prices.

I would like to give the House and hon. members present some idea of what my government has inherited from the successive Liberal governments which can only be described as the most irresponsible group of individuals to have ever held public office in Canadian history. The expenditures in main estimates for the fiscal year 1979-80 are $52.6 billion; for 1980-81, $57.95 billion; for the fiscal year 1981-82, $63.85 billion, and for 1982-83 $69.9 billion. The party while it was in power absolutely trapped the Canadian people. The budget will rise by $20 billion in three years without the present government bringing in one single spending program. They have put in motion this uncontrolled spending, and that is the problem. We must try to reduce that $70 billion budget, and that is why we cannot give tax cuts to renters or the small businessmen. We would like to give more support to the veterans and other groups, but the veterans, renters, home owners and businessmen must pay off this huge expenditure.

At the end of March, 1971, the net public debt was $16.5 billion and was costing per capita $744 per year. Four years later it jumped to $19.275 billion. As of March 31, 1979, the net public debt was $51.5 billion. This has all been set in motion by the Liberal government, and the net public debt could reach $104.710 billion by 1983. That is what the Liberals have done for the Canadian people, but we do not hear their finance critic explaining how we are to get out of this mess. He simply offers negative criticism and a complete reversal of policy. It is the policies of the Liberal government which have caused the high interest rates, and I hope that we can overcome this situation. If we cannot attract money into this country we will not be able to pay off these debts.

Another topic of discussion tonight has been Petro-Canada. I would like to point out to this House and to the people of Canada that we must all take the statements made by the New Democratic Party with a large grain of salt. If a constituent is concerned about any statement made by a spokesman for the New Democratic Party, I suggest that he or she write a government member about that particular statement, whatever it may be.

I would like to go over some statements made during the Speech from the Throne debate by the Leader of the NDP on October 10. The hon. member made a number of misleading statements concerning Petro-Canada and the oil and gas industry in general. For the most part the numbers and the events which he cited are correct. It is his misinterpretation of those numbers and events which is cause for concern, and which should be attacked and dispelled. Their leader stated:

> The tax rate for the oil industry declined from 35 per cent to 21 per cent.

He—

> —is referring to the effective income tax rate of a company relative to book profit. In order to encourage the discovery of new petroleum reserves, the government has implemented in the last decade a series of tax incentives, through depletion allowances and fast write-offs, which have the effect of reducing the taxable income. While there has been an increase in exploration activity since the introduction of various tax incentives, there appears to be some concern that these tax incentives are overly generous, causing speculation in the business community that there may be revisions in the next budget.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party has also stated:

> Shell did not pay one cent in taxes.
> This was true in 1978 in the case of current income taxes, as a result of increased exploration and depletion expenses. It is not true in the case of other forms of taxation.

● (2050)

In 1978 Shell paid other taxes of $138 million and production royalties of $205 million for a total of $343 million—an amount more than double the corporation's profit of $151 million. The statement made by the Leader of the NDP to the effect that Shell did not pay one cent in taxes, is completely false. If these oil companies are gouging the public, we on this side have no reservations about conducting an inquiry into their activities. There have been some recent investigations into that matter and the results are being examined by the Minister of Justice.

The Leader of the NDP went on to say:

> More than $2 billion of Canada's money has been given to Shell and its partners in the Athabasca Oil Sands.

His choice of words is extremely misleading as he seems to imply direct cash contributions to the oil sands project. If he is referring to the effect, over time, of accelerated capital cost allowances, depletion allowances and other tax incentives, then we probably are dealing with a matter of interpretation, assuming the accuracy of the $2 billion figure. A series of special tax and pricing concessions are being negotiated between the Shell-led consortium and the federal and Alberta governments. This series of concessions are necessary in the oil sands industry where the cost of producing a barrel of oil is in the $16 to $20 range versus around $5 for new and old conventional oil.

The NDP leader also stated:

Petro-Canada is currently involved in 80 per cent of the drillings off the coast of Labrador.

To state Petro-Canada's involvement in terms of drillings is to overstate its contribution. Out of $224 million that was forecast to be expended in the area this summer, Petro-Canada's financial involvement was forecast to be only about $50 million. Further, while Petro-Canada is involved in 9 or 10 out of 12 or 13 wells being drilled this season, it has been the catalyst or leader of none. It is a very weak national oil company, Mr. Speaker. We want to strengthen it and we will strengthen it.

Then he stated:

Canadians as far east as Thunder Bay can go to a Canadian-owned petroleum station.

And as far west as Quebec, Mr. Speaker. Irving oil, a major retailer in eastern Canada, is Canadian owned.

The NDP leader also stated:

—that $500 million has been taken and turned into $3.5 billion for the people of Canada.

This is extremely misleading, as it implies that Petro-Canada has generated $3 billion in earnings. In fact, Petro-Canada's growth is a result of $900 million of government investment and about $2.5 billion in debt. In other words, Petro-Canada has cost, not earned Canadian taxpayers, $3 billion. That is what the two opposition parties support, a weak, bankrupt company that can do nothing for us. That is why we want to strengthen it.

An hon. Member: Owned by the foreign banks.

Mr. McKenzie: That is right. Due to the false and misleading statements made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and, of course, the Liberal opposition, considerable concern has been caused to a number of residents in my constituency. I have had to draft a letter to explain the true facts to them. It reads as follows:

There has been widespread concern expressed by a number of Canadians over the future of PetroCan. But there has also been widespread misunderstanding on all sides concerning the Conservative government's proposals in this regard. Much of the misunderstanding has been fostered by those groups who do not understand the poor condition of PetroCan in its present form, or the government's proposals.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

May I begin by saying it is not the intention of this government to privatize or sell PetroCan to foreign interests. Nor is it our intention—in any sense—to weaken the Crown corporation.

Rather, the government intends to strengthen Canada's role in the oil industry. In order to achieve this—a goal which every Canadian wants—PetroCan must first be reorganized. In its present condition, the Crown corporation is a weak company in a very healthy industry. Despite the propaganda campaign being waged by the NDP and Liberal parties, PetroCan, in its present form, is not protecting Canada's interests in the oil industry.

I am enclosing additional information for my constituents.

The letter goes on:

An overview of the highlights of the task force's report will show how a restructed PetroCan will better serve Canada in a way the present corporation is unable.

First, a reorganized PetroCan would be owned by all Canadians and would consist of about 95 per cent of the assets of the present corporation. After initial distribution, only Canadians would be permitted to purchase any freely traded shares. The amount of equity held by any Canadian or corporation would be limited within strict bounds.

Whether we are going to implement that, I do not know, but that is being considered at the present time.

The letter continues:

Secondly, and just as important, the new corporation would no longer be in chronic debt. In the first six months of 1979, PetroCan has lost $7.6 million. Since it began operation in 1976, the federal government has pumped $800 million worth of equity capital into the corporation. Its financial structure as it now exists is overburdened with debt. Debt exceeds 250 per cent of equity versus the ratio of between 25 per cent and 40 per cent of other petroleum companies.

Now we have the Liberal party and the New Democratic Party supporting a Crown corporation that has a debt equity of 250 per cent. They go around telling the Canadian people what a wonderful company it is because of a debt ratio like that. I do not think they understand what a debt ratio is.

To return to the letter:

Through the proposed reorganization, with the debt of the privatized part largely removed, the new company could earn Canadian shareholders in excess of $100 million per year while the debt of the government would be reduced by about $300 million.

Third, the new corporation will retain three essential functions now performed by PetroCan. The corporation will retain the function of negotiating state to state contracts for crude oil;—

We have said right from the start that Petro-Canada would be dealing with other nations.

My letter goes on:

—exploration in frontier areas; and the development of tar sands. The retention of these three functions, along with a largely debt-free corporation owned by all Canadians, would ensure Canada has strong voice in the energy field.

Finally, the new corporation would, under the proposed reorganization, be more aggressive in the oil industry.

Instead of merely providing money for other operators, such as Mobil, in their explorations, the new company will be a leader in the field of exploration. Unlike the present corporation which has yet to drill an oil well of its own in the frontier areas, the reorganized corporation will surely be a leader in this area.

The Conservative government is as concerned as are all Canadians, of ensuring that Canada has a strong voice in the field of energy. I urge you to read carefully the information provided, for the real story is being clouded by those who do not have the interests of Canada at heart. It is time we consider the real issues involved, not those who raise erroneous arguments for political purposes. I am confident the proposals put forward are sound proposals, and they are in the best interests of Canada. I am also confident Canadians will see the pressing need to restructure Petro-Canada for the benefit and strengthening of Canada's role in the petroleum industry.

That is the extent we have to go to, Mr. Speaker, to explain things to our constituents. We need a team of watchdogs and bulldogs to analyse every statement the NDP makes. They are just unbelievable. They have completely destroyed their credibility with their statements about medicare, PetroCan and taxes. That is all we hear from them.

As late as last Friday, October 26, another of their members was criticizing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) because, when in opposition, he opposed the high interest rates that were being imposed in October, 1978. What the hon. member neglected to point out about the speech made at that time by the Minister of Finance was that while he was criticizing the increase in the interest rates he was also criticizing the uncontrolled spending that was being done. That is something you never hear from the NDP—not a word.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: There is one of them now who would never talk of uncontrolled spending. He likes to go around kidding people that we do not have to pay off a debt which is heading toward $100 billion. There is not a word from the NDP on what we would have to do about paying off that debt.

Mr. Nystrom: Especially in Tory provinces.

• (2100)

Mr. McKenzie: We will check out the statements about Dome oil tomorrow. No doubt we will all be back, and I will be back again to correct more and future statements from the two opposition parties.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to learn from any member of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: I will only take questions from a credible organization.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in this debate on second reading of Bill C-17, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan. Of course, it is not the wish of this party to prolong this debate unduly because at this stage the House of Commons has to vote on the principle of a bill. So, as the House at this late date, in late October, 1979, is still considering legislative matters arising from the budget of last November, obviously we would not want to delay unduly the legislative process on this bill. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to set certain things straight when dealing with budgetary matters, quite simply because nearly every day during question period the ministers answer questions put to them by saying that if today we have a difficult financial situation, if the governor of the Bank of Canada must constantly increase interest rates—that now stand at 14 per cent—it is because of the financial situation in which this country finds itself, apparently brought about by the Liberal party, the previous government.

Mr. Speaker, it is an argument that has absolutely no credibility, quite simply because the government officially became the government on June 4. They were elected on May 22 and since June 4, they have waited nearly four and a half months to reconvene the House of Commons, contrary, as my colleague for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) pointed out this afternoon, to the practice in effect previously in Canada and in other countries like Great Britain, for example. When a new government gets a new mandate, one of the first things it must do is to call the Houses, summon Parliament and bring forward its economic policy and legislative program.

Here is a Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) who suggests they had no data, they did not know what they were talking about, they knew nothing of Canada's economic affairs, and therefore they needed training. This is in effect what the Prime Minister said this afternoon. He indicated that when he spoke in this House last year, when the financial critics—because there were many—Mr. Gillies and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), the then hon. member for York-Simcoe, both were financial critics. I remember very well that in November last, during the budget debate, he started referring to the situation and exaggerating the Canadian deficit. He was referring to figures in the order of $25 billion or $30 billion a year, because at that time he obviously wanted to scare Canadians. He wanted to exaggerate the economic situation, pretending it was very bad.

How can the government now tell us they did not know what this country's economic situation was, when at the time they were the opposition they did not stop referring during last year's budget debate to this country's grave difficulties? Mr. Speaker, they knew what the economic situation was.

They knew last year that the policy they were advocating, the famous $2 billion tax cut, was completely irresponsible. They knew at that time that the monetary policy they were suggesting for supporting the dollar at 90 cents or 92 cents was absolutely irresponsible. In the last two or three weeks the dollar has gone down on the market. We have not heard the Progressive Conservatives complain and say that this is terrible and that the value of the dollar should be brought up to 90 cents or 92 cents.

Mr. Speaker, the members opposite must realize that they have lost all their credibility and that they are acting completely irresponsibly simply because they did not tell the truth to the Canadian population last year during the election campaign, and are not telling the truth now. They should stop groping about for solutions and bring down a budget. It is really regrettable that at the end of October, with a new government which was elected in May and which officially took power on June 4, we have not yet passed a single bill. We are now at the end of October, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has the gall to tell us, " I cannot bring down a budget before all the bills of the previous budget are passed." First of all, from a technical and a legal standpoint, I am not sure that this is true. In any case, I must tell the members opposite that we were ready to come here in July and even in June if this was so urgent.

As for the bill to increase the borrowing power of the government, which was discussed last week and passed second reading this afternoon, we were ready to pass it in July or August, and the same applies to the budget bills now under consideration. We shall therefore not spend too much time on the principle of this bill because it is rather good after all, Mr. Speaker. The government thought that the budget of my colleague the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) was so good and his economic policy when he was finance minister was so good that it did not even take the trouble to try to change it even a little bit because, since ministers have been officially and electorally in power, they did not even want to convene Parliament or bring down a new budget; so, they recognize that during 12 months, a whole year, the economic policy of the government was the right one.

Now the Prime Minister has the nerve to say, " We did not have all the information, we did not know that the economic situation of the country was so bad". Mr. Speaker, it is totally irresponsible. When a political party, whether it is a third party or anything else, presents itself as a national party and pretends to govern this country and proposes an economic measure, it should have the necessary information and act responsibly. If it promises something one day it has to keep its word once in power.

At his press conference last Friday the Prime Minister said we were irresponsible as the opposition. But it is because of the system, because we were forced to oppose whatever the government proposed. It is not true, Mr. Speaker. If this government proposes good measures for Canadians, we on this side of the House are going to support them, and when it proposes something bad, we shall say how bad it is and ask for something else. We shall be entirely responsible when we take back the power, and that will be before long, within a few months, and we shall ask the House of Commons to implement the same policies that are proposed now.

Mr. Speaker, the excuses given by this government to justify its unwillingness to present a budget now cannot be taken seriously. The only reason why we have no budget and why we did not sit for four and a half months is that this government did not know what it had to do and was unable to make a decision. Internal problems become more and more visible from day to day. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) could tell us about the problems within the government; he might explain why we lost the contract with Argentina, a $2 billion contract that might cost us even more just because the ministers were unable to make decisions. Will we continue to carry out idealistic policies or are we going to be more practical? The government could not make up its mind last summer.

The Minister of State responsible for the Canadian International Development Agency (Mr. Asselin) must now eat humble pie and explain to the House how he lost a contract worth $2 billion to Argentina, simply because the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald), supported by a number of others ministers, made some quite idealistic comments on bilateral nuclear safeguards between Canada and the United States which are buying our Candu reactors and multilateral safeguards as well.

This government last summer could not decide to recall Parliament to adopt the bills resulting from the last budget and present a new budget. There is another reason why we have no new budget just now. The Minister of Finance should also refrain from hiding the conditions, he should stop concealing the real reason. We know that no budget can be prepared in Canada, at least it would be entirely irresponsible and credulous to think that a budget could now be brought down without having taken any decision about oil prices.

Does the Progressive Conservative Party have any policy about oil prices? If it has one, is it ready to put it into effect? It was thought that everything would get better when those gentlemen came to power. They would be in a position to co-operate with the provinces, to bring those people together for a discussion. Suddenly there was no more problem among producing and consuming provinces. Mr. Speaker, it has become obvious that so far this government has failed miserably to get an agreement on oil prices. There again, we can see that they were not being responsible when they were criticizing us for the unilateral measures the then federal government had to take on oil prices. They now realize that it is difficult in Canada to come to an agreement on an issue as crucial as oil.

One of the reasons why the new government has not yet brought down a budget is simply that it has not come to a decision on oil prices. It is impossible to reconcile the interests of the Conservative Premier of Ontario with those of the Alberta Premier. Some might say that the eastern provinces have reached an agreement. Yes indeed! They are going to buy that agreement between the eastern provinces, their Conservative friends from the Atlantic provinces. We know how they are going to do that. When Alberta's revenues rise because its royalties in oil and gas increase, automatically equalization payments to the provinces will go up.

Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick, Premier MacLean of Prince Edward Island, Mr. Lévesque of the province of Quebec, Mr. Peckford of Newfoundland and Mr. Buchanan of Nova Scotia will say, "Raise the price of oil because that will increase the revenues of Alberta and, consequently, those of my province through the equalization system." Those gentlemen are in the process of asking Canadians, the consumers of oil in their own provinces, to pay a higher price for oil, in order for them to receive greater amounts of money from the federal government through the equalization programs.

That is dishonest, Mr. Speaker. For, if those people want to get more money from their fellow citizens, from the Canadian Parliament—and that is justifiable through the equalization system—if they want more income, let them ask for it and say, "We want to spend so much; that costs us so much for operating expenditures over a year, and so much for capital expenditures; we therefore need more income." But that is not what they are doing. They say to the federal government, "raise the price of oil. That will increase the revenue of the province of Alberta and ours through the equalization payments."

How dishonest, Mr. Speaker. The government should know that Canadians will realize what is going on, and see how the premiers of the eastern provinces, Mr. Lévesque and the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces, are seeking disguised tax increases through higher oil prices. At times that is the most equitable way of collecting money. Naturally, people will have to pay more for their oil because oil will cost more in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it was the hon. member from Winnipeg who said, a while ago, that we have the same oil policy as the Progressive Conservative Party, that is, we want to head toward world prices. There is quite a difference if we say that we are going toward world prices or that we are going to world prices. Furthermore, there is quite a difference between our policy and the policy of the Progressive Conservative Party, because last year we had an agreement which was valid until June, 1980, under which oil prices were to increase by $1 a barrel every six months according to economic circumstances. In January this year we postponed that increase precisely because it was said that there were inflationary pressures in Canada and that economic circumstances made it impossible for the Canadian economy to absorb such an increase at that time.

[English]

Mr. Kempling: That's because there was an election coming.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) says that was because there was an election coming. We were concerned about the economy of the country. We were a responsible government, just like we are a responsible party now. Of course we were conscious of the election. However, we were also conscious about the economy. We said it was a worth-while objective to go toward a world price for oil. We believed that should be done in stages, and then only if we were sure the economy could absorb it.

What those on the other side do not realize is that there is a limit to which we can go in oil prices. Some sectors of the economy and some regions in Canada cannot absorb the drastic price increases being talked about by the Conservative government. For example, the fishing industry would go bankrupt if left to the whims of this government with these kinds of oil price increases.

Mr. Kempling: Nonsense.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member says nonsense. He does not have to worry about fishermen in his constituency. I do. I remind him that when fishermen in my constituency, and in fact throughout the Atlantic provinces, make a profit, they buy equipment that may come from the riding of the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling). When we talk about protecting the fishing industry or agricultural industry from high oil prices, it is not because we want to help only one region of the country. This helps the whole economy. The stronger these regions or sectors are, the stronger the economy of Canada will be.

We believe that oil prices must increase, but not by $4 a barrel. We do not think we have to go to the world price because it is not we who decide what the world price will be.

Mr. Kempling: How much?

Mr. Breau: We said a dollar a barrel over six months. That was our policy. Last year, because of difficult economic conditions, we said that increase should be delayed. We are not like the Conservative party which follows only one line of policy and that is it. For example, they are now following a policy of high interest rates. The Conservatives say that because the governor of the Bank of Canada follows a certain policy of money management, they must do the same.

We followed a monetary policy, but we were concerned about the effects of it. We did something about that. One thing we did was delay the price increase of oil last January. The Conservative government is not doing that. They let interest rates go to 14 per cent. They are not doing anything on the fiscal side. That is the difference between the Conservative government and the Liberal government.

This is too complicated for the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae) to understand. He said we followed the same policy of the governor of the Bank of Canada. It is true we followed the same monetary policy, but interest rates never went to 14 per cent. When there was some shock to be absorbed in the economy, we were concerned and did something about it on the fiscal side. For example, with regard to our anti-inflation policy in 1975, we put a freeze on dividends and interest payments leaving the country. That applied for a certain period. That is an example of doing something other than monetary policy, something which deals with the effects of monetary policy, something the Conservatives are not doing. If they want to let interest rates go up and follow the policy and advice of the governor of the Bank of Canada, they must do something about the effects these policies are having. That is what they are not doing. By delaying their budget they are being irresponsible. They should be doing something about the effects of these high interest rates. This does not mean changing basic monetary policy.

As my hon. friend, the member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), said so eloquently in the last two or three weeks, Conservatives are letting Canadians pay these tremendously high interest rates and some of them do not pay them because they cannot afford it. That is very irresponsible. The government should stop dickering around and present a budget. If they have an economic policy we shall then be able to see it. We shall know whether they have the guts to decide what the energy price shall be and not hide behind provincial premiers who are not elected to deal with national politics, who are not elected to deal with the interests of the country at large but who are elected to look after the interests of their own province.

It is up to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to present a budget. They have been criticizing us for years while they sat on this side of the House. They said our economic policies were wrong. They have been in power for just about five months, now, yet they have not presented a budget. So, in effect, they are saying that the economic policy of the former government as presented by my hon. friend, the member for Saint-Maurice, was a good one. We still do not have a commitment from the government to introduce a budget in November. All we have heard is that there is to be a budget some time before Christmas.

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister are insinuating that we are delaying a legitimate program of the government. We are not doing that. We are dealing today with Bill C-17 for the first time. We were very responsible on Bill C-10—all our members spoke for less than their allotted time. We did not take the full 40 minutes because we did not wish to delay unduly the legislative work of Parliament. But the government will have to come up with some policies; it will have to live up to its responsibilities. It will have to stop the nonsense of answering every question by saying nothing can be done because information is lacking, or because it did not know how wrong things were under the former government. That is not what members opposite were elected for. They should have the courage to take up their responsibilities and present a budget before too long.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I shall not go on too long. We have heard some wild oratory this evening. We have heard some good oratory from members of the former government, and some apologies from members of the present government. Basically they are both hooting and hollering over the budget which was brought in last year by the Liberals, one which I am sure the Conservative members of that day strongly criticized and now, lo and behold, we find the same items in the budget being defended by members of the Conservative party and thoroughly criticized by members of the Liberal party!

Mr. Kempling: That shows how little you know about the question.

[Mr. Breau.]

Mr. de Jong: To be sure, I am a youngster; I am a new person and I am learning, and it is definitely a revelation to me. Never before did I realize how true that old saying was about Tweedledum and Tweedledee. It actually applies. Essentially the difference between the two old line parties is not all that great. One is in power, one is out of power. One is progressive while in opposition and conservative while in power; and the other, the great Liberal party, goes wherever the wind is blowing. Now that the Liberals are out of power they have to be seen as progressive, imaginative, and assertive. They will put together, I am sure, all sorts of good ideas and suggestions which they hope will seduce the Canadian people into allowing them another taste of power.

An hon. Member: Not for a long time.

Mr. de Jong: I tend to agree. It will be quite a long time before the Liberal party gets the taste or even the smell of power. I think the Canadian people have realized after those long hard years of Liberal government that though, indeed, they may sound progressive from time to time, when it comes down to demonstrating where they are at, they generally show themselves not to be on the side of the people but, rather, on the side of those who have generally financed them and kept them in power for such a long time.

I should like to deal with some of the items in the Liberal budget, items which I am sorry to say the Conservatives have decided to continue and recommend to the House. They are items which illustrate the type of financial favouritism which the former government indulged in, and which is to be carried on by those opposite.

I refer, for example, to the area of MURB which is the Multiple Unit Residential Buildings Program. This is a very lucrative program for those who can get involved in it. It is a $60 million tax shelter mainly for doctors and lawyers and people in high income groups.

When I began to investigate it I was amazed to realize that for a $700,000 initial investment, after a 12-year period it was possible under this program to claim losses for tax purposes of $2,518,581 or a cash return to the owner of $1,341,814. So, Mr. Speaker, for an initial investment of $700,000, over a 12-year period you get back more on tax write-offs than you initially put in. More than the value of the building! No wonder we are in trouble. No wonder there are massive deficits. No wonder the country is in economic crisis with this type of give-away program.

Do our friends across the way intend to fight government deficits by closing these loopholes? No, Mr. Speaker. They are extending them further. They intend to fight the deficit on the backs of old people, poor people and unemployed people. That is their notion of fighting deficits. Essentially this notion was practised by the previous government because they also introduced cutbacks. They did not cut back on these lucrative tax shelter programs. They suggested in their budget that they should be extended, and the Conservatives now propose to continue that policy. I wish, as I am sure the people of Canada wish, that if you are going to fight deficits and inflation you fight it among the people who can afford it, people in the higher income brackets, and not on the backs of poor people and small business people, farming people, the unemployed and the young.

The MURB program is, of course, supposed to have some beneficial effects. It was supposed to be a housing program.

• (2130)

The former government initiated some great housing programs, but over the last number of years it began to whittle away at CMHC, and I am afraid this government is going to continue this even further in its privatization of CMHC. I understand this government has appointed a one-person commission to look into CMHC to see what aspects of that corporation can be turned over to private investors. I understand the government is even thinking about turning over the mortgage insurance program.

The mortgage insurance program is an important program, especially for people living in social housing, co-operative housing, low income housing, etc. Private insurance companies do not want to touch these people, so they have to turn to CMHC for their insurance. However, the government opposite is going to sell that off to private insurance companies.

I understand that the government is having some difficulty selling the insurance part. There are so many defaults because of the interest rate policy of the government that no private insurance company would want to touch this aspect of the corporation. I am not certain if that is so. I think it is just a facetious joke some people are putting forward, and most probably the mortgage insurance program of CMHC will be sold off. I am sure the government will make it attractive enough for private investors to pick it up and to carry the burden. I am also sure that when private investors pick up CMHC mortgage insurance, they will not insure co-op housing, social housing or low income housing, which are the types of housing which need protection. They need assistance in the type of housing market and housing conditions which are being created, especially with the present government and its interest policies. However, the MURBs were supposed to do this.

This program, which cost $60 million in lost revenues, allowed people in higher income brackets to put money into MURBs. Unfortunately, the effect has not been to create low cost rental accommodations for people. There is no restriction as to what type of accommodation is to be built. Most of the money in MURBs went to relatively luxurious town houses and high cost rental accommodations. This is not a housing program. It is a tax holiday for rich people. It is no excuse for a housing program at all.

Although it is minor, another aspect of the proposed budgetary changes is the removal of certain home insulation materials from the sales tax exemption. I am glad to see that solar cells will be included as exempt items, but other insulation materials such as double-paned windows, etc. will not. I do not think insulating homes through a taxation system is necessarily the right answer. I think it is plain to see that a housing program through tax incentives is not a housing policy because it does not do the job. All it does is create a tax shelter. It does not create housing and rental accommodations which are desired by communities. Such is the case with insulation material. Tax incentives do not do the job. They are a backward step. I think we should be trying to encourage people to insulate. We should be making it easier for people to insulate. We should be providing some leadership in this area. Instead, the proposal of the former Liberal government to tax certain home insulation materials is being carried through by the present government. Even though it is a small step, it is a backward step in the field of home insulation.

There are some basic problems which the Canadian economy faces. Average Canadian workers and income earners know this better than anybody else. I think they appreciate this better than most hon. members opposite and most members of the former government, because they have to live with these problems. They have to try to balance their wages against increases in the cost of living. If they have to renegotiate the mortgage on their homes this month because it has fallen due, they will realize that they will have to pay an extra $100 or $125 per month. They realize that the little income they receive is fast being eroded. They find no protection. They get no understanding from hon. members opposite.

Most hon. members opposite are well protected from economic shocks. Hon. members opposite always want to see working people tighten their belts a little more. As I understand it, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the governor of the Bank of Canada have asked us to tighten our belts. They are going to make some tough decisions. This is a time for sacrifice. All that does not sound much different from what we heard from the former minister of finance and the former prime minister, that "these are times of sacrifice."

Who has to sacrifice? Wages did not keep up with the cost of living last year. Working people have to sacrifice. Often retired people have to sacrifice. Hon. members opposite might say that the pensions of retired people are indexed, but they really are not. They are indexed to the increase in the cost of living, but those increases do not reflect what the average old age pensioner experiences as his cost of living goes up. The extra $2.50 or $3 per month they might be receiving because of the indexing of the pension is no real protection as fuel bills and food bills go up. Those costs are going up by some 25 per cent. Working people, retired people, people on fixed incomes and people on social assistance have to bear the brunt. The assistance received by people on social assistance is not going up as fast as the cost of living. Those people are losing.

I do not know how close hon. members opposite are to people who live in those types of situations. People who live on the average pension are often expected to live on $200 a month or less. When the cost of fuel goes up by some 15 per cent, 20 per cent or 25 per cent, and when all at once a head of lettuce—as was the case in my riding in Regina this spring—costs $1.75 per head, what does that mean to a person trying to live on less than $200 per month?

It was during the election campaign that the point was really driven home for me. A lady telephoned me telling me that she was a retired person and that her total income from all her pensions was some $330. Her rent came to $210. She had roughly $120 to pay for her food and her utilities.

An hon. Member: What about that great socialist provincial government you are always talking about?

Mr. de Jong: The lady was getting a supplement. Her drug bills were being covered. She did have total access to medicare, but she had only $110 to live on. It was not enough for her food, her clothing, and her energy needs. What effect are the policies of high interest and high fuel costs going to have on her? How much more economic insecurity and living from month to month can we expect? The lady was very depressed, and she said to me, "Mr. de Jong, I think the only solution for me is to take a bottle of pills".

It was shocking to hear that from an elderly retired person who had worked and given much to this country. She had, as economists call it, lived the life of forgoing consumer expectation. Her work created the capital which made this country what it is today. What is her reward? To live from month to month in total economic insecurity, struggling to make ends meet! What a reward! What insanity! Is this the type of system and the type of country in which we are living?

What does this budget do? It helps the rich get richer, and, damn it, it helps to make the poor get poorer. It offers no relief to those who need relief the most. It will give a $60 million write-off to fat cat lawyers and doctors with programs like MURB under which they get over $1 million back in a 12-year period because they have invested $700,000 that otherwise they would have had to pay in taxes. Is this fair? Is this just? Is this how it should be? No. Hon. members opposite will talk about balancing the budget, about making tough decisions and about tightening belts, but they will not tighten the belts of these gentlemen. However, unfortunately for my poor pensioner back in Regina, they will tighten her belt.

Because of all that, Mr. Speaker, in all moral consciousness I cannot support this motion.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise and make some remarks on Bill C-17. First, I wish to make some general remarks; then I will make some specific ones with regard to the matter of the small businesses deduction in clause 38.

I believe it is now some 15 years since the Carter Royal Commission Report on Taxation came down. Since then we have had the evolution of a complex taxation system in Canada which tends to baffle most intelligent people in the nation. One thing can be said, however, and that is that as the tax system evolves, except for some brief interludes, basically it has become, first, anti-wealth production, second, anti-incentive, and third, anti-growth. Indeed, the government's share of the total industrial pie or GNP has increased, as I said before, to something like 42 per cent. Indeed, in the nation the government collects through taxes, and recirculates, in the most inefficient way, some 42 per cent of the gross wealth of this nation. This is such a heavy burden upon the productive segment of the nation that a readjustment is absolutely vital. Indeed in some nations like the United States there is a tax revolt. I do not doubt that before very long we will have a similar revolt in Canada. We must reorient the economy toward an incentive society.

The hon. member across the way referred to MURBs. I can give him some information about the actual response to incentives which occurred in Alberta. In 1974, housing starts in Alberta were in the order of 15,000 housing units a year. The vacancy rate was effectively nil. Poor people were paying escalating rents because the productive sector of the economy was not producing housing units. As a result of a series of incentives, including MURBs, we went from 15,000 housing units a year to the second highest production of units in the country, second only to Ontario. In a mere three and a half years we went up to 48,000 housing starts a year through using the incentive program.

Indeed, one could have permitted the taxation system to collect the money through various governments and then revert it to the economy to build housing units through CMHC and through other government programs. I can say without any equivocation, as one who has been in the front line of constructing housing units, that this is perhaps the most inefficient method of constructing housing that now exists.

What had to be done was to give the industry and the people the money to invest in housing units directly. In Alberta MURB was indeed successful in introducing the most housing units in the shortest possible time, so that just four years after we had a zero vacancy rate in Alberta. In Edmonton and in Calgary now we have in the order of 3 per cent to 5 per cent excess rental accommodation on the market. More than anything else this brings the rates of rental accommodation down to levels that lower income people can afford.

Saskatchewan is not a particularly poor province. Indeed, if Saskatchewan wanted to help some of the really poor people in the province, then why did that socialist government not do so?

An hon. Member: They have.

Mr. Yurko: They have? How much?

An hon. Member: More than Alberta.

Mr. Yurko: In Alberta we have various programs for helping the aged in direct assistance which, I understand, does not exist in Saskatchewan. What we have to do in this nation above all else is to decrease the stranglehold on the economy that is imposed on it by governments taxing to the extent that they spend 42 per cent of the GNP of this nation.

A very appropriate article was written recently in which it was suggested that if we do have a depression it will be the first social-oriented depression in the history of the world, for the simple reason that the government has involved itself in the economy to the extent that the production of wealth in this country has suffered drastically. The difficulty with this nation, with its abundant resources, abundant opportunities and well trained people, is that it has engaged itself in a system of redistributing wealth and has forgotten how to create wealth.

Before I come to my general comments on the bill I should like to say something about frugalness. I mentioned frugalness in one of my earlier speeches. I was fortunate in that I grew up on a farm as a member of a pioneer family. Next to us lived another pioneer family, a very frugal couple. Throughout the years they amassed more and more wealth. Eventually, the man died and left all his wealth to his wife. Madam allowed herself only one luxury—she hired a maid called Mabel.

In the intervening years, madam accumulated more and more wealth through hard work and frugality. It was her wealth, and Mabel helped her accumulate it. As she became older and came closer to her last days on earth, she called Mabel in and said to her, "Mabel, I want you to bury me face up in my coffin. I want you to bury me in my best black satin dress," she said. "But Mabel, as I will be lying there on my back, I want you to cut out all the material from the back of my black satin dress and make yourself a skirt."

An hon. Member: That is what I call Tory Economic policy.

Mr. Yurko: And Mabel said to the madam, "Madam, I must tell you that I disagree with you because if you can see yourself walking up them golden stairs into heaven, all the people behind you will be staring at your bare back." And madam said, "No, they will not, Mabel. They will be staring at my husband because I buried him without his trousers on."

Now I want to get to the more specific comments.

An hon. Member: Stay where you are.

Mr. Yurko: Well, I have been fine most of the day.

The small business tax rate has been a subject of extensive public discussion over the past, and the proposals of the previous government have been widely criticized. Under the proposals introduced in the November, 1978, budget, the benefits of the special corporate tax rate on small business would have been denied to three categories of small business income. They were professional income, the income from certain personal services, and the income from the provision of certain management and other administrative services. Under these proposals, these types of business income would have been taxed at the normal rate of corporate taxation of between 46 per cent and 51 per cent depending on the province, rather than at the special rate of 25 per cent for small business.

This clause of the bill introduces a new small business tax rate of 33⅓ per cent for any Canadian-controlled private company engaged in any of the three categories of business previously described. For this purpose the professional group, which originally included doctors, dentists, lawyers and accountants, will be expanded to include veterinarians and chiropractors.

An hon. Member: What is in it for Mabel?

Mr. Yurko: This new tax rate will generally ensure that, when the corporation pays a dividend, the amount of tax for which a shareholder will receive credit will approximate the amount of tax actually paid by the corporation. As a result the over-all tax result will be neutral, whether the corporation pays salaries or dividends. Such corporations which retain earnings in the business will still enjoy a tax deferral since the tax rate of 33⅓ per cent is lower than the personal income tax rate on taxable income in excess of $15,000. This deferral would not have been possible under the proposals of the last government. In addition, the new rules will be reflected in the law rather than in the regulations. The changes will apply to taxation years commencing after 1979 for corporations in existence on October 23, 1979, and to all taxation years for corporations formed after today.

Since all Canadian business income, other than investment income, of the three categories of corporations affected by the change will be subject to the 33⅓ per cent small business tax rate, such corporations will be given time to re-arrange their affairs so that they can receive the benefit of the lower small business tax rate on eligible active business income. Because some companies may be unable to re-arrange their affairs before the end of the year, the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) has indicated that he will be prepared to allow corporations, which wish to reorganize in light of these amendments, to change their fiscal year ends in 1980. No significant changes will be made to the rules proposed by the previous government relating to the treatment of investment income for purposes of small business deductions.

In regard to detailed comments, prior to 1972 a low tax rate of 21 per cent on the first $35,000 of corporate income was available. While the low rate on the first $35,000 was described as an incentive to small business, it was available to all corporations regardless of the type of income they earned, regardless of whether they were expanding or static, regardless of whether they were Canadian or foreign-controlled, or owned by public corporations or private individuals.

To more specifically target the benefits derived from a low tax rate, the current structure of the small business deduction was introduced with tax reform in 1972 in place of the previous measure. In order to focus more accurately on individual Canadian entrepreneurship, the measure was restricted to Canadian-controlled private corporations. In order to direct the benefits to smaller Canadian-controlled companies, the measure now applies to Canadian source business income of a corporation, as long as the corporation's accumulated business earnings net of dividends paid do not exceed $750,000.

Section 125 of the Income Tax Act provides for a 21 per cent tax reduction for the Canadian active business income of Canadian-controlled private corporations. This reduction to a 25 per cent basic corporate tax rate from the normal corporate tax rate of 46 per cent is available annually on up to $150,000 of Canadian active business, until such time as the corporation reaches its $750,000 cumulative limit. When this special 25 per cent small business rate was first introduced as part of the tax reform in 1972, the amount of annual income eligible for the low rate was limited to $50,000. Both the annual and cumulative limits have been increased twice since 1972.

The small business tax rate was designed to allow Canadian-controlled firms to accumulate funds for expansion, to allow them to compete against larger firms, and to create jobs for Canadian workers. Accordingly the legislation provides that only income from an active business carried on in Canada be eligible for this favourable tax treatment.

Coupled with these tax reform changes and developments regarding the taxation of small businesses, amendments have been made to the dividend tax credit with the view to reducing further the possibilities of double taxation of corporate source income. The dividend tax credit was made taxable by introducing the concept of a gross-up technique to dividends received by individuals. The purpose of the gross-up is to include in the shareholder's income an amount approximating the pre-tax earnings of the corporation. As a result the dividend tax credit provides tax recognition, in the hands of the individual shareholder, for 25 points of corporate tax, which in turn represents the full amount of corporate income tax paid on business income earned by Canadian-controlled private corporations qualifying for the basic 25 per cent tax rate.

In 1977 the dividend credit was increased from one third to one half of the amount of the dividend. This increase generally enhanced the attractiveness of receiving dividend payments and thereby provided an incentive for making equity investments. Also the change had the desirable effect of bringing the tax on dividends more closely into line with the tax on capital gains.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Turner: I wonder if someone in the government could inform us of the order of business for tomorrow.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, we will be proceeding tomorrow in committee of the whole with Bill C-17. When that is completed we will probably go to Bill C-18, then Bill C-3, and if we finish with those we will go on to Bills C-4 and C-5.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. Yurko.]

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION GATHERED ON POSSIBLE PROSECUTIONS

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, the question at issue is one which arises out of a series of questions and, more specifically, a question which I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) on October 17. The question at issue is important because it involves, in my view, the role of the Attorney General as a law officer of the Crown and the independence of the Attorney General in the exercise of his functions, indeed, as a law officer of the Crown, so that the Attorney General may not only be independent in the exercise of that function, but can be seen to be independent.

The second issue is the independence of the director of investigations as he discharges his responsibilities under the Combines Investigation Act.

There is a series of undisputed facts. There was a meeting which was held on October 12 at eight o'clock a.m. and which was called by the Attorney General of Canada. Attending that meeting were the Minister of Justice, (Mr. Flynn), the Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Lawrence), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), and the director of investigations as well as sundry officials.

The discussion centred around possible criminal violations under the Combines Investigation Act involving Western Transport Association and Household Goods Corporations. What is also not disputed is that no such meetings had been under the previous administration involving the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Attorney General at the time when the Attorney General was contemplating prosecutions under the Combines Investigation Act. Those are the facts which we know.

The facts which we do not know are much more numerous. First of all, what was the purpose of that meeting? Was it to gather information? Was it to provide information? Or was it a forum in order to have parties influence the course of the investigation or the prosecution? What role did the director of investigations play at that meeting? Was it an active role? Was it a reluctant role? What role did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs play in terms of protecting the director and his independence? Had the director actually submitted his evidence under Section 15 prior to the meeting, or was the meeting intended to head the director of investigations off at the pass so that the Attorney General would not have to make a decision under Section 15 as to whether a prosecution ought to be held?

What role did the Minister of Transport play at that meeting? Was it one of gaining information, or was it one of providing information? There is some dispute about those facts. What was the nature of the brief that was prepared by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for the benefit of the Minister of Transport which, allegedly, the Minister of Transport never received?

What was the nature of the briefing note prepared by the Minister of Transport's own officials? Was that only to provide him with information, or was it suggestive of his role in preventing a prosecution or in somehow affecting the role of the director? Was there any attempt to interfere with the director's investigation or with the ability of the director to have the Attorney General deal with the matter under Section 15?

Finally, what role did the Attorney General play in this particular meeting? From his own evidence he did not even know what was going to be discussed at that meeting. What representations were made by the Minister of Transport or his officials to the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General? Answers have to be found to all those questions in order to satisfy the House that the independence of the Attorney General was protected.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to bring to the attention of the House a quotation from a very distinguished jurist relating to the issue of the independence of the Attorney General in matters of prosecution or potential prosecution. This gentleman stated, "I would say that any consultation would have to be on the legal propriety of the prosecution and not on any other element. It might be, for instance, that some other member of the cabinet might be very experienced in a particular branch of the law involved, in which case he might consult him." That is a very precise indication of the role of the Attorney General as he considers whether he ought to take on a particular prosecution. Mr. Justice Spence is advancing a very interesting argument. I am not saying it is a conclusive argument, but surely that is the sort of debate in which this House has to engage itself.

Next, what about the independence of the director in the discharge of his responsibilities? Was he protected? Was he free at that meeting to advance his own views? Had he discussed the matter with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs so that that minister, at that meeting, would be aware of the position the director took and so that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs could protect his director in the face of his cabinet colleagues? Was that investigation completely independent? What we know—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. George Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General): I am very eager to rise and respond to the question that has been put by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) because I hope that, once and for all, we can put an end to the series of red herrings that have been drawn across this chamber in the last few days on this issue. At the same time I should like to refresh the hon. member's memory of what the proper practice is with regard to ministerial responsibility on a matter of this kind.

Here, Mr. Speaker, are the essential elements of the position of the Attorney General of Canada in relation to prosecutions under the Combines Investigation Act, and any other act if it comes to that. The director of investigations and research may bring any matter under inquiry to the attention of the Attorney General under the provisions of Section 13 or Section 15 of the Combines Investigation Act. Section 15 provides that the director may, at any stage of an inquiry, remit evidence to the Attorney General of Canada for consideration, to determine whether an offence has been or is about to be committed, and for such action as the Attorney General may be pleased to take.

In dealing with a case where a matter has been referred to him, the Attorney General is unquestionably entitled to obtain both information and advice from whatever sources he sees fit, including his colleagues in cabinet. The decision he takes in particular cases must, however, in the last analysis, be his decision. The Attorney General does not act on directions from his colleagues, other members of Parliament or anyone else, in discharging his duties in the enforcement of the law. On the other hand, he must be prepared to answer to Parliament for what he has done after he makes his final decision. These principles are well known and established, not only in Canada, but in every common law jurisdiction. I refer particularly to the United Kingdom where the practice, of course, grew up.

I should like to read into the record the best statement on the question that I am aware of, which may be found in a work prepared by Professor Edwards of the University of Toronto entitled "Law Officers of the Crown". I shall give my hon. friend the reference when I finish. Professor Edwards said:

> I think the true doctrine is . . . that it is the duty of an Attorney General, in deciding whether or not to authorize the prosecution, to acquaint himself with all the relevant facts, including, for instance, the effect which the prosecution, successful or unsuccessful as the case may be, would have upon public morale and order, and with any other consideration affecting public policy. In order so to inform himself, he may, although I do not think he is obliged to, consult with any of his colleagues in the government, and indeed, as Lord Simon once said, he would in some cases be a fool if he did not. On the other hand, the assistance of his colleagues is confined to informing him of particular considerations which might affect his own decision, and does not consist, and must not consist, in telling him what that decision ought to be. The responsibility for the eventual decision rests with the Attorney General, and he is not to be put, and is not put, under pressure by his colleagues in the matter. Nor, of course, can the Attorney General shift his responsibility for making the decision on to the shoulders of his colleagues—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—MEETING OF HON. ROBERT STANFIELD WITH PLO

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, ten days ago I addressed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) concerning the meeting held by the Hon. Robert Stanfield with a representative of PLO terrorists. Specifically I asked whether Mr. Stanfield has held any public or clandestine meetings and, if so, had Mr. Stanfield discussed with that terrorist organization any subject other than, or in addition to, the moving of the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, and further had Mr.

Stanfield made any undertakings to continue further contacts with the PLO.

I do appreciate the opportunity that is afforded in this House to a member to be able to press for an answer to a question which a member feels was not answered during question period.

To set the record straight, it would be unfair for me to imply or allege that the hon. minister did not reply at all, but the answer was not given to my question. My question was not frivolous, and certainly not deserving of delay. It deals with a matter of grave consequences, consequences meaning that Canada may be giving tacit de facto recognition or encouragement to the PLO, which has, as we know, been involved in terrorist activites, killing not only Jewish but Arab civilians, men, women and children in Israel and in many other parts of the world. It also seeks to obliterate the existence of the state of Israel and indirectly some, or even many members of its population.

Let me point out why it is so serious, important and urgent that a reply to my question be given to this House and to the entire country. What perhaps is at stake is our national honour, the imperilling of the peace process in the Middle East, the possibility of alienating friends such as the United States of America, Israel, and others in the international community, and of giving comfort, therefore, encouragement to the PLO terrorists—a totally immoral act for Canada and an unfriendly one toward the friendly state of Israel.

In short, I would still like to know the answer to my question. The implications are even more grave as the truth unravels. First of all, what rank and authority is Mr. Stanfield perceived by other governments to have? We were told here by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) on October 12 that Mr. Stanfield is an ambassador extraordinary, and that because of the adjective extraordinary there can be, and I quote, "no implication of official recognition by the Canadian government of any groups with which he may have consultations." Yet today the Prime Minister tabled a letter from Mr. Stanfield to the Prime Minister on official stationery which describes Mr. Stanfield as, and I quote, "Special Representative of the Government of Canada, and Ambassador at Large." Those are very imposing and impressive titles when added up: ambassador extraordinary, special representative of the Government of Canada, and ambassador at large.

I wonder whether in the eyes of governments which are used to these terms as they have been undertsood in international law or customs over the centuries, it is now realized that a new dictionnary has been written by our Prime Minister giving a new definition to those terms.

Mr. Stanfield met with Khalid al-Fahum, chairman of the Palestine National Council, the PLO's governing body, and a member of the PLO executive committee.

It has been claimed that this meeting between Mr. Stanfield and Mr. al-Fahum does not constitute recognition of the PLO by Canada. Arab diplomats and the PLO, however, can easily interpret such meetings as constituting a form of recognition of the terrorist organization which remains committed to Israel's ultimate destruction. The PLO's covenant, which has not been renounced, calls for the elimination of Israel. More recent statements by the PLO leaders, including the PLO chairman, Yasser Arafat, belie any intention on the part of that body to recognize Israel or to change its goal of its destruction.

I have in my file recent statements by Mr. Arafat, and I quote:

> Armed struggle is our only road. We have no other road to reach Jerusalem, Tel Aviv and every inch of our occupied homeland.
> Our people will continue to fuel the torch of the revolution with rivers of blood until the whole of the occupied homeland is liberated . . . not just a part of it.
> I am confident that we shall eventually overrun Begin's own offices in both Jerusalem and Tel Aviv . . . Jerusalem is destined to be the eternal capital of our sovereign independent Palestinian state under the PLO leadership.

Mr. Arafat is not referring only to the "liberation" of the West Bank and Gaza. He refers to the entire state of Israel.

A few weeks ago, Farouk Kaddoumi, director of the PLO political department said; "The PLO will never recognize Israel even if Israel recognizes the PLO" Given such a policy, it seems difficult to comprehend why Mr. Stanfield found it necessary or useful to meet with the PLO's representative. The PLO's vision of peace does not include a state of Israel in the Middle East.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had for an exchange with the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) whose reputation has preceded him into this House. I wish him well in his parliamentary career. I want to suggest, in dealing with questions as sensitive as the Middle East, that a certain balanced approach is going to be necessary to reflect that objectivity that I know he wants to bring to this House.

When he complains that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) did not answer the question that he originally posed, he is overlooking the fact the minister did affirm that Mr. Stanfield met a high representative of the PLO Having detoured us on that, he comes into the House tonight and the burden of his argument is there having been this meeting between Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Khalid al-Fahum, chairman of the Palestine National Council, that implies a tacit recognition of this terrorist organization by the Canadian government and, second, this is imperilling the peace process. In fact, nothing of the kind has resulted from this.

The Palestine National Council is a deliberative body on which are represented various Palestinian organizations as well as individual unaffiliated Palestinians. Mr. Stanfield and Mr. al-Fahum in their discussion concentrated on the Middle East situation in general and in particular the prospects for a negotiated peace, and the role of Palestinians in that process. They also touched on the Jerusalem issue. There was no discussion of whether or how there should be further contacts between the PLO and Canada.

Now we come to the heart of the hon. member's assertion in which he suggested this meeting implied tacit recognition. No meeting of this nature could imply a recognition of the PLO by the Government of Canada. If in fact the PLO is neither a state nor a government and does not claim such a status, how then can formal recognition of such an organization follow from a meeting?

● (2220)

The government did not and does not intend that Mr. Stanfield's meeting with Mr. al-Fahum should constitute any form of official recognition of the PLO as what it claims to be, the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinians. The circumstances in which the government would be prepared to consider the PLO as speaking with authority for the Palestinian people have been very clearly set out by the Prime Minister. Neither criterion has been satisfied as things now stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS—REMEDIAL ACTION BY CHIP TO PROTECT HOME OWNERS FROM HAZARDOUS INSULATION MATERIALS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for taking sufficient interest in this topic to appear personally in the House this evening. I had asked the hon. gentleman previously about the home insulation program, considering this to be an extremely important program.

All this week we have heard how the cost of oil might go up. We have heard how interest rates are going up and the average consumer will be caught in a tight squeeze. An area in which we can take positive steps to reduce the cost of living is the home insulation program. I was going through my notes and I see that in one study done by a group from Princeton University in a town called Twin Rivers in New Jersey, it is claimed that three-quarters of the energy used by furnaces in private homes can be eliminated. There are other statistics which show that the amount of money spent on building a nuclear reactor if spent on home insulation, could save more electricity than a nuclear reactor could ever produce.

Home insulation is inflation proof. It is a way in which we can save billions of dollars in foreign exchange by reducing our imports of oil. It fits in with the trend of a more conserving society—making do with what we have makes so much sense.

There are, however, some serious problems with the program. One CBC program in Winnipeg reported that Manitoba Hydro had done a study of 200 randomly selected homes and found that nearly 90 per cent of them did not reach their full insulation potential. There was a group in Waterloo which conducted thermo-checks using infra-red photography, and found that in over 60 per cent of the homes re-insulation had not been properly carried out.

What are the problems? First there is a problem with materials. Cellulose fibre has been classed as a hazardous material. I asked the minister whether similar tests had been conducted at the time with urea-formaldehyde foam as well as treated wood chips. I understand there are serious problems attached to those materials. I understand the foam gives off a toxic formaldehyde gas if not properly applied. What we have is an industry which has grown very fast in a short period of time. Serious problems have been created by a number of unscrupulous or inexperienced manufacturers of materials. According to one statistic which is floating around 60 per cent of the homes which have been insulated with cellulose fibre in the maritimes will experience rotting of the basic structure. This is because cellulose fibre, if it gets damp, produces a fungus growth leading to a rotting of the structure.

I have received reports from all over the country about fly-by-night operators. They generally prey on elderly people and sell them a bill of goods whereby they get some insulation work done, mostly in the attic, and they are charged $500, which CHIP pays. However, local contractors would charge only $200 or $250 for the same job. There is a serious rip-off happening not only for the consumer but also for the government.

I find some difficulty with the CHIP administration. I feel that this is a problem this government has inherited. The former government prided itself on being able to run a very solid administration, but CHIP is just an administrative disaster. It is not living up to the potential the money put into it would indicate. We are not achieving the energy savings we could. The program is allowing unjust operators to enter the field.

In my supplementary question I asked the minister to consider a special committee of this House. I ask that question again because I think a special committee would be able to take all the information which exists in the various departments. Right now not only is CMHC involved, but the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are involved as well. A grouping of various departments and agencies is involved with home insulation.

I was suggesting that home insulation is very important to the country. It will save individual consumers as well as the country money. Why not set up a committee, bring the various departments together, have a thorough investigation of the existing practices, and come up with some new solutions? I suggest we bring the various departments, the research, the enforcement and the delivery of services—the three essential aspects to this program—together, and perhaps through a committee of this House offer to the government a new alternative on how this service, which is so essential to the Canadian people, can be delivered.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank my hon. friend opposite for his kindness in referring to the fact that I was here to continue this important debate with him tonight. It is a pleasure to do this because the hon. member is quite right that this is a very important topic. He is also quite right in saying that we inherited this problem from the former administration. That being the case, however, it is one which is very widely used. As a matter of interest, applications are coming in at about 10,000 per week. Approximately $60 million has been spent so far in 1979 on this program, but there are some administrative problems with it. There is no doubt about that, and I would not be prepared to dismiss out of hand the possibility of pursuing this by way of a committee along the lines the hon. member discussed.

However, I think it might be profitable first to discuss the matter in the regular standing committee to see what kind of information, debate and dialogue we can initiate there.

Questions about abuses are bound to occur with a program which is as widely used as this one. I am sorry that when the hon. member asked his question I did not make it clear that there are tests being done by the Ontario Research Foundation or other outside agencies on the basis of standards set by the Canadian Government Specification Board on other insulation products such as urea-formaldehyde. One of these tests is designed to ensure that the formaldehyde content does not exceed one part per million, which seems to me to be a pretty exacting test. However, the difficulty that CMHC has had is that in administering the program for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources it has had to rely on tests given to us by the Ontario Research Foundation.

We are now in the position with respect to cellulose insulation where, under the Hazardous Products Act, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Lawrence) can, as I understand it, order some of these products, if they are not accepted, to be taken off the shelves. I trust that there are other things we can do to improve the administration of this program. One of the things I am looking at—but in a tentative way at this point—is perhaps to combine this program with some other housing programs which have an energy factor in them.

In closing, CHIP is not a program which should be condemned out of hand simply because it is so widely used and there are many abuses reported. We have not been able to ascertain the actual extent of the abuses with any great precision as yet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

PROTEST AGAINST HARASSMENT OF CANADIANS IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Two hundred Canadians protested in Vancouver yesterday against the Czechoslovakian government's demands that they pay for legalized exit from Czechoslovakia. These citizens who left in the forties, fifties and sixties are being contacted by letter from the Czechoslovakian government. An interview with the Czechoslovakian consul to discuss the "buy-out" clause costs $60—that is just for an interview—and final payment ranges from a few hundred dollars for labourers to as much as $8,000 for professionals. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery):

That the government immediately take steps to prevent this harassment of Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN PEACEKEEPING FORCES IN CYPRUS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in view of recent statements that the Canadian government might withdraw its troops in the United Nations' contingent on the island of Cyprus, and in view of the long-standing commitments of the Canadian government to the integrity of the Republic of Cyprus and the need for occupying Turkish troops to leave the island and for the refugee problem to be settled, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour):

That this House urges the Government of Canada to keep Canadian troops active in United Nations' peacekeeping efforts in Cyprus until all foreign occupying troops have withdrawn from the island.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

COASTGUARD

CONSTRUCTION OF COLLEGE AT POINT EDWARD, NOVA SCOTIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity with respect to the ever-increasing importance of the coastguard to eastern Canada.

Whereas the government has cut back on the construction of the facilities at the coastguard college at Point Edward, Nova Scotia, thereby risking the development of the qualities of graduating officers and the coastguard in general, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen):

That the government proceed to construct that portion of the coastguard college the plans for which have been already approved but for which the government refuses to commit financing for construction, thereby refusing needed training for the students.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST TRAINING PROGRAM FOR NURSES BE REINSTATED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the federal government has hired an insufficient number of nurses for northern regions—over half of the nursing positions in northern Manitoba are vacant, including a number of communities having no professional health personnel at all—and considering that the accident rates and disease occurrence rates in remote communities are much higher than the provincial and federal norms, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare take immediate action to hire necessary staff and to reinstate the initial training program removed by the previous government which gave nurses, unfamiliar with life in these communities, more adequate preparation and increased the likelihood of these nurses remaining where they are so badly needed.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require unanimous consent of the House for the introduction of such a motion for debate at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

PROPOSED DISBANDING OF CORPORATION—REQUEST HON. ROBERT STANFIELD CONDUCT INTERIM INQUIRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering the success of the Stanfield mission, at least in light of the beneficial effect it seems to have had on the decision announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) yesterday, to delay the implementation of his previous intention to transfer the Canadian embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart):

That the government give Mr. Stanfield a similar reference about the proposed disbanding of Petro-Canada.

FISHERIES

DISPUTE AMONG SQUID PROCESSORS AND FISHERMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

As the major fish processors in the maritimes, the Nickerson Company, refuse—according to the representatives of the Maritime Fishermen's Union—to purchase any more than 500 pounds of squid per boat, and in view of the fact that some fishermen are throwing overboard valuable squid catches because they cannot sell it, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans bring the parties concerned together before a more serious confrontation develops.

And it is going to, if he doesn't.

TRADE

LOSS OF MIDDLE EAST CONTRACTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that close to 100,000 Canadian jobs related to our markets in the Middle East are still in jeopardy, and since only yesterday we learned that Zenith Steel Fabrications, in the riding of the member for Richmond South-Delta (Mr. Siddon), lost $43 million in Middle East contracts due to the bumbling of this government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce intervene personally to re-establish confidence in Canada's impartiality in order to recover lost contracts and jobs.

Should he fail in this, I move that the government establish a program of compensation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even with the unanimous consent of the House, I think the motion has to remain on one topic. The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

OIL PRICES—AVAILABILITY OF CANADIAN OIL TO CANADIANS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the statement yesterday by the Premier of Alberta—a statement of policy, as he described it—to the effect that the people of Canada would have to buy oil at a price which Alberta decided to be fair, or not get it from Alberta.

Will the Prime Minister give his assurance to the people of Canada that Canadian oil, whether it be produced in a province or offshore, will continue to be available to Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the text of the speech of the Premier of Alberta. He has not made that position known to me in conversations that we have had. But I can certainly give the right hon. gentleman the assurance that he seeks.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would care to elaborate on his own policy and assure the House that he has the means to carry out that assurance. The Prime Minister will recall that last Wednesday, in this House, he said he would not under any circumstances use the declaratory power or emergency power.

How can he give the assurance to Canadians that they will get a continuous supply of Canadian oil, in circumstances such as the Premier of Alberta described? What power would the Prime Minister use under the constitution, or would he invoke the Petroleum Administration Act?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has cited two options that are open to the Government of Canada in the event of that kind of emergency. I say to him, and I assure the House and the country, that I do not think we are facing that kind of emergency. I do not intend to react to a proposal that might have been made but certainly has not yet been made to me.

I do not think we are yet at a stage in this country where oil pricing matters are going to be resolved by long-distance accusations. I remain confident that we can work out an agreement involving the federal government and the various provinces.

● (1415)

Mr. Trudeau: I understand the Prime Minister is saying that long-distance confrontation, presumably between the Premier of Alberta and the Premier of Ontario, is a matter which does not present cause for serious concern. But I question the Prime Minister on the answer he gave to my question when he said those options were available to the Government of Canada—the declaratory power, the emergency power and, of course, the trade and commerce power. He told me last Wednesday, as reported at pages 553 and 554 of Hansard, that these powers would not be used by the government. Is he telling us now that in certain circumstances he would use them?

Mr. Clark: What I am telling the House is that I do not anticipate the Government of Canada having to use those powers.

RESOURCES

INQUIRY WHETHER FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING WILL BE CONVENED TO DISCUSS JURISDICTION OVER RESOURCES AND TRADE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the problems which he is now experiencing, does he intend to convene the premiers as soon as possible to discuss that problem and carry on the discussion undertaken in February, when the first item on the agenda was the distribution of powers for resource ownership and interprovincial trade to solve as soon as possible that problem threatening the future of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention, at least not for the moment or in the immediate future, to call a first ministers' conference to deal with the issue raised by the hon. member. As I indicated the other day to the hon. member for Outremont, there may be a first ministers' conference on oil pricing and other related issues, but in answer to the hon. member's question on the constitution, I must say that we do not intend to call a conference in the near future.

REQUEST ALL CANADIANS BENEFIT FROM NATURAL RESOURCES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary. Does the right hon. Prime Minister not believe that at this time when a province wants to secede from confederation, it would be extremely important for all Canadians to realize that a federal government must have the powers necessary to ensure that our natural resources will benefit all Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is well known and understood throughout the country that the federal government already has the powers referred to by the hon. member. What all Canadians must now know, I believe, is that the present federal government wants to solve the country's problems through dialogue rather than by unilateral action.

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION INVESTIGATE PRICES AND PROFIT INCREASES IN OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, one aspect of the oil question is, of course, the matter of supply. The other aspect, one which has deeply concerned both Americans and Canadians, is the question of profiteering in the industry.

Considering that in the United States the President has responded swiftly and imaginatively by proposing a $300 billion excess profits tax on multinational oil companies in the United States, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, bearing in mind that Imperial Oil, Shell, Texaco and Gulf have reported profit increases in Canada for the first nine months of this year of approximately 55 per cent, for a cumulative total of about, $1 billion in profits, whether he will follow the American lead in dealing with this serious question by immediately establishing in Canada a commission with authority to investigate prices and profit increases in the oil industry and to order roll-backs in prices and profits should such action be justified.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the proposal of the Leader of the New Democratic Party of such an agency was brought to my attention outside the House. In our view, it would duplicate powers which are already in place. It would be unnecessarily bureaucratic and would not accomplish the goals the Leader of the New Democratic Party appears to hope it would, so we have no intention of establishing such a commission.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what powers are in place. So far the government has refused to act. The people of Canada would like to know what powers the Prime Minister has used to keep profits and prices in the oil industry in line.

One oil company in Canada, Imperial Oil, through proceedings which became clear in a civil court, is on record as having overcharged the consumers of Nova Scotia. It is also on record as having avoided paying federal income taxes by creating a dummy corporation in Bermuda. What, specifically, does the Prime Minister have in mind to deal with these problems, or is he simply content to talk tough to the Canadian people about dealing with inflation but not to act tough at all with multinationals?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we naturally intend to act tough, as the hon. member says—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —with the multinationals, but not in such a way that the severity of the action or the crescendo of rhetoric will drive out of this country Canadian or foreign companies whose exploration activity is necessary for us to continue to bring on stream supplies this nation needs.

[Mr. Clark.]

The hon. member asked about taxing policy. He knows that his questions about taxing policy can be answered only in the context of a budget, and a budget will be brought down later on.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Clark: The hon. member also made reference to a specific case which he knows is under investigation.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, quite apart from the six-year old investigation which is taking place—and the Prime Minister is right about that—he knows that we already have evidence of one of the major multinationals, Imperial Oil, deceiving and cheating the people of Nova Scotia.

The extraordinarily high profits of these companies this year is on record. I do not ask my question in a rhetorical way. Why is the Prime Minister describing my proposal as extreme, when all it has in it are the powers to investigate price and profit increases and to take action only if profit and price increases are out of line? Why is that an extreme proposal and not a reasonable one?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I suggested it was extreme. I suggested it was unnecessary and bureaucratic. We in this Parliament and in this government have the power to control price. Indeed, the price of oil is controlled by the Government of Canada. We have the capacity to monitor what companies are doing with their profits. Indeed, I am advised that in 1977, 84 per cent of the industry's internally-generated cash flow was re-invested in capital expenditures.

I can say to the hon. member that final 1978 figures will be available, and I would be delighted to table them in this House of Commons so that if there are grounds for the hon. member's concern and the concerns others share, the whole country will know the facts and will be able to come to conclusions on them.

MEASURES GOVERNMENT WILL ADOPT TO CURB INCREASES IN OIL PRICES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am sure Canadians would like to believe the assurance the Prime Minister is trying to give us, but because of the inaction and the inertia of this government, that confidence is lacking.

In particular, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who stated last week that the situation was fragile, those were his words, with regard to energy supplies. Last week it was reported that the industry made profits like never before in its history, and yesterday the Alberta premier stated that he was ready to cut off supplies to the rest of Canada if he did not get his price. Under those circumstances, will the minister set up immediately the Energy Supplies Allocation Board provided for in the energy supplies emergency bill passed by the previous government or, at the very least, will he convene immediately the interprovincial committee on energy supplies that was set up by the provincial energy ministers in Calgary about 15 days ago, because of the inaction and inertia of the present government in that field?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions raised by the hon. member in the context of his rather long question. I simply want to say that I do not think it is appropriate for me—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Answer it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will answer it for you, Daffy Duck. I want to point out to the hon. member that in terms of answering the question with respect to any response as to any legal interpretation of what has been said by the Premier of Alberta, I would simply not indulge in that. We are now involved in consultation with respect to the whole question of pricing, and that will continue.

In terms of our supply situation, I want to say that I have indicated that we feel confident we will be able to get through this winter. It is a fragile situation, but we have taken measures, through the department, by which we are planning for any emergency situation. I have given consideration to the establishment of the board, and in due course I will come before the House with possible amendments to the legislation. At that time I think it might be appropriate to bring forth a name on the board which might serve a purpose with respect to a dialogue.

The final point is with respect to the technical advisory committee which was raised in the question of the hon. member. There are some legal questions and impediments which stand in the way of the establishment of that board. They are being looked at in connection with the director of the Combines Investigation Branch. The whole question of having that board in existence might be interpreted as being a combine in terms of the industry, and I know the hon. member would want to make sure that those legal impediments are considered before any technical advisory group is put into place.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the situation may be fragile, but in this flood of words from the minister we see that the government and the minister are even more fragile in this important situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Will the minister at least recommend to the Minister of Finance, in his forthcoming budget, the introduction of a windfall profits tax to collect some of the large profits being reaped by the oil companies at present, rather than punishing Canadian consumers with substantial increases in the price of oil and gas which are the equivalent of taxes?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the observation that during the time the hon. member was a minister in the preceding administration they allowed what he calls excessive profits to be made by the corporations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I simply want to say that when the budgetary provisions are announced by the Minister of Finance, at that time he will be able to assess exactly what kind of representations have been made.

FURTHER INCREASES IN OIL PRICES—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has he calculated, and can he tell us now, the additional burden on Canadian consumers and the Canadian economy generally if the Conservative government caves in to the excessive oil price demand by the Premier of Alberta as was reported yesterday?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not calculated any increased cost of any speculative demands. There is a process under way in this country of negotiation and discussion as to what should be the proper range of energy prices next year.

The Premier of Alberta, who represents a producing province, has one view which represents the aspirations of his own province, which wants to get the value of its resources—a province that has given a lot to Canada in the last four or five years. Other premiers who represent other jurisdictions have different views. If these views cannot be reconciled, the government will make a decision which will be announced in the House in due course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OIL PRICES—REPORTED REMARKS OF PREMIER OF ALBERTA—GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to put my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Because of the importance of this matter to Canadian consumers and to the entire economy, I want to ask him if his words today about Premier Lougheed's speech in fact suggest we are seeing a form of Conservative play-acting in order to give the Prime Minister an excuse for giving in to the Premier of Alberta on oil prices in a way that is contrary to the interests of the Canadian public? In other words, has the Prime Minister's "fresh face of federalism" been turned by the Premier of Alberta into a slap in the face of federalism?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer that extemporaneous question by saying to the hon. member, no.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

THE ENVIRONMENT

HARMFUL EFFECT OF CERTAIN FLUOROCARBONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment, to whom I have given notice of it. Considering the threat fluorocarbons are posing to the environment, does the minister intend to bring into effect on December 1, 1979, the proposed regulations to ban certain fluorocarbons as spraycan propellants in hair-sprays, deodorants and similar products, as intended by the previous Liberal government?

● (1430)

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, already there has been a significant reduction in the use of fluorocarbons on a voluntary basis. There are regulations pending, but under the Environmental Contaminants Act a notice of objection has been filed by one corporation. Under the act, and under those circumstances, a board of review is to be established and that board is being established now.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, does the minister have a deadline he would like to announce for further regulations to completely phase out the use of PCBs in Canada?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said PCBs. I do not know whether he is now talking about the same matter.

Mr. Caccia: No, it is another matter.

Mr. Fraser: With respect to PCBs, as the hon. member knows, there is a board sitting at present because there are regulations presently to go into effect which, again, have been challenged by two corporations, I think, and we will await the results of those hearings.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

JURISDICTION OVER OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In his statement of October 3 respecting offshore mineral rights, the Prime Minister made clear his intention to transfer to the provinces both property rights and legislative jurisdiction.

Since, in his own timetable, subsequent confirmation of the intergovernmental agreement by legislative action belongs to stage one of his proposed negotiating sequence, what kind of parliamentary action does he intend, and when; and, in particular, when does he plan to bring forward a joint address for constitutional amendment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member an exact date. As is the habit of this government, certainly we will honour the rights of Parliament in bringing to the House of Commons such matters that Parliament should consider. At this stage, the discussions with the various provinces have not reached a level where legislative action is contemplated.

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid any excess of executive federalism, will the Prime Minister assure the House that no effective transfer of jurisdiction will be taken before parliamentary approval is obtained?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that we will not act in a way which would limit the rights of Parliament. Certainly, I can give the undertaking to the hon. member that there will be an opportunity for Parliament to consider proposals we would introduce which would, in effect, amend the constitution.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER SOLUTION FOUND TO PROBLEM OF EXPLODING POP BOTTLES

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. It concerns the government's intentions regarding the severe economic disruption and hardship presently being experienced by the soft drink industry as a result of the government's handling of the 1.5 litre container problem.

Recognizing that jobs have been jeopardized, and that indeed in New Brunswick, in the community of Woodstock, 32 employees have been laid off, I would ask: Can the Prime Minister report on the progress being made toward finding a solution to the problem of glass retention from 1.5 litre containers? Specifically, can he confirm for the House that the Japanese technology of plastic coating has been found to be too costly for use by the Canadian industry? Will he tell the House what alternate solutions are being considered?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will draw those questions to the attention of the minister.

ENERGY

REQUEST REVIEW BE UNDERTAKEN OF INCENTIVES FOR OIL EXPLORATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the fact that Canadian taxpayers are providing, on the average, 65 cents out of every dollar which oil companies put toward exploration under the present tax regime, and given the record profits of oil companies, will the minister conduct a review of these incentives and make recommendations for reform so that taxpayers no longer end up financing this corporate rip-off?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member the assurance that we are in fact, reviewing, in consultation with the Minister of Finance, the whole question of tax incentives, not only in the context raised by the hon. member but, more importantly, we want to look at the kind of tax incentives which might bring in greater supply and provide greater inducement for further exploration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Of course, the members of the New Democratic Party support this wholeheartedly.

NATIONAL REVENUE

IMPERIAL OIL—METHOD OF PAYING CANADIAN TAXES

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, if we are to believe the Prime Minister's election promises, we will see more corporate hand-outs to the overly rich multinationals.

My supplementary is directed to the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue, on the issue of these tax incentives. Can the minister tell us whether his department has now completed an investigation of Imperial Oil which over a five-year period used a token Bermuda company, Albury Co. Ltd., to skim off $35 million in profits to avoid paying Canadian taxes? If so, will he indicate what action his government will be prepared to take on this matter?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, an investigation like that, if one was being carried out, is not the kind of thing which one would want to discuss on the floor of the House of Commons—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —any more than one would want to discuss the tax returns of any members of this House on the floor of the House of Commons. But I want to assure the hon. member that the results of any investigation with respect to the matter would be appropriately dealt with by the government and would be something to study by the government. I want to assure him that the department is well aware of the problems raised in the hon. member's question.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RELOCATION OF DEPARTMENT FROM OTTAWA TO CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs. There is growing concern in some quarters of Canada, particularly in Prince Edward Island, that the government may be reneging on its commitment to relocate the Department of Veterans Affairs from Ottawa to Charlottetown. These concerns have been made worse by recent utterances of the previous minister of veterans affairs who continues to act as though he were the minister. Is the government still committed to a full and timely relocation of the Department of Veterans Affairs from Ottawa to Charlottetown?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, and as far as the government is concerned, the move of DVA to Charlottetown is going on. Very recently, we received Treasury Board approval to exchange the site we expropriated in downtown Charlottetown for one known as site 15, on the waterfront. We are negotiating some administrative matters with the provincial government at the present time.

TRANSPORT

CALL FOR RETENTION AND EXTENSION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. During the last Parliament, and during the election campaign many, if not all, western Conservative members of Parliament not only called for the retention of the Crowsnest Pass rate as a fixed statutory freight rate for the movement of grain, but also suggested that the Crow rate should apply to the shipment of beef and other grain products.

Will the minister advise the House if this clearcut and unequivocal position still applies now that his party is in government, or is the government contemplating a subtle but important new arrangement which might preserve some Crow benefit but not the Crow rate for prairie farmers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might be well advised to read this party's policy in the last election campaign, which indicated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lessard: Before or after?

Mr. Mazankowski: Before or after, it really does not matter. It indicated that there was reason to believe, as far as we were concerned, that there should be some increases in remuneration to the railways for the movement of grain. But we indicated that the benefit of the Crow rate would remain in statute form in the hands of the producers.

We are considering this matter at the present time. Any changes or any modification to the implementation of the benefit of the Crow rate will be conducted in full consultation with the farmers and interested producer groups. I must indicate that we are receiving many representations from producer groups, farm organizations, producers themselves, and members of Parliament in the Liberal party and, indeed, in the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked the question is that the government has flip-flopped on so many other things, that I just wanted to make sure it was not going to flip-flop on this one.

I would direct my supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister confirm that the Treasury Board is presently conducting an internal study on the cost of maintaining the Crow rate and, if so, does that study include an analysis of the cost of extending the Crow rate per se to beef and other grain products?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm what the hon. member has asked.

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS RESPECTING ABANDONMENT

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport and it relates to the one-man task force established by the minister, in the person of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, to examine and report on those prairie branch lines not yet addressed by the CTC but frozen by the minister until at least tomorrow.

Notwithstanding the fact that the previous government acted to guarantee at least 80 per cent of existing prairie branch lines now serving about 90 per cent of western farmers, can the minister say to this House and the people of Canada if he has: (1) received the report; (2) if he intends to table it; and (3) what are his intentions in relation to the branch lines that he has frozen and that will become unfrozen tomorrow?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the report is being drafted at the present time and I understand it is in its final stages. The hon. member is somewhat incorrect in his assessment that 80 per cent of branch lines were going to be retained. The 1,900 miles of branch lines that were being examined by the hon. member for Moose Jaw are, indeed, lines that were going to fall under the Liberal axe and they obtained a reprieve as a result of the change in government.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw will produce his report, and I will certainly make it public. We will act upon its recommendations. I can assure the hon. member that of the 1,900 miles that were destined for the axe under the Liberal government, a good portion will remain and will be used by the producers of western Canada. This is something we need in order to move the record amount of grain that we intend to deliver to export positions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again to the Minister of Transport. Retaining branch lines as rustic relics is simply not good enough. I think we need those branch lines rebuilt and upgraded now. Will the minister say whether he intends—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deniger: Will the minister say whether he intends to honour our commitment and ensure that every line in the permanent network is able to fully handle grain hopper cars year-round at top speed?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to note that the hon. member now is a supporter of the retention of the prairie branch lines that were going to fall under the Liberal axe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: We in this government have taken the position of providing transportation services to those elevators which will remain in existence and providing service to the producers of western Canada, and I can assure the hon. member that we will fulfil that pledge.

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—AUTHORITY OF GRAIN TRANSPORTATION CO-ORDINATOR

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The government has removed the control of grain transportation co-ordination from the Canadian Wheat Board and transferred those responsibilities to the new grain transportation co-ordinator. To date that new co-ordinator has not been given any legislative authority to deal with our grain movement problems. He has apparently assumed responsibility, without any clout.

Will the government introduce legislation conferring such authority on the co-ordinator, what will his powers be and, if it will, when specifically will such legislation be brought forward in the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the required powers for the grain transportation co-ordinator have been established by a government order in council. If any additional requirements are necessary, we certainly would be glad to bring in legislation. The co-ordinator is in place, he is now in the process of establishing staff, and I am pleased to report that he is conferring with all components of the industry.

I should also indicate that he is working in very close collaboration with the Canadian Wheat Board. I think that is very important. The job of the grain transportation co-ordinator will be to see that grain is moved. The job of the Canadian Wheat Board will be to see that we explore and pursue every available market potential we have available to us.

Mr. Bockstael: Those are not the same impressions that are given by senior members of the Canadian Wheat Board's transportation committee.

Meanwhile, we are told that the senior committee on transport at the Canadian Wheat Board has been deprived of its responsibilities and that its members wash their hands clean of any ensuing problems. The vacuum resulting from the fact that neither the co-ordinator nor the Canadian Wheat Board can accelerate the delivery of wheat to our customers, and the erosion of the powers of the Wheat Board cause serious problems to small and medium-sized producers in this country.

Hence, I ask what other steps the government intends to take to assure Canadians, and particularly the prairie provinces, that significant upgrading of the transportation and delivery of our goods will be achieved?

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I should advise the hon. member—and I am sure he knows—that the terms of reference that were established for the operations of the grain transportation co-ordinator were developed in full consultation with the Canadian Wheat Board. If the hon. member is not aware of the functions and the duties of the grain transportation co-ordinator, I would be very happy to supply him with a copy of the terms of reference.

Indeed, I am happy to report that the establishment of the grain transportation co-ordinator, with the addition of some 7,000 hopper cars which are now going to be coming on stream between now and 1981, and with some 5,000 additional rehabilitated boxcars—which are coming on between now and the middle of next year—has given us the opportunity to express a great deal of optimism about the future in exports of grain. I am also happy to report that as of this date, the total unloads at Vancouver and at Thunder Bay amount to 109,000 as compared to 103,000 last year. As far as Churchill is concerned, we have moved in excess of 500,000 metric tons, the same as last year but somewhat under the target we had anticipated.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PLATFORM OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated that a number of factors were unknown to the government prior to the election which, once revealed, have prevented the Prime Minister from delivering on his election promises.

In view of the fact that the promises were made at a time when the Prime Minister and his advisers were predicting a $17 billion deficit, and since the actual deficit will be in the range of $11 billion to $12 billion, clearly the deficit cannot be the reason, and will the Prime Minister now tell the House clearly and concisely what new factors were revealed to the Prime Minister after the election?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, that is almost precisely word for word a repetition of a question which has already been answered.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

NARCOTICS

LEGISLATION UNDER WHICH OFFENDERS WILL BE TREATED

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on May 1 of this year a Supreme Court of Canada judgment was brought down which, in fact, not only decriminalized the possession of marijuana but also the possession of or trafficking in all narcotics. The judgment stated that all laws controlling narcotics in Canada were not passed under the criminal law-making power of Parliament and that the Narcotic Control Act is not, in fact, a criminal law but a federal statute under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of Canada, which puts all narcotic offences in the same category as income tax violations, violations of the Food and Drugs Act and many other regulatory federal statutes that deal with non-criminal offences. This means that law enforcement officers—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Mitges: I should like to ask the minister what action, if any, has been taken to change the law to make sure that narcotics violations will be dealt with under legislation passed under the criminal law-making powers of Parliament?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Acting Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will answer on behalf of the Minister of Justice. I thank the hon. member, and I believe he is referring to the Hauser case before the Supreme Court of Canada.

There has been a great deal of misinterpretation of the nature of that judgment. The Supreme Court decided that the Narcotic Control Act was enacted constitutionally under the residual power rather than criminal law. The misunderstanding was that administrative processes following arrest would not be valid, and they would include arrest, processing, record-keeping and extradition. That is not the opinion of the Department of Justice. It is the opinion of the department that all of those processes remain in full force, and that the Hauser case in no way detracts from or minimizes those powers.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OVER OIL PRICES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Earlier in the course of this question period, the Prime Minister told this House that the government has sufficient power to control oil prices in Canada, so that no further action would be required either along the lines raised by the leader of the NDP or which have been proposed by President Carter.

Will the Prime Minister confirm to this House that aside from controls on the wellhead price of oil, no controls whatsoever exist on prices at the refining level, for transportation of oil and, most important, for the thousands of consumers and small businesses no controls exist in Canada at the retail level on the price of oil and gas?

Will the Prime Minister tell the House what action he intends to take, in view of this, to protect those consumers and small businesses from excessive price increases?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, just to clarify my answer to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, which is quite clear on its face, I said I did not think it was necessary for us to assume to the Government of Canada all the kinds of powers proposed in the commission proposed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I also indicated to him that actions in relation to budgetary matters would, naturally, have to await the budget.

The hon. member is asking if we have, in fact, a system of controls that is so complete that it controls prices at every level having anything to do with any aspect of petroleum. The answer is no, we do not, and we do not intend that kind of control.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered the question of whether controls exist. My supplementary question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. It relates to the six-year inquiry, by the bureau of competition policy, into alleged price-fixing and market manipulations by the major oil companies, which is nearing completion.

Will the Prime Minister support the demand of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, speaking in this House as opposition critic on October 24, 1973, that the contents of the inquiry report be made public at the conclusion of the inquiry? Second, will the Prime Minister assure this House that at least until the inquiry has been concluded, no action will be taken on the Conservative threat to dismantle the only effective competitors to the multinational companies, Petro-Canada?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is posing questions that are to be taken seriously, and I will treat them in that way. In relation to Petro-Canada, the hon. member knows that the government is considering a report from a task force. We will make that consideration, independent of other inquiries that might be under way in the Government of Canada. I believe I gave that answer to the hon. gentleman's leader the other day.

Secondly, with regard to the inquiry that is under way, I can certainly assure the hon. member that if there is to be a prosecution, and if there is evidence that should be in the public domain in relation to a prosecution, that information will be in the public domain.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION OF McDONNELL DOUGLAS IN CERTAIN CONTRACT

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It relates to a first-page story published by a Toronto daily paper concerning legal action taken by Northrop Corporation against McDonnell Douglas arising from the participation of that company in an eventual contract with DND. Given the size of the contract, I would like to know whether the minister intends to suspend his assessment program as well as any decision in this regard before making sure, first, of the good faith of the McDonnell Douglas company, and second, that there will be a significant Canadian participation in this huge market.

[English]

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, McDonnell Douglas have been in touch with us to assure us that they will replace this offset work with another contract to us and make the necessary amendments in their offer.

Essentially, this is a legal dispute between two aircraft manufacturers. I do not think that it is going to have any lasting effect on our situation. Fortunately, at the present time there is a hiatus of about three weeks as I have asked the department to provide me with more information and to provide some other departments with information before I am prepared to take the project to cabinet.

FISHERIES

COMPENSATION TO FISHERMEN WHO SUFFERED DAMAGE FROM OIL SPILL

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It concerns the oil spill from the tanker Kurdistan which broke up west of Cabot Strait last March.

In view of the fact that oil from this tanker has clogged fishermen's nets, has fouled beaches from Burgeo to Fortune Bay, in addition to Nova Scotia, in view of the fact that the company in question, Nile Shipping Company, claims that the federal government may be partially responsible for the damage, and in view of the fact that further oil was discovered as recently as several days ago in another section of Newfoundland, can the minister tell the House whether it is under his responsibility under the Fisheries Act, and whether it has been decided who is to be responsible for the tens of thousands of dollars of damage to fishermen's gear, and when these fishermen can expect to be compensated?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question. Responsibility, of course, is shared with my colleague, the Minister of Transport. The initial responsibility for payment of claims rests with the owners of the Kurdistan. In this regard, we have had teams consisting of federal transport officials, federal fisheries' officials and provincial fisheries' officials visiting the affected communities. We have taken sworn statements from fishermen and gathered evidence of damage to gear.

These claims have been presented to the solicitors for the company and I understand processing of the claims is under way. To the best of my knowledge, there do not appear to be any difficulties with this procedure.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGED IPA AND QUEBECAIR TO USE DASH-7

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In an interview he gave to Transpo '79 magazine, the minister explained his wish to promote the use of the Dash-7. Could the minister tell the House whether he went through an independent report which was submitted to his department at the end of 1978, recommending the use of the Dash-7 in eastern Quebec? Further, could he tell the House whether he had meetings with the chairmen of the companies serving eastern Quebec and, more particularly, of IPA and Quebecair in order to encourage them to buy the Dash-7?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the report. There have been some discussions between myself and departmental officials. I regret to inform the hon. member that I have not had any discussions with any of the officials of the companies to which he referred.

INCREASES IN OIL PRICES—EFFECT ON MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A couple of weeks ago, in answer to a question, he indicated and confirmed that his department had done a study of the regional disparities and the regional effects of a sharp increase in the price of oil.

I should like to ask the minister if the same study included the effect on the over-all manufacturing industries of Canada and if it included the effect on inflation and interest rates?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think in answer to the hon. member's question I indicated that the department had, in fact, been carrying out investigations with respect to the consequences of price increases in terms of the oil price increase that might be contemplated. These are wide-ranging investigations to look at the macro-economic effects in terms of increases in the price of oil. They covered, essentially, the areas to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Phillips: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of freedom of information, could I ask if the minister plans to make that study public?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention, after the consultative process has taken place and been concluded, to bring down and table for the benefit of hon. members the results of all these investigations and the results of the consultative process that has taken place, so that assessments can be made of the material and information gathered.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. One of the things that we expect for the Atlantic fishery from the 200-mile limit is increased quality.

In view of the minister's expression of support on the Atlantic coast for improving the quality of the fishery, does he have any word for the people of Newfoundland with regard to the policy of the Treasury Board to curtail or cut back, to the tune of $1.3 million, assistance to small craft harbours which are crucial in improving the quality of fish that we expect to export? Has the minister been able to get any action from Treasury Board?

● (1500)

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, certain projects have had to be deferred because of spending restraints which the government has had to adopt because of the mess we inherited from our friends across the way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I would be very pleased to provide the hon. member with further details when my estimates come before the standing committee tonight at eight o'clock. In any event, I will be glad to let the hon. member have full details.

THE ADMINISTRATION

STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER ON LEGALITY OF BREAKING LAW WITH PERMISSION OF CABINET MEMBER

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence today of the Solicitor General, I would like to direct my question—which has to do with the administration of justice in Canada—to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice. It has to do with a question I posed earlier when we were discussing the whole question of the statement made by the Leader of the Government, in this House, in which he indicated that he was looking for a novel way to execute illegal acts legally.

Does the parliamentary secretary know whether or not any such acts have been carried out in this country, and whether or not his minister—who is not in this House—has had any discussions with the Solicitor General with respect to the question I am posing today?

Mr. George Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and provide a reply in due course.

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER COSSETTE REPORT ON QUEBEC HARBOUR HAS BEEN RECEIVED—MEASURES TO REMEDY LAY-OFFS

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Can he confirm that he received the report of Chief Justice Laurent Cossette concerning the harbour of Quebec, and tell us what the government intends to do with its recommendations concerning the lay-off of 102 longshoremen in addition to the dismissal of 32 other workers?

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the report has been tabled. As a matter of fact, it has been released to the parties involved.

In terms of what the government will do, we are now awaiting replies from the other parties involved before we can take any position at all. But for the hon. member's information, the report has been released to the affected parties.

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE TO ASSIST VICTIMS OF INDUSTRIAL DISEASE

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the same minister or to his deskmate, the Minister of Transport. Will the minister tell the House what he intends to do with this report in light of another one which indicates that several of the same longshoremen in the port of Quebec are suffering from industrial disease?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take that question as notice and consult with the minister responsible.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

FISHERIES

PROBLEMS OF LARGE TRAWLERS IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), I ask leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration since a decision made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) will be implemented starting November 1. The government is now allowing vessels exceeding 100 feet to enter the Gulf of St. Lawrence and capture 6,000 metric tons of codfish normally reserved for the costal fishermen of the interior of the Gulf.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 26, the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) has given the Chair notice of his intention to move an adjournment motion to deal with an important issue. I suggest that the importance of the issue which the hon. member for Gaspé has raised cannot be questioned. However, one of the conditions which our Standing Orders require before such a debate can be held is that a real state of urgency exists, and I quote: "a genuine emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration". The Chair has serious reservations concerning this aspect of the motion, suggesting that this is rather a permanent problem which has been raised in the House on a number of previous occasions. On October 24, 1979, for instance, there were two motions dealing with this issue which were moved pursuant to Standing Order 43 by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) and the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc). This latter motion was, as a matter of fact, supported by the hon. member for Gaspé. Moreover, the hon. member for Gaspé himself dealt with this question in the House on October 25 at the time of adjournment.

Considering that the question raised today by the hon. member for Gaspé was dealt with recently in the House; considering also the difficulty which exists now in connection with a distinct and separated element which must now be identified by the hon. member for Gaspé not merely as a subject of permanent difficulties but as an emergency; and considering finally that the hon. member has failed to identify such an element in his notice of motion, I feel that this is not an issue which could now be dealt with properly under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENTS

Question No. 65—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who (a) is the president (b) are the vice presidents of the National Harbours Board?

2. What is the annual salary in each case?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport):

1. (a) Mr. Pierre A. H. Franche
   (b) Mr. Jacques Auger
2. (a) $45,000—$50,000
   (b) $40,000—$45,000

SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBER—LIMIT USE

Question No. 147—Mr. Herbert:

Is it the government's intention to limit the use of the social insurance number with regard to its use as a registration and account number for many government plans and, if so, what measures is the government taking?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of State (Treasury Board)): The government will shortly be proposing legislation to restrict the use of the Social Insurance Number within the federal government where provision of the SIN by individuals may be mandatory, along with some initial steps to limit the use of the Social Insurance Number outside the federal government.

Question No. 148—Mr. Herbert:

Is it the government policy to promote the use of the social insurance number as a singly identifying number for all Canadians in as many departments and agencies as possible?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of State (Treasury Board)): No. It is the government's intention to reverse the trend towards the use of the Social Insurance Number as a single identifying number in departments and agencies of the federal government.

COMPUTER BANKS—CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

Question No. 150—Mr. Herbert:

Has the government taken measures to protect the confidentiality of information filed in government computer banks and, if so, in what way?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of State (Treasury Board)): After introducing its electronic data processing (EDP) policy in 1972, Treasury Board subsequently issued directives to departments on computer security matters in 1974. At the same time a Security Evaluation and Inspection Team (SEIT) was created within the RCMP to review security measures in computer installations, including private sector service bureaux handling government information.

Departments report back to the RCMP on the implementation of SEIT recommendations. The RCMP reports annually to the Treasury Board Secretariat on the state of computer security in government. Computer security standards are now being developed. For computer work performed on private sector computers, security requirements are part of the contractual arrangements with the supplier. Part IV of the Human Rights Act requires that the use of computer banks containing personal information be strictly controlled, including new uses of existing data.

An area of considerable concern is the linking of computer banks, for instance using SIN numbers to obtain more complete information on individuals. The government is preparing legislation that will ensure greater legal protection against unauthorized disclosure of personal information and put constraints on the ability to link files using SIN, by limiting the number of uses for the SIN number. This legislation will be introduced in this session of Parliament.

TRANSPORT—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES

Question No. 197—Mr. Herbert:

How many (a) permanent (b) term employees were on the Department of Transport's payroll on March 31, 1979?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): (a) 19,067; (b) 1,909

INCOME TAX—DEDUCTIONS

Question No. 277—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past five years, what amount was deducted by individuals on their income tax forms as (a) charitable contributions (b) medical expenses (c) political contributions (d) capital losses?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): In each of the past five years, the following amounts were deducted by individuals on their income tax forms as (a) charitable contributions; (b) medical expenses; (c) political contributions; (d) capital losses.

Order Paper Questions

	1973	1974	1975	1976	1977

*(d) Allowable Capital Losses	47,645	83,311	71,673	68,115	86,549

Notes: (i) All figures are in thousands of dollars.
(ii) 1977 is the last tax year for which date is available.
(iii) (a) & (b) do not include claims for the standard deduction of $100
(iv) c) These figures are the amount of credit allowed each year for the federal political tax credit. We do not have figures on the actual amounts of the federal political contributions. This program began in 1974.

* These figures are available on a yearly basis in the publication, "Taxation Statistics".

PUBLIC SERVICE—BILINGUAL POSITIONS

Question No. 282—Mr. Herbert:

As at March 31, 1979, how many (a) Anglophones (b) Francophones occupied bilingual positions in the public service for which they did not meet the language requirements of the position?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of State (Treasury Board)): As of Friday, March 30, 1979, there was a total of 55,985 occupied bilingual positions. Of this total, 16,532 were occupied by employees (10,095 Anglophones and 6,437 Francophones) who did not meet the language requirements. Of this 16,532, there were 14,953 employees or 90.4 per cent (8,825 Anglophones and 6,128 Francophones) who were exempted from meeting the language requirements of their positions because of incumbent's rights, long service or age entitlements. A few others were exempted on compassionate grounds due to health or personal circumstances.

The remaining 1,579 employees or 9.6 per cent (1,270 Anglophones and 309 Francophones) were appointed to bilingual positions on the condition that they undertake language training in order to meet the language requirements of their positions. These employees are, therefore, either on training or scheduled for training.

BILINGUAL BONUS

By province, how many public servants are presently receiving the bilingualism bonus?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of State (Treasury Board)): The following presents a breakdown by province, or by region where applicable, of the number of public servants presently eligible to receive the bilingualism bonus.

British Columbia	112
Alberta	109
Saskatchewan	52
Manitoba	238
National Capital Region	28,463
Ontario	1,708
Quebec	14,571
New Brunswick	1,444
Prince Edward Island	23
Nova Scotia	303
Newfoundland	27
Northern Canada	16
Outside Canada	205
Total	47,271

INCOME TAX—PERCENTAGE TRANSMITTED TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 358—Mr. Herbert:

1. (a) What percentage of income tax deducted from a resident of the province of Quebec working in Ontario, is transmitted to the Provincial Government (b) on what date is it transmitted?

2. Is the taxpayer able to opt to have the percentage increased?

3. Did the Minister of National Revenue receive complaints that Quebec residents working in Ontario must remit additional taxes to Quebec while, at the same time, they claim a rebate from the federal authority?

4. Will the option to increase deductions, increase the amount transmitted to Quebec and what percentage of the additional amount deducted will be added to the amount eventually to be claimed as a federal rebate?

5. Did the Minister discuss the problem with his provincial counterpart?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): 1. According to Section 154 of the Income Tax Act and regulation 3300 to a prescribed tax transfer rate of 45 per cent is authorized. The amounts are transmitted semi-monthly to the provincial government.

2. The actual rate cannot be increased by the taxpayer as it is prescribed by regulation. A taxpayer may however increase the total amount of tax deductions, in which case 45 per cent of the increased deductions would be remitted to Quebec. (See answer to part 4).

3. Isolated complaints have been received on this matter.

4. An increase in deductions at source will increase the amount to be transmitted to Quebec by the 45 per cent transfer rate. The remaining 55 per cent will either be used to reduce the balance of federal tax payable or will be refunded to the taxpayer. If the taxpayer wishes he may remit additional moneys directly to the provincial government involved rather than increase his withholdings at source.

5. No. However, discussions at the official level are held periodically to discuss these matters.

HOLY SPIRIT ASSOCIATION FOR THE UNIFICATION OF WORLD CHRISTIANITY

Question No. 367—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity have a Department of National Revenue taxation number permitting receipts for income tax deductions and, if so (a) is the number 0362517-47-13 (b) on what date was it granted and for what reason (c) who applied for it and specifically who signed the application?

2. What is the address of the organization?

3. To the knowledge of the government, is the organization the same one which is sometimes known as the "Moonies" or the "Unification Church"?

4. Is the government investigating the granting of income tax numbers to extremist religious groups often referred to as cults, etc. and (a) if so, what are all the details (b) if not, will the government make such an investigation?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a), (b) and (c) Registration No. 0362517-47-13 was assigned to the Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity when that association was granted the status of a registered charity effective September 7, 1969. The association is therefore entitled to issue official receipts for income tax purposes to its donors. Its registration was granted by officials of the department, acting on behalf of the minister at that time, in accordance with the Income Tax Act and regulations. Registration was granted to the association because, on the basis of information available, it qualified as a charity in accordance with common law principles and met the requirements of the Income Tax Act for registration as a charity. An officer of the association signed the application for registration. The secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act do not permit disclosure of the name of that officer.

2. The address of the association, as shown on its 1978 public information return, is 80 Admiral Road, Toronto, Ontario.

3. The only name by which the association is identified in documentation submitted to the department is the Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity, although in correspondence the names "Unification Church of Toronto" and "Unification Church" have been used.

4. As is the case with any taxpayer, a registered charity may be audited at any time for taxation purposes and every year selected charities are included among taxpayers audited by the department. The department does not propose to institute a special program for the audit of "cults".

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBER

Question No. 149—Mr. Herbert:

What departments and agencies are using social insurance numbers as a requirement for participation in their 1978 programs and, in each case, what specific use is being made of the numbers?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 149 be deemed to have been made an order for return as suggested by the parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the parliamentary secretary for replying to some of the questions today. Before he gets too euphoric about my compliments, I would like to draw his attention particularly to three questions, Nos. 133, 134 and 136, as examples of questions which refer to companies that are proposed for sale by the government. These questions appeared on the order paper in the past session. I would imagine that since these companies are actively on the "for sale" list it should be fairly easy for the parliamentary secretary to provide replies. I would like him please to give his attention to my request.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, October 29, 1979, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, like other members on this side in the official opposition I was quite content to stay satisfied with the well-crafted Liberal legislation which had been presented by the Conservative party. But after listening last evening to the rather poetic description given to us by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) on Tory economic policy as being similar to someone's exposed backside ascending toward heaven, I was so inspired by that particular description of how Conservatives carry out their economic analysis that I felt it deserved at least some reply from members on this side. I suppose by way of corollary we could say that if that is a description of the way in which the Tories measure their economic performance, we can say the devil takes the hindmost in these circumstances.

Listening to the debate on this particular tax bill demonstrated to me one very clear reason why it is that this country needs a Liberal party. As we listen to the exaggerations from the left and the right, each expressing his or her own form of pristine power theology, it becomes clear that if this country were to be allowed to polarize between the extremes, such as is being advocated by members in this group and that group, what would happen is that the country would become so totally confused and overwhelmed by hyperbole of these orthodoxies that nothing practical or realistic could be done in the way of tax policy.

There is perhaps no more important debate that takes place in this House than the analysis and estimate of how we want to allocate our taxes. It is the basic foundation document of our economic order. It determines very clearly who pays and who gets the benefits in our society. If we were simply to follow the preachments and teachings of those on the left and the right, we would find out we have a society which is carved into two totally discrete, disparate groups in which there is no common ground.

I was interested last night to hear the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae) talk about the two teams of tight money. I tended to agree in part with his analysis. There are two teams in this House. There is also a group of kibitzers on the left, the armchair quarterbacks who will never be in the game. They say they never have the opportunity to make decisions. They can afford to exercise their particular form of virtue. Someone once said you can have a lot of virtue if you have never been subject to temptation. That is certainly the case with the New Democratic Party. Of course they can express themselves with sanctimonious, virtuous statements about how to run the world. However, when have they ever had the opportunity to do anything about it? They are the classic eunuchs. They are very adapt at talking about sex because they never have to participate in it. They are really the grand observers in our economic order. They know they will never have to govern. If they want to be the kibitzers, the armchair quarterbacks observing the scene and offering their soapbox preachments, that is fine with us, but let us get back to serious debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. We should extend the hon. member the courtesy of the House to continue his speech. Can we have order.

Mr. Axworthy: What happens with soapbox artists, Mr. Speaker, is they are able to produce a lot of noise but no light. That has been their basic practice in this House. As long as they can keep yelling, screaming, pounding and clapping, no one will really bother looking at what they have to say, which usually adds up to nothing anyway.

What should concern members of this House is not so much what is happening with the rump group in the corner, but that many of the same bad habits are being picked up by members opposite. They think in this time and age the only way to combat the purities of the left wing is to ascribe a purity to the right wing.

We had a perfect example in the speeches last night when we were raised to elevations by the theological purity of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) regarding the free market, that wonderful mechanism that has done so much for so long. As a result we have this basis of total domination versus the free market. It is beginning to sound as if this is a college common room. We are not talking about practical things any more.

We have the theorists and philosophers on the right now combining with the theorists and philosophers on the left. I am afraid that theology is not what is in order in Canada today. We need hard economics. The only exception to that is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) who does not believe in theology but thinks he is Johnny Carson. He thinks that rather than worry about economic policy, he should practise his new comedy routine.

The question we have to pose is, when do we get serious about the economic conditions of this country? When do we start looking at taxation policies which are going to make some practical sense? If I still have a moment or two, perhaps I can provide some illustrations to these philosophers to the left and the right. I do not want to confuse them with the facts; I know that would interfere with their particular sort of music.

It is important to recognize certain facts about the way the economy has been working in this country. Let us deal with these gentlemen on the right. They seem to feel there is an enormous burden hanging around the necks of the Canadian taxpayer, that everyone is walking around overburdened by this enormous government expenditure. They like to parade in front of us glorious examples, such as a country like West Germany which is so free of these kinds of burdens and whose economy is so forceful.

I wish to point out that according to a recent report by the OECD the percentage of expenditure in Canada of government taxation related to the gross national product is less than in West Germany. How does that fit with the facts that are constantly paraded before us, that the amount of taxation that is dispensed in this country is less than in West Germany? It is only one percentage point above that of the United States, the home of free enterprise. Therefore, this enormous burden we have been told about simply does not exist in terms of the facts.

What does exist is that there is a large cluster of countries, all of which have a percentage between 30 and 35 per cent of their GNP. Obviously that suggests there are more complicated and more real factors at work in the economy than the hyperbolic situation of this enormous government albatross bearing down upon the backs of the people.

The Tories simply do not look at where the economy is going or what it has been doing. They prefer to deal in the areas of vision and fantasy rather than look at the facts. The facts are here in the Department of Finance report. I suggest that the Minister of Finance, who so conveniently provides memoranda for members of the finance committee, should provide some of the same literature from his department to his own caucus and recommend that they start reading these facts.

On the same kind of account, I listened with a great deal of amusement to the hand-wringing, teeth-gnashing and cater-wauling of the NDP last night about how for years those nasty Liberals had really put it to the poor people. That is the kind of sob story we received about how awful the tax system would be.

I refer members of the NDP to the same report, which points out in terms of lower income groups that they have a much higher degree of discretionary income than almost any other country in the OECD. In fact, it has improved by close to 50 per cent in the past three or four years. When you look at the number of tax exemptions that are available to low and modest income Canadians, they have far more tax exemptions than are available to the West Germans, Americans or those in most any other country.

All of a sudden we have found that rather than have the previous government in the back pockets of the big corporations, as they like to testify, the fact is they have far more discretionary income and there have been far more initiatives taken to lower taxation for those groups. As a result, there is far more income available to the very group about which they are concerned.

A member from one of the Vancouver ridings, I forget which one it is, used a term which I do not think is considered parliamentary under the Hansard arrangement. I would not want to repeat it. I would suggest to her, if that is so, that she take a course in straight reading of English. I am prepared to do that for her. I know it is not printed in the language that she is prepared to use as it does not include those kinds of phrases, but it does suggest that for the income group under $5,000, discretionary income for a family of four has gone up 8.3 per cent over the past year; and for the income group between $5,000 and $10,000 it has gone up 9.4 per cent in the last year. Again, I know they do not want to be confused by the facts. I know that is not the socialist way to live. They do not want to look at what is real or effective. They simply want to go by the theories learned at the knee of some U. of T. professor. It is about time they looked at the facts so that their economic comments could be more effective and useful.

Once we get away from the political dialogues coming from left and right we can start looking at the real problems in taxation policy, and there has been no more real problem apparent than the whole issue of what we should do about interest rates, because those rates are directly related to the tax policies we have in place. When we look at the statements being made by members of the government the first thing we should discount is their constant survival technique of saying "It was your fault." The fact is that many of the measures now being introduced were not the fault of those previous Liberals but are initiatives taken by this government.

I point out one particular concern. We find the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) pledging that they are going to stand in the trenches and fight the good battle against inflation. They are going to be Horatio on the bridge and get tough and do all the things that are required. They say, "Boy, if it's going to hurt the people it's going to have to hurt because eventually we are going to get a solution." And how do they propose to solve this problem? They are going to cut back government spending. They are going to reduce the deficit.

Well, members on this side may be excused if we have the odd note of skepticism in our voice. Frankly, we do not know what to believe from members opposite. We heard during the election campaign that the best thing for the Canadian economy was to have a bigger deficit, a stimulative deficit. Apparently those words have disappeared from their vocabulary because we do not hear about a stimulative deficit any more. But that is exactly what they are intending to do, because while they are reaming the Canadian public by the increasing acceleration of interest rates, they are doing absolutely nothing to control deficit spending.

How can they with any honesty or candour stand up and say they are fighting the good economic fight when day after day they bring proposals before the House which would have the result of increasing spending and deficits? While they are talking about the need to hold firm and reduce government spending they are proposing an outlay of an additional $500 million through their mortgage tax program. Where will they get the money for that? Is it going to be concocted out of thin air or do they intend to cut back other worth-while programs? In fact, what they will do is increase the deficit, which will increase the inflationary pressure.

Along the way, Mr. Speaker, we had that grand report from the task force on PetroCan. What does it advocate? It advocates an additional $2.3 billion deficit. Could there be anything more inflationary than suggesting that the way to solve our economic problems is to add $2.3 billion to the existing $11 billion deficit? This really makes the words of the Minister of Finance turn to ashes in his mouth. How can he tell the finance committee he is fighting the good fight when his colleagues in the government are talking about adding billions of dollars to an already substantial deficit? That goes under the definition of total contradiction. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot be talking and plighting your troth about the need to restrict government spending and then have ministers say that if Petro-Canada were privatized it would be the best thing that could possibly happen.

We listened to the hon. member from Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) give us his version of how the economy works; that is something that is probably a cross between Lewis Carroll and Walt Disney in terms of the way in which it develops fancies about the future. He was saying the Tories were going to strengthen Petro-Canada. They would strengthen it first by cutting it in half and turning it over to the private sector, which would be far better managers but would cease to do many of the things that Petro-Canada does, and strengthen it by adding a $2.3 billion deficit to the public treasury. That is a curious way in which to describe the strengthening of this oil agency. It does not add up according to even the simplest economic axiom the Conservatives appear to be using.

The fact of the matter is there is a substantial opportunity to strengthen PetroCan if the government only had the courage to take it, and the way the government could acquire that courage would be to tackle the question of oil pricing, which they keep pushing further and further away from resolution, simply apply a windfall profits tax, and then turn the major proceeds of that tax over to PetroCan so that it could use that money for investment in energy to the benefit of all Canadians. Let us not go through the mental gymnastics in which the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine and the Minister of Finance constantly engage.

Let us talk about an option which makes some sense. Large pools of capital are being pulled out of the economy of this country and allowed to sit fallow in certain large heritage funds. These funds are not being used for investment in major energy projects, major transportation projects or for major agricultural purposes; they are simply being allowed to go unused. We have the paradox of a government which says they are good economic managers when in fact what they are doing is simply delaying the inevitable and allowing themselves to be used by a provincial premier, one who last evening had the audacity to declare his independence, in effect, from any form of common weal in this country. How the Prime Minister can calmly turn the other cheek to the challenge and threat posed by the statement of the premier of Alberta is beyond me. It simply means that the Prime Minister thinks his way of dealing with the provinces, of avoiding a fight by giving away his lunch all the time, will somehow bring about a peaceful solution. I have news for the Prime Minister: he has given away his last piece of lunch, he has nothing more to give. All he has done is set up a self-fulfilling prophecy, because these premiers will go after him with all the more ferocity and all the more ambition, knowing he is not prepared to stand up to them.

It is a form of betrayal of the Canadian people that we do not have a Prime Minister who is prepared to stand up to the Premier of Alberta and say: "It is absolutely necessary that on the matter of oil pricing you do not speak just for 8 per cent of the population; someone has to speak for 100 per cent of the population". I am amazed, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister would allow that kind of declaration of economic separatism to be announced and not be prepared to respond with any form of strength or effectiveness. It was one of the sad moments in the history of this country when the Prime Minister once again backed away from living up to his responsibilities.

There are economic answers available; it is just that the government does not want to tackle them. Let us talk for a minute about a favourite topic of the Minister of Finance who has told us he has some choices available to him when it comes to the problem of high interest rates. He said: "I have to hold firm on monetary policy but I do have the opportunity to make some choices fiscally". What is the choice he has made? He has made only one choice, and that is to introduce the mortgage tax credit program which he thinks will be salvation for all that ails Canadians. He stands up in the House with a great deal of flourish and says: "Think about the 3.8 million households which will get benefits under this program".

What he does not mention are the other 3.8 million households which will get no benefits under the program. Are they somehow immune from inflation? Will they somehow be able to avoid the problem of high interest rates? What the minister is really saying is that he only cares about 30 per cent or 40 per cent of the population and that the rest of the population can be forgotten. But it is quite obvious that they, too, are affected by high interest rates.

It is not just homeowners who are faced with the problem of escalating mortgages. One of the major problems we are facing today is in the rental market. Many of those rental units were introduced under the ARP program and carry five-year mortgages at 8 per cent which are coming up for renegotiation. The rate will now be 14 per cent, a 6 per cent increase, and they will either have to declare bankruptcy or suffer substantially ballooned rents far beyond the means of most people living in them. Are they to be forgotten? Is the minister excluding that section of the population which for one reason or another decides to rent rather than own accommodation? Is the Minister of Finance saying he is prepared to forget all those who do not have mortgages and therefore will receive absolutely no benefits whatsœver other than the property tax credit, which this year will be $62.50? Is he forgetting those people who are going to find, as they face increases in oil prices which will add up to $300 or $400 on their housing bills, that somehow they are going to be included in this magic mortgage credit program? Who speaks for them? Where are choices being made for them?

The fact is that what the minister is introducing is bad economic policy. He has himself caught in the campaign commitments of his leader and is now trying to wriggle out by putting as pleasant a face on a bad proposition as he possibly can. However, it is bad economic policy because he has committed major expenditures for this year of $575 million. Next year they will be well over $1 billion and ultimately closer to $3 billion over the long term, when he has no ability, according to his own confession, to forecast what the economy will be like.

The Minister of Finance is introducing a structural economic change when what we are in desperate need of are short-term responses to real and immediate problems. I am sure the minister's economic advisers have told him that he cannot introduce an economic instrument which has a four-year fixed term to it when the economy is gyrating like a crazy top, partly because of the decisions taken by the Bank of Canada, which is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance. The minister is creating a problem and avoiding solutions.

Solutions are obvious and available to him. He could be taking that $575 million and using it to deal with some of the immediate consequences of those 14.5 per cent and 14.75 per cent interest rates on mortgages and prime loans. For example, he could be providing some emergency assistance for those who have to renegotiate their mortgages. He is condemning thousands of Canadians right now because he is not prepared, as I understand it, to make directives to the banks or the lending institutions. Thus these Canadians are locking themselves into mortgage rates of 14.75 per cent. If those rates go down six months from now, those people will be left in the wash. They will be high and dry up on the shore, because if interest rates recede they will still be paying 14.75 per cent carrying costs. Is that a fair and equitable kind of system? Is this a government which is really concerned about the problems of all Canadians, or is this Minister of Finance simply saying once again that he does not care and that he is not concerned about that group of people?

Is it also true that this Minister of Finance is not prepared to provide any assistance to the housing market? The volume is falling out each hour which goes by. It is in total chaos. Building starts have now fallen close to 30 per cent in the rental field. There is going to be an enormous shortage of rental accommodation come next summer. As a consequence, demand will grow and prices will go up. I think economists would call that counterproductive, and yet the minister says he has choices. Why does the minister not start exercising his choices? Why does he not come out of his comic corner now and start doing something effective to help deal with the economic problems in this country? Let him do something now. Let us not wait. What is going to happen at the end of November?

We are now going through a period in which people daily have to suffer the ravages of high interest rates. It simply is not fair for the minister to say he is going to hold the line and hold tough. It is not the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister who is holding tough. They are forcing many very ordinary Canadians to hold tough, and those ordinary Canadians are the ones who will continue to suffer under the present circumstances.

So when it comes down to the way in which tax policies can be organized and arranged, there is much left to be said about the present state of our tax system. The only conclusion we can come to when we look at the tax policies which so far have been the product of Tory economic thinking is that the Tories are going to add substantially to the deficits of this country. They will add substantially to extended government spending, to the point where estimates are that maybe the Prime Minister was right in the election campaign that there will be a $17 billion deficit. But it will not be a deficit caused by Liberals; it will be a deficit caused by Conservatives. That is the real issue.

Maybe the Prime Minister does know something. We have asked him questions and he does not want to 'fess up, but maybe he really does know something we do not know. Maybe he knows that a big deficit is coming around the corner. With all the commitments he has made regarding allowing new tax write-offs to professional consultants, his tax credit program and his Petro-Canada proposal, we have already counted up $2 billion, $3 billion or $4 billion in additional government spending. I suppose the unstated proposition is that this government has its spending plans, and it is the unspoken conditions which the government is not prepared to disclose. That is what we are really after. The government pell-mell is going to increase deficits. At the same time it is raising interest rates. If there ever was a crazy quilt economic strategy, this one has to be it. The government is increasing interest rates while at the same time allowing deficits to rise. How one justifies that contradiction in economic stance I simply do not know, and it is going to be a fascinating experience to watch the verbal exercises of the Minister of Finance as he tries to climb out of that particular maze. That is exactly what he is climbing into. That is the trap he now finds himself in, and it will be fascinating to watch how he manages to get out.

However, I do not think he will get out. I think what he is prepared to do is to make one simple trade-off. To satisfy the economic purists, those Adam Smith theoreticians about whom we were lectured this morning in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the minister is prepared to force this country into a serious recession. That apparently is the trade-off this Minister of Finance is prepared to accept.

When we are debating tax bills I think the conditions and features of this economic theory and strategy should be more revealingly disclosed in this House. That is why I welcome this opportunity. I thank the hon. member for Edmonton East for his inspiration. I think he described Mabel the maid's backside ascending to heaven, which is probably the best description of Tory policy I have heard yet since it is simply a fantasy and a vision and has no grounding roots in the reality of the economic world.

As we use this tax bill to sell certain propositions, we say to the Minister of Finance that we would like to see some very immediate short-term steps to cushion the impact of his high interest rates and to help those people in the Canadian economy who are caught and squeezed to the point where they are simply not going to be able to recover. That is the kind of requirement the minister should recognize.

In the area of housing there is a requirement to undertake some immediate rescue operations, to provide for some stability in that market and to take a look at the phony-boloney figures the minister produced today. He said there will be only limited and negligible impacts of high interest rates. My head, Mr. Speaker! That is simply not the case. The escalating costs in these areas are close to 30 per cent to 50 per cent as a consequence of the minister's high interest rates, and he apparently is not prepared to do anything at all about them.

The minister does have choices to make. The problem is that he is refusing to make those choices, and while he refuses to make those choices, the country suffers.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by saying how happy I am that Providence has provided me with this opportunity to follow the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), which gives me the opportunity to respond, in the opening part of my remarks, to some of the things the hon. member had to say.

I was interested in the hon. member's disparaging remarks about theology and, presumably by association, philosophy and any other attempt to think structurally and coherently about policy. It strikes me that this is an indication of the fundamental weakness of the Liberal party when it comes to making any kind of policy.

It strikes me also that perhaps the introduction of ideas, whether they be theological or ideological, into political debate is, on the one hand, an embarrassment to the Liberal mind because it calls to their minds the fact that they never saw fit to be guided in this way over the years when they were in government; and on the other hand, it is an indication of the extent to which they do not understand the situation in which we find ourselves at this point in history where, because of the smallness of the planet—not to mention the country—it is indeed a matter of serious political concern that we get down to talking about ideas, about theology and about how we are going to organize ourselves.

No amount of facts by which the hon. member suggests we are confused will help us out of the darkness in which we now find ourselves, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the whole question of facts is an illusion. We cannot have facts without perceiving them in some structural framework. That is where the hon. member goes wrong. I do not always agree with the theologies I hear from the other side of the House. Nevertheless, because of that I would not be moved to say that these questions with which we deal are not theological or philosophical in nature.

The routine argument of the Liberals when confronted with serious political debate is that somehow people who want to talk about ideas are inferior to those who would sort of meander along, taking the easy political route or taking the road of expediency. I think that this is an indication of the bankruptcy of potential leadership which we find in the caucus immediately to my right. I recommend that they do the House a favour and take a sabbatical from trying to be pragmatic and from filling their minds with statistics, and they get back and do a little reading. Perhaps a little Plato would help or some biblical study.

What I want to speak about this afternoon is the question of tax write-offs on pollution controls. I now come to what I intended to say before I was provoked by the inadequacy of the arguments being advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. I want to speak to the provisions which we find in this bill for tax write-offs on pollution controls. My concern is that this method of seeking to control pollution is woefully inadequate, for a number of reasons on which I should like to elaborate at this time.

First, the amount of money involved, even if this were the right way to go about controlling pollution, is so small as to suggest that this government is hardly serious about pollution control. It hardly represents a massive effort and is revealing in that it appears that this government is not willing to have the corporate sector bear even the cost of a token effort to control pollution. The toughness and the tough decisions that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) likes to talk about as being so characteristic of his government are reserved for the Canadian people alone, with weakness being the characteristic of the government on all other fronts.

[Mr. Blaikie.]

Second, this way of seeking pollution control is really not a method of control at all. It leaves the responsibility for pollution control with the companies involved. The problem with this is that these companies have no incentive to use their control mechanisms responsibly once they are in place, or indeed if they are put in place. Neither has the private sector, I submit, an honourable record in this area of concern. Its ability to take initiative and responsibility in this area is not one that inspires confidence, in me at least.

Furthermore, this country has too often been held to ransom by corporations which have threatened to shut down their operations rather than comply with environmental standards. What this provision for write-offs means is a further capitulation to this kind of blackmail, capitulation which establishes once again the principle by which this government lives, and by which indeed the former government lived, and that is the principle of the people of Canada being made to bear the social costs, and in this case the environmental costs, of economic development while the profits from such activities are left to the disposal of private interests.

Third, and following from this observation about social and environmental costs and their relationship or lack of it to private profits, the provision for write-offs is wrong in that it acts as if the corporate sector were too improvished to afford pollution control, and must therefore be the object of government handouts. In addition to the fact that this is another case of handouts that this government does not mind, as opposed to all those other handouts to people who are really in need, which they do mind, it is also a case of corporations being rewarded for not instituting pollution control on their own by government money to do what they should have done in the first place. Hon. members opposite are the people who talk about the true cost of things, about realistic accounting. Yet every attempt to have comprehensive pollution control integrated into the cost of things is resisted. Why is that? Because the market might adjust itself in such a way that they would have to lower the percentage of profits which results from these activities.

I submit that in the absence of public ownership, where cost and profits are born by the same body, that is to say the public, environmental goals and standards should be figured into the real cost of products and ways should be found to do this. Companies should be required to meet these goals and standards out of profits, unless, of course, that is completely impossible and there is a pressing environmental danger.

Mr. Speaker, questions of the environment are too important to be dealt with by measures designed to rely on voluntary actions which absolve governments of responsibility. There is the responsibility of the government to protect the environment, because by doing so it lives up to its undisputed responsibility to protect the people of this country, and living up to this responsibility will mean more than a few tax write-offs.

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), in discussing Bill C-17, has taken the position that his party has theology and ideas to offer, but that we Liberals are very pragmatic. I am certainly not ashamed of pragmatism. In fact, I think it is one of the hallmarks of Liberalism. I would also like to say that we too have a number of, not necessarily philosophical ideas, but certainly theoretical ideas which a debate on a bill of this kind gives us the opportunity of putting forth.

Unfortunately it is not providence, I do not think, which permits me to follow the last speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, or the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) who spoke on this bill last night. In fact, it was the whip. Nevertheless, I have a number of points which I should like to clarify in terms of the presentation made by those gentlemen, particularly the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood.

During the debate last Thursday night, I raised some question with respect to the entire area of the taxation of corporations. The bill with which we are concerned here also touches in a very important way upon corporate tax, particularly with respect to the small business deduction of those corporations which people commonly refer to as professional corporations or service corporations. My concern for this area of corporate taxation goes back many years. This is a philosophical or theoretical argument. The other night I made the point that one cannot tax a corporation. I recall having said that one cannot tax a corporation any more than one can tax a dog, much to the snickering of some members around me. Subsequently a number of people raised the issue with me. Certainly we have a corporate tax, but also there is a dog tax in many municipalities of the country. My point is that a corporation is not a person. A corporation cannot consume goods or services. A corporation is simply a legal fiction which I recall from my studies in law school was defined as existing only in contemplation of the law.

This is very significant in terms of this bill and in terms of the entire area of corporate taxation, because a corporation cannot in fact pay tax. The only people associated with a corporation which can pay tax are the shareholders who must suffer a diminution of their return on investment, or the persons who deal with the corporation, namely, those who buy goods and services from the corporation and to whom the tax inevitably must be passed on. Of course, a corporation is a vehicle for the collection of taxes, as is a trust or a partnership. There is no question about that.

As I pointed out during my comments the other night, the Carter commission fully endorsed that particular concept of taxation. That is why it recommended a full and complete integration of corporate taxation with the taxation of shareholders. In typical fashion we have not gone far enough. We have partial integration. We have a dividend tax credit, but we have never really come to grips with the problem of corporate taxation. We have never recognized sufficiently in our law the economic reality that there is no economic activity in the declaration of a dividend from a corporation to its shareholders.

That brings me to another point raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. I see he is not in his seat; he has joined the ranks of the members across the way. That is complete conversion in short order. Perhaps I need not raise these points with him. In any event he made a practice of attacking the banks. In his comments last night he refrained from drawing his recent analogy of the banks and workers. In fact, according to his allegation, the banks paid a lesser rate of tax than the average worker in the country.

Perhaps the collecting mechanism is not appropriate. Perhaps there are areas which should be adjusted in terms of how taxes are collected, but let us bear in mind whom we are taxing when we are taxing banks. We are taxing the shareholders of banks. If one were to look at the shareholder list of any major bank, one would find a very substantial representation of pension funds and pension trusts of syndicates and of other people, the workers in the country and even people in the constituency of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. It is completely unfair, and in fact misleading, to look at a bank and say that the bank is paying only 10.7 per cent. The bank is paying nothing in either case. It is the shareholders who are paying. That is the central theme of my comments this afternoon.

Also the hon. member attacked the question of preferred share financing which would include income debenture financing. This legislation is designed to change or basically terminate in many respects that kind of financing. The history of that financing is not all black. The hon. member said that many large corporations have benefited from this financing. The corporation did not benefit from that financing. The shareholders of that corporation benefited and the employees of that corporation benefited, as well as the people who bought goods and services from the corporation. I dare say that a large number of businesses might not even exist in the form they do today had it not been for the availability of that financing. It is the problem of trying to personify the corporation as if it were a person, which it is not.

Pursuing this question somewhat further, I should like to point out that the corporation tax system in the country has had the effect of destroying, or at least not creating or sustaining, tax neutrality. The members on my left and those across the floor can sit here and debate whether rates are appropriate, whether one group or class of people should be paying more or less tax. I am quite prepared to enter into that kind of debate. But what I am concerned about is that which is part of our law today, that which has been institutionalized for many years. I am referring to the fact that the very existence of corporations and their treatment as taxpayers has meant that people in the same financial circumstances are not paying the same amount of taxes.

I am disappointed with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). Perhaps he will attack this problem in his November budget; we have not seen it yet. But he has not addressed himself to this problem in an attempt to iron out some of the fundamental inequities which exist.

I do not see how anyone could argue my position that it is the shareholders who effectively bear the tax, not corporations. Carrying that analogy further, I should like to look at the situation of a professional group of lawyers, for example, in the province of Alberta where I understand they can incorporate and benefit from the small business deduction. That would reduce their effective rate of tax on the first $150,000 to 25 per cent, or perhaps 33 per cent under this bill. I am not sure technically how it would apply to that situation. But a similar group of lawyers in my constituency in the province of Quebec are subject to marginal rates of 70 per cent.

How can that discrimination be justified? It exists not because of the federal tax law per se, but because of the fact that the federal law and its application is dependent in large measure upon the provisions which exist under a wide range of provincial statutes. Some may permit incorporation, some may not. The Department of National Revenue has been very firm in its position that if a province does not permit the incorporation of a particular kind of business, obviously it will not be entitled to enjoy corporate status for tax purposes, and hence full individual personal rates will apply. I do not want to say which rate should apply, whether it should be 25 per cent or 40 per cent. That is not the object of my intervention this afternoon. My point is that the entire area of corporate tax law must be rationalized in some sensible manner. We must look to full integration of corporate and individual taxes. It is long overdue.

The amendment to Bill C-37 of the last session of Parliament brought down by the minister is another band-aid. It is another plaster strip on this act. It has created a third class of corporation. Now we will have a group of corporations paying 33⅓ per cent. This was in order to pacify those many doctors, lawyers, accountants and other persons who were very concerned about their so-called loophole being removed, as was indicated by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. Now we have another scheme or device which creates more complication in our statutes. It does not address itself to the fundamental problem of trying to rationalize the entire area of corporate taxation. I am disappointed in the bill from that point of view.

I hope in the very near future, in November or shortly thereafter, the minister will bring down amendments to the Income Tax Act designed to attack this basic inequity. There are a host of others, but I can think of none more clear or more apparent than where a profession can incorporate in one jurisdiction and not in another; hence the profession pays a completely different rate of tax, a very substantial one, between two jurisdictions, both of which are in Canada.

Mr. Rae: Pity the poor doctor.

Mr. Johnston: I heard what the hon. member said. He said that we should pity the poor doctor. He has already taken on the banks, and now he is attacking doctors. In a few minutes he will be after the lawyers, but I understand the hon. member is a lawyer himself.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Obviously he picks his target.

Mr. Johnston: In any event, Mr. Speaker, there are people in this country, if I must address myself to tax rates, who justifiably feel they should not be paying 70 per cent of their income at a certain level in taxes to provincial and federal governments. I for one happen to be very sympathetic toward those people. I do not think they should be paying 70 per cent to provincial and federal governments. I have suggested in the past, and I will continue to suggest in this House, that this government opposite should take it upon itself to revise those rates, if we are going to discuss rates, so that nobody pays more than 50 per cent of their earned income, combined provincially and federally, in personal income tax.

The United States has taken initiatives in this regard, as you may know, Mr. Speaker. The result has been, I am advised, that tax shelters, the kind of deals that so many people like to indulge in, both in the United States and in Canada, and the incentive to engage in those kind of transactions is removed. The result, if one were to do a study on it, which has not been the case in this country, would be that the over-all net revenues of government would probably increase. That would be true if no one paid more than 50 cents on the dollar in personal income taxes in Canada.

Since the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood has raised this question in respect of doctors, I would suggest that one would see no necessity for these service corporations and a host of other vehicles, be they MURBs, be they films, be they oil wells or be they other things, about which basically I have some reservation in terms of being used to stimulate development in this country. Certainly that has been the case in the United States. I think we would find that more people would step up and pay their taxes without hesitation and without indulging in avoidance schemes, and this would probably also reduce the number of tax evasions which we are advised and read are on the increase in this country. This is the situation simply because people feel they are being ripped off at every level of government.

The blame is not to be laid simply in respect of federal income taxes. We have provincial income taxes and in addition we have municipal taxes. I can assure the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood that no one is more sensitive to the inequities of the onerous tax system to which we are subjected than residents of my riding, Saint-Henri-Westmount, and other ridings in the province of Quebec.

I would simply terminate these remarks by saying to the Minister of Finance, who I see is still in the House, let us not indulge in these band-aid schemes. We have enough band-aids in the Income Tax Act. It has become enough of a patchwork quilt. The tax reform exercise is dotted with thousands of amendments. If I were to add them up, I think they would come to something like 2,000 since1971. We have adjusted, we have tinkered and we have played with the system, but we have not sat down and rationalized the entire area of corporate taxation in the particular way in which it should be rationalized. We have not dealt with this issue basically. We have suffered from the inequities of a system which does not support tax neutrality the way it should, that principle being that taxpayers in the same circumstances should pay the same amount of tax.

We hear from the department that this is just too complicated; that it is necessary to have these kind of devices; that it is necessary to have this and it is necessary to have that. This reminds me of a statement by William Pitt back in the 18th century, when he said: "Necessity is the plea for every infringement of human freedom. It is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves". Those words ring so true when I look at the inequities that exist in the tax system of this country in the name of necessity.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Will the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) accept a question at this time?

Mr. Johnston: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the hon. member in view of his definition as to who pays corporate income taxes. He put the argument that it was the shareholder who paid the income tax. Later on in discussing other activities of corporations he indicated that the customers of the services provided by the corporation also paid a share of that income tax because they are the persons who provide the revenue by purchasing the services of that corporation. Would the hon. member not say that a corporation can be looked upon as a mechanism for flowing through funds to a variety of purposes, to the shareholders, to the tax collector, to the employees, etc., but that the burden for paying income tax falls upon all the people who seek sustenance from the corporation and not just the shareholders?

Mr. Johnston: Let me answer that question. I thought I had made that point. The hon. member is quite right, the shareholders pay the tax and the persons who receive goods and services from the corporation pay it. If a tax is levied on a corporation, even if it is 98 per cent, and the return on the investment of the shareholder does not decline, then it is clear that the only people paying at that point are basically the people who receive the goods and services from the corporation. That is another reason why some of these unduly onerous rates of tax have created what is called "tax-push inflation". No matter how much you apply these taxes to one vehicle, as long as that vehicle is capable of passing them on—perhaps I should not use the term "vehicle" as I am starting to personify the corporation. The fact is those taxes are passed on, and that can result in tax-push inflation just as increased wage demands can result in increased inflation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Will the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) accept another question?

Mr. Johnston: Yes.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seemed to be arguing against corporation taxes altogether. Corporation taxes are fundamental. I should like to ask the hon. member how he can justify, as it seems to me he tried to do, the 10 per cent rate which banks pay in the form of corporation taxes, or a similar rate for the resource industries, the mines and oil companies, when labour-intensive industries such as manufacturing are in fact paying taxes at the rate of about 40 per cent?

Mr. Johnston: The point I made during my remarks was that a corporation is a vehicle for the collection of taxes. I am not suggesting it be eliminated as a vehicle for the collection of taxes, but a corporation itself is a legal fiction. It does not pay any tax, it does not consume any goods or services. Who is bearing that tax, if you like? As I said, when you put a tax on a dog you can rest assured that the dog is not paying the tax, but rather the owner of the dog. Hence here, in this instance, when we are talking about corporations it is the shareholders of the corporation who pay the tax. The hon. member is saying that initially the revenues of a corporation are being collected from the corporation at a rate of 10.7 per cent, so if anything, the most he can be saying is that there is an undue deferment of the tax that somebody is going to pay on the profits of that corporation.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity of making a few brief remarks on the present bill before the House today. I should like first of all to deal with two small aspects of the legislation that relate to the fairness of this tax system and the amendments being proposed, and as well to take a look at some of the aspects of taxation as a tool to shape and strengthen the Canadian economy.

Let me suggest at the outset that the present bill is in no way fair. In the second instance, it does not present any coherent plan to strengthen the Canadian economy.

There are some aspects of the bill that can be supported. We might quibble with the mechanisms that are used, but certainly the expansion of research and development is a very desirable goal within the Canadian economy, as is the development of pollution controls. We have had many days of discussion about the acid rain problem in this country, and it is imperative that we begin to take action on it.

The other thing that will be of particular assistance in rural ridings like mine is the employee expense deduction. There are a few aspects of this bill that can be supported and that will provide constructive help to Canadians, but by and large this is an ad hoc approach to solving a lot of the problems in this country. In some cases the amendments are counterproductive; they are not fair and they do not represent a constructive way of dealing with many of the economic problems that face our nation.

On the subject of fairness, the first thing I should like to examine is the business of shifting the tax burden from corporate taxation to personal taxation. I noticed with interest the remarks of the previous speaker on this fiction, but nevertheless the business of a corporation exists. They earn income and in some cases, as with foreign corporations, they export a tremendous amount of income from this country. What has occurred over the years is a rising burden of tax on low and middle income taxpayers. This is to the benefit of many of the corporations in this country.

The bulk of this legislation and its amendments is concerned with providing tax savings for corporations in the hope that they will achieve in some way the goals desired by most Canadians. This is extremely unfair. Taxation has to be seen to be fair; otherwise the credibility of the government will be eroded.

I think the Conservative party realized that prior to the last general election when they suggested that they would be prepared to introduce a $2.2 billion personal tax cut. That particular suggestion would have made for a much fairer tax system in the sense that it would have reduced the burden of tax on personal income and started to bring it in line with lightened load on corporate taxpayers.

As we examine this bill, Mr. Speaker, we see a number of provisions designed specifically to relieve the burden of taxation on corporations. These tax savings for corporations will mean higher rates of tax on personal incomes. The first of these, the investment tax credit, will probably not create jobs in this country, and I think this has been mentioned before in this House. We are probably going to see investments made on the basis of long-term profitability and market conditions. The prospect of having an investment tax credit in a very indefinite form means that it will probably wind up as a side benefit to the original decisions on investment.

There is an aspect of this business of investment tax credits and, generally, tax savings that accrue through investment that affects people in my riding and many others along the coast of British Columbia, as well as other areas of the country. This is the situation where a corporation can realize a tax saving by making an investment, usually in technological improvements which result in unemployment. There are examples on the B.C. coast of three major corporations—not small businesses—that are usually the single industry in a community where, through technological improvements paid for by tax savings, in the neighbourhood of 750 or 1,000 jobs will be removed. This is the long-term projection. So we have paid with our tax dollars for investments that created unemployment. Not only that, but they remove disposable income from small communities and, indeed, destabilize a very delicate local community economy, which in turn has had some drastic impacts on small business.

Another proposal for tax savings is the blanket approach to providing tax credits for research and development. Certainly this is a desirable goal within the context of the Canadian economy where research and development is being rationalized by taking it out of the country—a sort of goal of trans-national corporations to centralize research and development.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) that perhaps we should begin to consider research and development in terms of providing specific directions within this country. It would be desirable to see an industrial strategy and national economic goals defined for Canada to improve research and development, government joint ventures and other instruments and to encourage this in specific areas that meet our national needs. I am thinking here of things like energy conservation. This is a very critical area and one that we should be moving into.

Another area is the development of transportation. So much of the development of industry and small business in this country depends on effective transportation. Because of the nature of this country we should be leaders in this field.

One aspect of transportation that the government has embraced is marine shipping. There will be a proposal, we hope, for the creation of a deep sea fleet. We have put forward the suggestion that Canadian resources in the Arctic should be transported by Canadian shipping. There is a proposal for the acquisition of naval ships and icebreakers. It is to be hoped that these initiatives can be undertaken in Canadian shipyards. Tremendous amounts of research and development in these areas will be needed if we are to remain competitive with the rest of the world.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to provide tax credits for research and development, these should meet our national goals through a very clearly stated industrial strategy. Such a strategy has not appeared as yet.

The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) spoke about pollution control equipment. This is a very serious matter in my riding as it is in many others. Unfortunately, as far as taxes are concerned, there is only another blanket proposal respecting pollution control equipment.

I am joined by others in asking why corporations which are earning large incomes, especially foreign corporations, are allowed to deduct the cost of pollution control as a cost of doing business. Why is that being paid for out of the public purse? We should be providing tax benefits to those corporations that must be improved and that have a base of necessity in local communities, but we should also look carefully at the substantial tax savings available to profitable corporations. We should demand a reduction in the cost to the public purse and see to it that those corporations share or shoulder the cost of pollution control.

We have spent some time examining the question of fairness in terms of the distribution of taxation between corporations and personal income. Over the years we have seen a shift in that distribution. We have heard a great deal in this House about how oil companies today are receiving windfall profits, how they are manipulating prices to their benefit and how they are seeking tax savings outside this country. We have heard about the earnings of banks. They have literally a licence to shovel money due to increasing interest rates. Then there are the major foreign corporations that earn profits within this country and export the funds. Some of the incomes are earned as a result of tax savings. Before the election the government put forward the idea that it is very desirable, within the Canadian context, to begin to shift the burden of tax back to the corporate taxpayers and to relieve the burden on individuals.

The second aspect of fairness deals with a problem that was also brought up last week. Statistics Canada suggested—and this is fairly clear from the evidence that has been gathered and supported over the years—that the gap in income between the top income earners in this country and the bottom income earners is growing. In fact the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. That is undeniable.

One of the things creating that situation is our tax system. The mechanisms proposed in this bill to attack certain problems are further widening the gap. About 20 years ago the Carter commission enunciated a number of proposals to form the foundation of a fair tax system. The first proposal was "a buck is a buck" and it ought to be taxed. The second proposal was that the income tax system should be progressive.

In the legislation submitted for consideration today and during this week, there are principles opposed to those two ideas. The benefits of tax avoidance such as registered retirement savings plans, incorporation of professional practices and reorganizing the timing of business costs for tax purposes accrue principally to upper income Canadians. Most middle and lower income Canadians do not have enough disposable income to take advantage of the tax savings within those systems, so relief and benefit is provided for the top groups. The principle has been reversed to the point that the income tax system is becoming regressive. Not only do we extract a very high level of tax from middle and low income earners in Canada, but also the business of direct regressive taxation through land tax, through sales and excise taxes and such things, cannot be passed on as a business expense or through tax avoidance. Low and middle income Canadians have to take up these burdens as well. Thus we are placing a very heavy burden of taxation squarely on low and middle income Canadians. The desirable goal would be to move and shift it more fairly on the income range to re-establish the progressive nature of the tax.

For a few moments I would like to examine the tax system within the context of a tool to strengthen and shape our national economy and develop an industrial strategy. Unfortunately, our tax system has fostered tax savings which have allowed companies to come here, develop our resources and export those resources for processing in other countries. The maximum advantage from that tax saving has been obtained by those countries and earnings within this country have also flowed out.

The major problems in terms of shaping the economy in this country which were defined before the election were unemployment and the lack of an industrial strategy, which saw Canada more heavily dependent upon the development of natural resources and export for processing outside the country. This led to other problems such as the devaluation of the dollar and rising inflation.

The present income tax amendments that we are being asked to consider do not in any way look seriously at using that tax system as a tool to shape and strengthen our economy. We are clearly too heavily dependent on taxation. We have given up other financial instruments in favour of taxation in an effort to control our economy. Taxation appears to be too imprecise in achieving our goals and too cumbersome and imperfect a system to realize them. It weighs very heavily upon middle and low income tax groups.

What we need is co-ordination of economic policy. We need a policy which sees a fair redistribution of the burden of taxation among all sectors of the economy and a restatement or a bringing forward of progressiveness in the tax system. I would suggest that many of the programs which have been developed in this House are unco-ordinated. We see tax proposals that we hope will create jobs and give some direction to investment in this country to strengthen the economy, remove the weakness of the dollar and control inflation. Yet we put one tax program in place and then allow interest rates to rise to the point where investment is discouraged.

Over the last few weeks I have had a number of phone calls from businessmen in my riding. These people would like to take advantage of the proposals which the government has put forward in tax savings, but they have had to forgo making investments because interest rates have put financing beyond their reach. A fellow phoned, most concerned, and mentioned that his project which would have hired 60 people could not now be put forward because of the cost of financing. What we find is that in attempting to achieve one benefit through the tax system, we are destroying it by other manoeuvres in the economy.

I suggest that when that tax bill is put forward—or other manoeuvres in this House—it should be put forward within a context of a very clear industrial strategy in this country, and with it a sense of direction of where we are going. That is something we lost with the previous government. I believe that is what this government was elected to do—to give us a sense of direction and put forward co-ordinated policies that will tell us where we are going.

To summarize, I suggest three things. First, that this bill be examined in terms of fairness. Is a fair burden being placed on the lower and middle income taxpayers by providing tax savings for the corporate sector without a clear statement of what those tax savings are designed to achieve? Second, a complete reduction in the tax system aimed at other fiscal instruments, such as the Bank Act, controlling energy and various other things within the country. Third, we need from the government a clear statement of where we are going in terms of shaping and strengthening the economy for the next generation.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this bill go without saying a few words.

An hon. Member: Or any other bill.

An hon. Member: Say it again, you will say the same thing.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps I can say it a few more times at the committee stage, Mr. Speaker.

What we are doing today is debating some old Liberal leftovers which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is dragging up before the House. These are part of the leftovers he wants the House to swallow. I do not think we should be swallowing some of these leftovers quite as quickly as the Minister of Finance wants us to do. A debate on income tax measures gives us a chance to ask the question: What kind of a country do we really want and in which direction do we want to go?

Earlier in the House today we received a sermon from the member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine—I believe that was the members' riding—

Mr. Knowles: It was Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I am sorry, I get them mixed up. They are sometimes similar in their political ideology. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says, there is not too much difference. Anyway, he was complaining there was a bit too much ideology in the House coming from this side. One of the complaints I have had as an MP since coming here in 1968 is that we have not had enough ideology, we have not had enough sense of direction or enough leadership in this country. I think this country is looking for some courageous leadership.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has been talking about making some tough decisions. About the only thing that I have seen that is tough coming from the government so far is that Tory times are tough times for ordinary, little people. We do not need that kind of direction, Mr. Speaker. I would like to see the government redistribute income and wealth in this country so that the ordinary citizen—the ordinary Joe, and no pun intended—will get a greater share of the national wealth and pie.

It is about time we did that, yet the bill before us is confirming a lot of the old Liberal diet which was fed to the oil companies. A couple of minor changes were made to give high income people a bigger tax break. I ask when will this government live up to its promise of giving a major tax break to ordinary citizens? I can look at a speech made by the Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition during the throne speech debate a year ago and was proposing a major tax cut for low income Canadians. He campaigned on that during the election. In my riding I recall my opponents saying that the ordinary people of this country deserve a tax break, and that if the Conservative party was elected it would give them a tax break. Is this government doing another Jerusalem on the tax break for the ordinary citizen? Is it doing another Jerusalem on that tax break just as it has done so many Jerusalems already and turned so many flip-flops in policy?

When these people were in opposition they used to scream, bitch and holler in this House that the government was not respecting the rights of Parliament. Yet across the way we had a government in power for five months before Parliament was recalled. Across the way we have a government that has such a lack of respect for Parliament that one of its most powerful cabinet ministers is sitting in the other place, a man defeated by the voters of Ottawa Centre and who was rewarded by being given a senior cabinet portfolio to sit in the other place.

Is this the respect the Conservative policy has propounded? Is this the message we get from the Conservative party? Can we trust that party across the way? I ask these questions because I think this country needs new leadership. This country is crying out for new leadership, as are many parts of the world. There is a real vacuum in the society in which we live. It is not just ironic that the programs watched today by children are "Superman", "Batman", the "Bionic Woman" and the "Six Million Dollar Man". People strive to attach themselves to something "super", something to take away their problems.

The Canadian people have a new government that has promised many things. We do not ask the Prime Minister to be a superman. All we ask is for him to live up to his promises. One of those promises was a major tax cut for the ordinary Canadian citizen. When can we expect that tax cut, or is the Minister of Finance going to have another Jerusalem? Is he changing his mind? I see the Minister of Finance smiling with his big Cheshire cat smile. Perhaps he will reveal something when he gets to his feet in a few minutes' time.

Mr. Crosbie: Right on.

Mr. Nystrom: When discussing the tax system, it is important to realize that it can be used to make a fair and equitable society. As I said before, we are criticized by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry for being ideological, theoretical or perhaps too dogmatic in our arguments. However, this is a democratic socialist party that believes we have to share the wealth and resources of this country.

We need more equity in this country so that every person, regardless of his background or economic status, is a more equal recipient of the fruits that Canada has to bear. One way of achieving this is to get rid of many of the loopholes and to implement many of the recommendations in the Carter commission report of many years ago, long before a lot of us were in the House of Commons. I refer to write-offs for large companies, write-offs for the business community, entertainment expenses, fringe benefits and privileges given to the wealthy of this country, and deferred taxes for large corporations and companies.

When is this new government going to end some of these privileges? They are not rights but privileges. When will these be ended and the money redistributed so the ordinary Canadian citizen can get a real tax break? By the time the high interest rate policy or, as the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae) called it, the tight money policy, gets finished with the economy, those few middle income Canadians who can now afford to buy a home will not be able to do so. The few ordinary income Canadians who are living quite easily will not live so easily with the economic constraints being imposed by this government, be it high interest rates, world energy prices or any of what the Conservative party is introducing to this country.

As I said, Tory times are tough times. We should not forget that. I remember my grandfather talking about the days of R. B. Bennett and the old Bennett buggy on the prairies. That was not "Grandfather Knowles" but a different grandfather.

Mr. Knowles: I remember those days very well. That's why I'm here.

Mr. Nystrom: When a person could not afford to drive his car, he would take out the motor and hitch the car to a horse. Those were the tough days of the Tory party. The Tory times were tough times. We are getting a bit of that now at the end of the seventies and it will continue into the eighties.

I ask the Minister of Finance not to forget the commitment of the Conservative party to give a significant tax break to ordinary and low income people in this country. I ask him to use the taxation system as a tool, a method to redistribute income and wealth in this country so that the ordinary people can harvest a much greater proportion of the national economic pie.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, while we do have an opportunity to pose questions in the question period and there are means of parliamentary procedure in this House, this is my first opportunity to speak on this particular bill. I am going to touch on a few points with respect to this bill of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) to borrow $7 billion.

Mr. Crosbie: No, no, that's past. This is a different debate. This is the income tax bill.

Mr. Harquail: Income tax. I guess what I wanted to comment on on the other bill was the attitude and performance of the minister when he introduced that bill.

Mr. Crosbie: That is old stuff. I am changed now!

Mr. Harquail: Are you changed? Is that a change of shirt you are wearing? Is that the new look?

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, this is the new me.

Mr. Harquail: Is that the new look for the minister? He has the Bay Street look with his Bay Street shirt. He has been swallowed up by the wolves of Bay Street. The minister has shed his old skin and the positions he took when he sat on this side of the House. He has also shed the positions he held when he was minister of finance under the hon. Mr. Smallwood of Newfoundland.

It is always a very interesting exercise to look at the history of Parliament and what has been stated previously by members in this House. In this case I am speaking particularly of the Minister of Finance and some of the things he said when dealing with the linerboard problem in his province and the millions of dollars that went down the drain as a result of that project. An article was written not too long ago by former premier Smallwood about the mishandling of that project and the role played by this minister. Now he sits here acting as though he has all the magical answers. He comes in here and says he wants to borrow $7 billion.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is speaking to the wrong debate. He is one week behind in his debate, as usual.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I want to put on the record this afternoon the denial by the Progressive Conservative Party of my motion the other day with regard to income tax. I asked them if they had any charity left in their hearts. I think of the other member from St. John's, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath), who stood on this side and begged, pleaded with and berated the government of the day. He talked about the insensitivity of the government and their lack of compassion and concern for the people of Atlantic Canada.

During this afternoon's question period the Minister of Finance said Treasury Board will not give them the money needed with regard to small craft harbours. All of a sudden there is a complete about face with regard to their concern for the citizens of Atlantic Canada. Now that they are in a position of responsibility and have the power and the ability to make changes, they do not make changes. Why not? What are they waiting for?

Mr. Elzinga: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Harquail: I come back to the income tax proposal with regard to galloping inflation, the high cost of living and no control over food prices, with no relief to the consumer in the supermarkets of this country. I am speaking specifically of people on fixed incomes. In my motion under Standing Order 43 the other day, I asked the government to give some consideration to these people on fixed incomes who are hit the hardest. They have no relief, they have no way of overcoming the dire straits they are left in by this government with the fooling about we have witnessed with respect to the price of oil—they won't come clean and tell the people what they are doing. The minister of energy says he is waiting to see what is going to happen with the Premier of Alberta. Now we know why the Premier of Alberta is called the blue-eyed Arab; he says he will dictate to Canadians what we will have to suffer in the months to come. He will not communicate with the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark).

● (1640)

We are told by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that he is waiting to meet with the Premier of Ontario. When will these Conservatives get together? They said it was all going to be rosy once they got into power, that they would all be able to have friendly discussions and friendly negotiations and that we would all be able to see progress. Where is it?

I come back to these innocent Canadians who are caught in the bind of being left to cope with fixed incomes and galloping inflation. This insensitive government will not even give consideration to requests that persons who are over the age of 65 should not be called upon to pay income tax if their income is below a certain fixed amount—the suggestion was $15,000 a year. If you like, maybe we would reduce it to $12,000, $1,000 a month for persons at the age of 65 with no other income, no other means of support, who are living at what would be considered today, with the cost of rent, food and fuel being so high, to be at the poverty level or below. The government could at least address itself to the needs of people in this sector and give them some consideration.

The minister became excited when I referred to how proud he was of introducing his bill to borrow $7 billion. When I referred to that a moment ago, his attitude was: No, no, don't talk about that, we want to sweep that under the rug. You know, Mr. Speaker, they used to be concerned when one talked about millions, and now $7 billion means nothing at all to this minister. He says: "Just give us the power, give us the borrowing authority, but don't question it, though. We are going to be an open government, but don't ask us what we are doing while we are doing it, just let us go". Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the opposition parties are going to allow members over there to get away with it. They are the same people who sat here previously making wonderful suggestions as to how they were going to solve all the economic ills of the country. Well, they have had five or six months and we have not seen much by way of action.

I certainly wanted to take the opportunity on this income tax bill to register my remarks about the performance of the minister the other day. When he presented his bill he used the word "outrageous". I would say his performance was outrageous. I found it totally unacceptable. The tone and the attitude of some of the things he had to say at random on such a serious matter as borrowing $7 billion was such that the word I would use would be the word he used the other day, that is to say, outrageous. It was an outrageous performance for any minister of finance. Everyone in this House wants to have respect for a minister of finance and I would want to continue in that tradition, but when we see his hilarious attitude almost bordering on being a joke, I think we cannot let this type of thing pass without underlining it and making a comment about it.

If the minister wants to be gracious enough to take these remarks in the way they are intended, we may see an improvement in his attitude in introducing bills in the future. I would implore him in the coming weeks and months when he is with his cabinet colleagues, specifically the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie), to take a hard look at taking some action to find ways and means to alleviate the heavy burden on persons in this country who are retired, senior citizens on fixed incomes, who desperately need assistance at this time.

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious that as an economy grows it becomes more possible to redistribute income. When an economy within a capitalistic framework or a mixed economy framework or what is called a "command economy" fails to grow, acute problems are developed in redistributing the wealth or income of that nation. So the small "c" and the capital "C" Conservatives in this country are trying to tell us now that before we can get proper redistribution of income the economy must grow. They are thinking largely in terms of the 1960 type of growth; that is, growth of the gross national product, an index which, in our terms and value judgment, is often as much "gross" as it is national product. But in economic terms, although it is a weak form of estimate it is one of the best we have.

One of the great difficulties with a mixed enterprise system controlled by the invisible government of the large multinationals, as we saw once again during the question period today when the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) did so much to defend his friends and the old friends of the Tories and of the Liberals, especially the oil companies—

An hon. Member: Same old story!

Mr. Hogan: It is interesting to note that under the guidance of the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), after meeting out in Winnipeg the Liberals decided to reform and go back to what they called their reformed status before the last five, six or seven years when they were copying everything from the NDP. So they have this little man from Windsor West to be the David attacking the Conservative Goliath under the guise not only of the NDP philosophy but of the programs and suggestions my party has put forward down through the years, and in the four years just gone by when that government failed to adopt so much of what we were suggesting. Why? Because they could not get the economy going.

Mr. Crosbie: Shame!

Mr. Hogan: We now have a government of so-called Progressive Conservatives who, as my leader has said, are progressive before an election when they are promising tax cuts and so on but become very, very conservative after the election. They are, in fact, regressive conservatives under the leadership of the present Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), who as everyone in the House knows is an honourable gentleman, one to one. But they are absorbed with the idea that they must bring us back to the time equivalent of the thirties.

Mr. Speaker, if it were not for all the things the NDP and the social democracies of the western world have built up in the meantime, God help us now. Even they have to admit that what is keeping the whole system from collapsing now is what has been built up by the party in this corner. Where now are those voices which were raised from Liberal and Tory benches against the children's allowance legislation, calling it a bonus for procreation? Where are those who denounced unemployment insurance on the grounds that it would make us a nation of weaklings and lazy people? This is now re-emphasized by the right-wing Tories who have gotten a grip over the half dozen or so so-called red-necked Tories from the maritimes. They seem to have caved in before the onslaught of the Alberta Tories and some of the other extreme right-wing, doctrinaire free-enterprisers such as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens).

● (1650)

Look at the contradiction. The Minister of Finance defends restraint and says that everybody has to suffer, and so does the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance protects and favours the wealthy so that self-employed individuals and professionals can have their own corporations and pay a much lower rate of taxation. Using Liberal tactics, this same government comes along and gives the Atlantic region the investment tax credits which are explicit in this bill, knowing darned well that to the small business community of the Atlantic region this means nothing, given the increases in interest rates which have been adopted since the Conservatives were elected.

Mr. Speaker, those increases in interest rates wipe out all advantages. There will be little or no gain. What gain there might be will be marginal as far as development in the Atlantic region is concerned and as far as the manufacturing sector is concerned. We have a situation where the government is protecting high-income professionals as well as the multinational corporations I mentioned, which are the invisible government. Let us face it, oil companies in the United States and here, as well as banks, form a link. It is not a conspiracy but there is a definite link between the other place and the large institutions which govern our way of life. Anyone who attacks that type of incestuous relationship, for want of a better term, which has grown and which has been nurtured in this country is considered extreme. If that is so, I am happy to be called an extremist because it is time these powerful institutions were whittled down to size and put in their proper place. We have amendments to this tax bill which is presently in favour of the "well to do."

Getting back to small business and the fisheries sector, it is especially sad to see the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans bow his head and say the government had to slash $10 million from the small crafts and harbours program in order to carry out its restraint program. Where to a large extent is the slashing taking place? It is taking place in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces.

Mr. Crosbie: Not Newfoundland.

Mr. Hogan: One and a half million dollars was slashed in Newfoundland. That is a very substantial amount for inshore fisheries. In my constituency the former government and an entrepreneur, using vehicles which had been established, succeeded in building three boats at $1 million each. Under an agreement with the fisheries minister there was to be dredging of the Glace Bay harbour this year. We expected changes but within five months they cut moneys allotted for the dredging of that harbor. The government did not consider how a cut would affect small businessmen and processing plants there.

The result was that the boats, which cost $3 million on a shared basis and which could have created jobs in the inshore fishery and in processing, cannot even get into the harbour. There are no funds for dredging harbours, but this government is now prepared to give special tax concessions to professional self-employed people. It will not look after the inshore fishermen of the Atlantic region. There is contradiction and inequity.

Surely to God there must be a majority of hon. members opposite who feel conscience-stricken about this type of thing. We could not get the former government to move in a significant way on a better redistribution of income, but how can the minister not bring forward any changes today after the release just recently by Statistics Canada showing that the number of poor, those spending 62 per cent of their earnings on food, clothing and shelter, has grown? That number has grown substantially.

I would like to quote from a study undertaken by Statistics Canada and released just three weeks ago:

> In 1978, the poorest fifth of the population, those families and unattached individuals getting less than $6,288 for the year, received 3.9 per cent of pre-tax income in the economy, up a little from 3.8 per cent in 1977, but well below the 4.2 per cent it received 11 years ago.
> The wealthiest 20 per cent, those with annual incomes in excess of $26,792, received 42.5 per cent of pre-tax income last year, up from 42 per cent in both 1977 and 1967.

The Carter Royal Commission on Taxation recommended that the top personal income tax rate be reduced from 90 per cent, including provincial taxes, to 50 per cent so that "economic doers" and "risk-takers" would have an incentive to earn more money. The tax rate was lowered, but some of these "economic doers" and "risk-takers" such as accountants, doctors and lawyers, felt that they needed a further break. They sought to be protected under the old Liberal bill, and now, to show that there is no difference essentially between the Liberals and the Tories, the Minister of Finance backs up what the Liberals wanted to do. We know the contributions these professionals make. Many here belong to the legal profession. There are a number of doctors and others here, but this is a time when we are demanding that people lower their expectations. The government is preaching that day in and day out, just as the former prime minister did. Surely to the Lord the people who should make sacrifices are the professionals and not the ordinary people of Canada. Surely the poor who were mentioned in the study from which I just quoted should not have to make the sacrifices.

There is essentially no difference between the Liberals and the Tories in this matter. They want to protect large multinational corporations almost exclusively, despite new protests and the so-called reform of the Liberals, which we suspect is not genuine. We saw the Liberals in action here for a long time, and they protected large multinational corporations. The same thing is going on now. Even though the friends of the Prime Minister are in the oil industry, it seems as though he will not be doing enough for them when he dismantles Petro-Canada. Why should he have to give them special protection when the American Congress now has some seven bills before it which are attempting to establish a national oil corporation in the United States? When will there be a government in Canada which says something different?

We now have Tweedle-dee and Tweedle-dum, and there seems to be little difference between them. When they come together collectively, they can always be counted on to protect large corporate interests and certain special interests. As I have said before, there has not been a word from this government about people in the Atlantic region and small businesses whom it says it loves so much. By allowing interest rates to rise to the extent they have risen, people in the Atlantic region and in small businesses there are going to suffer greatly. Individual consumers are going to suffer greatly.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be acceptable to proceed with Bill C-217. Bills C-209, C-213 and C-214 have already been printed, but I doubt that we are ready to discuss them today. We could perhaps get the unanimous consent of the House to proceed to the consideration of Bill C-217 and let the other bills stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of Bill C-217 and that all other bills preceding it stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

VOLUNTARY RETIREMENT FOR EMPLOYEES OF FEDERAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Without precluding the consideration of the bill which is before hon. members at this time, may I be permitted to bring to the attention of the House the fact that there is a deficiency, to my mind, in the title of this bill. As hon. members know, the bill received first reading on October 24 together with a group of other bills that have been presented at the opening of this parliamentary session, which did not really give sufficient time for the Chair to see whether the bill has met all the requirements. My concern is that the title of the bill should be phrased in such a way as to cover all the provisions in the bill.

Citation 361 in Beauchesne's fourth edition confirms my contention. It reads:

(1) In framing the title care must be taken to make it wide enough to cover all the provisions of the bill,

May I also refer hon. members to Erskine May's nineteenth edition at page 465, which refers to long titles. It states:

The long title sets out in general terms the purposes of the bill, and should cover everything in the bill.

Hon. members will notice that the bill before us is meant to amend two different acts. One is the Canadian Human Rights Act and the second is the Public Service Superannuation Act. To my mind the title given by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) to this bill is deficient in that the bill is presented as a new act.

My suggestion to the House is that Bill C-217 be entitled "an act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (age of retirement) and to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act". I believe the House should consider giving unanimous consent to this modification of the title, following which hon. members may proceed with the debate of the bill. Is there consent from the mover of the motion and from hon. members for the suggested modification?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe) seconded by Mr. Nowlan moved that Bill C-217, to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (age of retirement) and to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. While no question was put in terms of the necessity for any vote, and you, Mr. Speaker, are satisfied with the phrasing of the title of the bill, are you also satisfied as to there being no conflict in this bill amending two acts?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are many precedents for this. Such bills are often called omnibus bills, and this could be one of them. I believe it would qualify.

Mr. Knowles: It is art which was finely developed by the Liberals.

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, I am indeed happy and grateful to have this opportunity to speak on a subject which I have always espoused and supported, not only in the House but in many other places and areas. I am referring to voluntary retirement and the right of every worker or individual, as he chooses and if he is physically able to do so, to work beyond the mandatory retirement age set down by the legislation.

I am fully aware of the fact that the issue of mandatory retirement has been discussed previously in the House and that many important points have been brought out. However, I should like to add to the debate by expressing my deep concern over the tremendous waste of human resources resulting from a policy of compulsory retirement, a waste both in terms of the work force and of the Canadian society as a whole.

I am distressed more particularly by the debilitating effect that mandatory retirement can have upon the individual's physical and mental health. I agree wholeheartedly with U.S. Congressman Claude Pepper when he said:

> Mandatory retirement is an extravagant waste of people. It severs productive men and women from their livelihoods, lowers their sense of self worth, and squanders their talents.

In the past it has been largely assumed that most people wish to retire at the age of 65, and further, that for reasons of physical and mental health people should retire at that age and perhaps even before they reach the age of 65. The view that people should normally retire at the age of 65 has been so widespread in our society that it has been embodied in various government acts and legislation. For instance, the Public Service Superannuation Act sets the retirement age at 65. Then there is our new Canadian Human Rights Act which prohibits discrimination on the basis of age, except in the case of the individual who is 65 or over. Apparently the Canadian Human Rights Act does not consider compulsory retirement to be a form of discrimination.

I realize that in our society with its accent on youth there is a tendency to underestimate the capabilities of people beyond middle life. However, as far as I know there is no sound scientific basis for setting retirement age at 65, or even at 70, because most people at 65 are at the peak of their mental powers. They have more experience, more balanced judgment and generally are more persistent and loyal, more tolerant and patient than their younger co-workers. If they have good health also, they are more likely to have a steady work record.

Considerable evidence has been amassed indicating that older workers are not necessarily the incompetent, deteriorating deadwoods that personnel managers sometimes imply. Two studies referred to by the United States senate committee on human resources made this point. A New York survey conducted in 1974 compared workers over and under the age of 65 with regard to absenteeism, punctuality, on the job accidents and over-all job performance. It concluded that older workers were about equal to, and sometimes noticeably better than, younger workers.

The University of Illinois came to a similar conclusion in its study, which reported that there was no specific age at which employees became unproductive. Also this report expressed the view that satisfactory work performance may continue into the eighth decade. The director of a creativity program in the United States found that fully 80 per cent of the most workable and worth-while new ideas were produced by employees who were over 60. Younger employees had a tendency, as he put it, to reinvent the wheel. There is no question that these studies should cause us to pause and re-examine the discriminatory practices prevalent in the whole area of mandatory retirement. We must begin to judge people on the basis of competency and not on the basis of age.

If we continue to subscribe to the age 65 policy, we will find that an increasingly larger share of our population is being considered—and are considering themselves—as second class citizens; the unproductive old. It seems to me our present focus on age 65 as the age of retirement is based more and more on tradition than on any rational motives.

Let me briefly examine the history of the age 65 policy. The modern history of a mandatory retirement and the use of the figure 65 as the magic number are both traced to Germany's famous chancellor, Otton von Bismarck. Hoping to stave off socialism in his country, the chancellor initiated the social security pension system in 1889 at which time he proclaimed 65 as the appropriate age for retirement.

Bismarck's model has been followed ever since in much of the western world. Over the years it has become ingrained in our society to the point where age 65 is considered the line of demarcation between middle age and old age. Ironically Bismarck himself was 74 years of age when he introduced his pension scheme and was at the height of his spectacular career as iron chancellor. Perhaps Bismarck's choice of 65 was quite appropriate for his time and may even have been stretching things a bit, because in Bismarck's day only a small percentage of the population lived to be 65; life expectancy at that time was 37. Our average life expectancy today is over 71, and many more of us make it to the age of 65 in a state of better physical and sound mental health than they did in Bismarck's time. Therefore, we must ask ourselves whether it still makes sense in this day and age automatically to retire a person at 65. Is it fair to do so?

For those members who still have doubts, I would recommend that they take a look around and remind themselves that several of our colleagues in the House are well past the traditional retirement age. Personally I am grateful for the expertise that they continue to offer in our day to day proceedings. However, in this House we are fortunate in that we do not have to face the threat of forced retirement simply because we have reached some arbitrary age limit. It is only right and proper that this privilege be extended to the rest of Canadian society. Ability and not age should be the determining factor in deciding whether a person should continue at his or her job. I realize that there are many who look forward to their retirement at 65 or even earlier, but the important point is that there should be a freedom of choice.

Now let us assess some of the supposed benefits of the current retirement policy. One of the arguments pro-mandatory retirement is that the age 65 policy "frees up" scarce positions for unemployed youth. However, it has been found in studies done in the United States that the number of jobs freed by mandatory retirement appears small compared to the physical, psychological and social benefits gained by permitting the older worker who is willing and able to remain in the work force.

Also there is the argument that after 30-odd years of productive labour, society owes its older workers a number of years of blissful retirement. This may be so, but we do have a responsibility as well to those who have no desire to stop work and to the many who are able to work, need to work and want to work.

In our society where so much emphasis is placed on the work ethic, work gives form, dimension and meaning to the life of the average citizen. The American medical association has indicated that there was considerable medical evidence that the sudden cessation of productive work and earning power of an individual caused by compulsory retirement at the chronological age of 65 often led to physical and emotional deterioration and premature death. It was indicated further that few physicians deny a direct relationship exists between forced idleness and poor health, and that chronic complaints develop more frequently when a person is inactive and without basic interests. These disturbing statements alone should compel us to rethink the whole issue of mandatory retirement.

Of course, there are familiar arguments in favour of retaining a compulsory retirement policy in industry and government. One is the contention by large companies that retirement pension plans would be greatly disrupted by eliminating the retirement at age 65 tradition. This suggests to me that actuarial computations are somehow more important than the fulfilment of human lives. I totally reject such a proposition.

Such contentions also overlook the fact that where optional retirement is available and pension plans are adequate, many workers elect to retire before they reach 65. But to postulate from this that all should leave productive employment at a given age is illogical, wasteful and immoral. If as some authorities maintain we are destined to experience a shrinking national economy, then the economy itself must be economical, particularly of talent and experience.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make. I welcome input from other hon. members. Hopefully my bill will be voted on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on the bill introduced by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges). Naturally I was quite pleased to hear him say that persons over 65 should not be considered as dead wood.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: Indeed, I looked around and I saw that I was not the only one smiling. Also I enjoyed his reference to age 65 as being the dividing line between middle age and old age. That dividing line shifts. When one is 20, somebody at 30 is middle aged, but when one gets along a bit that line shifts. That led me to be curious as to how old the hon. member was. I sent for the "Canadian Parliamentary Guide", and I see that he has not got his age in it. So it is not only female members of the House of Commons who try to hide their ages.

● (1720)

Speaking of old age, middle age and so on, I think a remark I heard the other day covers it very well. There are three stages of life; first there is youth, then there is middle age, and then is "My, you are looking well!"

I want to say in respect of this bill that I have no objection to its basic philosophy, namely, that older persons should have a choice whether to continue working or to retire. But there are some aspects of this campaign that concern me. Indeed, I am far more concerned about the freedom to retire early than I am about the freedom to keep on working. I will go along with the hon. member that persons should not be forced to retire at age 65 if there are contributions they can make, and I support the element of freedom that is included in that proposition. But I represent a constituency in which thousands of people work in heavy industry. They work in the railway shops, the packing plants and the steel mills, and the plea I get from them time after time when I meet them at the shop gates is: "Can you not get the retiring age down? That rat race is too much to endure until age 65". They want to retire at age 60. I look at some of them and ask them their ages, and to my surprise they are 58 or so and they look older than I think I look. I agree with them that what is more important in terms of pension policy is the freedom to retire early, rather than the campaign for freedom to go on working until one is 90 or 100.

One might say that anyone can retire when he wants to, but the freedom to retire is not a freedom unless there is economic security. That means the major concern in all of this should be to get pensions available at age 60.

I am not arguing now, as I was a few years ago, for the old age pension to be brought down from 70 to 65 for everybody on a universal basis. I am not arguing that pensions should be paid automatically to everyone who reaches age 60. But I do say that persons who reach age 60 should have the opportunity to apply for old age security and for Canada Pension Plan benefits, providing they are out of the labour market, and to retire at that point.

I realize that this will also call for increasing the amount available under old age security, and that it will call for an upward revision of the terms of the Canada Pension Plan. I think we should not stay much longer with a scheme that provides a pension based on 25 per cent of what one's earnings were. I believe we should do these things and give the lead at the government level by making pensions available at age 60 so that this would put some meaning into the concept that people should have the right to work when they want to, or to retire when they want to, within certain reasonable limits.

Let me say to my friend that I have no objection to his carrying on this campaign, one that is similar to a campaign which has been carried on in the other place in a committee headed by Senator David Croll, but the far more important issue is to get the pension age down, at least on a voluntary basis, so that our people can have real freedom as to how long they work or when they retire.

The hon. member spoke as though retirement at a fixed age, such as 65, has the effect of robbing people of something for which to live. I sympathize with the idea and I understand it, but I think it is a false notion that the only way to have dignity beyond 65 is to be at a job or remunerative piece of work. There are other things in life that people can live for, there is a far better chance for people enjoying those other things, or getting into a retired life that has meaning to it, if they retire early rather than late. I suggest that the very concern the hon. member has expressed about people having dignity in their old age can be met even better if people have a chance to retire at 60 with enough years ahead of them that they can get into pursuits and interests that give them something to live for. I do not quarrel with this campaign, but to me it takes second place to the campaign for making pensions available at age 60.

There is one other concern I feel about these efforts to delay the retirement age, and that it could lead to pressure to delay the age at which old age security is paid. It took us a long time to get it down from age 70 to 65. I do not want people jumping up with supplements to this bill and arguing that if we are going to let people work to age 67, 68 or 70, we should not pay old age security until those ages. That is something I want to see nipped in the bud. The age at which the pension is paid is high enough now and, quite to the contrary, we should be getting it down.

An hon. Member: To 29.

Mr. Knowles: My friend, the young minister, wants it down to 29. I did not think he was that old.

One should not take much time on this and I only wish to refer to one other aspect I had in my mind, and that is the discrimination that women suffer in their older years. The age when they begin to suffer discrimination starts at about 55. They have a rough enough time as it is. They get paid less when they are working and they have less in the way of retirement income to live on, and all the statistics tell that story. I suggest that if we accept this idea of people working until they are 70 or 75, it will be even harder on women.

What we really need is a pension available on a voluntary basis at a lower age. I suggest age 60, and certainly this does not represent any conflict of interest on my part because it is a long time since I was that age.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat embarrassed to speak so soon on the private bill proposed by the Progressive Conservative member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) because, if I may remind the House, the government of the right hon. Prime Minister said it would let certain private bills pass. We have not been advised as to the fate of this bill. If I overextend myself, please stop me because I would, of course, be glad to take part in a collective decision in favour of this bill. I will, therefore, simply start stating my position on this piece of legislation until the government indicates that it is in favour of having this bill passed tonight by all members.

The measure proposed in Bill C-217 concerns only the federal sector and in particular the public service and the agencies which seem to reflect its employment policies, and would allow any employee who so desires to continue working past age 65.

I would now like to be more specific and come back to the concept of an over-all retirement income policy. The desire expressed by Canadians at this time on the age of retirement seems to me to be conflicting or two-sided. I had an opportunity last year at about the same date to submit a brief to Senator Croll's Senate committee to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) referred a few minutes ago.

The debate on retirement reflects two opposing, or at least different, attitudes. Some, and there are many of them, and we know them all irrespective of their party, want the government to lower the age of retirement for all to 65. Some introduce an element of choice and suggest that only those who would choose for various reasons to leave the labour market—I think that is the position of the New Democratic Party—would be entitled to a pension at the age of 60. And that is the wish of a great number of Canadians. It also has a high cost.

Other Canadians in the past few years and probably as a result of the movement that started in the United States want to have the choice, namely, to be able to work past the age of 65, if they wish to do so. I believe that, idealistically speaking, pensions will have to become personalized, meaning that the ideal situation for me would be for the government to offer people approaching the age of retirement a number of choices instead of the mandatory universal program that we have now and under which at the age of 65 a universal pension is paid to everyone, with 55 per cent of our people in need getting a supplement called the income supplement.

• (1730)

[English]

A survey was made of Canadians around the age of retirement—and the government has access to this—to see how many would choose to retire past 65. Of all the people surveyed, 15 per cent expressed the desire to work past the age of 65. This was not a behavioural study, only an expression of opinion, but still 15 per cent said they would continue to work. Now, 15 per cent of all Canadians who have reached 65 is not a big proportion but it surely represents enough people that the government could move in the direction of an optional age of retirement.

I am very sympathetic with the thrust of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and would be interested in the percentage of civil servants who would be covered if the bill were passed, since it does apply to the civil service only. I should like to add, however, that any decision of the government regarding future public service personnel management of the retirement age will have a profound effect, sooner or later, on the private sector. We already know that. We should be—and I hope my English is correct—in tune with the various players in the business world or in the economy on the policy of retirement age in Canada.

Although I have been speaking for a good five minutes, I have not seen any signal from the government that the bill will pass tonight. That may be because we are all waiting for Senator Croll's report to be tabled. I think the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) is alerting the population to a debate that should, sooner or later, become a national debate.

In the past when we created old age pensions, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was a witness to and a player in the event. First, pensions were selective, then made universal; next, the age was lowered slowly from 70 to 65 and, finally, they were indexed. This, in a nutshell, has been the development over the last 25 or 30 years of the retirement policy on public pensions of Canada.

Let me take a few minutes to point out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie), and maybe to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) more than anybody else, the very serious concern many of us have regarding the retirement age in Canada.

It is all very well to suggest that we immediately permit people to retire when they want. If we offer a choice upward, we have to offer a choice downward as well. If, tomorrow morning, the public service were to offer the choice of staying in the public service to whatever age a person wants, provided the person is competent and capable of fulfilling the requirements of the job, then, of course, a similar mobility and option of choice should be offered for the years below 65. That is where the proposal is revealed as not so simple and easy.

It is all very well to say that important deputy ministers and top civil servants have huge pensions and at the present time can elect to retire at age 59, 60 or 61 and still live with almost as much retirement income as they enjoyed when on salary in their active life. The majority of civil servants are not deputy ministers nor VIP's in the high salaried brackets, however. The bureaucracy is made up of small people, and by "small people" I mean the hundreds of thousands of secretaries, clerks, typists, receptionists—the young men, messengers, and people in different types of occupations who, unfortunately, do not and will not benefit from the important retirement income that the public service superannuation fund provides to some.

The same applies to the private sector in even worse proportions. Lots of the so-called "small jobs"—and here I add salesladies and salesmen in stores and such categories of employment—do not enjoy a private pension like the good one the civil servant has. It becomes almost theoretical to discuss the freedom of choosing the age of retirement.

In the minutes I have left I should like to stress that if I were the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if I may put it that way, and if I saw money floating around, the first moneys that would be available—

An hon. Member: You were.

Miss Bégin: That is not for the Minister of Finance nor the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens)—they would have a fit—but other members who, if they listen with honesty to this debate, will surely see my point. When the economic situation gets better, or whenever the government has the guts to tighten its belt and cut God knows where—maybe on its commitment to the military sector or any other sector—in other words, whenever moneys are "freed" for allocation somewhere, I firmly believe that the first priority in the field of pensions should be those people actually retired, those who today are in receipt of pensions and GIS but who fall into the category of "unattached" individuals.

A strange incident happened today when a young, new member of the Conservative government told me to continue to speak of the $200 million needed for the old—that it was very good for them, the Conservatives, because it makes them look good and makes mileage out of the extravagance that I seem to be pushing by referring to "only $200 million" needed to bring the pensions of today, not for those below 65, but for those more than 65, just above the poverty line. I was quite surprised to hear that from the new member. I recognize him, but I do not know his name yet. However, I will learn it. If these people continue along that avenue, they will lose touch with real people. One cannot only listen to chambers of commerce and to representatives of any single dimension of society.

Miss Bégin: It is not that they should not exist but they "belong" to the minister of finance or to so-called "economic ministers". It is essential that other ministers represent other voices in the cabinet. Between these conflicting positions come programs going to the various clientele of the government.

I will repeat, but with explanations, that for the senior citizens of Canada, 55 per cent of those who get part or full GIS—which means the majority of them—are in need of an additional pension. The majority of those, which is approximately 75 per cent, are unattached individuals. Because of that, these individuals still fall below the poverty line.

Last year we increased the GIS by $300 million in order to bring those couples receiving the GIS above the poverty line. For the first time we discriminated positively in favour of the single people, those divorced, separated, and widowed who were receiving the GIS, but it was not enough. We gave them a break and brought them a little closer to the poverty line, but we are still lacking in that respect.

In Canada, a person alone used to receive half the pension a couple received. It is now well known that to live alone costs approximately 66 per cent of a couple's budget. The basic one bedroom apartment, along with the electricity bill, etc., amounts to exactly the same thing whether that apartment is occupied by a person alone or a couple. We have brought people living alone up to 55 per cent approximately of the couple's pension. That is where the $200 million is needed per year in order to bring all Canadians, already in receipt of the government pension, just above the poverty line.

To come back to the subject of the bill, which could pass easily—since it concerns only the federal public servants—it should be noted this move will have an effect on the whole retirement policy in Canada, including the private sector and numerous small and medium-size employers. It makes sense and remains in line with what is needed right now regarding the public pensions for those already over the age of 65. In other words, I think I am saying to my colleagues in the House that surely we must be in favour of this bill and also of other bills, not just for the civil service, but for all Canadians who would like freedom of choice of their age of retirement. I find that is fundamental. And surely it will be the future that we will shape in this House of Parliament for Canadians.

Of course, I take it for granted that we will not abolish universal public pensions and that indexation will be maintained fully the way it is now.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: However, if those already in receipt of pensions do not get enough, how can we start pushing the idea, which almost becomes a luxury, of one being able to choose the age of retirement, either before the age of 65 or after.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think I have succeeded in giving a brief outline of what I believe to be a very serious weakness in the system. It is not that I refuse to consider such a bill because I am in complete agreement with its principle and I especially hope that this principle will be extended to another area, that of the private sector. However, first of all I believe that we should urgently try to find the $200 million necessary to help single people who receive the guaranteed income supplement because they still live below the poverty line. Of course, I have said that I believe that we should maintain universal pensions, and I was very happy to note ten days ago that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) had confirmed in the House that the policy of the new government would be to maintain the universal aspect of old age pensions.

I could say a lot more, especially about the fact that women as well as men, but particularly women in the private sector, who work in small or medium businesses or hold part-time jobs or do not belong to a union, have historically very little entitlement to private pension plans. This is certainly a priority and I am sure that eventually Canadians will be entitled to a personalized pension plan. This is my fondest wish.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to follow two distinguished members in this debate, mentioning the hon. lady first, the former minister of national health and welfare, who speaks from experience because of her recent responsibilities and, of course completely disinterested because she is nowhere near retirement age. On the other hand, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) also speaks from great experience, and even though he has a vested interest in the subject matter of the debate, he was pressing for lower retirement rather than later retirement.

I wish to make another personal reference, about the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He has certainly demonstrated that people who live and serve beyond that magical age of 65 certainly lose nothing in the process of aging, because he has been Chancellor for three successive terms of that great institution of higher education, Brandon University. He has served with distinction not only in this House but also in that extra curricular capacity.

Mr. Knowles: A university of which the hon. member is an honorary doctor.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you. The hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) should be congratulated for bringing on this debate because it reflects a growing concern and pressure. The pressures with respect to age of retirement, of course, reflect the changing demography of the land. We are living at a time when the baby boom of the post-war period is in full swing. In this chamber, for example, we have seen the average age drop considerably since I first arrived here in the early part of 1951. In those days the member for Brandon, who died in office, had reached the ripe old age of 83. He did not get into politics until he was 65 years of age. That is exactly the way it was. When I had the audacity to attempt to replace that venerable old gentleman who had served with such distinction, I was referred to as the boy politician even though I had crept over the age of 30 years.

Mr. Knowles: Now you are venerable yourself.

Mr. Dinsdale: Now I am venerable. However, there is a changing pressure. It will not be long. The baby boom has already gone through the system. That is why we are having so much discussion these days with regard to the demographic changes that are taking place. For example, by the end of the century 15 per cent of our population will be over 65 years of age, a substantial percentage. No wonder this debate has been precipitated here today. Pressure has come because of deliberations in the other place and because of recent legislative action on the part of the Congress of the United States.

I want to speak specifically to the bill and talk about the situation that exists at present under the Public Service Superannuation Act because, as was indicated, this is really what we are discussing today. It is possible for the mandatory age of 65 to be extended. This extension is at the discretion of the manager of the particular department under whom the employee is serving. That usually refers to the manager of the branch or the deputy minister. Usually the decision to extend the age of useful service of 65 depends upon the demand for the service or talents of the particular employee.

It is to be noted that this is only extended in cases where the maximum salary authorized to be paid as an SX-1 has not already been reached. This decision is, of course, in the hands of Treasury Board. It is not an absolute prohibition at the moment, but it almost amounts to that because in practice very few departments have used the flexibility that is permissible under the present superannuation act.

It should be noted that one of the reasons for this fair amount of rigidity in the exercise of the act is because of the problems that have already been pointed out by previous speakers, particularly the hon. lady who just spoke. The whole proposition of mandatory retirement at 65 came about when comparatively few people lived to be 65. At the time of Bismarck, or even earlier, the average longevity would be in the forties rather than the sixties. There were not too many people who lived long enough to draw a pension.

The superannuation act is quite specific with regard to the privileges and the benefits that are available to those people, even though they might be extended beyond age 65. For example, they are allowed full participation in the Public Service Superannuation plan. They enjoy the supplementary death benefit plan, the group surgical-medical insurance plan, and the life insurance features of the public service management insurance plan. However, as is common with almost all Canadian employers, coverage under the disability insurance plan or the public service management insurance plan and long term disability plan is not available to anyone over age 65.

If you contemplate removing any mandatory restriction, you have to make major changes in the social security plans applying to government employees. It should be noted, by way of observation, that it is possible for a person to be hired beyond age 65 under the existing legislation where special talents and qualifications are involved.

Everyone realizes further extensions and flexibility will have to be introduced. This matter has already been taken under consideration by the new Government of Canada. As a result of the pressure that has been outlined here, the Treasury Board secretariat, on behalf of the government as employer, is now reviewing public service policy with respect not only to the question of mandatory retirement age, but also greater flexibility in retirement ages with a view to determining whether policies might be reversed.

There is a series of other studies that are already under way which relate to this important matter. This includes the Conference Board in Canada survey of Canadian employers' views on mandatory retirement age, and the Finance, Health and Welfare study of retirement income policy for Canadians.

At this stage we are all concerned about the problem, and we are all interested in bringing public policy into line with the demands of the demographic changes that are under way. I am sure that as soon as the results of all these studies and this discussion are known, the government will take the necessary action to bring public policy in line with the actual social circumstances existing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to say a few words in this debate. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is the dean of this House, not in continuous service however, because it is the previous speaker, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), who is the dean of this House when it comes to continuous service, having been here since 1951.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: However, I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has the longest service having come to this House in, I believe, 1942. He took a brief holiday from 1958 to 1962. I had the impression he came here before the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, and that cost me a dollar because I said the hon. member was here first. I too can be classed as a senior citizen. I am one of the few members in this House of Commons who is entitled to extra indemnity because of my age. I might say the taxman gets a good bit of it back.

I commend the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) on bringing this bill before the House because it certainly is worth while and deserves serious consideration. As was pointed out by a previous speaker, there are a great many men and women who have attained the age of 65 who continue to work in a very worth-while fashion. In fact they probably do better than some of those many years younger. I do not believe the chronological age is all that important. I myself have worked for a great number of years and I have not been on a 40-hour week during that entire period. I believe I still put in a pretty good week's work even though it is late in my chronological life. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I hope to continue to do so for many years to come despite my age, as long as the fine people of Parry Sound-Muskoka wish to return me to this House.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the debate was interrupted at 5 p.m., Bill C-17 was under consideration, and the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) had the floor.

An hon. Member: He is not here.

[Translation]

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I did not hear what you said. Could you repeat it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In French or in English?

Mr. Lefebvre: As you wish, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the debate was interrupted at 5 p.m., the debate was on the motion for second reading of Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, and the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) had the floor.

[English]

The hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my speech this evening will be my first speech as the member of Parliament for Burnaby, and it gives me a great deal of pride to be the first member of Parliament for the new constituency of Burnaby. I might add that this is the first time in the history of my province that the community of Burnaby has had its own member of Parliament.

If I might just beg the indulgence of the House for a moment, I would like to point out that Burnaby is a very unique municipality in a number of ways. Within our borders we have great diversity. We border on the mighty Fraser River and an ocean inlet. We have rich agricultural land, heavy industry, two large post-secondary institutions, many lovely residential neighbourhoods, as well as a strong commercial area. I am proud to represent the constituency of Burnaby, and I am pleased that my constituents have placed their confidence in me.

The bill before the House this evening is a bill which would amend the statute law relating to income tax, and amend the Canada Pension Plan. The bill, of course, is a holdover, in a sense, from the previous Liberal government. It basically would continue the same kinds of loopholes and inequities, in my view, that the previous Liberal government brought into effect, or wished to bring into effect before it was turfed out of office on May 22 last.

The people of Burnaby, and I am sure the people of the rest of Canada, are tired of the kinds of games which are being played with them through the economic system, and the tax system in particular. The people of Burnaby voted for a change. I was elected as their representative, and the people of Canada as a whole thought that perhaps the promises which had been made by the Conservative Party during the election campaign would be kept. However, that was not to be. There are many examples, but I point to the example of the $2.2 billion income tax cut about which this government has been strangely silent so far.

Surely the constituents of my riding and the voters of Canada have a right to expect integrity in the political process in terms of the promises which have been made. There was a number of foolish promises which were made, and the government has quite properly turned its face from them. Of course, only yesterday we saw the example of the proposed embassy move.

However, what concerns me is the fact that in this bill which is presented to us today, and which seeks to bring in some more loopholes and some more incentives, as they have been called, to the taxation system, it does nothing to deal with the basic inequities which exist within our tax structure. The share of taxation which is borne by corporate interests today is approximately 17 per cent. The share which is borne by individuals is some 41 per cent. Twenty-five years ago the corporate share was far greater than the individual share, and surely the people of this country have a right to ask whether equity exists in a system in which the corporate sector is getting away with lower and lower taxation, and ordinary Canadians are being subjected to higher and higher taxation.

At the same time that this taxation is increasing, the government is slashing important social programs and not meeting its commitment to assist in a number of key areas. For example, there is nothing in this bill which deals with the essential concerns of people in urban areas who want some federal government assistance for urban rapid transit. Promises were made by the previous Liberal government. Those promises, as so many others, went unfulfilled. However, one would have hoped that in this bill, or in other legislation tabled at the earliest possible time, one would have seen some recognition of the fact that municipal taxpayers in urban areas cannot be expected to bear the tax load that is required to construct an urban rapid transit system.

The whole area of urban rapid transit has been given lip service only by members of the government opposite. They have indicated that they recognize its importance in terms of its energy consumption, and the savings in implementing a system of rapid transit, yet they have indicated nothing in terms of their willingness to deal with the serious financial problems that face local taxpayers who must finance urban rapid transit programs.

This bill will continue the present tax system which has been called, and properly so, by the National Council on Welfare, "the hidden welfare system." Loopholes and tax expenditures in the system do not assist the ordinary worker in Burnaby, the teacher, the labourer, the government employee. There is not opportunity for them. They assist primarily those persons who are making a lot of money, and a lot more money than most of us in this chamber are making. Concern has been expressed on the part of all members of the House about the size of the federal government deficit. This year it is something in the order of $11 billion, I believe, and I think we all agree that this unconscionable burden on the Canadian taxpayer must be lifted at the earliest possible time. This bill does nothing to close that gap.

We recognize, of course, that there are quite a number of serious structural changes which have to be made in our economy: the high degree of foreign ownership which plays a major role in the size of the budgetary deficit, and the fact that we are paying millions and millions of dollars in rent to foreign owners of the Canadian economy, and forgoing millions of dollars in revenues through the hidden welfare system to which I have referred.

There are some 60 deductions, exemptions, credits, exclusions, and loopholes which make up Canada's hidden welfare system, the tax expenditure budget. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) deserves full credit and I commend him for suggesting that in future he will be tabling annually a proper list of the extent to which various interest groups in our society are benefiting from this welfare system. I understand he will be tabling, as is done in the United States, the level of various tax expenditures. That is good, and we welcome it on this side of the House.

Both individuals and corporations, of course, benefit substantially from the various loopholes, tax credits, and exemptions which characterize our income tax system to date. In 1973, for example, some $2.5 billion worth of these various loopholes went to corporate interests. The question of these various loopholes and tax incentives is completely separate from the fact that in some cases those people and those corporate interests which can well afford to pay are not paying their fair share of taxation. We are dealing solely with the tax base itself and how that tax base has been eroded in an inequitable manner through the various loopholes within the tax system.

Let no one be deceived. These various tax expenditures are, in every sense of the word, true spending, and one must question why it has been for so many years that the Liberal government has disguised the extent to which this spending in fact has taken place. I can give as an example the whole area of DREE grants. My own constituency has a very large corporate interest which has received substantial amounts of funding in terms of DREE grants, regional development incentive grants, as they have been called. Millions and millions of dollars have been spent under the terms of this program, and we do not know today what effect they have really had in terms of the corporate decision-making process. Would these corporations have located in those areas in any event? How many new jobs have really been created? I will give the example in my own constituency of Lenkurt Electric which received a substantial grant under the terms of a loophole, an incentive similar to those that have been continued under this bill. What they did was to open a new plant in Manitoba. Instead of creating new jobs, the plant in Manitoba was opened and, lo and behold, an entire production line in my constituency of Burnaby was shut down and many persons lost their jobs. The company, of course, continued to receive its DREE tax incentive.

It has been well established that these tax expenditures, these loopholes of which I have spoken today, are worth far more to high income earners, to the fat cats so to speak, than to middle and low income earners, and of course they are worth nothing whatsoever to those persons who are too poor to pay any income tax at all and to those many people, such as old age pensioners and others, who are living on the very edge of subsistence. There is nothing in this bill for the over two million women in Canada who are living below the poverty line, as was so eloquently shown recently in the report on women and poverty published by the National Council on Welfare.

There has been some talk in various circles that family allowances may perhaps be eliminated. I suggest that far from eliminating family allowances, we should instead close some of these inequitable tax loopholes which exist at present. There are quite a number of these. I indicated there were some 60 loopholes, exemptions, and credits of various sorts.

One example I would give, separately from the question of corporate DREE incentives, is the example of the registered retirement savings plan. This boondoggle has been an annual tax benefit in that the benefits which accrue to those persons who are in the highest tax bracket can be as large as those which accrue to a low income pensioner from his old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement in the course of an entire year. In other words, the tax break that those persons in the top ten per cent of the income bracket receive is greater than the amount of money which we are telling our elderly people they have to live on from old age pensions and guaranteed income supplements.

The statistics are indeed disturbing. In 1976 the top 10 per cent income bracket received some 69 per cent of all benefits from the RRSP. So we see that these benefits are concentrated at the very top of the income scale, and in fact some $7 of every $10 went to the top 10 per cent of tax filers. I refer to tax filers, of course, because those persons who did not file income tax returns received nothing.

I would also draw to the attention of the House that in fact in terms of the over-all tax expenditures, the entire package of loopholes and boondoggles that exist and that are being continued by ministers on the other side of the House, by and large go to those in upper income levels and do not benefit to the same extent those persons who are middle and low income earners in our society. Of the $1.8 billion increase in tax expenditures between 1974 and 1976, only $1 in $10 went to the lower income 50 per cent of the tax filers, and $4 of every $10 found their way into the already stuffed pockets of the top 10 per cent of income tax filers.

One rationale which has been given for these particular incentives, as they have been called, is that we should be directing funds into certain desirable areas. No one can quarrel that there are areas in the Canadian economy which should be developed. But there has been no indication that these programs, these loopholes, have had any significant effect in terms of directly channelling money into weak sectors of the Canadian economy.

Why should it be that the rich—and I say "the rich" because they are the only persons who benefit—receive tax breaks for making films in Canada, films which may flop completely? Why should the rich receive tax benefits for drilling for oil? Why should ordinary Canadian taxpayers have to pay for Shell Oil's oil drilling programs and receive nothing whatsoever in terms of a benefit?

Why should the ordinary taxpayer in my constituency of Burnaby, or anywhere in Canada, have to pay substantial amounts of money to provide incentives for the building of apartments through the MURB program which once again is being continued by this bill? Why should the ordinary taxpayer have to pay to assist the rich to invest in various stocks and bonds?

Why should it be that the corporate sector in our country should be paid to instal pollution control equipment in its factories and places of manufacture? Why should Canadian taxpayers have to bear the burden of that kind of expense? Surely pollution control equipment is required wherever there is a hazard to the environment. Surely it is up to the corporation involved. The corporation concerned should not delve into the public purse. It should be considered as a cost of doing business.

For far too long the Inco's of this country have been dipping into the public trough, and the ordinary Canadian taxpayer has had to pay the shot for their pollution control equipment, minimal though it may be. Why should Canadians have to prop up an inefficient corporate structure in this way? Why should we have to pay for films that flop? Who can afford these so-called incentives? Not many of my constituents in Burnaby, not many people in Canada. A very small number of people will benefit from these incentives.

There are incentives in the area of dividend tax credits and so on. The government made some suggestion when it was on the campaign trail that perhaps it might remove the capital gains tax. That would be some $50 million in a giveaway to those persons who are at the very top of the income scale. Those are the people we are talking about, the top 1 per cent of tax filers. These are 1976 figures. It is the top 1 per cent of tax filers, those persons with incomes of over $40,000, who receive 99.3 per cent of all capital gains in the country. The top 1 per cent receive 99.3 per cent. Instead of removing this boondoggle, this loophole to the top 1 per cent, the wealthy 1 per cent, we should adopt the recommendations in the Carter Commission and say that a buck is a buck is a buck. We should tax capital gains at the same rate as any other income.

In closing I should say that there must be some ongoing parliamentary process whereby Canadians, through their elected representatives, can know exactly what are these legislative loopholes, these boondoggles to the rich of which so few of my constituents and other Canadians can take advantage. The same programs are being continued by the Conservative government which, in many cases, they bitterly protested when they were in opposition. It has been said before, and I say it again: progressive in opposition, conservative when it comes to government.

There have been a number of suggestions that perhaps things are getting better over the course of the years. I conclude by pointing out that income distribution has not changed significantly since 1951. I speak only of income distribution, not of wealth. In 1951 the bottom 20 per cent received 4.4 per cent of the income, and the top 20 per cent received 42.8 per cent. The most recent figures show that in 1976 the bottom 20 per cent's share had dropped to 3.9 per cent, and that the top 20 per cent's share had gone up to 44.0 per cent. The top 20 per cent is receiving ten times as much as the bottom 20 per cent, despite all the so-called income security programs which have been brought into play.

The concentration of wealth in our economy has never been adequately studied, but recent studies in the United Kingdom show, for example, that the top 1 per cent of all income earners own over 60 per cent of the wealth in that country. The situation is no different here.

It is rather sad that we should be put in a situation of basically having the same document with the same policies from the same old bunch recycled under the name of a different minister. Surely the time has come when the people of Canada will say, "A pox on both your Houses".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Surely the time will come in the very near future when Canadians will recognize that both the Conservatives and Liberals are bankrupt when it comes to economic policy. It is only by electing a New Democratic Party government that there will be any real equity, any fundamental changes which will assist the ordinary people of Canada instead of the corporate friends of the ministers opposite and of the Liberal members on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): I must inform the House that if the minister speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to give any ringing endorsement to this piece of legislation before us. This legislation will speak for itself. If it speaks at all, it will speak for itself. It arises out of the last budget of my predecessor. I can agree with many of the provisions. In any event, the law was considered to be changed in most of these items as of the date the budget was brought down. The taxpayers of Canada have been assuming that many of these provisions have been the law since November 16, 1978. Unfortunately the legislation was not brought before the House sooner. Unfortunately it was not dealt with last November or December, January, February or March before the House dissolved.

It was our duty to decide whether we should go forward with it. We decided that we should go forward with it because it would be unfair to the taxpayers of Canada not to go forward with it, in addition to the fact that many of the measures in any event will be beneficial to many taxpayers.

I want to congratulate the hon. member who just finished his maiden speech. Certainly he has a maiden pair of lungs. I can assure him of that. I am sure he will make himself heard with great distinction in this House. He already has in question period. It is always of interest to see a new young ideologue come before the House with such certainty as to what is right and what is wrong with the tax system of Canada.

Certainly I agree that we need a lot of clarification of the tax system. If we could ever get the time, certainly it would be very helpful to have a major reform of the provisions, exceptions, subexceptions and distinctions which litter the Income Tax Act so that it is a monstrosity at which one is even afraid to glance. It gives me the cold shivers and the cold shakes to even contemplate the Income Tax Act, much less the amendments we are now moving before the House. What can be done about it? If one adopted the cool, methodical, logical approach of members of the NDP, of course we would have a very simple Income Tax Act. We would just make out a cheque every year and turn our income over to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Indeed that would have the great virtue of simplicity, but I do not know what kind of an economic system we would have in this country afterwards.

• (2030)

As for me, I prefer the system we now have, even though it is littered with many imperfections, to a system of simple perfection whereby we entrust everything to the social democrats of this country to spend as they see fit, and they know better how to spend it than the ordinary individual in this country who earns the income, the private sector which creates the income we are now spending here. I cannot say that I agree with the views expressed by that gentleman, although there is lots of area for reform and change in our Income Tax Act.

I really do not have any more to say in this connection. I do not want to arouse members of the House, because that seems to induce them to speak to inordinate lengths, as I used to do when I was on the opposition side. I simply say that if members have suggestions to make that we can adopt, we would love to adopt them. If we cannot adopt them now we will consider them for the future. As we go through this bill in the Committee of the Whole House I am sure we are going to hear some suggestions, particularly from our brethren to the—is it the right there; to my right, those left-footers over in the corner. I am sure they will have many worth-while suggestions. I hope we can give them the information that they will be seeking to prove their points. I must say that sometimes they do have a point. On that tone, Mr. Speaker, I hope we can get through the Committee of the Whole this evening, and I would urge second reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: The House in committee of the whole on Bill C-17. Shall clause 1 carry?

On clause 1—

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, it is with a certain astonishment that I heard the Minister of Finance state in his opening remarks that he did not intend to give any ringing endorsement to the bill he is sponsoring in the House tonight. I was astonished and I even found that it was not very becoming for the minister to say that. I want to ask him whether he is taking responsibility for this bill or whether he is speaking to it for the sake of it. Just what is his attitude concerning this bill?

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to sink into that trap; a trap that can be sunk into. If we are presenting this bill to the House, that means we are supporting the bill. I am still entitled to say that I am not supporting it with full enthusiasm. It has not got my full enthusiasm and backing as though I was the author of this bill. I am not the author of this bill. This bill arises out of the last budget. Some sections of it I agree with enthusiastically, and in respect of other sections my enthusiasm is muted. Or course I will not be disclosing to members of the House which parts are muted and which are not. This bill has my support or I would not be introducing it, but I am not claiming pride of authorship. I am not the author of this bill.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister's answer is still more astonishing. Since he is introducing the bill, he is presumed to be the author. Yet he seems to be trying to dissociate himself from the bill in this debate. I must remind him that his feelings and enthusiasm are irrelevant and it seems to me that if he takes responsibility for a bill he should spare us his enthusiasm or his lack of it. Let him simply introduce it to the House and ask us with all the conviction he can muster to vote either for it or against it.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. lady does not understand. When this government came into office on June 5, 1979, it was faced with a situation where the previous government had introduced a budget on November 16, 1978. That budget made certain changes in the taxation laws affecting all Canadians, particularly those who pay taxes, and those provisions were set to go into effect the night of the budget. The people of Canada thereafter conducted their affairs on the basis that the provisions of that budget had become law, so that when we took office on June 5 we were faced with the situation where for December, January, February, March, April, May and June the taxpayers of Canada had assumed that the provisions in the budget of my predecessor of November 16, 1978, had become law.

As a matter of fact, there are still some thousands of tax returns from 1978 which have not yet been dealt with by the Department of National Revenue because those taxpayers chose to take an option that they be assessed on the basis of the budget that was delivered on November 16, 1978. The Department of National Revenue cannot now deal with those particular income tax returns until the House passes this particular legislation, if the House does pass it.

Some thousands of Canadian taxpayers have acted on the basis that this bill is already passed, as they were entitled to do after the budget of November 16, 1978. I therefore had the task of deciding and recommending to the government whether we should go forward with the provisions and measures that had not been gone forward with by the previous government from November 16 until the House was dissolved in March. We had to decide whether we should go forward with them. We took the responsible course that we would go forward with those provisions, that we owed a duty to the Canadian taxpayer who was conducting his affairs on the basis that the budget of November 16 meant what it said, and that these provisions would be carried into the law as had always been the case. Therefore we decided to go forward with these provisions, with two exceptions.

There are some minor changes in this legislation. We have made a change in the small business treatment for certain corporations, and I will come to that later on in this bill. In the excise and sales tax legislation there was a change. However, we made the decision that since the people of Canada were proceeding on the assumption that the budget of November 16 was in effect we would carry on and ask the House to pass it. We assumed that in undertaking that duty and responsibility the official opposition would assist us because it was their legislation and their budget we were asking the House to pass. I am still assuming that members of the official opposition will assist us.

I am not expecting that members in the other group down in the corner, members of the New Democratic Party who did not prepare the budget, who had nothing to do with it and who obviously do not agree with much of it, are going to assist or help in passing this bill at all. Nor am I expecting them to understand that I am carrying out a responsibility I did not have to carry out, or that I could have caused confusion throughout the tax system in Canada by saying last July that we were not going to carry out some of these provisions in the budget of the past Liberal administration.

We are asking the House to go forward with this legislation, which means that I am supporting the legislation. If I did not I would not introduce it to the House. I certainly have the right to say that I am doing that with some muted enthusiasm, that I am not the author of this bill, and only in some technical sense could I be called the author of it. I am carrying out a responsibility to the proper functioning of government in Canada by putting this before the House and asking the House to pass it, and that is all I am doing.

● (2040)

Mrs. Sauvé: I simply want to indicate to the minister that I understand everything, and even a little more than he does. Since he made two changes to that bill, he could have made some others. Consequently, he is the presumed author of that bill. He gave very long explanations to dissociate himself once again from the bill he brings forward in the House without enthusiasm. I should like to make one last remark. The Minister of Finance is now fulfilling his responsibilities but without any enthusiasm, just to give the people of Canada what they expect.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Drummond.

Mr. Pinard: Can the hon. minister say why he made only two changes?

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of reasons. Some of these provisions I would support in any event. Changes in the others would cause a lot of confusion in the tax system of Canada and to Canadian taxpayers, and so on. The simplest thing to do is to pass these bills with as few changes as possible. That is what we are now asking the House to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, are there any particular changes the minister could have made which would have given him reason to smile a little and be a little happier and which would have enabled him not to say to the House that he is putting forward a bill which he has to support because it is his bill but that he is not very happy to do so? Are there any changes he could have made to that bill which would have encouraged him to say that he supports it without any reservations?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Chairman, I would also like to remind the minister that he could show a little more enthusiasm about introducing these tax measures. It is probably the only time they will be worth some enthusiasm because the next time he introduces tax measures in the House they will really be his own.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I am saving my real enthusiasm for my own budget. Why should I exhibit some enthusiasm for the budget of another minister of finance in another party? I am not going to. My enthusiasm will be saved for the budget I bring down before this House, naturally.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Chairman, in that case, I wonder why the minister does not take the trouble to tell us which provisions of this measure he finds unacceptable, which ones he does not agree with, which ones prevent him from showing some enthusiasm as expected, since he is the one responsible for them?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Drummond.

[Mrs. Sauvé.]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, when we put questions to the minister, we expect to get some answers. If he does not feel up to answering our questions he must understand that this cannot go on very long at the committee stage. The member for Labelle has asked a very precise question: which provisions of this measure does he consider satisfying and which ones does he hesitate to endorse. It is a very simple question and it deserves an answer.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I would have thought that the hon. gentleman on the opposite side has been here long enough to know that if I am sponsoring this bill, I am sponsoring all the clauses of the bill. I have no intention of telling him what I am enthusiastic about and what I am not enthusiastic about. I am sponsoring this bill, and the clauses go before the House with my support as they have to. I have explained why I am doing it.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, before the party opposite brays this bill through, I wonder if it might be possible to explain to hon. members present in this committee precisely what the purpose of this particular clause is, what its effect is, and what the cost is to the treasury. We have some objection to it. It provides for a partial write-off of certain charges on land which are incurred by developers. I think it would be of interest to the House to have an explanation from the minister on what is in this particular clause, rather than having these things go through without the Canadian public understanding them at all.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, Section 10 of the act deals with inventories. Subsection 10(1.1) deals with land included in the inventory, for example, the land of a land developer. This particular subsection provided that interest and property taxes relating to undeveloped land or included as part of the cost of the land held as inventory—such expenses will not be deductible in the year they are incurred. As a part of the cost of the land, interest and property taxes were deducted only in the year in which the land was sold. The budget proposed a change in the treatment of carrying charges on land. After November 16, 1978, such costs are to be deductible on a current basis. This is dealt with in the amendment to subsection 18(2) of the act, in clause 6 of the bill. As a result of that amendment subsection 10(1.1) of the act is no longer required. It is clause 6, however, that really deals with this particular manner.

Mr. Rae: While we are here, Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us what this will cost?

Mr. Crosbie: About $30 million.

Mr. Rae: Thirty million. Is the minister saying that that is going to the developers of this country? Is that right?

Mr. Crosbie: This will be a tax concession to land developers so that they can deduct the carrying charges on their land.

Mr. Rae: Of $30 million?

Mr. Crosbie: It will cost the Canadian government $30 million in the full year. I should clarify that, however. It is not that they are going to get something new; they are going to get it quicker.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, one of the most important factors in the increased cost of living in the last 10 or more years has been the very dramatic increase in the price of housing and the cost to the ordinary citizen of buying or renting a house. In the cost of housing, the cost of land has gone up substantially more than the cost of the actual house.

If there is one group in this country that has done very well, it is the large land developers. Their profits have increased astronomically. I cannot understand why we are extending their privileges so that they need not pay taxes on money borrowed to buy land which they will not use for three, five or ten years from now. By that time the land will be worth much more than it is now. We are permitting them to do that by allowing them to charge the interest on the money borrowed as a legitimate business expense.

I cannot think of any way better calculated to encourage them to expand their operations so that they can milk the people of Canada more than they have done in the past, than the kind of amendment the minister is proposing. It is just another rip-off in the long list of rip-offs we have permitted to developers in this country.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, that is not the case at all. This amendment is in response to the findings of the Greenspan report. I think I mentioned Mr. Greenspan in the House yesterday. He is the Liberal lawyer from Toronto who did a report for a federal-provincial task force studying the land development process in Canada. He is supportive of the mortgage interest and tax credit plan that we have proposed. He had an excellent article on this in the Globe and Mail which I can recommend to hon. gentlemen. He made the finding that this should be done.

If these costs are made currently deductible, they should afford the land development industry an increased cash flow and give them the opportunity to plan and carry out more projects in Canada.

If hon. members of the NDP are interested in getting more housing, getting land developed and having Canadians housed at an economic cost, this is an amendment that they will support. It is not a rip-off, nor any of the things they have described. It is assistance to the land development industry to improve their cash flow. It is something they would have received in any event but they would have had to wait longer for it. It is not in the category of a rip-off. The same kind of tax treatment is given to developers in the United States.

By the way, Mr. Chairman, clause 6 ensures that carrying charges on land held by speculators do not get similar treatment. It is only on land held by a land developer, somebody who is developing land, that gets this treatment.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, because the so-called developers are taking their money, going to California and investing it in other countries where they can make big bucks, I do not see how the minister can stand up and tell this House that by giving this $30 million away to these developers it will put low income Canadians into housing. The problem is not the fact that they are going to build a house, it is whether people can afford to pay for the bloody homes. That is the problem. I know this is lifting mortgage interest deductibility to new heights; it is a mortgage interest deductibility for developers. It seems to me this is one way that they can write off the cost of the money borrowed to buy the land under the guise of developing it. As far as I am concerned I do not see how that will be helpful to Canadians.

The minister said that he feels somehow morally committed to this particular budget brought in by his predecessors, and we must all keep in mind that the minister is a recycled Liberal so it should not be difficult for him to make this quantum leap of credibility. Can he tell us that if he drops that particular clause, for example, that somehow or other we will not get housing for Canadian people? I do not think he should go along with a rip-off scheme that his buddies in the Liberal party designed for their corporate friends. I think he should come clean with the Canadian people on that one.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman speaks with his usual moderation, and I note his comments. However, I do not believe the hon. gentleman understands the situation. If you are a real estate developer, the money does not just leap into your hands. You have to take risks, you have to invest, you have to put your money out, you have to pay interest on the money borrowed, and property and municipal taxes have to be paid. These are costs to you in your development.

If this clause is not passed the situation is this: these costs can generally only be deducted when you have made a sale of the land, that is, when you have developed it and divided it up and sold it. These costs interfere with cash flow and you can only recover them when the land is sold. This provision simply provides that you can deduct these currently. In other words, you do not have to wait until the land is sold to deduct them. You can deduct them earlier than that. All you are doing is deducting something that you had to wait a longer time to deduct. This enables you to sell your land cheaper and to sell lots for less.

It is not any rip-off. There is no crime involved. The real estate developers of this country are not all criminals, frauds or crooks—there might be one or two who are not 100 per cent, as there are in every group, but I do not see why they should be attacked as rip-off artists and all the rest just because there is a suggestion that provision should be made to help them to improve their cash flow position in order to lower the cost of developed land.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, nobody said that they were doing anything illegally. It is fairly obvious that this is legalized pickpocketing.

Since the minister said all of these things, which he has described in this particular clause, have resulted in these people developing land and turning it back to people at reasonable costs, has his department done any study to see if that is happening, that land is coming into production in terms of house building at reasonable costs? All indications are that they have gone out of sight. For example, in the municipality of Toronto you cannot get a house under $70,000. Even in an area like my own, you do not touch a home for under $55,000. How can a person making $13,000 a year afford to own a home in Canada? Yet, we find that that is still one of the great incentives in this country of ours, that home ownership is still very attractive to Canadians. If that is not doing what it is supposed to do, then all we are doing is allowing legalized pickpocketing of Canadian taxpayers as a whole.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, as far as I know the Department of Finance has done no additional studies on this. A study was done by a federal-provincial task force headed by Mr. Greenspan, a Toronto lawyer who is very familiar with the real estate business. He studied this question, and it is his recommendation. So the hon. gentleman can relax. Everything is all right. There was a royal commission study and a report made. I do not think he needs to worry himself any more about it. Let us get this provision passed so the hon. gentleman will not have indigestion.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister has said it—there is nothing like getting Mr. Greenspan, a man who is a friend of the developers, to do the study. It is like giving the Avon route here in Kanata to the son of Sam. It seems to me that is exactly the kind of thing that concerns us on this side of the House. Since developers have been operating under this particular clause, has the minister studied the effect this clause has had on the housing market? In effect, is it doing the things that Mr. Greenspan said it would do for his friends?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, we have done no studies. If the House passes this provision then we will certainly be keeping an eye on it to see whether it is effective or not, and what the results of it are.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions for the minister. It is interesting to note that the minister is taking his advice from Liberal economists who are friends of the real estate industry.

I spoke earlier about the question of tax expenditures. Can the minister tell this House whether he feels the $30 million which this program will be costing the people of Canada is best spent in this assistance to land developers, or does he think that perhaps the $30 million would not be better spent, for example, in making retroactive the provisions for spouse's allowance, for assisting the fishermen of Newfoundland, or perhaps assisting in defraying the costs of urban rapid transit? I ask the minister to confirm to this House that it is his view that this assistance to developers takes a higher priority than that particular aid?

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, that has all the appearance of a loaded question to me. I think there are many, many thousands of demands upon the revenue of Canada. If I had my way I would like to see billions upon billions spent on the needs and requirements of the fishermen of Newfoundland. If I had no one else to bother me, that is where all the money would be going. We would be putting it right into Newfoundland and forgetting the rest of the country. The first priority would be St. John's West; second, the province of Newfoundland, and after that the rest of you. That is, if I did not have to consider anything else and if I could only consider the real priority. But there are thousands of other priorities. One is metropolitan areas, and land development in metropolitan areas, urban areas, and land development across the country.

All the industries we have in this country have to be considered along with the co-operatives, the credit societies and the unions. The whole mosaic has to be considered in our taxation system. In a budget of $52,600 million—and there would be a lot more if we included the tax expenditures but I do not have the figure ready tonight—we would have to add on another $8 billion to $10 billion in tax expenditures. As a result of this particular provision, $25 million to $30 million is the amount by which federal revenues would be reduced in 1979-80. That revenue would have been lost eventually under the present system. This is only to help improve the cash flow of the land developer.

Whenever you ask should "X" have priority over "Y", I can think of a lot of "Y's" that I would like to see have priority over this, but it is a balanced taxed system and it has to be a balanced government. There are a whole lot of provisions in this tax act, and you can ask me the same questions, but everytime I will tell you I think it should be spent on the fishermen, that this would have top priority for them. However, my views cannot carry the day. We have to have a balanced system.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Chairman, would the minister please indicate again, and I will ask the question again because it was not answered, whether he is prepared to agree that instead of giving $30 million to assist land developers, he is prepared to put this money into programs that would make the spouse's allowance retroactive?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had just answered the question. If I have not answered the question, I apologize to the hon. gentleman. But no, I do not think it should go into retroactive payments of the spouse's allowance. I do not think it should go into retroactive payments of salaries for members of this House, or into doubling of salaries. I do not think it should go into anything else. I think it should be exactly where it is in this bill and, if we pass it, this revised treatment will reduce our revenues. We are not spending the money. It will reduce the revenues we take in by $25 million to $30 million in an attempt to help the development of land throughout Canada. Therefore, lots will cost less and developers will be encouraged. They will get the same treatment as in the United States, and we will carry out the recommendations of a royal commission report.

• (2100)

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): One final question, Mr. Chairman. This question was asked previously in another fashion. Can the minister tell us what evidence, if any, he has that this money which is being forgone, the $30 million, will produce the effect he says it will produce? What evidence does the minister have for that?

Mr. Crosbie: Only time will tell.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Is the minister prepared to answer the question?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, only time will tell.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a legitimate philosophical difference of opinion between the minister and this party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We agree.

Mr. Rae: I hear from the intelligentsia on the other side that I am right. That difference is very important.

In the development industry, the picture in the minds of members opposite is obviously of a highly competitive industry which needs to be assisted in terms of cash flow, and recommends the assistance of the government and taxpayers of Canada. It is very clear from studies commissioned by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that the facts are quite the reverse. The question is very fundamental—whether we give $60 million to Ford to set up a factory in Windsor, whether we give substantial sums of money in super depletion allowances to the oil industry, or whether we give speedy, exaggerated depreciation of capital cost allowances such as we are doing in the development industry.

There is a very legitimate difference of opinion on this side of the House. We say this is a very lousy way to spend public money. If we are to have a free enterprise system, let's put a little freedom back into it. Let's get you free enterprisers out of the public trough. Let's see the freedom put back in the system. Let's see that initiative and urge to provide for the competitive system.

We do not see that. We see a highly concentrated, highly oligopolistic system with a few large companies controlling more and more, whether it be land, automobiles, oil or whatever. We see those same companies coming back to the government saying, "Give us another handout, another favour, another $30 million, another $60 million, another speed-up of our depreciation." They want to wipe out their costs in two years. They do not want to pay more taxes.

We are hammering this. The minister can shake his head and others can say this is ideological clap-trap. We are not being ideological. We are looking at this increasing concentration in our society and looking at these large economic units, whether or not they have a personality, as the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount, who gave us a learned discourse on corporate personality this afternoon, said. I do not care if they have a personality or not. All I know is that our tax system is being pillaged by these people.

This is a legitimate question which we will raise in this and other instances. We will insist that it be brought to the attention of the people. We will not allow the bill to go through without it being brought to their attention. If we believe in freedom of information, some of this information should come out. The Canadian people should decide whether we want to have doctors and lawyers putting money into development and not paying taxes. That is a very important question.

We want to have information on the development industry, how it works and where it goes. We are perfectly entitled to have that. With great respect to the minister, we have a different point of view. Our point of view is that it is increasingly senseless for the tax system of this country to be used to subsidize those people who should be able to stand on their own two feet. I used to think there were people in the Conservative party who had that same view, but they do not seem to be around any more. The doctrine of corporate welfare seems to have taken over from the doctrine of free enterprise.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I see nothing wrong with the hon. member having his point of view, or his party having a point of view. This is good. Let us get it on the record. You are against the real estate developers being given any kind of break at all in order to lower the costs of their land. You are against them being allowed to deduct their costs in the year they incur them. They have interest costs. They pay taxes. Why should they not be allowed to deduct those costs in the year in which they incur them? It would help their cash flow. They would be able to buy raw land, develop that land and bring lots on to the market. I understand you are against that. I am in favour of you bringing out these points so that we and everyone else will know where we are opposed and where we disagree. I congratulate you for doing that. I understand your position exactly. In this case you are not correct, but it is a legitimate difference.

Mr. Rose: For the edification of the minister, and for clarification as far as this party is concerned, we are not ignorant of the fact that land costs need to be lowered. What we are concerned about is that despite the gifts out of the public treasury to a fat cat group of developers, we have seen no evidence that the cost of land has been lowered over the years as a result of this.

Large developers control most of the land around our major cities. Viable farmland is constantly being threatened. These are among the most profitable corporations in our country, so profitable that they have money to invest outside our country, yet this government and the members of the official opposition are constantly rushing around in almost feverish disarray to give them more tax benefits. That is what we find unacceptable.

We are not against lowering the cost of land. The minister has already admitted he has no evidence, although he claims this might bring down the cost of land.

I see the government whip. He is making all kinds of rude, obscene gestures as he waddles his way back and forth behind the curtains. Has he ever stood up in this place and made one knowledgeable comment? Not since I have been here, and I have been here as long as he.

What we are concerned about is not whether the government gives the real estate industry some $30 million as a gift for past favours or whatever, but does it or does it not lower the cost of land in this country? Will the purchaser of land receive a direct benefit from this? If the minister can assure us of that, we will be very pleased to vote for this clause.

Mr. Crosbie: In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the man or woman who purchases the land will have a benefit from this. It is not just for the developer. It will help development and those who buy lots. That is our opinion. We will have to wait and see if it has that effect.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I find it interesting that the minister continues to tell us the developers need this extra benefit or incentive in order to operate; that they need to improve their cash flow. We are told they are paying their fair share of taxes.

After we started discussion on this clause, I walked over to the Parliamentary Library to get a book which I would recommend to the minister, entitled "The Developers", by James Lorimer. I want to put on record some of the facts this author obtained from public records that are available. Let me refer to some paragraphs in this book. Mr. Lorimer said, and I quote:

—developers who own income properties are able to avoid paying corporate tax on the profits they make in all the various aspects of the land development business.

They do this precisely through the kind of proposal we find in the bill we are discussing. Mr. Lorimer goes on to illustrate what he means in the following way. He says:

Following its own prescription, Daon—

That's one of the big land developers around the city, —declared profits of $21,558,000 in 1977. It paid no corporate tax at all on these profits. Cadillac Fairview declared profits of $31.5 million in 1977 and paid taxes totalling $1.7 million, an effective rate of tax of about 6 per cent. On declared profits of $8.6 million in 1976, Trizec paid a minuscule $130,000 in tax.

He says:

Since it was established, the land development business has benefited from an arrangement that means that most developers do not now and never have paid substantial amounts of corporate tax on their profits. The actual rate of tax paid by the industry over all is much less than 10 per cent, probably 5 to 6 per cent. Most other industries, of course, pay corporate tax on profits in the range of 40 to 50 per cent.

[Mr. Rose.]

That is precisely the point we are trying to make. Nobody in this party calls the developers criminals, as the minister tried to imply a few moments ago. The developers are doing only what they are permitted to do under the law, and if we have governments which are stupid enough to permit them to pay corporate tax of less than 10 per cent, then, of course, they are going to take advantage of the laws we pass. And going to a lawyer who was appointed by another party when it was in power, going to a lawyer who has intimate connections with the real estate and development industry, seems to me the last place to which a government should turn for advice, not the first place. It is like inviting a fox into a chicken coop and asking him to protect the chickens.

Mr. Lorimer goes on to give a few more illustrations. I should like to put part of what he says on record.

Daon is one developer that reports both its operating profit and its appraisal surplus profit every year. In 1973, Daon reported that it had accumulated appraisal surplus profits totalling $17 million. In 1974, the figure was $21 million, up $4 million in the year. By 1976, the amount was $55 to $60 million, an appraisal surplus profit of about $35 million in two years. In 1977 it was $126 million meaning an appraisal surplus profit of an amazing $66 million that year. Daon's operating profit in 1977, for comparison, was $21.5 million.

The same would be true of Trizec and Genstar and all the other financial wizards who have entered the housing development market and who are making their profit, taking it out of the hide of the ordinary citizen who is trying very hard to do the things he is told every day on the radio, on television and in the newspapers, that he should do—buy a decent, comfortable house for himself and his family.

Keep in mind what the developer does. He goes to the suburbs, he goes to the farmland around a city. I can speak with some personal experience of this, because while Winnipeg has not grown as much as Toronto, Vancouver, Calgary or Edmonton, I know that about a quarter or a third of the people living in houses in my constituency were not there when I was first elected. There were no houses; there were empty fields. There were farmlands there when I was first elected, and that is not so long ago.

Mr. Lorimer calculates that the developer who buys the raw land and puts in the sewers, the water and so on, is making a profit in most cities in Canada of about $20,000 on each lot by the time he sells. Who is paying that money? It is the home purchaser who has to pay—anywhere from $60,000 for a moderately priced home in most Canadian cities to $80,000 or $90,000 or $100,000.

People are putting themselves into debt for their whole lives because of the high cost of housing, and one of the major factors in the high cost of housing in this country is the developer. The developers have done very well, thank you; they have been treated very generously by the people and the governments of Canada. Yet we find the minister coming to this House today and telling us: we have to try to persuade them to do a little more so we are going to give them another tax concession, another $20 million. I say to him that this will not show up in the cost of housing because it has probably been 20 years since there was a year in which a house did not cost between 5 per cent and 10 per cent more than it cost in the previous year.

The minister is compounding the mistakes of former ministers. He is following in the footsteps of former governments. We in the New Democratic Party are not surprised, because we have always felt there is no difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives; the minister is merely demonstrating in this clause that we are correct. What he is saying is that we ought to give more concessions to people who have already done very well. We believe there are better ways, more direct ways, of providing housing for people at prices they can afford than by giving further, and unnecessary, concessions to developers.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman cited as his authority Mr. Lorimer. I seem to have heard his name before; I think he belongs in the pantheon of NDP saints and it is therefore no more apt for him to call on Mr. Lorimer as his authority than it would be for me or the former minister of finance to call on Mr. Greenspan—it is one man's opinions against another's, it is one study against another. All I can say to the hon. member is that he has made the point he wants to make well, but we just don't happen to agree with him.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not want to prolong this debate, but I say to the minister that he and I may, of course, disagree as to the conclusion we draw from factual material—the hon. gentleman will undoubtedly disagree with Mr. Lorimer about what we ought to do. But the figures I quoted from Mr. Lorimer's book were obtained from official records of the companies concerned, annual reports which the companies publish showing the profits they make, the taxes they paid, the surpluses, the undistributed reserves, and so on.

If the minister wants to disagree with Mr. Lorimer or with the conclusions we draw, that is quite legitimate, but I do not think he should suggest that the figures I have cited are not based on the facts. The figures I used and which I cited from Mr. Lorimer's book are based on the records the companies have made public.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, from what I have heard so far, I understand that the minister does not like to hear from experts, whether they be Liberal or people who support my party. Perhaps I can give the minister a concrete example of how he can do something to help lower the cost of housing. Maybe I can use an example in the city of Thompson. The minister should know that city well because in April of 1978 he went there and gave a good nominating speech for the incumbent Conservative candidate. Over at Government House the other night I thanked the minister for that speech because I think it gave me at least 3,000 votes.

Mr. Knowles: Was that the pussycat speech?

Mr. Murphy: That was the pussycat speech, a very famous speech.

Since the minister knows the city of Thompson so well, he should also know that there is land banking in that city. We have had it ever since the city became a city. As a result, two years ago, in the face of all the cost of developing a lot in the north we were in a position to sell our lots for $8,700. Try to do that in other cities. Try to do it where the government is giving developers all this money. It cannot be done.

Do not bring in Liberal policies. Do not bring in policies which are just as bad as Liberal policies. Bring in something new, something which has been tried in such places as Thompson. Do something for the people of this country. Do not give us a bunch of boloney. I would not use the words of the hon. member for Nickel Belt. Give us the truth, something we can really use to lower the price of houses.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the minister has pointed out that the provision we are now discussing is in this bill to permit the deduction of interest and property taxes on land held for development or resale by taxpayers in the ordinary course of their business. I would be interested in knowing just how much these interest expenses will be increasing in the next year because of the higher interest rates which have come into effect since the Conservative government took office and, as a result, what the additional revenues lost to the federal government will be because of the higher deductions which will be claimed by developers because of these higher interest costs.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman would ask the hon. member for Saint-Maurice what those figures were when he was minister of finance and when he was originating this bill—and interest rates went up 3.25 per cent during 1978—I dare say he would find that the figures would come out about the same because interest rates have gone up 3.25 per cent in 1979 just as they went up in 1978 when the hon. gentleman was in my position. I think the hon. member should be able to get that information quite easily.

With respect to the suggestion of the hon. member for Churchill, the purpose of this change, which was recommended by the Greenspan task force and which caused this change in the law making the law as it was before, was to help the small developer. This is a provision which is to help small developers in Canada, not large developers. Large developers do not need any help. They already have ample cash flow. They can already do very well. This is a provision to help hundreds and hundreds of small developers in Canada get the cash flow necessary to carry on their businesses. If hon. gentlemen are against the small developer, they should vote against this provision.

If hon. gentlemen are against this provision, let us have a vote on the matter and settle it one way or the other. We believe it is necessary and legitimate and that it will help the small developers of Canada.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, is the minister telling us that he does not have figures he can give us at this time regarding the revenue lost to the government which will be created by the increase in interest rates since his government took office? It is not enough to tell us what happened before the election. Let us hear what has happened since the minister took office. That is what we have to talk about now.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the figure. How could I possibly know how much real estate development there will be this year, how much activity there is going to be, what loans are going to be like, what property taxes they have to pay, or how much they are going to have to pay in interest? If interest rates have gone up, and we know they have, presumably their interest costs will be a bit higher, and the figure here might not be $25 million to $30 million. It might be a bit more; I have no way of knowing.

I am not a fortune teller, so I cannot answer that question, as the hon. member knows. He thinks he is making some clever point about interest rates. He knows that interest rates have gone up because we have no reasonable alternative. He has not been able to suggest a reasonable alternative, so what is the point of his question? The point of his question is that the hon. gentleman thinks it is smart. Well, fine. If he thinks it is smart, he has made his point.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, there is a reasonable alternative. It is the one which was presented by his leader on March 2 when he spoke as leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. He said that a Progressive Conservative government would bring interest rates down. I suggest that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister ought to get together. I think they are both in the inner cabinet; or have we missed something? Is the Minister of Finance no longer in the inner cabinet? Surely the officials in the department at the time this budget was presented made some forecasts of the revenue effects. It is my understanding that they do that with respect to all proposals in a budget. Surely it is possible to update those forecasts. Can the minister not give us the information?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, the estimate which was prepared by the department is that it might cost $25 million to $30 million, and I think that is still a good estimate, despite the increases in interest rates. So, I stick by the estimate, $25 million to $30 million.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I just want to note that while the minister wishes to stick by that estimate, I am sure that some elementary calculation by his officials will show that the revenue lost to the Canadian taxpayer will go up substantially because of the interest rate increases which have gone into effect since the minister became Minister of Finance.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, first I must comment on the arrogance of the Minister of Finance. I know that that was the favourite tune hon. members opposite sang when they were in opposition. They sang about the arrogance of the government across the way at that time, yet I find the minister's attitude arrogant and disinterested. He asks us to get on with it, pass the thing and "Let's go". He tells us not to enter into any meaningful discussion about the implications of this $30 million handout. I think that is very important to keep in mind.

When the Minister of Finance sat on the opposition benches and as he, the happy hacker, and a few others, were official critics of the finance portfolio, they all condemned this budget when it was presented. They even introduced motions of non-confidence. Now the minister is responsible for the finances of this country, and he starts off by saying he wants to be known as Mr. Tough Guy and no more Mr. Nice Guy. This is his first chance to be the Mr. Tough Guy who is concerned about the shekels of this country. Why does he not say to his corporate friends in the development world that they cannot have this $30 million and that it is not in Canada's best interests at the moment? We have a stagnant housing market because of interest rates. Therefore, in effect, we should not be giving the minister's corporate friends something we cannot afford at this time. When the minister gets tough with little people, he has some credibility.

I want to call a spade a spade. We know well that the real estate developers in the city of Toronto wasted considerable amounts of money for the Tory campaign in the last federal election. In effect, that is where that interest lies.

It is not that the minister thinks that for eight months the government went on the old budget and he feels morally committed to continue it. Good heavens, the Conservatives waged a whole campaign against unemployment insurance changes. They were down in eastern Canada arguing against the Liberal government's changes in Bill C-14. When they came to power, the first thing the Conservatives did was to allow the changes to go into effect. How can that be called credibility? How can we say that the Canadian people should not look at this House of Commons as a pile of hypocrisy? The minister has the reins of power in his hands. He can be Mr. Tough Guy with Trizec. The minister says this is for little developers. How can we separate the little developers from the big developers?

Mr. Rae: With a crowbar.

Mr. Rodriguez: My colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, says, "With a crowbar".

An hon. Member: You can't pry them apart.

Mr. Rodriguez: In effect we are getting a concentration of developable land in few hands, and in many parts of this country there is no legislation to protect farmland. There are no laws to ensure that farmland is protected. That is a very important problem, and I challenge the Minister of Finance to show how tough he is. There is more than just this $30 million. There is a whole pile of giveaways in this bill which we will be dealing with in Committee of the Whole tonight. I want the minister to live up to the image of Mr. Tough Guy he has cast for himself. I want to see him go to town on these particular giveaways in this budget.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance indicated that the benefits of this tax concession for developers would go to small developers. I wonder if he is aware of the fact that most of the major oil companies, with the tremendous revenues they have been generating this year in the United States and Canada, are going into housing developments, and whether he has taken that into consideration. Proposals have already been made by the Conservative energy caucus, by the Canadian Petroleum Association, and last evening by the Premier of Alberta, that they want to move energy prices up dramatically. The Premier of Alberta suggested that they go right to world prices this next year.

In the United States, with the rapid increase in energy prices, the oil companies have shown profits of up to 211 per cent over the same quarter in the last year. This is building up as the rapid increase takes place. Is any other consideration being given to the fact that large amounts of these petro revenues will be syphoned off into urban and land development and whether it is really in the best interests of the country to be giving special concessions to oil companies which are generating these huge revenues?

In the third quarter of this year we see that the profits of oil companies have gone up from 38 per cent to 66 per cent for four of the majors. All the argumentation that has been brought forth regarding increased oil revenues is that it is going to be ploughed back into the high Arctic and the frontier areas, and it seems to me that if that is not going to take place we can hardly justify the massive increases in the price of crude oil and products from the refining processes.

I wonder if the minister has taken that into account in putting before the House tonight this special concession for land development, whether an excess profit tax will be brought in if the government goes ahead with the massive increase in the oil price of $3, $4, $7 or $8, as has been suggested by his caucus and by the Premier of Alberta. Can the minister tell us just what has been taken into account in that regard?

Mr. Crosbie: It is the first time I have heard any suggestion that oil moneys are behind this clause in the bill. This clause originated in the budget of November 16, 1978, which was brought by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice. Whether he had in mind the oil industry at the time he brought it in, whether he had it in mind that oil money was going to go into the real estate development market, I do not know. It has not crossed my mind for one minute that this was a sinister plot for the oil industry to get some tax concessions. I certainly never imagined that.

What it is is that real estate developers up to now were only allowed to deduct the cost of interest on their loans and the cost of property taxes when they had sold the land in question. When they have sold the land in question, they are allowed to deduct these as costs. They have to carry it the rest of the time, so it is an added burden on them. Small real estate developers, as was found by the Greenspan inquiry, had to carry that burden, which interfered with their cash flow. Their business is developing lands and lots for sale, and therefore interest and municipal taxes are a legitimate expense of that business. This clause proposes that those taxes and interest expenses be recognized as ordinary expenses and that they be allowed to deduct them on an annual basis, which would help their cash flow position.

Clause 66 in the bill ensures that the current charges held by speculators be maintained and that they do not benefit from that kind of treatment. If you just bought some land hoping it will go up in value and if you hold on to it for a few years, you will not get this treatment. But if you are in the business of developing real estate, it is legitimate. If you are a speculator, you will not get it.

I know of no evidence or suggestion that this will in any way be of help to the oil and gas industries, or that the revenues will have anything to do with them. This provision is to help the small real estate developer improve his cash flow position. If there is a better way of developing real estate, that is fine. Perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite believe the government should develop it all. They believe in the state doing it. That is an option, but it is not an option we will take. When hon. gentlemen take over, when they get the reins into their hands, the old reins in their paws, they can eliminate the private real estate development industry, do away with it, squash it flat, knock it out, make sure it cannot survive, make sure it has no cash flow, make sure only the state and public agencies have the ability to carry on real estate development. When that time comes, they can do so, but at present for the most part it is in private hands in Canada, and this is a legitimate amendment to help the small real estate developer.

I do not know how much more reasonable I can be about it. If hon. gentlemen opposite want to vote against it, I say, fine, vote against it, and those who want to vote for it, let them vote for it, and those who want to discuss it, let them discuss it. In no way are we trying to force this thing through. We could not do it any way, and therefore it is a dialogue and I am delighted to hear from the hon. gentlemen. I wish I had realized I had the reins in my hand. There are a lot of things I would have done if I had known it then.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, there must have been a reason why, as the minister has told us, the situation has now reverted to the way it was before. Can the minister tell us the reason why the situation was changed and now it has to be brought back? Was there some purpose in the earlier change?

Mr. Crosbie: I cannot tell the hon. member, except that the Liberal administration had it one way before and they changed it to another way. Then they introduced a budget reverting back to the original way. My colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, is not here to help me with this bill. Where is he when I need his assistance?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles: It's your baby now.

Mr. Rae: Has it occurred to the minister that perhaps he is helping more by staying away than by being here?

Obviously we are going to vote against this clause and against clause 6—I do not think it is a secret to the minister—but I want to put the minister on notice that, first of all, we look forward to intensive study by this government as by the previous government, on the question of inflation in land prices. We look forward with eager anticipation to the minister's coming to this House and telling us what the inflationary developments in land have been over the past years, and we look forward with eager anticipation to his confirming his thesis that he is giving assistance to a highly competitive industry and that the immediate impact of these measures will be to reduce the cost of land to the average Canadian consumer, and of course, this will be reflected to lower housing costs which we can also anticipate as a result of the proposals.

Earlier we had spoken about the nature of the development industry and the concentration in the housing industry. The minister is saying that here he is giving something for the smaller developer. That is not what is happening because there is no selectivity here, and this is the problem with the whole tax spending system. There is no selectivity, no direction of tax dollars, no control over whether this provision will have the effect the minister says he wants it to have. It is going to everybody.

I would be willing to place a moral wager with the minister that the result of this measure will be that the amount of concentration in the development industry will be increased and not decreased, as sure as it snows in the wintertime. If the minister thinks he will increase competition in any industry by giving a tax incentive which applies right across the board, he is dreaming. If he did it in the car industry, he would be laughed out of Detroit, Windsor, Oakville and Oshawa. If he is serious about increasing competition in our society, he would not be serving under a Prime Minister who in a May, 1979, interview in Executive magazine said that competition was not a priority of the Conservative government, that competition was being put on the back burner by his government. It was not something which was causing him a great deal of concern. I do not think competition is something which gives this government concern at all.

The minister is shedding crocodile tears when he talks about giving help to the small developer. He is not being realistic about the structure of the development industry. He is kidding himself and members of his party if he thinks this will do anything for the little person or the little developer in our society. It will not work that way. I think the minister should realize it.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, earlier on in reply to a question the minister referred to the fact that for some reason we wanted government ownership of the land. That is what we were talking about when giving an example of how land can be cheaper in northern cities, even without the type of giveaway the minister is presently presenting. I should like to remind the minister that the mayor of Thompson is a Conservative, that the majority of the council is Conservative. He should know. He met them all. Those people do not want to privatize our land. They know what is a good deal. They do not have to sell everything to private ownership. They want to find good, cheap land for the people of Thompson. I wish the minister had the same concern here.

In reply to a question which I did not ask, the minister said that he was helping small developers by the presentation being made at this time. Does the minister have the facts at his disposal to prove that this is not another giveaway to large corporations? Can he prove that it will not do what the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood said? Will it not help to increase the concentration of ownership? Does he know the incomes of the developers who are presently using this giveaway? Does he know what the breakdown is?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister. He has indicated his concern with the small developer, as he calls him. Can the minister indicate to the committee what proportion of the entire land development industry is made up of what he calls small developers? If the hon. minister is so concerned about small developers and not the big ones, can he indicate whether he is prepared to introduce an amendment to this particular provision so that it will apply only to small developers?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, this clause stands by itself. What is correct for one developer is correct for another. The people that this will help most are the small developers, because they have more difficult cash flow problems than the few large developers. As to what the respective numbers are, I would have to make an educated guess. I would say there are many thousands of small real estate developers in Canada and that there are a few dozen large developers. That is my guess. I do not have the statistics here. I did not come supplied with them tonight. I do not know whether we could even obtain them. There are many thousands of small developers. The large developers would number in the dozens. The numbers do not matter because we are amending the law for all real estate developers so that they can deduct on an annual basis legitimate business expenses for developing their land.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have sat here listening with some interest over the past hour or so. A couple of matters popped into my mind. A lot of people in my riding have been without housing for some time. Under neither previous administration or this one, the federal government has not made any distinctive attempt to deal with the housing situation nor with any ongoing income supplements such as unemployment insurance.

Looking back at the comments made by a number of members on the government side and the comments just made by the minister that there are a few thousand developers, why do we not put it in a nutshell so that the Canadian public can understand? Why do we not say that the government is planning to send out cheques to every developer in Canada for $10,000 or $15,000? But the people who need $150 or $160 every two weeks from their unemployment insurance do not get it from the very same government. I think we should deliver the facts to the Canadian public and be quite frank. It is not for small developers. It is not necessarily for big developers. It is for all of them. It is very, very obvious to me that it is patronage. Let us put it in cheque form and mail it from the House today. I think we are quibbling on a clause which should not be passed in a country which is facing economic difficulties.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I have a couple of questions which have been opened up by the great concern expressed by the minister for the small developer. What does the minister mean by a small developer? How big is small?

The Chairman: The hon. minister.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): The hon. minister is not answering the question.

An hon. Member: Was that a question?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Since the hon. minister does not seem to know how big is small when he talks about small developers, aside from the numbers involved—and there may be many thousands—what proportion of the development industry in terms of percentage do these so-called small developers actually hold? I know in my own constituency of Burnaby over 80 per cent of the development land is controlled by the five big land development companies. What proportion in terms of percentage do these so-called small developers occupy of the land development market?

Mr. Crosbie: How big is small? How small is big? How big is little? How little is big? The hon. member's guess is as good as mine. We could adopt the definition of small business and say that real estate companies are less than the definition of a small business in the Income Tax Act; that that is a small developer. That would probably be suitable.

I really do not see the rest of the point of the hon. member. If the hon. gentleman has five big developers in Burnaby or wherever it is, and if he does not have any small ones, that is unfortunate. I am sorry. I know down in Newfoundland we have a lot of small developers. We do not have too many big ones. But we are not as big as British Columbia. We are little. Where British Columbia is big, we are little. Where it is great, we are small. What is small? What is great? The small is greater than the big in my opinion in the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Chairman, the people of Burnaby will be interested to hear that this proposal does nothing for them, but helps the big developers in Burnaby.

I ask the minister whether he is prepared to limit this particular benefit to small developers, however he defines them? Is the minister's answer "No"? The minister says no.

An hon. Member: It should be answered for the record.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I just want to get down to specifics with the minister. Can he name a small developer that would go out of existence if he did not get help from this $30 million handout? Can he name one small developer?

I think the minister said that the developer does not have to sell the property, that he does not have to sell the land in order to enjoy the write-off. Can he confirm that? Will he get it before the sale of the land or after the sale of the land?

Mr. Crosbie: I cannot name one small developer that will go out of business if this does not pass. No, I am afraid I cannot do that. There are hundreds of people who will get their building lots hopefully at lesser prices if this goes through, because the land developers' costs will be a bit less and the cash flow will be a bit better. I would suspect there would be hundreds, if not thousands, who might be helped to buy lots. Could the hon. member remind me of his second question?

Mr. Rodriguez: Do they receive the benefit of this concession after the sale of the land?

Mr. Crosbie: No, no. That is the purpose of this concession, as the hon. member calls it. The way it works is that these companies are in business. Every year they have their accounts as they have their year endings. Every 12 months they have a financial statement, they have their revenues and their expenses, and each year they have the interest on the inventory of land. They have their tax expenses in relation to that land although they have not sold the land yet, and they would be allowed to deduct that as a present current expense. That is the only difference. Under the present system they can only deduct those kinds of costs as they sell the land out of their inventory. This helps them with the cash flow situation. They would still have this deduction at a point in time. It is just that they get the deduction at an earlier point, as long as they continue to stay in business.

● (2150)

That is the way I understand it to work. Perhaps I am all wrong, but I think that is how it works. All we are doing here would be allowing them to get this deduction earlier than they are now able to get it, unless they are able to turn over their inventory of land every year. Of course, a lot of them are not able to do that and they have it longer than that.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Clause 2 agreed to; yeas 35; nays, 12.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood rising on clause 5?

Mr. Rae: I am standing in respect of clause 5, Mr. Chairman. Could the minister explain this clause?

Mr. Crosbie: I will try it once. This section 15 of the act deals with a number of shareholder benefits. This particular amendment affects income bonds and income debentures. It is a technical amendment and is not directly related to the major change proposed in the budget in the treatment of those income bonds and term preferred shares dealt with in clause 6. The two subsections that would be affected by this amendment refer to "annual or other periodic amount payable on an income bond". The amendment substitutes the words "interest or dividends" for the expression "annual or other periodic amounts". The change is to clarify the scope of the two subsections. It ensures that only the dividend or the interest and not any repayment of the principal will be treated as a dividend in the hands of the recipient. That is what the change is about.

Mr. Knowles: What does it mean?

Mr. Crosbie: That's a good question. It is to ensure that you cannot get repayment of the principal, but that you can only get under this section of the act the dividend or the interest, and the repayment of the principal of an income bond or a term preferred share is not treated as interest or dividend.

Mr. Rae: I do not want to make a long speech on this subject, Mr. Chairman, but—

An hon. Member: But I will.

Mr. Rae: The hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount gave an interesting speech this afternoon, some of which I agreed with and some of which I disagreed with, and the minister commented on the complexity of the Income Tax Act.

I will be quite blunt with the minister. My concern is that this House sitting as a Committee of the Whole is unable to understand what it is passing. The minister reads out of his brief from his officials. I do not blame him for that. If any one of us on this side were in his chair we would be in exactly the same position, but he is unable to explain to the Canadian taxpayer in simple words the meaning of the changes on which we are all voting. I am not prepared for my part, and I cannot speak for any other member of my party, to accept this package. I am very reluctant to say "ready; aye, ready" to a series of amendments that are extremely complex, which can hardly be understood, and even when we read them with the Income Tax Act are almost impossible to comprehend. Many of us do not understand the instruments that are being described.

The average Canadian does not know what a term preferred bond or an income bond is, and does not have a clue as to what they are or precisely what we are voting on. I am not ashamed to profess ignorance, and I think it would be healthy if all members of this House asked: what the hell is this instrument we are talking about and what are we doing here? I think we all might learn something from this exercise. We are going to end up putting in several pages of amendments to the Income Tax without being able to justify to our constituents what we have been doing. I think we owe it to ourselves to have an explanation as to why we are saying "ready; aye, ready" to a bunch of clauses which have gone through the Department of Finance and which have not been sifted through or homogenized by the Minister of Finance. I think we deserve that process of homogenization by him.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, let me try again to homogenize. The amendment is to replace the expression "an annual or other periodic amount" with the expression "an amount paid as dividend". This has been the wording in this clause, in line with other provisions of the act, and it is to ensure that this subsection does not apply to any repayment of the principal amount of the security. It could be argued, for example, that the annual repayment of principal on a sinking fund issue would constitute "an annual or other periodic amount", and would thus qualify as a dividend. In other words, if this wording is not changed there is a possibility of a mistake in interpretation, and when you pay an annual amount on principal on a sinking fund issue that could be taken to mean "annual or other periodic amount", treated as a dividend and received by another corporation exempt from tax in their hands. The note goes on to suggest that as such a repayment would be exempt from tax in the hands of the corporation, and the corporation would have a loss on the disposal of the income debenture, and this result is clearly unintended. This amendment now before the committee is proposed to do away with the possibility that this unintended effect could occur. It is to clarify this. It is a technical amendment to the act which only lawyers could draft, and I doubt that most of them could even understand it.

Clause 5 agreed to.

• (2200)

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate to the minister that, as I said before, we look forward to the evidence, which was so lacking with the Liberal government and which we consistently looked for, to deal with the problem of concentration in the land and housing industry. We needed a series of clear proposals that would deal with the problem of concentration.

The one point the minister made that I want to respond to, Mr. Chairman, is that somehow we are going to march Canada into some totalitarian future, where all Canadians would wear the same clothes, where there would be no diversity and the state would do everything. That is not the point. The point is that some resources, such as land, might be publicly owned—owned by municipalities, by provinces, by co-operatives, and some might be owned privately. We are the party that wants diversity; we are in favour of diversity. All we are saying is that this determination to give everything to the private sector is a guarantee that there will be concentration and not diversity.

It is precisely because we want diversity in the housing industry, because we want things to be owned by the provinces, by the cities, by co-operatives, by trade union co-operatives, by many many different kinds of groups, that we believe there must be an active public sector—an active government. Merely giving a series of tax benefits to private corporations and private developers does not deal with the problem. It will not lower the price of a single piece of land, and it will not be passed on to the Canadian consumer.

There is no free market that is working in the Adam Smith world which seems to inhabit the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. It does not exist and it is not working.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lefebvre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the hon. member for Burlington or some other member on the other side of the House could tell us if the government intends to bring forth Bill C-17 again tomorrow and if it will be followed by Bill C-18 and Bill C-3, as appears on today's order paper.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to proceed tomorrow with Bill C-17 in Committee of the Whole. Should that bill be completed we will probably move to Bill C-18. In any event, we will give plenty of notice if we are going to move to Bill C-18. I rather suspect, though, that we will spend the better part of tomorrow on Bill C-17.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIRPORTS—POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT OF AIRPORT AT PICKERING—EXPANSION OF TORONTO INTERNATIONAL

Mr. Alex Jupp (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, on October 25 I asked a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) arising from the southern Ontario multimodal passenger studies. My question related to the possible expansion of the Toronto International Airport and maintenance of the lands at Pickering. I would like to take this opportunity to expand upon my concerns on this matter and the concerns of my constituents in Mississauga North.

The Minister of Transport gave his assurance "that there will be no decision taken on any airport expansion without full consultation with the municipalities involved." I very much appreciate this assurance, Mr. Speaker, for it is all that my constituents as neighbours of the airport could reasonably expect. We recognize that the ultimate decision on the future role of the present airport must be based largely on the national and the regional interest. All we say is that we wish to have the opportunity to provide input to the decision-making process because, as neighbours, we must live with the consequences of such decisions.

Hon. members will appreciate that living beside Canada's busiest airport is not an unmitigated blessing. Many of the homes in Malton, Cooksville, and Streetsville were built before the airport was located on its present site in 1937. Many others were built within the present airport affected areas of Peel region and Etobicoke before the airport was declared an international airport in 1954.

Last year the Toronto International Airport experienced over 270,000 flights, on an average of about 740 flights per day. For citizens living directly under the flight paths, the environmental damage, particularly in the summer when people are outdoors and windows are open, is more than a simple inconvenience. The noise, especially when only one runway is used for prolonged periods, because of wind conditions, is hazardous both to conversation and one's nerves.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the airport is subject to restricted use during the period from midnight to 7 a.m. However, many people have noticed that these restrictions are honoured more in the breach than is the observance, with the result that their sleep is disturbed.

The major issue of environmental concern, especially to citizens living north and south of the airport, is the possibility of an additional runway. I am pleased, therefore, that the study finds the existing runway system will likely be adequate through to the late 1980s, subject to certain changes in traffic management, procedural measures, and a constraining of general aviation.

The reason that the prospect of a fourth runway is of such concern to these citizens is that the necessary flight paths would affect the homes of some 80,000 people. Many of these citizens have lived in their homes for twenty years and more on the assumption of a certain degree of neighborhood quietude. The construction of a fourth runway in the foreseeable future would be hazardous to their health, to say nothing of my health, and that of my colleagues, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid).

I think it is generally recognized that the question of a third terminal is a different matter. The decision on terminal capacity, as the study reports, can be deferred for a few months. My concern is that the decision be based on the present structural viability of the facilities as they now exist and not be contingent in any way on any additional runway facilities. We appreciate as well that additional terminal requirements will require internal structural changes in parking facilities, baggage handling, ground transportation, and traffic management. I do not anticipate any serious objections on any such improvements, again as long as they are integrated into the present runway system of the airport.

We in Mississauga North are the first to recognize the vital importance of a viable airport to our community. The airport provides direct employment to 12,000 of our citizens, and secondary employment to many more thousands. As well, many citizens have chosen to live where they do because of proximity to the airport, and others work for companies that are located in Mississauga because of the location of the airport. The Toronto International Airport is important, therefore, to the economic well-being of Mississauga. We are also conscious of the technological improvements in each generation of aircraft, which have resulted in less noisy aircraft engines. Aircraft design engineers forecast even quieter aircraft in the future. It is against these considerations, Mr. Speaker, which we hope the future decision on the airport will be weighed.

In conclusion, I would like to say a few words about the lands at Pickering. I am delighted that the study recommends maintenance of these lands to protect the long-range option of developing a major airport at Pickering. The justification of the former government for the selection of Pickering is a decision which is now very open to question, when one considers the allegations by Walter Stewart in his book "Paper Juggernaut: Big Government Gone Mad". Nonetheless, the taxpayers now have an investment of over $110 million in the lands at Pickering. It is imperative that the long-range options, which Pickering provides to the Ministry of Transport, not be jeopardized. Whatever is done with the lands over the next several years, whether they be used for agricultural or park purposes, it is important that those options be kept open for the future.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I applaud the preparedness of the Minister of Transport to seek out a suitable vehicle whereby local consultation can take place. We do not need any more studies on our transportation in southern Ontario. The walls of the ministry are white with studies undertaken by the previous government. What we now need is dialogue, consultation, and then decisions to be followed by actions based on the long-term interests of the country, the region and the affected communities.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I share some of the concerns expressed by the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jupp). Let me first provide some background information regarding the discussion paper jointly released by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the minister of transportation and communications of Ontario.

This paper, called "Southern Ontario Multimodal Passenger Studies", was released to the public on October 15. What I would like to emphasize here is that, first, we have completed a joint study with the province to produce this paper, thus assuring their very valuable participation from the start and their concurrence with the method used to arrive at decisions in the future. With the province, we have insisted that the paper be released publicly so that all interested parties, whether they be municipal authorities, other government groups, representatives of road, rail or air transportation interests, the academic community, or whatever, be given ample time to review the studies and submit comments. This process has been under way since October 15. I want to be sure everyone interested has had a chance to voice their view, and that this view has been taken into account in the decision-making process.

In this regard, the minister will be announcing in the very near future the make-up of a vehicle which will allow all interested parties, be they municipalities, citizens groups, etc., to be heard and express their views.

This brings me to a very important aspect of the work to date. I am sure we all realize that there are many expenditure options to consider inproviding a passenger transportation system in southern Ontario, including large or small improvements in every mode. It seems to me that we should, as the studies to date suggest, look carefully first at how we can maximize the use of existing facilities to foster fiscal restraint as much as possible, something the previous government ignored, to say the least. We must at the same time keep our eyes on other objectives like conserving energy, encouraging economic development, and protecting the environment. Some of these objectives conflict. However, I am certain that it is wise to retain as much flexibility as possible with respect to the type and timing of transportation expenditures. That is why the Minister of Transport hesitates to throw out any options until full consultation is achieved. The minister wants to be sure every mode of transport is given a fair, effective and efficient role.

I can assure the House and the hon. member that we will not give up any short or long-term option until we, with the province, along with the municipalities and other interested groups, have evaluated the consequences of such a decision and come up with the best course of action.

The Minister of Transport has been assured that no major decision need be taken regarding the Malton facilities or Pickering land for six to 12 months. Within that time we are providing for the public consultation process mentioned earlier, the evaluation of comments, review and updating most recent forecasts of traffic, a closer look at cost of various incremental improvements in corridor rail, bus, STOL, etc.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the various options for the future management of Pickering lands are being analysed and the results of the analysis will form part of the decision-making process.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE—POSSIBLE MOVE OF CANADIAN EMBASSY FROM TEL AVIV TO JERUSALEM—EFFECT ON TRADE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday I put a question to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) on whether the estimate which had been made recently by some experts as to the amount of trade opportunities which had been lost due to the government's plan to move the Canadian embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem actually amounted to some $5 billion. The minister indicated at that time he was not able to respond precisely to that estimate. I hope he will be able to do so tonight.

He went on in the course of the discussion that day to indicate that there were no studies of a general nature which he could make available to the House—no such studies had been done. I found that strange because that was the day on which we were starting to debate the freedom of information bill and I thought that since it was being introduced he would surely want to make those studies available. If they were not available it seems incredible we would have this situation where billions of dollars worth of trade opportunities were being lost to Canadian businessmen and the department had not carried out studies. I hope the minister will be tabling those studies tonight, knowing full well that eventually we will have the freedom of information bill and that they will be available at that time in any event.

It was interesting that two days later the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pépin) suggested to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) that perhaps the question of the foreign policy review of the Middle East situation could be separated from the question of the location of the Canadian embassy in Israel. The minister indicated that this could not be done because Mr. Stanfield had to complete his study, he had to travel across the country and engage in further consultations and finally make a recommendation. But yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) did another flip-flop and announced he would be doing exactly what the member for Ottawa-Carleton had recommended, that is, dividing the two questions, with Mr. Stanfield making his report in January on foreign policy review, and the embassy staying in Tel Aviv.

I think we should look back over that sorry four months of confusion and loss of sales to Middle East countries. Back on April 13, 1978, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain as he was at that time, said:

> In this country we have companies like Atco which have succeeded in this kind of world market despite the obstacles that governments have put in their way. We would get behind more Canadian companies that have the experience and expertise to serve these markets.

It is incredible how they have got behind Atco, for instance, because they have been sitting with a potential sale to the Middle East worth some $10 million. That deal has been in limbo for the past four months. If that is the way the Prime Minister is getting behind a company, we certainly would not want him to get any closer to them.

It seems to me that what we have to concern ourselves with now is how long term the effects will be. We know that Iraq has an embargo against oil coming into Canada which varies between 15,000 and 30,000 barrels a day. We know that a company in British Columbia, Zenith Steel Fabricators, announced over the weekend that it had lost a $43 million order from one of the Middle East countries. Will those sales be retrieved? We know that Bell had a $3.5 billion order with Erickson and Phillips, and we know that Erickson and Phillips have been asked to extend the contract but Bell has not. All these questions will be answered in the long run, but when we have a government which is facing a $7 billion deficit this year in foreign trade and a suggested $10 billion deficit next year, surely this is a very sorry record for a government which came to power saying it was going to help private enterprise, to help business.

We have a minister of trade who was too late going to the Argentine to get that contract for $1.8 billion for Canadian industry. Now he has to start to try to recoup this estimated loss of $5 billion worth of trade with the Middle East, and we will be very interested and hoping that he will be successful in that, because it means a lot to Canadians in terms of exports, dollars, and jobs.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the advice and information the House has been provided by the hon. member. Let me just comment briefly on the trade picture with which we are faced today. This did not happen just over night. This is something which has been developing over a long period of time, and it must be stopped right now. That is one of the reasons this government has identified one person to work solely on the problem of our trade picture.

Let me first get to the specific question the hon. member raised. I said at the time he asked his question, and I say again, that no over-all studies of this particular aspect of the movement of the embassy to Jerusalem have been undertaken. There have been summaries of conversations by me and by officials in the department on the particular experiences of people in the Middle East, of contracts that they are working on and of the relationships we have with Arab clients. These are confidential matters. They are confidential statements. I said that I do not propose to make them public, and I say it again. These are confidential, and if we make these studies public we are not going to receive the benefit of the information these people gain in their work in the Middle East.

I would like to dispute the statements the hon. member made in connection with lost business. During the course of the period since the early part of June when the statement was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), we have had the summer months. There have been two holiday periods in the Arab countries. As a result, not a lot of business was done over there, so it is fortuitous that this happened at that time, but it is also a fact of life.

I might point out that during the course of this period business has been going on. Contracts have been signed. Merchandise exports to Saudi Arabia in August totalled $11.5 million; to Algeria, $15.5 million; to Libya, $2 million; to Egypt, $3.2 million; to Kuwait, $1.1 million; to Iraq, $9.1 million; and so on. So, business is being done and will continue to be done with that part of the world.

I am confident that the businessmen of this country will move quickly to secure the business that they have been negotiating over the past few months. Negotiations have been continuing, and I am confident that they will move quickly and recover any ground which might have been lost during that period.

The hon. member mentioned ATCO—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but his time has expired.

TRANSPORT—WILL GOVERNMENT GIVE PRIORITY TO IMPROVEMENT OF SERVICE BETWEEN MONTREAL AND MIRABEL

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday I asked the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle) whether the government would give priority to the improvement of ground transportation between Mirabel and Montreal when he meets with his Quebec colleagues on November 5 next. I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that this matter was an urgent and necessary priority and that the construction of a public transit system between Mirabel and Montreal would provide jobs.

The minister explained to me that there were other projects among his priorities but some Liberals considered rapid transit between Mirabel and Montreal more important than Place Guy Favreau. I am one of those who have always advocated public interest in that area rather than the other project.

At any rate, I would repeat for the benefit of hon. members that we want to hear the recommendations and submissions of the Quebec government, after which we will decide.

Mr. Speaker, this answer concerns me due to the indifference shown by the PQ government and during the time allotted to me I will try to show why I am concerned about the outcome of the project to make Mirabel airport a profitable operation.

Mr. Speaker, if I may I will refer to a statement made by municipal affairs minister Tardif, in an item published in the newspaper La Presse, who is in favour of a subway line to Laval rather than a metropolitan express system. He points out that the Quebec government has already done its part to connect the two airports efficiently. Mr. Tardif is of the opinion that the central government must assume responsibility for the metropolitan express system if it feels that it is a priority. So we see exactly the attitude of the Parti Québécois government and how indifferent it is to this project.

I have here in my hand the official report of the Debates of the National Assembly of April 27, 1977, when transport minister Lucien Lessard mentions it once again, and I quote:

It should also be remembered that it is up to the Department of Transport of the federal government to make Mirabel profitable.

Once again mention is made of the lack of interest on the part of the Quebec government in making the metropolitan express system a profitable undertaking.

Mr. Speaker, another attitude worries me even more, considering the situation in the byelection in Prévost, where the Liberal candidate, Mrs. Solange Chaput-Rolland, gave priority in her program to the development of the Mirabel airport and specifically the metropolitan express system while the PQ candidate, Mr. Harvey, was again totally indifferent to its importance.

It is a matter of showing how one must never get discouraged. You have to persist and persevere when you are in earnest about as important a matter as that on the development of the Mirabel airport. I have here, Mr. Speaker, letters dated December 11, 1974, from the Chamber of Commerce of Ville-de-Laval, asking me to continue my efforts toward achieving that objective; so I am speaking here of something that goes back five years.

I have in front of me another letter from the joint commission on urban development for Sainte-Thérèse centre, and this was done in co-operation with my colleagues in the region. First, the hon. members for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois), Labelle (Mr. Dupras), and Duvernay (Mr. Demers), and myself have tried to meet with the aldermen, the city councillors, the mayors, in order to gain their support to develop this project. I have received a resolution from the joint commission on urban development, dated May 13, 1977, supporting hon. members' action concerning the development of this type of road transportation system.

I have here another resolution which says that Mirabel affords Montreal the opportunity to remain one of Canada's large urban centres, and which comes from eight executive presidents of the Trucking Association of Quebec Inc.; it also supports fully the development of this means of transportation between Mirabel and Montreal. I have still another resolution from the Mirabel Chamber of Commerce dated June 20, 1977, supporting this project, by unanimous approval of its members. And there is support from Rosemère, Sainte-Thérèse and Blainville which are all in favour of developing this metropolitan express system as a way of stopping the accumulation of huge deficits for this airport.

Here is more evidence, Mr. Speaker, and not the least; it is a statement made by the minister, Mr. Mailloux, at a weekly luncheon at the Chamber of Commerce of Montreal which says, and I quote:

Mr. Mailloux indicated that the government of Quebec—

—the Liberal government of the time—

—expressed its general agreement with the principle of building a rapid transit system between Montreal and Mirabel, according to the main lines of the report, provided there is adequate financial participation from the various levels of governments.

Mr. Speaker, on December 5, in Montreal, the Liberal caucus of the area of Montreal met with the executive of the city of Montreal. At this joint meeting which had been organized by my colleague the hon. member for Terrebonne and myself, Mayor Drapeau emphasized for cabinet members as well as ordinary members the necessity to build a metropolitan express system to develop Mirabel airport. In view of all these testimonies, Mr. Speaker, and the indifference of the PQ government, I feel that this project should be given top priority in order to limit the deficit of the Mirabel operation. I feel also that the Minister of Supply and Services, who represents a constituency north of Montreal, should support the efforts of his colleagues of the former government to develop Mirabel airport. If the minister remains indifferent to this request, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the voters will not soon forget it.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, although the hon. member directed his original question to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle), it concerns transport and that is why I am taking the liberty as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport to reply to the hon. member. I am surprised that after all the years he has been in the House he does not realize this matter concerns transport primarily.

I can assure the hon. member that indeed consultation will take place with the Quebec government, the city of Montreal, as well as other municipalities and interest groups on any matters pertaining to Mirabel and other areas in the province of Quebec, just as consultations will take place with other municipalities and cities in other parts of Canada before any decisions are made by this minister.

Also I should like to answer the hon. member's question related to ground transportation service between Mirabel and downtown Montreal via Laval. Since the Mirabel airport opened in 1975, there have been adequate bus transportation services provided between Montreal and Mirabel. The Montreal Urban Community Transport Commission has been providing service from the CN central station to Mirabel and from Dorval to Mirabel. The Laval Transport Commission has been providing a service from the Henri-Bourassa metro station to Mirabel. This service carried 83,000 passengers in 1978, of which more than 90 per cent were Mirabel employees.

The level and the quality of service provided by these two transport commissions, the MUCTC and LTC, is very adequate, especially if we consider the actual level of patronage at Mirabel and the characteristics of the airport users who are mainly international passengers with flying time of many hours. Within the context of international travel the extra time required to travel by bus from Mirabel to Montreal, approximately 15 minutes, is minimal indeed when compared to the more than $100 million it would cost to implement a Montreal-Mirabel highspeed rail system at this time. Therefore, the outlay of an expenditure in the area of $100 million, especially in this time of restraint, would be difficult to justify. I want to remind the hon. member of that fact. As for any service of this nature, ways of improvement are constantly the subject of examination and analysis, which is something the previous government did not take the time to do. With respect to this specific issue, I might add that provincial, municipal and federal officials are presently studying means to improve the downtown terminal.

Also the hon. member for Laval asked if it is the minister's intention, when he meets with the Quebec government, to consider that service as a priority. The hon. member may be assured that the minister recognizes the importance of an appropriate ground transportation system to Mirabel, particularly in the future, and that necessary steps will be taken in due course.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.34 p.m.

INCREASES IN INTEREST RATES—REQUEST CENTRAL BANK PROVIDE REPORT ON ADVERSE EFFECTS ON ECONOMY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of yesterday's admission by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) to the House of Commons finance committee that his government's policy of raising interest rates almost in lock-step with United States rates will have depressive effects on the Canadian economy, in view of the fact that this interest rate policy will impose additional costs on Canadian taxpayers, for example because of the higher Canada Savings Bond rates which will have to be paid, and the necessity for substantially greater unemployment insurance and welfare payments, and in view of the Conservative government's promise to bring more openness to the budget-making process, and in particular to make financial forecasts and estimates available to the public, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand):

That this House order the Minister of Finance to issue a directive to the governor of the Bank of Canada to provide to the House the results, in detail, of the Bank of Canada's analysis of the effects of the increases in interest rates since May 22, 1979, on jobs, economic growth, housing and food costs and the number of consumer and small business bankruptcies over the coming year.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for discussion at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST GUIDELINES BE ESTABLISHED RESPECTING ACCESS TO GOVERNMENT INFORMATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the President of the Privy Council stated recently that Canadians would be unable to avail themselves of the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act for at least six months, which means one year; that the House has reacted positively to this bill; and taking into account the fact that these provisions are merely making compulsory what can already be made on a voluntary basis, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid):

That the House urge the Government of Canada to direct all federal civil servants to comply with the principles of the bill and, to facilitate their task, to issue forthwith guidelines and an index system.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

I would like to move a motion, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, concerning an important matter of irresponsible journalism. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that many organizations in Manitoba have already stated their opposition to the Garrison project, and that a great many citizens have already voiced their disagreement to the government of that province as well as to the federal government, in view of the fact that the International Joint Commission which is made up of representatives of the Canadian and American governments has indicated very clearly to the American government the concern of Manitobans about this project going any further, and in view of the fact that the most impartial studies have clearly demonstrated that carrying on this project would have a disastrous impact on the economy and especially on the ecology of southern Manitoba, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy):

That among the priority items which will be discussed with President Carter next week the Prime Minister include the serious economic and ecologic problem faced by Manitoba residents because of the Garrison project.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion moved by the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 such a motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT FOR INACTION ON COPE AGREEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to ask leave to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the answer given on October 29 by the Secretary of State to the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that the government would not require an accountability clause in its new federal-provincial agreements with respect to the use of federal funds for second language and minority language education, I would move:

That this House require the Secretary of State to delay the implementation of the new federal-provincial agreements on minority and second language education until there has been a complete examination of the manner in which former agreements were carried out and how the money was spent.

CALL FOR STRICTER REGULATION OF OIL TANKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Since the owners of the Kurdistan, a British tanker which spilled 7,000 tons of its oil cargo into the Cabot Strait of Nova Scotia, are placing a bill of $7 million against the federal government, and since Nova Scotia has been the victim of both the Arrow and the Kurdistan oil spills, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. That the departments of transport and environment tighten up sharply on the administration of the regulations and the adherence of oil tankers to them, in view of the nearness of winter.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

OIL PRICES—REACTION OF PROVINCES TO POSSIBLE INCREASES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Hold that tiger.

Mr. Trudeau: —I have a question for the Prime Minister, but first I wish to express my agreement with him when I saw him and a member of his party smell—smile—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that allegation. But they did smile at the motion under Standing Order 43 of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, because it certainly is much easier for him to describe as a hoax something which otherwise would force him to take the responsibility of siding with the official opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: My question to the Prime Minister has to do with the increasing concern and disarray which has been spreading across the country since Premier Lougheed's statement about the unilateral setting of oil prices. I only have to refer to Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia who described it as absolutely disastrous, and the finance minister of Manitoba who expressed total disagreement.

Yesterday the Prime Minister told us that he had not time to read Premier Lougheed's speech. Now that he presumably has, could he assure us—an assurance he was not quite able to give us yesterday—that the policy of his government would not permit the unilateral setting of prices of petroleum products across Canada by one province?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received, and I gather there was not in fact, a text of that speech. We are still trying to get—

Mr. Chrétien: Slow communications.

Mr. Clark: —a copy of the transcript.

Mr. Chrétien: It was on the air.

Mr. Clark: My understanding is that the full speech indicated general agreement with the rate of progress which has been made in moving the country toward some agreement on an energy package. I certainly believe that we are moving toward some agreement on an energy package, so I think it is not likely that the country will have to face the prospect of an attempt by the government of Alberta or any other province to set energy prices unilaterally.

Mr. Nystrom: Answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister keeps living in the hope that there is no real threat. I believe he was doing that when he withdrew the referendum bill which would have permitted us to answer Premier Lévesque's threat.

Now the Prime Minister tells us that there is no threat from Alberta. I am asking him what his policy is. He did indicate that he would not contemplate using declaratory power or emergency power. I just remind him that one of his predecessors in office, Mr. Diefenbaker, used declaratory power for as simple a matter as the NCC.

The question of the energy policy of the government in the coming winter is a matter of national urgency and importance. Can the Prime Minister tell us that as against the Alberta unilateral policy of setting prices his government will, if necessary, use the tools at its disposal to prevent a unilateral setting of prices by Alberta?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition continues to deal in hypothetical questions—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —but I will answer his hypothesis. Naturally, if the need exists, the Government of Canada will protect the national interest; but I can express to the Leader of the Opposition and to the country my confidence that it is going to be possible to get agreement on an energy package without the Government of Canada having to use extraordinary, unilateral powers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, first the Prime Minister told us he had not seen Premier Lougheed's speech two days ago, nor a transcript of it. Now he describes the Alberta policy as hypothetical. It is not hypothetical; it is a statement the Prime Minister can verify.

However, more importantly, is it not the Prime Minister who is dealing in hypothetical situations? Can he not accept the fact that there is an agreement now with the government of Alberta? It was negotiated by our government when it was in office. It will last until July 1 next. Why is this government reopening the whole pricing policy? Why is it not telling the Canadian people that they can have a winter of energy peace, that the government will take a few weeks or months to get its act together, and this confrontation is absolutely unnecessary since there is an agreement in place for a $1 increase on January 1. Why does the Prime Minister not say that that is the agreement which will stay at least until July 1?

● (1420)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, there is no confrontation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. Clark: There is some shouting from the other side of the House from people who are perhaps having difficulty getting through to their leader in the normal way and are now shouting at him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It is probably the case that the former prime minister would have used a news report from Vancouver as an excuse for having the federal government invoke unilateral power arbitrarily. This government will not do that, because we believe we can achieve agreement by agreement among the provinces, and we expect to be able to make progress on that very shortly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The former prime minister asks why we do not delay this decision. One of the differences between this government and the government he headed is that this government does not delay tough decisions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Yes, such as decisions about moving the embassy to Jerusalem.

USE OF WORD "CONFRONTATION" IN SPEECH OF PREMIER OF ALBERTA

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says there is no confrontation. I would refer him to the words of the Premier of Alberta, who said recently to 900 Progressive Conservatives, referring to this problem, "you and I are in confrontation." So there is a confrontation, if the Prime Minister does not realize this.

In view of the words of the Premier of Alberta, talking about confrontation, in view of the evident dissatisfaction expressed by the Premier of Ontario, in view of the disastrous scenario painted by the Premier of Nova Scotia—all adding up to a chaotic, embittered, confused situation in federal-provincial relations—I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether this situation was carefully stage-managed by the government in order to implement the pledge made in the Speech from the Throne that "my ministers are making every effort to change the climate of federal-provincial relations".

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the reason it is necessary for this government to continue to make progress before a change in the climate of federal-provincial relations is that, as the question just asked indicates, the former government took every occasion they could to engender confrontation in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The interest of this government is not in finding people to fight with in Canada but, rather, in working out with the provinces of Canada agreements which in this case will move this nation toward energy self-sufficiency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is, of course, living in a dream world because he talks about hope and consensus, when the Premier of Alberta said that price increases and negotiations in 1973, 1974 and 1975 "have been like kindergarten compared to talks in 1979". So that is the analysis of the Premier of Alberta, who talks about confrontation and about the kindergarten that existed, which implies a very favourable atmosphere.

May I ask the Prime Minister, who is the key player in these negotiations: if he has refused to extend the existing agreement with the provinces for another year—which would be sensible—he must have some idea in his mind as to what kind of a proposal he is putting before the provinces. Would he tell the House, and probably relieve the anxiety expressed in the Atlantic provinces, whether the country and the Atlantic provinces can be assured at the present time that the Prime Minister is not proposing a substantial increase in oil prices which, in the words of Premier Buchanan, would be disastrous for the Atlantic provinces?

• (1425)

Mr. Clark: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member has done his best to weave together a question drawing out of context various quotations by various premiers on different subjects.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: He is doing the best he can to bring some order to that kindergarten over there. Certainly I can give to the Premier of Nova Scotia, through this House, the assurance that there will be full consultation with that government prior to any agreement on energy prices; that there will be, as part of the package, a series of programs to help regions of the country where the increases may cause some momentary difficulty to overcome those problems; that, indeed, we are moving this country toward a position where it will be possible for the government of Nova Scotia and other governments with resource capacities to find federal government support, to find private sector support, to find the investment necessary to bring their own resources on stream and to contribute themselves to the development of energy self-sufficiency in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER HAS DISCUSSED WITH PREMIER OF ALBERTA CONTENT OF PREMIER'S REMARKS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Given the extraordinary nature of the statement attributed to Premier Lougheed more than 36 hours ago, in which he was asserting that his government would take unilateral action in setting prices for a fundamentally important commodity like oil, and saying to Canadians in other provinces that they can like it or lump it, can the Prime Minister explain to the House why in the last 36 hours he has not telephoned Premier Lougheed to verify the accuracy of these comments and, if they were accurate, to make it clear on behalf of the people of Canada that they were unacceptable to the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me make it clear that in my judgment—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Hon. members opposite can, if they want, try to create national panic and national concern by quoting out of context statements made by the Premier of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I can repeat to the House of Commons my view that there is no likelihood, no danger of unilateral action by the government of Alberta. I can repeat to the House of Commons my assurance that if the national interest were seriously jeopardized, this government would use the instruments available to it to protect that national interest, although I do not think that will be necessary. I can indicate that I have not yet been in touch with the Premier of Alberta—

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Clark: Because I want to see the transcript of what he said. I expect to be in touch with him and other premiers shortly. I expect that we will be able to make progress by agreement, not by unilateral action on either side, toward the accomplishment of an energy package for this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that we on this side are quoting out of context comments made by Premier Lougheed. I would like to ask him how he knows that, if he has not even found out what the premier said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: How does he know we are quoting out of context? I cannot see anything other than the sheerest ignoring of responsibility on the part of the Prime Minister, to come into the House two days in a row without verifying with the crucial premier, in terms of energy resources in the country, the accuracy of some extraordinary statements which were attributed to him.

I would ask him to answer the crucial question put by the Leader of the Official Opposition: At this point, when an agreement already exists on the pricing of oil which would take us to next July, why is this government embarking upon a course of action that will do harm in terms of jobs and harm in terms of the cost of living to every person who lives in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the reason we have entered into discussions with the provinces of Canada regarding the bringing into place of an energy package is that we think it is prudent and necessary for the national government to plan ahead. If we do not plan ahead, if we do not make decisions now which will serve the future, then we will truly jeopardize the longer-run interest of this country by leaving Canada too exposed to foreign sources of petroleum.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I read the Prime Minister as saying that the oil companies need more money: there cannot be any other conclusion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I want the Prime Minister to answer, because the Leader of the Opposition posed a straightforward question. I tried to repeat it and the Prime Minister simply came out with rhetoric.

Considering that the oil companies, or the majors, made a 55 per cent increase in profits this year, and considering that any oil price increase will produce—according to various government department estimates—a loss of, not hundreds but thousands of jobs in Canada, as well as boosting the cost of living, why does the Prime Minister not provide the increase in price he is aiming for but rely on Petro-Canada to do the essential job in resource development for us in the north?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it is our view that there does have to be an increase in energy prices in this country, not to yield new profits to the companies but, instead, to make it more possible for more companies—and, we would hope, more Canadian companies—to bring new Canadian supplies on stream, to make it more possible for substitution of fuel uses so we can begin to bring into practice significant conservation measures; and to make it possible for this nation, a nation which is blessed with a plenitude of resources, to move toward self-sufficiency instead of following the policies adopted by the former government, supported by the New Democratic Party, which would have had us drift into increasing dependence on unstable foreign sources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

USE OF FUNDS FOR RESEARCH PROGRAM

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In view of the fact that in May, 1978, the government of the time announced a program to increase research programs from 0.9 to 1.5 per cent of the gross national product by 1983, and since the present government has upped this objective to 2.5 per cent of the gross national product by 1985, can the minister inform the House whether he will be implementing this proposal, and since universities and research programs are feeling the squeeze due to cutbacks, can he advise the House as to his intentions regarding this new program?

Hon. Heward Grafftey (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the hon. member for a very interesting question. It is true—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grafftey: I do not see what is so funny. I am just being polite. We have considered the matter very closely. As for the 2.5 per cent mentioned by the hon. member, it remains a challenge for this government, and we have also examined the situation within government. I want to inform the hon. member that we intend to make a very interesting announcement in the near future.

FISHERIES

COD FISHING BY LARGE TRAWLERS IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE—PROTEST BY INSHORE FISHERMEN

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and has to do with his decision to allow vessels over 100 feet, owned by large corporations, back into certain areas of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to fish cod.

In view of the mounting protest, particularly among inshore fishermen in the maritime provinces and Quebec, but apparently shared by others—including certain Atlantic ministers and fisheries officials—and in view of the fact that the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry last night adopted a motion by my colleague, the hon. member for Gloucester, to hear tomorrow from certain interest groups who have grave concerns about the effects of this decision, I want to ask the minister if he will now reconsider his decision, or at least delay it until the standing committee has had a chance to hear from the parties who are affected by the decision.

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this matter was dealt with fully in the committee last night. My decision still stands, and I am prepared to stand by that decision. My answer to the hon. member is "No".

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, in view of the story in this morning's Halifax Chronicle-Herald that a proposal will be submitted to the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee calling for a phasing-out of the trawlers in the next few years, and in view of the fact that this position is apparently supported by the majority of governments in the Atlantic area, does the minister not feel that his decision flies in the face of the direction in which most of the Atlantic provinces want to move, and will he now heed the cries for help from the inshore fishermen in that area and reconsider his decision?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have no such recommendation from the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee. If such a recommendation did come before me, naturally I would give it the consideration it would justly deserve. But, Mr. Speaker, I would say again to the hon. member and to the House that the decision to allow offshore trawlers into the Gulf was one that was not taken lightly.

However, it is interesting to note that when these 100-footers were banned from the Gulf in 1976 because of the condition of the stocks, or the threat to the stocks, there was a clear understanding given to them at the time that they would be allowed back in once the stocks had fully recovered. That is now the situation, Mr. Speaker, and we are allowing the 100-footers back in the Gulf, at least for the next two months.

INQUIRY WHETHER DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS AWARE OF FISHERY PROBLEM IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

When he says that now the situation is just about back to normal in the Gulf, he carefully avoids mentioning that most of these big trawlers belong to big corporations which will probably catch 100,000 metric tons of codfish this year outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence. So they did not really need to come back into the Gulf. Is the minister telling us, in view of the fact that last night in committee he acknowledged that he was not really aware of all facts regarding the possible damages that these big trawlers could do to the natural habitat in the Gulf, in the 4T zone of the Gulf and mainly to the crab hatcheries, that all the fishermen, all the Atlantic provinces associations which are opposed to their comeback and do not agree with these scientists, I repeat, is he actually telling the House that—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Breau: Is the minister saying that these thousands of fishermen do not actually know what they are saying and that the scientists in his department know better than they do?

[English]

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to tell the hon. member that the owners of these trawlers are good corporate citizens of this country, good taxpayers employing Canadians in their fish plants. That seems to be something the hon. member tends to forget.

Certainly, the hon. member knows from the evidence presented to the committee last night that the decision to allow the 100-footers into the Gulf to fish for the 6,000 metric tons that were added to the TAC was taken after the scientific data came in, and after I had received advice that this was the way to go. We explained it last night in the committee, and it will be explained in the committee again tomorrow. I do not know what more I can do for the hon. member.

CATCH OF MATURE CODFISH—EFFECT ON FUTURE STOCKS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Was the minister duly informed by experts, before taking his decision, that this year these big trawlers will catch four to five-year old cod about 15 inches long, and that in three or four years it will prevent the Quebec fishery industry from catching higher quality cod, thus preventing a better performance of the Quebec fishing industry?

[English]

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member, again, that these trawlers are now fishing in 4T zone for the same cod stock that they traditionally fished for in 4VN. He also knows, Mr. Speaker, that we have observers on these trawlers to ensure that there will be no excess juvenile fish caught. The hon. member knows full well that all precautions are being taken and will be taken to ensure that we do not, in fact, interfere with the inshore fishery either on the North Shore of Quebec, the Magdalens, or in the Gulf.

CODFISH CATCH BY LARGE TRAWLERS IN GULF—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question because the minister did not answer my question. Before deciding to let large trawlers of 100 feet or more operate in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, did his scientific advisers tell him that by June 30, 1979, those large trawlers had caught 50 per cent more cod during last season in the 200-mile fishing zone of the Atlantic Ocean?

● (1440)

[English]

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, that is the case; and the hon. member also knows that catches for inshore fishermen have also increased. As the stocks recover, catches also increase. On the basis of the recovery of the stocks, the decision was made to allow the 100-footers back in the Gulf during the months of November and December, when there is no inshore activity in the first place.

Oral Questions

ROLE OF MINISTER IN FISHERIES' DISPUTES

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I certainly gave no undertaking, when the large trawlers were removed from the Gulf of St. Lawrence, that they would be allowed to return. In fact, I made it very clear that because we had opened the 200-mile limit to them, from which they reaped great benefits—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. LeBlanc: Don't you want to hear the information?

An hon. Member: You were defeated.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question, would he please put it.

Mr. LeBlanc: Does the minister not feel that in the absence of organizations which represent inshore fishermen, and in the presence of so many "good corporate citizens" who sit on the advisory committee, it is his responsibility as minister to represent those who have no voice on fisheries' advisory groups and to make sure their interests are protected, instead of protecting the interests of those who have already been well served by the resource?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if there was not an undertaking given, there was certainly an understanding that the 100-foot boats would be allowed back into the Gulf. I would say to the hon. member—who is a former minister of fisheries and should know better—that the inshore fishermen are represented on the AGAC committee where the decision was made.

Furthermore, I did, indeed, consult with the inshore fishermen. I went to the North Shore of New Brunswick, met with representatives of the fishermen there and we had a full airing of the subject, as we did last night in committee and as we will again tomorrow in committee when the same representatives appear before it.

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, the fishermen are represented, but if one looks at the names of the 15 or 20 representatives they will see that only one or two can be designated as inshore fishermen; and even at that, many of them represent 65-foot boats, not the small, 50-foot boats and under. I would like to say to the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. LeBlanc: May I ask the minister if he has any documents to show that there was an understanding or an undertaking that the fleet which was excluded from the Gulf would ever be allowed to return?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that such a commitment was made. If I am wrong, I will be the first to admit it. I will undertake to see if that information is available, and it will be tabled tomorrow at committee. I remind the hon. member that there were full consultations—and he knows that—before this decision was taken.

[Mr. McGrath.]

NUCLEAR POWER

PROPOSED U.S. NUCLEAR POWER PLANT NEAR B.C. BORDER—GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE TOWARD POSSIBLE DANGER TO CANADIANS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that a huge nuclear power plant is proposed for Sedro Woolley, in Washington's Skagit Valley, and since the site chosen is only 35 miles from population centres in British Columbia totalling almost one million people and should an accident ever take place massive environmental and evacuation problems would likely be encountered, what is the government's attitude toward the building of this nuclear power plant so close to our border? Is it one of official approval, disapproval, or indifference?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a concern that has been expressed to me by many members on this side of the House as well as members in the opposition parties. While it is impossible for Canada to determine where the United States, or interests in the United States, will locate their nuclear power plants, nevertheless we have raised this subject with officials of the U.S. State Department.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear the reply of the minister, although she was not very specific as to the type of response the government made to United States officials. Since next week there will be hearings and a referendum held in the Skagit Valley, in Skagit County, to determine whether or not to withdraw the re-zoning of this particular plant for a number of environmental reasons, and in addition there is an intervention—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member intending to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Rose: I was just getting to it, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry, but I must have been infected by what I heard here earlier.

I want to ask the minister, since at this moment the only thing that is helping us at these hearings is an executive order, signed by Jimmy Carter, requiring an environmental impact study, does the government plan to be present in any official capacity at these hearings next week?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, at the moment I cannot tell the hon. member whether or not there will be any official representation. There has not been a decision taken on that matter.

AIRPORTS

IMPROVEMENTS AT EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in order to repair the indifference and studied neglect of the operational conditions at the Edmonton international airport, could the Minister of Transport tell us what work has been done, what work is being done, and what is being contemplated in the near future?

An hon. Member: Put it on the order paper.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that very much has been done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: You found a job for Marcel.

Mr. Mazankowski: Since June 4 the plans have been well under way for the $20 million expansion and renovation to the existing airport facility. Air Canada has announced its intention to proceed with a new air cargo terminal. Just last Sunday I had the pleasure of opening the interim freight clearance facilities—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —which will go a long way—

An hon. Member: When was it built?

Mr. Mazankowski: It was built last month, for the information of the hon. member. It will go a long way in providing convenience and comfort to transborder traffic. We have re-covered one of the major runways and we are in the process of putting together plans for improving the parking facilities at the Edmonton international airport.

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Would he explain to the House what the Minister of Supply and Services meant when he said in Montreal, where he was talking about the pre-referendum campaign in Quebec, that since the position of the Tories was not exactly similar to Mr. Ryan's position, the Conservative members should avoid participating in the referendum debate under the federalist umbrella?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is not at all what the minister said in Quebec. He said that there are diverging opinions between the Liberal party at the provincial level in Quebec and the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. I suppose there are some, as well, between the Liberal Party of Quebec and the Liberal Party of Canada. But he also said that there is an agreement between the federalists in Quebec who are under the Liberal banner at the provincial level and those in Quebec who are under the Progressive Conservative banner at the federal level as far as their participation is concerned in favour of the renewal of federalism in the province of Quebec.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—INQUIRY RESPECTING FUTURE POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. As this statement was made a few days ago and as the situation is rather serious in the province of Quebec where we have a premier claiming now that all he wants is a new agreement on the constitution, can the Prime Minister tell us where the Progressive Conservatives will stand in that pre-referendum campaign, if they do not campaign by the side of those who are for the preservation of federalism? He does not have to consult the minister sitting next to him on this matter and he can tell me, even out of the context of the minister's statement, whether they are going to campaign on the "yes" or on the "no" side.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be participation. The question has a bearing on the activities of the Progressive Conservative Party which I lead, and I must answer that there will be a participation of the Quebec fighting wing of the Progressive Conservative Party under the umbrella of the committee which was organized to support federalism in the province of Quebec. The role of the federal government will be to show Quebeckers that after the May 22 election there is now in Ottawa a government which is open to the aspirations of the people of Quebec, a government which is not a captive of the status quo, which is prepared and able to demonstrate changes of attitude toward the provinces on the matter of lotteries, of the jurisdiction over natural resources—in short, a government which is prepared to work with the federalists of the province of Quebec to renew federalism in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I would have another supplementary. As Mr. Ryan is not, as far as I know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON SOVEREIGNTY ASSOCIATION WITH QUEBEC

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, not only did the Minister for Supply and Services make such a statement, but he was supported by the minister in the Senate who is responsible for CIDA. Both of them said they did not know whether they would vote "yes" or "no" on the question put by a separatist government in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Does this mean that the Conservative party has no position on sovereignty association, and do I understand the Prime Minister to say that the militants of his party are free to support whatever side they want on this question?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Supply and Services): Ask me the question and I will answer yes or no.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I am not sure what the former minister understood.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: There is a great deal of shouting from across the way on this question, as on so many. There is no question at all that the Progressive Conservative party is determined to work toward the strengthening of the federal system and to work toward a victory for federal forces in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That will be done most concretely by a new national government demonstrating that the old attitude, the attitude in which every issue was a cause for confrontation between the government of Quebec and the Government of Canada, is over. There is a new national government in Ottawa that is prepared to treat the provinces as partners, knowing that that is the only way in a country like this in which we can ensure the security and the strengthening of our federal system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered the question. He has left open the possibility that Conservative party members will vote "Yes" in a referendum on a question put by a separatist government, and the minister just said that was a possibility. Will he say categorically in this House, as official policy of the Conservative Party in order to please some separatist supporters in Quebec—

Mr. Lalonde: And his two ministers.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Allmand: Yes, and his two ministers.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: —whether the Conservative party will favour a policy where their militants will be free to vote "Yes" or "No" on that referendum question?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the representatives in this House of the Liberal party of Quebec, federal division—I emphasize that—become more desperate and irresponsible every day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: There is no question at all that members of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, including ministers and including members of Parliament in the province of Quebec, will work toward the development and strengthening of federalism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The hon. member should know, as certainly some of his colleagues from the provincial Liberal party know, that there is an open question as to the nature of the question that will be put by the government of Quebec.

It is my expectation that that question will be phrased in such a way that members of the Progressive Conservative Party will want to vote against that question. That is my expectation of what will happen—but I have not seen the question proposed by Mr. Lévesque: perhaps the hon. member has.

FATTY ACID IN MARGARINES—PUBLICIZING OF BRAND NAMES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, if I could switch to the Minister of Agriculture and ask him a question, I have here a study done last summer by Alpha Laboratories, Toronto, for the Canadian Dairy Commission, released in August on the fatty acid composition of margarines. The results of the test show that over half the brands of margarine sold in this country contain trans-unsaturated fatty acids that are potentially dangerous for people who are concerned about heart disease.

The brand names of those companies have not been made public. My question is: why are the brand names not made public, as they are in the United States; and will the minister make sure that we get a list of those brand names so that people with heart concerns will know about them?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question, this matter was brought to my attention yesterday. The information I have to this point in time would indicate that it would be an internal study. However, what concerns me is the fact that it was financed by public funds. Even though the results were issued previously—I believe, back in July—I am not certain whether or not it would be possible or, indeed, proper for us at the moment to release the brand names.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Wise: I am checking that. Personally, I would have no objection whatsoever, but I ask for the co-operation of the hon. member in order that I may check on the legal technicalities with reference to the release of the brand names.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, we are supposed to have an open government, so I take the minister at his word, that he has no objection to releasing the brand names and that they will be forthcoming.

HEALTH

FATTY ACIDS IN FOODS—DANGER TO HEALTH—REQUEST FOR STUDY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I now have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the director of food and nutrition for the American Medical Association said a few days ago that the problem of trans-fatty acids—which are unnatural acids; that is, not in their natural state—has become one of the major problems in the United States concerning health, and in view of the fact that their consumption has gone up from four grammes per day to about ten grammes per day because of the modern human diet, would the minister of health now be prepared to commission some money so that a study can be done as to the effect of these fatty acids on the human body?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. Indeed the department is concerned about the matter which the hon. member has raised. It is not a new concern of the department. We are most pleased to be able to monitor—as we have done so far—and, in consultation with the Minister of Agriculture, we will be dealing with the particular matter raised earlier and will continue to investigate the matter as it affects the human diet.

EXPANSION OF MOUNT HOPE, HAMILTON, AIRPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport regarding a much-too-long delayed expansion of Hamilton civic airport at Mount Hope.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: That was asked two days ago.

An hon. Member: That was another airport.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): In view of concern expressed by several mayors of Hamilton and the surrounding communities on behalf of many thousands of my constituents who have been faced for years with uncertainty about whether the airport would expand and, if so, in which direction, could the minister give the Hamilton-Wentworth area a clear indication of the kind, and direction, of expansion that his ministry is looking at—and how soon will it happen?

An hon. Member: What a set-up.

An hon. Member: More, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question of improved airport facilities at the Hamilton international airport—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Read your notes.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hamilton national airport is certainly a matter that is under active consideration. I want to assure the hon. member that, unlike the former government, we will not talk about it for ten years: we will act upon it very quickly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the Minister of National Revenue will soon meet with spokesmen for the expropriated owners at Mirabel, could he tell the House whether he intends to follow the example set by his provincial counterpart and exempt from the income tax all the total compensation ex gratia payments which were made to these people?

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, the former solicitor general, and I have had meetings with respect to this matter. I indicated at that stage that I was not prepared to do that. However, I did indicate that I did not think the view of the minister should settle such an important matter.

I understood we had an agreement that the matter would be referred to the Federal Court of Canada, where the very important issue for these people at Mirabel could be decided judiciously rather than ministerially and arbitrarily.

LABOUR DISPUTES

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT IS READY TO SUPPORT RECOMMENDATIONS OF COSSETTE REPORT

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Yesterday in answer to a very serious question from the hon. member for Louis-Hébert he said that unfortunately, when it comes to labour relations, the dismissal or lay-off of workers or the loss of jobs by workers is like a death penalty. I want to ask him whether he is willing to support the recommendations of the Cossette report which was released to both parties and particularly whether he is willing to intervene personally to find an amicable arrangement between both parties.

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member wants to get involved in this matter: I commend him for it. However, he must appreciate that the inquiry was called for by the Maritime Employers' Association as well as the International Longshoremen's Association, two locals. It was at their request that Labour Canada brought forward this inquiry.

As I indicated earlier, the report was released to the parties affected and, of course, all we can do at this time is to sit back and wait until we hear from the parties. It is not my role now to indicate to the parties what they should do; they are the ones who asked for the report; they are the ones who asked for the inquiry in order to determine what was going to happen with longshoremen and checkers as a result of the very hazy and uncertain position, in terms of employment, in the future. The report is now in their hands. As soon as I hear from them I will be able to determine just what further steps I can take, or even should take.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT READY TO IMPLEMENT RECOMMENDATIONS OF CARROTHERS REPORT

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I certainly understand the answer given by the Minister of Labour but I would like to remind him that the Carrothers report was tabled a month ago and to help him recall the facts—I remind him that the report dealt with surplus manpower and lay-offs at Inco in Ontario. Is the minister willing to consider the introduction of legislation which would require notice regarding the intention of an employer to lay off people before the labour representatives have had time to act upon those major steps before they are taken? The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the employees involved learn about their lay-off at the last minute. Therefore, I ask the minister if he is prepared to implement the Carrothers report published two months ago and yet to be released by the minister, in the way he intended, because some people in Quebec City have now lost their jobs and have been laid off due to that situation?

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has brought to my attention another report. He is talking about the Carrothers report which dealt with redundancies and lay-offs. I can advise the hon. member that, after consultation with affected parties, it is this government's intention to introduce legislation which would require notice under part III regarding an intention of any employer which would perhaps lead to redundancies and lay-offs.

In answer to the hon. member's question, there is some concern by this government with regard to the report, and we intend to take action as soon as possible.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ROY (BEAUCE)—RIGHT TO BE RECOGNIZED IN THE HOUSE

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I noticed earlier that you made a wise decision in recognizing the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard)—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): I understand this is the first time one of my colleagues was recognized during question period. Am I to understand this is a decision that could apply in coming days, that we might be recognized in future during question period immediately after a spokesman for the NDP? Second, I would like to ask, if that is going to be your decision, whether that includes also the attitude that is going to prevail in parliamentary committees, because just yesterday I asked to be recognized in a parliamentary committee, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and I was denied that right, and I even have a note to the effect that I was even refused the right to speak at the meeting as a member of the Social Credit Party of Canada. Mr. Speaker, in view of those facts, I would like to ask you today whether you can inform the House of your intentions regarding your attitude during the coming days, the coming weeks and the coming months of this Parliament with respect to our right to be heard in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) rose on a point of order concerning the rights and privileges of hon. members of the Social Credit Party of Canada here in the House with regard to their participation in the oral question period. The choice of who will rise is left exclusively to the discretion of the Chair. It is always my duty to guide the participation of hon. members during the oral question period in a manner that is fair to all hon. members in the House. The actual order of participation, the time of participation, the form or actual participation and the manner in which the members share the time of the House are always left to the discretion of the Chair. I have never shirked that duty. I have always endeavoured, to date in this Parliament, to recognize the hon. members of the party of the hon. member for Beauce who sought the floor. I have always tried to recognize them in a way that was fair to other hon. members in the House. I shall always continue doing exactly the same thing. With regard to the decision on recognizing an hon. member from the Social Credit Party of Canada, the party of the hon. member for Beauce, right after an hon. member from the New Democratic Party every day, that too is a matter for the Chair to decide. It is always up to me to decide. Of course, hon. members of the Social Credit Party of Canada have the right here, like all other hon. members, to take part in the oral question period. But, it is up to me always to decide whether, when allotting them a fair share of the period, I am to recognize them at 2.30, 2.40 or 2.50 each day. That is the situation the Chair must face each day. I shall therefore discuss the matter, as I have always done when there were difficulties in the past, with the leaders of the other parties in an attempt to come to an agreement. If there is agreement among the parties of the House on how to solve the problem, the matter is simpler. If there is no agreement, however, then it is my responsibility to settle the issue.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved that the first report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, presented to the House on Wednesday, October 24, 1979, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion for concurrence before the House today refers to the first report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The report was tabled in the House on October 24 by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) who is chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I should like to read the substance of that report.

Your Committee met on Tuesday, October 23, 1979, and agreed to express its dismay that none of the ministers or officials of the departments and agencies whose estimates were referred to this committee were able to appear before the committee at eight o'clock p.m., Tuesday, October 23 and recommends that the House formally remind all ministers and their officials that they are primarily servants of Parliament and owe Parliament and its committees their priority attention in view especially of the commitment of the new government to give a greater role to Parliament and its committees.

That motion was proposed to the committee by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and it was proposed because of the difficulty which had been experienced by members of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in finding ministers or departmental officials who were prepared to appear before the committee on that particular evening, Tuesday, October 23.

I should say that the subcommittee had authorized the clerk to contact the various ministries, and I should name the ministers who were contacted. I might say also that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is probably one of the busiest standing committees; there is always a tremendous amount of legislation before it in addition to the estimates of three departments—Finance, Trade and Commerce, and National Revenue.

When it was found impossible to have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) appear before the committee—hon. members will recall his stating in this House that he was not prepared to appear before the committee until after the committee had seen and questioned the governor of the Bank of Canada—the committee members looked for an alternative, bearing in mind that they had to study the estimates of three different ministries.

The alternatives were the minister who sits in the other place, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. de Cotret), or, if he could not attend, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry (Mr. Huntington), or, if he could not attend, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson), or, if he could not attend, the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker). There were four ministers, if the Minister of Finance was going to continue to refuse to appear that evening, or, as the motion reads, the departmental officials of those departments.

As an individual I find it astonishing and most regrettable that in a committee which is so busy, a committee which wanted to continue to discuss very important topics, the government was not prepared so to organize itself that one of the responsible ministers could attend. I want to point a finger particularly at the Minister of National Revenue because he is also the leader of the government side in this House. It fell on his shoulders, therefore, to ensure that at least one of the ministers was available to appear before the committee.

In my opinion the motion is one of censure on the government for its failure to ensure that the committee was in a position to do its job. I sincerely regret that, because of the lack of time available to one of the most important committees of this House, we were unable to question the minister responsible for industry, trade and commerce or the two ministers of state allied with that ministry. This motion for concurrence has been brought before the House in order to emphasize the point that in difficult times such as we are facing today, when it is so important to question ministers on their new policies, it is most regrettable it should have been found impossible for any one of four ministers or any officials of the ministries represented by those ministers to appear before the committee. Regretfully, therefore, I bring before the House this motion for concurrence.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has raised a very important question, for two reasons, first of all because of the way in which the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has to conduct itself because of the pressure from the cabinet on the members of the committee from the back benches of the Conservative party and, second, because of the rather extraordinary position in which we find ourselves because the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. de Cotret) does not sit in this House. As his counterpart in the New Democratic Party I do not have the opportunity to ask that minister any questions with respect to government policy. I might point out that in addition to his other responsibilities he is chairman of the economic committee of the inner cabinet and therefore the most influential member of the cabinet with respect to economic policy. In these circumstances it is extraordinary he should not be in this House. In fact I would be happy to resign my seat if he cares to come to Broadview-Greenwood and face the electorate in an election.

[Mr. Herbert.]

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Rae: It is up to him to decide whether he wishes to do so. I say that in all sincerity. Since he is not in this House he has an even greater obligation to all members of the committee, regardless of party, to make his time available to the committee and to appear in the very limited period we have in which to do our work.

I join with the hon. member for Vaudreuil in expressing my concern, and bring once again to the attention of the House the fact that the chief economic adviser to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) is not a member of this chamber, the difficulty in which this places members of the opposition and, in particular, members of this party which does not have any representation in the Senate.

It is high time the chief economic adviser to the government was a member of this House. The least he could do would be to make himself available when a committee is meeting and when it has a very tight schedule before it because of the workload it is carrying. He should at least have the courtesy to appear before it. We are moving in ways which are an affront not only to the committee but to democracy itself, and it is worth taking a little time to draw attention to this aspect and, once again, to underline the absurdity of the chief economic adviser to the cabinet not being a member of this House.

The present arrangement constitutes an affront to members of the House of Commons and places members of this party, in particular, in a difficult position because they are not in a position to question him to find out what his policies are, how he feels about the interest rate, how he feels about the effects on trade and development, how he feels about industrial strategy, and how he feels about the general direction the government is taking. It is ludicrous that this gentleman is not a member of this House and that he is not presenting himself for election in the by-elections which are being held. In all sincerity I offer, if he wants to come down to Broadview-Greenwood and contest that seat, I will gladly resign, contest it, and take him on.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is a temptation.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—PARKING LOTS

Question No. 289—Mr. Herbert:

Is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs aware of complaints that in some parking lots the entry clocks are kept from five to seven minutes slow, thus sometimes doubling the posted charge and making it difficult for the patron to contest the calculation of time at the exit station?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, I am aware of such complaints. My officials in weights and measures have and will continue to investigate these complaints. Recently one such complaint here, in Ottawa, led to prosecution and conviction on four charges.

Although a rather extensive survey of parking meters and parking lots showed a very high compliance rate for these services, we continue to carry out an ongoing program of surveillance on service and facilities provided on the basis of time, and this program includes clocks at parking lots.

OLD AGE SECURITY OFFICE

Question No. 369—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Are those persons handling telephone inquiries at the Department of National Health and Welfare's Old Age Security Office in Quebec City able to speak in both official languages?

2. Is the government prepared to investigate a complaint by the honourable member for Leeds that on March 2, 1979, his office staff telephoned the Old Age Security Office's Main Switchboard Number in Quebec City, and could not receive any satisfactory communication in the English language without being referred to the director or his immediate staff?

3. Is the government prepared immediately to see that the public are in future served in both official languages at the Quebec City office?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes.

2. It is the income security programs branch policy to refer all calls originating from the offices of members of Parliament to the director's office, thereby ensuring the action required, as well as strengthening communication lines between the department and all members of Parliament. It is for this reason that the member's staff was referred to the director's office.

3. See reply to part 1.

[Mr. Crombie.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations expressed by the parliamentary secretary is it the pleasure of the House that notices of motions Nos. 18 and 23 be deemed to have been adopted?

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Kilgour: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the other notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope it has not escaped the attention of the House that when the first four motions for the production of papers were called the motions were granted. With regard to the fifth one called, the minister said the document does not exist. I hope the importance of that approach has not escaped hon. members.

Mr. Knowles: Keep it up.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We will do our best.

Following upon that, Your Honour will recall that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) raised a question as to who would be answering in the House for the Northern Pipeline Agency, and I indicated to him at that time that I would be doing so for the time being. I wish to inform the House that the member of the government who will be answering in the House of Commons to questions relating to the Northern Pipeling Agency will be the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 30, consideration in committee of Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan—Mr. Crosbie—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening clause 6 of the bill was under consideration. Shall clause 6 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clauses 7 and 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, this is the first opportunity I have had to congratulate the parliamentary secretary publicly on his appointment. His riding neighbours my own, and we represent very similar districts in the east end of Toronto. I want to congratulate him on his appointment.

I want also to ask him a question with respect to clause 9. Can he explain it? We, and particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg North will be asking questions with respect to tax breaks and credits for research and scientific development. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could tell the house the cost to revenues of the proposals contained in clauses 9 and 10, which I think should be taken together. If he could explain that to the House perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North will have some more detailed questions.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, first I would like to thank the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood for his courtesy in welcoming me to this role and to the House this afternoon. I appreciate that very much. As he has said, we are neighbours and represent very similar ridings, but this does not prevent us from having slightly different political philosophies.

As to the nature of the amendment in clause 9, the amendment ensures that a special deduction which already exists for research and development expenses for hobby farms will be extended not only to the normal expense deduction but also to the special additional allowance for scientific research introduced last year. This permits a hobby farmer to deduct both the normal 100 per cent for research expenses and a special 50 per cent deduction for increased research expenses whether or not his farming operation is profitable.

The hon. member asked me about the cost in terms of revenue given up under clauses 9 and 10. I will have to inquire whether we have a figure on that. I am informed that for both of these two clauses the revenue effect is likely to be very small indeed. Clause 10 deals with a technical amendment and the major cost under R and D proposals in the bill is in a later clause to which we will come, which is clause 40.

Mr. Orlikow: I understand that research and development have not been undertaken to a large extent by hobby farmers. I have been told by farmers I know that hobby farmers are usually city people who partly want to get away from the rush of living in the city and partly are looking for a way to pay less income tax and so live on a farm but do not farm seriously. Is there a suggestion implicit in this clause that hobby farmers are involved in any serious research and development and, if so, what evidence is there of that fact?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): May I say to the hon. member that, first of all, research and development have to be real or they do not qualify, and in fact some so-called hobby farmers do extensive research in, for instance, breeding of farm animals and perhaps even of plants.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 10 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 14—

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could explain this particular clause. I am not clear on it and I wonder if it could be cleared up.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, this clause was designed to prevent the artificial creation of capital losses. Section 85(4) of the act stipulates that no capital loss is recognized where a taxpayer disposes of a property to a corporation which he controls. If the taxpayer owns shares of the corporation acquiring the property, the disallowed loss is added to the cost of his shares and will serve to reduce any capital gain on their ultimate disposal. Where the taxpayer does not own any shares of the corporation, the disallowed loss is added to the cost of the property to the purchaser corporation. In effect, the property in these circumstances is rolled over, that is, its cost to the corporation is equal to its cost in the hands of the taxpayer prior to the transaction. Subclause 14(1) is relieving and corrects a technical deficiency in the provision described.

Subclause 14(2) is a consequential change related to the changes to subsection 13(7.1) of the act. This change provides uniform treatment for the investment tax credit claimed by a co-operative corporation for purposes of computing capital gains on the depreciable property.

Mr. Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 15—

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear an explanation of this clause from the parliamentary secretary. I know it has been the cause of a great deal of litigation and concern with respect to termination payments, and I wonder if he can tell us what the government is trying to do in this clause.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, the amendment requires the inclusion in income of certain amounts received on the termination of employment. Such amounts are referred to,

of course, as termination payments. The definition of this expression is provided in section 248 of the act as amended by clause 65 of this bill. Generally, a termination payment is defined as the equivalent of a six months' employment income. This amount is to be included in the taxpayer's income. Damages in excess of six months income will continue to be exempt from tax. The tax-free status of damages has led to considerable abuse. Many taxpayers, on leaving employment, have sought to convert taxable salary or wage income to exempt damages for wrongful dismissal. The amendment will curtail the opportunity for abuse of this kind by requiring the inclusion in income of damages received by an employee for wrongful dismissal to the extent that they represent up to six months salary.

Mr. Rae: This is a good example why I think the government party owes it to itself to explain what is happening because, as the parliamentary secretary has just described, what was going on in the marketplace was an abuse. As the parliamentary secretary knows, we had an anomalous situation where certain kinds of termination payments were regarded as income and were taxable, and in order to avoid this fact, many individuals who were being terminated were arranging to conduct litigation—there is no other way of putting it—against their employers in order to receive damages in lieu of termination payments. Damages following from certain decisions of the tax appeal board and from the federal court were exempt from taxation.

I think this is of interest to members of Parliament and it is something of which they should be aware because this is something which has gone on in the marketplace. There has been an abuse, someone has spotted a loophole, which has become wider and wider, and now the government has chosen to close it, wisely so and I am glad they have done so. All I am suggesting is that it is sometimes helpful that instead of just braying our agreement with these clauses we should try to explain them to the people so that when they come to look at our debates, if they ever do, they see that some things are being explained. Certainly I do and the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) does as well, so at least we have cleared that up.

The Chairman: Is clause 15 agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 16 agreed to.

On clause 17—

Mr. Rae: I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary to explain this clause, and perhaps later I will have some comments to make on it.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member will be glad to know that this is a relieving amendment. It is consequential upon the recent changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. It applies where an individual receives unemployment insurance benefits in a year and has income for the year in excess of a stated limit. Under the amendments affecting unemployment insurance, the recipient in these circumstances is required to make a repayment of 30 per cent of the excess portion of his unemployment insurance benefits when he files his income tax return for that year. Such a repayment has been separately defined in the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as a benefit repayment to differentiate it from ordinary recoveries of overpayments of unemployment insurance benefits. Under the existing law, any repayment of a benefit is deductible only in the year in which it is repaid. The amendment permits the deduction of the benefit repayment for the year in which it relates. Ordinarily, that will be the year preceding that in which it is paid.

Mr. Rae: I think that the relieving aspects of it are important, but it is also important to know that the government would not have had to bring in this piece of legislation if it had not brought in Bill C-14 which became the unemployment insurance amendments to which we in this party took such strong exception and to which so many members of the Conservative party, most notably the hon. member for St. John's East, now Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, took such exception in the House and in committee when he was one of the critics on the bill. So I think it is important for people to recognize that the reason for this is that the government has decided, and so have the Liberals, that unemployment insurance will no longer be treated as insurance, that in fact those individuals who made more than $22,000 are going to be forced to repay their unemployment insurance to the government.

Albeit that this is relieving legislation, it is important for people to be aware of the fact that were it not for the original legislation passed by the Liberal party, now concurred in by the Conservative party and by the regulations promulgated and concurred in by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, it would not have been necessary for the government to bring in this so-called relieving legislation.

The Chairman: Shall clause 17 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 18 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 19—

Mr. Rae: I am simply unclear on this, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if this clause could be made clear. It may not be possible, but I wonder if it can be done.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, there are four parts to this particular change. Because it is a technical matter I think I will give the explanation in reasonably full terms.

This and the clause which follows are of interest to resource companies in the mining, oil and gas industries. Section 66 provides for the deduction of Canadian and foreign exploration and development expenses. Also the section defines a Canadian resource property, principal business corporation and shareholder corporation of a joint exploration company. This clause makes a number of amendments to section 66 of the act.

In the first place it introduces a requirement for joint elections where Canadian exploration and development expenses incurred after 1971 and before May 7, 1974, by one company called a predecessor corporation are transferred or carried over for deduction by another corporation, a successor corporation or a second successor corporation. This election is designed to avoid disputes which have arisen in the past between taxpayers as to whether these so-called succcessor corporation rules are to apply. The election ensures that both the transferor and transferee agree that these special rules are intended to apply. A similar change is proposed for the transfer of Canadian exploration expense in section 66.1 of the act and Canadian development expense in section 66.2. As I understand that, it is to ensure that two people are not claiming the same deduction for expenses.

The second change in section 66 extends the deduction with respect to the exploration and development expenses of a successor corporation. These expenses are deducted only against the income of the successor corporation from the properties transferred to it from a predecessor corporation. The change will permit these expenses to be deducted from certain reserves transferred by a predecessor corporation which arose in connection with the sale of resource property.

There are two more provisions. A third change to this section of the act will clarify that the right to store petroleum, natural gas or other related hydrocarbons is a "Canadian resource property" as defined. This change ensures that both the vendor and the purchaser of a resource property receive similar tax treatment. An amendment to Bill C-37 clarifies that this rule only applies to underground storage rights. I believe Bill C-37 was introduced after the budget of the previous Parliament. The purchaser will include the cost in his cumulative Canadian development expense, and the vendor will deduct the proceeds from the balance of his unclaimed Canadian development expense.

The final change to section 66 is to remove the references to syndicates or associations in the definition of foreign exploration and development expenses, etc. Under our tax law there is no tax status for a syndicate or association. Therefore these words are rather irrelevant.

Mr. Rae: This takes us into the area which I thought we would get into. Certainly we will get into that area by the time we reach consideration of clause 20. I gave notice to the minister yesterday that we intended to debate these issues. Before getting into debate, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he can tell us what underground petroleum, natural gas and other related hydrocarbon storage sites there are currently in Canada. How many are we talking about? What are we talking about here?

[Mr. Ritchie (York East).]

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, the number of those which exist and are in use at the moment is relatively small. They are mostly natural cave formations. As the hon. member will know, there is considerable debate about the wisdom in the future of having major storage facilities at this point, for instance, as a potential reserve for the Atlantic provinces. But at the moment there are very few in actual use.

Mr. Rae: I take it that the cost to the treasury of this additional write-off would be minimal? Is that what is being said?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): At the present time it would be and only if there was a great need that was fulfilled in the future would it ever be of significant size.

Mr. Rae: I might just take this opportunity to ask the parliamentary secretary if he can give us the cost, as we get into this clause and the next one which deals with exploration expenses, drilling allowances and so forth. Can he give us the cost not only of this particular measure but also the cost of all resource development measures contained in the budget?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): So far as clause 19 is concerned, the cost is negligible. As I interpret it, it is only for the underground storage which we have just been discussing. If anything, the other clauses save revenue or save disputes about revenue. I will search for an answer as to the cost in relation to clause 20. I do not have it at my fingertips at the moment.

Mr. Skelly: I should like to ask a question referring to clause 19.(6) on page 15. Do I understand it correctly that there is a deduction available, that deductions are being provided for oil companies and other resource corporations for foreign exploration and development expenses?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, that is true. Such a deduction is allowed but only to the extent of foreign income, not as a net deduction from Canadian income.

Mr. Skelly: In this particular clause foreign income is accumulated with Canadian income. Dealing with foreign income, companies can make a deduction based on their expenses and development costs in a foreign area. It seems to be working as an incentive. We are concerned about very large earnings of oil companies within Canada at the present time. This almost provides an incentive to remove funds from this country to develop resources in other areas of the world, yet we are providing a deduction for them against income earned. No matter where it is earned, we are taxing income that a company has accumulated. We should be looking at ways of discouraging multinational oil companies working within Canada from earning windfall profits, exporting those profits to develop in more profitable areas of the world, and then providing an incentive to save through our Income Tax Act.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, the first thing I am sure the hon. member would wish to recognize is that we are talking about Canadian taxpayers; we are not talking about non-Canadian taxpayers. Secondly, this is a normal arrangement, not just for oil companies and mining companies but for any kind of business which operates abroad. It is normal for these businesses to have their legitimate expenses deducted before taxable income is calculated. There is nothing novel, new or different about this.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Chairman, whether or not it is novel or new, a couple of days ago we were asked to authorize the Government of Canada to borrow $7 billion to cover, in my opinion, losses in revenues through the tax savings that these corporations and businesses in other stronger sectors of our economy, including banks and oil companies, have been able to realize. I am very concerned that this literally provides an incentive to a very important sector of our economy to invest money earned in this country in foreign markets. I feel the government's policy will make this investment even more profitable, particularly when we think of the increase in the cost of energy and things along that line. These companies are going to extract more profits from the people in this country, and the incentive in this particular paragraph will encourage foreign investment, especially in areas where it is more profitable, and we are going to allow them to deduct their expenses from income when we should be attempting to protect that capital that is generated within this country and see that it is used strictly for Canadian purposes.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the hon. member is arguing that while Canada is host to investment from abroad it should never itself invest abroad. That is not a principle I find very attractive in terms of the Canadian economy. If we are going to permit Canadians, individuals, companies or otherwise, to invest abroad, before we tax the earnings they make as a result of that enterprise which yields tax revenues to Canada we should at least allow them to deduct their legitimate expenses. If we do not, certainly Canadians will not invest abroad.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Chairman, we should also protect and make sure that capital generated within this country is used to develop it. I have heard members on the opposite benches moan and groan about having to raise interest rates in this country because capital is flowing out. Instead of protecting the capital we have here, clauses such as this tend to encourage that capital to flow out. What I would suggest is possibly a re-examination of this kind of logic. We should in fact be attempting to protect capital within this country, especially in important areas such as resources and energy.

The other question the parliamentary secretary referred to relates to Canadian taxpayers. We have a long history littered with Canadian taxpaying firms that are controlled by companies in other countries which have in fact made determined efforts to drain their profits out. We know of dividend payments, interest payments, and the hiring of expensive services outside this country. What we have now is investment capital from some of these transnational corporations going one way, with the dividends and other benefits going another, without much of it arriving in Canada to achieve this nation's goals.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, before the parliamentary secretary replies to my colleague perhaps I may be permitted to ask whether this paragraph allows companies, such as Inco which was on strike for many months, almost a year, to invest in such celebrated democracies as Indonesia and Guatemala through tax arrears, or overdue payments on taxes allowed by the Canadian government? This is also the clause which allows them to invest overseas and claim business expenses before paying taxes.

Since most resource companies, certainly the oil companies, are not celebrated as companies paying massive taxes, because they have so many tax breaks of this kind, would the parliamentary secretary indicate if it is possible for his assistants at the desk to tell us what kind of income Canada receives in income tax from investment in foreign corporations or foreign resource industries overseas?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, it might be worth pointing out to the hon. member and his colleague that we are dealing only with technical amendments here. We are not altering anything that bears on the points being raised about foreign investment. With regard to the questions about the principle of foreign investment, I think I have already responded to them as straightforwardly as I can.

Mr. Rose: Be that as it may, Mr. Chairman, I realize it does tend to put the parliamentary secretary at a considerable disadvantage when questions such as this are raised, particularly when he feels they really are not relevant to the matter before us. We disagree with that. If it is possible for the hon. member to provide those answers I think some of us would be very grateful.

Whether those on the opposite side like it or not, this House is a platform for the expression of concern on the part of Canadian people regarding a great many general policy matters. While we on this side of the House do not want to prolong this unduly, we would like to have those answers. I know that our colleagues in the Liberal benches cannot be expected to ask many questions about this as it is their legislation and obviously they approved it. I note that members on the other side also approved it. We think that is rather nice because in the province I come from we do not have the problem of a minority government. We pushed the Liberals and the Conservatives into one camp a long time ago, and they are called Social Credit.

If it is possible I would like to find out the extent of these business exemptions that are offered, in order to compare them with the kind of income we get from these companies. The hon. member has said they are taxpayers, and I would like to know what kind of income we get from the these Canadian businesses investing in other countries such as Guatemala where labour is two bits an hour. Perhaps we could then see whether all this nonsense about these clauses is really worth it.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I am not certain whether it is possible to find definitive answers to that kind of question. The hon. member should be aware that life is considerably more complicated than his question suggests. For instance, much of the capital for these foreign investments may be raised abroad. I know, for instance, that when Canadian companies go to the United States they usually find it much more attractive to raise capital in the United States than here in Canada where it costs more. This is often true, so that to the extent this takes place, some of the force of the question is at least undermined. I will undertake to see what I can find out by way of information on the questions raised, and if I can find anything concrete and useful I will be glad to report back.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I have one final point I should like to put to the parliamentary secretary. I say to the parliamentary secretary that nothing in life is simple, especially something as complex as the Income Tax Act. Let me share with him the view that Canadian companies often raise their money for foreign investment in the foreign country in which they operate. This is also true of U.S. companies that come here. Very often the value of investment capital coming to this country is not nearly as great as we are sometimes told, and that is because of the fact that Canadian banks and other financial institutions help American subsidiaries to grow by providing the money in this country. I am sure the hon. member, through his past role and profession, is well aware of that.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to offer a suggestion—

● (1600)

The Chairman: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Dauphin.

Mr. Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Chairman, we have been constantly lectured by Third World countries that we are not doing enough for them. With regard to the mine in Guatemala which the hon. member just mentioned, it seems to me that we have contributed substantially to development in that country. Even though the wages may only be two bits an hour, they are still greater than what they were before. At any rate, in many cases these companies are taken over by those Third World governments, and they end up with the assets which Canada has contributed in the development of the country.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, if a Canadian company is working in a foreign country and earns certain money as a result, then certainly the Canadian government should not be taxing that company on the money earned. The company has already paid the taxes to that country in which the money was earned and, therefore, it would amount to double taxation and discourage Canadian companies from investing in other countries. I do not think that it has anything to do with the matter of money earned in Canada, but that it does have something to do with the money earned in another country. I think that it is only proper that a Canadian company not be taxed twice.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, the comments raised by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River suggest to me that he is under the impression that this particular clause refers to earnings or profits. On reading the clause and the notes on the opposite page, it seems to me that it refers to expenses. Could the parliamentary secretary clarify this matter? Is this clause merely adding the underground storage feature as one of the charges a Canadian company would incur in this foreign operation and saying that it would be deductible for income tax purposes, not as profits? Already they are charged with respect to right, licence or privilege to drill, and now we are dealing with the charges that would be incurred by the company for storing any of the petroleum or gas which might be discovered in the course of exploration. Could the parliamentary secretary confirm that it is really costs incurred, or am I misreading the clause myself?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is costs incurred.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my remarks, within the context of this particular discussion, to the previous speaker. He suggested that we might be double taxing corporations which are removing investment capital from this country that we desperately need and that we are attempting to protect. Are we encouraging corporations that have developed the resource-based economy in this country and neglected the processing resource and, therefore, the income potential and the job potential within the country, to do the same thing in other countries?

What we are foisting on many other developing nations are these transnational corporations, which have not gone the full distance with the Canadian people considering the type of benefits the parliamentary secretary is continuing to bestow upon them. These companies have not gone into processing and manufacturing, thereby extending the benefits which would accrue to the people in this country. Instead, these companies are now going out into cheaper areas in the world and perpetrating the same kind of development, developing the resources and exporting them. Therefore, these countries also are not seeing the kind of development which Canada would like to see for itself.

What I am suggesting is that this is not only causing a flow of capital out of our country, but it is enhancing the kind of development which many of us would not like to see other developing nations go through. Many people would like to see their economies in a full, rounded manner and not strictly for the benefit of these transnational corporations. Through income tax and other mechanisms which we have provided, we are encouraging these companies to do just that, instead of fulfilling their social responsibilities which they have as citizens.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, this is the clause on which we would like to hear the figures. Before I indicate to the government in full what our concerns are, because they do affect a very vital matter, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could give us the figures on the cost of extending the date from 1979 to 1982.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member has just pointed out, the principal effect of this clause is to extend the date of the 100 per cent write-off provision for Canadian exploration expenses for individual and non-principal business corporations. That provision originally applied until June 30 of this year. It was extended by the previous minister of finance by a remission order to the end of this calendar year. The provision would be extended by this bill to December 31, 1981.

The effect is to permit a 100 per cent write-off in the first year of those expenses. In that sense it is a tax deferral because what is written off in the first year cannot be written off in subsequent years. The effect, I am informed, in the first year is to postpone some $80 million of revenue.

Mr. Rae: The question one must ask is, deferred until when? The parliamentary secretary knows that these things are accumulative and are continually deferred as time goes on. Therefore, there is no reckoning day that one could predict. What will happen is that it will continue to be deferred as exploration continues.

There is a very basic question here, and it relates to the question of oil prices, the question of the relationship between our manufacturing sector and our resource sector, to the survival of PetroCan, to the fact that we have subsidized—not only through this particular measure, but through other measures—the drilling allowance, and to the special shelters that have been created for wealthy investors in the frontier allowance field, all these expenditures. I am delighted that the Minister of Finance will be indicating what these expenditures are. I hope those expenditures will include deferrals because they, too, are a form of expenditure.

But all of these measures, the fast write-offs, the super depreciation, depletion and so on, are a form of public expenditure which subsidizes some forms of economic activity at the expense of others, and in which the government and the taxpayers are subsidizing particular companies and particular concerns. I think that it is worth while to point out to the government that the effective rate of taxation of the five large petroleum companies between 1974 and 1978 was 17.9 per cent and that the effective rate of taxation of medium-sized companies, including Dome Petroleum which does not pay any taxes, was 17.7 per cent.

The member for Saint-Henri-Westmount says that one cannot compare a company to an ordinary individual, that a corporation cannot be dealt with as though it were a person, but that we must recognize when talking about a corporation that we are talking about shareholders, investors, and that therefore we must relate it to the individual tax system. That is well and fine, but I would simply point out that the average income of those people who are investing in the companies with which we are concerned is far higher than the average or medium income in Canada.

We also have to recognize that this interference, and this is one more example of it, with the operation of the so-called free market in which members opposite are so proud to be believers, creates tremendous distortions.

It might be worth while if I quote what Professor Bossons, an economist at the University of Toronto, said when asked for his views on current tax allowances in the energy field. His views were reported in The Globe and Mail for October 17, 1979. He said:

> I certainly don't have the feeling that the incentives are inadequate. They're extremely generous.

As he sees it, these allowances have the effect of encouraging a trend toward concentration in the industry. I do not think he is a member of my party, but I want to read what he had to say. He said:

> The companies that can take advantage are mainly the large vertically integrated ones.
> Mr. Bossons contended that the incentives are aimed mainly at tapping profits rather than at influencing investment. He summed up the package of existing incentives as "a lot of second-best attempts to offset byproducts of other second-best attempts."
> He also suggested that allowing oil companies to reduce their effective rate of taxation limits the ability of government to provide incentives for areas of the economy that could produce more jobs. And it tends to increase taxes in real terms in other industries while lowering them in the oil industry.
> Government must make a conscious choice in devising incentives, so that it doesn't overstimulate one industry at the expense of another, Mr. Bossons said. One reason for formation of Petro-Canada, he suggested, was to attempt to get a little more competition in the oil industry. Without the Crown oil company Ottawa would be "essentially at the mercy of the industry that's not far away from being a cartel."
> Mr. Bossons said foreign ownership of the oil industry is actually being encouraged by the current tax rules. If the system were neutral the incentives would be "things that can be taken advantage of exactly as easily by 'domestic' companies as by the foreign-owned concerns."

These are very critical questions. Obviously the parliamentary secretary is not in a position to answer them today. I want to suggest to the parliamentary secretary, and through him to the minister, that when it comes time for the budget and for a decision on oil prices, I want him to recognize that when we talk about the 1980s and the amount of capital resources to be expended on research and development in the oil and natural gas industry, unless this is done properly and fairly two or three things will happen, although they have been happening since the 1970s.

The parliamentary secretary may recall that it was Mr. Kierans who resigned from the Liberal cabinet precisely because in 1972 he could see the writing on the wall. He could see the dramatic distortions which would be taking place in the Canadian economy if we continued to give as we did give right through the 1970s the tremendous incentives and advantages to the oil industry, whereas no incentive or advantage was given to the manufacturing or processing industry in Canada. As a result of that we have seen the dramatic weakening of our manufacturing base and the tragedy of an $11 billion deficit in the trade of finished goods that we have now. That is a direct result of incentive and tax policies by the Government of Canada which was initiated in the 1970s. That is one thing that will continue in the 1980s. But we will have a continued distortion and domination of our oil industry by foreign companies, subsidized by the Canadian taxpayer.

With the elimination of Petro-Canada, we are eliminating the only competition that exists in that vital industry as well as the only means we have at the moment of seeing precisely what is going on in the fields of exploration, research and development, and in other related energy fields. You cannot separate these questions. The Liberals failed to do so as we saw in the dramatic failure which occurred in the 1970s. That failure has led to an extraordinary subsidy amounting to billions of dollars to the oil industry at the expense of not just the principle of fairness—which I have spoken about earlier—but also the structure of Canadian industry and our ability to survive as an industrial nation. I think it is vital for the parliamentary secretary to take our concerns to the minister.

Let me say this as well, that one of the excuses which the oil industry has been using against the Canadian people for having these extraordinary—and they are extraordinary by any stretch of the imagination—subsidies of these vast multinational corporations by the taxpayer is that by keeping the price of oil down it forces us to rely on these fast write offs as a means of finding ways to finance the necessary research, development and exploration.

I have never been persuaded by that excuse. It is not borne out by the profit figures which they have been giving us. If that excuse is true, then there is one thing the Minister of Finance will be able to do in this budget provided that he has an agreement on oil pricing and a strategy for oil pricing in the 1980s.

No longer will the oil companies have the excuse of relying on a two-fold subsidy. But instead of having the one major subsidy we had in the 1970s, which subsidy was right through the tax system, in the 1980s they want an additional one. They want an addition to the tax subsidy. They want an extraordinary subsidy of price, if you like.

We are entitled to get from the parliamentary secretary—and if he cannot get it for us today I guess we will have to wait for the Conservative budget—an explanation from the minister as to the logic of this policy in terms of the relationship between the different sectors of the economy as to why we are allowing such extraordinary write-offs in one sector and not in another. I think we are also entitled from the point of view of a good deal for the Canadian people to ask ourselves why, when we are entering into an economy where the public corporation can apparently survive only with the incredible series of crutches and supports of incentives and grants of direct money and of tax expenditures from the Canadian public, we receive nothing in return?

[Mr. Rae.]

We are told by the provinces we have no right to the resources. We are told by the oil companies that we are interfering in the private enterprise system at the same time as this whole structure depends on an incredible number of incentives, grants, write-offs, and tax depreciations which result in a serious loss of taxation to the Canadian public.

I hope we will have a clear statement from the parliamentary secretary as to what he thinks the effective rate of taxation in those industries should be. If he thinks it should be down to 18, 17 or 16 per cent, then I hope the government will come clean and say that is the policy of the Government of Canada and that we expect the Canadian people to bear this price when the normal corporate rate is 46 per cent. I think the people of Canada are entitled to know what they are getting in exchange for this extraordinary expenditure.

Finally, if we move toward a world price, and we on this side of the House think that will be a disaster, and not necessary, but if the government insists on moving toward the world price—no doubt there would be no difference if the Liberal party were in power—we are then entitled to say to them, "Look, to pay one tribute is enough, and if the oil companies are determined to let the so-called world market in oil determine their price system, then do not come back to the public trough for the second time."

You cannot have the best of both worlds. You cannot move toward the world price and continue this absurd situation of subsidizing to such a great extent the takeover of our own resources and the development of our country. This tax question is profound. It relates to the industrial future. It relates to the future of the economic system and how much longer we can continue subsidizing these large corporations without having any say or influence in their policy, without having any policy to control the direction and investment, apart from using these various carrots that have been thrown in front of them since they went on strike in 1974.

We are entitled to put on the record how deep our concerns are, and how ill-advised the Liberal party was. It led to a foreign takeover of our resource industry. We are in a bad situation and the policies that are being continued by this government will only confirm our difficulties. This will confirm our status in the world as basically dependent on foreign multinational companies for the development of our own natural resources. It will confirm how our industrial structure is weakened because of this. The fairness of this tax break is also brought into question.

For all those reasons, Mr. Chairman, this measure is wrong and should be defeated. It has no place in the budget of a self-respecting people who are prepared to take the industrial and resource future into their own hands. We reject it out of hand as an approach. It is deplorable.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand some of the remarks of the NDP critic. Once again that party is up to its old tricks. The hon. member stated there will be an elimination of Petro-Canada. I would like him to produce the evidence of that. The plans are not to eliminate Petro-Canada but to strengthen it. Therefore the hon. member loses his credibility when he makes that statement, and also his credibility with regard to anything else he said in the debate this afternoon.

I wish to give some information to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. I have here figures that have been compiled by a Winnipeg firm with regard to business and investment money that moved out of the province of Manitoba during the disastrous eight years under an NDP government there. I want to ask what plans there are to stop businesses and investment money leaving Canada, which left in large amouts during the last four or five years of the Liberal regime. I will place these figures on the record to let the House know what happens under different types of government.

These statistics were compiled by P. H. Jerch, head of Peter Henry Jerch & Associates in Winnipeg. He claims the trend in business and investment money leaving Manitoba and Canada has been going on for a number of years. He points out, and I quote:

Countries or for that matter provinces which have nationalistic, leftist or extremely strong bureaucratic tendencies make striving and successful entrepreneurs feel uncomfortable.

That was the climate that came about in Manitoba under an NDP government and the last Liberal regime in Canada. The figures were staggering on the number of businesses and the amount of money leaving Canada. Many American states established offices in Canada to assist businesses to move out of this country because of the extremely strong bureaucratic tendencies.

Mr. Jerch has given a number of figures regarding firms that moved out of Manitoba durng the NDP regime. He provided statistics for 24 Manitoba based smaller and medium-sized firms, and the amount of money which left the province of Manitoba because of the NDP government, which frightens business and investment to death. For these 24 firms, there was a loss of 4,000 jobs to the province of Manitoba.

He compiled other statistics based on actual survey, and I quote:

In a current survey by Peter Henry Jerch & Associates of 42 smaller and medium-sized active manufacturing and service enterprises, only 12 were looking for acquisitions in Canada only. Fifteen thought they would consider a further acquisition or investment in Canada as a second alternative, which suggests that reason tells them to go elsewhere but that they still tend to be an optimist despite all their complaints. However, 30 of the 42 are either actively looking in the U.S. or have already made one or more acquisition or investment decisions there. These 42 are, incidentally, a fair and representative sample of the average successful Canadian business enterprise. Together they are likely to spend, directly and indirectly, from a low of $63,000,000 to a high of $160,000,000 in their investments and acquisitions over the next few years. Only between $7,000,000 to $19,000,000 are definitely scheduled for Canada, with the remainder going to the U.S.

It is a political climate that is conducive to attracting business and investment. To give some idea how serious the problem is, Kentucky now calls itself the eleventh province. That is because so many Canadian businesses have been driven out of this country by socialist groups in Manitoba and British Columbia and by the previous Liberal administration which was about as left as any group can go. Referring to these firms, he said:

They currently received about $9,000,000 annual for export sales. Which means that if they establish a subsidiary, joint venture or the like in the U.S., within the next couple of years they will expend, in investment or acquisition funds, realistically about $90,000,000. If you then consider that an additional $40,000,000 will not be coming back, the loss to Canada of even this small sample is about $130,000,000—

The loss of jobs with regard to these 42 Canadian firms will be between 4,300 and 13,000 jobs. The statistics I have just read are very hard to—

The Chairman: Order, please. I am having some difficulty trying to attach the remarks of the hon. member to the clause. We are in Committee of the Whole. The clause refers to exploration expenses, not investment. The case being made by the hon. member is not in relation to this clause.

Possibly the hon. member can explain to me how this relates to the clause. I do not want to prevent him contributing to the debate, but I hesitate to allow him to continue along this line. He is speaking about loss of jobs and investment abroad, not to exploration expenses allowances through the Income Tax Act.

Mr. McKenzie: A good point, Mr. Chairman. In any event, I have my figures on the record. They could partially pertain to that clause. Possibly the parliamentary secretary can now tell us what plans the government has to encourage exploration, businesses and investment in this country. I know this has been the trend since this government has taken over. Perhaps he can enlighten the committee along these lines.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has detected a difference, a difference in climate and some of the slight modifications made to the original Bill C-37 that are embodied in the bill before us. The further steps he might reasonably anticipate will no doubt come in the budget, and some of the subsequent programs of the government will be designed to get the economy of the country moving again, as we all wish it to do.

May I comment on some of the points raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. He strayed, perhaps consciously, a long way from the provisions of the clause before us. In fact some of his remarks might well be construed as support for what this clause does. He spoke of what he considers to be undue benefits to the oil companies. As I am sure he knows, this particular clause might be construed as a step to ensure that other potential and actual investors in exploration are on the same basis or on a not less favourable basis than an oil company. This extension of the right to charge exploration expenses in the year made, applies to individuals and non-principal business corporations, as the unwieldy phrase goes.

Some of the hon. member's comments in a more general vein do deserve a reaction. One of the tests of any incentive given by way of taxes or otherwise in the market economy is whether it works. The incentive given here is really a deferral of taxes, a deferral which does not go on for ever. The first deferral is paid when there is income to tax it against and, if one looks at it logically, it is future exploration expenses which are deferred thereafter. So there may be a turn-over of deferred taxes if a company continues its exploration activities on a sufficient scale depending to some degree, of course, on the revenue eventually achieved.

I think it would be hard to say in the circumstances facing this country, that the amount of exploration for oil and gas here is excessive. Our concern is that it has not been greater. Some of the sources to which we now have to look for future reserves are, by and large, very expensive either because of exceptionally adverse weather conditions and distances involved, or because production costs are higher than we have been accustomed to. If the point is reached at which taxes on the industry and all kinds of investors in this search for energy becomes excessive, become obviously wasteful, only then will we be able to say that the tax arrangements are too attractive. That, I believe, is the test of any tax incentive or other kind of incentive given to an industry of any kind, not just to the oil industry.

The hon. member also attempted to suggest that the deterioration in manufacturing competitiveness in this country was due to the inducements given to mining and oil company exploration. I find that a farfetched explanation of an undoubted fact. There has, indeed, been a deterioration in the competitive position of manufacturing in this country and the situation has only been saved, and that temporarily, by the depreciation of the dollar, a depreciation which marks the failure, not the success, of economic policy.

I doubt that the decline in the competitiveness of manufacturing industry in this country was in any way due to excessive direction of capital to mining and oil exploration activities. I believe there are much more evident and realistic causes therefor—one could look for them in levels of wages and salaries in this country which exceeded those in the United States at a time when our productivity was known to be, on average, 15 to 20 per cent lower than theirs. Whatever the causes of that situation, the effect on the declining competitiveness of Canadian manufacturing can be seen, whereas the effect the hon. member appeared to suggest cannot be seen.

I end by making two points. First, this particular clause is not addressed to the oil companies but to individuals and non-oil companies whose principal business is not in oil exploration. Its purpose is to induce investment from both sources, not, as the hon. member suggested, to add to monopoly or near cartel, as he chooses to call it, but rather the reverse—to get more people into the act. In the second place, the final test will be whether it provides the results intended. The evidence so far is that it has produced results and its extension is therefore more than warranted.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): I do not want to delay the discussion, Mr. Chairman, but I believe there are definite examples which might change the mind of the hon. member from the New Democratic Party who was speaking just a few minutes ago. I recall the time when members of the New Democratic Party and its predecessor, the CCF, made almost the same speech in the Alberta legislature. That was in the forties and fifties when Alberta was one of the "have-not" provinces and the provincial government wanted to get things going by providing a tax incentive. It was not a rip-off, it was a tax incentive.

[Mr. Ritchie (York East).]

The CCF members strongly denounced it at that time. They said it would bring ruin to the whole of the province, and so on. But that incentive created the basis for the Heritage Trust Fund which Alberta has been able to establish. It put people to work and gave them an opportunity to earn a dollar and make a profit from their industry. Today more money goes into the coffers of the government from every dollar made than goes to the oil companies which did the work. The greater profit goes to the people.

The whole story can be put in a nutshell: if you provide an incentive and do not put barnacles and shackles on free enterprise, free enterprise will produce. That is what has happened in Alberta and that is what could happen in the whole of Canada if we can get the right incentives in place. I do not consider these provisions constitute a rip-off. This is an incentive which will put people to work.

Hon. members must bear in mind that this is a high risk industry. We have to decide whether we wish to be dependent on foreign oil or whether we wish to develop our own supply. We can produce sufficient oil ourselves only if we provide incentives sufficient to induce the necessary exploration and extraction. We cannot do this with tax money because the tax burden on the population would be tremendous. It can be done, though, if we induce both small companies and large companies—and they all have their place—to go out and find the oil. Afterwards, revenues will start coming in and the people will have the advantage of the production as well as the advantage of the increased prosperity which follows that type of investment.

I have heard these prophecies of doom before from members of the party over there in that corner, and they do not make any sense to me at all. I have seen what happens when governments provide incentives. Alberta today is an example. Initiatives are still being undertaken there because the government of Alberta provides incentives. A greater amount of drilling took place in Alberta last year than that undertaken in any other place because there were better incentives, and more dollars will be made in the long run. That is exactly what can happen in Canada. We want the whole of Canada to be strong and self-sufficient so that we will not be dependent on foreign material. The free enterprise system can do it.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, when we are making a clause by clause analysis of a bill, it is essential that we deal with the bill clause by clause and not go into long harangues on philosophical subjects. We should be dealing with the clause before us. There has been diarrhoea coming from hon. members opposite.

Mr. Evans: And from your side.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is about time we started looking at this clause and not philosophies.

Mr. Guay: What about your colleague?

Mr. Blenkarn: This clause is to allow people not in the oil industry either as individuals or as corporations to be induced into spending their money on a most risky thing, exploration. As a result of this provision in the act, which is about to expire, all sorts of drilling funds have been organized and sold on the public market. Those drilling funds have enabled a great many more oil rigs and other things to go into the Arctic and other places. Oil and gas have been found.

This is not a long-term extension. It is a short-term extension, and it is a benefit to induce Canadians to go into a very risky enterprise. This is not a great benefit to multinational oil companies. This is not for multinational oil companies. Oil companies can already deduct their exploration expenses. They are doing it all the time. What we are attempting to do is to make this country self-sufficient in energy. What we have to do is get more private capital into the game. If that is what we are trying to do, then surely we have to approve this short-term extension. In a sense it is a benefit. It is in a sense an immediate deferral. Let us get on with it and do something to make this country self-sufficient.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, let me begin by suggesting to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine that the place to debate what party shall form the government in Manitoba is really before the people of Manitoba in Manitoba, and not here in the House of Commons. I do not mind debating the subject with the hon. member, but if he wants to know how the people of Manitoba feel I suggest to him that he look at the results of the federal election in which the members who sit here now were elected just a few months ago.

His party went into the election in Manitoba believing, and saying openly, that it was confident that it could win 12 of Manitoba's 14 seats, that the only seat it was certain it could not win was the seat occupied by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and that it was reasonably confident that it could defeat me and win all the other seats in Manitoba. The fact, of course, was that the Conservatives found themselves winning only seven of those 12 seats they expected to win on election night. Our party took five seats and the Liberals, who were supposed to be wiped out, took two seats. I say to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine that we in my party, and also the Liberals, can base our success on the kinds of policies which he and his leader in Manitoba, the Premier of Manitoba, espouse.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We are dealing with clause 20, an amendment to the Income Tax Act, not the election results in Manitoba, the philosophy of the Manitoba government or what happened on May 22. Surely the hon. member must stay within the clause before us, or find another forum.

The Chairman: I wish the hon. member had stood up when the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine was also a little off the clause before us. In any case, I am inviting the hon. member for Winnipeg North to come to the clause before us.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, you are, of course, correct. Had the hon. member for Mississauga South taken the same view and for the same reason called the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine to order, I would not have said the few words I have said and which I have almost concluded, namely, that if certain of us are here, it is to a large extent because of the so-called free enterprise, right-wing, do-nothing government in Manitoba. Its policy of restraint has made it so hard for senior citizens, native people, and university students in Manitoba that they rejected the Conservatives in our province and created a situation such that the federal government did not get its majority precisely because of lack of support in Manitoba.

I want to respond for a few moments to the comments made by the hon. member for Bow River. No member of my party is opposed to people, individuals, or companies in Canada getting a fair return on their investments, provided they invest their own money. What we are dealing with here, however, is not corporations or individuals who invest their own money as do investors in other industries who are content to take a reasonable profit. We are dealing here with industries, companies, and individuals who go into the field largely because they can do so without investing their own money.

I know that the hon. member for Bow River will not believe me. He will say that I am spouting socialist dogma. I suggest to the hon. member for Bow River that he read—although sometimes I wonder if he can or does read—a long article which ran more than a page in the Calgary Herald. I have never known the Calgary Herald to be a very radical newspaper. I do not think it has a socialist editorial policy. I do not think it is opposed to the free enterprise system, but in August it ran a long article about the activities of Dome Petroleum in the Beaufort Sea. I will not read it all, but let me read a few excerpts from the Canadian Press summary of that article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on August 24, as follows:

> Canadian taxpayers may have paid as much as 93 per cent of the $150 million spent last year looking for oil in the Beaufort Sea.
> But if oil is found and produced there, most of it will belong to privately-owned companies.
> Despite the hundreds of millions of dollars provided in tax incentives for such northern exploration on federal lands, the federal government's share will be a fraction of the normal royalty share that Alberta gets for oil found in its jurisdiction.
> And the companies investing in northern oil—using a little of their own money and a lot of the taxpayer's money—can sometimes make a profit on their investments through tax deductions, even if no oil is found.

That is one of our main complaints. We would not be objecting so strenuously if investors in oil companies were investing their own money, but they are not. What they are saying to the people of Canada is that they want tax concessions, write-offs, drilling allowances and all the rest of it. They are saying that if they do not find anything, the people of Canada will take the loss and lose 93 cents out of every dollar invested.

"But if we get a commercial find, if we can sell the oil, if we can sell the gas, we will keep the profits. So if it is heads, we, the oil companies, win, and if it is tails, you, the people of Canada, lose."

Let us look at Dome Petroleum. Dome Petroleum was established in 1950. It is best known at present for its Beaufort Sea exploration program. It is 26 per cent owned by Dome Mines, which is in turn owned 31 per cent by Dome Pete. Dome has the distinction of never having paid a cent of income tax in its history. All its income taxes have been deferred indefinitely as a result of writing off exploration and other capital expenditures for tax purposes more rapidly than are depleted for financial accounting purposes. Although the provision for deferred income taxes shows up as liability in the company's balance sheet, its own explanation of deferred taxes is very candid. Let me quote from the 1978 annual report of the corporation as follows:

Deferred taxes appearing on the company's balance sheets do not represent a liability of the company. When Dome becomes subject to paying income taxes, it will pay tax only on the income in the year incurred, not on the income of prior years as long as the company maintains a modest level of capital expenditures.

Mr. Blenkarn: I rise on a point of order. The clause we are considering deals with companies which are not in the oil business and with individuals not in the oil business. Dome Petroleum is in the oil business. This member has continued to talk on matters that are not before us. He is completely off the topic. He is making a speech on what oil companies may do with their balance sheets. This is not what we are talking about here. We are talking about a special allowance for people involved in exploration which is not their normal business. How the hon. member relates anything he has said to this clause is beyond me and, I am sure, beyond anyone else in the House. He has been called to order before and I think it is essential, if we are going to get through this income tax bill, for members to talk to the particular clause in the bill before us.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Mississauga South might wish to know that what the hon. member for Winnipeg North was referring to with regard to Dome Petroleum is exactly what is in the clause, because Dome Petroleum is a company engaging in explorations in the Beaufort Sea which has attracted private companies and individuals not in the oil industry to make investments, and is using these funds to generate tax write-offs for the individuals who have bought shares in these funds. So in fact the hon. member for Winnipeg North is right on target in his remarks.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, let me just say with regard to the point which the hon. member for Mississauga South raised that, although I do not like to be personal, I am much more to the point on this subject than the hon. member has been in his frequent letters to the newspapers about matters such as the native people, about whom he knows less than nothing.

Let me continue to quote from the 1976 annual report of Dome Petroleum. It reads as follows:

Provided the company maintains a modest oil and gas exploration and capital investment program, it is unlikely that the accumulated deferred income taxes will become payable.

As the hon. member who spoke a couple of minutes ago pointed out, that is exactly why we are concerned, because Dome is doing what so many other companies in this field have done. They are attracting capital by telling people, quite properly under our regulations, that they can get a much better net return after they pay taxes if they invest in this form of activity rather than in others. At the end of 1978, Dome's deferred taxes totalled $209 million, which was an increase of 436 per cent or $170 million since the end of 1973. In other words, between 1974 and 1978, Dome accumulated 81 per cent of its deferred taxes as a result of the federal government's tax policy largesse.

There are only a few minutes left before five o'clock, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Knowles: We are going on to six o'clock.

Mr. Orlikow: It has been pointed out to me that we are going on to six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, so I have a few more moments.

I will conclude by saying to the parliamentary secretary that when one looks at how we treated the oil and gas companies, at how we have encouraged investment in these fields—nobody questioned the need to look for oil and gas and other energy sources which may be available in Canada—and when one looks at the real rate of taxation which individuals or corporations investing in these fields pay, and how low that tax rate is compared to the tax rate paid by people who invest in the manufacturing industry, and when you consider the fact that over the last ten or 15 years Canada has had the highest rate of increase in the labour force of any of the western industrialized countries, and when you realize that while manufacturing, which is labour intensive, pays a high rate of taxation—something over 40 per cent—and that our resource industries, which are capital intensive and which employ relatively few people, pay a very low rate of taxation, it is no wonder that Canadian and foreign funds flow into the resource industry rather than into the manufacturing industry.

What the government is proposing in this clause is a further concession, a further inducement to people to invest in this field because they will pay less taxes than in other fields and therefore their real return will be higher than in other fields. The government is doing that precisely at a time when we should be doing the exact reverse, precisely at a time when we should be marshalling all our forces, putting all our efforts into encouraging the manufacturing industry, which is declining from year to year.

Our share of the Canadian market and of the international market has been dropping, and the number of people, the percentage of the Canadian work force, employed in the manufacturing industry has declined from 26 per cent a few years ago to just under 20 per cent at present. So what we should have are measures to encourage the manufacturing industry. What we should have are research and development incentives, and programs to get our industries working. What we should have is concentration on developing our manufacturing industries. Instead, what we are getting from this Conservative government is just more of what we got from the former Liberal government, more concessions to the resource industry, more encouragement to go into the oil and gas field at no risk to the investor but at a great loss to the people of Canada. The loss is in the form of taxes which we forgo, in the form of higher prices which we pay, and all that at a time when we should be concentrating our efforts on getting people to work in those fields which in every other country employ 25 per cent or more of the labour force, and which we are ignoring almost completely.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to speak very briefly on this subject which has been well covered this afternoon. A few days ago we were treated to the spectacle of the hon. member for Oshawa telling us of his concern for the Toronto stock exchange. Today the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood told us of his concern about interference in the free market, in this case the free market for capital. It seems at long last they are learning something over on that side.

I should like to elaborate a little on what was said by the parliamentary secretary concerning the fact that this legislation is designed to get away from the concentration which exists in the oil industry. This legislation gives an opportunity to ordinary people like members of the House of Commons. Should an hon. member wish to invest and take advantage of the provisions of the income tax bill before us, he will be able to use his capital in order to reduce the amount of concentration which exists in these industries.

A policy of energy self-sufficiency must be adopted in Canada. This is one of the elements of such a policy. It is much better if we can work toward energy self-sufficiency through private investment rather than through organizations such as Petro-Canada which are so heavily dependent upon government support. This is the correct type of legislation through which to encourage private investment. It has been on the books for some time. If one goes to Calgary or another exploration centre in Canada, one will find out that it is working successfully. It is attracting money from Canadians in all walks of life. It has proven to be successful. As a result of this type of incentive, a lot of oil and gas and a considerable amount of minerals have been found in the country. It is legislation like this that enables and will enable all Canadians to get in on the energy boom which could hit us at any time.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a brief question before getting into my main remarks. The parliamentary secretary suggested that this is another tax deferral. Before entering into a discussion on that, I should like to know what is the amount of tax deferral owed to Canadians now? If we are to make a judgment on whether it is desirable to continue or elaborate on this, will the parliamentary secretary tell us what is the present amount of deferred taxes owed to Canadians?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I will see if there is such a figure available, but I would quarrel with the words of the hon. member. So-called deferred tax is not owed to the government until income is earned. If an enterprise is not successful, that can be never. It is a very simple situation. One incurs expenses to be in a business, and one is allowed to charge them against other income not earned in the particular project for which the expenses are incurred. One will never owe tax on that project unless one subsequently earns income. It is not owed to the government in any sense. I am not sure if there is a statistical figure available for the sum total of what are called deferred taxes by the accounting profession. It is a phrase which I have never thought was very illuminating. In fact I think it is misleading.

Mr. Knowles: Try $100 million.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I should think that would be small. The best I can do at this moment is to repeat that this particular measure is estimated to defer taxes at the rate of $80 million a year. Whether there is a figure for all deferred taxes which go far beyond the oil industry, I am not sure. It is called deferred taxes if you write off depreciation in the manufacturing business, for instance, faster than the normal life of the asset. I think such a figure might be very hard to achieve. It may exist, but I am not sure.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question. When the government produces its tax expenditure figures, is it the intention of the government to give us the total cost of capital cost allowance deferrals? Will that figure be included in the accounting?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member an answer on that because I just do not happen to know it. Personally I have some reservations about this tax expenditure concept. It seems to be based on the idea that somehow or other all revenue belongs to the government and any reduction from that is a tax expenditure. In any event we are committed to giving some information at the time of the budget on what have come to be called tax expenditures. I am not sure whether it will cover deferred taxation or not. I am not sure if I could find out that information in advance of the budget.

Mr. Rae: Supplementary to that, I should like to indicate to the parliamentary secretary that he and I may disagree on the usefulness of the concept of tax expenditure. I assume from what the Minister of Finance has told us that he and the President of the Treasury Board have accepted the notion. I hope it will be included. If he cannot give us the figure requested by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River, perhaps he could tell us the total cost of section 66 of the Income Tax Act? Can he give us that figure, which includes oil companies, prospectors and other groups?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I am informed that there is no such estimate available at the moment. It is possible it may be included in the budget figures which will be submitted. I will make a note of it and suggest it to the minister.

Mr. Skelly: The matter which bothers me, as I mentioned the other day, is that the tax system is a very difficult and imprecise method of governing the economy. When a tax saving is provided to people in one particular sector, we deprive others. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North said, we wind up literally forcing individual taxpayers to fund this program.

Also I am concerned with the statements of the hon. member for Bow River when he suggested that incentives created the great wealth in Alberta. It appears to me that that is not logical. The real boom in Alberta, and the program which developed therefrom, evolved more at the hands of the Ayatollah than anything done in Alberta. There are certain directions in Alberta today which will be very helpful in the future. I am referring to the attempt to diversify the basic economy of Alberta.

Rather than putting forward provisions such as this, perhaps we should look at using other instruments to direct the investments of this country into some of our other resource bases. We should not place this country into a resource dependent position. We should try to capitalize on some of our resource bases. If Alberta is successful in diversifying its industry, when that resource is depleted, surely we will see a much stronger province than the one which existed before the group led by the Ayatollah put Alberta in such a favourable position. In my opinion it has little to do with incentives. The fact is that the oil, gas and coal were in the ground when the dinosaurs roamed.

An hon. Member: You mean when the Social Credit party was in power.

Mr. Skelly: Hold it, please. Let me continue. You will have lots of time in a moment. There has been a suggestion that it was incentives such as this that helped to improve Alberta, incentives similar to the one in the act as described by the parliamentary secretary.

Let me refer to one other fact, and that is that as a result of incentives like this, or otherwise, we have now developed or found more gas than we can use. This is the result of incentives for investments such as this. That gas is now capped, and we find people before the National Energy Board attempting to export that gas across the border. This is what the taxpayers' money has done. What we have essentially done is produce an energy source we cannot use, and in fact we are now going to give the benefit of that to another country.

The suggestion is that perhaps we should, through incentives of various types, or by some mechanism, direct this investment into other industries so that we can increase employment in this country, maybe offsetting some of the problems we have as a result of importing high cost goods. Another implication was that we should be encouraging individuals and small businesses to get into the oil business. That is almost an impossible hope, particularly in view of the way we are attempting to do that. The oil business is clearly controlled and held by the seven sisters, and to suggest anything else would be foolish.

We see on the one hand investments by small businesses and individuals being encouraged, while on the other hand they are being strangled by the fact that in order to borrow capital to make some of these investments they must pay prohibitive interest rates. Interest rates are in turn driven up and borrowing becomes even more difficult. We have contradictory efforts being made here. The one put forward in this clause should be the most appropriate one, and there should not be other government programs in direct contradiction to it.

Those are some of the things that concern me, and perhaps the parliamentary secretary can provide the answers. I am basically asking what industrial strategy affecting the total economy underpins the decision to adopt these tax savings for resource companies and other people who are encouraged to get into the resource business? What is being aimed at in the over-all picture?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment on some of the remarks and implications by the hon. member, and also by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. It seems difficult to me to comprehend how, at a time when the whole world is energy short and Canada has the potential to be self-sufficient in energy, a situation which would be of great benefit to the economy of this country, one could question any reasonable effort to induce expenditure on exploration for the development of our energy potential. I might point out that when such expenditures are made they do not disappear into nothingness. Those expenditures in many cases are for manufactured products. The steel industry of Saskatchewan and the steel industry of Ontario are two of the areas to which that money goes. The food industry and all of the industries that supply drilling equipment, which involve a difficult logistics exercise, all share in these expenditures.

Surely it is clear that this country needs energy, that it has the potential for self-sufficiency in energy, but that will not be realized if investment is not induced, and it will not be induced if it is not attractive.

I had the privilege of seeing the oil exploration industry in this country grow from practically zero in 1947 to a very substantial industry of very great strength to the economy of this country. The industry was not built by the Ayatollah, it was built by sensible government policies that encouraged what proved to be, on balance, along with a lot of losing investments, a substantial success in discovering oil and gas reserves in this country.

It so happens that exploration success in this business, as in mining, tends to occur in jumps. You can go along for years, spend, spend, find nothing and become discouraged. Then you may have a brief period of great success. The policies followed in this country have produced gas which at the moment is surplus to our current needs. That is an asset which we should not deplore or question. We should congratulate ourselves. This is an asset whether we keep it in the ground, or follow the suggestion that we export some of that gas.

The hon. member talked about interest rates and asked why we have high interest rates in this country. One very powerful reason is that we are borrowing to keep alive. We are borrowing at the rate of $7 billion to $8 billion in the current year. If that were not the case and we were not under that kind of debtor's burden, we would not necessarily require these high interest rates. That natural gas surplus could help us earn our way in the world a bit better. It could contribute to ameliorating the conditions that have caused present high interest rates.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North spoke of things about which I am very sympathetic. He spoke of the need in this country for a more competitive, successful and dynamic manufacturing sector. He pointed to the way in which it has declined. I agree that we need to do something about the lack of dynamism in the manufacturing sector, or a large part of it in this country. We need this for purposes of employment and we need it to help pay our way in the world.

We also need this measure which is directed to something equally as important: self-sufficiency in energy in this country for the next several decades. These two needs are not competitive. In fact, as I mentioned a few moments earlier, the manufacturing sector can be helped through exploration and development expenditures, and by investment in pipelines and all of those things that come with success.

While I share some of the concerns of the hon. member, they really have nothing to do with taking a negative attitude toward this particular provision. I might also point out that this particular provision has nothing to do with some of the claims that have been made that investors can get something for nothing through tax revenues in this country. This provision is simply concerned with writing off legitimate exploration expenses. Depending on one's tax rate, which can scarcely be higher in this country than something like 62 per cent, that is all it can save you. It cannot save you 110 per cent. The hon. member is talking about something different when he is talking about that. He is talking about what is called superdepletion. That is something that is not being debated at this point. That is a debate which I suppose depends on what comes out in the budget.

This clause is not doing some of the things that remarks from the other side would suggest. It will make a substantial contribution to the promotion of self-sufficiency in energy in this country, and I can think of nothing more important for at least the next two decades.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond to some of the things said by the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, the hon. member for Mississauga South, the hon. member for the Western Arctic and others. We seem to have managed to stir some of the true believers in the Conservative party out of their doldrums.

First of all, there is the question of relevance. This clause is an amendment to section 66 of the Income Tax Act. That section deals with the question of Canadian exploration and development expenses, and the way in which those expenses are written off. With due respect to the hon. member for Mississauga South, we are entitled, in view of that amendment, to talk about section 66, its effects, and the importance and relationship of this deduction to other deductions and, therefore, entitled to take this opportunity to ask the government to look at what is happening to our tax system, how fair it is, how effective it is, and whether it is achieving the results which we wanted it to achieve.

The member for Mississauga South reminds me of the person who was asked in an examination, "what is Moby Dick about?", and his answer was, "Moby Dick is about a whale". That is not a very imaginative or complete answer, because Moby Dick is about many things. It is about life itself. This section of the Income Tax Act is not just about the whale that is contained in clause 20, it is about the whole section 66 which deals with the very important feature of the tax system in Canada, and a very important innovation which was brought in by the Liberal party and to which my party has taken exception. We are using this as an opportunity to ask the government to look at that section again, and I think that we are perfectly entitled to do that because that is what Parliament is all about.

As for the intervention by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine with his usual deftness, subtlety, and his concern for accuracy and fairness, I thought that he was going to talk about Shell Oil and Dome Petroleum, because the last time I spoke in this House he took such exception to my remarks he said that I was misleading the House and that he would come back and correct all the misleading information I had given to the House so that the truth would be known, because all that came forth from this party was untruth and error of fact and in interpretation.

Of course, the reason that the hon. member could not come into the House and correct the error and the untruth I was speaking is because the facts I was telling this House are correct. The interpretation of course is philosophical, and members of this House are entitled to take exception to that, but I see no reason to be abusive in taking exception to that philosophy. I happen to think that the philosophy and points of view which the member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine espouses have a disastrous effect on working people. It is terribly unfair, and it can be a vicious attack on the standard of living of the average Canadian.

The hon. member thinks that the two effects of the policies we follow are to drive business to bankruptcy and out of the country and to destroy what he refers to as the productive sector of the economy. With due respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, these discussions have been going on in industrial society since it was created. I do not see any reason for being particularly abusive about it. It is simply a difference of approach and interest, and I will leave the matter at that. We are certainly entitled to that difference without the kind of abuse and general derision that we always get from the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

The parliamentary secretary, I believe, said two basic things in answer to my original intervention. The first thing was that one judges the worth-while nature of a tax incentive by its success, and that if a tax incentive managed to achieve what it was designed to achieve, then it was successful. That suggestion in itself is very limited and one-dimensional.

In the early 1970s, there was a virtual strike of capital because of what the multinational oil companies felt was an unfair system of taxation in Canada. They refused to invest in frontier exploration and drilling. In some circles that would be known as a form of bargaining, that is, using their bargaining power by withdrawing their capital and refusing to invest. In other circles it would be known as economic blackmail. Members of the party opposite have taken the same view when they talk about a strike of labour. Some people refer to a strike as collective bargaining, while some extremists on the other side, such as the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, would no doubt regard a strike as a form of blackmail.

Faced with that strike on the part of capital, the Canadian government had two choices. It could either knuckle under and give the industry what it wanted, or it could take the industry over. It could move toward public ownership. In the case of the Liberal government, and because it was a Liberal government, it did neither and it did both at the same time. It moved toward partial public ownership in the sense that it created Petro-Canada, but, of course, it did not give Petro-Canada the power that it needed. There was no public ownership or nationalization of Imperial Oil, Gulf, Shell or any of the other oil companies. The other thing which the Liberal party did was to provide this extraordinary range of incentives.

What the parliamentary secretary is telling us is, "Look, we have a problem. The problem is that we need to develop our oil and gas supplies. We have a bunch of multinational companies which are engaged in that business. How do we get them to do that business? We give them an incentive. If the incentive is sufficient and they are out developing the oil and gas, it therefore is working and is worth the price."

I suggest that this theory ignores some very important questions such as what is the price of the incentive, who pays the price of the incentive, who reaps the benefit of the incentive, and what kind of economic system functions like this? I am afraid that the parliamentary secretary cannot answer these questions. I honestly do not think that the Conservative party, with its philosophy and its commitment to this economic system under which we are now living, is able to deal with that problem.

Large multinational companies have gained control of the resources and are coming to the government and saying, "Look, this is the price of development". The Conservative party, with all respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, has as one of its major platforms and has indicated in all its public statements since the election and in the creation of the task force on Petro-Canada, that it is getting rid of Petro-Canada, that it is selling it off to the private sector, and that the exploration and development parts will be sold to the private sector.

We do not know exactly what their plans are, but the plan in the task force report would permit the control of Petro-Canada by a group of large multinational companies with Canadian subsidiaries. If each one of those groups owned 2 per cent of the shares, five of them would own 10 per cent of these shares, and there is not any economist in Canada who would not say that if one owns 10 per cent of the shares of a large corporation one is able to control the direction of that corporation, because the rest of the shares would be sufficiently diversified that no one else would have control.

With respect to the first answer that the parliamentary secretary gave us, which was the answer of the Conservative party and the Liberal party before it, that since this is accomplishing what it was set out to accomplish, the answer is yes, the question which I was raising, and with respect I do not think the hon. member can answer it because it goes beyond the terms of reference of his party was: is it worth the price? What are the alternatives? The alternatives are philosophically unacceptable to the Conservative party, but I suggest that they are cheaper in the long run to the Canadian people and will guarantee that the benefits of research, development and exploration in oil will stay in Canada and be controlled by Canadians.

At what price do we continue to subsidize multinational and corporate development? It is like the case of Ford or General Motors deciding whether or not to go into Quebec. It is like the case of all these incentives and grants that are being talked about, whether directly or indirectly. The nature of our economic system is changing, and those true believers on the other side who do not recognize it will wake up with a shock one day.

The second question was the manufacturing one. With great respect to the parliamentary secretary, I do not think it is far-fetched to say that there are other reasons for our lack of competitiveness. The hon. member stressed the wages question, but I would stress lack of investment along with some of the structural weaknesses of Canadian industry. We cannot make much progress when we have a branch plant economy. It is impossible for that economy to expand and grow and concentrate unless there is planning and direction co-ordinated for the public good. That is the main problem, not the problem of wages, the one the hon. member brought up.

I say to the parliamentary secretary that it is not far-fetched to suggest—and this theory is not unique to me—that where you have a tax system that gives extraordinary benefits and an exceptionally low level of tax to the oil and gas industry, and where similar benefits are not given to the manufacturing sector, there will be distortions of capital investment. That is exactly what is happening.

The hon. member for Western Arctic in his intervention drew attention to himself for the second time since I have been here. The first time he had a teddy bear on his desk. The second time, in his child-like faith, he expressed the rights of multinational oil companies to continue to develop Canadian resources willy-nilly. In my opinion this is no longer adequate. We are looking at a set-up which is giving tremendous benefits through our tax system. Eventually the Canadian people will want to know what the cost is. The cost that I have suggested—I think I am right but only time will tell, although I hope my predictions will prove wrong—will be a continued weakness in the manufacturing sector and there will be a total takeover and domination of our resource sector.

These things need to be said. Members on the other side want this to go through without any debate—I know it is in the interest of the Liberal party for it go through because it is embarrassed, it knows the measures and what they contain. The Liberals know they cannot defend them. They know they are not an opposition party but a government in exile. They never accepted the fact that they lost the election on May 22, and that they have no real basis either in philosophy, economics or politics on which to oppose this budget and these tax measures. I suggest the phantom opposition has disappeared and that the main opposition falls to members of this party. We are happy to fill that role. We intend to fill the role. We do not intend to disappear or make things easy for the government just because this is not its budget. It is a budget of "tight money's" first team instead of "tight money's" second team. We are glad to oppose it.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I will speak briefly. We have heard some profound statements on where we are. As politicians, one of the reasons we disagree is that we do not share the same set of assumptions at all. We are arguing usually from a different base. It does not mean that all the righteous are over here. Sometimes we are told that only the self-righteous are over here and all the "Evel Knievels" are sitting opposite. I would withdraw the word "all", but certainly there are some we could disagree with.

We are not opposed to development nor to self sufficiency nor incentives. What we are concerned about is the nature of the development and the nature of the incentives. One of my colleagues mentioned, following the address by the hon. member for Bow River, that one of our problems is with the manufacturing industry, and that if we could develop a manufacturing industry from our indigenous resources, that would be all to the good of the country. We have not seen that happen. Quite the reverse, except in the case of Alberta.

The Ayatollah did not put the oil in the ground in Alberta; neither did Peter Lougheed nor Premier Manning who spent his life damning the banks as a Social Creditor and then joined the board of one of them. It is an accident, and some of us have been told that in spite of all its oil and gas, because it lacks entrepreneurial skills Alberta was once in receivership. It has not always been an affluent place. We are not opposed to incentives. If this clause was intended to give incentives to companies, whether spin-off companies of the multinationals or not, we would prefer them to be Canadian-owned, to provide secondary and tertiary manufacturing as is being discussed. I think that is the aim of Alberta's Heritage Fund. So if we listen to the "fast buck" artists who are so anxious to save us from our balance of payment deficit and ship all the cheap gas and oil across the border as soon as possible, I think Peter Lougheed has a right to be piling up all those royalties in his Heritage Fund. In a short while Alberta will need these funds for diversification. You can provide all the incentives you like but if there is no oil in the ground, that is it.

A number of people I have talked to are saying we ought not to believe there is a shortage. They are saying these bloody oil companies have some oil, and what they are doing is capping it until the price goes up. The parliamentary secretary has tried to clarify this for us. Under this clause we are not talking about capital cost allowances or fancy write-offs or anything, but that is irrelevant to our position in explaining the assumptions we are dealing with. It is not that we are opposed to the use of incentives per se. What we are saying is that we are not interested in being blackmailed or bribed or in providing bribes to companies that are doing very well in terms of their own profitability.

I am reminded that the premier of Newfoundland, Brian Peckford, has had some experience with oil companies. He has decided to deal with resource companies on his own terms. There was a strike, but in two years the workers were back on his terms. I suggest that we can do all the bribery we want and justify it in any way we like, but the oil companies are in the business of digging up oil and the mining companies are in the business of digging up minerals. If they are not able to do that they will not function very long as mining companies. It is not to anyone's advantage to see them disappear. What we are questioning is the need for these new incentives. At two dollars a barrel, companies were exploring all over the place, yet that was the time the major strikes occurred. The parliamentary secretary is more acquainted with the oil companies than we on this side, perhaps, but he can correct me if I am wrong.

The hon. member for Western Arctic thought these write-offs in terms of exploration would contribute to a massive development of people's capital in this country. I would like to remind him that fewer than 10 per cent of Canadians, mainly the affluent, own any stocks at all. While we are willing to give tax breaks to the resource companies and oil companies, despite the promise of a $2 billion tax cut for low and middle-income Canadians during the last campaign we are now told by the Minister of Finance we cannot afford it. We can afford to give these tax breaks though.

One of the justifications used by the parliamentary secretary is that tax breaks do not disappear into nothing. After they are spent by companies, and they are going to be spent unless they are used as profits, banked or shipped out of the country to be invested in foreign lands, they are spent on various things that contribute to our economy. By giving these companies these breaks we do benefit and get back our taxes in other ways. There is a good deal of logic in that.

Could the same point not be made for any kind of subsidy? For example, could it not be made by a small businessman in a Newfoundland, Ontario or British Columbia town who is on UIC? After all, UIC funds are spent in the local community. Any kind of subsidy can be justified that way, even welfare or old age pensions.

Yesterday we were told that we cannot afford $9 billion to up the old age pension to the poverty line. However, we have a proposal which will cost precisely that, maybe not the same, but it is a similar fund for another purpose.

The parliamentary secretary, not deliberately, indulges in a bit of sophistry when he tells us that money given to any one group of people, such as resource companies, is stimulating the economy and is not going down the tube. It is not lost into nothing. However, he conveniently ignores the other forms of transfer payments of wealth which do precisely the same thing. That is a particularly important point.

There is one small item to which I wish to speak. I do not know whether the parliamentary secretary's former company has anything to do with any of the gas distributing companies that are so anxious to sell off our gas to the United States in return for lowering our balance of exchange deficit of between $7 and $9 billion a year. According to the figures I have, 13 per cent of our budget is used precisely for that purpose. I do not think anyone on this side disagrees that this is a very serious matter. Whether we can do much about it through methods such as this or selling off our cheap and accessible resources, as we have done with our oil which will force us into frontier expensive oil at tremendous risk in terms of the environment, is precisely another question. I put that before you, not because I have any final answer but merely because it is a question of concern to many Canadians. We do not necessarily think that decisions based on the profit motive, avarice, greed or whatever you want to call it, always add up to the best interests of our nation. That is where we part company with those who sit over there and with some of those who sit here.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Chairman, I wish to add a few comments in response to what the parliamentary secretary has said. They have been fairly well developed by the other two members who have spoken. I am concerned about the proposition that this kind of amendment to the Income Tax Act will create a situation where we will have more gas to export and therefore the exporting of that gas and other resources will provide us with a mechanism to offset the deficit in our balance of payments. That kind of logic occurred several years ago.

I have a vague recollection of oil companies in this country suggesting there was not enough oil and that in fact we were running out. The price escalated and a lot of fright covered the land. Shortly after that the price rose. All of a sudden we were told they had underestimated the reserves and that we were in a position to export. The executives of the oil companies in this country suggested that we should start to pump the gas and oil over our borders and derive the benefit of this very vital thing that was surplus to our needs at that time.

Again today we are short. We do not have enough. We will run out in the eighties unless we make tremendous investment in the offshore expensive frontier areas. The question you have to ask, and this is the problem in this clause, and the whole section we are dealing with, is why has no energy policy been stated by this government? We talk about self-sufficiency, but no clear direction has been set down that we can support. Leadership in the energy policy area has been put out by the energy companies. They are the ones suggesting we should be saving ourselves from a situation that sees us with a terrible balance of payments, a declining dollar, high priced imports, unemployment, and failure to diversify our industry.

I realize the benefits that accrue from that. Essentially we are back to the same old question, what is the direction? When are we going to hear from the government a clear policy direction that will justify putting in this or any other clause? What we are doing is putting in the mechanism and then developing the rationale for it.

This particular type of thing may or may not generate more oil and gas, and may or may not result in more individuals freeing up capital. Capital in this country is very scarce. What we need is a sense of direction as to where it will be invested. The people of this country should know this. Obviously Exxon, Gulf, Royal Dutch Shell and some other companies in this country do not have our goals at heart. Theirs is profit. Somehow it is expected the two will link together, our needs and theirs. That certainly has not proven to be the case in the past.

The area served by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, and my area of Comox-Powell River, are very short of energy. The kind of clause suggested here will not help us a lot unless we do not export to the United States, but ship to Vancouver Island and along the coast of British Columbia where we are energy short. We now buy energy at an extremely high rate.

We developed a cable to Vancouver Island that at one point was estimated would cost every family on the island $4,000 and there would be a continuous high price for electricity. If we are to have an energy self-sufficient policy, we must look at a variety of forms and not just extremely expensive investment.

Something else that concerns me has been stated before and is worth stating again. When you give benefits to a very small segment of the Canadian population, you provide those benefits at the expense of a lot of other people who are not so well off on the income scale. It strikes me that when people put up surplus capital and they obtain tax benefits like this, not just the profit behind it, others are in fact paying. I wonder what benefit a lot of people along the coast of British Columbia who earn modest incomes will derive from exporting gas to the United States and exporting coal to Japan when we are not providing diversity in industry, and not providing energy to places like Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands in an efficient form.

I want to come to the business of interest rates, the devalued dollar and our balance of payments. The B.C. Hydro Corporation went to New York to borrow billions upon billions to deliver energy in a form that is not necessarily the most efficient. The federal government has no suggestion on how we might provide these things in a very efficient pattern to areas of the country that need them. Heavy concentration on high-cost areas is not what we need. Capital is scarce. We need to channel it in areas of investment which are extremely important. If this kind of tax amendments results in our exporting gas, it is not what we should be doing.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division!

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 21 to 23 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Rae: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I have given notice to the Minister of Finance that we intend to discuss the small business tax changes in the course of this debate. Could the parliamentary secretary tell us what he considers to be the appropriate clause on which to discuss the changes in the small business tax rate?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I think clause 38 would be the best one.

Clauses 24 to 31 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Rae: With respect, Mr. Chairman, I ask you to slow down. You are reading the numbers of clauses faster than we can find out what an individual clause is about.

Clauses 32 to 37 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 38—

Mr. Rae: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We indicated on second reading and I have indicated to the minister, that we are not happy about this particular change. There are two aspects on which I should like to hear explanations from the parliamentary secretary. Anyone who has had the misfortune to become involved with the Income Tax Act knows that the complexity of adding a third type of corporation creates an unnecessary anomaly and adds to the existing confusion. We started out with a purpose in according a particular rate, a 25 per cent rate, to small businesses earning between $150,000 and $750,000. There was a purpose behind that provision. It was to bring taxation relief to companies which were providing employment and expanding their operations in a very important sector of the economy. It is worth noting that the vast majority of Canadian workers are employed in small business. I see that the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry is here this afternoon, shaking his head whenever I get up, and I am sure he will have some comments to make about the positions which have been taken.

We can understand the purpose behind that differentiation in the rate but under the amendment a variety of people—journalists, hockey players, actors, doctors, lawyers, chartered accountants—are taking advantage of the small business corporation provision to incorporate themselves and reduce their effective rate of taxation. I am sorry the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount is not here because I know that though he disagrees with me on many things he would agree with me on this one.

The fiction of becoming a corporation is not readily understood by the average citizen. The average citizen does not earn enough money to concern himself with whether he should be paying the private rate or the small business corporate rate or the large business corporate rate, or whatever. The vast majority of Canadians get their cheques, income tax is paid at source, they are entitled to certain deductions, and that is all there is to it. There are no capital cost allowances or capital gains or any of the other complexities of the act to be considered. For 90 per cent of the taxpayers of Canada the income tax legislation is simple—they pay their money and they get very little by way of deductions. It only becomes complicated when a taxpayer has a lot of money.

One of the anomalies I should like the parliamentary secretary to explain is this: why has the decision been made to create this third category in addition to the other two, the standard corporate rate and the small business rate? It will be difficult to establish who fits into this new category. It makes no sense from the point of view of stimulating the economy. These are not people who generate a lot of business opportunities. The amendment is simply a mechanism for allowing certain groups, mainly professionals, the advantages of corporations so that they can pay a lower rate of income tax.

I should like to hear an explanation of what the Minister of Finance meant in his statement accompanying the change when he said this would have a tax-neutral effect. I should like the parliamentary secretary to explain how that can be the case. I think I know what he means. It is not tax neutral between what he would have been paying as a private citizen, it is another form of tax neutrality, but I think it is misleading for the minister to say that this will be tax-neutral because it certainly is not; it is a reduction in the effective rate of taxation of upper middle income people. It is important to understand what is happening. It is increasing it from now, but it is reducing it from what it would be if we disallowed the incorporation provision.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR MEDICARE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 in connection with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Due to the fact that certain provinces are deliberately misappropriating federal funds allocated for medicare through the block funding system for other provincial purposes or projects, and due to the fact that this situation has created a serious erosion of medicare which may lead to the collapse of this important health program for Canadians, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. McCauley):

That the government cease immediately to make federal funds available for health care through the block funding system and restore the good old 50-50 cost-sharing formula until those provinces honour their obligations.

REQUEST DECISION BE RESCINDED RESPECTING CERTAIN OPERATIONS IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an urgent matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that this morning the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry heard testimonies from representations of fishermen's and producers' associations of eastern Quebec as well as of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick; considering that the witnesses have stated that the decision taken by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) on August 27 would lead the fishing industry in zones 4T and 4Vn to disaster; considering that the fishermen stated that the Nickerson and National Sea Foods companies have reduced their purchase price to fishermen by three cents a pound of cod because warehouses are full, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold):

That the House direct the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to withdraw his decision of August 27, 1979, and to state that the Gulf of St. Lawrence is restricted to coastal fishermen.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT RENEGOTIATE CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS WITH U.S.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, the government has virtually sold out chicken producers by negotiating very high levels of chicken imports from the United States. The government has also given its friends at Maple Lodge and Loblaws a virtual monopoly on the import of chickens into this country.

• (1410)

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House instruct the government to renegotiate the chicken quota with the United States to obtain a lower level of imports, and that the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency be made the first receiver for chicken imports so that farmers, processors, retailers and consumers will be fairly and equitably treated and provided with chicken from domestic and import sources.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering the ambiguity of the position of the Conservative government with respect to the Quebec referendum as stated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle), and the Senate Minister of State for CIDA, and considering the critical importance of the referendum results for the continued unity of this country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier):

That this House confirm its belief that the Canadian Government and Parliament have an important role to play respecting the unity of Canada and consequently involvement in the Quebec referendum and, further, that this House confirm its support for the pro-federalist umbrella committee, the committee campaigning for the "No" option established under the Quebec referendum bill, Bill No. 92.

NATURAL GAS—CALL FOR BAN ON INCREASES IN EXPORTS UNTIL CANADIAN NEEDS MET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the imminent increase in the price of home heating oil as a result of the government's soon-to-be announced oil pricing policy, in view of the government's professed desire to stimulate the conversion of home heating from oil to natural gas, and in view of the deliberations now under way by the National Energy Board with respect to increases in natural gas exports, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae):

That the House instruct the government to postpone indefinitely any increases in natural gas export until, first, natural gas distribution systems are provided to eastern Quebec and the Atlantic provinces; second, the government's natural gas conversion program is substantially completed; and, finally, subsequent investigation has shown that the future natural gas needs of all Canadians are adequately protected.

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources be requested to direct his department to continue to ensure that all energy policies be designed to have the least possible impact on refinery jobs, and in particular those in the high unemployment areas of the east coast.

CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS WITH U.S.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, recently—on Wednesday, October 24—in the Senate, in answer to a question put to him on Canadian import quotas of chicken, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said:

I will endeavour to inquire from my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, the exact reason why the chicken import quota was set where it was.

He also said:

—the actual negotiations of an import quota such as this falls under the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture.

● (1415)

He also said:

In terms of representations by the producers' group, I would expect, again, that those representations were probably made to the Minister of Agriculture. They were not made to me.

Will the Minister of Agriculture now tell the House if he was present when the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency presented a brief on the chicken import problem to this government in August and whether he did, in fact, negotiate the entirely unacceptable import quota with the United States, as published in the news release on the 22nd of last month?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the former minister's question—and I want to recognize the fact that the former minister is taking on the physical shape of his predecessor, the agricultural spokesman for the former official opposition—I must say that I, personally, was not present when the presentation of the brief was made.

However, in the intervening time I have had many opportunities to discuss this matter with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and, indeed, with other ministers in the cabinet and also with people in the industry. I do not have to go into the problem associated with the negotiations on the level of imports of the commodity between the two countries. No one knows that situation and those discussions any better than the former minister.

I want to say, as well, in response to the former minister's question, that certainly I am not happy, by any stretch of the imagination, with the level of U.S. chicken imports. However, someone has indicated we have sold the Canadian chicken industry to U.S. interests. The House and the country should know that we were sold down the river in 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977 and until we took office on June 4, 1979. Since then we moved as rapidly as possible, and it is a week ago on Sunday evening that we were able to impose border controls on chicken imports, thus reducing them from about 60 million to 65 million pounds down to 45 million pounds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not answered the question. He did not say whether he had the authority, which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the other place said he had, to do the negotiations. He has not acknowledged this fact. He sounds as though he does have some responsibility in negotiating chicken imports.

In view of the fact that chicken producers have responded to the government's request to increase production in 1978 and 1979, with the result that there are 124 per cent more chickens in storage now than a year ago, will the Minister of Agriculture confirm that, in fact, one Stuart Campbell negotiated the quota as an official of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and that this same gentleman was accompanied in this task by some functionaries of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and that no minister took any direct part in these negotiations?

Mr. Wise: I am surprised to hear that type of information coming from the former minister, because he knows very well that when you negotiate import levels on any commodity you have, as part of the negotiating team, representation from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of Agriculture, and also the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, again the minister has passed the buck. He is not saying why he did not involve himself in these negotiations which are of the utmost importance to Canadian poultry producers, to Canadian agriculture, in Canadian trade deficits and, indeed, to all Canadians who are subjected to increasing energy costs and interest costs. Can he state why he did not deem it necessary personally to protect the jobs and production capacity of a most important section of our economy at the ministerial level?

Mr. Wise: Talking about passing the buck, may I remind the former minister that he and the former government passed the buck for at least 12 months, and perhaps 24 months, until the time we took office on May 22, and when I assumed responsibility as Minister of Agriculture on June 4 we acted properly. We accepted our responsibilities and we placed into effect import controls on chicken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

REASON QUESTION OF CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS WITH U.S. NOT SUBMITTED TO GATT

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The predecessor of the Minister of Agriculture concluded an egg import quota with the United States that is far more favourable to Canada than the United States chicken import quota accepted by this government.

Can the Minister of Agriculture tell the House why he did not refuse the Americans, in view of the fact the Americans knew a national agency would be established sooner or later on the basis of the principle that a national chicken marketing agency was accepted in May of 1974? Can he state why he did not submit the United States demand for this destructively large quota to GATT arbitration on the basis of pre-1974 figures? His predecessor submitted the Canadian case for the egg importation quota to GATT against the wish of his officials and the Americans, and won.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might not be aware of the fact that it is clearly stated that the national agency must be in place and operating for one to keep in line with international trading laws and to negotiate a level of imports of chicken or any other commodity.

We did not have National Farm Products Marketing Council certification for the national board until about August 27, 1979. Therefore, it would have been simply impossible to negotiate a level prior to that time. In fact, we were communicating with our United States counterparts in Washington prior to the national board receiving its certification from the National Farm Products Marketing Council.

REQUEST FOR ONE PER CENT LIMITATION ON CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, a question was put in the standing committee of the House about the unacceptable import quota and the minister answered, and I paraphrase, that he had acted according to the best advice received and that he did not want to risk American reprisals. Does the minister have so little faith in the stance adopted by the Canadian government as to refuse to ask a limit of 1 per cent on import quotas? Is he also supposing that GATT would not decide equitably on a justified Canadian request?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of faith in the advice I have received from the officials within my department. I have a great deal of faith in the officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and also the Department of External Affairs—because they were all involved in that particular question. The best advice I received from these officials was the fact that we should negotiate in good faith. We have done that. That is the only information I can supply to the hon. member.

ENERGY

PROFITS OF SHELL CANADA—ALSANDS PROJECT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Mr. William Daniel, president of Shell Canada, is reported in today's press to want a guarantee of up to 20 per cent profit if it is to proceed with the very important Alsands project in the north. He also said that an agreement is very close to being reached with the federal government.

Considering that this company made $150 million in profits last year without paying one cent in federal taxes, and has just reported a third quarter profit increase of 110 per cent, will the minister assure the House that the federal government will not give one penny in further handouts to this company for this project?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that we are not in the process of giving handouts at all. We are in the process of discussing with a consortium of companies interested in developing this very important heavy oil sands development the appropriate arrangements by which this particular project would be viable.

The fact of the matter is that it involves many, many aspects. But it is a very important development for the purposes of ensuring supplies for Canadians in the years ahead, one which I am sure will receive the support of the New Democratic Party, rather than the negative approach it has taken to all development in Canada up to this point.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister talks patent nonsense, and I think he knows that. Considering that Petro-Canada has experience in tar sands work through Syncrude and can get the required equipment, the capital for financing and can do the Alsands project work without any need for profits in that part of its activity, because it is a Crown corporation, will the minister explain to the House why the government does not use Petro-Canada for this fundamentally important development project—and I agree with the minister in that regard—at virtually no cost to the Canadian taxpayer?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Instead, he is embarking upon paying corporations billions of dollars in handouts to do it. Can he answer that question?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to answer questions by the Leader of the New Democratic Party because his premises are usually false and wrong. What I am saying is that there is a very substantial cost involved in this particular project. It does involve a consortium. Discussions have taken place with respect to this matter, by myself with representatives of Alsands. One of the points I have been making to them is that we are very much interested in increasing Canadian participation in this project.

That is the objective to which this government is dedicated. The purpose of this government is to increase Canadian participation, and I can assure the hon. member that is a purpose I will undertake with a great amount of effort and endeavour.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I want to be factual in my questions and I hope the minister will be frank in his answers. No one is denying that there are important developmental costs; that is agreed. Since the minister has at his disposal a Crown corporation with experience in tar sands work and is not under an obligation to make profits, like a private company would be if it were to do the development work there, why does he not use the Crown corporations, and get a little tough in terms of tax policies with the multinationals in the way the United States government recognized was necessary in the United States?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, all I can say to that particular proposition is that there is now at hand a consortium, and in respect of the holdings and the development of particular oil sands in Alberta we are anxious to go ahead at the earliest possible time.

I simply say that in terms of profits, and so on, the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is always complaining, suggesting that Petro-Canada should in fact somehow keep profitable areas of development, but is not interested in Petro-Canada making a profit. I do not understand the logic of his argument. The fact of the matter is that we are going to develop this project to the benefit of all Canadians by ensuring our supply, by ensuring a fair and reasonable transaction, and by ensuring that there is Canadian participation in this. I assure the hon. member that this will, in fact, take place.

PRIVY COUNCIL

INQUIRY WHETHER CERTAIN MEMBERS OF PRIVY COUNCIL WERE AWARE OF CRIMINAL ACTIONS

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council.

In view of the information we get regularly from the media, can the President of the Privy Council, whose members number in the hundreds, tell the House that no Privy Councillor was aware, before, during or after, or was an accomplice before, during or after illegal or criminal acts such as breaking in, kidnapping, theft or malicious destruction of property?

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, after looking at Privy Councillors on both sides of the House, I would say, not as far as I am aware.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRESIDENT OF PRIVY COUNCIL INTENDS TO COUNSEL GOVERNOR GENERAL

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council, whose answer, in my opinion, is not a certainty. I would therefore like to know, since there seem to be doubts and since it is the Governor General's exclusive and rightful prerogative to be advised, to advise and to counsel, does the President of the Privy Council intend to advise the Governor General?

● (1430)

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his question. I will give it every consideration.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

INQUIRY WHETHER PROVINCES CONSULTED RESPECTING CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State for International Trade if he can tell the House why this government is imposing on chicken producers an import quota of 48.5 million pounds for next year, which will be raised to 62.5 million pounds for 1982, an increase of 14 million pounds? This represents a tremendous 29 per cent increase, while the annual rise in the domestic market is only 5 per cent.

Can the minister advise the House whether he consulted the provincial agriculture departments before imposing this ridiculous import quota for chicken?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there was full consultation on this matter with the provincial governments, and I personally met with one of the provincial representatives. The Minister of Agriculture has discussed other aspects of consultation.

On the question of overcharging, the amount of the quota will be 6.3 per cent in 1982 and the quota will be somewhat lower than that in earlier years. We believe there is a proper balance—taking into account the interests of producers as well as the interests of consumers—to provide a good market environment.

EMPLOYMENT

CREATION OF JOBS IN U.S.—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Can the minister tell us if it is his government's policy to create jobs in the United States at the expense of Canadians? If not, can he explain to the House why his government encourages the establishment of 140 new chicken production units in the U.S.? Has consideration been given to all the resulting job opportunities for Canada?

[English]

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question raised by the hon. member under advisement and get back to him with the details when I have the information.

AGRICULTURE

REASON QUESTION OF CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS NOT SUBMITTED TO GATT

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the ministers opposite must have a difficult time answering for the minister responsible for this import quota. Doing another man's work is not the Canadian way.

Can the Prime Minister tell this House why his government did not submit to normal GATT procedure with regard to the U.S. demand to export more chicken to Canada, and negotiate to establish a quota on the basis of a previously representative period; that is, a period prior to the May, 1974, successful application by Canadian producers to establish a Canadian chicken marketing agency?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will respond to the question of the hon. member. I believe we have forgotten the facts as to what has happened as a result of the imposition of that import level. What we have done—and hon. members opposite should recognize this—is lower the amount of broiler imports from the United States into Canada from approximately 65 million pounds to 45 million pounds. That move was made in the interests of the domestic poultry industry.

Mr. Bockstael: Mr. Speaker, the minister does not seem to have taken into account the artificial import addition imposed by two companies. Because most poultry products importers have behaved over the years as good corporate citizens—except for two poultry importers who have worked to destroy the Canadian poultry industry over the last four years—will the minister, at the very least, guarantee to the House that the import quota, whatever its size, will be equally available to all poultry importers throughout Canada?

[Mr. Wilson.]

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, one must recognize that there are rules and laws by which we must abide. However, I can give the hon. member the commitment, providing we can still go forward and live within those guidelines, that we will do everything possible to see that equity and equality prevail.

REQUEST THAT CHICKEN IMPORTS BE REDUCED VOLUNTARILY

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, in view of the questions and answers that have just been exchanged, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he would be prepared to consider making representations to the main chicken importers in Canada who account for nearly 80 per cent of imports and will obtain importation permits for that purpose. Would he be prepared to make representations to these two firms to convince them to reduce their imports voluntarily and get their supplies from Canadian producers?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that that action has already been taken through representations made by myself to the chairman of the National Farm Products Marketing Council.

INQUIRY WHETHER ACTION WILL BE TAKEN TO ENSURE FEDERAL AUTHORITIES INSPECT MEAT IN QUEBEC

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. Last Thursday instructions were issued by the federal meat inspection service to the effect that any new request for service in Quebec would have to be turned down, given the chronic lack of qualified personnel resulting from budgetary cutbacks. I know that last week the minister helped in solving an urgent case in my riding, but my question is the following: Can the minister tell the House if measures will be taken as soon as possible to meet the requests of numerous businesses in Quebec which would like to have a federal inspection of their meats and meat byproducts?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct in saying that we were able to resolve the difficulty that existed within his own riding. It is true that the restraint program which has been imposed, and which I fully support, has caused some problems. However, we have been able to resolve these problems so far by the transfer of inspectors from one plant to another. We fully recognize that under the law we are obligated to place meat and food inspectors in plants and we intend to honour that obligation.

AMALGAMATION OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL INSPECTION SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Could the minister tell us if discussions are taking place with the government of Quebec for the purpose of integrating the provincial inspection service with the federal service?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I am in contact with my provincial counterpart in the province of Quebec on a very regular basis. But with regard to that precise subject we have not had discussions. To my knowledge, there has been no discussion with reference to the almagamation of the two inspection services.

PUBLIC SERVICE

OFFER MADE TO RADIO OPERATORS' UNION BY GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATORS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Could the President of the Treasury Board explain to this House why his negotiators have put forward to the radio operators' union an offer which was previously rejected by the union and which, in fact, represent a decrease for the 920 radio operators, in the settlement proposals put forward in the conciliators' majority report, thereby precipitating a total strike of the radio operators, generating chaos in air and marine transportation and seriously compromising safety standards throughout the entire country?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been misinformed. The negotiations with respect to the radio operators' strike resumed this morning at 10 a.m. They are presently adjourned, but we are hoping they will resume at 4 p.m. today. I believe that cool heads in this House are required with regard to this matter, as opposed to any provocative statements.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

UNIFICATION—REPORT OF TASK FORCE—POLICY ON UNIFORMS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Speak loudly.

Mr. Hees: I would ask when he expects the task force studying unification to make its report. Also, when he is studying this very important matter will he give consideration to bringing in a policy which will retain the unification of our service and administrative forces while permitting our air force, our army and our navy to return to their very distinguished uniforms, which should never have been taken away from them in that ill-considered move of about 12 years ago?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to ask the hon. member to repeat his question. Mr. Fyffe, the chairman of the task force, has asked me if he can have a further six weeks because of the number of representations made to him. He has had over 500 requests and has accepted some 140 of them. I have granted permission to extend the term until March 15 next year.

As for the representations made by the hon. member, they are well-founded, as usual, and I shall convey them to the chairman of the task force.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

COST-SHARING OF MEDICARE PROGRAM

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I hope he will not tell me that the Hall Commission on Health needs four more weeks to report. Since only three provinces have set up premiums for medicare on top of their general taxation—Alberta being one of them—and since the Alberta government made a deal last spring allowing the doctors to overcharge sick people by 50 per cent more than medicare—by the way, one out of three doctors is actually doing it—will the minister either confirm, or deny, that Alberta's share toward hospital insurance and medicare in Alberta has steadily declined, at the very time the oil boom took place, and that the federal government is now paying 61 per cent of all health expenditures in Alberta instead of 50 per cent?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for her question. I think the actual figure is close to 61 per cent. Certainly, the shift in federal responsibility for costs have increased, not only in that province but in some others.

Second, I should like to assure the hon. member that the Hall commission report will not need four weeks longer; at least, I hope it will not. The hon. member is aware that the Hall commission report will be available by April; at least, that is the intended date. It was following the federal-provincial conference of health ministers that the Hall commission was set up in order to deal with matters of that kind.

Miss Bégin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister further confirm that the Tory government of Alberta is continuing to divert from medicare—I guess he will not have any difficulty confirming that, since he accepted the percentage—the enormous sum of $78 million per year? Diverted into what? Paying their provincial debt, or what? Every project? I hope it is not the Heritage Fund. This is an amount equal to the entire national budget for medical research in Canada.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that figure at all, that is, as to how the Alberta government uses its funds in relation to the block funding. This is a matter which I could have advised the hon. member on if I had had notice of the question. I will get that information for her.

As to whether the government is Tory, I should like to assure the hon. member that in relation to medicare this government seeks to serve the citizens of every province, no matter what government they choose.

BRIEFS RECEIVED BY HALL COMMISSION—NUMBER OF PROVINCIAL HEALTH MINISTERS CONSULTED

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Six weeks have elapsed since the appointment of the Hall commission on medicare, and its mandate is to report in six months.

Will the minister report how many briefs have been received by the commission, the number of witnesses heard and, more urgent, how many provincial health ministers has Mr. Justice Hall consulted?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for his question. I do not have that information with me, however. I might say that Mr. Justice Hall is to be in Ottawa this weekend participating in the meeting of the Canadian Labour Congress, I understand. He will also be talking with certain union representatives and certain medical representatives. I know he has received some briefs. I will provide that information to hon. members as soon as I can.

DOCTORS' FEES UNDER MEDICARE PROGRAM

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since this is the first time I have addressed a question to the minister, I wish him success in running his department with extreme firmness and determination in order to save the project of the century in North America, namely medicare. I would like to know whether the minister is aware that the Canadian Labour Congress has publicly recognized, in a memorandum presented in September, that doctors also have a right to a good income, that doctors have organized themselves into groups in order to save medicare, that Dr. Woodside of Hamilton has joined a group for that purpose. Could the minister tell the House whether the alarming rate of disaffiliation among doctors, especially in Ontario, is actually due to the fact that provincial Tory governments use federal funds for medicare to reduce their provincial debt?

[Miss Bégin.]

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think I caught all of the question, but if I did not I would be happy if the hon. member would repeat it. If I understood it correctly, the amount of compensation that doctors receive is, of course, negotiated by provincial governments. Those negotiations over a number of years have had varying degrees of success. In some provinces right now they are undergoing those negotiations with respect to compensation.

We are always concerned about these negotiations, because if they are not successful they will impair service and that, of course, is something with which we concern ourselves very greatly. I can only say that the department will continue to monitor those negotiations as they are going on. We are always, of course, available to provincial governments if they need our assistance.

INSTRUMENT SETTING UP HALL COMMISSION

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would inquire about the legal instrument the minister and the government is using to set up the Hall commission of inquiry into medicare. I wonder if he could inform me, since obviously he has not been given power under the Inquiries Act: I have not heard that stated by the minister at any time.

I wonder if there is an order in council empowering Mr. Justice Hall to conduct a proper inquiry and giving him the powers he needs to conduct the type of inquiry the minister has been talking about.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference under which Mr. Justice Hall is conducting the study were set after consultation with the Prime Minister and cabinet, and he was appointed under my authority.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would be interested in hearing from Mr. Justice Hall, who I believe likes to act under some legal instrument, some legal authority if he is to conduct any proper inquiry at all. In any event, I wonder if the minister would advise whether he is prepared to seek advice from the law officers of the Crown to determine whether actions taken by the Newfoundland government and actions taken by the New Brunswick government, such as deterrent fees and admission fees and the like which are now being charged, constitute a contravention under the provisions of block funding as far as the federal government is concerned. If he gets an opinion to that effect while Mr. Justice Hall is conducting his inquiry, is he prepared to withhold the monthly cheques to the provinces until such time as they desist in terms of these contraventions that I believe would be advised by the legal officers of the Crown?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the hon. member that in my discussions with him, Mr. Justice Hall asked me if I would provide him with whatever instruments he would require in order to carry out his investigations, whether under the Inquiries Act and whether he would have subpoena powers, and so on.

I indicated to him at that time, with the concurrence of the Prime Minister and the cabinet, that whatever instruments he desired, he would have. At this point he is operating under Treasury Board authority. With respect to whether I ought to seek advice from other people, Mr. Justice Hall is, indeed, carrying out a study. I think that it would be inappropriate. I think all parties agree that Mr. Justice Hall is the person to best carry out that study. What we ought to do is make sure that the advice of Mr. Justice Hall is received, before we ask other people.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

RENEWAL TERM FOR GOVERNMENT-INSURED MORTGAGES

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the high interest rates for mortgages, will the minister inform the House whether he will change the three-year requirement for the renewal of government-insured mortgages through Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to permit renegotiation of these mortgages for a one-year term?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent suggestion. As a matter of fact, we are considering arrangements to vary the regulations under the NHA to make this arrangement possible. I will report to the hon. member as soon as I have checked to see what progress is being made.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ALLEGED DETERIORATION OF MEDICARE PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO HALT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The questions he has received today indicate that there is deep concern about the whole question of deterioration of medicare.

Is the minister going to put some muscle into the ability that he has to do something now, rather than wait until Mr. Justice Hall has completed a study? To put this off as medicare begins to fall apart is wrong.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my concern is to make sure that when the federal government acts, it first of all does so in relation to guidelines that are clearly understood and agreed upon. Those guidelines do not now exist. I wish they did.

Second, I would advise the hon. member that Mr. Justice Hall's credentials are so excellent that the sort of advice he would offer would commend itself to all sides of this House. Third, and this has come up a couple of times, there seem to be some members opposite who suggest that every time there is a concern, the federal government stops the money flowing to the provinces. If they are concerned about eroding medicare, I suggest that is a way of wiping it out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SHIPBUILDING

LAUZON—INQUIRY CONCERNING GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY LACK OF WORK SITUATION

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. I should like to thank him for the written answer he gave me last week to the question I asked him. I should like to know who are the people concerned in this government because last week, when the unionized workers of Lauzon shipyards came here to meet government officials, they only met civil servants and went back home with very few assurances from them. The workers asked for early decisions on five bids made by Davie Shipbuilding Limited to Lauzon shipyards, a $150 million program concerning the repair and building of ships which had already been announced last February by the former government, that is, by those who now form the official opposition. It is all right for the Prime Minister to tell us very often about a merchant marine, but what is he doing in the short term to secure the uncertain future of shipyards just before winter? What can he do to reassure shipyard workers who are very concerned about the administrative slowness of this government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, following the questions asked by the hon. member and the representations of the workers of Lauzon, I arranged an urgent meeting. It was necessary for us to have a meeting between workers and civil servants. But if the unionized workers think it is important for them to have a meeting at the ministerial level we can arrange this with the Minister of Transport or with one of the ministers of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, I feel the shipyard workers do not need to come back to Ottawa because they figure it has been a waste of time. They have asked the officials in their telegrams—I see the Minister of Supply and Services is smiling. During the entire electoral campaign he went to the shipyards to flirt with the workers, and the Prime Minister himself went there to promise them all kinds of things. Yesterday the Prime Minister said in answer to a question by the opposition leader that he had no intention of delaying tough decisions. I think he is delaying the easy ones.

Can the minister inform the House what steps he is taking to protect this important industry? Can he, also, tell the House whether funds will be made available for future expansion of pulp mills in this country?

DATE RURAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO WILL BE SIGNED

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the long delay in the signing of the rural development agreement between Canada and Ontario, and in recognition of the tremendous need in northern Ontario for the development of our forestry, mineral, agricultural and tourist potential, can the minister say when that agreement will be signed?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the importance of the question, and remind the hon. member that it was because of an earlier program of restraint by his government that the ARDA program in that area was cancelled.

We are now looking into appropriate ways to help that area. As a matter of fact, following negotiations with Ontario there is a Treasury Board submission that also has an element of aid for some of the native population through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Therefore, the matter is under active consideration.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON EXPLORATORY OIL DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Last week, exploratory drilling in one of the Beaufort Sea sites was halted due to ice and weather conditions. Later, that decision was reversed by Ottawa and drilling continued for a short period of time.

Questions were raised in the House. I asked officials in northern development, and the minister, to provide certain reports, exchanges and correspondence pertaining to the incident. Will the minister now explain to the House why he has not seen fit to release these documents?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I first want to indicate to the hon. member that he is not correct in stating that drilling was going on in the Nerlerk site, the M-98 site. In fact, what was happening was production testing. The situation was such that last week, when I answered a question in this House, I indicated that we needed two to five days to end the program. That program ended on the 29th of last month. The ships have left the Nerlerk site and the well has been suspended for the rest of the year.

Mr. Penner: Would the minister be so kind as to confirm that, following the decision of the on-site inspector to shut down drilling, a visit was made by the regional engineer from Yellowknife and he concurred with the decision. Is it also true that the regional engineer was told by Dome Petroleum officials that the company would go over his head and that of the on-site engineer? Is it also true that the regional inspector was soon afterwards directed to modify the shutdown order and to allow drilling to continue for another two to five days?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered that question last week as well. I indicated to the House at that time that the indication from the field, through to Yellowknife and on to Ottawa, was that there had been difficulties in terms of communication. That matter has now been taken up by the department in order to improve communication.

I want to indicate to the hon. member that in terms of continuing the production testing, that was done, and that the department has the authority to re-examine the situation. The problem was ice that was forming to six inches, as well as weather conditions. The weather condition abated. That is why the two to five days were needed. That work was completed. In terms of information, I spoke to a colleague of the hon. member today, and I am willing to make the information available.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY WHY WOMEN NOT HIRED AT STELCO PLANT, HAMILTON

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Since 1961, not one of the 35,000 people hired by the Stelco plant in Hamilton for plant jobs has been a woman. This is in spite of the fact that during this period Stelco has received 30,000 applications for such jobs from women. Also during that period—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Sargeant: In the light of this situation, will the minister assure the House that he will meet with the president of Stelco and other company officials to insist that this discriminatory hiring policy should end?

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): I want to thank the hon. member for that question. I do not know how I get involved, except that I come from Hamilton. I can tell the hon. member that this government, through the Minister of Employment and Immigration, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, through the Secretary of State and through my own department, has taken a leading part in seeing to it that women come into their rightful role. Even though the steel company is not within my responsibility, I am certainly prepared, because I live in Hamilton and because I am just as concerned as the hon. member is, to give him an undertaking that I will contact officials of the steel company and, as well, the unions to see whether they can get together to resolve this serious matter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SKELLY—RADIO OPERATORS' DISPUTE—REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF REMARKS OF PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to an answer given me by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens). In his answer to my question this afternoon the hon. gentleman suggested I had received misinformation, thus implying I had misinformed the House.

I would point out to him that my information may be more current than his. As at 1.45 p.m., confirmed at 2.05 p.m., bargaining in fact ceased. The reason it has ceased becomes clear from the content of my question. First, Treasury Board has laid conditions upon the union which literally cannot be met because Treasury Board does not appear to be serious about the bargaining. They made an offer which was less than the offer reported by the conciliator in the majority report. Then when the workers were out providing emergency services, Treasury Board was again willing to bargain with them if they went back and provided designated services. They did that, Mr. Speaker.

Bargaining then, in theory, commenced. But what the board's negotiations did was put forward an offer which represented a reduction by comparison into previous positions. For 920 people it represented a decrease. Then today, when radio operators were convinced that Treasury Board was not bargaining in good faith—in fact, it appeared that negotiators for Treasury Board did not have the minister's authority to conclude an agreement—they said: "Now we are definitely out". They have left the station. There are no longer emergency services and there are no longer designated services. The minister made the statement that cool heads were required in this House. If it is cool heads that are required, it is not necessary to play the kind of Russian roulette which is being promoted here. Last week—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Essentially, the hon. member seems to be raising a disagreement with the minister. He will have to persuade me that there is a question of privilege involved.

Mr. Skelly: The point is that the information I had is current. I would like the minister to withdraw the remark he made to me and give the House a straight answer on that particular question.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): As all hon. members are well aware, it is very difficult for the House to get into a discussion of ongoing negotiations with respect to any labour settlement. What I indicated in reply to the hon. member was that negotiations resumed at 10 a.m. this morning. They resumed partly at our request. We approached the mediator and the union negotiators last evening requesting that negotiations continue. We indicated, as we have done before, that we feel it essential that those who have been given certain specific tasks to perform should perform those tasks to ensure that there is proper safety at all airports in Canada. When negotiations resumed we were told that the union had, in fact, asked that all members who were off the job should return to their work. Discussions continued. Around noon there was an adjournment. We suggested that negotiations should resume at 4 p.m. The hon. member has now told us that the union has decided not to return at 4 p.m.

All I can say is that we are earnestly trying to come to a settlement of this important matter and we only hope there is not even the slightest suggestion on the part of the hon. member that he is condoning any illegal activity on the part of these union members.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FIRST INTERIM REPORT ON COMPREHENSIVE AUDIT OF GENERAL AND FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEMS

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to take a moment before proceeding to Routine Proceedings to inform the House on a matter which I consider to be of great importance related directly to the administration of the House and indirectly to our spending estimates for future years.

Administration of the House

The administrative duties of the Speaker represent an immense but little known aspect of his responsibilities, and when I assumed this office five years ago I am quite certain that my reaction was very much the same as most of my predecessors: first, some surprise at the enormity of the administrative task; second, serious concern about my own qualifications in the administration field, a concern which the House shares, I am sure, since to my knowledge no Speaker has ever been chosen on the basis of administrative expertise—neither has the Clerk of the House nor the Sergeant-at-Arms, with whom the Speaker shares these duties—and yet, we have neither comptroller nor professional administrator within the ranks of the House of Commons staff.

The subject is further complicated by the dramatic and rapid expansion of the operation of Parliament in recent years. For example, 15 years ago the budget was a fraction of its present figure, and telephone privileges, travel privileges, staff, office accommodation, constituency offices and television within the chamber as we now know them virtually all came into existence in that short period without concurrent upgrading in our administrative practices or administrative skills. Members will not be surprised then to learn that the former Clerk, Mr. Alistair Fraser, Sergeant-at-Arms Col. Currie, Director of Administration and Personnel Georges St-Jacques and I were all in agreement that a thorough review of our administration would be of great value.

Against this background, last winter, in keeping with the spirit of spending restraints announced by the government in the summer of 1978, I asked the management and members' services committee to review our estimates in a somewhat different manner than had been previously attempted. We first identified a number of areas in which costs of operations might be reduced, some, but not all, of which would result in reduction of service to members and in turn, through members, to the public.

I invited the committee to examine our officials on these so that when I presented the estimates for approval in mid-winter, the committee could pass final judgment. Quite appropriately, after taking advantage of the opportunity to examine the officials of the House, the committee concluded that before attempting spending cuts in any major way it, too, would prefer some sort of independent study of our administration. Although we were agreed, neither the committee nor I could begin to formulate terms of reference for such a study. yet we were equally agreed that some start should be made, if possible during the dissolution period.

We agreed to seek advice from the Auditor General and after several consultations with him during which—and I want to underline this to members—his advice was in every sense positive, constructive in its tone and, in my opinion, absolutely invaluable in the steps we are proposing to take. After these consultations, upon which I commend the Auditor General most sincerely, I wrote to invite him formally to begin the process of a comprehensive audit with the hope of identifying administrative weaknesses and recommending solutions, either with or without the help of outside consultants.

The Auditor General very kindly responded to that invitation on my part by putting together a team which started work on the project at once, continued through the dissolution period and, in fact, is still continuing its work. The Auditor General has provided me, under date of October 31, an interim report on that, and I propose to table my invitation to the Auditor General of April 4, 1979 and, in turn, the interim report of the Auditor General, his findings on our administrative difficulties and some proposed suggestions for rectifying them, that being his letter of October 31.

In that letter the Auditor General proposes as a long-term solution the addition to our senior staff of a professional administrator and a comptroller. My response has been positive, but I naturally insist on behalf of the House that before any final decision of this sort be taken, ample opportunity be given to members for study and for comment, not only on the exact responsibilities of such an official or officials, but also on their relationship with Parliament, with the Speaker, with the Clerk and with the Sergeant-at-Arms. At the same time, we all feel that an early start on the work of such administrator is highly desirable, since we soon will be asked to approve cost estimates for spending programs of Parliament in the future.

I am therefore pleased to advise the House that the Auditor General and I have been able to come to an interim solution which I hope will be seen by all members to accomplish all objectives to the maximum possible extent. The Auditor General has kindly offered, under secondment, the services of the very distinguished Deputy Auditor General, Rhéal Chatelain, to serve us as acting or interim administrator, an offer which, after informing House leaders, I have readily accepted and for which I accept full responsibility.

Mr. Chatelain's duties will be to oversee implementation of administrative programs, and he brings to the position a background which ideally suits him to the task. This interim period will enable us to benefit from his expertise immediately, but also will give to members of the House of Commons the opportunity for study and for comment upon the possible ultimate responsibilities and relationship of this administrator with the other officers I have mentioned.

I want to thank, first of all, the Auditor General for his assistance. He has at all times acted not only as the professional accountant that he is and, of course, the Auditor General of Canada in that immense responsibility to the Canadian people, but he has acted at all times as a servant of Parliament, and his attention to our problems—but, more important than that, his devotion to this institution—has been readily apparent to me throughout all our consultations. I therefore extend on behalf of the House special thanks to him for his counsel and guidance through this period of time.

In addition, I thank the previous officials of the House—Mr. Alistair Fraser, the previous Clerk of the House; Colonel David Currie, our previous Sergeant-at-Arms; Mr. Georges St-Jacques, Director of Administration and Personnel throughout all these discussions; our new Clerk, Dr. Beverley Koester; and General Gus Cloutier, our new Sergeant-at-Arms. All have been most helpful throughout all our consultations.

Lastly, I thank the members of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services of the last Parliament, and particularly its very distinguished chairman, the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates), for their wise assistance and counsel during all the preparatory steps which led to the initiation of this interim solution and interim experience for us, with the assistance of the Auditor General and now with Mr. Chatelain.

I am sure I speak on behalf of all hon. members in expressing hope. I want to say, having initiated this collaboration with that committee, that I will be appearing before that committee at a meeting scheduled very soon in order to continue discussions and consultations on this in case there are any questions members want to put. I hope they will avail themselves of that opportunity at that time.

I want finally simply to say that I hope that in taking these steps I am expressing the hope of all members of the House of Commons that in this way we will maximize the opportunity for members to participate in this decision and to discuss it before a final implementation is made; and that in the interim we will be working together with Mr. Chatelain to ensure not only the smooth functioning of Parliament in all its responsibilities to the Canadian public, but, above all, that we will be doing that in a manner which remains exemplary to the Canadian public in our accountability for the expenditure of public funds.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you very much for that extensive and complete statement with respect to the report which has been commissioned. I say on behalf of the government that we think it is appropriate that after receiving that report you have moved immediately with respect to it in terms of establishing interim machinery and putting into place the appropriate personnel, reserving as always, as I know you would, the ultimate right of Parliament through the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services of this House to look at the final results of the investigation. I assume Your Honour will be tabling that report, if that is appropriate, and I think that is wise, but I think it is important that I say on behalf of the government that we support the action you have taken with respect to this matter.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the leader of the House the regular Thursday question as to what business he has in mind for the week ahead.

I would like to draw to his attention that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) was good enough to advise me that he would not be in the Committee of the Whole today and that he will be replaced by his parliamentary secretary. I do not want to create any fuss about this point today, but I draw to the attention of the leader of the House that we expect that ministers be in their places for major legislation, and particularly when we are in Committee of the Whole we expect the Minister of Finance in the future to be present. I am sure that his presence—because of his customary enlightened replies—would facilitate the passage of the legislation. I draw that to the minister's attention.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the customary House business there will be a House leaders' meeting tomorrow, and we can discuss matters specifically, but for the guidance of the House today we will be continuing Committee of the Whole with respect to the income tax bill, followed by the Customs Tariff bill. I hope we will be able to finish the income tax bill relatively soon and that we can get on to the other matter.

As far as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is concerned, the hon. member knows that the minister is an extremely busy man, and I think the House will agree that his parliamentary secretary handled the work of the committee last night admirably. He was very forthcoming, and I think he handled a difficult task very well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance understands his obligations to the House of Commons. I know the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) understands the varied obligations of the Minister of Finance here and across the country. There are examples we can emulate. There are certain which we will not emulate. I refer to certain examples of former governments in terms of attendance of ministers. However, I want to assure the hon. member that we recognize our responsibility and that the Minister of Finance will do his very best to be here as much as possible.

Mr. MacEachen: What about the House business?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We are going to have a House leaders' meeting tomorrow.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Drummond on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) to answer the question asked by the hon. member who spoke before me and to tell us clearly what the business of the House will be for the next few days. Traditionally, we ask this question every Thursday. The answer we were given is quite limited. He tells us that we are about to conclude the study of Bill C-17, that we will undertake today to examine Bill C-18, and then he refers us to an eventual meeting of House leaders tomorrow. I would like him to tell us clearly what the House will deal with, what is the legislative menu for the next seven days.

● (1520)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I did not really want to get into this, but I will now that the hon. member insists.

There was a House leaders' meeting earlier in the week on Tuesday, at which time I put to the hon. member who has just spoken certain proposals with respect to House business. The answer that I received was that he would have to consult with his colleagues in caucus and will reply to me. I attempted to establish a House leaders' meeting yesterday—but it proved to be inconvenient for other hon. members—at which time I hoped to have the reply so I could then inform the House how we might proceed. I do not have those replies. A meeting is scheduled for tomorrow, to which I specifically invite hon. members opposite to reply to the questions that they said they were going to take to their caucus on Wednesday. If they reply to me, then I think I will be able to answer quite fully the question on the business of the House on Friday.

[Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton).]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I say on this point that I want to make it absolutely clear that it is the responsibility of the government to lay out the business of the House for the future, and none of the points raised by the hon. member, to which we will give him answers, should prevent him today from telling us what the business is for the next week. It appears to me that the government really does not know what it can bring forward, and probably it is not prepared.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there was a long list of legislation given a week ago with respect to what the government program is for the fall.

Some hon. Members: Tell us.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I really do want to be a consultative House leader and I think it is appropriate that we meet. It is appropriate, from time to time, that we look at the legislation in front of us and agree about how long the legislation should take. I really do invite the hon. gentleman and welcome him cordially. I will even have a pot of tea for him when he comes to give me the information with respect to the intentions of his caucus.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could address a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) on that particular document?

Mr. Speaker: Not unless the minister makes a statement.

Mr. Kaplan: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would give consideration, in view of the importance of the matter, to making a statement so as to give members the opportunity to ask questions about this very important document.

NATIONAL BATTLEFIELDS COMMISSION—PRESIDENCY

Question No. 63—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who (a) is the president (b) are the vice presidents of the National Battlefields Commission?

2. What is the annual salary in each case?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment):

1. (a) Mr. Fernand Tremblay

(Note: The act respecting the National Battlefields Commission does not call for a president but rather a chairman.)

(b) There is no vice chairman.

2. The chairman does not receive an annual salary but is entitled to receive his actual disbursements for expenses incurred in the discharge of his powers and duties under the act.

Order Paper Questions

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT—AMOUNT PAID TO THE GOVERNMENT OF QUEBEC

Question No. 172—Mr. Herbert:

1. In the past five years, was approximately $59 million paid to the government of Quebec under the Canada Student Loans Act and, if so, what was the basis upon which the payments were calculated?

2. What is the approximate loss ratio on loans to students in provinces other than Quebec?

3. What is the average turnover time for student loans?

4. What is the estimated percentage of the total amount of loans outstanding, at any one time, that would be necessary as an annual contribution in order to maintain the present level of lending?

Mrs. Diane Stratas (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State):

1. Yes. Section 12(2) of the Canada Student Loans Act sets out the method of calculating the amount of alternative payment. In short, the amount paid is the proportion of the costs to the federal government in respect of loans made by participating provinces that the 18-24 year age group in Quebec bears to the same age group in participating provinces.

2. From August, 1964, to December 31, 1978, the loss ratio on loans to students in provinces other than Quebec was 0.14 per cent.

3. The maximum repayment period permitted under the act is ten years from the date a borrower ceased to be a full-time student. The Canada Student Loans Act and regulations provide, however, that the minister may extend this period in exceptional circumstances. Within the ten-year maximum the repayment period in each case is determined by the lender (chartered banks and other lending institutions) in consultation with the borrower and is dependent upon the size of the debt and the borrower's ability to make payments. There is provision for a revision of agreed terms where a borrower is unable to continue to meet the payments because of unemployment, ill-health or other temporary situation. The bulk of student loans are repaid within six years.

4. The Canada Student Loans Act is not a self-financing program so that repayments are not sufficent to cover issue of new loans in any year. The act sets out a specific total loan provision for a base year and provides for escalation of that basic loan provision in subsequent years in accordance with the change in post-secondary full-time enrolment in Canada. Total loans advanced in any year may not exceed the loan provision for that year. The act provides that the federal government shall pay interest charges on all loans advanced so long as the borrower is enrolled in full-time post-secondary education at an eligible institution and for six months after ceasing such studies. The act also provides that the federal government shall guarantee lenders against losses due to default in repaying loans. The cost to the federal government in each year is, therefore, the interest charges on outstanding balances of loans for students still enrolled (and six months thereafter) and the paying of claims for loss submitted under the guarantee in that year.

Order Paper Questions

CANADA STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM—REQUEST BY PROVINCES TO REVISE

Question No. 173—Mr. Herbert:

1. (a) Did any of the present participating provinces in the Canada Student Loans Program request that the government repeal or revise the Canada Student Loans Act (b) which of the provinces have a comparable program and what is the procedure to avoid duplication or competition?

2. Can a Quebec student completing education in another province participate in the program?

Mrs. Diane Stratas (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State):

1. (a) All participating provinces have requested that the government revise the Canada Student Loans Act. No province has requested that the government repeal the Canada Student Loans Act.

(b) No participating province has a comparable program which duplicates or is in competition with the Canada Student Loans Program. All participating provinces have provincial programs complementary to the Canada Student Loans Program to assist either by way of grants or loans to those students whose needs are greater than can be satisfied by the loan limits established under the Canada Student Loans Act.

2. A Quebec resident is not eligible to receive assistance under the Canada Student Loans Program as Quebec does not participate in that program. However, Quebec operates its own program of loans and grants for its residents attending institutions in that province. Residents studying at specified universities and colleges outside the province may receive assistance under the provincial plan. Under the Canada Student Loans Act a province choosing not to participate in the program receives an alternative payment from the federal government. This payment is calculated by applying the ratio of the 18 to 24-year old population in the province concerned to the same age group in participating provinces to the costs incurred by the federal program in operating the Canada plan.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES

How many (a) permanent (b) term employees were on the Department of Veterans Affairs' payroll on March 31, 1979?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): In so far as the Department of Veterans Affairs and agencies are concerned: (a) 4946 (b) 544.

HON. ROBERT STANFIELD—BUDGET AVAILABLE

Question No. 242—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

What budget was made available to the honourable Robert Stanfield to study the possibility of moving the Canadian Embassy to Jerusalem?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): It is estimated that $300,000 will be required for transportation and communications, professional services, printing and distribution of report and material and supplies. Mr. Stanfield was appointed within the DM 1 ($48,500 to $65,500) for a period of 12 months, effective July 12, 1979. The salary is paid by the Department of External Affairs and the Department of External Affairs are also providing officer and support staff assistance.

LA MAURICIE NATIONAL PARK—COST OF LAND

Question No. 303—Mr. Roy (Beauce):

Did the government buy land for the Mauricie National Park and, if so, at what cost?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): No. The lands comprising La Mauricie National Park were transferred at no cost to Canada pursuant to an agreement between Canada and the province of Quebec dated August 22, 1970.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask what has happened to questions Nos. 140, 150 and 160 which have not been answered yet, although they are very important.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Longueuil has not received any reply to his question. Are we to understand that the parliamentary secretary has taken note of the question and will try to answer it? It seems that the government is making a specialty of not answering the questions which members of the official opposition have submitted over the past few days.

Mr. Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to take note of these questions.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil on the same point of order.

Mr. Olivier: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but it would seem that since the beginning of the current session, the government has not been paying much attention to the written questions by hon. members. We are under the impression that the government simply refuses to answer our questions. Has it anything to hide? If it has, let it say so. At least it should not promise to table its answers or claim to be an open government. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, it should table its answers as soon as we submit our written questions. This government is apparently bent on not answering our questions.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this debate, but if I were to give an example of slowness and laxity and failure to answer questions, I could not think of a better one to follow than that of the former government. But the one thing that I do want to bring to the attention of hon. members—and I am sorry the hon. member did not recognize that yesterday—is the fact that yesterday we made parliamentary history in terms of openness. There were three motions for the production of papers and all three of them were answered in the affirmative, so that papers are going to be produced. I do not recall that ever happening under the former government; never were there three motions in a row accepted.

Hon. members know that we are going to do our very best, having regard for the complexity of the questions, to answer those questions appropriately and as best we can. We may fail from time to time, but all hon. members should know that those are the instructions and suggestions that have gone from me to my colleagues in the ministries.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to point out to the government House leader, with all due respect, that if he would like to check the record he would find that the former parliamentary secretary to the president of the privy council ensured that 90 per cent of the questions which were asked in a session were answered in the same session, and that a much greater volume of these questions was answered on a daily basis than this supposedly open government has done so far.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we have spent enough time on this. There will be an opportunity to renew the discussion so let us not exhaust it now. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

On clause 38—Small business deduction

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, last night we were dealing with the very important clause involving the rights of certain individuals to incorporate themselves and take advantage of the preferential rate which currently exists in the Income Tax Act of Canada. I should like to take this opportunity to go through the history of this particular problem in an attempt to get some answers from the parliamentary secretary respecting the changes introduced by the Minister of Finance in the budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice.

In 1972 when the so-called tax reforms which provide the basis for our Income Tax Act were introduced, the Income Tax Act provided for a special reduction in the standard corporate rate for small businesses which qualified as being active businesses. That section of the act has been amended to the extent that now a corporation with an income of less than $750,000 a year receives a special corporate rate, a special small business rate for Canadian small business of 25 per cent, as opposed to the standard corporate rate which is now 46 per cent. It introduced an important incentive for which there is justification.

We pointed out that the majority of Canadians are employed in small businesses and the important role played by small businesses in the Canadian economy. We all recognize those factors. Like so many features of the Income Tax Act, individuals took advantage of this clause. They saw the Income Tax Act as an opportunity to avoid taxation where it should be paid, not as setting out principles to be followed.

What happened to the act? The definition of "active business" income was so extended by judicial interpretation that it provided an opportunity for many individuals to take advantage of the act, individuals for whom the advantages originally were not intended. Unfortunately the courts were complicit in this activity.

It is important to realize the advantages of an active business income and being allowed to incorporate. Those advantages are substantial, as are the tax savings engendered by incorporation. One problem was that a large number of doctors, lawyers, dentists, chartered accountants in provinces where they were allowed, athletes, entertainers and many other professionals took advantage of the small business provision in order to lower their effective rate of taxation.

Also it is important to realize that the fairness of the tax system was no longer evident. As I pointed out yesterday, employees bear the substantial burden of the Income Tax Act. I am referring to those employees who work hard every day, whose income tax is taken away at source, who do not understand the Income Tax Act and who are not in a position to take advantage of the deductions, special incentives and grants given through the tax system to self-employed individuals and corporations, be they public or private.

There were two good features in the budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice. One was the closing of the loophole and the other was the belated decision to come to grips with the problem of term preferred shares and the manner in which banks were taking advantage of them to reduce their effective level of taxation to around 10 per cent. As members of Parliament we all know that the decision of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice to define an active business and a business which would qualify for the lower tax rate, the special small business rate, in such a manner as to exclude professionals such as athletes, entertainers and others in the management service field, aroused a considerable response from a very well organized lobby. I was on the receiving end of this lobby, as I am sure were many other members.

The effect of the change would have been to destroy a haven. It would have required doctors, lawyers, dentists, accountants and others to start paying taxes as if they were not incorporated. It would have changed their effective rate of taxation. It would have increased their effective rate of taxation and made it more comparable to that paid by other non-incorporated individuals, be they self-employed or employees.

I am disturbed, as are many others, that the only change, apart from airport tax, the Minister of Finance has made to the budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice is to create a third category of corporation and a third standard rate for a special group of individuals. There were no changes to simplify the act, to make it more comprehensible, to make it more fair and to eliminate some unfair advantage given to one group over another. The service group defined in the budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice is now being given a special deduction from the standard corporate rate of 12⅔ per cent; it brings them to an effective taxation rate of 33⅓ per cent. But it still allows that group to take advantage of the dividend tax credit, tax deferrals, build-up of credits in corporations and all advantages given to private Canadian corporations in our Income Tax Act.

I have a very simple question for the parliamentary secretary. Despite the mumbo jumbo in the statements of the minister that this tax has a neutral effect, is it not the case that it still will be to the tax advantage of professionals to incorporate rather than not? If that is the case, what is the social justification for allowing lawyers in Alberta to incorporate themselves while other lawyers cannot? What is the social justification for allowing some self-employed individuals to incorporate themselves and take advantage of this special rate while employees cannot take advantage of these incentives?

In his statements on this act before the House, the Minister of Finance said that there were parts of it he was more enthusiastic about than others. But I assume from his press release that since this is the only change, this is the amendment of which he is particularly enthusiastic and proud.

We are entitled to an explanation when we look at the comparative advantages being given to one group of individuals over another. We are being provided with an additional complexity rather than a simplification of the Income Tax Act. It gives an advantage to people who have the talent and ability to know how to incorporate themselves, those who have particular skills and to whom such a tax bracket is advantageous. In view of the fact that it was indicated in the budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice that it was never intended that this group would be able or be allowed to take advantage of this measure, and that it was only through a series of interpretations that gave rise to this loophole taht was finally closed by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, I think we are entitled to a clear explanation from the parliamentary secretary as to why this has been done.

There is one other point I should like to make. We have this phantom opposition over here in the Liberal party. If members of that party really believed in the importance of fairness in the tax system, we would have some Liberals here who would be prepared to defend that budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice. That is not the case. Those hon. members have backed off. There is not one measure in this budget they are prepared to defend, talk about or intervene on behalf of, or even make an effort to understand. I can understand the braying and the catcalling by members on the other side because they want to get this bill through quickly. It is not in their interest to try to understand it. They know which group they want to give an advantage to and which group they do not want to have the advantage. I can understand that attitude on the part of Conservatives. However, this pathetic performance on the part of members of the Liberal party has to be seen to be believed. They are not here and they do not care about a measure that has been changed. The hon. member for Saint-Maurice does not even have the presence to speak to a matter which he originally thought about and wanted to present to the House of Commons. He has not made a statement about its being changed. The hon. member for Windsor West did not mention the change once in his speech concerning the Income Tax Act. In fact, he did not mention one provision of this measure.

I think it is important that Canadians know that a particular lobby can be mounted after a budget in the dying days of a Parliament and so influence the Conservative party that it brings about a change in the Income Tax Act to provide a special advantage through a loophole to that group of professionals and others who can take advantage of the laws of incorporation to reduce their effective rates of taxation.

We note how concerned the Liberals are about that. They have not said a word or uttered a peep or mutter about this aspect of the budget or about any other aspect of it. I think it is becoming increasingly clear to Canadians who the real opposition to the new or old Conservative party really is. That opposition certainly is not coming from the Liberal party. I think it is clear it is coming from the New Democratic Party. I would like to hear some explanation from the parliamentary secretary in response to our representations.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might—

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Dollard gave me notice that he wanted to ask a question.

[Translation]

Does the hon. member wish to ask a question of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood?

[English]

Mr. Desmarais: Would the hon. member permit a question? During his remarks he intimated that the rate of taxation for banks is somewhere around 10 per cent. Is the hon. member aware that what happens is that the banks pay the same rate as any other corporation? What actually happens is that banks make loans to various individuals at a rate of 7 per cent because these individuals are unable to pay the 14 per cent prime rate. Those individuals cannot afford to pay this high rate for two reasons. They either do not have any taxable income or insufficient income from any source to meet that rate. In these cases the banks allow these borrowers to pay a rate of 7 per cent on preferred shares. In that event the borrower is not allowed to deduct the 7 per cent for tax purposes, and the lender is not taxable in respect of that 7 per cent.

What the hon. member is suggesting is that we should drive the rate up from 10 per cent to 50 per cent for banks. In that case the banks will have to go back to these borrowers and say they cannot charge 7 per cent any longer but will have to charge 14 per cent, with the additional 7 per cent going to the government, thus doubling the rate of interest for a large number of borrowers.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very happy to reply to the question asked by my colleague for Dollard. First of all, I must tell him that I was not the one to suggest amending the act concerning income bonds and income debentures; it was the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice. Therefore, if he has a question about the wisdom of amending the act or the means through which banks borrow money from small or large companies, he should ask his colleague in the Liberal party, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice.

If the hon. member is willing to remain in the House, I am certain he will be interested to hear the interventions of the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance. For my part, I shall be interested to hear how income bonds and debentures really work, how they have worked in the past and what would be the economic and fiscal implications of amending the act as proposed by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice. I am very happy to remain in the House, and I am certain the hon. member will be happy to hear the interventions of the parliamentary secretary. Moreover, as I said earlier, it is unfortunate that more members of the Liberal party are not ready to ask interesting and significant questions about income bonds and debentures and the matter of small businesses about which I have just asked the parliamentary secretary.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Desmarais: I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The time allotted to the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood has expired. I can therefore not allow this dialogue, but I shall add the name of the hon. member for Dollard to my list and recognize him in due time, perhaps to allow him to express his opinion instead of simply asking a question.

[English]

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Chairman, I was surprised by the comments a moment ago of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood to the effect that no one in my party was becoming involved in this debate. That is an unusual comment on the part of the hon. member in view of the fact that I indicated to him last night before we adjourned at six o'clock that I intended to speak on this same point. The hon. member knew full well how I felt about the special tax rate that is being maintained, as I told the hon. member last night that I would be speaking on this point. In view of that I think it is a little bit ungentlemanly of him to make the kind of comment he made earlier about no member of my party being involved in this debate. I also think, as he leaves the room, having just a moment ago commented on the fact that the Liberal finance critic is doing a television interview—

Mr. Rae: I am here.

An hon. Member: Where were you last night?

Mr. Stollery: I was sitting right here.

An hon. Member: You did not say a word yesterday.

● (1550)

Mr. Stollery: I do not think that those kinds of tactics will be very successful, nor are they the sorts of tactics one would expect from a major spokesman of the NDP.

An hon. Member: They got you up.

Mr. Stollery: I can assure the hon. member that the spokesman on this bill for my party will return to the House very shortly. He is presently giving a television interview, so I do not think that the hon. member should make such comments.

I, too, would like to question the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance on this very strange business of creating a special kind of taxpayer, as the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood describes it. People who have the tax withdrawn at the source, and this includes most people, are the people who pay most of the taxes and who pay them at the very least arguable rates. These people do not get a chance to argue or make claims on expenses. They simply get the pay cheque with the money removed. I am sure that most of these people will resent bitterly a society which gives the guy down the street a special rate because he happens to be a professional or in a tax category which gives him a special tax rate.

It is not the small businessman who is being considered in this clause. The whole purpose of the changes was to give a tax benefit to what all of us understand to be small business, because it is small businesses in Canada which employ the largest number of Canadians. The small business is involved in everything from manufacturing to the retail level. They have felt for a long time that they have been discriminated against in the tax system. They work longer hours, but they always seem to get the short end of the stick when it comes to the tax system.

There is the belief that it would be advantageous to the country because small businesses employ more people if they expand. I realize that the parliamentary secretary has a background in big business with regard to the oil field. He may not be aware of the plight of the small businessman, and I am not saying that in an unpleasant way. Small businesses traditionally have not wanted to get very large. They have enjoyed the kind of activity in which they were involved, but they have always felt that they were being beaten in the tax system.

Over the years the small business tax advantage has been put into the system to create employment. We have found that it is being used by people who are really not small businessmen according to the original concept, but who were, for example, in legal partnerships. As I understand it, and I am not a lawyer, in some provinces the law society will not allow a lawyer to set himself up as an incorporated business. Perhaps the best example is the hockey player who sets himself up as a company and pays his salary into a limited company, thereby paying a smaller amount of income tax. Many people think that this is unfair.

I recognize that there is a certain amount of tightening up taking place in this clause. I recognize that the hockey player will no longer be able simply to pay his salary into a limited company, but would probably have to claim that he was doing personal appearances or something else besides just putting his salary into a limited company. That represents some small improvement.

I believe that the original changes proposed by the minister of finance in the last government show the direction in which this government should be heading. It should be trying to make income tax payable on a more equal basis and getting away from these special categories. I recognize, and I suppose it will continue to be the situation, that one could have a large income from stocks and other investments which one could pay into a limited company. As I understand the proposal, such a company would now be required to employ at least five people. That proposition was proposed by the last minister of finance, and I believe that it is being maintained.

What I do not understand is the way in which the government has caved in to this lobby of people with basically high incomes, in so far as I can make out, and who do not want to pay the normal income tax. There are enough schemes already available to these people to divert their incomes. There are special tax rates in this country for the film industry, and for the oil industry particularly with regard to exploration, to mention but two examples. There are a vast number of ways in which a person can get away from paying tax so long as they are interested in creating employment and investing in some sector of the Canadian economy.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether this proposal has been thought through. As I understand it, if a person puts his money into a company and pays tax at the rate of 33 per cent, that company can accumulate over a period of years a reserve of up to $750,000. I should like to know if it is true that the person who then retires and collects the income from $750,000, which could be up to $35,000 a year, would not have to pay any tax on it. As I understand the proposal of the government, it would lead to a situation where people in this country who earn $35,000 per year through income or from dividends or from their company could end up not paying any income tax. That is a pretty serious state of affairs, and I am fairly certain that it is so. I strongly urge the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary to consider that they are creating a potentially new brand of taxpayer.

Every taxpayer in Canada who is paying income tax at the source, and that is most of us—members of the House of Commons have it taken out of their pay cheques like everyone else—anybody who receives a pay cheque, should strongly resent a system which creates a special kind of taxpayer, that is, one who is not paying his taxes.

I then ask why I should pay taxes at pretty high rates. I am a single person with no dependants who pays a high rate of tax. Why should I pay up to 50 per cent in Ontario? I have the Clarkson Gordon 1979 tax rates here. I have never resented paying income tax, but on behalf of anyone paying their taxes in the normal fashion I register the strongest protest against a system which will create a group which does not have to pay or who can avoid paying. I would suspect that in the marginal rates there will be many who will not be paying 17 per cent of taxes. That is a disgraceful situation.

It is no wonder that at a time when Canada is getting poorer every year and when the brunt of this economic hardship is being carried by people who do not have any special tax advantages, the individual who has a lot of tax advantages absorbs a lot of the decline in real income in this country, and I suspect this is so in most of the world. He absorbs it because he charges it up to the government. The country pays; the other taxpayers pay for him. There could be some person earning $50,000 or $100,000 per year, yet he is being subsidized by someone earning $15,000 per year. That is what is being proposed here. It leads to a situation which I checked today with the Department of Finance. I am not an accountant and my taxes are simple enough that I have never had to understand these various dividends and credits and things that exist for those who can take advantage of the tax system. I never understand them because I can never take advantage of them.

I should like the parliamentary secretary to tell us whether it is true or not true that this can result in an individual having an income up to a maximum of $35,000 per year, so long as it comes in the form of dividends from a dummy company that the person has set up for $200, and not pay any income tax on that amount.

Mr. Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak for a few moments on this clause. As a member of a profession for whom this legislation was primarily designed, I might say that putting the rate back at 33⅓ makes it about as neutral as it can be.

The hon. member who just sat down pointed out that dummy corporations have people who get money out of them through wages that they basically do not earn. Many small businesses have people on their payroll who, strictly speaking, might not be considered productive. This seems to be one of the disadvantages of tax systems.

One of the problems that has come from this is the high margin of income tax rates that we have. If the marginal income tax rates were not so high, this sort of thing would not occur so much. Without some provision like this, say with limited liability, it would be almost impossible for physicians, for example, to hold property in groups and to have facilities. Most provinces do not allow physicians to incorporate their incomes; certainly Manitoba does not. I realize that Alberta does allow professional people to incorporate their incomes, but it has probably changed the rules to some extent.

I have considered this over many years and have discussed it with my accountant at various times but I could never see where it paid to incorporate a medical practice, except for the limited liability aspect. For instance, if four doctors decided to build a facility for $150,000 or $200,000, they would pretty well need to have a company to do so. It would have to be organized on a partnership basis. In any case, the tax changes of 1972 made partnerships almost impossible to carry on on an income tax basis if there was any complexity. Most accountant firms will advise against partnerships of almost any kind. As I say, the 33⅓ is as neutral as can be.

The hon. member who just spoke implied that all physicians and all professionals were pretty well assured of an income. Mr. Chairman, they are no more assured of an income than the corner grocer. Physicians and lawyers who work on a salary for a firm must pay income tax just as we do. It is not necessarily true that many will come in the door demanding to be paid high salaries or be provided with a high income. I might say that in a practical sort of a way the physician in Manitoba makes about $10 or $14 per hour before taxes. He makes up for some of this by working 50 to 60 hours a week. Whether that is too much, I do not know.

I would to like to point out there are many professions, such as pharmacy, which are not included in this. In practice, however, pharmacists can incorporate their companies. They have to be able to incorporate because of the large stock they carry and so on. Usually about half of their income can be classified in the same way as incomes of lawyers and physicians.

If everything went very well and circumstances were exceptionally favourable, it might be that a person could use the 33⅓ per cent and make considerable money. However, from my discussions with many physicians, I find they have tended to lose on this. By and large their companies have not been around for a long time. They have been holding companies or real estate companies.

It would be almost impossible to get facilities without having some kind of company. Presumably we would not have clinics and this sort of thing where there is a physical facility. Physicians have told me that having a company has not particularly resulted in their making money. In many cases, their income has been less than had they paid the marginal rate.

The limited liability feature, the possibility of bankruptcy, suits for injuries and so on make it necessary for professionals to be able to set up companies of some kind. This may not be the best way to do that. I have gone through the white paper on taxation of 1970 and subsequent legislation. As a professional, I do not particularly ask for favours. However, something has to be set up in order that facilities can be built and manned.

Another problem that remains unsolved is those who have spent long years preparing themselves and do not earn money until they are in their thirties. They presumably then earn a high income and pay a great deal in tax. Obviously that is a difficult problem. While this change may not necessarily be the best, it seems the most neutral we can arrive at for the moment.

I would ask the parliamentary secretary whether this effective 33⅓ per cent rate commenced in November of last year, or will it become effective when this bill is passed, or, in fact, is it effective at the present time?

[Translation]

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Chairman, the question of reducing taxes or customs tariffs is indeed very interesting and leads to heated debates, in this House and elsewhere, the points of view often differing widely. I listened to the former speakers very closely and, though I represent a riding in which the majority of voters are workers, I also represent a number of professionals whose point of view I must also submit to the House and to the parliamentary secretary who is piloting Bill C-17.

I think all we want, we being members of the House, is justice for all taxpayers, a justice which enables governments to collect the money they need to run the country. For this purpose, it is necessary to collect more from those who earn more. But, Mr. Speaker, these laws should not cause injustice under the pretence that everybody should pay income tax. I would like to pass on to the parliamentary secretary some sensible remarks which were written to me by one of my constituents of Jonquière, Dr. Blais, who states in all deference that in its present form the bill is unfair. In his budget, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, the former minister of finance, had proposed some amendments which were suspended and which this government now wants to implement. Therefore, I would like him to know the remarks of Dr. Blais, and I quote:

> The government and the new Minister of Finance, Mr. John Crosbie, plan to amend the tax laws concerning administrative corporations for professionals and companies affiliated to corporations without legal constitution. These would no longer be entitled to reduced tax rates.
> We strongly believe that these amendments are arbitrary and that they discriminate against us professionals for the following reasons:

Income Tax Act

1. The government proposes that doctors, dentists, lawyers and accountants not be entitled to the reduced tax rates granted to corporations even if they are incorporated. (At the present time, Alberta is the only province to authorize the professions to incorporate, but it is expected that the other provinces will provide this authorization shortly.)

This clearly discriminatory legislation isolates the members of the four major professions and submits them to an arbritary taxation system. If it is passed, optometrists will pay lower taxes than ophthalmologists, chiropractors will pay less than general practitioners, administrative advisers less than accountants and denture manufacturers less than dentists, to mention but a few examples.

2. Moreover, the government wants to deprive most administrative companies which offer their services to a non-incorporated company of the right to benefit from the reduced tax rates generally granted to small Canadian businesses. In fact, if the administrative company offers its services only to a group of professionals and their associates, it will not have this right.

This other measure will be more unfavourable to the dentist who has a company to take care of the administrative side of his practice than any other businessman who might do the same. The government forgets that the dentist incurs higher costs for his equipment and his office and after has higher financial risks than small businesses in general.

It can perhaps be said that not all incorporated companies should benefit from reduced tax rates. However, we see no reason to deprive of this right the companies which take care of the administration of professional practices, whether for dentists or any other major profession. We also think that those provisions should be looked at again and that the government should postpone their passage until such time as more reasonable solutions have been found.

First of all, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary why, in paragraph (f), on page 49, the non-qualifying business is being limited to the professional practice of an accountant, dentist, lawyer, medical doctor, veterinarian or chiropractor, and why all professions are not included generally; why is this statute limited in that way? Second, why does he, on behalf of the government, plan to deprive administrative business, that supplies services to companies that are not duly incorporated, of the right to use the reduced rates usually allowed small Canadian businesses? Finally, I ask the parliamentary secretary whether he has really looked into all other possible solutions to that important matter, whether the decision of the government is final and whether, if this bill having become law proves to be unfair, he will be willing to suggest to his government that it amend it in order to avoid the injustices pointed out by that voter from my riding?

Mr. Johnston: My intervention will be brief, Mr. Chairman. I need some information from the parliamentary secretary in order to fully comprehend the impact of this proposal upon our existing income tax laws. I am bothered by what I consider to be a flagrant violation of the principle of tax neutrality. I might say I was not very happy with Bill C-37 either, so it is not a question of my supporting one and not supporting another. But are we doing the right thing by providing this new special rate of 33⅓ per cent for a particular category while excluding others from similar benefits? Are we paying sufficient attention to the position, for example, of wage earners?

In his own press release the Minister of Finance states on page two, in paragraph three, that such corporations which retain earnings in the business will still enjoy tax deferrals since the rate of 33⅓ per cent is lower than the personal income tax rate on taxable incomes in excess of $15,000 gross. So here we are proposing in the case of, say, two professionals that in one instance a taxpayer will be paying tax on income in excess of $15,000 at a rate which the incorporated professional will not pay until his income reaches $150,000. This does not strike me as being a just situation from the point of view of wage earners. This leads to an underlying problem which I raised the other day with regard to the very tax rates themselves. Something has to be done.

I say, further: why single out these professionals? There is in this House a fairly representative group of the professionals we are talking about. We even have a well known chiropractor on this side of the House. I happen to be a lawyer. What distinguishes these gentlemen, say, from an engineer or an architect in terms of the proposal which is being advanced? In other words, why does one kind of professional income become entitled to an advantage which other kinds of professional incomes do not enjoy?

Turning to another consideration, we have to ask ourselves: what is the tax cost likely to be? Has the Department of Finance calculated what the tax deferment would be if every professional in this country, every professional who is listed, were to incorporate? The list covers accountants, dentists, lawyers, medical doctors, veterinarians and chiropractors. Let us assume that if this law is adopted a great deal of pressure will be placed upon professional organizations in each province to permit the incorporation of professionals for tax purposes, because given current rates of inflation tax deferrals become very significant. Tax deferred for 10 or 20 years is, in fact, tax not paid.

It can be said that in the long run the tax would be the same. The hon. gentleman said it was neutral. It is neutral if the dividends are declared or the salaries are paid out, but I submit this would not happen because these vehicles would become holding companies for all these professionals. Would the tax cost run into the millions? Or billions? I imagine it would be very substantial.

Getting back to the principle of tax neutrality, is it right for us to create a situation where provincial law will determine what the federal tax rate would be? In my own province, Quebec, lawyers cannot incorporate, accountants cannot incorporate, engineers have techniques for incorporation effectively, but professional societies, as hon. members know, have long resisted incorporation in certain jurisdictions because of the so-called client-professional relationship. It bothers me that we could have a professional in one part of the country with an income identical to that of a similar professional in another province, yet one would enjoy a substantial tax advantage over the other because one professional might be able to incorporate while the other could not. That is one departure from tax neutrality. The second departure is that we have singled out specific professions for preferential treatment.

Now let us consider the position of the ordinary wage earner. Why should he not obtain some sort of deferral? Why should he be subjected to full tax on his income in excess of $15,000 while other salary earners, other professionals, have this opportunity for substantial benefit through deferral? All this leads me to suggest that the approach being taken to corporations and the use of incorporations in this area is unduly complicating our tax structure and must inevitably lead to situations which are completely unjustified in terms of tax neutrality, a principle with which I am sure we all agree. We may disagree about rates. The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, for example, might like to see us all employed by the state or he might like to see rates of 75 per cent or 80 per cent. But I know we would agree on one thing at least: everyone in the same circumstances should be paying the same amount of tax. The hon. gentleman is asking us to approve a provision which would make this objective more and more difficult to achieve.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of questions I should like to raise on this clause. I must say I found the comments of the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount interesting and informative. The background he enjoys brings to this House an expertise to which I think we should pay attention.

There are two matters about which I would like to speak, although it was my original intention to address myself to just one. In light of the fact that the particular profession to which I enjoy the privilege of association has been mentioned on numerous occasions today, there are a couple of matters within the ambit of that profession which I would like to set straight on the record. I am speaking of my own profession as a chiropractor.

I would like to say that I have been in practice for 25 years. I have served for two years as the president of the British Columbia Chiropractic Association. I spent nine years on its board, served as a vice president of the Canadian Chiropractic Association and some years on its board, and for some years as a director of the Canadian Memorial Chiropractic College.

Having said that and having indicated my dedication to my profession and to the welfare of Canadians, I would like to point out that in the interval, as a member of Parliament—because I was elected as a member, I resigned as an officer of the profession to avoid any semblance of conflict of interest—I have no hesitation as a parliamentarian, with a background in that profession, in speaking out at this moment. Because with reference to this bill and to this clause, I have received submissions from lawyers, accountants and dentists in my community and, of course, my constituency. I have received submissions from medical doctors, but I have not received any from any chiropractors. Nor, to my knowledge, has there been any organized effort by my profession on a national or provincial level to seek any special or favoured treatment in terms of this bill.

Unlike any of the other recognized healing professions in Canada, the chiropractic profession receives not one dime of federal or provincial tax revenue for any programs. It receives absolutely nothing. It has made requests but been rejected. The only area in which there is income accruing from the federal and provincial treasuries is medicare, through insurance programs and through compensation boards. That applies from the province of Prince Edward Island—the maritime provinces with the exception of Newfoundland—right through to British Columbia. We have applied to the Medical Research Foundation for grants for research, and those grants have not been forthcoming.

So what has the profession done? It has raised its own money. It has done so itself to conduct its own research. There is a facility in Toronto which is second to none in the world in terms of educational standards and the quality and calibre of its lecturers. Doctors from Sunnybrook Hospital, lecturers from the University of Toronto and others teach at the CMCC. The profession pays the bills. We pay them to teach our students. Our graduates support that college, and it was only a few months ago that we finally burned the mortgage on that building. That plant is worth some $2 million, and it was paid for by less than 2,000 chiropractors across this nation. So I speak with a degree of pride when I say that we have not come to the public trough except for research, and in that regard we have been denied.

I also want to reiterate the fact that we have not asked for any special privileges whatsoever in terms of this bill.

Having set the record straight on that, there is another matter which I find unfortunate. In dealing with the income of corporations for the year under "non-qualifying business", I see listed "prospecting". I see nothing which provides an opportunity for any kind of windfall for the prospector, who is an independent soul. In my mind there are two people with whom I am acquainted who are in the category of a free spirit. One is the trapper and the other is the prospector. I cannot imagine any other occupation in which the individual concerned is more isolated from human contact than those two. Hardships are tougher for them than for anyone else in North America.

The trapper, particularly in the winter months, and the prospector, especially during the summer months, put up with a great deal. Sometimes they are flown in by a company. Sometimes prospectors are paid by a company to prospect in a particular area, but sometimes they have to pay the shot themselves. They are flown to a location and they put on their backpacks. They have their supplies with them and they are in the wilderness for weeks. Wilderness can be pretty tough whether it is in northern Quebec, northern Ontario or anywhere in the mountains of British Columbia. The record shows that most often it is just once in a lifetime that a prospector strikes it rich and makes a windfall discovery. When prospectors do that, those gnarled, hardworking creatures of nature get shafted by the federal government in terms of taxation.

I know a prospector in Nelson right now who is in his seventies. He gets his old age pension; big deal! He is blind in one eye. He walks with a very pronounced limp because one of his legs was shattered as a result of a dynamite explosion in some rock work. He has emphysema because he breathed mine dust in the old days when he was a miner working in areas of high silica concentration. This prospector has problems breathing. He has a bad heart and, of course, with his heart and his lungs being in rough shape, this does not make life any easier for him. However, he found his once-in-a-lifetime windfall, and what did the government do?

An hon. Member: Not this one.

Mr. Brisco: I refer to hon. members opposite when they formed the government. I am not kidding hon. members; this is all on file in my office, if they want to see the records. They taxed this prospector's windfall away. There was not a tear from the then minister. He could not have cared less about the condition this poor old gentleman was in.

Hon. members opposite do not know anything about human factors. They never take them into consideration. They say, "It is here in the book, and that is what we will go by". That is the problem with any big government. There is a total absence of any recognition of any human factor beyond what is in the book. I pray to God that this government will show some sensitivity in these areas.

I can think of all kinds of other examples, and I am sure other hon. members can too. I think of a person with multiple sclerosis three weeks away from qualifying under the Canada Pension Plan. She is to the point where her MS no longer allows her to do any work. It was to hon. members opposite who formed the government that I appealed on four separate occasions. I must ask, will this government recognize the fact that it should be doing something for this woman—after all, she did make her contributions—even though she was only three weeks' short of qualifying, instead of having her on the bread line? I do not think that is really what governments intend in the legislation they draft.

Let me conclude by saying that I feel it is incumbent upon the parliamentary secretary to consider that a prospector who provides opportunities for the mining community to operate in the fashion it operates should be allowed a once-in-a-lifetime windfall profit, because, if not, the next thing we know there will not be any more of these free spirits. If you look at the record and at the statistics, Mr. Chairman, you will find it is not the mining companies which find the gold, the silver, the lead, the zinc, the molybdenum. It is the hard-bitten character who may have a grizzly bear or a black bear out there breathing down his neck when he bends down to check a rock. He is the one who makes the majority of discoveries for mining companies. He is the one guy in the whole industry who has been totally ignored, and it is time he got his fair share.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Haliburton: Mr. Chairman, my interjection in this debate will, I assure hon. members, be very brief, but I was inspired, shall I say, to speak by what the hon. member for Spadina said this afternoon. I think there are a couple of points that should be made in order to set the record straight. Having listened to that hon. member, I can understand, if his philosophy is that of the former government's, why the country fell into the economic mess in which indeed it did.

There is no suggestion in this legislation, I submit, that any taxpayer in Canada is going to have a tax free income, at least not if he uses it for his own personal benefit. Under the clause we are discussing there is no such thing as a tax free income in any case. The essence of it is that one of those companies that are incorporated for convenience, as has been suggested, or for the more efficient operation of a professional business, can attract for the chief shareholder a tax which is less than he would have to pay if he were receiving that money as an individual and putting it into his pocket in a form in which he could go out next day and buy a new car or take a holiday or spend it on various consumer products.

The effect of the changes that have been proposed in this clause, as I understand them, is that it would encourage Canadians who earn money to use it as an investment fund. Surely that is what the kind of economy we have, is all about. Unfortunately, the people who have their tax deducted at source are not the entrepreneurs in this country, and it is, after all, entrepreneurs who create jobs and who make work.

What this change in the tax law will permit is that a person who had an income which is larger than he may need to use in that particular year for his own personal comfort may delay paying income tax on that income for some time so that he can use it for other purposes. He may not want to invest his money in a pension fund, which may well have international investments; he may not want to invest his money in exploration; he may prefer to invest his money in his own community, in a local shop, a local enterprise, or a fish processing plant, as he might want to do in my riding, or a fishing vessel.

These provisions establishing this classification within the Income Tax Act will permit the high income doctor, the dentist or the lawyer, to establish such a company and to use that money before paying tax on it to encourage industry and enterprise in his own community. Clearly it gives recognition to the fact that some of these professional people have a shorter earning lifetime than a great many other people in our society. This provision gives them an opportunity to spread their tax. Certainly there is no suggestion, and no wish on my part as one of the members supporting this legislation, that it should provide a free ride for anybody or that it should permit them to permanently avoid paying tax. It would give them an opportunity to spread the tax. It would inspire them to generate jobs and provide opportunities in their communities. That is what I want to see and I would be happy if we would get on with it.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the hon. member.

The Chairman: Would the hon. member for South West Nova accept a question from the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount?

Mr. Haliburton: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, some of the sentiments the hon. member has expressed are, I think, very desirable, but my question is this: What distinction does he make between a lawyer and an accountant, for example, who is entitled to incorporate his practice and therefore benefit from this substantial deferment, as opposed to an employed lawyer or accountant in the same income range who is not entitled to it and must pay his tax immediately, and therefore does not have the advantage of being able to invest in a shop, a fishing trawler, or what have you, but must immediately turn over his savings, to the revenue authorities? What justification does the hon. member see for that distinction between an employed professional and an independent professional?

Mr. Haliburton: The hon. member raises a very difficult question. The only real differential, or substantial differential, that I could cite would be that the self-employed individual is, in fact, an entrepreneur. He is the guy who, in a great many cases, I suspect, is operating in rural areas in this country as opposed to metropolitan areas. He is employing people, purchasing office equipment or setting up a practice on his own and taking, perhaps, all the risks that are normally attributed to an entrepreneur, whereas the employed professional is not doing that. However, I would assume under this legislation that when the employed professional becomes a partner in a professional association which is employing him, he would no doubt be able to take advantage of the same provisions.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I have another question for the hon. member.

The Chairman: I find it difficult to allow the hon. member to put another question, it would be unfair to other members. The hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount will have a chance to come back with questions later.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with some interest in the last hour or so to comments coming from both sides of the House, particularly to the anecdotes of the hon. member for Kootenay West about prospectors and the difficulties they have. I come from a riding where, as I mulled over in my mind all the different communities, I realized there are a number of communities which do not have a doctor, a dentist, a chiropractor or an accountant, communities like Atlin or Port Simpson and other places along the coast. While everyone was talking about people with incomes of $30,000, $40,000, $50,000 or $100,000 a year, we have areas in this country where, in some communities, there is unemployment of 30 per cent or more, and in some cases up to 50 per cent. We have heard talk about communities where part of the taxation base of this country is being set aside in order to make the lives of the well to do somewhat more plush.

When we talk about these individuals and professional groups, we should realize the fact that they are not really creators of capital. What in fact they do is either get capital from the state or get it from individuals within the community, and they get a substantial slice of capital in the communities in which they operate. I do not claim that a lot of them do not put that money to use within that community, but I think a great deal of that capital is used for investment in order to create more capital for them as individuals, capital which does not go directly to the community.

In looking at the bill in relation to small business, the government in the past six months has given a substantial slap in the face to small business in this country with the ever-increasing interest rates. To date all we have had is a preliminary statement from the hon. member for Capilano, who has said there will be some increase in capital through the Federal Development Business Bank.

The problems created in this country by capital being taken out of the economy and put in the hands of a limited number of individuals who do not put it into small businesses which employ people over a period of time are very extensive. They are problems to which the government does not put its mind. This brings me to the core of my point, that in looking at this very small group we must necessarily take into account other skilled groups. I know the hon. member for Kootenay West indicated that the chiropractors of this country have not lobbied actively to be included in this special taxation, but we must look at it from the point of view of the government dealing with this issue. They have been chosen, for one reason or another, as a lobby group above and beyond steelworkers, paperworkers or fishermen. A lot of individuals who work in our economy certainly deserve some tax break. They carry the real burdens, for example, of the House of Commons and everything else in the country. An ever increasing burden is being placed upon those individuals.

The amount of capital at year end which professional individuals are allowed to retain already is very high. Doctors, dentists and accountants are highly advantaged individuals. What do they do with their capital? What advantages do these individuals have in the community? Generally they own their own homes because they have had enough capital coming in over the years to do so. They are well educated. They are capable of putting their children through university. At a time when there are many unemployed, disadvantaged, handicapped and people living on fixed incomes, why should the government continue to push for the very select high income groups, be they oil company executives, doctors or anything else? The answer is fairly obvious. The government has chosen a specific lobby group for some reason or other. Perhaps there is a likely prospect that they will gain voters or some other thing.

The small business question has not been addressed by this bill in any way. Why is there no attempt to deal actively with interest rates which now affect the cash flow of small businesses and their ability to carry ongoing stock or expand in any way? Yet capital is being given directly into the hands of individuals who will not turn it over into the economy with a domino effect. Making more capital available to entrepreneurs in the forest and mining industries perhaps would be more appropriate if there was a direct tag on it relating to job creation or some affirmative process.

During the same period of time we are looking at recent cuts in the unemployment insurance program. In my riding individuals involved in fish processing had very limited work opportunity this year. Many of them did not work long enough to be eligible for unemployment insurance. The government seems to sit idly by as if someone who earned $3,000 can make it through the rest of the year, and hands out 10 per cent or 15 per cent to people in the $30,000 to $100,000 bracket. Certainly this is a matter the public should take into account the next time they go to the polls.

I have one question for the parliamentary secretary. Exactly how many individuals are eligible under this program? The previous speaker wanted to know how much capital was involved, but I should like to know how many individuals are affected by this? I am sure that information is readily available.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very short. I have just come from a committee meeting where the estimates of the Department of Finance were being discussed. There was no one present at the meeting to give us direction in terms of policy on this matter. I am sitting in the House now and I see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance is alone. This is no reflection on him as I am sure he is very able, perhaps a good deal more able than the minister, but the minister is not in town when we are considering this very important tax bill, Bill C-17. As a matter of fact, I saw notice of a speech which the Minister of Finance was to release at 1.00 p.m. eastern standard time on November 1, 1979 to the Empire Club of Toronto. When we are in the middle of such an important debate, and the estimates of this particular department are before committee, surely the minister and the parliamentary secretary should be here. The choice should not be between this Parliament—the House of Commons and its committees—and the Empire Club. The choice should be very, very clear: the minister should be here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso raised the question of the presence or non-presence of the minister in the House for the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole. He received an answer in part from the House leader. If I had been provided with an opportunity, my first comments this afternoon would at least have given partial reassurance to the hon. member in that the minister intends, if transportation facilities work effectively, to be here at eight o'clock tonight. It is unfortunate that I have to make such a comment so late in the day. I give the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan that assurance.

A great many questions have been raised to which I should like to respond as fully as I can. I should like to begin by dealing with some of the questions of principle and broad dimension raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood and the hon. member for Spadina. I should like to follow those remarks by responding to specific questions raised by the hon. member for Dauphin, the hon. member for Jonquière and the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount, and if I can, the hon. member for Skeena. I am not sure I will have a number of answers available for the hon. member.

A great many of the comments I have heard this afternoon seem to be based upon serious misconceptions, not only regarding what existed but what is proposed by this clause in the bill. Let me review the situation.

Up to the time of the proposals in Bill C-32 of the last session of the last Parliament, the people being dealt with in this bill had the advantage of a small business or Canadian privately controlled corporation tax provision. It was a matter of deliberate policy of the preceding government which was supported on all sides, or at least by most of the members of the preceding House, and perhaps present members. It gave and gives a tax advantage to such corporations, a deliberate tax advantage. The persons who drew that legislation in the first place did not intend that it should apply to the particular persons with whom this present clause deals. Therefore, this present clause does not give an advantage; it takes an advantage away, one which perhaps was given inadvertently.

The proposal in the budget of last November was that particular taxpayers, people providing personal services, if incorporated, could revert to the standard position of a public corporation. In other words, they would be subject to tax approaching 50 per cent depending on the province in which they were resident. This proposal is a modification of that in two ways. It adds two professions, chiropractors and veterinarians, to the list of non-qualifying businesses. It attempts not to make incorporation prohibitive but to make it a neutral act. There are sound reasons for not making corporations prohibitive.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

• (1700)

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary but, it being five o'clock p.m., it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again later this day.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde)—Energy—Oil prices—Request government abandon plans for further increases; the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—National Unity—Quebec referendum—Inquiry whether public servants will have free vote; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)—Energy—Tanker transportation of crude oil on west coast.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions public bills. There being no items on the order paper under the heading of private bills the House will proceed to notices of motions (papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

REPORT ON FEASIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING CROWN CORPORATION FOR FORESTRY RESEARCH

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest report on the feasibility of establishing a Crown corporation or other body to carry out forestry research.

He said: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should start my remarks by explaining my interest in the subject. One or two people have asked me why I put such a motion on the order paper. It relates, of course, to the presence in my constituency of Macdonald College, which is the agricultural college of McGill University. In that college there is an active forestry division. Having explained that, let me speak to the subject.

I requested the production of documents following remarks made in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on February 22 of this year by the then minister of the environment, Mr. Marchand, who was discussing the Forestry Development and Research Act and emphasizing the need for a national forestry policy. He stated that a "study will be completed and presented to the Canadian Council of Resource Environment Ministers in June", which was June of this year. He then went on to say that changes will be made as necessary and that the previous government was working toward a national forestry policy.

From the remarks of the opposition representative at that time, the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), now in the government benches, the impression was left that he was interested from a national point of view. He stated soon after the remarks of the minister that this was a significant federal concern.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few introductory words about the forest industry in Canada. A monthly letter of the Royal Bank of Canada came to my attention just today, as a matter of fact it was in the mail, the heading of which is quite appropriate. Under the heading of "The Forest and the Trees" it states:

Forestry Research

Canada's forest is by far its greatest source of national wealth. But we have been using it up faster than it can grow back into good shape.

Certainly the Canadian forest products industry has grown into Canada's largest industry by far. Its total shipments are now in the order of $13 billion a year. Mills producing pulp, paper, veneer, plywood, box boards and other wood-based products have proliferated across the country. All Canadians have a share in this industry since over 90 per cent of our forests are owned either by the federal or various provincial governments. This can be estimated as something in the order of more than 20 acres of productive forest land for every man, woman and child. Some 800 million acres are classified in Canada as productive forests.

Though there are many square miles of forest, much are too far north to be economically usable. Though there are also numerous stretches of forest in the south, they are in hopelessly substandard shape. There is some desire expressed, often enough by the Canadian Forestry Association, to improve the situation. The association has stated:

Inadequate attention to forest regeneration is responsible for restricting expansion possibilities in some regions, has reduced unemployment in others, and will result in a continuing decline in future forest-based jobs and revenues.

Our forest industry in Canada employs some 300,000 persons directly, and probably more than twice that number in associated work. The salaries of those 300,000 directly employed exceed some $4 billion per year. While Canada's share of the world's export market has been falling and is now less than 20 per cent, forest products still count for well over $8 billion per annum of our export market; in fact, far more than fishing, agriculture, mining and fuels. About two million acres of forest land are cut in Canada every year, but not a single province is able to claim an adequate regeneration of these areas that have been cut, plus those areas being lost to natural disasters. In fact, the backlog of forest regeneration attributable to all causes such as harvest, natural catastrophe and human activity is now in excess of 60 million acres.

Mr. F. L. C. Reed, one of the nation's leading forestry consultants, stated in a recent report for the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association:

A more intensive program of forest management is imperative if market opportunities are to be realized and emerging timber deficits offset.

Certainly every province has its tree nurseries and its reforestation programs. Canada ranks high among the nations of the world in forestry research. The problem is not one of the lack of technology or good intentions, it is simply that not enough is being done. It will take a deliberate commitment on the part of government, industry and, indeed, the public at large to ensure that our forests meet our future needs. One in ten Canadian workers directly or indirectly owes his livelihood to the forestry industry.

This is why I asked for these documents, and I have been told that they do not exist. I state simply that it is unfortunate the present government has not seen fit either to pursue the direction of the former government in trying to establish a national forestry policy, or to indicate its willingness through forestry research to at least assist in stimulating the provinces to ensure that there is adequate regeneration of our forestry industry.

I am well aware that the attitude of the present government is to give more power to the provinces. We have seen what has happened. Not one province is maintaining its position. The situation calls for some leadership at the federal level, and this is the reason I expressed my desire to see these documents. At this point I can only express my disappointment over the government's statement that such documents do not exist.

Mr. Joe Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has moved for the production of papers on the privatization of the forestry research industry in Canada or, at least, the feasibility of a study with respect to the incorporation of forestry research under the purview of a Crown corporation. It was earlier thought that the hon. member was referring to studies that were conducted late last year with respect to the privatization of forest products research. However, this afternoon the hon. member has specifically mentioned a report which was concluded in 1979. The minister has stated categorically that he was not aware—nor am I aware, and it is our information that the department is not aware—of such a study being available at this time.

I do not have to elaborate on the privatization of the two laboratories because they were discussed at some length in this House last year. A new corporation was formed to assume the financial management responsibilities for the programs of forest product laboratories. The now non-profit corporation called Forintek, although it is experiencing some of the difficulties inherent in a change such as this, is proving successful in fulfilling its mandate to carry out the forest products research.

As I said before, forestry research is much more than research involved in making better forest products. It is much broader and far more complicated. It deals with how trees become established, grow and die. It deals with where they grow, what kills them and even the influence these trees have on the entire ecosystem. This research is undertaken by the federal government, some provincial governments, universities and the private sector. The Canadian forestry service, which is the federal research arm, has research establishments across the country and acts in close concert with the other interested bodies in the forestry sector.

Canada is known the world over as a forest nation. In fact, more than two thirds of our land areas is covered with trees and 84 per cent of the country is forest or wild land. As the hon. member has stated, some 300,000 people are directly employed in our forest industries. Another 700,000 are employed in secondary manufacturing and service industries which also depend on the forests. This adds up to a million people, or 11 per cent of our labour force. Everyone knows that forest products are among our most important exports. In fact, they account for almost 20 per cent of our total export trade.

Last year, the net contribution of the forest industries to Canada's balance of payments was $8.4 billion, $1 billion more than the combined contribution of fisheries, agriculture, mining and fuels.

For a country like Canada which depends so heavily on its export trade, this is a vital contribution to economic survival. And today, especially when we are all so concerned with Canada's economic health, we simply do not dare ignore the importance of our forests. Within 20 years forests will provide not only the traditional lumber, pulp and paper products but a multitude of sophisticated chemicals and up to 8 per cent of Canada's primary energy demand. Conservative estimates suggest that by the year 2000, direct employment in the forest industries will increase by 100,000 people or 25 per cent, the value of wood exports will double, while the total value added in 1978 dollars will rise from $9 billion to $18.7 billion.

The importance of our forests goes far beyond trade balances, or employment and production figures. It goes beyond anything we can measure so conveniently, for besides providing raw material for industry, our forests provide us with many other benefits. For example, they protect our watersheds from erosion. They stabilize stream flow and act as reservoirs for water from snow and rain, thereby reducing the hazards of flooding and drought. They also provide the basic backdrop to a related $3 billion outdoor recreation industry.

In the boreal forest region, which comprises so much of Canada's forest resource, growth rates of natural stands average little more than 21 cubic feet per acre per year. In the more productive coniferous forests of the west coast, growth rates of 80 to 90 cubic feet per acre per year occur. These growth rates, remember, are for natural unmanaged stands. Given simple management these rates could be doubled, and if intensive management is practised in the more productive areas, they could be tripled.

Impressive though these facts may be, the state of the nation's forests is not good. Although Canada is cutting only about 75 per cent of its annual allowable cut, much less than half of the apparent reserve timber is economically accessible. British Columbia has half of Canada's volume of standing timber, but even there the installed capacity of the coastal forest industry could more than utilize its present allowable cut. Most of the reserve timber on the north coast is currently inoperable and similar situations exist in various parts of the interior.

The prairie provinces have a surplus of wood, but much of it is too remote. In Ontario, the productive forest available for wood production has dropped by reason of other demands from 105 to 65 million acres during the past 10 to 15 years. Shortages will occur in the Thunder Bay region and the province will have difficulty in reaching the relatively modest target of nine million cunits annually on its 56 million acres of Crown forest land by the year 2020. Quebec has a theoretical surplus of wood, but much of it is in remote areas where harvesting costs are high. Many local shortages are occurring, especially for sawlogs. In general we are not making the best use of the inherent productivity of Canada's forest resource base. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are actually experiencing deficits in softwood supply. The existing industry in New Brunswick could utilize 25 per cent more wood than can be produced on a sustained yield basis under existing standards of management.

How did we get ourselves into this mess? It is difficult to point the finger of blame at anyone. When North America was first settled, timber was regarded as a stock of wealth to be exploited and transformed into useful and saleable products. It was viewed no differently than were deposits of metals, minerals, coal and oil. Indeed, like these resources, much of the virgin timber was put there by nature over a period of centuries.

Had man been involved in the growing of forests, he would have put a different value on those trees. Society and the industry itself have long thought that, unlike minerals and fossil fuels, the forest resource is renewable. So it is, but there are many degrees of renewability. Left to herself, nature will renew forest crops, but in her own time, with her own choice of species and at her own rate of stocking. That could only be established by nature. If man is not satisfied with this arrangement, he can spend time and money to grow timber crops more to his liking, but these crops are no longer cost-free.

Until recently in Canada we limited our investment in timber crops to paying for protection. The situation facing us now is similar to that which gave rise to agriculture. Nomadic peoples depended on nature to provide game for them and forage for their animals. Such a way of life provided a livelihood for a small population that was forced to harvest nature's bounty over a large area. Agricultural practice showed that crops could be grown and harvested at less cost than wild crops could be harvested alone. With hindsight, we could demonstrate that growing and harvesting timberland close to the mills would frequently have been cheaper than harvesting more distant, variable and scattered natural stands of timber.

In the long run, the only answer is more effective forest protection and reforestation, combined with silvicultural treatments to increase the growth rate of the existing forests. More intensive management could double the yield of much of our forest land.

In 1977, spending from all sources was less than $60 million for reforesting and tending our forests. This year it will be some $200 million. Even this amounts to only half what the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers—CCREM—estimates is needed.

The Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers has been studying forest policy for several years. Last June at Kelowna, ministers reached a broad measure of agreement on a general forest policy statement. This included eleven policy principles, among which are: first, pre-eminent provincial jurisdiction over its own forest land; second, the need for compatible federal and provincial policies affecting the resource industry; third, stability of rural employment and communities; fourth, maintenance of the productivity of forest land; fifth, multiple use management of forest land; sixth, environmental protection; and seventh, priority for research.

These may sound like motherhood statements, but they are much more than we have ever had before. The ministers have agreed to meet again in Toronto in January to see what concrete measures we can take to implement the recommendations.

What is largely unappreciated, Mr. Speaker, perhaps because confrontation and conflict get most of the headlines, is the major role that co-operation between government agencies at different levels has long played in the management of our forests. Under the terms of confederation, the provinces own almost all the forest land within their boundaries and are therefore responsible for management of 90 per cent of Canada's productive forest. Nevertheless, the federal government is heavily involved in many policies and activities critical to their wise management. These include monetary policy, regional development, industrial efficiency, research and development, tariffs and trade, transportation and so on.

Progress in achieving greater understanding of the complexities of forest ecology so that improved ways can be found for making the forests more productive and their management more efficient depends on co-operation between the scientists and foresters studying these problems. There are some outstanding examples.

Consider that notorious pest, the spruce budworm. Since 1909 this insect has killed nearly 300 million cunits of timber in eastern Canada and has caused loss in the growth of trees that survived their attacks. The current epidemic covers roughly 150 million acres of spruce fir forest in eastern North America and extends from western Ontario to the Atlantic provinces.

This very serious problem demands a combined effort to solve. In fact, an international effort is required because of an agreement signed in August, 1977, to develop a joint Canada-United States spruce budworm research and development program. The main aim of this co-operation is to find better ways of controlling this major forest pest common to both countries.

The two countries are concentrating their efforts on improvements in such areas as monitoring budworm population levels and the development of better, more environmentally acceptable control techniques. Activities under the agreement include joint publication of results, exchanges of scientists and other specialists in the industry, exchange of biological material and equipment, and the establishment of joint ventures such as data and information pools.

The spruce budworm has been around for a long time. It is native to Canada. There have been at least seven major outbreaks in eastern Canada in the past 200 years, each covering millions of acres. The seriousness of this natural harvest, if one can call letting the budworm eat millions of trees a "natural harvest", has become much more grave in present times. The budworm is now competing with man for trees, trees, I might add, which we need for maintaining the economic life of Canada. Even if the budworm does not kill all the trees in a stand, its destructive force greatly increases the cost of using the remaining trees. We simply cannot afford to sit back and let the budworm eat itself out of house, home and trees and then slowly starve to death.

The main control method that has been used since 1952 to contain the budworm has been to spray the infected forests with chemical insecticides. The limitations of this technique are recognized and I would like to say something later about progress in biological controls. But just consider for a moment the economics of this situation.

In New Brunswick the protection program up to 1976 cost about $95 million. But this protection has allowed for a doubling of the forest industry's capacity; it increased the value of shipments by $4.7 billion and added value by $2.7 billion, wages by $889 million. Those are impressive benefits for a small province and the forests of New Brunswick, although not as healthy as all would like to see, are likely to stay green and alive.

It is clear, then, that a serious threat such as the budworm to the forest resource is a potential threat to the economy of this country.

Public reaction to the spraying program has been prominent at all times. Annual spraying of 10 to 20 million acres in eastern North America will probably be necessary during the next few years. However, please remember that the decision to spray or not spray is a provincial decision based on the best facts available. It is interesting to note that forest spray technology has improved tremendously in the last decades. Smaller and smaller dosages are being applied more effectively. Even the small dosages of insecticides of around three ounces per acre represent a total application of 2,000 tons of highly toxic biocide for a 20 million acre spray area. Doubts about hidden environmental effects are bound to trouble many people.

After several years of annual use of insecticides on a large scale, there has been no measured loss of other resources, nor any acceptable reduction in environmental integrity. The problem is still that large scale long-term spraying may have a small influence that could eventually compound into larger environmental results.

In a policy statement last year, the minister said that although some infested areas may require special pest control practices, it is known that pesticides may have long-term effects on other resources in the environment. Therefore, it is federal policy to minimize the use of spraying and actively support research into alternative control strategies, including biological control.

One could go on, Mr. Speaker, and cite other examples which demonstrate that the complexities of modern forest management demand close co-operation between government agencies and industry.

[Mr. Reid (St. Catharines).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for bringing forward this motion this afternoon on the production of papers relating to the forest industry. I appreciate this very much. Not only is it timely, but it gives me an opportunity to underline in the House the importance of the forest industry to the economy and Canadians generally.

During this afternoon's question period, I had a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret). Of course, he does not have the privilege of responding to questions in the House because he is in the other place. Therefore, I asked the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) about the government's position on the importance of planning and the future of the forest industry in Canada. I learned he had nothing to say about this important industry. He responded that he would take it as notice, that he would find out something about the forest industry in Canada and get back to the House. I find it rather strange for a member of the cabinet not to be able to answer on the importance of the forest industry on funds for expansion, and the construction of new pulp and paper mills in Canada. Hon. members will agree on the importance of this subject to Canadians. This is borne out by the fact that over one quarter of our exports is related directly or indirectly to wood products.

As I say, I am pleased the hon. member has brought forward this motion for the production of papers this afternoon. I represent a constituency in New Brunswick. Seventy-five per cent of that province is inundated with forest products. I think I am making my case as to the importance to my area, the Atlantic region, and indeed to all of Canada of this most important subject.

The government did not consider this matter in its deliberations when preparing the throne speech. There is no mention of or reference to the government's position regarding plans for research and development of the resource industry, its position on exports, or its disposition on financing to assist the pulp and paper industry. The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and his advisers will want to look seriously at putting this all important subject under the purview of a specific minister in the cabinet who will answer to this House and ensure that this important industry is protected in the manner it should be. There was no reference to this in the Speech from the Throne.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is nowhere near this House. We cannot pose questions to him or receive responses as we should. This minister ran in the last election, and was defeated. He now sits as a Senator and controls this all-important portfolio. Apparently he is the chief adviser to the government on economic development in this country, with specific reference to industry, trade and commerce, which is all encompassing. This brings me to the topic we are discussing today, the forest industry.

I thought the Minister of State for International Trade would have taken this subject to heart, concerned himself, and been briefed. I thought he would have discussed this with his colleague in the other place, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He could have at least apprised himself of the status of this important subject.

I have already made the case as to the importance of this. I do not think much has to be said. It speaks for itself. It involves the economy, employment, and is of importance to Canadians in the process of development of this rich natural resource. What do we have from the government which whiles away its time talking about the past,—what this minister did, what that minister did, and what that minister did not do? We all know that leading up to May 22 they were telling Canadians they were ready and wanted to govern. However, since that time all we have heard is that it is the other fellows' fault, that they did it last year. When is this government going to take a serious look at accepting its responsibility to govern, if that is what it wants to do?

I come to the question before us today with regard to the forest industry in Canada. I make a plea to the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues to concern themselves seriously with the development of the forest industry in Canada. How can they justify their position and their operations on a day to day basis while totally ignoring the paper industry?

The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) in his committee responsibilities is responsible for the environment. Naturally he is concerned with forestry as well. He debates and discusses with members of that committee what can be done to develop an over-all strategy for the future of the forestry industry in Canada. We will be hearing more from the hon. member for Davenport as he carries out his duties with respect to the environment. He will obviously be concerned with the protection of this all-important resource.

This leads me to the question of reforestation. In recent years many private corporations have taken the positive decision to accept their responsibility and direct funds to reforestation. For years we have been preaching that they cannot continue to rape our forests without giving some thought to the future and the replenishment of this resource.

In the region I represent there are many companies such as the Irving interests, Rosay Pulp and Paper, New Brunswick International Paper, CIP, Fraser companies and Bathurst Consolidated. They have taken this matter seriously in recent years. It is not only a question of discussion. They have put their money where their mouth is, and taken decisions to allot funds, millions of dollars for silva culture, nurseries, and the restoration of this important product.

I fail to understand how a government which has only recently come to office can continue to be as negligent as it is by not specifically identifying a minister as being responsible for this natural resource. I am not talking only about one region of the country. This concerns many regions from coast to coast. We all know the importance of the forest industry to British Columbia. We know its importance to Quebec and to the maritime provinces.

The government has talked about a merchant marine fleet, it has referred to a few other pale, weak topics in the document known as the Speech from the Throne. Why did ministers not avail themselves of the opportunity to say something about the forest industry, letting us know what their plans are, what their thinking is on this subject? But, no. They missed this glorious opportunity and now, to add insult to injury, we discover from personal experience that it is very hard to find ministers who are able to reply to our questions on this subject.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret) is not in this chamber to answer questions, and when we put questions to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) we find he is not sure of the position—he has to look into the matter and find out. No one objected to giving members opposite a few months, a honeymoon period, in which they could find out how the system ticks, where their offices are located, and who is responsible for what. But here we are, on November 1, 1979, getting ready to go into the eighties with a minority government which has not yet been able to sort these things out. It is a serious situation, and a serious problem faces all Canadians because every Canadian is affected directly or indirectly by this industry.

I am taking this opportunity to go on record as making a plea to the government to consider this important topic and develop its strategy, and announce whatever plans they may be able to agree upon. I refer particularly to the minister responsible for the environment, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), the Minister of State for International Trade, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey), and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander). All these ministers have responsibility, directly or indirectly, to Canadians who are affected by this industry whether they work in the forests, in the cutting operation, whether they are employed in the mills or whether they are affected as users or consumers of the finished product.

The government should remember, too, that it is not only the forest product we are talking about. We are talking about people. We say we want to act on the people's behalf and it is people we should primarily be concerned about. Why does the government not express some form of good faith by designating a minister who is to be responsible for forestry? It surprises me that the new government would not seize the opportunity to appoint a minister of state with full responsibility—

An hon. Member: Why didn't you do it?

Mr. Harquail: —for a ministry of forestry. Consider that a quarter of everything we export results from forestry. Consider the stagnation of the economy and the excuses the government makes for its failure to address the problems of the day. Its solution is to increase interest rates and reverse its position on the statements and promises which it made on television and in public forums.

They told the Canadian people why they wanted to govern this country, and what they wanted to do. Yet we find that within a short period of time it has all been forgotten. It is not a question of members opposite being tired. They are not able to cope with the situation. They are in trouble, and on behalf of my constituents, on behalf of all who live in New Brunswick and Atlantic Canada, and on behalf of all persons connected with the forest industry I express concern because of the urgency of the situation. There is no room for excuses by members of the government who all too often blame their own inaction on what the other fellow is supposed to have done. This attitude will not carry us very far. The situation of the country is serious when an administration runs out of steam so quickly.

If I have accomplished nothing else this afternoon I hope the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Fraser) will at least discuss this matter with his colleagues. They cannot escape coming to grips with this question. As I say, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not able to answer in this House because he does not have a seat here. The Prime Minister might suggest to the Minister of State for International Trade that he get a little closer to this topic. I am flabbergasted that the hon. gentleman had nothing to say in reply to the forestry question which was put to him today.

We often hear criticism of different aspects of our procedure and of the limited opportunities given to private members to express themselves in this chamber. But this is one occasion on which I am convinced of the benefits of the private members' hour inasmuch as it afforded the hon. member for Vaudreuil an opportunity to introduce this motion for the production of papers, and has given me an opportunity to speak on the subject as well. This is the first occasion I have had to express my concern as forcefully as possible and to make a plea to the government to take its responsibilities seriously in this area. We shall be following ministers' actions closely to find out exactly what they intend to do. We are anxious to see whether or not there will indeed be meetings between the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of State for International Trade and his other colleagues who, I am convinced, have an interest in this field.

I am convinced the Minister of the Environment has an interest. He represents a riding in British Columbia. I would be surprised if he stood in his place and said it was not. I know he is sincere in his concern about forestry, and he has a direct responsibility, as he mentioned to me a few moments ago, as Minister of the Environment, with respect to the whole question of the protection of this important resource, its planning, development, sale and export. He is responsible for reforestation, protection of jobs, and the economy.

I am going to—

Mr. Friesen: Sit down.

Mr. Harquail: —suggest to the Minister of the Environment, his backbenchers and some of his colleagues from B.C., who have the audacity to laugh and joke about an important subject such as the forestry industry, that this is not the way to run a government or a country.

Hon. members opposite are supporting a government which does nothing about the forestry industry. The government said nothing in the throne speech about the forestry industry. Hon. members opposite sit on their hands and laugh. I do not think that is the way to run a government at all. They have a lot to learn, and we are going to be watching. We have been very liberal about allowing them time, but six months is just about enough time in which to get on with the job or at least to be able to identify in this House who is answering for the government on forest development and on the forestry industry nationally and internationally, in terms of the over-all development of this important natural and rich resource.

Mr. Knowles: Question! Let's have the vote.

Mr. Harquail: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I could not begin to tell you how delighted I am with the initiative we have seen taken this afternoon by two of the four members of the official opposition who are in the House who expressed some concern over what is considered to be Canada's most vital and sustaining industry in terms of the economy. Of course we on this side were amused, particularly by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, but the forestry industry is not laughing about the critical situation it is in. We were laughing at the attitude of the two hon. members who have given us their credentials here this afternoon with respect to forests.

The hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) contradicted himself three times. He wants a ministry of forestry immediately. Hon. members opposite are terribly impatient, and the House knows how impatient I and some of my colleagues have been over the last ten to 15 years with the performance of the former government. The hon. member wanted a ministry this afternoon. Then he said that all ministers, including the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) and some other ministers who are not even in the House, should be involved in the forest industry. The fact is that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Fraser) is responsible for forestry. He has inherited a department in which 15 other departments meddle.

Mr. Harquail: Do something.

Mr. Oberle: Hon. members opposite are telling us that in six months we should clean up a mess which took 15 years to make. We had a minister of forestry and a proud Canadian Forestry Service when hon. members opposite took over. They degraded the ministry to some kind of minor department in which ministers, department heads and bureaucrats could walk in at any time of the day and insert their own views and opinions.

Since hon. members opposite took over in 1963 the man-years in the Canadian Forestry Service dropped by 50 per cent. There is only half the number now engaged in research and development in the Canadian Forestry Service that there was in 1963 when these great guardians of the green gold took over.

Let me make a few comparisons with what it is like in the United States, and point out how critical the problem is. Federally-funded research and development at forest products laboratories amounts to about $14 million in the United States compared with $7 million in Canada. State expenditure on forest products research provides large-scale facilities in Oregon, California, Michigan and Mississippi, but no provincial counterparts exist in Canada. University expenditure on forest products research is about $6 milion in the United States but a mere $200,000 in Canada.

Mr. Whelan: Who controls it in the United States?

Mr. Oberle: A single American company, Weyerhaeuser, spends almost twice as much annually on research and development as the entire Canadian Forestry Service. The hon. member opposite who is now entering the debate should know something about research and development because he did some slashing himself in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member said I did some slashing of research in my department when I was minister of agriculture. That is not true. The hon. member did not tell the House that in the United States of America, which he says is doing such a great job, it is the secretary of agriculture who is in charge of the forest industry, not the secretary of the environment.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I shudder to think of what would have happened to our forests if they had branched into the hon. member's department. We probably would not have any trees left.

An hon. Member: We would have a marketing board.

Mr. Oberle: We would have a tree marketing board.

The cuts and expenditures to which I referred were made at a time when the federal government realized $1 billion from the forest sector in the form of royalties, taxes, licences and fees from the forest sector. An equal amount of $1 billion accrued to the provinces every year while hon. members opposite were cutting research jobs, expenditures and funds which would have sustained a once proud Canadian Forestry Service.

I do not have very much time to get to the crux of this matter.

Mr. Whelan: Thank God.

Mr. Oberle: It made me nervous when an hon. member opposite got up today and suggested yet another takeover or whatever, another Crown corporation. Hon. members opposite are making recommendations as to how some mystical body outside this place can solve the serious crisis in the forest sector. The responsibility lies here, and a very responsible senior minister has taken charge. There is a new air of confidence, enthusiasm, and excitement in the Department of the Environment. Some scientists who have left are thinking of coming back. Perhaps some of the bureaucrats who stayed behind to keep notes on what nobody was doing are reconsidering their positions, and perhaps they will leave.

We on this side are very serious about forestry. I agree that there was no mention of forestry in the throne speech, but let me tell those hon. members opposite who have finally shown an interest in forestry that if they practised half of what they preached, the trees would grow tall and green and be converted into gold once again. Our economy would once again smile, and we would all be much happier.

● (1800)

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I suggest, with your permission, to the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) who introduced this motion, that it became apparent during the debate over the past hour that the document or the study that the hon. member was requesting is clearly not a feasibility study into establishing a Crown corporation or other body to carry out forestry research. The hon. member has identified, or nearly identified, some study or document. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would indicate to the hon. member that in the interest of open government I will certainly seek to find this document to which the hon. member has referred, if it does exist and, of course, it will be made available to him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): The hour for the consideration of private members' hour having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6.05 p.m. the House took recess.

● (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan (Mr. Crosbie)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose at five o'clock, p.m., clause 38 of the bill was under consideration and the hon. member for York East had the floor.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at five o'clock, I was in the midst of beginning a response to some of the comments and questions made by several hon. members on clause 38. In particular I was beginning to respond to some of the points raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood and the hon. member for Spadina. I had suggested that it was possible some of their comments, particularly the ones of the hon. member for Spadina, were based on some misconception as to what this clause was intended to accomplish and what in fact it said.

This clause is to correct an advantage which had been given unexpectedly by the small business preferred tax rate. When the provision was drawn in earlier legislation, I am sure it was not intended to cover what are now proposed to be declared non-qualifying corporations. The special tax privilege which exists and which has widespread support, is designed to encourage small Canadian businesses. It was not designed to encourage the kinds of businesses which quite properly under the law began to take advantage of the preferred rate and which are now removed from that advantage by this proposed legislation.

Hon. members will recall that the treatment to be accorded to these businesses in the budget proposals of the former minister of finance would have placed a penalty on incorporation for personal services covered in this proposal, because it would have found them paying a greater tax under the general public corporation rules than the proposal now before the House.

The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood asked me yesterday and today what is meant by neutralization. This is what this clause is designed to do. It is designed to ensure that these non-qualifying businesses, by getting a 33⅓ per cent tax rate and having the normal gross-up and dividend tax credit treatment, will leave their owners in the same position as if they received the income directly in the first place, with one provision, that in fact the income is paid out fully in the form of dividends. If the income is not paid out fully in the form of dividends, as the hon. member for Saint Henri-Westmount has mentioned in particular, there is advantage to be gained by tax deferral. It is a limited advantage because, if the money not so paid out is invested and produces investment income, it incurs the 46 per cent to 50 per cent tax depending on what province one is in and not the 33⅓ per cent tax.

While there can be some advantage in the deferral provision, it is likely to be a limited one. In general, moving from the 25 per cent rate accorded under the small business provision which these corporations now enjoy to the 33⅓ per cent rate proposed, leaves their owners in exactly the same position as if they had paid themselves salaries directly. This is because by the route concerned they can pay a corporate tax, and then through grossing-up and receiving a dividend tax credit, if they are in a high enough tax bracket, they pay a personal tax. The sum total of the tax paid in the corporation and on the dividends received is the same as it would have been on a similar direct income amount.

That being the case, I find it hard to accept the statements suggested by the hon. member for Spadina who seemed to think that this was some kind of giveaway. In fact it is a kind of take-back which is designed to put these taxpayers in a non-privileged position as compared to the position they are in today. It is a take-back which does not impose an extra penalty that would deter such activities from taking place in incorporated form, because often there are very good non-tax reasons for doing so.

I should like to respond to some specific questions raised by hon. members. The hon. member for Dauphin inquired as to the effective date of this proposal. Generally speaking the effective date would be for the taxation year 1980 or one beginning in that year, as I understand it. In other words, the old provisions are in effect up to this moment.

The hon. member for Jonquière informed us of some of the concerns of one of his constituents, a doctor. I would like to respond to the questions he raised. First of all, if I heard the concerns expressed correctly, his constituent was thinking in terms of what was proposed by the former government, in other words going into the same tax bracket as a public corporation and the positive disadvantage for incorporation that would imply.

His basic question was about these groups of people. I think I can do no better, sir, than to refer to a statement I have here which gives some of the reasons. I would preface this by saying that whatever division is drawn it is somewhat arbitrary. There are always going to be people on one side or other of the line about which one could argue. I think there are some very good reasons for the decision that has been taken.

The first point is that these professional groups by and large do not face the kind of business risks that are common to other businesses, including other areas of the service sector. The demand for services from these professionals is relatively inelastic, for obvious reasons. On the other hand, the demand for services such as those of engineers, architects and consultants, like those in most other businesses, is exceedingly sensitive to cyclical instability.

A second point is that these professional groups, especially doctors, lawyers, dentists and accountants, face much less competitive risk because the supply of their services is rigidly controlled through the existence of professional regulations and standards that make entry into the profession difficult, at least over the short and medium term.

Consultants, retailers, wholesalers, barbers, general insurance agents, manufacturers and so on face strong competition because of the ease with which new businesses can enter the field. In some cases these other concerns face strong competition from large multinational firms. It is no coincidence that bankruptcies among these professional groups are rare, whereas in the other groups they are a continuing conspicuous phenomenon.

In short, the mix of a relatively fixed demand for their services and restricted entry into their profession distinguishes these professionals from virtually all other businesses where the forces of competition operate in a way that greatly increases the element of risk.

A third major point is that because of the more limited element of risk, incorporation is not and has not been an essential element for the successful conduct of these professions. In fact, incorporation has been sought largely, if not exclusively, in the past for tax reasons. The one province that allows professionals to incorporate does not permit limited liability. Other business sectors, including other personal services and other professions, have a history of incorporating which pre-dates the existence of favourable tax treatment, and that is explained by the need to protect shareholders from excessive financial risk.

Another point is that the element of providing special incentives for small businesses so as to permit them to become established, to grow and to eventually turn into large competitive domestic and international corporations and provide large numbers of jobs to Canadians, is not an aspect that applies to the professions mentioned. They will not be a main source of increasing growth in job opportunities. Other business sectors, including services, are where future growth and expansion will occur, either through small businesses growing into large businesses or through an increse in the number of small firms in those sectors.

The hon. member for Jonquière may consider that some of these are very compelling reasons for the particular division that has been drawn, even though I am sure he and his constituent might argue about some activities at the boundaries.

The hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount raised some questions of principle about the tax. I am not sure that they can be fully met by the proposal before us, but I trust he will consider that the merits of this proposal outweigh any of the negatives which he feels may exist.

The hon. member is concerned about the principle of neutrality and equity as I think all of us are, and he raised a question about the value of the deferral privilege. I have already commented on that and I hope he considers that the qualification I have suggested as to the importance has some practical significance. He raised also the question of regional equity and pointed to the fact that only in some jurisdictions is incorporation permitted. That is indeed a fact, though it is not a static fact and it may change. I think it is reasonably fair to say that there are other instances where tax burden varies regionally because of legislative actions or regulations by other jurisdictions within the federation. There is no compelling and effective answer to his point, except to say that such imperfections exist, and probably are not too important unless they are major.

The hon. member for Skeena raised the question of how many individuals are affected by this proposal. I am sorry that I have not been able so far to obtain a number. I am told that for the professionals there are very few, but for all categories involved there are a very few thousand entities affected.

I think those are the main questions that called for answers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has done a very credible job of defending the indefensible in terms of some of the points raised. I must say I do not understand the last comment the hon. member made when he suggested very few entities were affected. I am not sure in what context that was made, but perhaps he could clarify that in responding to a couple of points I would like to put to him.

There is some validity to the thesis the hon. member put forward, that what is being done is taking away something which existed rather than creating further tax inequities. The hon. member says we are moving to approximately 33 ⅓ per cent depending on the provincial jurisdiction and the incidence of tax in that jurisdiction as I read the statute, as opposed to say 25 per cent to which these groups would otherwise be entitled. The hon. member makes the point, as I understand it, that this provision was originally intended to permit the accumulation of capital in industries where future growth and future job expansion is anticipated. I understand all of those points quite well, but what I am troubled by is the fact that this still remains a very arbitrary provision in terms of singling out these particular professions for what the hon. member would now describe as less preferential treatment, if you like. In fact it is not preferential treatment as most of these professions at the moment are accorded no such treatment because they cannot incorporate.

I think I am correct in saying, certainly with regard to accountants and lawyers, that across this country for the most part, with the exception I believe in the case of Alberta, such incorporation is not permitted. Therefore I say the tax neutrality principle is really offended in a very major way because there are other industries today, admittedly growth industries such as management consulting firms, which are placed in exactly the same position, or should be regarded in the same way as law firms and accounting firms. As you know, most of our major management consulting firms in this country, or a large number of them, are affiliated with or are offshoots of our major accounting firms.

I am not really satisfied that we should put this definition in the act as to those specific professions that should benefit, or be prejudiced by, 33⅓ per cent rate. Talking about the limited advantage, I do not regard that as a limited advantage. When a professional in my jurisdiction is subject to 70 per cent income tax on personal income in excess of $60,000, I believe it is a year, as opposed to a position where he or she is subjected to an immediate 33⅓ per cent tax with an indefinite deferral until such time as dividends are paid up, particularly in a time of inflation, and it is hardly offset by the fact that the additional revenue which one receives on the tax savings will be taxed at 46 per cent.

If it were not a very substantial advantage, I suggest that we would not have this legislation before us and the government would have accepted Bill C-37 which was introduced last year. Obviously this bill is not intended to take the entire advantage which the government believes exists with respect to some of these corporations, and I cannot accept that as a valid position.

I am not trying to defend Bill C-37. I did not like its provisions either. I believe that this whole area is fraught with inequity and is basically a real "Rube Goldberg" type of legislation in terms of small business corporations. We now have 25 per cent rates, 33 per cent rates, and 46 per cent rates. We had different provisions with respect to dividend payouts. We have eight pages in the statute to cover this particular amendment.

I for one have always pushed for simplifying these statutes, and I find that this is not only offensive to the principles of tax neutrality but it is also offensive to the principles of tax simplification. Going beyond that, I find myself on the horns of a dilemma because I am really not quite sure what to tell the government to do with this provision. I am not sure basically how we should be looking at it at this stage of the proceedings in terms of how it can be improved. I can think of ways of improving subsection (f)(i) because, as I say, that is too limited. But as long as there is a recitation of people who benefit, somebody is always bound to be left out. That is why that particular kind of legislation is offensive in itself, just as the provision—and hon. members may be familiar with them—with regard to income averaging annuity contracts are limited to certain specific types of beneficiaries.

I have always felt that this is unfair because other people also have fluctuating incomes. Why should they not benefit from income averaging annuity contracts instead of only entertainers, writers, authors, musicians and so on. I am very concerned about enumerating this group and putting them into this special category. I also take issue with other arguments, but I do not see much point in doing so when the government is saying that these particular professions are not sensitive to cyclical instabilities. Obviously the government is not familiar with the situation of a lawyer in my province over the past few years whose specialty is seeking financing, or the government would take issue with that statement and say, "Yes, lawyers are subject to cyclical instability." Or if one were a member of the notarial profession, which I know is not covered in this list in Quebec, and basically dependent on real estate transactions, one may take the same point of view.

As a general statement, considering the climate in which we live, particularly in my province, I suggest that any of these professions are subject to cyclical instabilities, even in the dental and medical fields. I wonder if it would be possible some time in the course of these discussions to obtain a commitment from the Minister of Finance that he will take it upon himself to study this area in an attempt to come up with some better legislation than we have here and to come up with legislation which rationalizes the entire use of corporations, particularly in the small business sector, and corporations for use by professionals.

[Mr. Johnston.]

We are still subject legitimately to criticism by the whole range of wage earners in this country who receive no deferral. Once they have moved into the $15,000 a year bracket, they become subject to taxes in excess of 33⅓ per cent. I do not think that this is a fair provision, nor did I think that the original provision was fair. I think that we are grafting another provision onto this Income Tax Act which will result in further inequity and complication. I would very much welcome intervention by the Minister of Finance—perhaps it could be in his budget in November—to improve the Income Tax Act.

Frankly, I would like the improvements to be broader than just this one area, but this one area which has always troubled me, because in a country where there are such different jurisdictions and different vehicles, particularly in the corporate vehicle, it seems dreadfully unfair to me that a person's fundamental income should be subject to such great differences by virtue of a vehicle he selects, to do his business through, and that he is obliged to select, for example, in law, the partnership, where lawyers in Alberta can enjoy the enormous benefits which they already enjoy plus this income tax advantage which, on its face, creates a great disparity between the position of lawyers—and I cite lawyers because I am familiar with the profession—in the east and lawyers in the west.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted that my earlier intervention and the interventions of my party have finally prompted the other party to move away from their slumber and attempt to come to grips with a very important provision of this bill. One of the ironic features of this debate is that there is not one member of the Liberal party, with the exception of the hon. member for Spadina who is no longer here, who is attempting to defend or even understand the provisions of Bill C-37. That party is not prepared to stand by a very important amendment to the Income Tax Act which it put forward a short 11 months ago. It is not prepared to indicate their support for it or for any of the arguments which are in writing and which are written at length in the bills which accompany the budget of November, 1978. Where is the Liberal party?

[Translation]

In his remarks, the hon. member for Jonquière has referred to the problems of professionals without dealing with the fundamental issue, namely, the principles of justice within our tax system, and he has been unable to defend the policy of his colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, the former minister of finance.

[English]

Although I disagree with the implications of many of the things stated by the hon. member for Saint Henri-Westmount, I learn something every time I listen to him. He too is not prepared to support the fundamental propositions laid out in Bill C-37. The hon. member could give no indication of what those propositions are other than calling virtually for a new Carter commission, a new look at the whole question of corporate income tax and its relationship to personal income tax. I agree that that would be a good idea, but it does not address itself to this particular problem.

The hon. member has said that he does not know what to do about this particular measure, and he cannot give any positive recommendations as to what should be done about this particular provision which is before us. That is no surprise, though, because the hon. member for Saint Henri-Westmount is a Liberal. He cannot make up his mind whether he should support something which comes from the last Parliament or whether he should be against it.

Mr. Crosbie: He should get cloned like the financial critic.

Mr. Rae: I would rather be cloned than well honed like the Minister of Finance. I believe that the basic principles which were put forward and which the parliamentary secretary attempted to defend have really not been answered. The first critical question is fairness—what tax lawyers call "equity". That question really has not been addressed. There has been much talk of tax neutrality, yet the minister has said in the statement accompanying this change that the effect of the measure will be to grant an advantage to those who incorporate over those who do not incorporate. I suggest to him that he has given no figures which would indicate the reverse. He has introduced no figures to indicate the contrary. There are no tables accompanying his proposals to indicate that there would not be a significant advantage to incorporating rather than not incorporating.

● (2030)

I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that if there were not this advantage, we would not be having this debate tonight. He knows perfectly well the only reason we are debating this is that those people who were affected by the changes recommended by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, were going to lose money over the proposition. It would have required them to start paying tax as if they were like other income earners. It is not simply that they would be employees; that is not what is being disputed. What is being disputed is that even those people who are self-employed would be paying tax at a higher rate than if they were allowed to incorporate.

I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that, for all the talk of tax neutrality, he knows perfectly well that were there not a significant advantage to this group of professionals in incorporating, we would not be here tonight debating the measure. It is only because the government proposes to give them that advantage over the measures proposed by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, that we are here tonight.

The first point the parliamentary secretary made was that nothing is given; something is being taken away. That is only true if you ignore the fact that the budget was presented in which certain propositions were put forward and in which certain facts were revealed to the Canadian public. If we pretend there was no November budget and if we pretend there had not been this powerful lobby mounted by the various professionals on the Parliament of Canada, if we pretend that those things had not taken place, then what the parliamentary secretary says might be true. That is not what happened, however. We had a budget which presented a very coherent statement, which attempted to underline something of the clear abuse which had taken place as a result of court decisions and of behaviour in the market place.

Hon. members opposite who are interested in the market place know perfectly well what is going on out there. They know perfectly well that professionals who incorporate have a significant tax advantage over people who do not incorporate. They know perfectly well that people who can declare themselves to be self-employed have a significant tax advantage over people who are not self-employed. I suggest it is not possible for us to wipe away 11 months of history. It is not possible for us to wipe away a fact which has become evident, that there was an abuse in the system.

The government has admitted there was some kind of abuse because it has attempted to respond to the various court decisions outlined in my earlier remarks, by bringing in this new half-baked, hybrid measure. This hybrid measure creates a third category of incorporation, as if the Income Tax Act were not complicated enough and as if we did not have enough difficulty understanding the statute. The Conservative party has introduced yet another measure. The only reason for it must be that it provides a significant advantage to a group of taxpayers who would be adversely affected were we to attempt to introduce an element of equity and fairness into the system.

I should like to point out to the minister and the parliamentary secretary that whatever the half-hearted nature of the Liberal proposal and the Liberal criticisms of this measure, our criticisms of it are quite clear; it is an offence to fairness and it is an offence to the simplicity and comprehensibility of the tax act.

The more we keep adding in every budget with a series of incomprehensible amendments to the Income Tax Act to provide for particular provisions and particular rules relating to particular groups of individuals, the more this Income Tax Act becomes a compendium of abuse, rather than a clear indication to the taxpayer of his rights and obligations under the laws of Canada.

I have suggested to the parliamentary secretary that he can not really defend the anomalies. They are crystal clear. There is not even fairness within professions let alone between professionals—let alone between professionals and employees or professionals and other self-employed individuals who, for various reasons, do not choose to incorporate themselves. There is absolutely no justification for this particular measure other than as a sop to those professionals who manage to mount a successful political lobby on the Government of Canada and the Conservative party of Canada. We know perfectly well that is exactly what happened.

There is no justification in equity; there is no justification to the rationality, and there is no justification in simplicity for the recommendations that have been put before the House by the government. All this simply creates yet a new category. It is an invitation to litigation, an invitation to abuse, an invitation to those individuals seeking to harbour or to hide away or to defer taxation which they owe not simply to the Government of Canada, as is so frequently stated by members opposite, but to their fellow Canadians.

The parliamentary secretary is going to have a very hard time convincing this party that there is either logic of fairness in this particular proposal. We know it is a political requirement of the time that the party in power—which is the party of business—be seen as giving in to particular professionals. I suggest to the minister, however, that he has not given us any figures in relation to the numbers of people involved except to say it is "a few thousand", which means nothing. He cannot tell us how much it is going to cost or how much is going to be lost to revenue as compared to the standard rate of taxation. I suggest we are entitled to both those figures.

We know that the small business tax credit costs in the area of $900,000 or $1 billion. Surely it is not beyond the power of the government to estimate how much this is going to cost so that the people of Canada can see in dollars and cents how much tribute they are paying to the professionals of Canada in order to allow them to incorporate themselves and take advantage of the other citizens of Canada.

The least we can expect from the parliamentary secretary is more than a vague answer. We want answers to these particular questions: how many individuals are going to be affected, and how much is it going to cost?

The Chairman: Shall clause 38 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Rae: On a point of order, and with respect, Mr. Chairman, I asked a particular question.

The Chairman: Order, please. If the parliamentary secretary or the minister did not stand up, I have to put the question. The hon. member has a few minutes to go if he wants to keep on talking.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I think the people are entitled to know, and it is on the record, that when asked specific questions about how much a particular measure was going to cost—I see his officials kibitzing now—we have not had any particular answer. We have not had—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Kibitzing?

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Rae: The hon. member for Burlington should learn how to relax. He has done nothing but render abuse since debate on this bill started. He has not contributed a positive or constructive note to the debate.

Mr. Kempling: Neither have you.

Mr. Rae: I do not think that is fair. It is perfectly fair and reasonable for us to ask the Government of Canada to give the figures of how many people are affected by the proposals the government is making. How much is it going to cost? I do not think that is an unreasonable thing to ask. If they are not prepared to tell us, that should be on the record.

The Chairman: I wish the hon. member would be careful with the expressions he uses toward officials who are in the House to render service.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2040)

The Chairman: Shall clause 38 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this is the 1st of November. This Parliament has not been in session for a month, but already we have this attitude of complete refusal to answer questions. We have a crowd over there just like the Liberals. All they can do is shout "carried". Whether members across the way agree with what my friend for Broadview-Greenwood has said or not, I suggest he deserves an answer to the questions he has put instead of just giving us this "carried" chorus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I can respond to some of the points raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. I hesitate to say that I can convince him of the merits of this proposal in all respects. On the number of people affected, I said a short time ago that some few thousand were affected. We have to make an estimate here. We think that something less than 10,000 will be affected. That includes mostly management service and other service organizations associated with professionals and not the professionals themselves because, as has been pointed out, most of them are not free to incorporate.

There is an estimate, not of what this measure will cost us but of what it will save us compared with the present situation. In fact not very many professionals and personal service corporations had been formed to take advantage of the present regulations which allow them to exist under the low small business tax. It is estimated that were this proposal not enacted and the existing rules were to continue, the cost in revenue would be in the area of $150 million.

It might be useful to make one further comment. There has been some valid discussion on the merits and demerits of the deferral aspect of this. There can be no argument about the neutrality aspect for income that is received and paid out in the form of dividends immediately. There can be an argument about the virtues and otherwise of the deferral. I suggest the demerits, if any, are at least modified by the higher tax rate which immediately applies to investment income.

There is another point which can be taken into account. While businesses of this kind do not have the same working capital requirements and equipment capital requirements and so on that many other businesses have, they are not without such requirements. There could be a justification for at least some withholding of payout for financing of the enterprise.

I think the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount would agree that in this world there is no such thing as complete tax equity. Every time we try to achieve complete tax equity, we get unintended inequitable consequences. We have tried it for the past decade and a half in this country. I think hon. members will agree we are not too much further ahead than before we tried. It may be impossible to get complete equity, because what is equity for one is inequity for another in terms of judgment of equity.

I would not pretend this is a fully equitable provision, but it is a much better provision than the present situation. It is a much better provision than originally proposed in C-37. Therefore, I believe it is a good measure but, like all good measures, it has certain imperfections.

Mr. Rae: If the figure is $150 million, which the parliamentary secretary estimates as being saved in comparison with the present situation, will he agree that the cost of this measure is somewhere between zero and $150 million in comparison with the measure put forward by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice in his original budget. If I might continue, it is approximately one third of that amount. Is that a fair estimation?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I am not certain I could make a good estimate or that anyone else really could make a valid estimate. Certainly it is not without cost as compared to the original proposal.

Mr. Rae: With respect, Mr. Chairman, this is not a trivial matter. The Minister of Finance said he would bring in a budget in November. I remind him that we are now into November. He said he is going to deal with the question of tax expenditures. Surely the department has some mechanism now for estimating what they think the cost of this measure will be. They have a figure of $150 million. They must have some basis on which to calculate the amount, whether we are talking about millions, tens of millions, or more, or less.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, the estimate of $150 million is based on the beginnings of a rapid escalation in the numbers of entities which were prepared to take advantage of the favourable tax treatment. Now that we have something that is intended to be neutral in its tax effects, it is very hard to estimate how many incorporations will take place with this provision. I think it is safe to say that, compared to the present situation, it will be very few, for tax purposes at any rate.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I have a very quick question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. Would it be possible for the Minister of Finance to raise this issue in the discussions with the provinces at some point, which I do not think has been done in the past, to encourage the various jurisdictions to try to establish some uniformity in Canada with regard to the incorporation of these professional firms, which is not a matter of federal jurisdiction? I think the inequities should be pointed out to the provinces and an attempt made to encourage them to try at least to establish incorporations for tax purposes, which can be done as in the case of Alberta, without essentially destroying the client-professional relationship which is very much cherished by the professions.

That would at least go some way toward achieving a measure of tax neutrality, at least among these professionals. It does not address itself to those professions which are not named, but they still enjoy the 25 per cent rate on the first $150,000. That would be a significant step forward if the provincial counterparts could be prevailed upon to try to bring this forward.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I think the objective of that suggestion is excellent, but I question whether it would fall on the government or the Minister of Finance to raise such an issue. I think it would come better from the professions themselves.

Mr. Rae: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, in the midst of my frustrations at being unable to get certain information from the government, I referred to the officials of the Department of Finance as kibitzing. This might be interpreted as an unfriendly remark, but those of us who play cards realize that kibitzing is a common activity. I certainly did not mean it as a criticism of the officials. I want to apologize to them if I have offended them in any way.

● (2050)

Mr. Rae: While I of course want to make it clear that I still feel very frustrated about the lack of information from the department on this important tax expenditure, I am certainly not one to give offence to civil servants unnecessarily. I do not mind giving offence to my hon. colleagues across the way. They expect that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We can take it.

Mr. Rae: So can I, but I apologize to those who are not in a position to hurl abuse back at me.

However, I still feel extremely frustrated about the lack of information on this tax expenditure.

Clause 38 agreed to: Yeas, 34; nays, 8.

Clause 39 agreed to.

On clause 40—

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this clause deals with an important matter, the question not only of comparative rates of investment credit to be given for investment in different parts of the country but also for research and development in different parts of the country.

As I indicated in my speech at second reading, the concern we in my party have with respect to this measure is about its effectiveness. I think we are entitled to ask, as time goes on and as we have experience with these investment tax credits, whether these really are the mechanisms and the incentives which change the behaviour of business—in effect, direct investment—and whether this is the most effective way to direct investment.

Initially I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he can tell us what the cost of these various measures is and something of the history of the experience of the country with investment tax credits since they were initiated.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I can give some of the data the hon. member is seeking. The estimated cost of the enrichment aspect of this investment tax credit for the current year in terms of amounts likely to be claimed, that is, from firms which have profits against which to claim them, is $130 million.

In terms of amounts estimated to be earned, the amount is $385 million, and the difference presumably will be claimed in future years should the firms concerned earn suitable profits.

The only piece of information I have which I think bears on the broader question asked by the hon. member is that during the first half of this year real business investment spending on plant, machinery and equipment rose by 9.3 per cent. One cannot say how much it would have risen without the investment tax credit, but it would not have been that high in current circumstances, I am sure. That is not a very precise answer to the hon. member's question, but it is the best I can produce at this moment.

Mr. Rae: I know the Liberal party is not interested in arguing about this, but I think it is a very important problem. I have a question to which I hope the minister will find the time and the ability to address himself at some point. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion perhaps will be able to deal with it as well. It is a very fundamental question. Is the investment tax credit working? It is a very substantial sum of money to be giving to corporations to invest in particular areas when two things are possible, and we do not have the information before us.

The first problem is that investment might have taken place in these areas in any event, in which case the expenditure of government money is completely unnecessary and provides a substantial benefit to companies which might well have taken the same decision in the absence of any incentive or movement by the government. It is very critical to ask whether this is the best way to be spending $130 million of government money in a particular year and how it compares with the direct expenditure of money. There are very few ways of controlling the credit compared with capital cost allowance. Even in comparison with capital cost allowance it strikes me as being an inefficient way to carry on in terms of tax expenditures.

Second, does this form of tax expenditure, which is designed not just to increase investment but to increase investment in particular regions of Canada, provide the government with an excuse for not carrying out direct expenditure?

For example, in the field of scientific research and development the parliamentary secretary knows perfectly well that the private sector can decide, for reasons which may have nothing to do with the validity of the research and development expenditure, to do certain work in order to take advantage of a particular credit.

If you accept—and I know from the remarks made last night that the parliamentary secretary does not—the premise that there is such a thing as a tax expenditure and that it is just as much a form of public expenditure as direct expenditure, then I think the question for the taxpayers of Canada becomes, in research and development and in general investment: is this the best way to spend public money, and is this a very poor and inadequate substitute for the kind of direct expenditure in research and development and the kind of controlled and focused activity in terms of scientific research which really should be coming from the Government of Canada?

There are, admittedly, very real differences here between ourselves and the government. The government, of course, feels that if the private sector decides to carry on research and development in a particular area, the research and development that should go- ahead. But I think we're entitled to put forward our point of view, which is to say that neither the budget papers nor the statements made by the parliamentary secretary tonight give us the slightest evidence as to the benefits, as to the merits of the government's proposal or as to how the money is to be spent.

We are in a similar position to the one which faced us a few days ago when the Minister of Finance asked us to agree to giving him a $7 billion cheque. We are aware that not enough research and development are being carried on in Atlantic Canada. We do not know whether these meaures will stimulate development or whether the development they may stimulate is likely to be in the long-term interests of the people of Atlantic Canada. We do not have any information. In any socio-scientific research some evidence is required that what we are doing is worth the expenditure, whether the development which is going on is in place as a result of the investment or whether it would be going on anyway.

I am reminded of the old discussion about cause and effect. Does the fact that everyone sings the national anthem before the Blue Jays game mean that the singing causes the game to start? Of course not. One event merely follows the other. The same can very well be true of investment tax credits. Does the fact that a certain amount of investment takes place in a province following certain benefits mean that it would not have taken place without the benefits? How do we know? What research is being carried on? What evidence does the government have that particular projects are taking off? What evidence do we have that scientific research projects are growing and developing in a coherent fashion because of tax credits which have been given?

I can see the scorn being shown by members on the other side; it is typical of the intellectual interest they show in these subjects. Nevertheless, I think I am entitled to ask these questions. If there is evidence, I wish the parliamentary secretary would provide it and tell us which projects are under way, and justify the spending of this money.

When we introduce the concepts of the tax expenditures which hopefully we will get into the centre of the next budget, we will be entitled to ask ourselves whether this is the best form of regional incentive and whether it is the best way to stop the concentration of wealth in central and, now, in western Canada, at the expense of the other regions. I suggets that these mechanisms, by comparison to the very powerful forces acting in the marketplace at the present time, are totally inadequate for the purpose. They are a poor excuse for the economic planning. They are a substitute for economic planning, a substitute for the regional investment which should be going on.

My hon. friend from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe and my hon. friend from Winnipeg North will be explaining in terms of their experience how this policy of tax expenditure is a very sad excuse for a serious policy on economic development in Atlantic Canada on one hand, and in terms of scientific research and development on the other.

Mr. Johnston: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This should be good.

Mr. Johnston: Did I understand the hon. member to suggest that direct government control of scientific research and development in terms of specific grants should be substituted for investment tax credits given to the private sector in general in determining what their priorities should be? Is that the thrust of that comment?

Mr. Rae: I am very glad the hon. member asked me that question, because it gives me the opportunity not only to answer it but to answer the comments he made at some earlier point in the discussion to the effect that this party would not be happy until everybody received all their moneys from the state and paid all their moneys to the state. That is an example of the kind of ideological ignorance which I anticipate from certain members opposite but which is not so often evident from the Liberal benches. It justifies our view that there is not really much difference between those two parties. In any event, that is not what I said.

What I said was this: as we look at the tax expenditure figures given to us by the government in relation to scientific research we believe there is a very real tendency for the government to substitute credits, incentives and give-aways in the tax fields for positive policy. I am suggesting that active co-ordination of an effort by the government and by the public sector must be substituted for what I regard as a rather blind, uncontrolled, and uncontrollable approach by way of investment tax credit. I believe the burden is on those who have tried the investment tax credit approach and the research and development tax credit over the years to demonstrate its effectiveness rather than on those who have been inclined to criticize that approach as not being satisfactory.

So, the answer to the two questions is, no, we do not want everybody in Canada to be an employee of the Government of Canada. No, we do not want everyone in Canada to wear uniforms and be dressed in the same way. No, we do not look forward to a totalitarian state in Canada. And, finally, we do not want all scientific research to be directed and controlled by bureaucrats in Ottawa. That is not the thrust of what I was saying. If the hon. member took that meaning, I may have been expressing myself poorly. But my message is clear. We must not use tax expenditures as an excuse for the lack of thoughtful, intelligent, and rational government intervention.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I am sure the hon. member agrees that one of the causes of a rather unsatisfactory economic performance in this country, particularly in the secondary sector, has been inadequate expenditure on research and development. Another cause, I think we can fairly say, is inadequate investment in general. There are some figures which may interest the hon. member.

In the opinion of many, an opinion I share, Canada has been deficient in research and development in terms of gross amount spent and in terms of who should do the research. Here are some interesting comparisons in terms of gross amounts: Canada, 1.1 per cent of its GNP; Germany, 2.1 per cent of its GNP; Japan, 1.7 per cent of its GNP; Switzerland, 2.2 per cent of its GNP, the United States, 2.3 per cent of its GNP.

The second aspect is how much of that research is performed by government and how much by industry, and the distinguishing characteristic of Canada is that not only have we had a lesser share of our GNP going into research, we have had a lesser share that has been put in by industry. Those two factors are both very significant in the kind of economic performance we have had in this country. Canada's percentage has been 40 per cent, which is very, very low by comparision with others such as Germany with 61 per cent, Switzerland with 77 per cent, Japan with 64 per cent, and the United States with 68 per cent.

One of the attractions of this particular proposal, and of its predecessors on which it is built, is that we are now beginning to encourage, as we did not for many years, research and development expenditure by industry, which, to my mind, is one of the best guarantees that R and D expenditures will be productive economically. That is the record of other industrial nations, and the hon. member has to produce some evidence unknown to me to counter it effectively.

The hon. member raises the question of whether these expenditures are effective—investment expenditures, investment tax credits, research tax credits. It is clear that they should be more effective than a comparable expenditure made directly by the government because, for one thing, there is a powerful multiplier effect. We give a tax credit of 5 per cent, 7 per cent or 10 per cent that is not given unless the expenditure has been many times that, of course, and so we are inducing by this incentive substantial expenditures.

Another factor, and it arises out of experience I have had over many years in having to take part in decisions about investment expenditures and R and D expenditures, is that if an investment expenditure is going to cost you less or if an R and D expenditure is going to cost you less, and with the tax credit they do, then you spend money and it is worth your while to spend more, so you do spend more. I do not know if it would be possible for someone with the best sociological or economic weapons to go and determine how much more is spent collectively, but it is a matter of knowledge and logic that more is spent.

There is one other factor which I think is of great importance. Unlike the hon. member, I have far more faith in the ability of those investment decisions to produce good results when they are made by people who have a direct interest in them, a direct knowledge of how the money is going to be used, what it will do for the firm concerned, than I have when it is done by the wisest bureaucrat in Ottawa. Therefore, I think I have to disagree very strongly with almost the total burden of what the hon. member had to say in his last two interventions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Faour: Mr. Chairman, to begin I would just like to comment briefly on what the parliamentary secretary has just finished saying. I have really no quarrel with almost everything he has just finished saying in response to the comments of my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. But the parliamentary secretary has still not convinced me that there is some relationship, any sort of relationship, between the investment tax credit that the government is proposing and the increase in the research and development that is done in this country. If we are going to be proposing solutions or some sort of encouragement to industry to increase the amount of research and development that is done in this country, perhaps we must look at some of the reasons why research and development in this country are at such a low level, and no studies of which I am aware, no studies which the government, through the parliamentary secretary or the minister, has been able to demonstrate to us, has shown that the low level of R and D and investment in the country is due to some deficiency in the tax laws which do not allow investment credits. It is the cause and effect relationship that has to be shown, and I do not think the government has shown it.

About ten years ago, and perhaps still now but we do not hear too much about it these days, there was very strong concern in this country over the amount of foreign investment in the country and the sort of effect that that level of foreign investment was having in certain sectors of the economy. One area that was always cited as a very serious effect of the high level of foreign investment in Canada was the low level of R and D carried out by branch plants, by the branch plant economy. It would appear to me that this proposal of the government really does not meet that question. I am not saying that that is the only reason that there is a low level of R and D undertaken in the country, but the investment tax credit in this area does not answer any of the other deficiencies that have been shown to me to be the cause of the low level of R and D in Canada. It is basically a question of cause and effect.

What we are talking about in this case is the effective expenditure of a very large amount of money in times of restraint, which could be used to alleviate some of the very serious social effects of the restraint program of the government in various areas of the country. I would like to look at this in terms of the regional development of the country because one of the prime aims of this clause, as set out in the budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice last year, was that this measure would encourage development in certain designated areas of the country, specifically the four Atlantic provinces and the Gaspé part of Quebec. At that time my criticism of that particular provision was that we did not know whether it was going to encourage the level of investment in the Atlantic region.

It seems to me that businessmen who are contemplating an investment are going to look beyond the initial tax credits available to them in pursuing a certain investment, that the real factors affecting their decision as to whether or not to invest will be the over-all market conditions in a region, the availability of skilled labour, access to markets and so on, basic factors of the economy that this investment tax credit does nothing to solve. It has not been shown at all that providing this additional tax credit in certain areas of the country will do anything other than give a windfall to those individuals and corporations which have already, for other reasons, decided to invest in the particular region.

The business community in the Atlantic region is doubtful whether this particular provision has any effect on new construction or new investment in that region. I spoke with several individuals last year when this provision came out in the budget and the response I got was that the real problems in Atlantic Canada cannot be solved by some initial credit on investment in the region. The real problems are basic structural problems, fundamental problems in the relationship of the Atlantic region with the rest of Canada. It has nothing to do with the tax structure on investments. As I mentioned, the problems involve access to markets, the problems of a small local market, and the problem of the whole tariff structure which is geared historically to protect central Canadian industries to the detriment of the east and the west in the country.

As I said, this particular provision is a very serious one because it is costing such a large amount of dollars, at the same time as the restraint program of the government takes dollars out of the Atlantic region. I should like to mention a couple.

The unemployment insurance cutbacks over the last year have taken an amount of money out of the Newfoundland economy the equivalent of a small industry. There is a relatively large pulp and paper mill in my constituency which provides salaries of some $40 million a year to the economy of Newfoundland. It would be unthinkable that any Newfoundland politician or citizen, or any Canadian citizen for that matter, would allow that industry to shut down and take $40 million away from the Newfoundland economy. In the unemployment insurance cutbacks announced first by the Liberal government and then enacted by the Conservative government, that is precisely what is happening in terms of the actual amount of dollars. The same amount of dollars is being taken out.

The hon. member for Jonquière put the impact of this particular legislation into perspective from his point of view. It would be equivalent to the Alcan smelter pulling out of his riding. That would have very serious effects.

The cost of this will not create the benefits which such costs should, especially if they were directed in some other manner. Before the government effectively spends this amount of money, there should be some idea of the effects which it will have. The business community is very doubtful as to whether this measure has any effect on any new investment, certainly in the Atlantic region and perhaps across the country.

Another very serious question raised by this particular measure is that it allows the government to say, "Look how much we are doing for the Atlantic economy." This is precisely what the hon. member for Saint-Maurice said last year when he introduced this measure in his budget. He said that they were going to encourage development and investment in the Atlantic region. He did not provide anything else in his budget for the Atlantic region. In fact in many ways he took money out of the Atlantic region. This was one particular item which he was able to point to and say that he was promoting development in the Atlantic region. The government is doing precisely the same.

The measure provides the government with an easy excuse not to do anything constructive. The $130 million would do a lot more if it was put into transportation to upgrade the system in Newfoundland and the maritime provinces. Many other things could be done. The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council recently released a report which I have not had a chance to study thoroughly, but I am sure the government would find many useful areas in which to spend that amount of money if it was seriously interested in promoting development in the Atlantic region.

Basically, to my mind and to the minds of many members of the business community in Atlantic Canada, this particular measure will tend to give a tax break to individuals and corporations that for other reasons have decided to invest. It will give them a tax break and a windfall in dollars. I should like the government to demonstrate that this particular measure will have a positive effect on the Atlantic economy related to the amount of dollars it will cost.

The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood asked the goverment to show the correlation between the cause and the effect, the correlation between investment tax credit and whatever potential positive effects there may be in various areas, whether it be research and development or regional development. I do not think it is too much to ask a government which is proposing to spend this amount of money, that its homework be done to the point that it knows the effects of this particular expenditure.

I do not know what more I can add. The parliamentary secretary has attempted to show a correlation. Frankly I do not think he has. Perhaps he can try again. If the government is serious about regional development, I implore it to use this estimated $130 million in some other fashion. It could be used to upgrade the transportation system. It could be used through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to promote real development in the region. I ask the parliamentary secretary if he has any other data which might provide this correlation. Given the representations of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, it almost seems fruitless, but my frustration is no less than his.

It seems to me a very substantial amount of money is being spent, collected, or not collected, to no end at all. When the government is practising restraint on the backs of the unemployed and the poor people in the region, I do not see how an effective expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars can be justified unless it is shown that it will create some investment which will create jobs, employment, and economic activity in the region.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I have just a brief comment which might be of value to the hon. member. There is one specific value to these proposals which I am sure he would have in mind. For nearly a year firms in the Atlantic provinces and all across Canada have been making their decisions in light of these proposals, because these proposals are in effect when passed for the current year. When the Minister of Finance in his statement on second reading made the comment that he had muted enthusiasm for some of the proposals in this act, indirectly he was emphasizing the fact that whether or not we agree, some of these things, in fairness, must go through at least for the current year. In fact I think there are far more powerful reasons in this case. While it is very difficult to measure quantitatively the effect of these inducements on investment, because one cannot really know what would have taken place without them, it is a certainty they have some effect.

All hon. members from the maritimes and other parts of the country will be interested in the new additional investment tax credits now given for investment in various transportation equipment and facilities. It is a matter which should be of interest to anyone in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, for years now members on this side of the House, members of the New Democratic Party, and members of the Conservative party when it was in opposition, criticized very vigorously the assistance given to scientific research and development during the time when the Liberal party was the government. They criticized the programs and policies vigorously because they were such obvious failures.

In June of last year, when the then minister for science and technology announced a program with a proposal that by 1983 we would increase the percentage of gross national product spent in this country by the government, by universities and by private industries on research and development from the then 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent, he was criticized by the present Prime Minister, who spoke for the Conservative party, as well as by the spokesman for our party. Both of those hon. members said that even if we achieved that goal within the five-year period we would still be spending substantially less in terms of percentage of our gross national product for scientific research and development than is being spent by most industrialized countries in the world.

I am not going to go over the figures again, as the parliamentary secretary gave some of them a few moments ago. We said then that this was not enough and we called for increased efforts in government laboratories, in universities and in private industries in the field of research and development. We all agreed that what we should be aiming for was an expenditure of 2.5 per cent of gross national product, and sooner than 1983. That government, having set as its goal 1.5 per cent of the gross national product by 1983, proceeded within less than three months, because of the so-called need for restraint, to cut back on the money expended by the federal government, either through its own research laboratories or through grants to universities. It cut back on already woefully inadequate funds provided for scientific research.

This is not the time to talk about what is happening in government research laboratories operated by the National Research Council or by various departments concerned with agriculture, fisheries and forestry, but I want to deal with the situation in relation to the government's apparent belief that we can do better than we have in the past through some kind of greater concessions to the private sector of our economy.

Former governments, Liberal and Conservative, have tried to encourage private industry in this country to become involved in research and development. This government may believe that the carrots proffered to the private sector by former Liberal governments were not big enough or juicy enough. However, the former government did have programs. It had the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, and it had a program for the advancement of industrial technology. Those programs did not succeed.

I was not here when my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood spoke, as I was attending a committee meeting, but I am certain he did not suggest that all research should be done by the government and monitored by government bureaucrats. No social democrat believes that. In spite of the fact that most members of the Conservative party are ignorant of the politics of government in other countries, there is a social democratic government in Germany and there was a social democratic government in Sweden for some 40 years. There have been social democratic governments in Great Britain, Norway, Belgium, Holland and Denmark. Most of those countries are far ahead of Canada in terms of the efficiency of their industry.

In all those countries which have or have had social democratic governments, whose philosophy and policies are very much like those of the NDP, the private sector is alive and flourishing.

An hon. Member: And trying to defeat the government.

Mr. Orlikow: And often trying to defeat the social democratic government, as is its right. There is a vast difference between those governments and this government or the former Liberal government. Those governments are not bound to wipe out or destroy the so-called free enterprise system. They accept the fundamental reality that we live in a mixed economy in which some parts of the economic system are owned and operated by the state and some have less government ownership or involvement. I think Sweden and Germany, which have or have had social democratic governments, have less public ownership than we have in Canada.

We have a tremendous amount of public ownership. We have a publicly-owned railway brought in by Liberal and Conservative governments, not by the social democrats. We have Air Canada, a publicly- owned air transport system, and in virtually every province we have publicly-owned electric power systems. I do not think there is a member in this House from any party who would suggest that was a mistake because we are getting electric power in Canada much cheaper than they are in the United States, for example, with privately-owned systems.

In the three prairie provinces we have publicly-owned telephone systems. In my province of Manitoba we have had a publicly-owned telephone system since 1909, brought into being by a Conservative premier, Sir Rodmond Roblin, whose name, I am sure, is known at least to some members in this House. We have a Conservative government in Alberta which not so long ago bought control of Pacific Western Airlines. When we advocate public ownership or government involvement in planning we are talking about hard reality and not some kind of unproven or untried theory.

Let me talk for a few minutes about this particular item. I have to assume that the parliamentary secretary suggested the government was going to make it easier and more profitable for industry in this country to spend money and effort on research and development, and that this is going to change the sorry state of research and development in this country. I do not want to go over the figures again, but among the industrial countries of the world Canada is, if not right at the bottom, close to the bottom in terms of the percentage of gross national product spent on scientific research and development. When we consider applied research we find that Canada is the last of eight industrial countries in terms of dollars devoted to industrial research and development.

Not only is the quantity of research and development conducted by industry in Canada very poor, but the quality appears to be very poor. For example, it has been estimated that of the 110 significant innovations in the world since World War II—which covers a wide range of the science intensive industry including electronic components, pharmaceutical plastics, computers, among others—none were first developed in Canada. This survey covers the time period up to 1970, but recent data suggests that Canada still shows a poor performance. Of the 926 companies identified by Statistics Canada that were funding research and development in Canada during 1973, only $10.8 million was received from foreign countries as payment for patent licences and technological know-how. These same companies expended $75.6 million abroad for technology.

What are the reasons for the poor level of industrial research and development in Canada? There are two major reasons. First of all, most of Canadian industry which is Canadian-owned is in the resource extraction area, such as mining and forestry. Such industry requires very little research and development.

For example, in 1969 among the 14 nations belonging to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, Canada had the second lowest percentage of workers in the manufacturing area, 23 per cent, and it has gone down since. Ireland was the lowest at 20 per cent. West Germany was 28 per cent, the United Kingdom 36 per cent, and the United States 34 per cent. The second reason is that Canada has the highest degree of foreign ownership and control among the OECD countries. If one thinks of all the major industries—the automobile industry, the rubber industry, the electrical industry and so on—virtually all of them are almost completely dominated in this country by the multinational corporations.

The Toronto Star conducted a survey about one year ago. It contacted approximately 20 of the major industrial corporations in this country, General Motors, Ford, Westinghouse, Kodak, and Xerox among others. It knew how much business these companies had done in Canada, the amount of sales and so on. It asked each company how much research they did worldwide and how much research they did in Canada. The answers were very illuminating, and ran from no research and development for Kodak of Canada to virtually nothing for the automobile companies. That outlines the problems which this country faces and which this government is ignoring. These large multinational companies must do their fair share of research and development in Canada, and it must be comparable with their sales activity in Canada. There is no evidence that if we give them tax concessions they will do the job.

That brings me to small companies which employ a large number of people in this country. Small companies are usually Canadian-owned and are interested in going ahead. This system does not help small businesses because they must make a certain amount of money before they can take advantage of the tax benefits proposed in this bill. We need more than just a tax gimmick to get companies which operate in Canada to do research and development here. We need a much more aggressive and much more planned system, as well as a great deal more government involvement in the form of consultations, co-operation and direction.

I had the opportunity recently to spend a couple of days in Japan. While there our group received a briefing by the Canadian ambassador to Japan. I want to say to the parliamentary secretary that his description of the role which the Japanese government plays in how the country will operate and how industry will be encouraged to expand to meet the needs of the domestic market and the international market so that Japanese workers will have jobs, was very broad.

Japan has a free enterprise system of government. The socialist party is not very strong there. However, any resemblance between the free enterprise system of Japan and that of Canada is almost completely coincidental because there the free enterprise government plays a very active role. It meets on a day to day basis with companies, and it insists that what they do when these companies expand should help, not just the companies, but the Japanese people by providing better jobs and more efficient, technologically oriented industry. Until Canada can achieve that level of expertise, these tax concessions which are being proposed will not begin to meet our very serious failure to modernize and make Canadian industry competitive not only in the Canadian market but in the international market where we must get our share of sales if our unemployment figures are to remain low over the next ten years or 20 years.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 41 to 65 inclusive agreed to.

• (2150)

On clause 66—

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, earlier in our discussions the parliamentary secretary told us that if we were to have a discussion on income debentures, bank taxation and the current situation with respect to the banks and what was happening, that had best take place on clause 66.

I should like to put certain questions to the parliamentary secretary. First of all I should like him to explain how it is that the effective rate of taxation of the banks now stands at 10.7 per cent in the third quarter of 1979, even though no new term preferred shares or income debentures have qualified for preferential tax treatment since November, 1978?

I should like him to tell us how much longer we can anticipate that this low rate of taxation will apply. The conclusion I would draw, without wanting to say any more, is that in a sense the door has been locked well after the horse has bolted. Can the parliamentary secretary explain how it is that we have reached the stage where the rate of the effective taxation is so low, and can he tell us whether the government or the Minister of Finance have any intention of addressing this particular problem in the next budget?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the figure the hon. member has quoted. Such data as I have is not quite as recent as the third quarter of the fiscal year, which would ordinarily come at the end of October. The figures I have show—and one assumes that this is largely because of the effect of term preferred shares—that the effective tax rate on banks, which had been in the same league as other corporations in the years 1972 to 1975, was around 46.5 per cent, 47 per cent and 48 per cent. They began to decline in 1976, and by 1978 had reached the level of about 29.4.

I think it is reasonable to expect there might be some decline into 1979, because the full effect of term preferred debentures taken on before the budget of November, 1978, would not have been reflected up to that time. For instance, one might cite the $1.5 billion of term preferred debentures that were used for the purchase of PetroCan would not have been in that figure. I thought the hon. member might share some of the feelings that I had on that point. At the moment I have no later figures that I could cite to the hon. member that would really measure the effect. It would not surprise me if it were below 29.4 per cent but I find it very difficult to imagine it being as low as ten point something.

Mr. Rae: I can assure the parliamentary secretary that the figures reached my research department and myself, just judging from the statement of the quarterly—

Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Burlington is going to be on television sitting behind the Prime Minister, he had better learn how to smile. His unpleasant visage is causing great concern to the children of the country and certainly to many members, particularly on Hallowe'en. As we are in the Hallowe'en season I think he should take his mask off.

Mr. Andre: Look around you.

Mr. Kempling: They would frighten anybody. They still have their masks on.

Mr. Rae: These are the members that he is frightening and I think he should be aware of that.

Mr. Andre: Who is the Sasquatch beside you?

Mr. Kempling: Look at the Ayatollah.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I know it is late and we have been here through a long debate. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary if between now and tomorrow, he could look at the quarterly figures that are available for 1979 and look at the fact that in the second quarter of 1979 the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce received a tax credit. I cannot cite a figure but I think it is in the area of $1 million. For the third quarter of 1979, both the Banque Provinciale and the Banque Canadienne Nationale, before their merger, received bank credits of over $4 million.

The question in the minds of those Canadian taxpayers who have been made aware of these figures is that if the loophole has been closed, as it is supposed to have been, how is it we now see such a low rate of effective taxation? According to my calculations, in the case of the five majors it is down to 10.7 per cent. I would ask him to look at the figures and, if they are wrong, I will gladly correct them before this Committee of the Whole House; but if it is that low, what do we intend to do about it? My concern is that it may not be adequate because of the length of time over which these term preferred shares take place. We may be looking at a situation in which significant amounts of revenue may be lost to the treasury as a result of these measures which took place, I think, before this government came to power.

I suggest that some extraordinary measures may be necessary in order to remedy the situation, so that we do not see a very low level of taxation taking place over an extended period of time.

I would call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and I would appreciate it if the parliamentary secretary would endeavour to get that information for tomorrow.

Mr. Lalonde: Or the minister.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—OIL PRICES—REQUEST GOVERNMENT ABANDON PLANS FOR FURTHER INCREASES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the rules of this House give us only seven minutes to express a point of view at this time. It is difficult to control one's anger for seven minutes on the policy of this government with respect to oil and energy prices in particular. Yesterday the Economic Council of Canada released a review the French title of which is "The Burden of Inertia". I think one could hardly find a better description of this government, particularly with respect to its energy policy.

We have a government that does not listen to public opinion. We saw how this government does not take into account public opinion with respect to Petro-Canada. Not only do we have a deaf government, we now have before us a government which has grown mute when it comes to energy prices and oil prices in particular. The provinces have expressed very clear opinions—the province of Alberta, the province of Ontario. But the Canadian public and this House have been unable to extract any information whatsoever from this government on the policy it intends to carry out with respect to oil prices. That is showing contempt for this House and the Canadian public. It is unacceptable that after being in power for more than five months the government should still be unable to say to this House what it is actually proposing to Canadians in terms of an oil price policy.

Yesterday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) appeared before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works and we were unable to get any information whatsoever from him. Even members sitting on the government side could not get any information at all from that minister. That completely withrawn approach of the government must be denounced, and I am sure, rejected, and considered unacceptable by Canadian public opinion.

[English]

The irresponsible attitude of the present government concerning the matter of energy pricing, oil pricing in particular, is to be condemned. The province of Ontario and the province of Alberta have come out with clear statements on where they stand. This government will not tell the House and the Canadian public where it wants to take the people of Canada with regard to energy pricing, oil pricing in particular.

At the present time there is an agreement in existence with the provinces which provides for a $1 a barrel price increase in January. This would guarantee peace with regard to energy pricing until July 1, 1980. We now hear the government wants to dump this agreement and to tax the people even more by substantially increasing the price of oil. It wants to do this although we have an agreement that has been signed, sealed and delivered on this subject, with the province of Alberta.

This government only thinks about increasing the burden upon the Canadian public. We now have the highest interest rates in our history. Under this government we are heading toward the highest ever prices for oil and gas. According to what we can distinguish from this government's policy, every Canadian home owner and car driver will be taxed an additional $200 at least in the next year. That is over and above the additional cost that will be incurred because of the high interest rates this government has brought forward since taking office in early June.

These are steps that should be fought by all Canadians. They will be fought by the opposition both inside and outside this House. Our position is that we should not be chasing after international prices. That position was made quite clear in 1976 in our white paper on energy. Hon. members can find it on page 127 of our white paper on energy. It reads:

It is the federal government's objective to see domestic oil prices increase to a level sufficient to bring on new Canadian supplies. To the degree that this level is lower than international oil prices it is a differential for the benefit of Canadian consumers and Canadian producers, industrial and agricultural.

Let us have the price determined in Canada by Canadians for Canadians. Let us not slavishly follow a price set up by the international cartel which is called the OPEC countries. The attitude of the government in taking this country to international prices is one which will drive this country into a recession next winter and next year, in addition to the high interest rates being imposed on our citizens at this time. I urge the government to reconsider its course and to maintain the policy which the previous government set up, one of moderate and gradual increases in price and one where the highest level would be determined by the cost of finding and distributing new resources in Canada rather than being at the mercy of the OPEC countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Jarvis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) that we have had 11 years of inertia. We have seen the maritimes left totally dependent on foreign oil and gas; we have had a nation without an energy policy for 11 years—nothing under way though proven supplies were falling.

The government is working today on a national oil policy based on energy self-sufficiency. Oil self-sufficiency for Canada is essential. In order to achieve self-sufficiency we cannot continue to rely on foreign sources of oil over which we have no control as to the price charged or the quantities available. The government is now working with the provinces and the industry to establish a domestic price for oil which will provide incentives for, and cover the cost of, the production of new oil. Appropriate pricing can also contribute to reducing growth in demand. We cannot continue to expect that international supplies of oil will be available in quantities sufficient to meet rapid demand growth. We must plan to get through the next decade with more limited requirements.

Among many other important matters which are being discussed with the provinces to obtain agreement on an energy policy package are the implications of an energy price increase. These include the effects on home owners, car drivers, industry and so on. The macro-economic implications are also being studied by my department.

In his original question the hon. member referred to a communication from the provincial premiers following their meeting on October 23. They asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to re-establish the technical advisory committee on petroleum supply and demand and to improve formal communication between the provinces and the National Energy Board.

In reply to the premiers the minister noted that he was reviewing the current and prospective oil product supply situation and is likely to require reconvening the technical advisory committee, particularly in light of its tenuous legality. He also noted that the National Energy Board data is regularly reviewed with the provinces and that the next such review was scheduled for November 5. This government will shortly announce a Canadian energy package based on pricing for Canadians guaranteed to ensure energy self-sufficiency in Canada, by Canadians and for Canadians, by 1990.

ENERGY—TANKER TRANSPORTATION OF CRUDE OIL ON WEST COAST

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is in relation to Alaskan oil, and before I get too far along with it I would like to put a few quotations on the record. The dilemma with which this country is now faced is the result of an inheritance from the previous Liberal administration, and the difficulty is that the Alyeska line was built from the north slope down to Valdez, and tankers have been transitting down the British Columbia coast for the past two years. The Liberal administration did absolutely nothing in terms of dealing with either liability, jurisdiction, clean-ups or any of the ongoing difficulties which were arising at that time.

The Liberals simply brushed those off, and in speaking with the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) two weeks ago and questioning him in relation to the difficulties on the west coast and in relation to both the Foothills proposal and the northern tier proposal as well as the TransMountain proposal, I recognized that he has in fact inherited a very serious difficulty from the Liberal party.

I would like to quote first from the Thompson statement of proceedings from 1978, pages 62 and 63. In the first one he states very clearly in his testimony that "a dangerous situation now exists in the waters of southern British Columbia." That was in 1978. On page 63 he states:

> Since an increasing amount of this traffic is originating from Valdez and travels along the entire outer coastline of British Columbia, in the middle of our fishing zone, this assessment must encompass a broad geographic region.

He was speaking in relation to environmental, social, navigational and safety aspects of the tankers which were already there. From a recently released environmental impact statement by Cecil Andrus, from pages 37 and 39 I quote as follows:

> Presidential Executive Order 12114, signed January 4, 1979, exempts from detailed environmental analyses those portions of a major federal action which might have an effect on the environment of a foreign nation.

That is directed specifically at Canada. At page 39:

> If a major oil spill occurred in the Strait of San Juan de Fuca, Port Angeles Harbour, or along the cross-sound pipeline route, it would affect marine resources, water quality, shorelines, shoreline structures, boats, and waterfowl over a wide area. Such an impact could also affect the Pacific coastline, the U.S.-Canadian shorelines of the Strait, and Puget Sound.

Further down on the page:

> The cumulative effect of small chronic oil spills is expected to have more adverse impacts than an occasional major spill.

The point I wish to make in all of this—and there are further quotations I will give in a moment—is that the federal government has not given appropriate sanctions or studies in relation to tanker traffic which exists off the coast of British Columbia. The Prime Minister and the new government as well as the previous government of this country have allowed the United States to blackmail us economically and environmentally, and the Prime Minister has done absolutely nothing to deal with the deadline the United States Congress and President Carter are now setting, which is December 6.

The Prime Minister has done nothing to cut through all our regulatory processes, nor has he done anything else to expedite the construction of a line, from which we will get absolutely no oil by American law, and I think we have to consider the fact that the Alyeska line is constructed. Tankers are moving down our coast at this point, and we have no legislation in place to protect Canadians. The government seems to be sitting idly by hoping, for some strange reason, that either Trans Mountain will suddenly develop itself or that Foothills will suddenly come into flower, knowing full well, as the Prime Minister did when he responded to me, that the National Energy Board had ruled Foothills deficient. Quite frankly, for a Prime Minister to stand up when the national regulatory agency has ruled a corporation deficient makes a mockery of the National Energy Board, and I make no bones about it. I think that is quite improper.

There are two further quotations I would like to give. One is from the U.S. Department of the Interior. It is a news release dated October 15, 1979. The quotation is found at the bottom of the page:

● (2215)

> The permitting process is exclusively within our federal and state jurisdictions, thereby minimizing risk of potential delay resulting from obtaining approval from the Canadian government.

Quite clearly, the U.S. government is not interested in what this government has to say, and I must say neither the corporate sector nor the Liberal nor Conservative governments have actively pursued options of either tanker safety or minimizing of spills, and also in terms of spill clean-ups on the Pacific coast have not actively pursued the possibility of either moving oil from Alaska in the northern region by rail or having Petro-Canada initiate an involvement in the hearing process in order to pursue options other than simply allowing Foothills to have access to the corridor which is Canadian territory. It is in fact our jurisdiction, and we have regulatory processes in this country which should be heard and not be circumvented either by the Prime Minister or by anyone in the House.

Mr. Bob Jarvis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I, through you, first congratulate the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for joining us in condemning the previous government for leaving us with a dangerous situation with respect to oil, particularly on the west coast. Protection of our environment, of our Canadian coasts and of our fisheries, is the prime goal of this government and one which we intend to pursue with all energy and direction.

With respect to the hon. member's reference to the Department of the Interior and to the position of the U.S. government, I would advise him that the U.S. government has requested that this government put forward its position. On October 20, after this question was first raised by the hon. member, a supplementary aide memoire was sent to the U.S.

government stating that the Canadian government's position was unchanged. I will read the text of the aide memoire now since it is brief. It reads:

The United States government is referred to its request of February 28, 1979, for an expression of Canadian views and preferences regarding various proposals for transporting Alaskan and other crude oil to the U.S. northern tier and other inland states. On April 16, 1979, the Government of Canada told the United States government of its preference for the proposal put forward by Foothills Oil Pipe Lines Ltd., of Calgary. On August 20, 1979, Foothills significantly modified its application eliminating the need for tankers by proposing an all-overland pipeline route from Alaska. The Government of Canada expressed its clear preference for the modified Foothills proposal in an aide-mémoire of September 28, 1979, because it would reduce the number of tankers travelling along the west coast.

On October 15, 1979, Foothills informed the Government of Canada that for a number of reasons it was withdrawing from the contest as an applicant, at least for the present. The Government of Canada remains firm in its objective, as stated on September 28, of minimizing the risk of environmental damage on the west coast from oil tanker traffic and of seeking means whereby current risks, including those in the sensitive inner waters of Juan de Fuca strait and Puget Sound may, if possible, be reduced. It should also be said again that the Government of Canada cannot make any final decisions until completion of National Energy Board consideration of the application now before it.

The President of the United States will be visiting Ottawa on November 9 and 10, 1979. The Prime Minister of Canada looks forward to this opportunity to discuss the full west-to-east pipelines question with him at that time.

Mr. Speaker, I should also add that the United States is aware of the time required for the completion of the Canadian regulatory process—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

NATIONAL UNITY—QUEBEC REFERENDUM—INQUIRY WHETHER PUBLIC SERVANTS WILL HAVE FREE VOTE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I asked for a debate this evening to discuss further the important question of the participation of federal public servants in the referendum campaign which will be held in Quebec next spring. On October 17 last I asked the Prime Minister whether his government would clarify the legal position of federal public servants in the referendum campaign. Mr. Speaker, freedom of speech is one of the fundamental rights of a free society. Each citizen, whether he is a public servant or not, must have this right and be able to exercise it. In the specific case of federal public servants, the oath of allegiance must not be viewed as forbidding this freedom of speech, especially in the case of a referendum and in view of the importance of this referendum for Canada as a whole.

There are, of course, certain restrictions to the freedom of speech of certain public servants involved through their duties in the development and implementation of government policies. However, to suggest that all public servants must be excluded from some sort of political involvement is not quite realistic. Most public servants are not involved in the development of policies and do not have access to the type of information which could threaten the government. Because of this, I believe that they should be excluded from section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. These public servants should be free to take part in an election or a referendum campaign.

Indeed, this is essentially one of the recommendations of the committee on management and personnel, the famous D'Avignon committee, which has been referred, so we are told, to a cabinet committee for consideration or indefinite shelving, despite the fact that the D'Avignon committee realistically and democratically recommended that most public servants be excluded from section 32 of the act and be free to take part in an election or a referendum.

It must be emphasized, however, that some officials must still be restricted from participating in elections in which I include the referendum, by reason of their responsibilities. It is to be regretted that the Progressive Conservative government could not recognize the soundness of the proposals put forward by the D'Avignon committee and accept the suggestion that there are three classes of civil servants: those who should be free to participate, those who should ask permission before they can do so, and those who should be restricted or completely forbidden from participating. I would have hoped that this government would not have hidden behind the screen of the Public Service Commission, that it would have shouldered its responsibilities and taken a position. Unfortunately it preferred to hide behind the Public Service Commission. Well, they hide behind this committee, that committee—everything is referred to committees. This is a no action government.

[English]

I know well that the Public Service Commission delivered an opinion yesterday based on legal advice given to them by justice. It was a recent one because I understand that they also had one, an official one—

[Translation]

—officieuse as we say in French, an informal opinion that was given to us in July or June last. According to my information, there is contradiction between the two and I wonder if in the spirit——of freedom of information, can the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) or his parliamentary secretary table those two legal opinions in the House so that members of Parliament and the Canadian public can see the difference between the opinion given unofficially in June or July saying no, they cannot participate, and the one given recently saying yes, they can participate? I want to know what the reasons were for this change of face or this change of mind.

[English]

Also I would like to take this opportunity to question the Prime Minister. A policy was announced last week regarding the contributions of Crown corporations which are supposed to be at arm's length and not under the auspices or under the control of the government. Instructions were given by the Prime Minister to Crown corporations, specifically Air Canada and Canadian National. He said, "You do not contribute funds to the support of the yes side of the referendum debate". I question these policies because they contradict somewhat the position of the Prime Minister regarding freedom of participation for the public service. On the one hand he said that they are free to go and participate in the referendum, and on the other hand he said to the Crown corporations which are supposed to be at arm's length with the government that no, they cannot participate. I would like to have from the parliamentary secretary a logical answer to this rather tenuous and rather difficult reasoning of the Prime Minister which, in my view, does not stand up to logic or reason.

Finally, I and many other Canadians are asking the Prime Minister: where is the leadership; where is the Canadian leadership; where is the Prime Minister on this question of the Quebec referendum? I speak to you, Mr. Speaker, as a Franco-Ontarian, not as a Quebecker, a fellow born and raised in Ontario. I am a fourth or fifth generation Ontarian. I believe strongly in this country of mine, Canada. I would like to see my Prime Minister involved directly in this referendum campaign because I think the fabric of my country is at stake. I asked him, "Will you participate in this debate", and he said no.

I say to him, is he going to hide his head in the sand like an ostrich, is he going to shadow box with the Canadian public and then say, "You see, I won the referendum?" Is he going to suggest that because he shadow boxed himself into a situation where he did not know what was going to happen and in which he did not participate—is he then going to claim that he saved the country? Is this the kind of Prime Minister we are going to have, or is the parliamentary secretary going to tell me tonight that the Prime Minister will once and for all tell the people that he will vote no, and encourage all Canadians to say no to this referendum, or is he going to wishy-washy himself into a position which nobody understands yet? Will he please clarify the situation for me tonight?

Mr. John Bosley (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had some conversations in the past with the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and tonight he again has done what he has done in the past and has done in the committee. He starts with one question and winds up with about six more. I am perfectly prepared to get him some other information if he wants that, but I think perhaps the fairest thing to do is deal with the original question which is before us for the late show, and which involves the matter that we promised we would deal with, providing the House, as we did at the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, with the position given to us by the Public Service Commission after seeking legal opinion.

An hon. Member: That is their opinion.

Mr. Bosley: That is also the opinion of the government, and that is the position that needs to be made clear perhaps to the hon. member.

I think the hon. member has a copy of this position, but for the record I should perhaps read some of it so that it is clear. It states in part:

—the commission has come to the conclusion that as the law now stands it is possible for federal public servants to engage in some referendum activities without violating section 32.

Without reading all of the letter perhaps I should read the caveat clauses, which are these:

—federal employees must recognize that there may well be partisan party work going on during the campaign.

As the hon. member knows, it is that section in relation to partisan party work to which we are referring.

It states:

—there may well be partisan party work going on during the campaign. Therefore, the commission considers it appropriate to advise federal employees to take special care and use their own discretion to ensure that any activities they undertake do not actually engage them, as such, in partisan party activity.

Furthermore, the commission must also emphasize that in general, federal employees, in deciding whether to become involved and, if so, in deciding what the specific nature of that involvement might be, should at all times be conscious of their obligation not to engage in activity which might adversely affect their ability to perform their functions in the federal public service in an effective and credible manner.

We also emphasize that. It then continues:

The foregoing consideration should be of particular importance to senior federal employees, especially those directly involved in... policy advice to the government.

Finally, in all instances, employees are advised to consult with their deputy heads—

I think that is perfectly clear and I know of no other position taken by the Public Service Commission, to which the hon. member alludes. If he can give me some evidence that there is, I would be happy to search it out, but I do not know of any.

Our position on why Crown corporations should not make financial contributions to either side of the referendum campaign is probably most easily understood as being the same reason that we feel strongly about the rights and privileges of senior public servants, to which the hon. member refers. We suggest that the act that governs the behaviour of individuals does not prohibit activity in the referendum, subject to some limits. I suggest that it is equally appropriate to say that federal Crown corporations, which belong in some sense to all Canadians, are in a difficult position if they take a position one way or the other.

There is a question as to what the federal government's role should be in this—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—ROLE TO BE PLAYED BY FEDERAL AGENCIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Whereas the government of the province of Quebec has used substantial public funds to publish partisan propaganda in the form of a white paper supporting the Péquiste sovereignty-association option, and whereas on October 25, 1979, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) advised the House, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy), that federal Crown corporations should not subscribe to campaigns pertaining to a referendum in the province of Quebec supporting the federal option, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras):

That the Government of Canada reverse its position with respect to the role to be played by federal agencies in the referendum and undertake to support the federal option with every means at its disposal to negate the Péquiste propaganda and ensure that the benefits of the federal option are known to every resident of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POSSIBLE OIL PRICE INCREASE—REACTION OF CERTAIN MINISTERS OF FINANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, whereas our millionaire Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) declared yesterday in Toronto that he had not heard any complaint in Canada about the possibility of the price of gasoline going to $1.30 a gallon, and whereas the Ontario minister of finance was present and said that obviously he would have to raise his voice to be heard by the present Minister of Finance, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard):

That the government provide a free medical examination in Ontario, without overbilling, to both ministers in order to assess the hearing abilities of the Minister of Finance of Canada and the voice problems the minister of finance of Ontario may have.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

CALL FOR SETTLEMENT OF AIR RADIO OPERATORS' DISPUTE TO ASSIST NORTHERN COMMUNITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

It has not been widely publicized that the radio operators' strike is inflicting hardships on residents of the Northwest Territories. We are concerned about safety, but on top of this is the fact that food and mail are no longer being shipped into communities whose only contact with the rest of the world during the winter months is by air. Supply shortages are impending. The backlog of freight in places like Churchill will take weeks to clear.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly):

That the President of the Treasury Board:

(1) empower his negotiators to resume immediately negotiations with the radio operators;

(2) assure that the negotiators are empowered to negotiate a settlement of the dispute, and;

(3) after this has been communicated to the union, ask members of the union to return to work until a settlement has been resolved.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous agreement of the House. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

In view of the fact that hundreds of seasonal workers in New Brunswick, and especially in the economic area of Madawaska, are being deprived of their unemployment insurance benefits; considering that the services of those individuals working for provincial minimum wages are essential to the survival of local industries, not to stress the necessity of an adequate income during the hard winter months for the families of those workers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately investigate that situation and send on the spot one or several officials, if he does not want to go himself, and ask them to report to him in the shortest possible time.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST MINISTER OF LABOUR INTERVENE IN AIR RADIO OPERATORS' DISPUTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

As a result of the renewal of the strike by air radio operators because of the apparent change in the offer of the federal Treasury Board, Nordair has now cancelled its flights to northern Canada. Undoubtedly, the service of other airlines will be cut as well, including those in and out of Labrador.

● (1110)

As these flights are the only means of transport for people and materials, this situation will cause great economic hardship, particularly for those depending on government sources for their income. It will also mean severe personal hardship for families which are separated, for small business, and for those who depend on regular air travel to earn their living. In view of the fact that personally and collectively people in northern and rural Canada will suffer severely from this prolonged strike, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin):

That this House call upon the Minister of Labour to intervene personally in this dispute and to call the parties together immediately for bargaining in good faith and in an attempt to settle this dispute now.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON SOVEREIGNTY-ASSOCIATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

We definitely know now what the Quebec government means by sovereignty-association. We also know that this publication presents a misleading analysis of the situation and history of Canada and will be widely distributed in Quebec at the taxpayers' expense, as emphasized by the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston). Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe):

That the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations and the Prime Minister take immediate steps to convene a federal-provincial conference where this proposal will be debated and where the provinces may state emphatically that they reject the association proposed by the PQ, while assuring Quebeckers that there is in Canada a will to change and that the federal system is the best to effect that change.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), I move:

That this House notes that Remembrance Day is only nine days away, and therefore urges the Minister of Veterans Affairs to introduce before that day his promised legislation respecting veterans, and this House expresses the hope that the proposed legislation will include prorata pensions for widows where the veteran's disability pension was below 48 per cent, necessary adjustments in the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the restoration of the basic rate of the 100 per cent disability pension to the take-home pay level of the five designated categories in the public service, and substantial improvements in the War Veterans Allowance Act, it being the view of this House that our tributes on November 11 to the fallen and to those who have died will have more meaning if we make proper and adequate provision for those who have survived.

REQUEST ANNUAL REPORT BE REFERRED TO HOUSE COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

Considering the importance of the deliberations of the standing committees of the House of Commons on the main estimates for 1979-80; considering the fact that several agencies have published and, in some cases, even tabled their reports in the House of Commons; considering the fact that those reports are of national interest and should be studied in depth by a standing committee of the House; and considering that because those standing committees of the House may not meet without a referral from the House of Commons, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery):

That an order of the House be made to the effect that the annual report of the Public Service Commission of Canada be referred immediately to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for study and consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL ACTIVELY PARTICIPATE IN "NO" CAMPAIGN

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Quebec government released a white paper in which it clearly stated its position. In this document, the Parti Québécois government reiterated that its option was in favour of an independent Quebec, with the possibility of some limited ties with the rest of Canada. The government also stated unequivocally that the referendum question would be based on this option of independence with limited ties with the rest of Canada. My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since this is an extremely important and significant development as far as the existence and the future of our country are concerned, can the Prime Minister tell us if he will advise his ministers and his Quebec ministers in particular to campaign actively under the leadership of the federalist group which the Quebec referendum legislation provided for and to answer "No" to Mr. Lévesque's question?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I realize that since the Quebec government has now made its official position public, the situation is much clearer than before. We now have the government's official position. It is no longer simply a party's stance. This is incompatible with the idea of confederation and it is unacceptable to the Canadian government. Also, the federalists in my party's Quebec wing intend to take part in the fight against the ideas expounded in this document. But I do not want to limit the activities of government members to the province of Quebec or to the organization under the leadership of Mr. Ryan.

I think the main thing for the Canadian government to do is to continue to show that there is in Ottawa a government that has already initiated major and specific changes to the federalist status quo.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC CONSERVATIVES WILL ACTIVELY PARTICIPATE IN MR. RYAN'S GROUP

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): If I understood the Prime Minister's reply correctly, he said that his supporters and his ministers, especially those from Quebec, will vote no in the referendum and will participate in the federalist group under the leadership of Mr. Ryan. If so, am I to infer that the statement made a few days ago by the Minister of Supply and Services, to the effect that it was too early to decide whether the Progressive Conservative Party would participate in the federalist group provided for in the Quebec legislation, is no longer valid, and that one may assume that the Quebec wing of his party will officially join the federalist group led by Mr. Ryan?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat tempted to ask whether all Liberal militants will rally under Mr. Ryan's umbrella. A few have indicated that they are ready to participate. I think a rather important matter of principle is involved here, and I believe the hon. member for Outremont is well aware of it.

The question is whether it would help the cause of federalism to have a federal minister from Quebec join a somewhat limited group formed by Mr. Ryan. I think that now that we are in a position to discuss party strategies here, it would probably be better for us to let the supporters join that umbrella committee and to let the federal ministers from Quebec or elsewhere show through their actions and their activities this government's determination to bring about a truly renewed federalism.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

The answer is getting more and more confused and incredible. The ministers of this government, especially those from Quebec, do not sit here only as members of the Progressive Conservative Party, but as members of the Canadian government and the government of all Canada, including Quebec. I find it incredible that the members of this government, especially those from Quebec, would be in a position where they would not take an active part in the activities of the federalist group headed by Mr. Ryan and would not be really taking part in—

Mr. Olivier: Roch, you don't seem to know it, but you will talk when your leader tells you to.

Mr. Lalonde: I hear the Minister of Supply and Services—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we should go on listening to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Lalonde: I would like to put my question to the Prime Minister. Can he assure us that government members, especially those from Quebec, will be actively involved under the umbrella organization that will be led by Mr. Ryan during the next campaign on the referendum or should we understand that they will continue to do what they have been doing until now, that is sit and wait hoping that others will do the job for them and assume the key role of the Canadian government?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, cabinet ministers will actively promote federalism in Quebec and in the other provinces. Our government will continue to make concrete proposals such as that on lotteries or that concerning jurisdiction over offshore resources, both opposed by the Liberal party. These proposals show that since the last election on May 22 the federal government in our country is not prisoner of the status quo, that it is determined to set out various approaches to the issue of federalism in Canada, and that it can, in co-operation with all provinces which it considers as partners and certainly not as enemies, demonstrate the possibility of a renewed federalism.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON QUEBEC WHITE PAPER

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary addressed to the Prime Minister. I might indicate that for those of us who are resident in the province of Quebec, we find it nearly mind-boggling that the Prime Minister of Canada indicates that his answer to the threat of separation has something to do with lotteries.

I want to ask the Prime Minister, given the publication of the Quebec white paper, and given his position as Prime Minister of Canada, what sort of response can he now offer to all the people of Canada and specifically, of course, to the people of Quebec? Is he going to cause his government to issue an answering paper or document? What mechanism can he bring to bear to reach out to the hearts and souls of Quebeckers and encourage them to remain part of Canada? Is constitutional reform one of his answers? What answer does he give?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer I give is that this government will continue the process we began as soon as we became the Government of Canada, to make concrete changes in the constitutional status quo of the country and, indeed, to make changes which the former government refused to make and, by refusing, associated the reputation of the federal system with the status quo.

• (1125)

We believe that it was very important indeed, on the question of the lotteries, to demonstrate that there was a willingness to work with the provinces where co-operation is possible and not simply to use this as another occasion for confrontation. We thought it was very important, on the question of jurisdiction over resources under the sea, to indicate that this was a government with an open mind toward a full future in a new confederation for all the provinces in Canada. We have taken those steps, not by talking about constitutional reform, but by acting on constitutional reform—and that is the path we will continue to take.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is referring to government-to-government and administration-to-administration concepts. My question to him is based on the people-to-people concept. The Prime Minister is now asked to lead, in the face of possible dissolution of our country.

The Prime Minister talks about constitutional packages. I will put a question in that regard. The Prime Minister will be aware that the previous government provided grants to citizens or plaintiffs who wanted to check the constitutionality of minority language rights, minority education rights and religious rights. I give him, as examples, the Forest case in Manitoba and—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his supplementary question.

Mr. Blaker: Does the Prime Minister and his government have a policy now for the granting of moneys to support plaintiffs who choose to pursue their constitutional rights under the British North America Act?

Mr. Clark: Of course we do, Mr. Speaker, and it is the policy that we have already demonstrated in regard to the Manitoba case cited by the hon. member. I should make one thing clear. I think, and it may well be, that there is a difference of opinion in the Liberal party. My view is that in the minds of the people of Quebec, as they come to a decision on the referendum campaign, the time for rhetoric is over. They do not want to have missionary leaders coming before them and making vague promises: they want to see what governments are doing.

What we are doing, as the national government, is going before the people of Canada and before the people of Quebec, whose judgment and capacity to come to decisions on the basis of what the government is doing, rather than just in terms of what the government says, we trust. We are trying to demonstrate that in Ottawa, now, there is a national government prepared to open doors which the former government had closed. I trust the people of the province of Quebec to see the effect that that will have upon renewing the federal system in this country; and we intend to give leadership by action, not leadership by rhetoric.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—INTENTIONS OF PRIME MINISTER IN PRE-REFERENDUM PERIOD

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In its white paper the PQ has stated very clearly its policy about the future of our country. My question is the following: What will be his personal contribution to the important debate on the referendum in the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to continue to have a federal government determined to respect the aspirations of Quebeckers and to find means that will make it easy for us to seek true agreements, and not only a government always seeking means or reasons for confrontation. It is this spirit that has prompted the federal government to take these initiatives on the questions I have mentioned today. In fact, it is this spirit that prompted my decision not to threaten with a federal referendum, because it was indeed considered as a threat by the people of the province of Quebec. I am convinced that this threat did influence some Quebeckers into considering the PQ option because it was felt that the federalist option as presented by the former government was full of threats.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL PARTICIPATE IN DEBATE OUTSIDE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. As Prime Minister, and particularly as an English-speaking Canadian from outside Quebec, is it his intention to take part in that debate not only in the House of Commons in Ottawa, but also in Jonquière, in Montreal and in every region of the province of Quebec, in order to explain to Quebeckers that there are people in the other provinces who want a renewed federation and who can give Quebeckers an opportunity to be both Quebeckers and Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, just like the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I am an English-speaking Canadian who lives outside Quebec. Just like the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I try to be present in Quebec as frequently as possible, and it is my intention to continue to act the same way. I hope and I am sure that the Leader of the New Democratic Party will also be there. But I will be there as the Prime Minister of Canada, to show Quebeckers that with a Prime Minister who does not come from their province, their aspirations will be respected. I will be there as the Prime Minister of Canada to explain the way in which the federal system will be efficient for Quebeckers. I will be there as the Prime Minister of a great country, and not as a mere participant in a debate on a very important matter for that province.

● (1130)

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week, Premier Lougheed made it clear to the people of Canada that he wanted economic sovereignty and political association with the rest of Canada, whereas Mr. Lévesque wants the opposite: he has indicated that he wants economic association and political sovereignty. Both represent clear and distinct threats to the future of this country; I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Are we to understand from the Prime Minister that he intends, therefore, to participate fully in a referendum debate throughout the province of Quebec, and not only participate but make concrete suggestions for change to the people of the province of Quebec, in order to make it clear to them that we can create in this country a society for our two principal linguistic groups that is both decent and exciting?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, regarding the situation in Alberta, I would suggest, with all respect, that the Leader of the New Democratic Party might find it instructive to consult with Premier Allan Blakeney regarding his interpretation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It does not appear to accord exactly with the interpretation of the Leader of the New Democratic Party in this House.

Concerning the approach that this government intends to take in the province of Quebec, we are going to continue a policy which we have begun—I think with some modest success—to demonstrate to the people of Quebec that there is a government of Canada now that holds open questions which the former government has held closed.

An hon. Member: Which ones?

Mr. Clark: A former minister asks me, "Which ones? One had to do with the co-operation on lotteries, which was an important, symbolic difference.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Change the name.

Mr. Clark: The second has to do with the question of jurisdiction over resources under the sea. The third has to do with the question of the referendum and whether it will be helpful to federalists to have the menace of a national referendum waved around by the federal government. An area in which we happen to be in accord with the former government has to do with the role of Crown corporations: we think they should not be playing an active role on one side or the other, as agencies or emanations of the Government of Canada, in that debate.

I make the point clear that we have been acting through the past five or six months to take concrete action to demonstrate the determination of this government, not simply to sell federalism but to reform federalism. What the people of Quebec are looking for is not an exercise in salesmanship; they are looking for an exercise in reform. What they have with this national government is a national government committed to constitutional reform.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STIMULATE ECONOMY

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On Wednesday, The Globe and Mail quoted the Minister of Finance as confirming that his party, which very recently claimed that a stimulative deficit, an increased deficit, was the only way to get the economy moving, now is claiming that a reduced deficit is the only answer. Will the minister explain to the House this transformation, not only in his policies but in his economic theory as well?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my economic theories have never changed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You never had any.

Mr. Crosbie: When I observe the huge deficit which this country has borne as the results of the previous government's actions for the last two or three years, and the heavy drag that is on the country, the way that it is forcing up interest rates and the way it is competing with the private sector, then it becomes obvious to me that a stimulative deficit for this country next year will be one that is lower and lowers financial requirements for the government. We have to reverse the suicidal course we were on when the government changed last May.

Mr. Andras: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. There has been no substantial gap between the economic forecasts or the deficit as known to the hon. minister before May 22 and now. Would the minister confirm to this House that it is not changed economic circumstances, but it is the change of theories that is responsible for this amazing reversal in his policies?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is a change in observing what the financial condition of the government is and what the results would have been, as shown in the statement that was issued by my learned colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, and myself last July. This showed the projections of where we would be if the government's same policies and programs continued into the next three or four years. We would reach, I think, a national debt of $104 billion in four years' time if that kind of policy was continued.

When we looked and saw the lack of stimulus that these huge deficits had been having, and have had this year, and when we looked at the forecasts in the budget of November 16 and saw how inaccurate they were, with a 6½ per cent inflation forecast which now turns out to be 9.6 per cent, with no mention of a deficit, and encroaching on the balance of payments in the international account in excess of $7 billion which I had to reveal for the first time on July 26—I could go on and on with the monstrous revelations we have had since we came into power.

Mr. Andras: A final supplementary question. The hon. minister is indulging in great—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Stormont-Dundas.

GOVERNMENT'S FINANCIAL REQUIREMENTS FOR 1978-80

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. He has again maintained that the reason his government has cancelled or postponed the campaign promises they made is as a result of the financial situation they found when they took office.

Will the minister now confirm to the House his forecast of July 26 to which he just referred, to the effect that not only are the government's financial requirements for 1978-79 $1.16 billion lower, but also the anticipated cash requirements for 1979-80 are $750 million lower than the forecast of his predecessor on November 16, 1978? Will the minister also confirm that the current figures are actually lower than our November 16 forecast, lower than the figures given by the President of the Treasury Board on July 20, and lower than the wildly inflated predictions on which his party, nevertheless, based their whole campaign platform?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that last July 26 it appeared that the borrowing requirements of the government would be some $750 million less than had been forecast in the budget of November 16. That was last July 26. The latest, most up to date figures will be produced in our coming budget, which we hope will be this month. I hope that improvement continues. But, as hon. gentlemen know, we have had heavy additional expenditures, and the oil import compensation program caused by international energy price increases—

• (1140)

An hon. Member: Worse.

Mr. Crosbie: Not worse. It is a lot better than it would have been, Mr. Speaker, because of the strict economies practised by the President of the Treasury Board who has now put fear into the hearts of all those who would come forward with overruns—whereas before, nobody cared.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, the minister just referred to one of the reasons why he could not implement some of these promises as being the result of the increase in international oil prices. He referred previously to the increased cost to the government of the oil import compensation payments and the consequent drag on the government's finances.

Will the minister reaffirm to this House the validity of the figures he released on July 26 which demonstrated that the increased compensation payments will be almost completely offset by increased government revenues from Canada's energy exports?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the campaign promises are concerned, one of our major promises is before the House in the form of the mortgage tax credit and interest credit bill. I am hoping that hon. gentlemen opposite will join with us in assuring the promise is kept before Christmas, so that the people of Canada will have benefit of the tax reduction that the home owners of Canada were promised.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Other promises will be kept as the years go on. The longer we are in power, the more we will be able to keep them, because the financial situation will be improved and because our economic situation will be improved the longer we are in power.

ELECTION PROMISES OF CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board, in their July press conference, indicated that the terrible fiscal outlook of the country at that time had forced them to curtail their election promises.

Is the minister saying directly to the people of Canada, right now, that he uncovered something in the fiscal forecast that it did not know about before the election, and was it that change in the fiscal forecast that caused him to deny the people of Canada all the election promises he had made?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have to observe that this is a juvenile line of questioning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are talking juvenile.

Mr. Crosbie: It was the people of Canada who stopped hon. gentlemen opposite from carrying out their campaign promises—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —and they are going to continue doing it. Our campaign promises are going to be carried out as economic and financial conditions permit: I can assure hon. gentlemen of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, on July 20 the two ministers to whom I just referred indicated shocked surprise that the 1982-83 financial requirements of the government were going to be $10.41 billion. Yet on February 15 of this year the President of the Treasury Board told this House, when he was in opposition, that the financial requirements would rise to $13 billion by 1981. I ask the minister, why was he paralysed into inaction by that surprise, when the forecast of what is actually happening is less than the forecast they made in February?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most convoluted questions I have heard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Anyone who can understand that question has to be a genius—and they are obviously on the other side!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: In July, the President of the Treasury Board and I submitted certain figures to the Canadian public that showed the financial requirements would be stupendous if the present course of the government did not change, and that is what we are engaged in changing. We are going to reduce the financial requirements to give the private sector more room so we can reduce interest rates and improve the prospects for Canada and Canadians in the coming years.

ECONOMIC FORECASTS—ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISES

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue this juvenile line of questioning!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: In terms of convolution, we are learning from the master. He has been complaining loudly and clearly about not being able to implement his election promises because forecasts have not been as they were supposed to have been. We are puzzled by that, and I would like the minister to confirm, for example, that in two very important areas we forecast unemployment, last November, for 1979 being in excess of 9 per cent. In fact, I believe it is something just over 7 per cent. In addition we forecast, very conservatively, job-creation at 250,000. I understand it is 325,000 for the current year. Would you confirm that to the House, Mr. Minister?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will confirm to the House that this party has kept, and is keeping, its election promises. In particular, the main election promise was to put this country on a proper sound economic course, to reduce the federal deficit, to get spending under control and to run this country properly. Just another example that I gave a couple of minutes ago is the mortgage interest tax credit plan.

As to forecasts, the budget of November 16, 1978, contained no forecast of what the unemployment rate would be. Apparently that was too tricky for the minister to include in his budget and he did not forecast what the unemployment rate would be. Luckily for us and luckily for Canada, the unemployment rate is better than any of the forecasters had predicted. I am glad of that; I am delighted with it. I do not know whether it can be ascribed to anything hon. gentlemen did. If it can be ascribed to anything they did, I congratulate them for it.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not put forward a scintilla of evidence that there was anything he did not know about at the time he came to office. In fact, all the forecasts, for the most part, are more favourable than those originally forecast.

I would ask the minister this question: With respect to economic growth in this country, under the Liberal budget, independent observers—as I recall—estimated between 2.2 per cent and 3.4 per cent for the current year. I understand—and I wish the minister would confirm this to the House—that last Wednesday he stated the economic growth of the GNP this year for Canada would be in the order of 3.5 per cent; and all of this under a Liberal budget!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is a wonder that this country is surviving Liberal budgets. What the former minister of finance forecast, the member for St. Moritz—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: What the member for Saint-Maurice forecast, whose bills I am bullying through the House now and trying to get the House to adopt—

An hon. Member: They are your bills.

Mr. Crosbie: —was an economic growth rate of 4 per cent to 4½ per cent. As it turns out, it is certainly going to be under 3 per cent. But in the budget, hopefully, later this month we will give our latest forecast for this year and for next year.

Mr. Trudeau: Hopefully, under 3 per cent.

Mr. Crosbie: Hopefully. It is likely to be under 3 per cent, so unfortunately the minister's economic growth rate forecast has not turned out to be accurate.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AIR RADIO OPERATORS' DISPUTE—LATEST OFFER OF GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATORS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, would the minister explain to this House the present position of his department on bargaining with the radio operators, and explain any conditions which his negotiators have imposed as a prerequisite to bargaining? Specifically, would the minister explain and justify to this House the last offer submitted by his negotiators to the radio operations union?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, our position in the Treasury Board, with respect to this unfortunate labour dispute, is that we are willing to meet with the radio operators' negotiators at any time. We feel it should be a condition, though, that prior to such meeting they stop breaking the law and that they ask and have their designated employees return to their proper jobs.

As far as our offer is concerned, I would assure the hon. member that there is surprisingly little difference, I understand, between the union's last demand and our offer. In short, if the union is willing to reveal its bargaining position, we are willing to reveal ours.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I ask the President of the Treasury Board this question: Would it be fair to say that there are no air or coastguard radio services in Canada because the offer put forward by the negotiators could in no way be construed as a fair or serious offer, and that the offer was, in fact, a retreat from the previous government position?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if I may answer that point, the simple answer is no. I will expand on that. The previous government's mandate was to offer a 7 per cent increase in the first year and to offer a further 7 per cent increase in the second year. A conciliation report recommended that in the first year the increase be 7.79 per cent, and in the second year the increase be 7.13 per cent. That conciliation report was agreed to by the union representative on the board looking into the matter. We have indicated to the union that those terms are acceptable to us, and have suggested a further settlement for a third year if the union wishes to negotiate for the third year.

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH CHURCHILL—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL EXTEND SHIPPING SEASON

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport, who is also responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It has to do with the port of Churchill. I noticed recently that the shipping season was extended in the St. Lawrence Seaway from December 15 to December 18. I was wondering whether the minister has given any thought to increasing the length of the shipping season at Churchill, with an eye to increasing the utilization of the port and improving the over-all movement of grain out of the prairies.

● (1150)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): As the hon. member knows, this government is committed to expanding utilization of the port of Churchill. This is something I am personally endeavouring to undertake. With this in mind, we have been exploring a number of initiatives aimed at increasing the utilization of the port and extending the length of the shipping season.

I am pleased to announce to the House that arrangements were completed, on October 30, I believe, to move a cargo of some 24,000 tons of barley from Churchill to Poland. The mv Arctic will be contracted to do this job and will be arriving at Churchill about November 10. This is certainly a major breakthrough for the future development and utilization of the port.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEW BRUNSWICK—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL CONDUCT INVESTIGATION INTO SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN BENEFITS

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the very tense social climate surrounding demonstrations by hundreds of seasonal workers who have been besieging Canada Manpower centres in northwestern New Brunswick for the past ten days, could the minister tell the House when he intends to study the legitimate demands of these workers so that they be not unjustly and arbitrarily deprived of a minimum amount of unemployment insurance benefits to which they thought they were entitled through hard work last spring or last summer for the Irving or McCain companies and for tomato and tobacco producers in southern Ontario?

[English]

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): We are directing attention to the situation in Edmundston—the application of new amendments to the Unemploymemt Insurance Act to people in that region, and the allegations of unfairness which have arisen. It is a very difficult situation, and I would point out to the hon. member that this matter relates to amendments put forward very vigorously by his party, which was the government in the last Parliament. They were put forward very vigorously and were passed into law.

We are now seeing, of course, the result of those amendments and in their administration we do see some examples of unfairness. To the extent that they relate to regional considerations and difficulties involving boundaries, I will be looking at the situation to see if I can provide some relief.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, before putting my supplementary, I would like to remind the minister that the regulations were proclaimed by the government opposite. The minister does not seem to be at all aware of the urgency of the situation from the social point of view, a situation which I brought to his personal attention and that of his officials. Is he at last seriously going to turn his attention to these incidents and send an official or a team of civil servants to that area to report back to him as soon as possible before violence breaks out?

[English]

Mr. Atkey: In answer to that, Mr. Speaker, I should say that the long-term solution to this particular problem is to find long-term employment for the people who are seeking unemployment insurance. That is what will happen under this government.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENTS REACHED WITH PROVINCES WILL APPROVE SOVEREIGNTY-ASSOCIATION

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): My question is to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. When being interviewed this week, he advocated a so-called new approach to federalism and the constitution and talked about bilateral agreements with terms varying from one province to the other. We know very well that similar agreements were made by the previous government not so long ago with the provinces, particularly respecting immigration. Can the minister say today what is different in the type of bilateral agreements he has in mind, and whether such agreements can go far as sanctioning sovereignty-association, for example?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I think there are two types of bilateral arrangements. First, as in the case of offshore resources, a bilateral arrangement is a starting point for constitutional negotiations. Second, there are other things like the duplication of services, the overlapping of jurisdictions. In this area, I am not sure whether arrangements have been made with one, two or three provinces where this is more important to an area, for example. About the duplication of services, we have resumed the bilateral negotiations which began under the former government. There is now more motivation for this group in my office.

[Mr. Atkey.]

SUPREME COURT DECISION—EFFECT ON CANADIANS' CIVIL LIBERTY TO PARTICIPATE IN POLITICAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister or the minister in charge of federal-provincial relations. In view of the Supreme Court decision in McKay v. The Borough of Etobicoke, argued by a former colleague, Andrew Brewin, in which it was decided that all Canadians had a civil liberty of political action in the federal field, and thus that no municipal or provincial legislative authority could derogate from the entrenched and inalienable right of Canadian citizens to participate in political affairs touching our federal government; and in view of the Quebec white paper and prior legislation forcing people to work in groups either for or against, is it the opinion of the federal government that such action is ultra vires of the Quebec legislature and that all federal people, or people interested in keeping this country together, could in fact work independently, because this touches the very essence of the federal nature of Canada being the retention of the state of Canada?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I apologize to my hon. friend; I am not familiar with the details of that judgment, but I will undertake to make myself familiar with it at the earliest date and report to him on Monday.

What the hon. member is asking me to conclude is the opinion of the Department of Justice with respect to what might flow from that decision. I regret I cannot comment on that aspect, but I will respond to the hon. member on Monday at the latest.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF GASOLINE—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance stated in a speech to the Empire Club in Toronto that Canadians can handle a 30-cent increase in the price of gasoline.

Bearing in mind that no agreement has yet been reached with the provinces, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether this is now government policy and, if so, whether the Prime Minister realizes the serious problem it presents to people in Atlantic Canada who, along with people in the north, currently pay the highest price in Canada for gasoline?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): The minister in his remarks yesterday made it clear that it is not government policy. In answer to the second part of the question, I may say we are certainly aware that any increase in fuel prices will have a particularly serious impact on some regions of the country and on people with lower incomes. We shall certainly want to take account of that unfortunate consequence either in the energy package or in the budget.

Mr. Faour: If it is not government policy, why is the minister making these statements? The minister also said yesterday—I am paraphrasing him—that he had not heard anyone complain about a proposed price increase. Perhaps he is deaf.

I should like to ask him whether he has talked to people in the Atlantic region, particularly to people in his own riding. If he has, or if he has not, I am sure he has heard these things. Why is he misleading the people of Canada by making statements like this?

• (1200)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. gentleman was not at the Empire Club yesterday to listen to my address.

An hon. Member: You should have been in the House.

Mr. Fleming: Parliament, or the Empire Club, which comes first?

Mr. Crosbie: It was a 40-minute address enthusiastically applauded by the 1,200 who were there.

Mr. Dawson: They must have been laughing.

Mr. Crosbie: It dealt with the serious economic problems this government is going to overcome. One of the matters dealt with was the effect of the energy situation and the possible effect of that on balance of payments deficits in the 1980s, which is a reason this problem has to be overcome. The people of Atlantic Canada and people in my district know this problem has to be overcome, and they are prepared to do their share. They trust this government which is trying to do something long term and fundamental for the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: What an empty answer.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM DEBATE—EFFECT OF PARTICIPATION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister told this House during the throne speech debate that being a member of Parliament from Alberta would not prevent his being the Prime Minister of all Canadians. He is reported to have said, after his meeting with Mr. Ryan last week, that, not being a citizen of Quebec—I wonder where he got that expression—he would not participate actively in the referendum debate. He is reported this morning as having said at a press conference that not only would he not participate but, and I quote:

> There is a very real danger that the participation of the federal government could be seen as an interference that would be counter-productive to the federal cause.

We have all these assurances that neither the Prime Minister nor the government as such will participate in the debate, I believe a position which was confirmed by the Prime Minister's answers this morning regarding himself personally; but in so far as the government is concerned, he did say that he would stand firmly against the status quo.

Can the Prime Minister say as clearly that he is against sovereignty-association and that his ministers will be for a "No" to the sovereignty-associationists' "Yes"?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I can repeat that assurance. I perhaps should suggest to the right hon. member, whose influence in the province of Quebec I respect, that I hope that fairly soon he will begin to turn his attention to dealing directly with the threat that is posed in the sovereignty-association document which has now been published by the government of Quebec, and will stop trying to create doubts in the minds of Quebeckers or other Canadians as to the intentions of this government.

The right hon. member and I may differ as to the strategy involved. He followed a course which had a very active interventionist role in defending the type of federalism which he had developed over time. My view is that the very vigour of that defence in many ways caused people who might have become supporters of federalism to be driven away from a status quo which they saw as rigid. So we have removed some of the policies which were followed by the right hon. gentleman when he was Prime Minister because we believe that they were counterproductive to serving the interests of federalism.

We are not going to have an information group in the FPRO which is seen as a propaganda agency. We are not going to threaten Quebeckers with a federal referendum in the spirit of menace. We are not going to have, as I believe the right hon. gentleman did not want to have, Crown corporations making contributions which could be construed as an undue interference in the political affairs of Quebec in a way which would have given the separatists an extra weapon.

We want to take initiatives against sovereignty-association, not simply by declaration but by concrete actions of the kind we have taken, and also by removing irritants which can serve the cause of separation if those irritants persist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand the message of the Prime Minister. It was given several times this morning. I think we would have preferred a clear answer to the question. Nobody in this House heard the Prime Minister say that his ministers would campaign for a "No" in this referendum—and that was my question.

The Prime Minister assures us that there are many things he will not do. He gave some examples. He has given two examples of things he would do regarding lotteries and the offshore, on which there had already been signed agreements between the federal government and the provinces. Could he tell the House whether he will present to the people of Quebec and Canada his formula for a new federalism? He wants to get out of the status quo. Will he hold a federal-provincial conference on the constitution very soon, so that the people of Canada can know what this new federalism of the Prime Minister is?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of convening a federal-provincial conference on constitutional matters quickly, and I should suggest to the right hon. gentleman that most of the people of Canada are much more capable of understanding our approach to federalism than he is. That is probably because he is so blinded—and I hope this is an affliction he can overcome—by what he has done that he will not see the limitations in what he has done and the possibility that the stance he and his government took as the Government of Canada became an instrument capable of exploitation by the Parti Québécois as a means of encouraging Quebeckers to move toward separation.

Mr. Trudeau: Count your members from Quebec.

Mr. Clark: I understand how difficult it is for the right hon. gentleman to admit that there was some error in what he did in the past. I am quite pleased to admit, as I have done on several occasions, that several of the actions of his government contributed substantially to making French Canadians and Quebeckers feel more at home in the nation, but as his government grew older it became perceived as a government which was more rigid, and one of the major things we have to do is make it clear that that rigidity no longer prevails. That is what we intend to do as a national government.

Mr. Breau: The Liberals got 62 per cent of the vote.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PENNER—FAILURE OF MINISTER TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which arises from a question I asked yesterday during question period of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I asked the minister why he had not released to me a number of documents which I had requested of his department last Friday. These were documents pertaining to an incident which occurred at a drill site in the Beaufort Sea on October 23.

Nowhere in his reply did the minister give any reason why he would not release the documents in question. I realize that his failure to do so, however inconsistent that may be with the spirit of the freedom of information bill which the government has introduced, does not in itself constitute a question of privilege. On the contrary, I suspect that the minister himself has not been able to obtain from his officials all the documents related to the incident, just as I suspect that the minister himself was not informed and did not approve of the order given by one of his officials to continue drilling in poor weather conditions.

What the minister did, however, was to implicate himself in an effort by senior officials here in Ottawa to conceal relevant data and issue instead an interpretative statement in place of the documents which I requested. In doing so, I contend that the minister breached the privileges of members of this House, myself in particular, by promising one thing and delivering quite another.

Mr. Speaker, you may recall that I asked the minister why he had not released documents which would show whether or not the regional conservational engineer in Yellowknife had personally visited the drill site and had confirmed the decision of the well site inspector to shut down operations due to weather conditions and would show whether or not Dome-Canmar officials had threatened to go over the heads of well site and regional inspectors, which the minister now admits was done by a telephone call to Ottawa.

In reply to my question asking why the minister had not released the documents in question, the minister said, and I quote:

—I spoke to a colleague of the hon. member—

He was referring to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand).

—and I am willing to make the information available.

There could be no doubt on the part of anyone on this side of the House; we all believed that what the minister was going to provide were the documents which were the whole subject of my question. The minister did not say to the House that he would not provide the documents because they contained advice to him and are therefore classified confidential. Nor could he have raised such an objection because the documents requested are not, or certainly should not be, confidential. They are documents which might have been requested by any Canadian citizen with the slightest familiarity with drilling, surveillance and reporting procedures. They are documents described in a report of 1978 drilling operations in the Beaufort Sea, and they are mentioned expressly for the purpose of assuring members of Parliament and the Canadian public that an incident of the kind in question would be documented and that documents pertaining to such an incident would be produced to remove any doubt as to the propriety of the actions of officials in this matter.

● (1210)

In reply to my question the minister did not say he would not provide the documents because they are confidential. Nor did he say he would not provide the documents I asked for but that he would provide further information. Instead, he offered yet another explanation of the incident that was under question, and he concluded his answer to my request for documents by saying:

In terms of information, I spoke to a colleague of the hon. member and I am willing to make the information available.

What information? The information for which I asked was documents; but the information which I got was a four-page statement by the minister, once more interpreting events.

I understand, as everyone now must understand, that the minister never intended to supply the documents which I had requested. When the minister said "in terms of information," he meant to qualify what otherwise would be an unequivocal promise to supply the documents which were the subject of my question.

So with that background, I wish now to move, seconded by the hon. member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development be summoned before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to explain his failure to provide specific information which had been requested after having indicated he would do so.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the alleged question of privilege which the hon. member has raised, I intend to describe to the House some of the aspects of this incident.

First of all, the hon. member persists in using a term regarding the incident which is simply not correct, and I mentioned in my answer to him yesterday that that term is not correct. Today again he used the word "drilling". The Dome-Canmar operation at the Nerlerk M-98 site was not in a drilling situation; they were not drilling into the hydrocarbon zone. What they were doing is production testing, which is quite different from the allegations that the hon. member insists on making. I suggest to the hon. member that he get his facts straight. They were not drilling. He knows it but he persists in using the term.

Further, it should be pointed out that I had made information available to the hon. member, to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), the former minister of Indian affairs and northern development, and the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

The hon. member is asking now for specific documents relating to information pertaining to the decision. I made the information available, as I said I would. I said I would make information available regarding the incident which has been the subject of debate or questioning in the House previously.

In the spring of 1979, the former government approved the Dome-Canmar drilling program for the 1979 season. That approval provided that all deep well drilling terminate by midnight, September 25, 1979, with provision, on authority of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or his designated official, to extend drilling and other operations in a well a further 20 days, that is until October 15; and that production testing in a cased well, where conditions at a drill site of weather, sea and ice state permit, be allowed until formation of grey-white ice at Nerlerk M-98.

Deep well drilling and other operations at the Nerlerk well, among others, was extended for a ten-day period upon the September 25 termination date by myself based on the current and forecast weather, ice and sea state which was favourable at that time. That extension was effective until last October 5.

The chief conservation officer met in Ottawa on October 3, 1979 with his geological, geophysical and engineering experts, and then with senior officials of interested departments, namely the Department of the Environment, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Transport, on October 4, to review Dome-Canmar's request to continue operation after October 5, 1979 at Nerlerk M-98, among other wells.

The consensus reached as a result of those consultations was that the "designated official" of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should assent to Dome-Canmar's request to——conduct in the case hole, testing, suspending or abandoning operations after October 5, 1979, and to continue, if required, any conditions made practicable, after October 15, 1979.

This consensus was reached in consideration of the following—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the House can readily see that, on the basis of a question of privilege, we are now getting into a rather extensive discussion of the substance of the matter. If a question of privilege exists in the proposal of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner), it must surely exist upon one premise only, and that is whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Epp), in his answer to the hon. member for Cochrane yesterday, said that he would produce some documents. The minister is now indicating what the history of the matter is, what the information is. This, I am sure, is interesting to the House but we have gone beyond anything close to a question of privilege.

The only question to which I have to direct my attention is the basis for the question of privilege of the hon. member for Cochrane, which is that the minister yesterday said he would produce documents and then did not. That is the area upon which I wish to hear the minister. The minister said yesterday:

I spoke to a colleague of the hon. member and I am willing to make the information available.

I have to know whether, by that statement, the minister said he was going to table documents or to make information available, whether he stands by that undertaking. If he has fulfilled it, then the question of privilege, it seems to me, would be terminated.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I spoke to the hon. member's colleague before the question period yesterday. I am referring to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace. The information which I had in hand was the information from which I was reading and the information which I made available to the hon. member for Cochrane, to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace and to the hon. member for Nunatsiaq. Further, what I undertake to do, if there are documents relative to what the hon. member for Cochrane is referring, is to check and see if the documents are in existence, and if so then I can make those available as well.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That being the case, I think the House will realize that for the moment the only basis upon which I could found a question of privilege—and the only basis upon which I have been asked to found any question of privilege—is that the minister made a specific undertaking to produce documents and did not do so. The minister says today that his undertaking was only to make information available. His language is that he will undertake to make information available. In fact, he says that not only did he make that undertaking yesterday but that he provided the information. Further, he says that if it includes documents and if they can be produced, he will endeavour to do so.

If there is a matter to be taken up further in respect of the minister's undertaking to produce documents, the matter can be raised again; but until such time as the matter is explored, it should be set aside on procedural grounds today.

MR. JOYAL—INQUIRY WHY REPORT TABLED IN HOUSE NOT AVAILABLE IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Serge Joyal (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege following the tabling in the House yesterday afternoon by yourself of an interim report by the Auditor General of Canada on the management of the administrative and financial services of the House. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that report was tabled only in English, contrary to section 3 of the Canadian Official Languages Act which states clearly, and I quote:

3. Subject to this Act, all instruments in writing directed to or intended for the notice of the public, purporting to be made or issued by or under the authority of the Parliament or Government of Canada or any judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative body or Crown corporation established by or pursuant to an Act of the Parliament of Canada, shall be promulgated in both official languages.

I am all the more surprised, Mr. Speaker, that you tabled that report only in English, because for at least five consecutive years the Commissioner of Official Languages has pointed out the difficulty or faults in certain services of Parliament, the Senate or institutions as a whole to which members have access. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that in the context of a renewed federalism, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) said earlier today in answer to questions in the House—

[English]

—he wants leadership by action and not by words.

[Translation]

He went on to say:

[English]

"I want to remove irritants".

[Translation]

Those are irritants, Mr. Speaker. When members of this House receive a document in only one of the two official languages, they have every reason to complain that after the Official Languages Act has been in effect for 11 years, there is still some way to go. It is not only a matter of making speeches, but of taking action, and I deplore that the President of the Privy Council who spoke following the tabling of that report did not refuse to have it tabled. He sits on the government side and it is his strict responsibility to make sure the spirit and the letter of the Official Languages Act are obeyed with respect to documents tabled in this House.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask you that in the future reports, documents and letters be tabled in the House in both languages and that an order be made for the parliamentary committees to follow exactly the same procedure.

Last week, in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, the Comptroller General of Canada, Mr. Rogers, who was appearing as witness, tabled a brief in English only. Why should it be that documents are always tabled in English and not the other way around? I would have risen also had that report been tabled in French only. I feel that when all parties in the House support the one policy and the same objectives, it is the duty of the Chair to see that they are respected.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must understand, I am sure, that yesterday the document was not tabled under Standing Order 41. It was merely a matter of tabling, on a voluntary basis, the correspondence exchanged between the Speaker of the House and the Auditor General, three or four pages in all. That correspondence was exchanged in English. When I write a letter, at times I write in English, at others in French. I am sure the case is the same for most hon. members, and I do not always ask for my correspondence to be translated. I am sure the Auditor General does the same. He sometimes writes in English, sometimes in French, but not always in both languages.

I received a message Tuesday or Wednesday morning, and decided to table it immediately in the House.

If the hon. member means to say that I always have the obligation to translate all the communications I get as Speaker of the House before tabling them, I want him to know that this is an obligation which I do not accept. As to documents and reports tabled in the House pursuant to our Standing Orders, there is an obligation to table them in both official languages. But this is not what I did yesterday. I merely advised the House of a communication I had received. Contrary to what the hon. member indicated, this was not a report.

Yesterday I did not table any document under Standing Order 41(2). I repeat again that the Auditor General is an officer of Parliament, and so is Mr. Yalden, the Commissioner of Official Languages. We are now carrying out a study on the whole procedure of the House and all the administrative practices, and I have invited the Commissioner of Official Languages to take part in this study to make sure that the behaviour at every level of our administration is beyond reproach as far as both our official languages are concerned; this, however, does not change anything to the communications I get. I am under no obligation to assume responsibility for the translation of the communications I get from the Auditor General. If the Auditor General wishes to write his communications in both French and English, that is his choice, but I am almost sure that all hon. members here write their communications either in French or in English, but almost never in both languages at the same time. The Chair recognizes the hon. President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I must say to hon. members that it is of utmost importance that Parliament comply with the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. Official documents of the Parliament of Canada are tabled in both official languages. I mention this merely for the hon. member's information, for this is the Standing Orders of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that yesterday following normal matters I did not designate Tuesday, November 6 as an allotted day in accordance with the schedule which we had agreed upon informally. I noticed in The Globe and Mail that November 6 was the "day of crunch", and I did not want to disappoint the official opposition with respect to the allotted day. Therefore, I want to designate Tuesday, November 6, 1979, as an allotted day. I expect we will be receiving a motion on that day, and I assume that the normal procedures with respect to consultation as to the motion, and as to whether or not there will be a vote, will be followed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CAOUETTE—REFUSAL TO RECOGNIZE HON. MEMBER FOR BEAUCE

Mr. Armand Caouette (Abitibi): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Abitibi on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, my point of order refers to what took place this morning when you refused to recognize the hon. member for Beauce on such a fundamental and important question as the tabling of the white paper by the Parti Québécois, by the government of Quebec.

Given those events, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have, on my behalf and on behalf of the people of the constituency of Abitibi I represent, to cast a judgment on your performance in your office, which is supposed to be an impartial office in the House of Commons. That is why—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not prepared to accept such an intervention by the hon. member for Abitibi or by any other member, and it is the last time I agree to a discussion concerning the rights or privileges of the members of his party, the Social Credit Party of Canada which I have recognized as such. I still recognize the existence of the Social Credit Party of Canada and I accept that the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) be its leader. That party has five members and I have recognized it as a political party.

Yesterday I gave the floor to the hon. member for Beauce after the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). Several times before when I was in the Chair I tried to give the floor, at a later time, to other members of the Social Credit Party of Canada during the oral questions period on the basis of their number of elected members in this House. I will continue to make a fair attribution, no more, no less.

Yesterday I recognized a member of his party, the hon. member for Beauce. Wednesday, another Social Credit member had the floor in the oral question period, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard). So two members have been recognized on two consecutive days, and I suggest that the five members of the Social Credit Party of Canada are not entitled to have the floor again for a third day in a row. However, I repeat that I maintain carefully the right of every hon. member to participate in the question period, on a fair basis, no more, no less.

PRIVILEGE

MR. JOYAL—INQUIRY WHY REPORT TABLED IN HOUSE NOT AVAILABLE IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the remarks of the President of Privy Council and I think he is badly misinformed. As an example I recall the document that was tabled in English only by the Minister of Finance in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, as well as the Department of Agriculture press release D-50 dated October 19 that was tabled in English only and not in French, as he told us in his own terms about four minutes ago.

● (1230)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a correction. In the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on Tuesday, I was asked by the finance critic of the opposition to present some facts and figures in connection with the interest rate increases. I explained to the committee that I had some notes from my department on that subject and that if they liked I would present them to the committee. I did not have them then and there in French also, but if they wanted to accept them then in English, we would supply a French translation later. It was on that basis that the committee said yes, they would accept them then.

I had another document later which we kept and which I tabled today in English and French. There has been no violation of either the spirit or the letter or anything to do with both official languages in the finance committee. I was pressed for something which was only a memorandum to me for my own use. Unfortunately, I am unilingual, but I was willing to make it available right then if hon. members of the committee did not object to the fact that I could not give them a French translation until later. I do not think it needs to be cited in this House as any breach of understanding.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, November 1, consideration in committee of Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan (Mr. Crosbie)—Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton) in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on Thursday, November 1, 1979, clause 66 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 66—

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, there were a number of questions I had asked of the parliamentary secretary and the Minister of Finance yesterday. Before I invite them to reply I would like to clear up one figure I gave yesterday concerning the five majors. My calculations for the third quarter of 1979 indicate that the effective rate of taxation for all chartered banks was 10.4 per cent, and my calculations show that the rate of taxation for the five major chartered banks for that period was approximately 13 per cent.

I should just like to sum up in order to remind the parliamentary secretary of what I was trying to ask him yesterday. First of all, could he explain the way in which these income debentures work and the implications to revenue of the change to close the loophole or revise the tax treatment in respect of income debentures? Could he also explain why it is that, once the loophole was closed last November, the effective rate of taxation went down to the extent it has from, as the parliamentary secretary and I agreed yesterday, about 50 per cent in 1974 to 13 per cent or thereabouts this quarter? I think we are entitled to an explanation as to how long the government thinks this situation will continue before the effective rate of taxation goes back up to 50 per cent.

I see the Minister of Finance present in the committee. I wonder if he could tell us whether he is considering any supplementary measures to bring that effective rate of tax up to 50 per cent if the present effective tax rate continues for a long period of time?

With those four questions I will leave it for the parliamentary secretary to answer. I think the facts at the moment speak very loudly of the need for an explanation of how this financing mechanism is working and how it resulted in such a low effective rate of taxation. Once the loophole was closed in November, 1978, how is it that the effective rate of taxation for banks still remains as low as it is? How long does the minister think this will continue and, if it is going to continue, is it the intention of the government to bring in supplementary measures to raise the level of taxation on banks up to the previous 46 per cent or 50 per cent level?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, before the parliamentary secretary gives an answer to the question, I would like to say a few words. I want to thank my parliamentary secretary for the great job he has performed while I have been away. Yesterday I was away, and when I arrived back at the Centre Block at 4.45, I switched on the television to the House of Commons debates. All of a sudden an apparition rushed into the chamber in the form of the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, who came into the chamber saying that shocking events had occurred, that I was not in the House, that the House of Commons finance committee was downstairs meeting on supplementary estimates and neither I nor my parliamentary secretary were present. He gave the impression that every convention was being violated from haebeas corpus right on up.

I would like to explain to the House that the finance committee had been informed that I could not appear on Thursday afternoon as I had a commitment, entered into several months ago, to speak to the Empire Club in Toronto, that I would be back later Thursday afternoon and that my parliamentary secretary would be tied up in the House in Committee of the Whole on this tax legislation. Since neither of us could appear, we assumed that some other minister would be called to deal with his supplementary estimates.

We were advised at 12 noon on Thursday that the committee wanted to go ahead with the supplementary estimates of the Department of Finance. We therefore arranged to have officials from my department go to committee to answer questions on supplementary estimates, and, in any event, all that can be asked on supplementary estimates are questions on those very estimates. It was at the request of the committee that they went ahead on supplementary estimates.

The position I am in relates to the legislation before this House. The Borrowing Authority Act has been here, and we are now on the Income Tax Act amendments. Next is the Customs Act amendments, then the Excise Tax Act amendments, all of which are from the last budget. There is also the municipal grants legislation, the Bretton-Woods amendments, the Bank Act and the legislation on tax equalization from the last Parliament to be dealt with. There is our own new legislation on the mortgage tax credit. I am hoping to have a budget ready before the end of November to bring before the House, following which, of course, we will have the resultant legislation.

The legislative program for the House for the next two or three weeks is almost all of a financial nature and dealing with my department. There is no physical way that I can be in the House, the committee, attend cabinet meetings or cabinet committee meetings and prepare for the upcoming budget; obviously, I cannot be everywhere at once, and, as I understand it, that is the purpose of the parliamentary secretaries.

Mr. Rae: You should be cloned.

Mr. Crosbie: I happen to have a first-class parliamentary assistant, and his job is to assist the minister in the House, which I am certainly intending to ask of him. I would ask hon. members to play the game, as we did in the past. We never insisted that the Minister of Finance had to be before the House all the time. My predecessor would introduce a bill and that would be the last time we would see him, usually until the matter was concluded, because his parliamentary assistant would carry on. I ask hon. members to understand that for the next three or four weeks there is simply no way that I can be here all the time, and my parliamentary assistant will be representing me.

For example, this afternoon I have a meeting to attend on my upcoming budget, otherwise there will be no budget. I cannot make it here this afternoon, so my parliamentary secretary will be here. That is my response to the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, who I thought was not playing the game when he carried on as he did here yesterday. I would certainly challenge the hon. member's inference that I am a lazy no-good who does not want to pay any attention to this House. I do not accept that, nor do I think that it is the way to play the game.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I have found the replies of the parliamentary secretary to have been most helpful and most sensible, as contrasted with the replies we receive from the minister himself during question period.

Mr. Crosbie: There is advantage for us all.

Mr. Johnston: I am delighted that we will be having further participation from the parliamentary secretary during the course of this debate on these various financial bills.

I would like to raise a question which really follows on a question raised by the hon. member for Dollard yesterday with regard to the so-called loophole. I think it is important, not in defence of the loophole but simply important, that the Canadian people understand exactly what the consequences of this legislation will be in terms of the lending practices of banks and the impact this will have upon certain borrowers. The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood has made reference to the rate that banks pay on numerous occasions. The banks have taken advantage of this provision because it permits them to receive either interest on income debentures or dividends on preferred shares, and both are treated as dividends for tax purposes which are tax exempt or are deductible in the banks' hands. Therefore, the borrower is permitted in effect to obtain funds at a rate from banks much less than would be the case were the banks to receive taxable interest in the funds, which are in substance advanced to those various borrowers.

One can borrow with this kind of financing, and one can perhaps criticize this kind of financing, but I think it important for the people that they understand that with the elimination of this financing these same borrowers will be placed in a position of having to pay the normal bank rate instead of a rate of approximately 50 per cent, which they are now paying and which they are able to do out of their cash flows because they do not require the deductions for tax purposes. This presumably protects their cash flows from taxes through depreciation or some other division.

I raise the point because I would like some indication from the parliamentary secretary or the minister that that indeed is the case. I make this point largely from memory, but it seems to me that that is the thrust of the loophole and that in substance it is not really what it is often portrayed to be, and that is that there is some kind of major rip-off here, that the banks are effectively receiving a much lower return, but that they are prepared to accept it because they are receiving it in subtance on a tax free basis. I think that this question should be explained fully by the government in the course of the passage of this bill.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. Rae: I would like to respond to what the minister had to say earlier. Hon. members may remember that the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount should be cloned by the financial critic. Perhaps he should be cloned. I can certainly understand the minister's position, and as for the inference he drew from the remarks of the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, that he is a lazy and no-good minister, I want to make it clear that nobody in this party thinks that the Minister of Finance is lazy.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you.

● (1250)

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I cannot find it in my heart to be terribly sympathetic to the dilemma the Minister of Finance presented to us. His government has been in charge since June. They have been running the country on warrants. Certainly the minister has a tight schedule right now, although I question his priorities when he puts a speech to the Empire Club ahead of his responsibilities in the House of Commons. May I point out to him that if the Prime Minister had elected to call this House earlier he, the Minister of Finance, would have had a more reasonable schedule in which to plan his work.

The Minister of Finance also seems to be complaining because we are re-examining these budget bills. I would point out to him that these are now his bills. Since the bills were not passed by the last Parliament they are now coming back under his auspices. Surely it is our duty to re-examine them from the point of view of how they will be administered and with what intent the new regulations will be written.

I trust that the Minister of Finance was not suggesting that we should simply give blanket approval to all these bills without examining them, not only for actual new clauses but also in terms of the intent of how they will be administered. For the new government to ask us to take everything on trust is something they would have been furious about if we had suggested it in the last Parliament.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, may I congratulate the minister and the Prime Minister on having discovered that parliamentary secretaries can be useful. Earlier, the Prime Minister announced that he would not appoint any parliamentary secretaries as he had not been able to see a use for them. I am glad that conversion has occurred.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to give a response to a question raised last evening by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood when he inquired about the effects of term preferred and income debentures on the banks' effective rate of taxation.

As the hon. member indicated, for the third quarter of 1979 the effective tax rate of the 11 chartered banks computed by expressing the provision for taxes as a percentage of their balance of revenue stood at 10.7 per cent. For the first nine months of 1979, the effective tax rate was 14.6 per cent, which was down from the previous year. Dividend income to the banks on these forms of after tax financing is, of course, not taxable. However, the financial institutions on these financings turn over a significant portion of the tax savings to the issuing corporation in the form of lower interest costs. Banks thus receive a pre-tax income on these issues that is well below that of other financings. Typically, for example, if a bank received 12 per cent on traditional debt, its return both before and after tax on term preferred share financing would be in the range of 6 to 7.5 per cent. In other words, they share with the borrower in the tax advantage.

There are two major reasons for the decline in the effective tax rate of banks. The first, as I indicated yesterday, is that the full impact of income debenture and term preferred share financing entered into last year would not appear until this year. Secondly, it is apparent that the spread between borrowing and lending rates on conventional financing has fallen, resulting in less revenue from this part of the banks' operations. As a result, the mix of banks' income has shifted so that a smaller proportion is coming from fully taxable operations. The reduction in the spread can result in a decline of pre-tax balance of income and thus a loss for tax purposes which may be carried forward or backward to reduce taxes in other years.

It would be misleading to conclude from the decline in the banks' effective tax rate that they have been the major beneficiaries of income debenture and term preferred financing. As I have just indicated, banks receive a lower return on this lending.

Over all, for the first nine months of the 1979 year the balance of revenue after tax as a percentage of shareholders' equity has also declined, from 12.4 per cent in the same period a year ago to 11.9 per cent this year.

There was also a question addressed as to when we might expect this carry-over effect to alter. I can say that most of these agreements have a three to five-year term, so there is an automatic expiry which will begin to take effect with some almost immediately, but we will feel the effects for another three years or so at least.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that explanation which I think makes the situation clear for those of us who are attempting to understand the nature of this device. I do not think the reason that this has been closed was made particularly clear by this government. Some reasons were expressed by the previous minister of finance in his budget speech of November, 1978 to the effect that whereas this was initially put in the Income Tax Act in the 1930s as a method of providing easier means of financing for certain small companies, it was now becoming an increasingly common device used by all corporations in their corporate financing.

Mr. Crosbie: Not all. A few did not have taxable income.

Mr. Rae: Well, by many. One of the things that would be of interest to the Canadian people would be to know what kinds of corporations are in a position to take advantage, or have been in a position to take advantage, of this break. If it is not the banks that are taking advantage of that significant tax break, it will be the corporations. If there had not been some kind of abuse building up in the system over the past three or four years, I suggest to the parliamentary secretary and the minister that they would not have felt obliged to close this particular loophole.

I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary for something of the history of the use of this device, as I did last night, in order that we might understand how it is that what was begun as a technique for allowing smaller corporations to finance themselves has been used by other corporations.

Mr. Crosbie: What happened, of course, is that this was a provision in the act to assist corporations that were in financial difficulty during the 1930s. That is why these provisions were originally put in. What happened, however, was that borrowers started to use them who did not have taxable income, not because they were in financial difficulties, although that could happen, but because of existing tax incentives such as fast write-off, manufacturing assets, general treatment for exploration and development expense, or where a borrower's income was tax exempt, or it might be a public holding corporation receiving dividends from other Canadian companies.

What happened in the last three or four years when this started to get really popular was that most of the companies borrowing under these arrangements were large corporations and they used this provision to refinance existing bebt. It was used for purposes entirely unconnected with its original intention.

I do not know why no steps were taken sooner than last November, but in October, 1976, the holdings of income debentures and term preferred shares by chartered banks totalled $765 million. In October, 1977, they totalled $3,037 million, and in October, 1978, $7,200 million. On November 16, 1978, they totalled $10,100 million, which shows hon. members how rapid the expansion was.

• (1300)

The increase in bank holdings of that kind of instrument grew $6.9 billion between October, 1977, and November, 1978. Why some action was not take sooner to put a stop to this loophole, I do not know.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again later this day.

Progress reported.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COMPREHENSIVE AUDIT OF GENERAL AND FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEMS—APPENDING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I might take a moment or two, I want to return to Routine Proceedings in the House in connection with a point raised a moment ago by the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal), who I think quite properly raised a difficulty about the translation of correspondence that I tabled yesterday.

I made the assumption, as I think members often do, that because we translate everthing automatically as part of Hansard so members may have it in both languages immediately, the tabling of correspondence, as I did yesterday, would receive the same treatment without any further action by the House. Of course, that is not correct. Documents only receive that treatment if the House makes an order that they be appended to Hansard on that particular day. I overlooked doing that yesterday.

I want to say to the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve that his point in that sense is well taken. I had made the assumption that what he was referring to was the original correspondence from the Auditor General being in one language only, which is not my responsibility. I also made the assumption, as I think a lot of members do, that once we table documents they will be translated automatically. Documents are not translated automatically unless the House makes an order for them to be appended to Hansard. I have returned to the chair in order to ask the House to do this.

Is it agreed and ordered that my letter to the Auditor General in April and his reply of a few days ago, which I tabled yesterday, be appended to Hansard and translated for the benefit of members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For correspondence above referred to, see appendix.]

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order. Pursuant to standing order 54, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan—Mr. Crosbie—Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton) in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee reported progress shortly before one o'clock, clause 66 of the bill was under consideration.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, the figures which were given us by the Minister of Finance were very useful and I appreciate the answers given by the parliamentary secretary. They clear up some of the confusion which has surrounded this issue. In my view, they point to two things. The first is the incompetence of the Liberal government with respect to the development of this expenditure. The figures given us indicate there was a quantum leap from $700 million to some $10 billion in preferred shares outstanding before the Liberal government realized what was happening and decided to put an end to the business.

This draws attention to the need for the government to maintain constant awareness of what is going on in the marketplace and of the various devices being used in the marketplace to avoid payment of tax. We are dealing here with a tax situation which has proved extremely costly to national revenue. It is important for the public to realize that the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars in terms of lost revenue is one of the principal reasons for the extremely high level of the deficit, a level which the government feels has prevented it from carrying out the election promises made to the people of Canada before May 22.

Another aspect, and here again the fault can be laid at the door of the government, is that the use of the income debentures was not effectively wiped out in November, 1978, but will continue, according to the parliamentary secretary, for between three and five years.

● (1410)

I think we are entitled to ask of the government that in the preparation of its next budget consideration be given to a special tax on banks and those corporations which have taken advantage of this particular device, and which have used this device to avoid the payment of taxes, particularly when we consider the statement made by the Minister of Finance before the lunch hour—a statement which was extremely interesting, useful and important—that a device which was intended to be used by companies in financial difficulty was now being used by companies which had no taxable income, not because they had no money but because they had taken advantage of other government incentives, past depreciation, exploration allowances and so on, and thus avoided being in a position to have to pay any tax.

We can talk about double taxation and how terrible it is, but we have an additional principle here, and that is that we have in a sense double avoidance. Unless the government is prepared to present in its budget some special mechanisms to catch up with the revenue which has been lost as a result of the use of this particular device, we will be asking the Canadian taxpayer—not the doctor or the lawyer who has his own particular loophole to take advantage of, but the average Canadian employee—to make up the difference between what the banks and borrowing companies should have been paying and what they will be paying for the next three to five years.

So I say to the parliamentary secretary that while I recognize—and I hope the Canadian people do—that it is only the negligence and the financial incompetence of the previous administration which brought us to this sorry state with respect to the use of income debentures and their abuse, it is up to the Government of Canada to recognize now that as a result of the decline in revenue which has resulted from the use of this device there has to be some special consideration given to a tax to be fairly distributed between lender and borrower—those who have taken advantage of this scheme—in order to bring their effective rate of taxation up to the level it should be.

There is an argument here. I think the parliamentary secretary is thinking about the answer, and he may be thinking that that is a form of retroactive taxation, but it is not if it is seen as being a special tax which will be imposed in the next budget in order to take care of a future vacuum created by past income debentures and term preferred shares. So we are not asking him to tax back money which has been lost already. We are asking him to think of the possibility of an additional tax to solve the problem over the next two or three years.

I think that his figure which coincides with my own with respect to the amount of money which has been lost, is very substantial. We have a figure in terms of the rate of taxation which is being paid by banks. We do not have a figure as to how the effective rate of taxation of borrowing companies has been lowered, but one could imagine that they, too, are taking advantage of this particular measure to lower their rate of effective taxation.

I think it important for the government not just to consider what has been done and the error of what has been done. The government should also consider the possibility of making sure that the loophole is plugged and that we are compensated for the three-year to five-year period that these term preferred shares have to run so that public revenues will not be depleted and the rate of taxation of other Canadians will not be accordingly higher.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood spoke of the incompetence of the previous government in not making this change sooner. It had warnings in terms of the figures concerned, and obviously it could have made the change sooner. I have to agree with the hon. member in his use of the word "incompetent", but I would add another word—"complicity". The previous government was an accomplice in this process.

In the months between October and November of last year the total amount of term preferred share financing of this kind went up by $2.9 billion. A little more than one half of that amount, $1.5 billion, was the special financing of Petro-Canada which was brought in just to get under the wire of what the government itself knew it was going to do. In November of last year the total amount outstanding in this kind of security was just over $10 billion. If one takes into account the Petro-Canada contribution and the Canada Development Corporation contribution, which is in the same category of a government-directed corporation, the total complicity of the federal government was about 20 per cent of the total.

The hon. member suggests that retroactive tax legislation should be considered. I know he suggested a way which he feels might escape the label, but in fact it would not. It would be retroactive legislation. Apart from the fact that retroactive tax legislation is wrong in principle and that no government should get into it—and certainly this government would not want to—I think there are some other factors which should be considered. One is the difficulty of picking out the bad from the good in what has been done. As the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount mentioned earlier today, some of the financing which was undertaken through this route was legitimate and did fall within the original intent of this kind of arrangement. In the latter days much of it did not, of course, but even for those with whom one might quarrel in the latter days when this was ballooning, those were companies which were not taxable at that time, otherwise they could not have taken advantage of this arrangement.

It is very difficult, therefore, to see how the hon. member's suggestion could be made effective, because I have no doubt that some of those companies will not be tax-paying companies within the next two or three years.

The other saving grace—and I think to put things into perspective we should take account of this—is the arrangement of induced fast pay-out. That is why the measure taken to kill it extends the time limit to ten years, for instance, for term preferreds. Ten years is not attractive under this arrangement, and so the arrangements entered into were basically short-term—three years, five years and some of them on demand. The on-demand ones are already eliminated. Three to five-year terms are not, and so the effect of this will be very limited in time, and with all of the concerns a government properly should have about retroactive legislation and taking the other factors into account, I think the proposal, which is the proposal made by the previous government to correct this glaring gap, is as good as one could make at this time.

• (1420)

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary can explain further what he meant by the word

"complicity". Could he elaborate on what he meant when he said that the former government was an accomplice to something?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I would think, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member should be aware of it; he was in the House at that time and he knew what was going on, no doubt, although perhaps not as much as the responsible people concerned. But it is a well known fact that PetroCan's largest purchase was financed, in large part, through the use of term preferred shares, an action which was taken immediately before the budget of November, 1976. It was a huge amount, $1.5 billion, perhaps the largest one negotiated with term preferred shares, although I am not sure about that fact. PetroCan was then a government emanation, as it still is. PetroCan could not have done this without the government knowing about it in advance, and I would be very surprised if the minister of finance of that day was unaware of it.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member comes close to making accusations—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: —that border on the legality of certain actions. PetroCan is indeed a corporation which was owned by the Government of Canada at that time and still is. We hope it will remain so. It is being administered by a board of directors set up by an act of this Parliament and it operates independently. The Minister of Finance does not sit on the board, so I wonder how the parliamentary secretary pretends the former minister of finance knew in what way PetroCan was being—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand why members on the other side are so ticklish and sensitive on this matter. I am just doing my duty and asking a very simple question of a new member who, by the way, is doing pretty well in piloting this bill through the House. He mentioned the word "complicity", and I am just asking him to clarify what he means. Petro-Canada has a board of directors which operates independently of the government, but the parliamentary secretary says that the former minister of finance probably knew how PetroCan was going to finance a certain acquisition of Pacific Petroleums at that time. How does he explain that the former minister of finance knew of this since he did not sit on the board?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): If I am wrong in suggesting that the former minister of finance knew or should have known about this arrangement, I will gladly withdraw it, but as I understand it, one of the major arguments for the existence of PetroCan on the part of those who believe it should be continued as a government corporation is that the government of the day can direct it, can use it as an instrument. I presume that members of the former government considered that to be one of the purposes of PetroCan. In any event, I would think that when the government of the day was about to close off, and, I am sure, not without a great deal of thought, an avenue which they considered an abuse of the then tax law, they should have made terribly sure that no arm of the federal government pursued that kind of abuse, not on a small scale but on a major scale, and not far ahead of the decision but very close to it.

Mr. Breau: When the first bill on the creation of Petro-Canada was brought before the House, it was designed in such a way as to have left it more independent from the government, and it was members on that side of the House, who were then on this side, particularly the hon. member for York-Peel who was then member for York-Simcoe, who after a filibuster of five or six weeks in committee insisted that there be a mechanism for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to direct the board of directors under certain circumstances. So it was not the Liberal government at first which wanted to have a close link with the board of directors of PetroCan but rather the hon. member's colleagues at that time.

PetroCan was a corporation operating as a private corporation under the laws of Canada and there was a provision in the act which permitted it to finance projects in a certain way. There was nothing wrong with that and it was not up to members of the board of directors or civil servants who are there to protect the interests of Parliament to make a judgment and say, "We think this is not an equitable tax system and therefore we should not finance ourselves in a certain way". These people are there to operate the corporation and be responsible for it on behalf of the taxpayers and all of us, and if the tax system is not equitable, it is up to Parliament to change it, not up to individuals on the board of directors of Petro-Canada.

So I resent the word "complicity" and the fact that the parliamentary secretary would imply there is something wrong in the way the government operated and in the way Petro-Canada achieved its means of financing the acquisition of Pacific Petroleums from Phillips Petroleum. There was absolutely nothing wrong with that.

The reason I am sensitive about this is that it is well known—

Mr. Rae: That you want to take up time.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member to my left from Broadview—is it Greenwood?

Mr. Knowles: Broadview-Greenwood. You will get to know that name before long.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member says that I just want to take up time. I resent that. I have not abused my speaking time since the start of this Parliament. I have never taken up all my time. I have always tried to make my speeches as short as possible. I have never questioned anybody in the NDP when they have made speeches. I have never said they are wasting time. Sometimes I sit here and I say to myself that I will let them speak longer, and they might start to make sense and perhaps understand something after a while. So I do not think the hon. member should say that I am abusing the time of the House.

But let me come back to the issue. The reason I am sensitive is that there was a very good civil servant of the government on the board at that time, namely, Mr. Shoyama, who was deputy minister in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. If there is any shadow of doubt left as to anybody having acted wrongly in any way, I am sensitive because it might mean that that individual was doing something that might have been wrong. I do not think the hon. member wishes to sugges that sort of thing. I am glad he withdrew from his position regarding the word "complicity" because I believe that a civil servant, whether it is Mr. Shoyama or anybody else, should never be put in the position of being criticized by us in Parliament for doing something on behalf of the government of which he is a servant. I am sure the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, the President of Privy Council, will support me, and more and more Tories will accept the fact when I say that the civil servants have made the civil service of Canada as good as it is today. This came about after years and years of Liberal government, which means we brought in good laws and good recruiting procedures, as a result of which we have a very good civil service.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I suggest that what the hon. member is saying is totally irrelevant to the matter under consideration. Certainly the parliamentary secretary made no statement whatever with regard to the honour and integrity of the civil service of Canada or any member of it. I should like to submit to the House that the present line of questioning that the hon. member is following is a waste of the time of the House and is not to the point.

Mr. Breau: I know the parliamentary secretary did not want to impute anything to anyone and I was in the process of thanking him and recognizing that he did not do so, because I am sure he would not have wanted to imply that the deputy ministers who were on the board of Petro-Canada at that time had done anything wrong. I did not bring up the acquisition of Pacific Pete by PetroCan, it was the member for York East. I accept the parliamentary secretary's withdrawal—he did it in a very gentlemanly way—and I am glad to see that he does not suspect, nor does anyone in the House, that there was any wrongdoing in the days or weeks leading up to the acquisition of Pacific Pete by Petro-Canada.

As I said before, whether it is a public servant or somebody from the private sector sitting on the board of Petro-Canada, it is not for him or her to make a judgment and say, "We should not use the tax system in this way, as a certain means of financing". They should not substitute themselves for Parliament and say, "This is a good way to finance an acquisition" or is not. They operate under the laws of Canada, under the same Income Tax Act as everybody else. I do not think it is fair to say that the government was in complicity with anybody with regard to this acquisition.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, I missed the comment by the parliamentary secretary which seems to have given rise to what I consider to be a very justified expression of concern on the part of my colleague, if in fact the word "complicity" was used. Since I was not in the House, I will reserve my judgment on that until I have had a chance to look at Hansard.

Mr. Breau: He has withdrawn it.

Mr. Andras: If he has withdrawn it, I will accept that. In debating with my colleague in connection with this clause, I know the hon. parliamentary secretary used the word "abuse" of the tax system. In connection with the use of income debentures, I think he used the word "abuse". Is this now the doctrine of his party? It is the game that goes on; Parliament passes tax laws and clever accountants, tax consultants and tax experts peruse them and look to see what avoidance—not evasion but avoidance—of tax legitimately and legally can be implemented to save the paying of moneys to the Receiver General of Canada. One may question whether that is proper or not in the ethical sense, but is it the doctrine of this party to classify the use of a section of the Income Tax Act which permits the financing of takeovers, etc., by income debentures? Is the parliamentary secretary defining that as the doctrine of his party, that that is abuse in the sense of being illegal?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, not at all. It is just and right that any taxpayer pay the taxes which the law requires him to pay. I do not think it is his business to find ways to pay more taxes than the law requires him to pay. The only abuse in this situation that I saw was not from people who used the law as it stood until the government properly decided that that was not the way the law was intended to work. I do not think any proper criticism can be made of such persons. I intended to suggest that I thought the government of the day had consciously or inadvertently—and who can tell from the record—abused the system. It is the government of the day which decided or was on the point of deciding that this system had to be changed, if it knew about it. I think in a transaction of this size that someone in authority must at least have known about it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I hope so.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): If it knew about it, that constituted something approaching an abuse, only because the government had decided or was deciding that it was wrong and was about to change it. By coincidence or otherwise the government appeared to get one of its instruments in under the deadline in a major way. I would not apply the word "abuse" to any other kind of action because it is legal. For the reasons I have said, I think any taxpayer should pay the taxes the law requires of him. He is not required by law, ethics or anything else to donate money to the public purse.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, that takes us down another slippery slope.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You reached the bottom of the slippery slope on May 22.

Mr. Andras: We are starting to climb back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: All patience is virtue, the hon. member will learn, as I am learning. I think the President of Privy Council would say the same thing if he were in my place.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance put a proposition to the House and directed an answer to the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon in which he said that the government of the day must have known; either that or it was inadvertent that this occurred. I think that is a very serious thing. The hon. member who was on his feet and was about to speak was a member of the government of that day. Perhaps he can tell us what the facts are. We have been trying to find out for a year and a half.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, I will forgive the hon. President of Privy Council, for whom I personally have great respect, as he well knows, for his continuing apparent desire to have the opposition share the responsibility for governing. It seems to come up in almost every action they take or comment they make.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Just up to May 22.

Mr. Andras: It seems to come up when they get into a little difficulty with their new responsibilities which they have enjoyed very much as of May 22.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Just answer the question.

Mr. Andras: Both he and I have been around this House too long to fall into the little games which he is suggesting. Mine is the more serious question for exploration. If the hon. parliamentary secretary is applying this particular comment of some considerable criticism to this particular transaction, then he seems to be implying in the course of his words that Crown corporations, those corporations owned and controlled by the government, whether it be the federal government, provincial governments or what, should be treated differently than private corporations regarding the tax law. Of course the next step would be with regard to any other Crown corporation.

The whole purpose of establishing Crown corporations was to let them operate at arm's length. In the hypothetical case that there was some consideration of a change to this particular section of the act in the minds of government members and the Minister of Finance, is he seriously saying that until it was approved by Parliament, which is quite properly the only authority in this situation, all Crown corporations supposedly established with detachment at arm's length should begin to operate under a hypothetical regime which might or might not be proposed in the final analysis to Parliament, which might or might not be passed by Parliament?

If the hon. member really explores that doctrine, I think we will find that we will have one holy mess every time there is a thought in the Department of Finance, or in any other department of the government, as to what actions or guidelines will be followed by the agencies and Crown corporations of his party's government. In other words, until such time as Parliament approves, how in goodness name will there be any clear signals, except those which are the laws of the country or the directives of the government officially endorsed by Parliament? How on earth will they go down that slippery slope and have anything but chaos in the administration of Crown corporations?

Mr. Pepin: Resign, apologize.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, this is a debate which could go on for a long time.

Mr. Prud'homme: You started it.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I have no doubt that it will, in quite another context than the one before us today. It seems to me fairly simple. No matter what is said about the independence of Crown corporations which vary in independence, this particular Crown corporation all along was argued for as an arm of government policy, as a window on the industry, as a means of controlling and influencing the industry, as a means of accomplishing things which it is claimed the private sector would not do. This particular Crown corporation is not a Crown corporation like some others. It is true, the minister is absolutely right, that there is no reason in normal circumstances for—

Mr. Breau: The "former" minister.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): The former minister, thank you. There is no reason for a Crown corporation which operates reasonably independently even to know about changes which will be made in an immediately forthcoming budget. It may well be in this case that no one concerned knew, even the deputy minister and other officials who sat on the board. I do suggest that from the standpoint of the government of that day, which recognized a glaring deficiency in the tax act, circumstances that were not anticipated but which existed at the time and which involved an increase equivalent to nearly 33 per cent in one month, it is unfortunate that it was not anticipated and corrected and that this major step was allowed. That is all one can say. Certainly the word "complicity" does not necessarily mean something illegal, but certainly I think this was unwise.

● (1440)

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I have just one further comment to make. When the parliamentary secretary was speaking earlier he said something to the effect that someone wanted to get under the deadline to make use of the income debenture provisions of the Income Tax Act before the change. I am sure the member did not want to leave the impression that someone knew that the Minister of Finance intended to make this change in his budget. That minister probably made the decision about what was to be in his budget a day or two before presenting it to the House. Surely the member does not want to give the impression that the minister or one of his officials would have tipped off Petro-Canada in order that it could get in under the deadline before November 16.

It is important that we clear this up. I hope the parliamentary secretary does not want to leave the impression that somebody leaked this decision of the Minister of Finance to Petro-Canada or anyone else, or that the minister himself advised anybody about the decision he had taken in rspect of his budget. Surely he does not want to leave the impression that the Minister of Finance or anyone on the cabinet committee that made decisions regarding the budget had spoken to anybody about those decisions, particularly the decision which resulted in the change to be found in the bill we are now studying.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think we have discussed this matter long enough and I suggest we should move on with the business of the committee.

Mr. Rae: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. With great respect I agree with you, but I do think it is up to the committee itself to decide whether the parliamentary secretary should respond to the point. That is the way debate should proceed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 66 carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Clause 66 agreed to.

Clauses 67 to 69 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 70—Application of Income Tax Act

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, every time the title of this bill has been read there has always been the inclusion of a reference to the fact that it also amends the Canada Pension Plan. I have had some of my colleagues question me whether that would give us the opportunity to debate the details of the Canada Pension Plan. Obviously that is not the case, for it is clear that all clause 70 does is to amend the Canada Pension Plan in respect of certain of its provisions for obtaining from employers moneys they have failed to remit to the Receiver General for Canada.

I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether my understanding of the clause is correct, and I ask that in two respects. First of all, is it clear that it applies only to employers, and that there is nothing in this clause, either before or after it is amended, that applies to employees?

As a second question I should like to ask what has made necessary this provision which gives the government the right to withhold from employers moneys it might be paying to them in order to collect remittances under the Canada Pension Plan that had not been paid? I have known of a few cases where that has occurred and employers have not sent in the money, with great difficulty resulting for an employee in collecting benefits from the pension plan. Is this a widespread practice, or what is the reason for this clause?

I have posed two questions: Is my understanding of the clause correct, and why is it required?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, the answer to the first question is yes, and I am now inquiring about the answer to the second question. I am informed there is no widespread practice that is being protected against here. What is involved is chiefly a matter of uniformity of language and administrative practice.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear that the practice is not widespread. Of course, if this is necessary at all to collect payments employers have not sent in it is a good clause to have included. The legislation, as I read it, provides that where an employer does not send in Canada Pension Plan contributions that should have been sent in, those moneys can be obtained by withholding money due the employer. But what happens in a case where the employer does not have any money coming from the federal government?

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I would like to add one or two comments about the points raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have come across two or three cases, at least one very serious one, where this has occurred. When this happens the employee is put to no end of trouble trying to prove that the money was deducted from his or her wages but not reported to the Canada Pension Plan or the income tax people. The employee is the one who is put to all the difficulty of proving the facts. Often statements made by employers, when everything is going well, are not adequate or are carelessly given. The employee does not anticipate any difficulty but when the difficulty suddenly arises that employee finds himself or herself in very difficult circumstances.

I suggest that the administration take a careful look at this, and where it does happen that the employer be prosecuted to the limit and made an example. It is not fair to an employee, because it is not the employer's money. It is money that has been deducted from the wages of the employee. I have not heard of any such prosecution, but when such an incident arises these people should be prosecuted to the limit. It is nothing more than theft of money which belongs to the Crown or to the employee.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I share the feelings expressed by the last two speakers about the position in which an employee is left. The employer has not only not sent forward the amounts deducted, but has not even reported them. I am afraid that this particular provision does not solve that problem in its entirety. Although making applicable the normal income tax penalty provisions for Canada Pension Plan deductions not sent in is a bit of a discouragement, it does not direct itself to the problem of the employee who has never had his deduction reported. I will take note of that point and mention it to the minister. Perhaps there is an alternate answer.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the support of the hon. member for Bow River. I suppose that altogether, those of us who are in the House could not produce a great number of cases, but when it does happen that an employee is denied his or her Canada Pension Plan benefit because the employer has not sent in the money, it is a serious situation and the law ought to be written so as to correct it.

I would still like an answer to my question with regard to what happens when the employer does not have any money coming to him from the government from which deductions can be made. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will speak to his minister about the matter. I would also ask him to ask his minister to speak to the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, because those two ministers are responsible for the administration of the Canada Pension Plan. If there are even half a dozen cases where individual Canadians are having trouble collecting their Canada Pension Plan benefits because of a failure on the part of the employer, then that situation should be corrected.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I will pass on the request made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to the two ministers involved. It is precisely because they are involved that I am not really able to give the hon. member an answer about what happens to the employee's pension position if the employer has not only neglected to send in the contributions deducted, but there is no money for retribution after the full force of this law has been applied. This provision merely ensures that there are greater penalties for the employer who violates it. I suppose, though, that it is meaningless if he has no resources.

Clause 70 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, the limit of time which we took to consider this bill on second reading and in Committee of the Whole indicates that my party is co-operative and interested in getting the legislative program of the government through. It proves that what the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council have suggested, that we are trying to frustrate the workings of the House, is not true. In a matter of only two or three days of debate a very complex bill has gone through second reading, and this proves that we are a co-operative opposition. We are waiting for the government to bring down the budget and its many good measures which will help the economy of this country.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak very briefly on the passing of this bill.

Mr. Knowles: Let's do it on third reading.

Mr. Corbett: If you will just bear with me, Mr. Chairman, I am certain that you will endorse what I have to say. It deals particularly with clause 46. I would like to draw to the attention of the House for the record the strides forward that this particular provision provides in a social context for Canadians. It deals with the provision that was previously brought in by the former administration in the April, 1978 budget whereby the people who were disabled—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I do not think we would like to establish a precedent by having the hon. member for Fundy-Royal speak at this time. Perhaps his comments should have been made when clause 46 was being discussed.

Shall I report the bill?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now or at the next sitting of the House?

Mr. Knowles: By leave, now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I just want to draw to the attention of the House the co-operative spirit in which this particular bill received passage and what it does to those people who had been previously denied access to their RRSPs. I am speaking specifically of those people under the age of 60 years who have been physically deformed or disabled through stroke or some other disability.

• (1500)

I want to register some surprise that during the passage of this bill, this type of provision being very much in accord with the type of legislation that is normally espoused, particularly by the New Democratic Party, that there was not some mention made by them that this is progressive legislation which takes into very deep consideration the social needs and difficulties experienced by minority groups in this country.

I think it is also to the credit of the previous administration in so far as it has been recognized by them during the previous session, that there was a deficiency in the budget brought down by the former minister of finance in April, 1978. After this was brought to his attention by members of our party on November 7, 1978, I believe the current provisions were included in the bill in recognition of this very special group of people who cannot or could not otherwise fend for themselves.

As a member representing Fundy-Royal and as a supporter of the government, I want to show my appreciation that social concerns and social legislation of this nature can be brought forward by a party and a government that is dedicated to the free enterprise system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), in the House for what is probably the final stage of this bill which, as one of his colleagues just indicated, has been dealt with expeditiously and with co-operation on all sides. This is probably contrary to the expectation of the Minister of Finance as he indicated the other day, I think before he had even tabled the bill although I am not quite sure of that, that he could not get to his budget because of the obstructionist tactics of the opposition which were holding up this bill so he could not get on with what will be the cutting of the umbilical cord, we hope, sooner or later, when they begin to take over the responsibilities they officially assumed on June 4.

We have tried to recognize the decision of the electorate on May 22. We let this new crowd have five, beautiful, quiet undisturbed months in the backrooms of Ottawa to find out where the private bathrooms were, where the paper clips were, which was was up, and so forth. Of course for some years before this they had indicated that they had all the answers and were just waiting to take Canada into the Valhalla of Conservative glory and prosperity, and all that sort of thing.

I note with some whimsy the furrowed brows and prison pallor that is descending upon my good friends across the way as they take on their responsibilities and find that there are no simple answers to all these things. I respect that, Mr. Speaker, because it is the truth. There are no simple answers to the problems we face in this country or around the world. They are human, I guess.

Mr. Knowles: Don't be too sure.

Mr. Andras: Wait for it, Stanley; wait for it. One could forgive the puzzlement and fevered brows that one sees now as they weave and dodge in their answers to this House. One cannot forgive or take lightly, however, the hypocrisy with which they approach their task. I do not know how long they can continue to try to do this, especially since they are always trying to say they cannot move because of what they inherited.

We have been trying to draw out our hon. friend from down east into a frank, open, and honest admission such as he has been capable of in some other circumstances. I could probably search through Hansard and find one or two times when he may have been absolutely straightforward in his comments. We have been trying to smoke him out, as it were, to say, "Okay, we have the responsibility now. We won the election. We will take that responsibility and get on with it." That has not been the case, Mr. Speaker.

These are the tax motions of the previous budget of the previous government. The election was in May; it is now November. Perhaps they were justified in taking so long—the longest period in the history of the Canadian Parliament—to get their act together before they called Parliament. Perhaps they were justified because they had not had much experience at the job.

They cannot have it both ways, however. They cannot sit here day after day saying that we on this side are causing the delay in getting this bill through and that, in turn, the Minister of Finance is delayed in getting his own budget measures before the House and the country. We could pass this in a couple of days; we would have passed it in June and we would have passed it in July, so there is no problem about that. There is some other problem here as there is with a lot of the things they are doing or not doing.

Before the election, they sat on this side of the House and put alleged facts and figures on the record. It is most amusing and interesting to read through the Hansards and see what was said by my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, by my hon. friend, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), and by that real guru of economics in the Conservative government who is going back to York University or Toronto University or somewhere, or maybe they have something else in mind for him, Mr. Gillies, and, of course, that absolute expert on economic affairs, who is now the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark).

It is interesting to see what they said then and what they are doing now. It is also interesting to recognize that they made statements during the election campaign such as the one that the cash or borrowing requirements in this fiscal year would be as high as $17 billion—a nice round figure. There were other guesses of 13, 14, 15, 16—take your choice. I even heard it expressed as $18 billion once. That is on the record.

Their forecasts of unemployment were in the double digits, 10 per cent or so, and their forecasts on inflation were double digit. In other words, the skies were going to fall down as a result of the policies of the previous government.

They still have not brought their act together since the election, even with five months of perusing all those facts and figures, and they have gone on public record as indicating that the cash deficits of the government are lower than we had forecast. They are certainly lower than they had forecast. Yet, Mr. Speaker, and this is the point of hypocrisy that I want to establish, they had forecast the cash requirements in borrowing not only for this fiscal year but they ventured into future years as well, and those figures are on the record in Hansard and in outside speeches. Those were the figures that they forecast. They were much higher than actually turned out to be the case. It was on those higher forecasts that they peddled themselves across this country, it was on the basis of those forecasts that they went out and made promises of a $2 billion tax reduction across the board. It was on those much higher expenditure forecasts that they quoted, and presumably believe in, that they went out and made promises about mortgage deductibility which, at maturity, is going to cost about $2.5 billion per year. It was on those higher expenditure forecasts that they made all sorts of promises. Some say they would cost $5 billion per year and some say the cost would be $7 billion per year.

According to the Prime Minister, that stimulative deficit was going to take two months, and according to the President of the Treasury Board it is going to take one year, but according to the Minister of Finance it would take two years to stimulate in and out and disappear—the disappearing deficit.

My point is, Mr. Speaker, that it was their own forecasts—extravagant, wild, incorrect, inaccurate, whether deliberate or not—that were in their minds when they went out and made these extraordinary, extravagant promises which they are now having to renege on with the exception of a couple, which I think were the worst ones, that they should have followed through upon. On that point alone their credibility is at stake when they try to argue the reason that they cannot do things now, the things they promised and things they said to Canadians, were the reasons why they should be elected. It is absolute hypocrisy and incorrect, if not something worse than that, for them to stand in this House and say they cannot do those things because the facts as they now know them are worse than they understood them to be before May 22. They themselves campaigned on extravagant statements of those cash requirements, etc., which have turned out to be far smaller in actuality. They know that now because they have access to that information. None of it was held back from them at the time when we were in office.

One could also talk about economic indicators which give rise to a need for a new budget. As one of my colleagues attempted to put on the record during question period today, the real GNP growth forecasts ranged from about 2.3 per cent forecast to about 3.4 per cent. In fact, it is coming in at about 3.5 per cent for this year, and this is November, 1979. This comes under the Liberal budget and the anticipation of these measures going through. Because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has not yet presented a budget to this House, he cannot take credit for that kind of GNP growth. We all wish it were higher but they forecast it much lower, so that is an improvement that they know now.

They were anticipating 9 per cent or 10 per cent unemployment this year. It is just in excess of 7 per cent. It is still too high, but that was the basis on which they made their election promises and on which their platform was based to return prosperity. That was the basis on which their stimulative budget was based and the excessive deficit spending, which they promised, from which they are now, thank goodness, backing away. These people were wailing about double digit inflation. It is still too high at around 9 per cent, but lower then they had forecast. I am going to say this again and again and again, until somebody over there has the decency and the honesty to stand up and say, "All right, we will get off this nonsense of trying to blame it all on the past, and get on with our responsibilities." They will hear that song and see that dance for quite some time as long as they continue with this hypocritical nonsense of blaming everything on the past. It is wearing a little thin. In fact almost every economic indicator and fiscal fact of the situation as they now know it is far better than the gloom and doom prophecy which they forecast during the election campaign and during the year or so before taking office. That is documentable. I think their argument is fallacious. It is time they got on with their job.

One of the beauties or compensations of not having ministerial responsibilities any more is that there is time to do things. There is more time to play golf, more time to think and even a little time to read. I am reading some of the strangest things these days. I am even reading some of the debates from the other place. I have a copy of the debates of the other place for Wednesday, October 24, 1979. In it I saw the name of a new chap over there by the name of Senator Murray. He is the real guru of the Conservative party. He is the real power behind the throne. He was the boy who brought these fellows into the front benches.

An hon. Member: Keith needed company.

Mr. Andras: Yes, indeed he found his reward, as have others who perform well in those circumstances. This situation will probably happen again.

I understand that because he was concerned about election promises, under his instructions—I would guess to the Prime Minister from High River—and because he did not think they were performing, in about June or July he called the PMO and said, "Prime Minister, we better get these boys out to Jasper and lay down the law a little bit. It seems to me we will not fulfil any of the election promises that we made." So a little meeting was held in Jasper and Senator Murray said that this was the way it was going to be, and by gosh they jumped.

Mr. Whelan: They were the inner house people, the outer house people were not there.

Mr. Andras: Yes, the inner house was there. I have not gotten that all figured out yet. I have another speech that I want to make about that some day. It should be a lot of fun.

Anyway, the guru—the Senator fellow—called the boys together and said, "Look, this is what you are going to do. None of this nonsense about keeping the deputy minister of finance despite what the Minister of Finance wants—it ain't going to happen". He said, "It does not make any difference whether he is good or bad; he has to go." The Minister of Finance is reported to have defended the incumbent deputy minister, but I guess that some afternoon their signals got switched and the Minister of Finance on going back to his office found out he had a new deputy. I guess he was told afterwards who it was.

In any event it makes one wonder. The true economic maestro in the system seems to be the chap who did not run again. He used to sit over in these benches, namely, Mr. Gillies, who operates from the Prime Minister's office.

At page 171 of the Senate debates—they do not seem to run as long as our debates—I guess in his maiden speech, in a homily and lecture to his fellow Senators to convey to them the wisdom of his years and experience, he said this:

> What is at stake is the credibility of the system. It is the credibility of the system, I regret to say, that has been somewhat damaged by the cynicism and the spectacular reversals of recent years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I have to advise him that it has been the practice in the House, and we can find many citations in our references, that members should not be allowed to refer to debates that are taking place in the other place.

I might read citation 314 to the hon. member. I agree that this Parliament might be found in a situation in which many of the subjects debated in this House are also debated over there in a more day to day manner than normal. However I have to follow the rules of the House. I will put on the record a citation that might be useful not only for this debate but for further debates in this session of Parliament. At page 102 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fifth edition, citation 314 reads:

> The rule that allusions to debates in the other House of the current session are out of order, prevents fruitless arguments between members of two distinct bodies who are unable to reply to each other, and guards against recrimination and offensive language in the absence of the party assailed; but it is mainly founded upon the understanding that the debates of the other House are not known.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will limit my comments and quotations from Gideon as written by certain people who shall be from this moment on nameless.

The thought was expressed about this problem of credibility and the damage done by cynicism and spectacular reversals.

Talk about cynicism—

Mr. Pepin: And reversals.

Mr. Andras: I will come to that, or you can do it too. To talk about cynicism, talk about their promise to move our embassy to Jerusalem; that takes absolutely top billing.

• (1520)

Reversals? Two billion dollars of tax cuts we were going to get, eh?

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): On a point of order, what has Jerusalem got to do with the income tax bill? We are talking about an income tax bill.

Mr. Andras: Well, many more of these incidents and they are going to have to raise their expenditure estimates to pay for Bob's expeditions, and they will have to raise the income tax accordingly! I have to ask the question: is that erstwhile ambassador of embarrassment off to Argentina to clean up the mess there? Will he be off next to Japan—

Mr. Kempling: Oh, we would like you to open up your Argentina mess. We would enjoy that, I think.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have difficulty in hearing what the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I really do feel sorry for the Minister of Finance. Originally, as he took office, or shortly after, with that delightful candour of his he indicated that he was expendable. Well, ministers of finance are probably the closest to being expendable than any of the ministers of the Crown and probably should be, particularly this one. He must have had some serious disappointments, I would think, because on occasion he shows some glimmering of ability to add one and one and make two, though often it is two and a half—it used to be two and a half but now it is one and a half because he is talking about restraint rather than stimulative deficits. He has had to reverse his position with regard to the deputy minister of finance.

Mr. Herbert: He was overruled.

Mr. Andras: He was overruled, we do not know by whom but he was overruled, certainly. Most embarrassing. The Minister of Finance holds one of the most prestigious ministerial positions in the country and the way in which he is treated has a lot to do with the credibility of the government and so forth. I could be disappointed in him, but I suspect that the Minister of Finance must have fought pretty hard against this crazy mortgage deductibility scheme he was forced to bring in when he discussed the matter in cabinet. If there is any validity whatsoever to the extravagant argument that the government is tight for fiscal room in which to move, ministers have, with that $2.5 billion a year under that program, blown one of the only options they may have for any really important stimulative measure they might have taken with regard to economic development, regional development, small business or anything else. He has only been in office ten minutes or so, but you can see him wearing down already—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Andras: —because he knows he is mouthing a lot of garbage. He cannot honour the promises to which he was party during the campaign except for those he most probably disagrees with, and he really isn't going to make his story stick with regard to many of the answers he has given to the House in which he continues to blame everything on the past. That will wear very thin. He has had to reverse himself time after time, though. Page after page of Hansard—that's for this place, not anywhere else. You should read it. It should be required reading for every Conservative member. The hon. member for St. John's West when he was brilliantly elucidating, wittily elucidated his horror at the idea of high interest rates. Really! Put those back to back with his statements now. Even my good friends over on the other side—and I have some—must, I am sure, be terribly embarrassed. I should like to have a little—I won't use the word "bug"—in their caucus because there is a nasty connotation to that, but it would be most interesting if we could listen in to the Conservative party caucus and hear what they said—and many of them are still saying it—about interest rates, as compared to what the Minister of Finance is doing about them.

Mr. Rae: What do you think?

Mr. Andras: The hon. member over here, who is making his mark—

An hon. Member: On Broadway. The hon. member for Broadway.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: He is off on his campaign to achieve his ultimate ambition and so far it might be possible, too.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Andras: I can suspect. But that is not what I am going to do. I have put my own views on record elsewhere; I think interest rates are too damned high. But I am talking about the government's credibility problem, the reversal of what they said before the election, the contrast between what many of them are saying still and what the Minister of Finance is doing. I made reference to the travels of a very respected former member of this House to Bagdad and other places east. You know, Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of an answer given us the other day by the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) when he said he did not plan any new trips.

Part of the problem, of course, let us be honest with each other, is our difficulty with our current account imbalance, our trade balance. The ultimate answer to that, of course, is to increase our exports by the processing of our goods and being able to sell them, replacing imports to this country which will stimulate the economy. We all agree about that.

I want to talk about merchandising the goods we produce to improve our balance of trade picture. I was really quite relieved when the other day the minister for international trade said he didn't contemplate going on any trips over the next three or four weeks. I say this because the last few trips he made ended in disaster. He was off to Tokyo with a bunch of shiny, new ministers, and a few weeks later we heard about the cancellation of our contract there and an indication it would have been just as well if he had not gone.

Mr. Friesen: On a point of order, I want to ask the hon. member if he is sure he is correct when he talks about cancellation of that order.

Mr. Andras: I recognize that it might not be verified. Perhaps I should have said that the contract was in some jeopardy. If the hon. member is giving me the happy news that he has the contract in his hot little fist, I would be very glad to withdraw and I would buy him a drink after five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: We would be disposed, I think, to let members opposite have this bill. I think we shall have to be very patient.

Mr. Breau: If they provide answers to our questions.

Mr. Andras: Well, that is not really the problem. The technical answers coming from over there are not bad, but when they get off the script and on to policy matters they have difficulty convincing us they know what they are doing.

I want to end on a serious note. This is the final parliamentary authority on the budget presented by the finance minister in the former government, the one on which this year's economic activity to the degree the federal government does influence it, is based. For the record, without going through all the statistics again, I want to indicate that I have not seen any evidence which gives validity to the argument of the government—the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance or the President of the Treasury Board—that the situation held mystery for them after they took office, that the situation was worse than they had forecast, or that the economic indicators which were left behind in terms of inflation, unemployment, unit cost of manufacturing, balance of trade, the fiscal position and so on were in fact worse than they had anticipated.

• (1530)

Second, I want to reiterate that they themselves, in the process of making those forecasts, which turned out to be wrong and pessimistic in the face of the facts as they are now unfolding, went out and made irresponsible promises to the Canadian people, which may have had some influence on why they are sitting in the front benches opposite today, and the sooner they get on with their responsibilities and cut that umbilical cord, that protective umbrella under which they are operating, then the sooner we will see what kind of government we really have on our hands in terms of their own initiatives and ideas.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we have been treated this afternoon to an extraordinary tour of the interior of the Liberal mind.

Mr. Friesen: It didn't take long.

Mr. Rae: I think it is perhaps opportune to pause briefly and remind ourselves that if it ever was unclear to us why the Liberals were defeated on May 22, it has certainly become clear, as we have watched the performance of the official opposition over the past three weeks, why they are no longer in power.

The hon. member who has just spoken referred to the hypocrisy of the Conservatives, and I think it is fair to say that the Conservative party was elected to do certain things which its members now say they are not able to do for a variety of reasons. There is no question that they have broken a number of promises and that they have made a number of mistakes. However, since we are here resident in a city where the world's worst films' festival is just coming to an end, I think we are entitled to ask ourselves who are the world's worst hypocrites.

Are the world's worst hypocrites those people who say they will do certain things and then turn around and do not do them, or those people who do not tell us what they would do at all but simply indicate to us that we can forget about the record of the past 16 years and assume that if they were in power they would not do again the things they did in the past? In my opinion, if we look at the record, the most hypocrites in this House are in the Liberal Party of Canada.

Where has the Liberal party been on the interest rate question? The Liberals have been everywhere and nowhere at the same time. There have been several statements from that party indicating what its position would be. We heard a statement today by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras) that he thinks interest rates are too high. He does not say how low they should be, where he would put them, why they are too high, what has changed, or how governor Bouey's advice is somehow different now from what it was five months ago.

It is nonsense to suggest that governor Bouey's advice is any different. The hon. member knows that perfectly well, and if he was not prepared to speak up before May 22, he should hang his head in silence and shame for the next year and keep quiet about interest rates , because he has no right to speak.

The hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) and the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley) say nothing has changed and that the governor of the Bank of Canada is right. The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) tells us that interest rates are too high. I think we are entitled to know where the Liberal party stands on this issue. We know where the government stands, and I suggest that the people of Canada know where the New Democratic Party stands, but we do not have a clue as to where the Liberal party stands.

An hon. Member: Neither do they.

Mr. Rae: We do not have a clue as to where they stand because they do not know themselves. As has been said before, they are not an opposition, they are a government in exile, and that attitude is clear in the speeches which have been given on this bill.

At second reading the hon. member for Windsor West did not refer to the provisions of this bill a single time. That record was matched by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon, the former president of the treasury board, who in his rambling tour of the Liberal mind did not touch once on a single feature of Bill C-17. Not once did he mention it, so I suggest to him that instead of reading speeches given in the other place he might be better advised to start reading the legislation which comes before the House of Commons. If he has something to say, let him say it at second reading, in the course of the debate and at third reading.

I turn now to the particular measures of the bill. I think it is a crystal clear example of how and why there is no difference at all between the Liberal party and the Conservative party. Let me just start with the small business deduction, which was thoroughly and, I think, fairly debated on both sides in the House yesterday and the night before, but where was the Liberal party when it came time to debate that particular question?

The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) joined in the criticism of the New Democratic Party that the creation of a particular tax status for professionals and people creating management service companies was unfair. Then the hon. member for Jonquière (Mr. Marceau) spoke on behalf of the doctors and other professionals in his riding. The hon. member for Windsor West did not speak a word throughout the entire debate. The hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount criticized the amendment, ant then voted for it. That is where the Liberal party stands on the question of tax fairness and of particular breaks which are going to be given to professionals and people with management service companies, and I think it is time the people knew.

The Liberals do not even have the courage to defend their own legislation as it was brought out last year. The hon. member for Saint-Maurice did not even have sufficient commitment to his own tax reform measures to speak on their behalf in the House in this entire debate. There was not one coherent Liberal statement in defence of one of the two major reforms, from a tax point of view.

[Translation]

Mr. Gourd: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd) on a point of order.

Mr. Gourd: Mr. Speaker, I may be new here but I suggest that we are dealing now with an income tax bill. Therefore I do not understand why the hon. member keeps referring to what the Liberal party has or has not done. It is the duty of the government to introduce the bill, and I should ask my hon. colleague in the New Democratic Party to get moving, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) said this morning, and to deal with the income tax bill and not with the progress or lack of progress of the Liberals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If I understood correctly his remarks, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood has dealt until now with the bill and the position of a number of hon. members during the debate on this bill. I feel, therefore, that everything is in order.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear. I can understand why the hon. member who spoke before me found my remarks embarrassing when I referred to the different and even conflicting positions adopted by the Liberal party, but as I am dealing with this bill, I have not heard a word from his colleague the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras) about it.

[English]

Clause 38 is the matter under discussion, if the hon. member wants to have a look at it and to deal with the position his party took on it. It again has created an anomalous situation in our tax law which is bad from two points of view. First is the fact that it has created a third category of business corporation in our income tax law and has added significantly to the complexity of our income tax law, just at a time when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is telling us that he thinks the Income Tax Act is far too complicated and should be simplified. If that is the case, I think we are entitled to hear from the Conservative party what its plans are to make the Income Tax Act more simple and clear.

Does the government plan to present legislation to this House? Does it intend to establish a task force to make recommendations? How serious is the government? The evidence clearly indicates that it is not serious. The evidence is that the government is determined to make the Income Tax Act more complex, and I think the changes with respect to small business, professional and management service companies is a good example of how this is becoming more complex at a time when we need simplicity.

● (1540)

The second argument is much more fundamental, and that is the fairness argument. May I say, with respect, that I do not think anything we heard from the parliamentary secretary—whom I am glad to compliment on his fairness and patience in dealing at length with our questions over the past couple of days—addressed the question of fairness and, I suggest, it is the philosophical difference between our parties which lies at the root of this. I think the Conservative party tends to see the tax system as a means of granting certain benefits to individual groups which they think will create wealth, and invest well. We in our party tend to look at the tax system more as a means of collecting public revenue in a way that is fair so that the problem of fairness between different taxpayers is understood and is seen to be true in the tax system.

Of course, these are legitimate arguments in our capitalist society, and it is important for the people of Canada to recognize that there is one party that is talking about fairness and that another party is talking about incentive and accumulation of wealth, and over here there is still another party which is talking about nothing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: I was referring, of course, to the Liberal Party of Canada. But there are other aspects of this bill that are equally demonstrative of the incompetence of the previous Liberal administration and the very real problems that have been caused to our public revenues because of their having been in government. I am referring, of course, to the situation which was described to us today in response to questions from me and from the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount when we asked how long this abuse with respect to income debentures will last. The answer was that there was a series of quantum leaps in the amount of money that was being accumulated in term preferred shares and income debentures. We started with $700 million, we went on to $3 billion, then to $7 billion, and finally the Liberal party woke up and said, "Hey, wait a minute, something is happening. A large number of people are not paying taxes and the effective rate of taxation of banks has gone way down." Finally, the switch is hit and the light turns on those ministers who are responsible for the management of the Canadian economy.

Just as we have a government which foolishly decides to index the income system at the same time as there is a significant increase in expenditure so that our revenues are falling at the same time as expenditures are increasing—which is a recipe for disaster, a recipe originally suggested to the government by the present President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens)—so too we see, in the very significant matter of term preferred shares and income debentures, a government that fails to act when a system of tax avoidance is being created in the market place which hits at the very heart of the public Treasury, the capacity of the government to collect revenues and to monitor what is going on in the market place to see that there is no unfairness.

There was unfairness, and the Minister of Finance has admitted it today. He has admitted that the original purpose of the income debenture was to aid those companies that were in financial difficulty as a result of the great depression. Those companies which have now taken advantage of the income debenture and which took advantage of the income debenture after 1974 were not companies in great financial difficulty. They were companies which had no taxable income as a result of other giveaways, other fast write-offs and other incentives given to them by the Liberal party. So just as we hear so often complaints about double taxation, the Liberal party has created a situation and allowed it to exist, not where there was double taxation, but where there was double avoidance, or triple avoidance if you like, because there is avoidance by the banks and avoidance by corporations which take advantage of the scheme of income debenture, and there is additional avoidance that takes place as a result of fast write-offs and other depletion allowances that put companies in the position of having no taxable income.

I think the time is long past when we had to have in Canada a system of accounting for our public revenues which would allow us to ask ourselves whether it is in the interests of Canada that some of our major corporations should pay virtually no tax, whether it is in the interest of either fairness or of the long term economic future of Canada. I think it was Mr. Eric Kierans, formerly a minister in the Liberal government in the 1960s, before he could not stomach it any longer and resigned, who pointed to the very danger of the system of capital depreciation allowances and the system of investment credit which did nothing for employment and nothing to solve the basic dependence of our government on foreign resource investment. This is what lies at the heart of our taxation system and this is what lies at the heart of the policy of the Liberal government, and this is what lies at the heart of the measures that were proposed by the former minister of finance in his budget. I am sorry to say it has been accepted almost completely by the current Minister of Finance.

I think we had a good and full debate on this matter, Mr. Speaker, and we in our party have not attempted to hold the debate up. We have, however—and we make no apology for it—attempted to raise those issues of importance to the Canadian people with respect to the fairness of our tax system, and we have attempted to improve the ability of members of Parliament to retain control of the purse.

Of course, it is not strange that members of the Liberal party did not participate in this debate to any degree because if there is one thing in which members of the Liberal party have specialized in the past few years it has been ignorance in terms of controlling the purse, and lack of interest in seeing that parliamentarians are knowledgeable and interested in the public accounts of Canada and know where our accounts go, not only in terms of direct spending but also in terms of massive indirect spending which takes place through our tax system.

The Minister of Finance has promised us that in his next budget there will be a statement relating to the new concept of tax expenditures. It is not a new concept in the world, but it is new in Canada.

I want to close my participation in this debate, which I have enjoyed and from which I have learned a lot, with a plea to the parliamentary secretary that he come around personally to seeing the importance of the concept of tax expenditures and that the tax expenditures which are brought before Parliament reflect as broad and as generous a definition of that concept as possible. He may remember that I asked him during this debate whether it would include capital cost depreciation which, as he knows, is done at a statutory rate, which can be faster or slower depending on the decisions of Parliament, and that has nothing to do with real depreciation in an economic or accounting sense of any particular piece of capital property. Unless we have capital cost allowances as part of the tax expenditure concept, we will not get a handle on how much money we are giving away to large corporations in terms of fast write-offs.

Obviously there are a number of other areas where we are going to want change, not only those sections of the Income Tax Act to which we have referred in this debate, such as section 66, the section dealing with MURBs, but all those features of the act which grant a substantial benefit to Canadians in a form of forgiveness tax.

It is extremely important Parliament recognizes that this whole question of the deficit, with respect to hon. members on the other side, has been abused by them and their party. They have been ready and prepared to talk about the sins of public expenditure and direct government spending. They are prepared to hit away at the programs which are defended, as best he can, by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie), and the programs of foreign aid which are defended in the House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald). These are visible forms of spending. Everyone can see if we give millions of dollars to Ghana or the Caribbean and it does not work out. This is something for everyone to see. If we send tractors to a country which does not need them, we all see it.

I suggest hon. members on the other side should look carefully at the inefficiency of tax expenditure. We give write-offs to companies over which we have no ability to control whether they spend it or whether the purposes for which they spend it are efficient. Of course they have to make the research and development or investment expenditures in order to get the credit. But we do not ask ourselves whether all that money being spent is well spent. We do not have public inquiries to find out whether there was an attempt to carry out a foolish economic plan in the Gaspé or somewhere else. We do not have the means to do that.

If my colleagues in the Conservative party are truly interested in the problem of the deficit, getting a hold on the public purse and the concept of public accounting, they will have to look not only at whether direct expenditures have been misspent—and of course there are examples where they have been—they will have to look at the indirect expenditures which are going on as well. I know it is not as popular. I know the only form of tax expenditure which springs to the lips of the President of the Treasury Board is the child tax credit. But we have had bank tax credits in the past year. I do not hear any complaints from the other side about bank tax credits. We gave Anne Murray's bank over $1 million in the second quarter of 1979. I did not hear any complaints about that in the House of Commons. These are the concepts of public spending and waste and private spending and waste subsidized by the public which are just as worthy of our concern. Certainly they are just as worthy of our scrutiny and questioning as any of the measures which apparently have been criticized in the last couple of weeks. We understand that the Tory caucus is demanding a significant cutback in foreign aid, as if it was really a major case of public expenditure, as opposed to many other examples on which we could focus.

To complete my remarks, we reject the concept that there should be a special rate of taxation, a favourable rate of taxation for lawyers, doctors, accountants and those people clever enough to avoid the normal rate of taxation for employees or self-employed persons. At least we have not abandoned the cause of tax reform. We feel extremely strongly about that. We reject the continued use of the tax system to finance our large oil companies in their exploitation of our resources. We reject our financing of foreign takeovers of the resources of Canada. That is precisely what is happening. Also we reject the new Conservative attack on public expenditure, and its failure and refusal to attack the wastes of private expenditure. These are the things we reject.

What are the things of which we are in favour? We are in favour of a tax system that is seen to be fair, that collects revenue equally from all Canadians, that treats tax dollars equally although it taxes progressively. It is a very basic principle. It is not original to this party. Yet it is a principle, like many principles and objectives, which we never manage to achieve. We made an effort to achieve it under the Carter commission but we did not manage to achieve it. Also we want to see a significant return of power to this Parliament and its ability to scrutinize not only direct expenditure but public expenditure as well. We will continue to push for the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance to produce a full accounting such as they have promised to do in the next budget.

Finally, we are in favour of a policy which provides some hope, some planning, some clear direction for Canadians, and does not rely on the multinational corporate sector of our economy to be the springboard to an industrial strategy. Let me suggest to members on the opposite side, who I know are enthusiastic about the capacity of the multinational corporate sector to provide the springboard, that that has been tried. It has failed before. If they try it again, it will fail again. Obviously we are pessimistic because of the remarks which have been made so far by the Minister of Finance, but we look forward to a policy in the budget in terms of energy, taxation and industrial strategy based on the concepts of fairness, planning, and a vital and active public sector of which we on this side are not ashamed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I will not delay the House very long, but there are one or two things I want to say about Bill C-17.

First I commend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ritchie) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) for doing an excellent job in piloting this bill through the House, many parts of which are questionable but nevertheless had to be passed in order to clean up the debris.

Nobody likes taxes, but income tax is probably the fairest tax of most taxes, because one has to make the money before one is taxed. Everyone knows that there must be enough money to run the country, but taxation can ruin a country. It has been said by some people that when municipal, provincial and federal taxes start to aggregate close to 50 per cent, then the country really is in trouble. It is because too much money is being taken out of the pockets of the people. They are not being left with enough of the money which they earned themselves. Of course that is a very bad thing in any country.

The best taxation is the one which does not take place, that is, when one can avoid taxes by cutting down expenses, by avoiding waste and by making sure one gets full value out of every dollar. Some taxes kill initiatives. I refer to the capital gains tax introduced by the Liberal government. The people who pay capital gains tax, paid the taxes on every dollar they earned through the income tax system. Then when they get to the point where they want to pass on or sell the business, the government takes another bite out of their income. These people were building up funds for themselves and their families, and sometimes the entire work of people toward that end has been ruined.

[Translation]

Mr. Gourd: Mr. Speaker, may I call it four o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if there might be a disposition for the Speaker not to see the clock for a minute. It might enable us to take care of the November 16, 1978, legislation and to proceed with new business on Monday.

• (1600)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There does not seem to be that disposition. It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I think that we are going to study Bill C-214 introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and I propose that, with unanimous consent, all private members' bills listed before Bill C-214 be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. parliamentary secretary. Is there unanimous consent to stand items 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and this is not intended to be an attempt on my part to change private members' business for today. I am rising at this point because the proposed bill is the thirteenth item of business on the list of private members' public bills.

By draw at the start of every session we determine the order in which these bills are to be taken during private members' hour. I understand and appreciate that there is a problem at the start of every session. The problem now appears to be that we do not have bills being printed fast enough.

I am rising at this time because I have one of the bills that precedes the bill being called at this time. I am told that one of the reasons I have not been approached to see whether I want to proceed with my bill now is that the bill has not been printed. I am ready to proceed. I know exactly what is in my bill.

The essential point of my intervention is that the business to be discussed in private members' hour should be decided by the members themselves and not by any government office. In fairness to the office that gives assistance, let me say they do their very best under difficult circumstances. I am not criticizing their efforts to put some order into this particular hour. Nevertheless, it is essential at this time that we go on record making it quite clear that, by precedence, the items to be discussed are precisely in the order as they are listed on the order paper, and that by unanimous consent we agree, or do not agree, to leave some items for future consideration.

I want to make it quite clear by my intervention that I have been ready since the start of the session to proceed with my bill. I do accept the explanation that we are doing what we are doing today because bills are not printed. However, I would like to hear you, Mr. Speaker, reiterate the fact that no one but members shall determine what item is to be discussed in this and succeeding private members' hours.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) is aware that members are called in the numerical order of the bills from number one. The person who does that calls each and every member for those bills that are printed. I might stress that the reason the bills are not printed has nothing to do with that person who does the calling. This is a matter that is entirely within the jurisdiction of the House of Commons, and the Speaker knows that certain bills have not been printed. The fact that the hon. member for Vaudreuil's bill is not printed has nothing whatever to do with the office of the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker). I believe it has been pointed out to the hon. member for Vaudreuil, as he himself has indicated, that the reason he has not been called in respect of his bill is that his bill has not been printed.

I think the hon. member's quarrel is not with Mr. Lay, who does the phoning in a most efficient manner, but with the people who are printing the bills and who are part of the House of Commons. If a bill is printed, Mr. Lay, I might remind hon. members, phones members in the order in which they are listed and asks the member whether he is ready to proceed with his bill on that day. If the member is away at a funeral, or away for some other reason, then we end up in the position we have today.

I would respectfully suggest that members might give unanimous consent to proceed with Bill C-214, which is the only one to my knowledge that is ready to be proceeded with today.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. For the information of the hon. members, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader could tell us why Bill C-214 would be printed before a bill which has a lower number. It seems rather odd that orders are not given to the printing department to print bills starting with number one and going up the order in that fashion. Could the parliamentary secretary enlighten the House in that regard?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that it would seem logical to do them in order. The point I am trying to stress is that it is not an official in the House leader's office who has anything whatever to do with the order in which bills are printed.

Mr. Lefebvre: I am not questioning that.

Mr. Kilgour: Possibly through you, Mr. Speaker, we could put the question to the people who are printing bills as to why they do not print them in numerical order. There may be a very good reason, but I do not think the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) and the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) should direct their complaints to our office. I stress again that this matter is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I believe that what happens on many occasions is that a member will submit a bill with just the title and not always the detail behind it. He does this because he does not know whether it will be drawn. Then the bill may be drawn in numerical order, and it is up to the member to get the material ready for printing. I suggest that is one of the things that happens. It has happened to me. On a couple of occasions I have submitted the title of a bill and had it drawn before I had the back-up material or the inside portion drafted, or sent over to the drafters for the proper language. This in many cases is why they skip numbers. They print whatever is available at the time of printing.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) has a very good point. Let me assure the parliamentary secretary that I have no intention of criticizing Mr. Lay, whom I know very well and who has done an excellent job in his capacity of trying to help us with private members' hour. I believe the reason given by the government whip is an appropriate one, but perhaps the final authority on this should be the Chair, and I hope the Speaker can enlighten us further.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, before you speak there are two additional points I should like to make. At least one of the bills that precedes the bill to be dealt with today was introduced at the last session and, therefore, is identical, so we should not have any difficulty in having it printed. Secondly, I would ask you directly, Mr. Speaker, whether you insist that a bill be printed before being proceeded with, and I appreciate the difficulty that arises? However, when a bill is called, and if the member is ready to proceed, is there any reason the member should not speak to it? He knows precisely what is in his own bill.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be helpful to the House in deciding this matter if members understood that the bill for consideration today is in fact Bill C-16 and was presented prior to this, in 1978, as Bill C-289. In fact what we are dealing with is a bill that was printed before and is now introduced as Bill C-16.

An hon. Member: It is 216.

Mr. Lefebvre: I believe we are on 214, excuse me.

● (1610)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The point raised by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) illustrates many of the problems concerning the organization of private members' bills for private members' hour. The reason why the bills which were referred to are not printed was partly given by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), and that is that at the outset of a session bills are submitted in time for the draw but merely contain the title, and the staff is left waiting for instructions from hon. members as to what they want in their bills. The bills cannot be printed without knowing what will be in them.

Today there are only four bills, Nos. 202, 203, 209 and 213 that are printed. I am told that the four members concerned were not ready to proceed, although I am not in a position to verify that fact. From past experience—and I must pay a compliment to those who have been left with the job of organizing the workings of this matter—members are approached when their bill comes due, and, if they are ready to proceed, then the House proceeds with the bill.

I would like to take hon. members back to a similar debate which took place on November 14 and November 28, 1977, and was followed by a ruling made by myself on December 5, 1977. In that ruling I suggested to the House a procedure as to workings of our Standing Orders 18(1), 19(1) and 49(1) during private members' hour. At that time I suggested a practice which we have been following since then, and that is the practice of standing bills by unanimous consent if possible without requesting the government to stand an item of business during private members' hour. This, I think, has simplified our procedure, but at the same time it has allowed members to complain about the selection of bills.

Having said that, I would like to read to hon. members a question I had in my mind at the conclusion of the debate on November 28, 1977. It reads:

> Is the fact that the government has been co-ordinating this recent procedure which has developed, bringing about some suspicion?

At that time I was referring to the procedure whereby the Privy Council Office organized and planned the work of the private members' business on a weekly basis. I was questioning the reason which prompted the hon. member for Vaudreuil to raise the question at that time. I went on to say:

> Would there be a valid objective in suggesting that such programming of private members' business ought to come under the Deputy Speakership or the Chair in general? Should there be some kind of co-ordination by the Chair or Deputy Speaker who officiates at the drawing of the order of business for private members at the beginning of the session?

That point I think was touched by the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre). Without insinuating that this alternative would be the solution to our problem, the Chair is often found in a situation where it does not have all the elements to a problem. It could be a problem of procedure, planning, or the workings of the House. We hear members complaining that they have not been contacted by the Privy Council office when they were ready to proceed, but then perhaps they were not in their offices.

Part of the organization of private members' business is conducted in one place, while the procedural aspects are conducted around the Chair. Perhaps this is something which our committee on procedure could explore. We are at this moment discussing the matter around the Chair. I can tell hon. members that the Clerk of the House and the Deputy Speaker's office are setting up an office for private members' business which will scrutinize all bills, and it will have an appointed officer who will specifically examine all bills to be debated in this House during private members' hour. This office will be concerned with the private members' hour, and will accept complaints with regard to it. The question could be raised as to whether this office should co-ordinate all facets of the private members' hour. I do not know, and I will leave that matter to hon. members for discussion. I am prepared to listen to any hon. members who wish to act on what I have said.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate my support for the proposition you have placed before us. It is in no way a reflection on the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) or on the Privy Council office, but it seems to me that what we are dealing with in this private members' hour is the business of private members and the business of the House of Commons. It should not appear that it is planned or arranged by someone who is responsible to the government. As Your Honour has just pointed out, the business of the order of the bills and resolutions is determined by a draw at the start of the session. I believe it is called an exercise in balloting. It takes place in the office of either the Speaker or the Clerk. In other words, it is done on behalf of all the members and is not under the auspices of the government.

Your Honour has wondered whether this would require a reference to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I would hope not. It is not in the rules, nor is it by direction of the standing committee or anyone else that the present practice is in effect. It has simply grown up. It is being done as a service, but it does leave certain questions. I believe that the idea of the Chair being responsible, through the Deputy Speaker, for looking after the arranging of these bills is a good one. In effect, Mr. Speaker, if you are telling us that you are going ahead with this procedure, it has my approval.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, certaintly what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said has a good deal of merit. Nobody in this House would object if that is the wish, really, of the hon. members opposite. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said that the matter now works practically. If hon. members wish to stop the practice, there is a very simple method, and that is simply to deny unanimous consent.

Your Honour has raised a very serious point from the chair. Possibly all members present or elsewhere might consider the matter. Perhaps House leaders could meet to consider the question and get back to you, if that is acceptable.

The other point is that I understand the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle and the hon. member for Vaudreuil believe that Mr. Robert Lay is being scrupulously fair. I think Your Honour is concerned about the possible appearance of the matter not being fair to all members. Hon. members on this side of the House would be open to a reconsideration of the matter if that is the wish of all other hon. members.

Mr. Lefebvre: I have listened to your words very carefully, Mr. Speaker. Rather than guarantee you the full support of the official opposition today, I would sooner wait until you can make a more complete report to the House on exactly the manner in which it will be organized. I agree with the parliamentary secretary that there are some who may think—not I personally, and not the hon. member for Vaudreuil—that there may be problems with private members' hour because it is in the hands of a government office. I think members are agreed that private members' hour, especially, should be in the hands of Parliament itself. I think this is what we are trying to arrange.

I would just mention again, Mr. Speaker, that I would appreciate it if you could make a full report when your study has been completed, and all members of the House could perhaps then be aware of what you intend.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the plans for this office to look after private members' business are well advanced. I do not know whether an actual date has been set, but I understand from the Clerk that the plans are well in hand and that they are going to proceed. Things should be dealt with through that office in the very near future.

There were representatives from all parties at the drawing of private members' bills. The Speaker was in the chair at the meeting, and all hon. members know that. It was done in a very straightforward manner and I do not think there was any complaint at all. As I recall, we spent about 45 minutes on a point brought forward by a member of the New Democratic Party regarding the procedure on the subject matter. Other than that, everything was done in a very straightforward manner. There were no complaints, and it has always been this way. I do not think there was any attempt on the part of anyone to interfere in the process. We welcome entirely this concept of an office to handle private members' business, and we look forward to the day it begins.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I did not want to prolong the debate but I could have referred to the concern of other members. I remember when we had a debate in 1977, the then hon. member for Témiscamingue and the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) were also preoccupied with this problem. The establishment of the office is not meant for taking over what I am suggesting at this time; it is meant to help the Chair. It is needed more and more, if you consider a situation like the one we had at the beginning of the week on Bill C-217. About one minute before we went into private members' hour the Chair ended up with a bill which did not have a title that met the requirements of our Standing Orders. Sometimes the Holy Spirit works faster than others. That day things were not too bad, but we usually like to have advance notice in order to make a better judgment on the acceptability of the bill, or even to advise hon. members of improvements to it.

The remarks of all hon. members will be examined by the Chair and not only by me. I have had conversations on this matter with the government House leader, the House leader of the official opposition, with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and with the Speaker.

I take the advice of the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) not to do anything in a hurry and not to ask for a decision from the House without putting on paper some kind of document on what could be suggested.

First, however, we have to lay down properly not only the structure of the office for private members' business, that I referred to, but also the responsibility of the Assistant Clerk who will have full control of that office and the kind of services that can be offered to members. After that, we can tackle the other problem and include it in that paper. It will then be left to hon. members to indicate whether they want us to pursue our research in order to give better service to the House and to all hon. members.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, may we then have unanimous consent to deal with the bill of the hon. member for Winnipeg Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to proceed with Bill C-214 and to stand, by unanimous consent, all the bills that precede Bill C-214?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSUMER PRODUCTS WARRANTIES ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING STANDARDIZATION OF WARRANTIES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved that Bill C-214, to amend the Combines Investigation Act to provide for the standardization of warranties and to define the minimum provisions thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is of any benefit to remind the general public that this debate is carried on so many times in private members' hour. I know the government has plans to strengthen the private members' hour and I hope those plans are put into effect shortly.

We have seen a classic example this afternoon of the determination of some people to destroy the private members' hour in every possible way they can devise. It does not matter to me whether I speak on my private member's bill today or on Monday or next Tuesday. I am quite sure that with the co-operation I have received from the different offices during the years, these things can be straightened out in a matter of hours through a visit to some official in the House and so not take up the time of private members' hour year after year after year.

It is the same member who raises these issues all the time. All the rest of us can work our motions, our production of papers and private members' bills, but the member for—

Mr. Lefebvre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like the hon. member to be more specific about who he is referring to.

Mr. McKenzie: It is the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). He has raised this matter time and time again. He has been in the government for a long time so I do not know why he cannot work with his colleagues to get these problems straightened out.

Mr. Herbert: May I suggest that if I have raised the matter time and time again it is because it has not been resolved. Now, for the first time, we see a possible resolution.

Mr. McKenzie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might come in next week when there are some other private members' bills coming up to continue this debate.

The intention of Bill C-214 is to amend the Combines Investigation Act and to provide for clearer warranties. The intent of the bill is to amend the Combines Investigation Act to provide for the standardization of warranties and define the minimum provisions thereof of such warranties so that consumers will know precisely what they are going to receive. As many consumers have all too painfully learned, legal gobbledygook pervades most warranties. As a result, persons seeking redress get a great deal less than they expect. Sadly, there is little protective legislation in this field. The legislation that has been developed in Saskatchewan, New Brunswick and Quebec seems to be different for different jurisdictions. I believe that my bill will fill this void and ensure standardization.

I expect this bill will be talked out, Mr. Speaker, but I hope the government will refer it to the federal provincial task force on consumer legislation programs for further discussion at the next federal-provincial meeting. Warranties are mainly a provincial concern, but if the provinces do not take some concrete action toward improving warranty legislation, then the federal government is going to have to step in.

In the United States, bills are being introduced to improve warranties. They are more commonly referred to as the "anti-lemonaid" bills.

I should like to refer hon. members to a story in a recent edition of Economics and Business, which reads in part as follows:

● (1630)

The story is all too familiar. A shopper buys a refrigerator, handsaw or any of hundreds of thousands of other products covered by a warranty only to have the product quickly break down. When the consumer reads the warranty's fine print, he discovers that the document is so filled with exceptions and qualifications as to make the manufacturer's promise to fix or replace the item almost useless. That situation is likely to become far less common in the years ahead because of the first of a series of strict new warranty regulations issued recently by the Federal Trade Commission under the Warranty Act of 1975.

I would like now to refer to a few bizarre cases. These concern individuals who have purchased automobiles. I will read one example into the record. The situation occurred in the United States. An architect purchased a cream coloured station wagon with wood grain moulding on October 1, 1979. He said:

"It was a real pretty car."

However, it had a habit of stopping dead in traffic because the motor gave out. And the dealer had trouble fixing it.

Ten weeks after purchasing his car the gentleman returned it to the dealer along with a list of 14 complaints. Besides the motor problem the car was supposed to get 15 miles per gallon but was only getting 5 miles per gallon. When he got the car back four months later, he said that the engine died in traffic before he had driven ten miles. Consequently, he took it back to the dealer. When it was still not fixed by May 18 he decided he wanted his money back.

That is just one example, and I am sure anyone listening to me today will be reminded of similar cases.

Rachel Miller, a federal trade commission staffer working on warranty problems, said the American bill would eliminate costly court disputes over just how many unsuccessful repair attempts it takes before a car is judged a "lemon". She said that sometimes it takes 28 or 30 repair attempts before a car owner can get satisfaction. That is a sad situation, Mr. Speaker.

Consumer advocate, Phil Edmonston, stated that auto manufacturers have defrauded car buyers of millions of dollars in the last 25 years by selling cars as new that have actually been manufactured in the previous model year.

I hope my bill will protect citizens from these sorts of things.

We have even seen situations where people have to turn to their daily newspapers. They run help columns to assist automobile and truck buyers in getting their lemons fixed by dealers and car manufacturers. The Ottawa Journal runs such a column, called "Square Deal". It is absolutely ridiculous that people have to turn to newspapers in order to get some action. Nevertheless, this is an excellent service, provided by newspapers.

We all remember the Firenza automobile and its accompanying problem. It was many years before owners received settlements. There were parades, court costs and various petitions before any lemons were fixed.

In general, warranty rights are contractual rights. That means that a buyer can only enforce his rights against the seller. Only in special circumstances can he enforce them against the manufacturer, although we are always led to believe that the warranty right is one that is enforced against the manufacturer.

In early 1979, the Supreme Court of Canada decided the case of Kravitz and General Motors. That case established that in the province of Quebec a Quebec consumer can recover compensation from the manufacturer for various defects. But it took Mr. Kravitz almost ten years—a whole decade—to prove his point and recover his money.

There is no way that any individual purchasing a car, or any other product, should have to take on any of the big three, or any car manufacturer when he has received a lemon.

There has been a great deal of activity in the United States on this subject ever since the well-known Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act which forces sellers to label their warranty as a full or limited warranty depending on what it offers.

In addition, three Canadian provinces have acted in this area. Saskatchewan and Quebec have actually dealt specifically with the issue addressed by my bill. In Quebec, this is covered in section 45 of the new Consumer Protection Act, and in Saskatchewan, it is covered in section 17 of their Consumer Product Warranties Act. It is about time something was done about this on a national basis. It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I table this bill and urge the provinces or the federal government to get on with the job because what is happening in the market place is criminal.

That is all I have to say, as I understand there are other members who wish to make a contribution on this subject.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in this particular piece of legislation. I was one of the members of the federal-provincial task force on legislative programs to which the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) referred. I was also one of the people who established the subcommittee looking at the whole question of products liability into which the question of warranties falls.

One of the problems this particular piece of legislation overlooks is the jurisdictional problem that exists in Canada in this area. It is essential that that be recognized, and it is essential that this piece of legislation be taken back and rethought. The whole area of contract law lies within the purview of the provincial governments. That is why the provinces of Saskatchewan, Quebec and New Brunswick have passed legislation in this area and why the federal government has refrained from doing so.

When I was with the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is was the intention to move ahead with the area of products liability, not only with regard to products and performance of them but also with regard to product safety matters as we now have covered them under the Hazardous Products Act. It was the intention to move ahead to incorporate the Hazardous Products Act as well as product performance standards within one piece of legislation. The immediate reaction from the provinces was one of "Keep your hands off, it belongs to us". There was no question in any of our minds that the provinces were not going to allow the federal government to pass legislation in this area without a great deal of difficulty.

It seems to be rather peculiar that a government which prides itself on consultation with the provinces does not know what the provinces' positions are on federal intervention in this area. It is all also peculiar that we would be talking about putting a piece of legislation forward which does not even cover the major problems of products liability but does it through an amendment in the Combines Investigation Act which is an inappropriate piece of legislation in the first place.

The part of the Combines Investigation Act to which this bill refers is section 36. This is the misleading advertising portion. If we were talking about a piece of legislation that is going to change disclosure that is one thing, but this bill goes much further than just changing the disclosure requirements on consumer product warranties.

First, if you look at proposed section 36.01(3), it says that:

> The governor in council may make regulations prescribing, with respect to any class of consumer product, minimum standards which qualify a warranty as a "full warranty" in relation to products of that class.

Effectively the bill would be asking the federal government or agencies of the federal government, such as the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the Standards Council of Canada, to establish test methods for evaluating products and to set standards. The time and the cost associated with setting standards in these particular areas, given that there are well in excess of 30,000 to 40,000 consumer products on the market, are obvious even to the slowest mind.

● (1640)

The second area is proposed subsection 4 of 36.01 which reads:

> Where a warranty made in connection with the sale of a consumer product does not qualify under subsection (3) as a "full warranty" in relation to that product, the words "limited warranty" shall appear conspicuously upon the product or its packaging.

What this says is that if a product is produced and a manufacturer does not comply with all of these disclosure items (a) through (k), then the manufacturer has to put the term "limited warranty" on the product. The question arises: what if a manufacturer fails to meet any of the conditions in the warranty legislation? He still has to put "limited". This means that every product, whether it bears a warranty or not, is going to have "limited warranty" put on it. As a matter of federal law, does it make sense that every product, whether or not it carries a warranty, will be forced to say that it does carry a warranty, even though it is a limited one?

A number of factors have to be considered here and the bill does not seem to me to be one which understands the massive complexity and technicalities involved in the warranty field. It certainly overlooks the important area of federal-provincial harmony and federal provincial jurisdiction. It is beyond my understanding how a government which says it is so concerned about putting a new face on federalism and establishing a new co-operative relationship with the provinces could put forward a piece of legislation like this which flies in the face of everything the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been working on for the last four years in an effort to develop harmony in the field of consumer protection by setting up the task force on legislative programs, by setting up the federal-provincial task force of deputy ministers which meets once a year to talk about all these issues. The whole subject of warranties and liability was, in fact, referred back to the officials.

I agree with the hon. member that the area of warranties is a serious problem. In Canada, right now, a large number of products are inadequately guaranteed. I agree with the hon. member that disclosure is the key. But disclosure also happens to be an area which falls within the provincial domain which is why, as I have said before, the provinces have already moved in there.

At this point I would not recommend any policy if I were not able to go back through all the work which has been done in this field by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would suggest that a good place to start, though, would be with the disclosure provision. The simple language provision in the bill which says you have to understand what is going on is extremely useful, and it's nice to see it coming from a lawyer because one of the most difficult areas for consumers is understanding exactly what the warranty says. New York State has a simple language clause, but before implementing anything of the kind in Canada I would be very careful to go to New York to talk to the people there and find out all the difficulties which have been caused by that simple, readable-language clause in their legislation.

Another way of handling this problem would be to require full disclosure, and some of the proposals made in the hon. member's bill constitute a good start. That seems to follow very closely from the Magnuson-Moss act in the United States, if I am not mistaken. Possibly, also, it derives from some of the provincial legislation. It is a good start to provide for some disclosure, but not, then, to require that the federal government through its regulatory agencies should become involved in setting minimum standards for what is and what is not a full warranty or a limited warranty, but to police through legislation the validity of the claims by putting the onus on the manufacturer to substantiate his claims in advertising, to substantiate his claims in the warranty itself. The validity of those claims will be decided in the courts of law—by the way they would be handled in civil courts which, once again, are outside federal jurisdiction.

Disclosure itself gives rise to certain problems because of circumstances surrounding the recourse which is available in Canada to consumers within the domain of provincial jurisdiction. There are many serious problems in the area of liability which need to be handled by way of joint federal-provincial agreement and interprovincial agreement. For example, in the products liability area of hazardous products, if I buy a product in Ontario and the product was manufactured in Manitoba and I get injured in British Columbia, I face a serious string of problems in trying to lay claim against the manufacturer or the seller. Where do I bring my case? Can I lay a claim against a Manitoba manufacturer? All these questions have to be resolved by way of extensive interprovincial and federal-provincial agreement. The bill before us will not serve that purpose. It seems to me a broader approach to the whole area of product liability is needed, of which disclosure and warranties will form one part.

Another problem I see with this piece of legislation is that it depends very heavily upon the precedent which was set in the Magnuson-Moss warranties bill in the United States, and I do not think it recognizes sufficiently the rather substantial differences between the law in the United States and the law in Canada. So I would suggest, if I may, from experience in working in this field and dealing with product liability as well as consumer warranties and disclosure legislation, that before we approve private members' bills or pieces of legislation from private members or members of the government, or from the opposition members for that matter, we should do a lot more homework on the background, the subject matter and make sure we are actually covering an area, first of all, which is under federal jurisdiction, and, second, that we are acting in a way which will actually improve the information flow to the consumer and not make it potentially even less than it is now. I agree with the hon. member that at the present time it is not good. I agree with him, also, that there is a need in this area. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Evans.]

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) in his attack on the free enterprise system.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Rae: That is what we are talking about here. We are talking about a breakdown in consumer protection which the forces of the market place have proven unable to present. I am glad this is recognized by the hon. member, though I am sure there are free market theorists on the other side of the House who will tell us that all consumer legislation is yet another example of government interference in the free working of the market place and something which should be stopped.

Although I applaud the objectives of the bill I, too, have some doubt as to whether this is the best way in which to proceed. I think I am a little more sympathetic to letting this bill go to committee than the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). It certainly is not my intention to talk the bill out.

I simply suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine that the problem of consumer protection, of which this is one aspect—and product liability is one aspect of the question of consumer protection—is mixed jurisdiction. As the hon. member knows, the basic law of consumer protection, warranty and liability is a matter of commercial contract law which is covered by provincial law and is subject to provincial jurisdiction. One of the difficulties we have is that each province has its own way of protecting consumers or of not protecting consumers. There is a whole variety of acts in each province which reflect differing philosophies. Some are more advanced than others in the whole field of consumer legislation and consumer protection, but I am sympathetic to the notion that the federal government, within its own jurisdiction, might study the possibility of bringing in its own legislation to serve as a model for other jurisdictions, and with a number of amendments I think the hon. member's bill could serve as a basis for that kind of legislation. It is for that reason that I think it should go to committee.

The hon. member for Ottawa Centre said that the problem is basically one of disclosure and that disclosure is the key. I disagree. I think the key to consumer protection is not disclosure. The key is enforcement. The key is access to the law. As the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine and the hon. member for Ottawa Centre know, when the private individual has the get up and go to take advantage of our court system in consumer actions, by and large he wins. It is one of the ironies of our common law that the common law as it has been interpreted—certainly in the province of Ontario—is beginning to move well beyond the protections of statute.

I think the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine referred to saws breaking down and the problem of new cars which break down. If the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine is interested, he can read many cases in Ontario law where courts recognize that there have been fundamental breaches of contract—fundamental breaches of implied warranties—and that this demands compensation.

For example, if I buy a new saw and it breaks down within a given period of time, even though the warranty may not exist or even though the warranty may be worded to the contrary, it still happens, if the individual has the get up and go, the means, the intelligence and the ability to use our court system—both financial and otherwise—that that individual will often win. However, the problem is partly consumer information and partly consumer awareness that a consumer can do this. The other part of the problem is enforcement, and I suggest to the hon. member that that is an area where just as the free market system breaks down in the field of consumer protection, so too it breaks down in relation to legal services.

It is a harsh fact that most people fear the courts and are afraid of lawyers and cannot afford to take the risk of legal actions which might not be successful. Therefore, the critical question becomes one of enforcement, and one of the reasons I would like to see this legislation sent to committee and studied further is that I think there is much that the federal government can do both through the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and the Department of Justice through its funding of community legal clinics and its provision of community legal education.

There is a great deal a federal government can do in the field of consumer information and consumer protection. That takes money, which the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine does not want to spend in other areas. I hope he will agree that it is worth the expenditure in this area.

With those exceptions, riders, and concerns, I join with the hon. member in his condemnation of the abuses of the capitalist system. I am glad to have him on my side where he is welcome to join with me in this debate in this attack. I am glad we can agree on something for a change, even if it is at 4.55 p.m. on a Friday. However, there are some amendments we would like to see. We would like to see the bill strengthened to deal with the broader problems which the hon. member has gladly and rightly brought to the attention of this House.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am thankful for this opportunity to speak on behalf of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and my minister regarding this very important bill. I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) for bringing this bill forward. I would like to apologize for the number which I had in one of my documents which indicated that this is Bill C-14. It clearly is not. It is Bill C-214.

The comments made by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) bring quickly to mind the difficulties which are implicit in the Combines Investigation Act, and I would like to call to his attention the fact that he has lived with those for a number of years now, and if he has worked closely with them before I regret that he has not been able to effect a bill which would be better able to serve consumer needs and to serve the purposes of consumers. I think that the effort which has been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine has attempted to address that problem, and as an effort it at least deserves some attention.

As was the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), I am reminded of a bumper sticker which reads, "Re-call Ralph Nader". I think the point here is that we would support the type of thing Ralph Nader has been forced to do, and that is to give responsible consumers, producers and retailers the ability to understand each other and, through disclosure, to effect a more reasonable attitude and a better ability to serve consumer needs.

This disclosure, as it would be improved by the measures put forward in the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, would do a number of things. It would help to show the consumer where to turn. It would help show what steps the consumer might take to get proper warranty service. It would help indicate who can turn to the warrantor. Would it be the consumer's spouse, his girlfriend, her boyfriend, her children or her grandchildren? Who can use this warranty? It might help to show what parts of the product are not covered by the warranty, and which parts are. It might help tell us what the duration of the warranty is, among other things.

I would like to state clearly that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs supports this bill, while at the same time appreciating that its purview is under the domain of the provincial governments and that several provincial governments have brought forward legislation which covers this. As the hon. member for Ottawa Centre mentioned, he was involved in these negotiations. These negotiations are ongoing, and with the permission of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine this government intends to bring forward this bill to the task force which is now in process in the hope that it will in fact develop, on the basis of this proposed measure and others, a more reasonable consumer bill and a more reasonable ability for the consumer to achieve some satisfaction in terms of his warranty.

There was one other point—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On behalf of the Friday afternoon club may I say it is not often that we have in our midst such a distinguished member as we have this afternoon. We should like to welcome the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to the club, and wish him a very happy weekend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

It being 5 p.m. this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

(See p. 900)

OTTAWA K1A 0A6,
April 4, 1979.

Mr. James J. Macdonell,
Auditor General of Canada,
240 Sparks Street,
Ottawa, Ontario.
K1A 0G6

Dear Mr. Macdonell:

Last summer, shortly after the announcement of intended spending cuts in the public service, I was asked by the President of the Treasury Board whether similar economies were possible in the operation of Parliament. My response, of course, was that the ultimate decision must rest with Parliament itself, but that I would certainly provide an opportunity for members to pronounce themselves on the suggestion.

We therefore prepared a preliminary set of the Speaker's spending estimates and I asked our senior officials to identify areas in which substantial cutbacks might be affected if members so desired and, of course, consequential alterations to members' services. I appeared before the Management and Members' Services Committee to advise them that I had taken these steps and to invite them to consider carefully any possible savings so that when our estimates were before them in midwinter, they could give me their final advice. We met again in February and I learned that the committee had directed its attention to these matters in a number of meetings at which our officials testified. They were, however, reluctant to commit future Parliaments to substantial adjustments in members' services or other operational features of Parliament without a comprehensive review, and so, it was their strong suggestion that I authorize an independent study of parliamentary administration.

You will recall that at the Committee's suggestion, I discussed this matter with you in a preliminary way and it was your opinion that as a first step, in place of your regular annual audit, you conduct a somewhat more comprehensive study, which would include the value for money concept which I know you are competent to examine. It was your view that such a study would require about three to four months and that it would assist in identification of problem areas if they do exist, and likely suggest a number of solutions; furthermore, if outside consultations were considered necessary to solve any remaining problems, your study would assist us in drawing appropriate terms of reference. A few days ago, when I appeared before the Committee for final approval of my estimates, I took the occasion in a brief session in camera, to inform the Committee of your opinion and I am pleased to say that they support me entirely in my intention to proceed.

This letter is therefore to formally request you to begin at your earliest convenience, the more comprehensive review which you described to me at our earlier meeting. I understand we can expect such a study to be finalized about the end of the summer so that the Speaker of the next Parliament would be in a position to consult with you and, in turn, with the reconstituted Committee at the commencement of the next Parliament before taking any further steps. I have, of course, advised Mr. Alistair Fraser, the Clerk of the House, General Gus Cloutier, the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Georges St-Jacques, the Director of Administration and Personnel and Mr. Ed Thomas, the Director of Legislative Services, fully about these steps throughout, and by copy of this letter, I am asking all of them to be at your disposal to facilitate your work.

I need not add, I am sure, that the Parliament of Canada is an absolutely singular institution, which operates under entirely unique administrative requirements and pressures and after five years as Speaker, I must say that I have the highest respect for everyone responsible for our administration here. I am confident that you will find a thoroughly professional attitude and competence in every area and that chiefs of services will be of great assistance to you. On the other hand, I am conscious of the fact that the last organizational study of Parliament was made several years ago and that in size and complexity, our entire operation has multiplied several times in the recent years. I am especially pleased that all parties represented in the House and all the senior officials of the administration have expressed great interest in this kind of organizational review for which your audit may form the corner stone, and I thank you for your counsel and co-operation in this very important endeavour.

Yours sincerely,

James A. Jerome, Q.C., M.P.

The Honourable James A. Jerome, Q.C., M.P.,
Speaker of the House of Commons,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.
K1A 0A6

Dear Mr. Speaker,

On March 23, 1979, you informed me of your concerns and those of the Management and Members' Services Committee as to whether the general and financial administrative organization and systems of the House of Commons were appropriate for its needs and operating economically and efficiently. I suggested that you might wish to consider a comprehensive audit of the type recently introduced in my office which is broad in scope, and includes considerations of economy, efficiency and effectiveness—colloquially described as value-for-money auditing. On April 4, 1979, you advised me that this proposal was acceptable and requested that we proceed with the work.

To identify specific areas in which detailed examination would be justified, we made a preliminary survey of the following aspects of House administration:

- financial administration;
- personnel administration;
- services to committees;
- services to members;
- printing and publication;
- maintenance and cleaning;
- procurement;
- security and protection; and
- restaurant and cafeterias.

We did not, however, review the procedural aspects of the House except to the extent required to obtain an understanding of their relationship to the administrative practices. As Parliament was not in session during our preliminary survey, there has been no opportunity to meet with members to obtain the benefit of their comments and suggestions as users of the service provided by the administrative staff.

On October 4 we discussed with you the findings and key organizational recommendations arising from our preliminary survey and agreed then to provide you with this summary. Future reports will contain our detailed findings and recommendations in other areas included within the scope of our comprehensive audit.

Summary of Findings

Since the organization and administrative practices of the House were last examined during 1964, there has been a threefold increase in the number of staff and a ninefold increase in expenditures. These increases reflect growth in the size of the House and in the complexity of and requirement for support services. There are now close to 3,000 people and a budget that approaches $84 million.

The services provided to members appear to be of a high quality, as do the services to the House itself. However, we are of the opinion that the quality of general and financial administration is significantly below a minimum acceptable standard. In summary, our more significant findings are as follows:

- Operating budgets are rudimentary for all areas of administration in the House. Procedures have not been developed to determine objectives and priorities, or to ensure that there is a methodology for determining the costs of activities and programs and for measuring operating performance. In practice, budgets are prepared by the senior managers on an incremental basis from the preceding year; however, they are not developed in sufficient detail to identify all costs by responsibility centres. Consequently, these budgets are not useful as a means of exercising control or ensuring accountability.
- Financial and management reporting is inadequate in all areas of administration. Expenditures are reported against budgets only at the director level, the broadest level of responsibility. Moreover, detailed analyses of variances from budget are not prepared, and the costs of various services are not reported. Without this kind of information it is difficult for managers to exercise informed judgment with respect to value for money.
- A manual of financial and administrative policies and procedures has not been developed. Thus, there is no assurance that practices, like procurement, are uniformly applied in a manner consistent with accepted government procedures.
- A clear separation of duties is lacking between those who exercise spending authority and those who exercise payment authority. This increases the risk of fraudulent practices and other irregularities.
- The responsibilities and authorities of the Personnel Division have not been well defined or documented. As a consequence, staff may not be recruited or promoted in a manner consistent with practices that ensure due regard for merit.
- Position descriptions documenting responsibilities, authorities and relationships of managers and subordinate staff are not generally available. Salary structures are said to relate to those of the public service; however, direct comparisons are difficult because of the lack of position descriptions.
- Security procedures have not been formalized or subjected to review by an independent authority. Contingency plans are not in place to deal with emergencies.
- Standards of maintenance and cleaning have not been agreed upon or documented. Thus, procedures are not in place to measure productivity or to assess priorities with respect to cleaning and building maintenance.

Organization of the General and Financial Administration of the House of Commons

The lack of plans, policies, documented procedures and adequate reports, coupled with the growth of expenditures to $84 million and a requirement to improve significantly the co-ordination of all administrative functions of the House, led us to place before you at our meeting of October 4 the following two key recommendations:

- Establish the position of Administrator to co-ordinate and direct the administrative functions of the House of Commons. The Administrator should be of equivalent rank to a deputy minister and should report directly to the Speaker of the House of Commons.
- Establish the position of Comptroller of the House of Commons to develop, co-ordinate and maintain all activities relating to accounting and financial administration and controls of the House of Commons and its members. The Comptroller should report directly to the Administrator.

It should be emphasized here that we understand the respect with which members regard the traditional relationships between the Speaker, the Clerk, the Sergeant-at-Arms and the House of Commons. We also accept your admonition that any final description of responsibilities of such an Administrator, including relationships with existing officers of Parliament, must come only after members have had a proper opportunity for study and comment.

At the same time, it is our earnest recommendation that the actual work of the Administrator begin as soon as possible, and that the Administrator work together with the Clerk and the Sergeant-at-Arms as a Management Committee. In this latter regard, we are encouraged by your view that such a Management Committee would constitute a very natural continuation of regular consultations which took place during the last Parliament and that you would not only support such a concept, but would serve as chairman. In the light of your other responsibilities, this is more than we had intended to suggest, but it certainly in our opinion constitutes the best possible arrangement.

We feel that the interim solution which concludes this letter accommodates the need for both comment and expediency and so, in conjunction with that proposal, we have appended capsule position descriptions, outlining the principal responsibilities and relationships respecting these two positions, together with an illustrative, functional chart of organization. The chart illustrates the proposed separation between professional (chamber and procedural) activities and administrative functions. We believe that the direction of the administrative services of the House is a complex and full-time job, and that there is an immediate need to:

- oversee the development and implementation of effective financial, personnel and operating practices;
- establish performance indicators, and cost and reporting mechanisms to provide for accountability; and
- create a co-ordinated and integrated administrative organization.

The chart of organization identifies a number of responsibilities now assigned to the Sergeant-at-Arms that we feel should be directed eventually by the Administrator. These responsibilities, including the Parliamentary Restaurant and cafeterias, building maintenance and cleaning, and messenger services, are highlighted by footnote 1 in the accompanying chart. The rationale for these proposed changes in responsibilities stems from our view that they are more clearly aligned with the role of the Administrator in ensuring economy and efficiency. In the period of transition, close co-ordination would be required between the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Aministrator to ensure a smooth transfer of responsibilities.

You indicated the desirability of proceeding with all reasonable dispatch to fill the two key positions, with first priority being given to the position of Administrator, and asked me to assist you in this connection. Appreciating the need to proceed promptly, but recognizing also that identifying suitable candidates for such a unique and important position as that of Administrator of the House of Commons would likely require several months, I proposed a possible interim arrangement. Briefly, I suggested that, if you so desired, arrangements could be made for the Senior Deputy Auditor General, Mr. Rhéal Chatelain, F.C.A., to assume, on an interim and acting basis, the responsibilities of Administrator, through secondment to the House of Commons reporting directly to you. It seemed that Mr. Chatelain's background and experience is particularly relevant in helping to set up the position of Administrator. Prior to returning to Ottawa from Quebec City in 1974 to accept his present position, Mr. Chatelain held several senior positions with the Government of Quebec, having been successively Comptroller of the Treasury, Comptroller of Finance and Deputy Minister of the Civil Service Department.

You responded positively to this suggestion, and on October 18 you convened a meeting attended by yourself, Dr. Koester, the Clerk of the House of Commons, General Cloutier, the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Chatelain, two of my other associates, and myself. At this meeting the proposed arrangement was discussed and it was agreed that it was a practical and workable arrangement which should be proceeded with as soon as possible. Tentatively, November 19 was selected as the date on which Mr. Chatelain could commence this special temporary assignment.

In accordance with your suggestion it was agreed that, in due time, I would initiate enquiries through the Secretary to the Cabinet and the Chairman of the Public Service Commission to identify for your consideration potential candidates for the position of Administrator.

It was further agreed that I would provide you with this letter to place on record the substance of the principal matters covered in our several discussions.

We are proceeding with other phases of the comprehensive audit and will be directing our attention next to the personnel management aspects of the administration.

My colleagues and I appreciate this opportunity to be of service to the House of Commons.

Yours sincerely,

J. J. Macdonell
Auditor General of Canada

General Accountability

The Administrator is responsible to the Speaker of the House of Commons for ensuring that all financial, personnel and administrative services to the House of Commons and its members are developed and carried out with proper regard for economy, efficiency and operational effectiveness.

Nature and Scope

Because of the rapid growth of the House of Commons staff there is a need for the review and development of new policies, procedures and systems with respect to all administrative services functions including finance, personnel and general administration services. This will include implementing the recommendations of the recent comprehensive audit of the Office of the Auditor General and establishing organizations with the sensitivity and judgment to carry out these changes in an environment where close consultation with the Management and Members' Services Committee, the Commissioners of Internal Economy, the Management Committee and members of the House is essential. Consultations and negotiations may also be necessary with other organizations such as the Treasury Board and Public Service Commission where some form of new relationship may be of value in creating a more structured and controllable administrative environment.

Specific Responsibilities

Obtain a comprehensive understanding of the services needs of the members and, keeping in mind operational efficiency, develop plans for achieving Branch objectives through consultation with the Speaker and other members of the Management Committee.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS—PROPOSED CONGRATULATIONS TO ELECTED OFFICERS IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Considering that some municipalities in western Quebec held elections on November 4, 1979; considering that those municipalities are situated within the national capital area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle):

That the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of other parties send their congratulations to those who were elected and in addition encourage all those municipal councils to continue to co-operate closely with the federal government and its organizations in the best interests of the people.

REQUEST HOUSE BE INFORMED OF NEW CONSERVATIVE POLICY ON TERRITORIAL CLAIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Given the unduly long time the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Epp) is taking to give a favourable answer to the request for technical and financial help made by the Attikamek Montagnais council to have successful territorial negotiations with Quebec, and given the fact that the Government of Canada is traditionally the protector of the rights and interests of the native people of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development immediately inform the House about the new Tory policy on territorial claims.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the presentation of this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR EQUALITY FOR WOMEN IN ALL PHASES OF ECONOMY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), I move:

That this House, noting that already in this session fine speeches have been made about the rights of women, but that these speeches have not been followed by the taking of positive steps to establish and protect those rights, calls on the government to take affirmative action to establish equality for women in all phases of our economy, particularly in employment opportunities, access to adequate training and upgrading, equal pay for work of equal value, and equality between men and women in all pension plans.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR VOTE OF CONFIDENCE ON FAMILY ALLOWANCE POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Following the irresponsible statements made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), who is absent from the House today, and by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) whose priorities are completely mistaken, since we are heading towards the end of the International Year of the Child and since our seven million children who benefit from universal child allowances are our most precious natural resources; given the fact that Canadian mothers whom the Conservatives say they want to support lost 2,000 places in daycare centres last year, and that universal family allowances are the tool of a unique family policy by the federal government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen):

That the House request a vote of confidence against the government for the concerns it has created among Canadian mothers.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

TRANSPORT

RADIO OPERATORS' DISPUTE—REQUEST MINISTER INTERVENE PERSONALLY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity, under Standing Order 43.

In view of the vital importance of radio operators to air and marine safety in Canada, particularly in the remote parts of the country, and in view of the fact that the transport department has warned pilots that they can no longer rely on navigational aids, and that search and rescue services are reduced, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey):

That the Minister of Transport personally intervene in the negotiations in order to bring this dispute to an immediate and satisfactory conclusion before we are all party to an accident that is out there looking for a place to happen.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion, pursuant to this Standing Order, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA WORKS

REQUEST PROGRAM BE REINSTATED TO ASSIST INDIAN AND RURAL COMMUNITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the large number of representations that have been made by rural municipalities and Indian bands protesting the cancellation by the Minister of Employment and Immigration of the Canada Works program in high unemployment areas of Ontario, and considering the revelations by the minister last week that the funds for this cancelled program will be used for Indo-Chinese refugees, which could result in a backlash against these refugees in the slow-growth areas which have lost this assistance, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid):

● (1410)

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately move to prevent this backlash and meet the needs of the high unemployment areas of Ontario by reinstating the Canada Works program which he cancelled last summer.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

In view of the delay of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in ruling on the eligibility for unemployment benefits of the many ex-employees of Bell Canada who have been waiting for more than four months for a decision on their case, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd):

That the House direct the Minister of Employment and Immigration to intervene immediately in this matter in order that a decision be taken in all cases and that the rights of these persons to unemployment benefits be recognized.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

WENDY KING CASE, VANCOUVER—CALL FOR INVESTIGATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that one, Wendy King, last week pleaded guilty in a Vancouver courtroom to the charge of keeping a common bawdy house; that the former chief justice of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia resigned when his name was linked with the case; that there has never been a proper investigation behind this incident involving, as it does, on the one hand the highest levels of the judiciary in British Columbia and, on the other hand the sordid underworld of prostitution and heroin in Vancouver, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That a special commissioner be appointed to investigate this matter, with power to look into the sealed records of the King case.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of the motion at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

OIL PRICES—ADVERSE EFFECT ON CONSUMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the anticipated increase in the price of gasoline will cause budget-conscious consumers to use self-serves instead of full service stations, and that in such cases the oil companies use the excuse of lower sales to refuse to supply service stations, so the effect is that the oil companies will be able to increase their direct control over prices, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans):

That this House instruct the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to institute immediate inquiries into the effects of this concentration, and report to the House within two weeks.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, introduction of such a motion can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

In view of the fact that a new financing formula for provision of urban rapid transit is to be negotiated in the province of British Columbia; that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has indicated the importance of rapid transit in lowering energy costs in Canada; that Conservatives during the election promised assistance to urban rapid transit, I move, seconded by the hon member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In light of the publication of the white paper by the separatist government in Quebec, it is now more obvious than ever that should the referendum result in a Yes vote, Premier Lévesque will immediately initiate the retreat of Quebec from the Canadian federation.

[English]

Will the Prime Minister assure this House that he will tell Premier Lévesque, if his question does not state clearly his intention of breaking up Canada, that early next year this House will proceed with a bill to offer a clear, honest and straightforward question to the citizens of Quebec?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely not our intention to introduce a bill providing for a federal referendum.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—REQUEST FOR CORRECTION OF CERTAIN FIGURES IN QUEBEC WHITE PAPER

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary. As the white paper on sovereignty-association gives a distorted interpretation of the history of Canada and the situation of Quebeckers, of which this is an example taken out of the white paper, namely that Quebec has only 12 per cent of the Canadian railway lines, while no mention is made of the fact that 37 per cent of the CN and CP payrolls are paid out to Quebec citizens, what does the Prime Minister intend to do to remedy that situation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall make sure that all Canadian citizens understand exactly what the federal government has contributed to the development of the province of Quebec.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): One last supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

● (1415)

[English]

In light of a statement made Friday to a reporter, to the effect that he does not want to be the Abraham Lincoln of Canada, and since the Conservative party is not planning to join the "No" group in the referendum, and as the Prime Minister is continuing his offhand policy of appeasement, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to become the Neville Chamberlain of Canada?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as Prime Minister of Canada, I intend to prove to Quebeckers that we now have here in Ottawa a government that is determined to have a type of federalism that is open enough to make it comfortable for Quebeckers who want to build their future and achieve their personal fulfilment within a large country.

[English]

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION UNDER PRO-FEDERALIST UMBRELLA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Each time we have asked the Prime Minister whether he and his Quebec ministers and the Conservative party intend to join the pro-federalist umbrella committee under Quebec referendum Bill 92, he has failed to give us an answer but has merely repeated the same kind of answer he made to the last question, that he is interested in renewing federalism and he is going to change the status quo of federalism, mentioning lotteries and offshore mineral rights, the validity of which we question. In any case, he has failed to answer the question.

I want to know clearly from him whether he—along with his Quebec ministers—is, or is not, going to participate in the pro-federalist umbrella committee that will campaign for the "No" option in the referendum? Will he answer that question?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to repeat the assurance that members of the Progressive Conservative Party will participate in the umbrella committee opposing the option against federalism in the province of Quebec. I am pleased to repeat that.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He said the contrary last week.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Last week, prior to the white paper, and repeated in this House, his Minister of Supply and Services said he may want to vote "Yes" or "No" on the referendum question.

An hon. Member: Another flip-flop.

Mr. Allmand: This was repeated by the senator-minister in charge of CIDA. He said the same thing and, as a matter of fact, the Prime Minister said in the House that he wanted to reserve his answer to that question until he had seen the question.

Since the white paper has been published, and in view of what he has just said, has he spoken to the Minister of Supply and Services and to the minister responsible for CIDA and told them that they are to vote and campaign for the "No" answer in this referendum campaign? Has he spoken to them?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to them. There was no need to tell them that. That was their intention, as I made clear in the House the other day.

ENERGY

OIL PRICE AGREEMENT WITH ALBERTA—STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that the Prime Minister is about to give Canadians a horrendous Christmas present, and I would like to put the following question to him. Can the minister confirm that an energy agreement with Alberta has been arrived at as outlined in a document entitled "An Outline of the Initial Stage of National Energy Strategy," in which it is agreed that Canada will be paying near the world price for oil by 1983, namely, $29.75 a barrel, an increase of 120 per cent over the current domestic price; and does he not acknowledge that such a staggering price increase will deal a massive blow to Canadian consumers, workers and the economy in general?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that an agreement with the province of Alberta has not been arrived at. I can confirm that my expectation is that it will be possible for us—within, I would hope, the next several days—to get agreement involving all of the provinces of Canada and the federal government in respect of a general energy package.

Mr. Symes: Considering that a source in the Prime Minister's office has said that the agreement is 99 per cent certain, I do not think the Prime Minister is reflecting accurately the current stage of the pricing situation.

Will the Prime Minister also confirm that these oil prices, which will cost Canadian consumers some $14 billion, will be shared under the existing oil pricing formula, thereby giving the multinational oil companies—which already have record profit increases—an extra $7 billion? How does the Prime Minister reconcile that kind of rip-off to Canadians, who in 1983 will be paying an extra $700 a year just to heat their homes and drive their cars?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will want to review Hansard to determine whether or not he intended to say he did not believe that I was reflecting the situation exactly as it stands, and perhaps change his statement later in the day or tomorrow.

To come to the question and not its tone, one of the matters that we are looking at, as we prepare an energy package, is a means by which we can establish procedures and mechanisms which will encourage a substantial increase in investment by Canadians in Canada's energy potential so that we can accomplish two goals together: the first goal would be to substantially improve the supply situation in Canada, thus protecting us against uncertainty in the future; and the second goal would be to substantially increase the degree of Canadian participation in and ownership of the energy industry.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Prime Minister, if he were to table the documents which I have cited, we could take a look at the situation for ourselves. By way of a final supplementary, will the Prime Minister acknowledge that in a document entitled "Memorandum of Understanding: Alberta's Contribution to a National Energy Strategy", Alberta will agree to lend money from its Heritage Fund at commercial rates for future energy development, and that, in effet, Edmonton—not Ottawa—now becomes the capital of Canada as far as national energy planning is concerned? How does he reconcile this abdication of federal responsibility with the national interest?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is looking for a document which outlines the removal, in practice or in principle, of the capital of Canada, then no such document exists. There have been active discussions with some of the provinces, including the governments of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, which have put forth a number of options which might be the basis of agreement between the federal and provincial governments. None of those options have yet been decided upon, and none of them will be decided upon until there has been an opportunity for further discussion involving all the provinces and all the governments concerned.

I can assure the hon. member that the ultimate decision will be very much in the national interests of Canada and will have regard for the fundamental importance in this country of taking steps today which will guarantee against Canada being exposed to uncertain supplies of energy offshore that we need for this nation to grow.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL PREPARE PAPER ON PROPOSALS RESPECTING RENEWED FEDERALISM

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. Last Friday, following the release of the Quebec white paper, opposition members asked questions of the Prime Minister, who answered:

> These proposals show that since the last election on May 22 the federal government in our country is not prisoner of the status quo, that it is determined to set out various approaches to the issue of federalism in Canada, and that it can, in co-operation with all provinces which it considers as partners and certainly not as enemies, demonstrate the possibility of a renewed federalism.

Since reference is made to a renewed federalism, it is then obvious that changes are being considered. If changes are considered there will be a need for negotiations. Today, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he can indicate to the House what are the areas or fields of jurisdiction that his government is prepared to discuss with the provinces, and I would also like to ask him if a document has been, or is being, drafted; and, if so, whether that document could be tabled before the end of the year.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there have been several discussions in particular between the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations and his provincial counterparts concerning specific changes in the constitution or in the arrangements between the different levels of government. There is no plan as such for changing our constitution. There is no grand design for a constitutional reform but conversations have been held and I hope there will be others during the next federal-provincial conference in December.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT READY TO RETURN CERTAIN TAX FIELDS TO QUEBEC

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Since the issues raised at the constitutional conferences were only minor ones, and since there is nonetheless a problem which has been pending for many years and has been the subject of many representations, especially from the Quebec government and from many premiers, I would like to ask the government if, in its present openmindedness, it would be ready to return to Quebec all the taxation powers the federal government has appropriated during the war in 1942 and has always kept since?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF TELLIER TASK FORCE TO PREPARE ANSWER TO WHITE PAPER ON SOVEREIGNTY-ASSOCIATION

Hon. Francis Fox (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, but in his absence I will direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Following the publication of the white paper on sovereignty-association by the government of the Parti Québécois, and also following the dismantling by the right hon. Prime Minister of a unit within the Federal-Provincial Relations Office known as the Tellier group, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House if he now intends to restore that unit and publish a refutation of the white paper which gives out more propaganda than information, which treats confederation as a failure, which gives many misinterpretations of Canadian history and which, surely, should not remain without answer?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not my government's intention to publish an answer to the white paper. In the months to come the federal government will take steps and make proposals which will continue to show Quebeckers that there is now in Ottawa a government ready to consider changes.

As for misinterpretations of Canadian history in the Quebec white paper, I do not feel it is essential for the federal government to stress them by its own publication.

[English]

Mr. Fox: Since the Prime Minister indicated to the House on Friday, and once again today in his answer to me, that attitudes and concrete steps are more important than rhetoric, and that these are to be the hallmark of his government in constitutional reform, and since the Prime Minister has rejected the approach of holding a federal-provincial conference of first ministers to discuss the immediate, anyhow, proposals for constitutional reform, could the Prime Minister indicate to the House what these concrete steps are that they have in mind, and how they are to be brought to the attention of provincial first ministers, to the House of Commons and to the Canadian public in general?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we are in the process, now, of discussing important changes with various provincial governments. In many cases they are changes in administrative arrangements which would have, nonetheless, an impact on the way the federal and provincial levels of government work together. In some cases they are changes that would affect relations between the central government and all of the provinces; in other cases they are changes which would affect relations between the central government and some of the provinces.

I do not think we are at a stage of agreement yet where any of those could usefully be brought before the House of Commons. I would hope that it might be possible for us to reach agreement on some of those matters at the first ministers' meeting. Certainly, I can give the hon. member and the House the undertaking that when we are at a stage where we think we have changes that can significantly advance co-operation between the federal government and provincial governments, we will make them known in this House and elsewhere.

NATIONAL UNITY

REQUEST CANADIANS BE INFORMED ON CONSTITUTIONAL CRISIS BROUGHT ABOUT BY QUEBEC PROPOSALS

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, as we question the government, their position gets clearer. We now know that this government has no intention of conducting an intensive campaign for the "No" option in the Quebec referendum. I would now put my question to the Prime Minister. If he feels missionary work is not useful in the province of Quebec, will he encourage his ministers to travel across the rest of Canada to inform other Canadians of the constitutional crisis implied by the proposal for separating Quebec from Canada, since the white paper urges other provinces to ask for direct participation in new Quebec-Canada bodies?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is this government's intention to go on travelling across Canada, and this includes Quebec of course, to point out the advantages of federalism and the disadvantages in the proposal put forward by the Quebec government.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT EXPLAIN CLEARLY POSITION ON QUEBEC PROPOSALS

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Laval-des-Rapides): Since Quebec is not isolated in this constitutional crisis, since it is not isolated either in its requests to the Canadian government for changes in the relationships between the federal government and the provinces, does the right hon. Prime Minister not think, despite all his suggestions and the confirmation he only wants to change the attitudes, to show his government will be flexible—on this we agree, because we also are for flexibility—but what the right hon. Prime Minister does not understand now, as the crisis deepens, is that it is important for the federal government to put their position forward publicly, very clearly and very precisely in order the counteract the PQ proposal and their progapanda so that Quebeckers realize a No vote will only plunge them into the status quo?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, clearly, of course, it is essential for the Canadian government to demonstrate to Canadians, including Quebeckers, in a public and concrete way, that there has been a change of attitude here in Ottawa at the federal level. I agree that there is now, with the publication of the white paper, another development in the debate on Canada's future. I agree it is essential that the Canadian government continue its efforts and demonstrate to Quebeckers there has been a change here, that it is quite possible to have not only talk of flexibility but concrete actions to show flexibility. This we have been doing since the May 22 election, and this is the course we intend to go on following.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO PURSUE POLICY OF PRECEDING GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Ottawa-Carleton): I am trying to understand the innermost thought of the right hon. Prime Minister with respect to the constitution and the referendum. Last Friday, he told the House, "Our government will continue to make concrete proposals." Then, later, "What Quebeckers have with this national government is a national government committed to constitutional reform." The second quotation is clearly much broader than the first one and presupposes the discussion of a certain number of interdependent constitutional matters which would resemble, of course, the efforts made by the previous government in this area. To make concrete proposals, it is still necessary to comprehend the interdependence of every one of the proposals to be made. In that context, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to continue the efforts made by the previous government at the more recent federal-provincial conferences?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is worth while for us to have in the House of Commons someone who can participate in the context of the Pepin-Robarts commission. I hope he intends to suggest positive and concrete proposals during the coming months, as he has in the past, and that he can persuade his colleagues to change the position they have taken in the past.

As to the position of this government, I say to the hon. member that we intend to continue to analyse the status of possible agreements on constitutional changes with the provinces. There have already been talks between the Government of Canada and some of the provinces on the possibility of making amendments, and similar matters. We do not want to start anew the consultations that have already taken place with the provinces. We want to continue the work done by the former government, but we do not have at this moment a magic formula to present to the House or the people of Canada. We intend to continue the work already started, and I hope we can have the positive contribution of the hon. member and his colleagues.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER MET PÉQUISTE CANDIDATE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

The newspaper Le Devoir recently reported that the Prime Minister, on the occasion of a visit he made to Montreal, met Mr. Jacques Desmarais, the Péquiste candidate in the by-election of Montreal-Maisonneuve. Will the Prime minister tell us whether it is true that he met that individual who wants to destroy Canada; and, if so, just what was he doing there?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that man was probably a member of a group which submitted a brief to me about the strike in the port of Montreal, but it was only as such that he was there.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Prime Minister feels embarrassed because of those meetings and because of the friends he has in Quebec.

[English]

It is obvious that the government is very embarassed by what is taking place—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: —and does not want us to indicate clearly to Canadians that, in fact, the Prime Minister is making a sweet deal with the Parti Québécois.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: Is the Prime Minister ready, today, to admit that when he talks about positive action and openness vis-à-vis the provinces and, more particularly, vis-à-vis Québec, the only action that has taken place has been—

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Mr. Ouellet: —giving away to the Quebec government the things that they want.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There must be a limit, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ouellet: We have witnessed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member started with an argumentative question and now seems to want to follow it with an argument. I think I have to stop it.

Mr. Ouellet: My question is as follows: Does the Prime Minister know that the deal by his minister for sport, in doing away with Loto Canada, a very popular program and a success story in Quebec—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: —has been a deal that has pleased only the Parti Québécois, because now there will still be a lottery in Quebec but the word "Canada" will no longer be front and centre; the word "Canada" has been abolished by his minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Shame on you.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I think, in answer to what I guess was intended as a question, I can only say that I think it will be in the interests of federalism in Canada if the hon. member and his colleagues stop fighting the battles of the past and, instead, will join with us in building a federalism for the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is why you are in opposition.

Mr. Crosbie: And will stay there.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ACID RAIN FALL-OUT—RELATIONS WITH U.S.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. The environment minister is quoted in yesterday's Sunday Star as saying Canada cannot negotiate an agreement with the United States to turn off or reduce acid rain fall-out until after the presidential election.

Is it the policy or the attitude of the Government of Canada that Mr. Carter is a lame-duck president and therefore, they cannot enter into any negotiations with the White House until after January, 1981?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that negotiations between Canada and the United States which are aimed at leading to an agreement are going on now and will continue. All I have said is that it is unrealistic to assume, with the complications of those negotiations from a technical, economic and scientific point of view, that we will be in a position to have the agreement in practically completed form and signed before the next presidential election.

• (1440)

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for bailing out the Prime Minister on that one. My supplementary question is to the Minister of the Environment. If Canada is going on its own anyway at the present time, can the minister tell the House what measures his department has taken to control, eliminate or at least reduce acid rain, and what timeframe he has in mind for completion? By way of a specific example, what directive or directives have been sent to the International Nickel Company.

Mr. Fraser: I thank the hon. member for his question. As the hon. member and the House know, the present regime of law to control the emission sources lies with the provinces. As I have said to the House, I do not intend at the moment to change that.

With regard to the company that the hon. member mentioned, the chief executive officer of Inco has been written to by myself, and I have asked for a meeting with him along with representatives of some other companies. That meeting will be arranged as soon as possible.

NATIONAL UNITY

COMMENTS OF PREMIER OF ALBERTA—FEDERAL ROLE IN EVENT OF "YES" VOTE IN QUEBEC REFERENDUM

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and it is to the Prime Minister. It was reported recently that Mr. Lougheed stated that in the event of a Yes vote in the referendum, the negotiations in terms of sovereignty-association with Quebec would be up to the provincial governments to handle.

Does the Prime Minister accept that we really are a nation of ten provinces only and that the federal government would have no role in such negotiations as indicated or implied by the Premier of Alberta.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that quotation attributed to the Premier of Alberta. If anyone did make that kind of assertion, I naturally would disagree with it.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, that is the second time in about ten days that the Premier Minister has indicated he is not aware of what the Premier of Alberta is saying. Last week, the Premier of Alberta made a very definite statement with regard to oil prices: world prices now, or the oil stays in the ground.

The Prime Minister surprised us for several days by saying he had not seen a transcript or spoken to Mr. Lougheed about it. Has he since called the Premier of Alberta and spoken to him about that statement? If so, what makes him so confident he will make an acceptable deal on oil prices for Canada, in the face of that statement? Was there some kind of arrangement beforehand, or what is all this rhetorical game about?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, in answer to what I gather was intended to be a supplementary question, I can assure the hon. member that I now have had an opportunity to see the transcript of the remarks the Premier of Alberta made in Vancouver. The press reports were very substantially exaggerated. The Premier of Alberta indicated that he was prepared to accept various aspects of the proposal we had been putting forward.

Mr. Ouellet: Answer the question.

Mr. Clark: The hon. member for Papineau, who distinguished himself recently with a question on the floor of the House, has asked me to answer the question of his colleague, the other former minister. I have not, personally, been in touch with the Premier of Alberta, but my Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been in touch with the minister responsible for energy policy in the province of Alberta. There have been very useful discussions between the two ministers. They encourage me, as they encourage my minister, that we have the very real prospect of moving toward agreement on the question of a national energy package.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT CARTER—REQUEST AGENDA INCLUDE DISCUSSION OF AUTO PACT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will he undertake that when he meets with U.S. President Jimmy Carter later this week, he will raise the matter of the operation of the Canada-U.S. auto pact as part of an effort to ensure that Canada gets its fair share of automotive jobs, production, research and development and investment.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will raise the matter.

ENERGY

LIMITATION OF EXPORTS TO U.S.—EFFECT ON EAST COAST REFINERIES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. With the government's recent announcement that exports to the United States are to be limited to 50 barrels a day of light oil and condensates, can the minister assure the House that this will not adversely affect production with east coast refineries, where employment could be adversely affected.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that question, knowing his long-standing concern with regard to employment matters in his area and province. I want to assure him that, indeed, the reduction in terms of exports is directed toward the very interest the hon. member raises in his question; that is, to make sure we have sufficient supplies in Canada in order to meet this winter's requirements. I thank the hon. member for his continued interest and assure him that is the direction in which this particular decision has been made.

IMMIGRATION

REASON FOR CHANGE IN POLICY RESPECTING FAMILY ADMISSIONS

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister of state responsible for multiculturalism. Is the minister aware that his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has announced that he is cutting down the proportion of family admissions to Canada in relation to independent immigrants? Does he agree with this inhumane change in Canada's immigration policy?

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration): Speaking on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the hon. member's question. What has occurred, as I understand it, is that there was some concern about the number of family classes being admitted, as opposed to independents. I can assure the hon. member that the reunification of families, in terms of admitting others to this great country of ours, is uppermost in the minister's mind.

Mr. Kaplan: I believe the document tabled by the minister speaks for itself on the question. I want to know whether the minister responsible for multiculturalism knew anything about this policy. I can see from the fact that he did not stand up that he did not, unless he would care to tell the House where he stands on the admission of family-sponsored immigrants in relation to independents.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Kaplan: He doesn't know anything about it.

Mr. Alexander: It is not a question of his knowing anything about it! If the hon. member is interested in an answer, I just gave him the answer. I indicated to the hon. member that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has high on his list, in terms of bringing immigrants to Canada, the policy of reunification of families; which is something that we in opposition made sure that the government implemented by way of a preamble to the present Immigration Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou on a supplementary question.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS ON FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): I should like to put a supplementary question Mr. Speaker.

My supplementary question is, since it deals with social policies:

[English]

Now that the line of the Tory government on family allowance is, "My wife doesn't need it", can the minister of social development, the secretary of state or the Minister of National Health and Welfare inform the House whether they will table the proposed Tory proposal on family allowances before Christmas, in order that Canadian mothers will know whether they will get their full indexation and what will happen to that unique federal program for families?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the minister rises to answer, I should correct the record. It was not the hon. member who said to me that this was a supplementary question; I made that assumption quite incorrectly. The hon. member was entitled to the floor, nonetheless.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): There is no proposal, Mr. Speaker, so therefore it will not be tabled. As I think I indicated in a previous answer to a question from the same hon. member, when I took over the department I carried on the work she had begun with regard to looking at all the social security programs that the Department of National Health and Welfare offers. That was both in terms of equity and to find ways in which we could provide money to those who most need it and, indeed, are most in need.

It is in the spirit of those reviews that the "proposal" came out in the newspaper. I think she well knows, and I can assure the House, that there is no proposal. That is an option which is under investigation by the department as, indeed, it was when she was the minister. I might add, now that he has raised the scare, that mothers can expect their family allowances to continue in the New Year.

INQUIRY WHETHER FAMILY ALLOWANCE BUDGET WILL BE CUT

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I find the minister's reply rather inconsistent, since during the weekend the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister, whom I heard myself on television, spoke about the possibility of reducing family allowances, something which was never contemplated by the Liberal government. I would like to ask the minister if he can assure this House that the total budget for family allowances, which is over $2 billion and that for the child tax credit, which is over $600 million, will be earmarked, whatever the plans are, for schemes covering Canadian children, and not to keep foolish election promises?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, from 1962 to 1977—

Miss Bégin: Get back to 1979.

Mr. Crombie: —the amount of money which was used for income redistribution in this country was such that it did not move the level of poverty or deal with the question of poverty in any significant way. In fact, the difficulty has been that as we put in more and more money for income redistribution, we did not target it for those most in need.

Half of the $15 billion which goes into income redistribution does not touch those who are below the poverty line. That is why it is essential that we look not only at the family allowance, but also at the child tax exemption to see ways in which we can increase the effectiveness of the child tax credit, because it is equitable and targets at those most in need, something which I wish the previous government had done ten years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FAMILY ALLOWANCE PROGRAM RETAIN PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members opposite for that ovation.

In view of previous questions, and in view of the report this weekend in the Toronto Star concerning the government's intentions with regard to the family allowance program, can the minister assure this House today that the Conservative government will not tamper with the principle of universality on which the family allowance program is based and which the minister himself said just last week has served this country well?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week, indeed the family allowance program has served this country well. I cannot give the hon. member the assurance he seeks because, as I indicated, my department right now is studying ways by which we can make the family allowance program, the child tax credit and the tax exemption more equitable for those most in need. I might add that my department is also considering whether we can allocate funds to those on whom poverty rests most, that is, the young, the old, women-led families and the disabled and handicapped. That is the program of this government.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, if the minister cannot assure this House that the principle of universality, which we uphold, will be upheld, can he assure the House that the money saved on any detraction from universality which is embedded in the options the hon. minister is reviewing will be used for the benefit of low-income Canadians, and not handed over to the President of the Treasury Board as another sacrifice on the altar of restraint by those who expected tax relief from this government but who are getting the opposite?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MEASURES TO RESTORE CONFIDENCE IN DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: No tie.

Mr. de Corneille: We are told by recent public opinion polls that the population is losing confidence in our democratic processes, partly, I suppose, because of apparent or at least perceived reversals in government policy on such election promises as a stimulative deficit, keeping our interest rates down, and moving our embassy in Israel.

In view of our concern about such loss of confidence, particularly as it might influence our young people, I would like to ask what specific measures the government has in mind to rationalize the management of its decision-making processes to the Canadian people and thus to restore confidence in democratic institutions.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in very simple terms, what we intend to do is make this Parliament one which much more accurately reflects the views of individual Canadians. We intend to do this by providing more room to more private members to have more influence on what is done, and to end the domination that has existed for far too long not only by ministers but also by party leaders in the House.

Second, we intend to proceed as quickly as we can with the freedom of information legislation which was introduced and has generally been responded to positively by other members of the House. We hope, as my colleague the minister sponsoring this legislation said at the time, that if there are members of this House who have better and more effective language to propose, they will propose it.

Third, we intend to take a very strong and thorough look at Crown corporations, which some in this House argue belong to the people—although the people do not believe that—to see if we can find ways in which we can substitute state-ownership, which is not personal, by citizen-ownership which can be personal. Those are some of the steps and reforms that I hope, given the interest of the hon. member in ensuring that institutions serve the interests of individuals, he will support us in.

OWNERSHIP OF AND JURISDICTION OVER NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would like to know whether the recent resource-related threat of the Premier of Alberta has caused the Prime Minister to reconsider certain directions he is taking. I refer to the willingness of the Prime Minister to sell out the common heritage which all Canadians share in our offshore resources.

I also refer to the haste of the Prime Minister to create provincehood in the Yukon, which implies the sell-out of the common heritage which all Canadians share in our northern resources onshore and offshore. Does the Prime Minister not believe that the first steps toward giving away the oil and gas resources of the north, recently estimated by the Geological Survey of Canada to contain a minimum of $375 billion worth of oil and $540 billion worth of gas—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Watson: —are a question of importance to be considered by Parliament; and will he now reconsider his refusal to have a parliamentary committee review and consider the recent changes in the role of the commissioner in the Yukon which create, for all practical purposes, de facto provincehood in that territory?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has already used a rather long preamble, and followed his question with a subsequent suggestion. I think he has gone as far as he should be permitted.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer such questions as I could find. First, no, we do not intend to reverse our position on offshore resources. Second, no, we do not intend to reverse our determination to move the Yukon toward provincial status. Naturally, as I have indicated before, there will be recourse to a referendum and we will not move beyond the law as it now exists without the approval both of the people of the Yukon and of this Parliament. I am afraid that in the welter of it all, I lost the third, fourth or fifth questions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORTED CUTBACKS IN ESSENTIAL SERVICES ON RESERVES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, perhaps the Prime Minister can answer my question.

In light of the fact that the Sunday edition of the Toronto Star released details of a yet-to-be published report basically stating that essential services on many reserves do not exist, that welfare dependency on these reserves is nine times the Ontario average, and that three federal departments are the cause of this neglect, would the Prime Minister explain how further government cutbacks could do anything but further increase unemployment and further deteriorate health conditions on Ontario Indian reserves and, indeed, on all reserves in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report to which the hon. member refers. Because of my own interest in the matter, I do know something about the conditions of starvation and great social inequity which exists on Indian reserves across the country and among native people generally.

I have had the opportunity personally to discuss with representatives of Indian groups across the country practical steps we might take to resolve that situation. One of the views which the Indian leadership and I share is that an important step will be to place much more authority, responsibility and control over spending in the hands of local band councils. That is the direction in which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is taking this government, and as the hon. member knows, that is a reform and a change from past practices.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RELATIONS WITH MIDDLE EAST—REMARKS OF MR. GILLIES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which has to do with the continuing inability of the government to manage Canada's relations with the Middle East with any intelligence and sensitivity.

All of Saturday I had quoted to me directly a statement made in Los Angeles by the Prime Minister's chief policy adviser who, in pointing out the potential for Canada to become a world oil supplier, went on to say:

—possibly enough to return the Middle East to the insignificance it so richly deserves—

These are statements that have been made several times and attributed to the chief policy adviser of the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that if these comments by his chief policy adviser were made, they do not represent the policy of the government, and that an apology ought to be made by the government for this provocative and inflammatory comment by the former member for Don Valley?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I saw that article and, naturally, was interested in it. Consequently, I spoke to Dr. Gillies and have received from him a clarification and the assurance that his comment was in relation to the influence of the Middle East in times when OPEC was at its strength, in terms of a cartel operation which can increase the price of fuel that has to be paid here and in other countries.

The point that Dr. Gillies was making was that the capacity of a country in any part of the world to have such an impact on prices will damage Canadian interests, and that that capacity will be significantly reduced as this nation moves toward energy self-sufficiency.

Mr. MacEachen: Does the Prime Minister tell me that his chief policy adviser did not use the expression, "possibly enough to return the Middle East to the insignificance it so richly deserves"? I want to know if his chief policy adviser used those words and, if so, how they can possibly be used to defend the interpretation which the Prime Minister gives because, of course, the Middle East includes other important nations, including Israel, than the members of OPEC.

Mr. Clark: My understanding is that Dr. Gillies used those words explicity and exclusively in relation to the capacity to form cartels.

Mr. MacEachen: Will the Prime Minister also clarify Dr. Gillies' comment when he spoke about the cheap dollar and said that maybe the cheap dollar has been a contributing factor to the country's 9 per cent inflation rate, and then said, "Maybe it hasn't fallen enough"? Dr. Gillies suggested that, "Maybe if it falls to 70 cents". Would the Prime Minister mind clarifying that comment?

Mr. Clark: That comment also, naturally, was of some interest to me when I read it in the paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I spoke to Dr. Gillies about that and he said that the statement, or a statement similar to the one quoted, was made in the course of a panel discussion in which the question was raised as to whether a further drop in the value of the Canadian dollar would significantly help our competitive position. Doctor Gillies expressed his view that a significant drop in the Canadian dollar would not significantly help our export position. He certainly did not suggest at any time that he or I or anyone in the government would recommend that that be the level at which the Canadian dollar should settle.

Indeed, as hon. members will know, the government is taking the decision now and facing the decisions which are designed in part to ensure that the value of the Canadian dollar does not slide further.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALLMAND—QUEBEC REFERENDUM—ANSWERS OF PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which you might think has to do with the attire of the hon. member Eglinton-Lawrence

(Mr. de Corneille), but it does not. I will return to that matter on another day.

My question of privilege relates to the answers given in the House today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to certain questions I had asked him. I maintain that the Prime Minister misled the House of Commons and the Canadian people in the answers he gave to my questions. If I recall it correctly, he said that he and his Quebec ministers would campaign for the "No" option in the Quebec referendum and would participate in the pro-federalist committee, and he said that this had always been their position.

I should like to read into the record what was said last week from his seat in the House by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle). I had put the following question to the Prime Minister:

> Does this mean that the Conservative party has no position on sovereignty association, and do I understand the Prime Minister to say that the militants of his party are free to support whatever side they want on this question?

Next came an interjection from the Minister of Supply and Services when he said from his seat:

> Ask me the question and I will answer yes or no.

In a press conference in Montreal last week the Minister of Supply and Services, in announcing a policy conference of the Conservative party in Quebec, said—and these are the quotes:

> The Progressive Conservative Party should stay outside the (pro-federalist) umbrella committee because we have different objectives—

He also said:

> Our position is not the same as Mr. Ryan's—

He was referring to the provincial leader. But even the Prime Minister, in answer to my question last week—as reported at page 804 of Hansard of that day said:—

> It is my expectation that the question will be phrased in such a way that members of the Progressive Conservative Party will want to vote against that question. That is my expectation of what will happen—but I have not seen the question proposed by Mr. Lévesque; perhaps the hon. member has.

I am not opposed to the Prime Minister's party doing another flip-flop on this question, as they have done on many others, but I am opposed to the Prime Minister trying to mislead the House and the country when he said today that they are for the "No" option and that they have always been for the "No" option, since the Minister of Supply and Services said in the House that he could have voted yes or no, since he was supported by the minister in charge of CIDA who sits in the other place, and since the Prime Minister himself said that he did not know what he was going to do until he saw the final question put in the referendum.

If the question period is to have any significance, then we must be able to expect from the Prime Minister and his ministers the truth in answering questions from members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Allmand: Read the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), in concluding his intervention, made the suggestion that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) did not tell the truth, that should be clarified.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was only able to take notes today and I do not have the "blues" as yet, but the Prime Minister today tried to give the impression in the House that he and his ministers had been supporting the "No" position in the referendum today, yesterday and last week. I pointed out that it is on the record in Hansard that the Minister of Supply and Services, as reported at page 804 of Hansard of October 31 last week, said:

> Ask me the question and I will answer yes or no.

And in a press conference in Montreal he said the same thing. I am saying that today the Prime Minister, deliberately or not, was misleading the House in saying that that had been the position of the Progressive Conservative Party last week. We should not have to accept that loose, sloppy answers in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Before we go further, I want to keep this matter on a plane of proper procedure. The hon. member knows that he is raising what might appear to be a disagreement. That has happened many times and often members have raised the point, in response to an answer given by a minister, that if there has been the appearance of a contradictory response on two occasions, that the minister be given an opportunity, through the raising of a question of privilege, to comment on it and thus give the Chair an opportunity to determine whether it is a simple disagreement or whether there is a procedural matter.

Also, it is not necessarily a matter of the substance of what the hon. member is raising—because in substance he is raising something of a nature similar to that which had been raised many times before, as I have indicated—but it is solely a matter of form. As I think the House knows, it is one thing entirely as to what we are talking about when we get into matters of this sort. These are not restrictions on what the hon. member wishes to say but simply restrictions on the manner in which an hon. member says something in the House. The hon. member is entitled to say what he said today. He is not entitled to suggest that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) did not tell the truth. I noticed he departed from that which was getting very dangerously close to being unparliamentary in his language; that has not been done. Now it rests with me to determine whether this is simply a matter of disagreement or whether in fact there is a matter of privilege.

● (1510)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I think the old pugilist across the floor would probably serve himself and the House well if he would read the record of Hansard, both my reply to his colleague, the hon. member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mrs. Sauvé), the other day when I indicated that the quotation he cited was an incorrect one, and also the answer I gave earlier today when I indicated that members of this party would be encouraged to campaign under the umbrella of the group opposing the position put forward in the white paper by the government of Quebec. If he reads the record, his subsequent contributions will be both more informed and more temperate.

Mr. Speaker: The House will know that we are in the area of a disagreement, not a matter of privilege.

MR. ETHIER—ALLEGED ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO POLITICAL GROUP—PUBLISHING REPORT IN ENGLISH ONLY

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance that I rise on a question of privilege today because it involves a good friend of every member of the House, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) whom I believe to be sincere and conscientious.

My question of privilege concerns a press release published by the minister on October 19, 1979. Of course, Mr. Speaker, you will wonder why I did not raise the matter earlier. I will explain, but first of all I would like to quote from this press release:

For immediate release: Report of the Beef Import Consultative Committee, Ottawa, October 19, 1979. Agriculture Minister John Wise today announced that he has received the report of the Beef Import Consultative Committee and is studying it carefully.

The committee, made up of five members of Parliament under the chairmanship of Bert Hargrave (PC—

—I presume that this means Progressive Conservative——Medicine Hat), solicited briefs and held hearings to obtain the views of the private sector on beef import legislation.

More than 25 briefs were submitted by representatives of beef producers, packers, importers, consumers and foreign exporters.

Mr. Wise noted that the report would be of considerable help in developing beef import legislation.

The report includes a summary of the briefs received, a copy of the briefs in full, and the transcript of the public hearings.

"It provides an invaluable insight into the views of a good cross section of the groups and individuals who would be affected by beef import legislation," Mr. Wise said.

"I would like to commend the committee on carrying out its mandate in such a thorough manner."

Mr. Speaker, my office received that press release Wednesday, October 24 and realizing that it was about a committee report on a sector of farming industry which is rather important in my county, I asked my Liberal colleagues which member of my party had been invited to sit on that committee. I was amazed to learn that no member of the official opposition had been invited so I took the first opportunity to question the minister, which was on October 30 in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. According to the information I got in that committee I think I have no other solution but to present this case under the form of a question of privilege of which I gave you notice.

First, Mr. Speaker, the heading of that press release mentions a consultative committee and in the second paragraph it is said and I quote:

The committee, made up of five members of Parliament under the chairmanship of Bert Hargrave—

—as I said earlier—

—(PC—Medicine Hat)—

This release seems to give much importance to two specific words, the words "committee" and "report" as they are mentioned no fewer than nine times. I find them very important too, particularly the word committee as I think that according to the regular parliamentary terminology a committee is bipartite or made up of the group of persons representing different political parties. Except of course, if it is referred to as the caucus committee.

The word committee has been used in this release in a way that raises doubt in my mind and seems to imply to the reader that this committee was formed or made of members of various political parties.

This doubt disappeared when I questioned the minister in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. He advised me as well as the committee that the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh), the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald), and the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), Progressive Conservative members all, were in fact the only five hon. members on this committee. Moreover, the minister recognized that he had authorized the spending of public funds for the preparation and publication of a caucus committee report, as well as made use of government facilities such as telephones, news releases, contacts and what have you, not to mention the services of public service employee Mike Gifford as secretary to this group of five people. And it is rightfully, indeed, that I am referring to a group of five people, because judging from the statement made by the chairman of this group, Mr. Bert Hargrave, the Progressive Conservative member for Medicine Hat, this is not at all the committee referred to in the news release.

As proof of what I am saying, I shall quote from the report part of what Mr. Hargrave stated, when the representatives of the Consumer Association of Canada appeared before this group of five people on September 21, 1979 in reply to a question from Mrs. Ruth Jackson, as reported on page 3:

[English]

And it is true we are a government caucus committee.

[Translation]

Properly defined, Mr. Speaker, that means a committee representing only one political party, namely the party of the government. In specific terms, that group of five, that caucus committee is really a political committee, a partisan committee. When we look up the word "caucus" in Harraps' Dictionary, we find the definition "political clique". That is precisely what I mean when I say it may not and must not be financed by taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker, the mere fact of having authorized public expenditures for a political group such as the five-member committee proves that my question of privilege is well-founded and that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) could be called upon to appear before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to explain the propriety or legality, if you would rather, of those expenditures. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the only reason for my question of privilege, because it could happen that a less than scrupulous government, such as the one we now have, would support groups with political affiliations. Instead, I shall refer you to the last three lines of that press release which read as follows:

> Copies of the report are available in English from Information Services, Agriculture Canada, Ottawa, Ont. K1A 0C7.
> The document is in the process of translation and will be available shortly in French.

That means the media can obtain this information. Those three lines, Mr. Speaker, add insult to injury. As I said earlier, a government without scruples can commit public funds in politically-oriented ventures. It can also show its arrogance, as the present government has done, by neglecting members of Parliament and inviting only the media to ask for copies of this report which was prepared and written by civil servants paid by public funds. That is a clear indication of this government's arrogant attitude.

I have just shown how injury was caused by offering copies of the report only to the media. I would now like to demonstrate the insult aspect. The press release finishes by stating:

> The document is in the process of translation and will be available shortly in French.

I noted in the report that no French-speaking group was invited to submit a brief. Does that mean that the report was to be unilingual and that the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and his department no longer comply with the Official Languages Act? Mr. Speaker, since passage of the Official Languages Act, which recognizes that French and English are the two official languages of this country, yourself and your predecessor have always complied and ensured compliance with this act with utmost respect. I congratulate you in that regard and it is with no assurance that I rise today on this question of privilege. In his press release, the minister emphasizes the importance of this report and even notes that the report will be of considerable help in developing beef import legislation.

Mr. Speaker, given the importance of this report as underlined by the minister, is it not fair to admit that it is equally important to me in my mother tongue, in French? Is it not of equal importance to the people who read only one of the official languages, that is French? After all, their tax money also contributed to pay for the publication of this report. Is it not of equal importance to this meat producer who reads only French? Is it not of equal importance to the Canadian consumer who reads only French? Is it not equally important to all hon. members of this House who, like millions of proud Canadians, read only French?

Mr. Speaker, among the rights and privileges of elected members, one of the first is to be treated as equal. That is why I say, in conclusion, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has ignored the Official Languages Act and has ignored the rights and privileges of members. He prevented me from discharging my responsibilities as I had committed myself to do in front of my constituents. Once again, I repeat that he has denied me the opportunity to read this document in my mother tongue, which is indeed one of the official languages in this country, while all members who read the other official language will be able to discharge themselves of their responsibilities. Is this a demonstration of equal rights and privileges of all members in this new government?

According to information supplied by officials from the Department of Agriculture, this document is not going to be translated into French for another five or six months. Therefore, I feel that my rights and privileges as a member have been violated by the hon. minister's action. Mr. Speaker, in light of the facts I have just presented, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd):

> That the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) be asked to appear before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that it be ordered that the said report be withdrawn and not made available to anyone until all hon. members can get it in either of the two official languages.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I regret I did not have notice of the hon. member's intention to raise this point of privilege, but in response let me say that I think part of it is utter nonsense. The latter part did, indeed, make a great deal of common sense. In the first part I think he is trying to make a mountain out of a molehill.

With reference to the latter charge, I certainly want to take that very seriously. I provided a full explanation to the members of the standing committee last week, and I would be happy to appear before that committee again, or any other committee of the House as far as that is concerned.

In the first part of his charge he indicated that he would not want us to consult with the beef industry. Of course, we want to consult with industry prior to bringing forth pieces of legislation. That is the position we have taken. It is a commitment we have given and a commitment that we intend, indeed, to fulfil.

With reference to releasing the report, I should make it very clear to the House that if this was referred to in the press release as a report, quite openly that is not a correct reference.

An hon. Member: It was referred to as a report.

Mr. Wise: If that is the reference in the press release, I am suggesting it is not a proper reference. The committee is still active. Indeed, a meeting was held last week and I think it is intended that it hold further meetings before a report will be issued to me.

What the hon. member refers to is a very lengthy document which is nothing more than a transcript of the meetings held by the consultative committee. There was a great deal of interest and inquiry as to whether this information would be made available. We do not want to keep it from reaching the public or, indeed, members of the House. I indicated that the information should be made public. The difficulty arose after we had made the decision to make it public, when we found a great deal of time would be required before it could be translated. I regret that very much, but I can assure the hon. member and the House that when the committee has completed its meetings and issues a report to me on its findings that report will be made public. But it will not be made public until such time as it can be presented in both official languages.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. By way of a question of privilege the hon. member has raised a rather important matter. The minister has made an intervention. I would certainly want to examine the facts in some detail and to weigh the arguments rather heavily. The hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) has made a very reasoned and well prepared intervention. I would want to examine it to see whether there is any area of privilege.

The minister has made a response, as he said, extemporaneously and without any warning. If there is a matter of continuing concern the minister has indicated he is prepared to appear before a committee. He has explained the nature of the document and the way it has come about. However, only after examining all of the presentation of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell and giving it some thought can I determine whether there are any other outstanding matters which would cause me to consider this a matter of privilege. If there are, I would want to give the minister an opportunity to answer after he has had the opportunity for the same kind of preparation.

I will reserve the matter until I have had an opportunity to consider it. If there is an argument in respect of the question of privilege to be answered by the minister, I will certainly give the minister and members an indication of some time that might be taken by parties to argue the matter further.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on this very point, it was not too clear to me from your remarks whether you will be looking at the propriety of spending federal funds for caucus research activities. What is at stake here, and I think it is important that you give some guidance on this question, is whether a caucus of the government should carry out some research on its own with public funds. It is totally appropriate that a caucus should carry out such research, but whether it should use public funds for that purpose is the question.

[Mr. Wise.]

That is a matter that is very new. I do not think it has been done in the past. Surely we would like to have your guidance on the activities of the government because it seems this is not an isolated case. Other ministers have asked other members on the government side to embark on all kinds of research. We feel that while the Conservative party can do all kinds of research on its own with the help of backbenchers if they are not competent enough to be ministers and the government wants to use them or sweeten their non-promotion by involving them in some activities, but surely this ought not to be done with public funds.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my friend raises a very good point and I can understand his concern as a minister of the former government which really did not do very much consulting with members in its own backbenches with regard to various matters. It is a fact that in former times members of the government used public funds outside the public service, and I think quite appropriately. They retained task forces outside the public sector, and engaged consultants and experts and paid them by the day, on a per diem basis. I think it is quite appropriate for governments to do that.

What worries me about the point being made by the hon. member, and alluded to by the hon. member who raised the question of privilege in the first place, is the suggestion that somehow or other it is improper for public purposes to engage professional consultants outside the public service. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has indicated he is going to release the report. It is quite proper to engage others outside the public service, but it is suggested that for some reason or other it is improper for the Government of Canada to consult members of Parliament.

If that is the proposition which the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is asking to have examined, then I think that is astounding—that it would be proper to, for example, utilize the telephones or the printing facility of the Department of Agriculture to even print the press release, or a person versed within the public service to help the group stay on its path. According to the hon. member, that would be appropriate if the persons being utilized for this service were consultants from outside the public service, but if they are members of Parliament, then it somehow becomes improper.

I think that it is a question which should be looked at, because it should be settled once and for all, particularly in the context in which it was raised by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who indicated when asked by the hon. member that he intended to make the report public. What the minister has said is that rather than choose someone from outside Parliament, he would rather choose someone from inside Parliament. I believe that is quite appropriate. I can understand why the hon. member is upset about that, because that has never happened in his party.

One of the changes the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the new government have wanted to make is to engage as much as possible the attention of members of Parliament. I know that as time goes on the attention of members of Parliament on the other side of the House will be engaged as well, if they have anything to contribute. As for the right of hon. members to speak in the House or in standing committee with regard to agricultural matters, it has not been curtailed. What has happened is that for the first time those rights, which are traditional, have now been augmented and expanded. Members of Parliament for the first time are able to advise the government in a way that will become public with respect to policy and the formation of public policy. I think it is a very healthy, new approach toward the openness of government.

Mr. Rae: You have to be a Tory, Walter.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I look forward to the publication of the report, and I am sure that my agricultural friend, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), does so as well.

Mr. Speaker: Order. My point a moment ago was that the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) has raised two or three points. He raised one point about language to which the minister made the preliminary answer that this was an internal document, that it was used in the English language for English-speaking members, and that, therefore, only when they attempted to make it public did they become aware of the need for translating it.

The hon. member raised a number of other matters which may not have been met by the minister in what he said today. The minister opened his intervention by indicating that he did not have notice and therefore was not prepared to respond fully to the points raised by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. I indicated to the House that perhaps it might benefit from an opportunity to examine what the hon. member has said to determine whether or not there are arguments. If I find that there are arguments which need to be met, I shall give the House an opportunity to meet those arguments. In fact, one of the points of arguments was referred to by the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) whether there is a question, which I noted, about the use of the stationery or facilities of the Department of Agriculture for the release of this document.

I will examine these arguments and see if on the face of them there is a point to be met. If there is a point to be met, I think that it would be better met after some preparation on both sides of the House, and I will certainly undertake to give the House an opportunity to do so. But I do not think that we will benefit very much if we do it once without preparation and then come back a second time to the arguments when we are prepared.

MR. KNOWLES—INQUIRY WHEN LAZAR REPORT WILL BE TABLED

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a different point of privilege. On Wednesday, October 24, it is noted in Hansard at page 545 that I made a motion under Standing Order 43, which was subsequently passed. It called for the publication of the Lazar report. I have been told along the way that the report had to be translated. Since it is almost two weeks since that motion was passed, I wonder if I may be told how soon that report might be tabled?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member an answer to that question at the moment, but I will find out and report to him directly.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

RADIO OPERATORS' DISPUTE—BREAKDOWN OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provision of Standing Order 26 and ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing an important and specific matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the withdrawal of services by flight service and coastguard radio operators, caused by the inept efforts of this government which has failed to bargain in good faith with their employees. This accelerating confrontation has caused serious breakdown in safety by removing services to general aviation; by removing services to shipping, including storm warnings and hazards to navigation; by removing important resources which support search and rescue, medical evacuation and emergency response programs; and has caused disruptions in passenger services and the transportation of food and medical supplies and other necessities in remote areas in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) gave me notice this morning in accordance with the terms of Standing Order 26 of his intention to seek the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 at this time to debate the matter which he has now described, that being the interruption of services by coastguard and radio operators.

The hon. member is probably aware of the reasoning which has traditionally been followed in circumstances of this sort. Strikes, of course, do cause risks and hazards the like of which the hon. member has just described. On the other hand, it is most difficult for the Chair, particularly while negotiations remain active, to consider any such interruption of service or breakdown in discussions or negotiations as constituting a genuine emergency within the terms of Standing Order 26.

I note, for example, in answers to questions in the last few days that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) has, in one way or another, indicated that attempts are being made to carry on the talks and bring the matter to a satisfactory conclusion. In fact, some hearing was to take place I believe today which may require the employees to go back, and therefore negotiations would begin if that were to take place.

During these active stages it would seem to me to be very hazardous for the Chair to accept an application on the subject pursuant to Standing Order 26. Indeed, I think it is risky for the Chair to do so in almost any strike situation, but I do not rule that out forever. At these early stages, however, it would certainly be almost impossible.

Perhaps the hon. member might want to refer, for example, to the language of my very distinguished predecessor as quoted at page 1540 of Hansard dated December 3, 1969, where he said:

> There is no doubt in my mind that the relationship between the government and its employees is a matter of particular importance, but I cannot bring myself to feel that the continuing process of bargaining and negotiating is of such immediate urgency as to require the setting aside of the ordinary public business which the House will consider today. In the circumstances the motion proposed by the hon. member should not be put to the House.

That reasoning has been repeated time and time again in strike situations. Again, I say I do not rule it out forever, but certainly at this stage of active consideration, if not active negotiation, which I know is the opinion of the hon. member, but nevertheless active tactic and strategy between the two parties, I think it would be unfortunate for the House to accept his application at this time. Orders of the day.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, November 2, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) that Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not going to speak very long. I will be closing the debate. I presume hon. members know that.

Mr. Breau: Not on third reading.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, this is third reading.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When we last concluded the debate we were resuming debate on the motion for third reading. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: Well, I do not know what I am doing, Mr. Speaker. I am just speaking for a few minutes on third reading.

Mr. Breau: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I take it that since you did not advise the House that he would be closing the debate, such is not the case, although he said he would be closing debate. Could you clarify to the House if the minister will be closing debate by speaking now?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) raises a point that has been raised many times before which concerns the second intervention in any debate by a minister. In this particular case the minister is seeking the floor at the present time. He has not, in fact, spoken before but he did move the third reading motion. It stands in his name, seconded by his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr.

McGrath). Therefore, having moved the motion itself he is technically considered to have made an intervention in the debate. His speech at the present time, which is in fact actually his first speech, would really be considered technically to be his second intervention and would close the debate. I would therefore give that caution to the House—that if the minister were given the floor at the present time, he would be closing the debate.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the last thing I want to do is to argue with Your Honour on the floor, but I should like to ask you to check that. There is no issue today as we are prepared to let him close the debate, but the authorities say there is no such thing as closing the debate on third reading. He certainly has the right to speak at least with unanimous consent, and we give it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House is the master of its own procedures in this particular respect. If it wants to hear the minister now and hear him again, the House can do that if it wishes. The hon. member has brought to my attention the fact that technically the minister is speaking a second time. When a minister does speak a second time I have to warn the House that if the House lets him speak a second time, he is closing the debate, unless the House wishes otherwise.

All I am doing is simply complying with the request of the hon. member for Gloucester. If the House wants to permit the minister to speak more than once it can do so, if it wishes to extend that privilege to him. Is the House ready for the question? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I just want to speak for a minute or two at the conclusion—I think it is, I hope it is—of the third reading debate.

Mr. Breau: That depends on what you say.

Mr. Crosbie: Just listen now. I am a changed man. I want to thank hon. members opposite for their co-operation in having the bill proceed through second reading and committee stage and for the useful suggestions they have made. I will keep them in mind for the next time I have such a bill coming before the House.

I think I ought to explain to the House that it has come to our attention in the last day or two that there may be some technical changes needed in connection with several of the provisions dealing with term preferred shares. I may therefore have to come back to the House for changes to those provisions after the budget or even perhaps after the bill goes to the Senate.

Mr. Breau: You can do it in the next Parliament.

Mr. Crosbie: If the vote goes the wrong way tomorrow, it might be after the next Parliament.

I want to say in conclusion that I realize the Income Tax Act is very long and extremely complicated. If I am in government long enough to start some process of trying to improve the legislation, I would certainly like to do that and would keep in mind the points that have been made.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the question on Bill C-18, I may just add a comment to the hon. member for Gloucester. I think if he will check the precedents he will find that the practice to which he was referring has been consistently applied to motions for second reading of a bill and inconsistently applied otherwise. I said he would be on a little firmer ground if we were at second reading. He is not entirely without precedent in his favour in attempting to extend the application, but it has not always been done at third reading stage.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-18, to amend the Customs tariff and to make certain amendments to the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932, the Australian Trade Agreement Act, 1960 and the Union of South Africa Trade Agreement Act, 1932, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving second reading of the bill, I should explain that the purpose of the bill is to give effect to certain amendments to the Customs tariff which was proposed in the notice of ways and means motion tabled in the House on October 23.

The proposed amendments provide for a revised tariff schedule covering fruits and vegetables. It is to provide for the continuation in force of numerous temporary tariff reductions which were supposed to expire originally on June 30, 1979, and to provide consequential amendments to the legislation which implemented our preferential trade agreements with New Zealand, Australia and South Africa. Those changes relate to fruit products covered by these trade agreements on which duties are being changed.

Most of this legislation was introduced in the last session by the previous administration but was not approved before Parliament dissolved last March. I believe it to be the case that these proposals received broad support early in 1979 when they were introduced, or last November as a result of the budget. I therefore hope we can deal with them reasonably quickly.

These fruit and vegetable tariff changes are extremely important, I understand, in the long term well-being of the Canadian horticultural industry. By and large they give effect to recommendations made by the tariff board. The tariff board, after a study in this area, recommended both tariff increases and tariff decreases for this sector of the horticultural industry.

Although domestic producers supply the bulk of our fruit and vegetable requirements, the tariff board, in its long and detailed study, found that imports are capturing an ever-increasing share of the Canadian market for fruits and vegetables. They found there had been a decline in the competitive position of our domestic fruit and vegetable growers and processers and that this decline was aggravated by the fact that virtually all fresh fruits and vegetables and a large number of processed products were subject to specific rates of duty; that is, the duty imposed so many cents per pound. Of course, this meant that with increasing price levels, as we have unfortunately had in recent years for fruit and vegetables as well as other products, the real level of the tariff protection given our domestic fruit and vegetable growers was declining over a period of time.

The purpose of the bill which is now before the House as recommended by the tariff board is to restore some of the protection available in the past to fruit and vegetable growers. The bill provides for higher specific rates during the period when Canadian produce is being marketed. For each item the "floor" or minimum rate is expressed as a percentage of the value of the product to guard against further possible erosion from the effect of rising prices.

In connection with processed products, the old specific rates are being replaced by ad valorem rates. In most cases, these are higher than the percentage rates equivalent to the old rates. So there is a change in the system of valuation to give more protection. This change is to be made also on a seasonal basis when our Canadian fruits and vegetables are coming onto the market.

The legislation also provides for the removal of duties which apply to fresh produce at certain times of the year when Canadian produce is not available. At certain times in the year the duties would be removed when fruits and vegetables cannot be produced locally in Canada. This change also helps the consumer. The bill is to provide protection to fruit and vegetable growers as well as to consumers when Canadian fruits and vegetables are not available.

Mr. Breau: That is good Liberal policy.

Mr. Crosbie: I think it is good Canadian policy, Liberal or Conservative. I am giving it my enthusiastic support, in any event.

In addition, separate tariff items have been proposed for fresh fruits and vegetables that are imported for processing. We import fresh fruits and vegetables as well as processed. Those duties will be applied year round to discourage unduly large volumes of imports at either end of the marketing season for Canadian crops. The specific rates on these fresh fruits and vegetables to be processed here would generally be lower than on fresh produce for direct consumption, reflecting the generally lower value of processing grade crops. The minimum ad valorem rates which will apply are similar to those on fresh table produce.

Negotiations with our trading partners were necessary before tariff increases along the lines recommended by the tariff board could be implemented. Before their report could be dealt with we had to negotiate with our trading partners under the agreements that were in effect. To reach agreement on those negotiations, to try to carry out what the tariff board was recommending, it was necessary for Canada to depart from some of the board's recommendations and offer compensation to our trading partners. In other words, if their rights were affected by these changes under international agreements they have the right to be compensated in other ways.

That explains why there are reductions in the duties proposed on a number of imports that are not covered by the board's report, for example, raisins, fruit juices and field peas. That accounts also for the fact that the rates on some products, such as canned fruit, are not as high as on those which the tariff board recommended because we had to give some compensation in these negotiations to our trading partners.

As I look along our ranks here I see there are some noted members representing the fruit and vegetable growing areas here today, particularly from the Okanagan Valley in British Columbia. I hope that this legislation will be of some benefit to them.

In closing, I might mention two provisions which differ from the legislation that was introduced by the previous government. The earlier legislation had proposed that tariff preferences on canned pears from Australia be eliminated over a three-year period. That proposal is included in the legislation that was introduced after the last budget. This legislation proposes that this elimination take place over four years with a rate schedule slightly more advantageous to Australia.

Hon. members might ask why this change. The answer is that in return for this the Australian government has agreed to continue to accord tariff preferences on Canadian exports of canned cherries for a similar period of time. In order to assist our canned cherries exporters we have given this slight concession to Australia. Therefore, the situation on canned pears will be eliminated over four years rather than three. That is one change.

The other change relates to clause 4 of this bill, which provides for the extension until June 30, 1980, of numerous tariff reductions scheduled to expire on June 30 this year. Most of these reductions will be overtaken by legislation to be brought before the House to implement the results of the multilateral trade negotiations at Geneva in the Tokyo Round, which I intend to introduce later this session. Sugar and related products were not included in the negotiations. In this bill we are proposing to continue the temporary rates on those products for an indefinite period.

When we come to clause by clause discussion of the bill, the parliamentary secretary and I will do our best to answer any detailed questions on these proposals. The bill is structured so that Part I deals with matters that came into force on March 13, 1979; that is the section that contains tariff reductions only. They will continue in effect by a remission order under the Financial Administration Act.

In Division II, clauses 7 to 10, schedules 4 and 5 contain tariff increases which came into force on October 24 of this year. Parts II, III, IV, clauses 11 to 13, amend these multilateral trade agreement acts. They became effective October 24. Part V provides for implementation of these provisions above.

I might add that we will have to deal with a great deal of legislation which comes out of the MTN negotiations, the Tokyo Round so-called, which we will be introducing in this House later in the fall, I trust. There is a tremendous amount of work to be done in drafting the changes that come about from the MTN and other legislation associated with it that deal with non-tariff issues negotiated in the Tokyo Round.

I hope hon. members will be supportive of this legislation and we can get it through quickly so that we can go on with the other matters that will lie before us as the session progresses. Therefore, I move second reading.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) completed debate on third reading of the bill to implement the income tax changes from the last budget, he was good enough to admit he did not know what he was doing. This frankness is really most uncommon but is quite commendable on his part. On the other hand, one has to say that in speaking on behalf of, and giving his enthusiastic support to, the provisions of Bill C-18, to some extent, at least, he does know what he is doing because he is telling the House that he wishes it to adopt the changes in the customs tariff recommended to this House by the previous government before the last election.

Once again I have to note that the first answer of the new government to the request from the public, as expressed during the election, for some type of new direction and economic policy has been to bring again before the House the budget measures presented by the Liberals before the election. One can conclude, as we on this side have, that this demonstrates that the arguments of the Conservative party before and during the election, that they had some clear idea about the needs of the country and some new ideas to deal with it were not in fact correct. Here we have this new government, as its first major economic measure, asking this House to adopt the budget of the previous Liberal government.

As the minister pointed out, the major change proposed in this bill is to bring about the implementation of changes in the tariff on fruits and vegetables as recommended largely, although not entirely, by a report of the tariff board. This report was published after lengthy consideration by the tariff board. As I recall, that consideration included a number of public hearings and representations not only from the Canadian horticultural industry but from food processors and at least one consumer group as well.

The recommendations of the tariff board report, as adopted in large part by the previous government and presented to this House in the ways and means motion before the election, represented an attempt to find some fair balance between the requirements of both producers and consumers. While one can debate various aspects of the changes in the tariff as presented, the objective of the previous government, as supported by the new government, to achieve a balance between the requirements of both producers and consumers has been carried out in large measure in the bill before us.

I am not going to take the time to review in any detail at this point the very technical provisions of the bill. I think Committee of the Whole is a more suitable forum for that type of debate. In any event, the important thing is that this new Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is urging this House to adopt the bill having said, if I recall his words correctly, that the measures have his enthusiastic support.

We will not be prolonging unduly the consideration of this bill. We want the government to get on with the presentation to this House of its own budget. We want the government to present to this House its own ideas, if it has any, on what changes should be made in the income tax law of this country and what changes should be made in the customs and sales tax law in order better to reflect the needs of this country and its people.

We do not want to give even the appearance of an excuse for delaying the bringing into this House of a new budget by this new Conservative government. We want to see how this government is carrying out the responsibilities which it sought so actively from the Canadian people during the election. During that time they asked for the support of the Canadian people on the basis of a whole lot of very specific promises as to what they would do to help the Canadian economy.

So far we have seen only an abandonment of this government's promises and the carrying out—and this is something I do not quarrel with up to a point—of the policies of the preceding government. The new government has failed to recognize that while the measures of the preceding budget were very useful at the time they were presented and continue to be useful, changed circumstances, such as the OPEC oil price increase, the confirmation of the recession in the United States, the beginnings of the economic downturn in our own country, all require new measures to counteract, at least to some extent, the negative effects of these developments and to help the Canadian economy to be put on a new and necessary course based on the adoption of an industrial strategy. We need a program which, while it requires government leadership, also requires a high degree of co-operation between business and labour. It would have to be a program which tackles at long last the structural problems of our economy, including the high degree of foreign control over our economy, a situation which has good points but the bad points of which have been increasingly recognized in recent years.

The minister said that this bill will continue in force numerous temporary tariff items which would otherwise have expired in June of this year. He is asking the House to continue these temporary tariff items in force until such time as he presents to the House a bill to implement the results of the latest General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations which were made public a few months ago.

I hope in winding up this debate or in Committee of the Whole the minister will tell us exactly when he is going to bring before this House the amendments to implement these GATT tariff changes. Will it be in his budget, will it be later, and if so, how much later? I think it is essential that these changes in our tariff to implement the GATT agreement be brought forward as soon as possible. It is clear some industries will have to make very substantial adjustments in order to cope with these changes. I recognize they are to be staged in over a period of up to eight years.

The process of parliamentary consideration of these changes should begin as soon as possible. As part of this process, it is absolutely essential that this government presents to the House, at the same time as it presents the measures to adopt the changes arising out of the GATT tariff negotiations, measures of adjustment assistance, measures to assist not just the industry affected by tariff changes but also the workers in that industry to cope with the effects of these changes.

It is essential that these measures of adjustment assistance not only provide for financial assistance to industries in order to help them retool, re-equip and perhaps even change their main line of endeavour to one degree or another, but also that there be to no lesser extent measures to help workers who may have to be laid off for a period of time and to help workers be retrained to meet new opportunities.

All too often when we consider measures of adjustment assistance in order to enable our industry to cope with changes in economic conditions arising out of tariff negotiations, we do not begin by giving attention to the obligation to take into account the burden of this adjustment on workers, as much as the burden that exists for industry. It is essential for the minister in winding up this debate or in Committee of the Whole to let us know when he is going to be introducing measures to implement the agreements arising out of the last GATT negotiations. Equally important is that there be adjustment assistance programs which will be available to no less extent to workers as to the industries affected by these tariff changes.

I also want to propose to the minister in this connection that the precedent set during the parliamentary consideration of the results of the last GATT tariff negotiations some ten years ago be followed on this occasion. At that time the House agreed to send the subject matter of the bill to adopt the results of the GATT negotiations to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so that there could be public hearings. During those hearings members of the committee could question not only the minister and his officials, but could also hear from representatives of the industries and workers affected by these tariff changes.

Actually it would be a very good reform of the proceedings of this House if, when it comes to consideration of changes in our tax laws, whether they be changes in our income tax laws, customs or sales tax laws, detailed consideration be carried out, not in Committee of the Whole, but in the appropriate standing committee of the House. We could hear directly from the people affected by those proposed tax changes, we could hear the views of experts outside the government sector and we could question directly not just the minister but also the officials who are advising him. We could do that to some extent at least. When just about every other bill is studied in a standing committee, the only exception being bills to implement a budget, one would think that this is really just a backwards way of going about the proper consideration of parliamentary business. If there was any bill which deserved attention in a standing committee rather than in Committee of the Whole—this House pretending to be a committee—it would be a bill to implement changes in our tax law.

In conclusion, I want again to say that it is not the intention of the official opposition to prolong unduly debate on this bill since it is to implement changes in the Customs tariff arising out of a ways and means motion presented before the last election. In Committee of the Whole we will be asking specific questions about the details of the bill.

In particular, we will be seeking further explanations not suitable to be given during second reading as to exactly how this bill differs from the ways and means motion presented before the election. However, our essential objective is to provide every opportunity for this government to present its own budget as soon as possible so that we can again demonstrate to the people of Canada that, despite what the Conservatives said during the past election campaign, they have no new or better ideas when it comes to dealing effectively with the problems of this country.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it was with some reluctance that I agreed to lead off for my party on this measure since it is not a subject of which I have a great deal of personal knowledge but, having listened to the other two speeches, somehow my fears have dissolved in the face of experience.

There are a number of questions which we can raise concerning the Customs tariff. I am sorry the minister has decided to leave just as I have some questions to put to him.

Quite apart from these measures themselves, I think the general position of the government with respect to trade is unclear. I need only point out to the minister what I take to be two conflicting statements he has made over the past four or five months. The first statement with respect to trade and the objectives of the government was that the minister thought it would be a good idea if we had an active debate on free trade. The indication from the quotations which were widely publicized at the time is that the minister himself was personally leaning toward free trade with the United States as an alternative for Canada and as the direction in which we should be moving.

The second statement the minister made was in the House, and he indicated that quite to the contrary, he was now concerned about our pattern of trade with the United States and with the rest of the world. He was sufficiently concerned that he was looking at a range of policies which would give a greater amount of national independence to Canada, because he seemed to accept the argument which we had been making that the underlying problems of the dollar and interest rates can only be solved once we address the question of our merchandise trade balance and our whole economic relationship with the United States as reflected in travel, in the current account deficit, in foreign investment, and in interest rates and dividends which are leaving the country at a great rate.

This debate is not an opportunity to raise those questions, but I think the minister should know that we are concerned about them and that we intend to be asking some very tough and particular questions about precisely what the intentions of the government are and how it intends to solve what is a structural problem in our economy. For example, 50 per cent of our merchandise trade takes place between parents and subsidiaries across the border between Canada and the United States. I think those patterns of trade are very unhealthy and very deep-seated in our economy. These are the kinds of questions we hope the minister will address himself to when it comes time to talk about multilateral trade negotiations and the agreements which have been signed.

I want to express my agreement with what has just been said by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) about how we should deal with multilateral trade negotiations. We too look forward to a detailed discussion and briefing so that we will be able to question the minister and other experts and people in the field who will have some sense of what the effect of these measures will be.

For example, I think there is a very real point in our having discussions today concerning the processing industry in Canada and the rights and economic concerns of fruit growers and vegetable growers. I think we are entitled to ask two questions. Why was the situation allowed to deteriorate to the extent that some of these industries are in trouble? It is well known, for example, on the Niagara Peninsula that the fruit canning and processing industry has been in trouble. There has been a considerable amount of competition from the United States which has forced many concerns to go under and which has caused a great deal of difficulty. I think we are entitled to know how the situation was allowed to deteriorate to the extent that these measures have now become necessary, rather than seeing this chummy, chummy, love relationship which has now been established between the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) and the hon. member for Windsor West. There is the consensual or chummy view that everything is for the best. A measure which helps the consumer and also the horticultural industry at one and the same time is a stroke of magic! The hon. member for Windsor West says this bill must be right and that if it was put forward by the previous government, it must be good.

Mr. Breau: Of course.

Mr. Rae: The rest of us are a little more skeptical about measures put forward by the previous government. We do not share the view that everything which comes from that direction comes from on high, and I think we are entitled to question how it is that the situation was allowed to deteriorate to the point where some of these measures became necessary.

I hope some hon. members who are knowledgeable in this sphere will be able to tell us what exactly is the situation in these industries and how these measures will help them. Are these measures enough? Does the industry want more? Is more assistance necessary? What is the competition? These are all questions which lend themselves to detailed answers, and I am hoping that the minister or some of his officials will be able to give us those answers.

I know the minister does not have a lot of time, but I would like to advise him that the question of trade with South Africa is raised by this bill, and I think we are entitled to answers to questions. We know why we entered into an agreement with the so-called Union of South Africa in 1932, but that is a remnant of our historical and colonial past at which perhaps we are now entitled to look again and ask ourselves whether we want today to be entering into a preferential trade agreement, not with the Union of South Africa but with the Republic of South Africa, whose laws on apartheid we have expressed abhorrence toward in the United Nations for some 20 years.

The departure of South Africa from the Commonwealth was noted in 1960. The prime minister at that time, the late right hon. Mr. Diefenbaker, was particularly active in raising the question of institutionalized racial discrimination in South Africa. The second reading stage of this bill provides us with an opportunity to raise questions with respect to our trade with South Africa and our investment patterns in South Africa. We intend to do that under Part IV of the bill.

To sum up, we look forward to a detailed description by the minister of the state of the industry, an explanation of how these particular measures will help the industry and how it was that things were allowed to deteriorate to the point they have so that such intervention has been proved necessary. Second, we are not satisfied with the confusion which reigns over the trade policy of the government. Finally, we have some specific questions with respect to Canadian economic relations with the Republic of South Africa. I hope the minister will be in a position to answer some of those questions when it comes time to question him in Committee of the Whole.

● (1620)

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has said that he would like to see a nationwide debate take place on the subject of the possibility of free trade with the United States, so I intend to put forward my views on this important matter during this debate on the customs tariff bill.

To start with, we must realize that the United States has a home market ten times the size of the Canadian market. This has enabled their producers of manufactured goods, the ones that provide the lion's share of the jobs and profits, to concentrate their production in individual plants on fewer lines of production.

This has made it possible for them to achieve far greater economies of scale, and hence lower costs, than those we can achieve in the great majority of our plants. There are a few notable exceptions, such as Massey-Ferguson, International Nickel, Domtar and a few other Canadian giants. However, it should be borne in mind that 75 per cent of manufacturing plants in Canada employ fewer than 100 people.

With these economies of scale available to them, and with wages in the United States generally lower than those now paid in Canada for similar work, American goods are, in most cases, priced considerably lower than their equivalents in Canada today. That is one of the things which is immediately apparent to Canadian visitors to the United States. It is what keeps their cost of living quite a bit lower than ours.

If tariffs on American goods entering Canada ceased to exist, American plants would simply increase their production by one tenth, thereby further increasing their economies of scale and enabling them to further lower their prices. This would make it possible for them to sell their goods at prices considerably lower than those available in Canada today.

Those who are in favour of free trade with the United States, our producers of primary products and our importers of finished goods made in the United States, argue that such a move would open up a far larger market for our goods and hence would greatly increase the sale of our products in that market. They confuse availability of an additional market with automatic success in that market.

Those who have competed with American producers, both in the United States and in the export market, know very well that they fight tooth and nail to retain any market which they now have and any additional market which they think they have a chance of acquiring. Their answer to any new challenge is to lower prices and increase service, and that is exactly the procedure they would follow in meeting any new attempts by Canadians to make serious inroads into the United States market with products which are also produced in the U.S.A.

A great deal of production in Canada is carried on in American branch plants which have brought with them technology not available in this country. The principal reason these plants have been established here is the Canadian tariff and the trading advantages made available by the British preference. If the tariff disappeared, there would be far less reason for operating branch plants in this country, and their Canadian production would simply be added to that of the United States parent and shipped across the border to the Canadian market.

So I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that the idea of free trade with the United States is not an economically viable one for this country for the reasons I have mentioned. It would be a very serious blow to the manufacturing industry in this country, which is of such great importance to our employment, our prosperity, and our standard of living.

In addition to the economic side of the issue, there is also the very important political side. History shows us that the establishment of a free trade zone is usually the first step in moving toward full economic integration. A recent example is the European Economic Community, which started with limited free trade and has now elected a European parliament. There is no reason for believing that free trade with the United States would not move us in the same direction.

So it appears to me that an examination of the facts as they are today gives a clear indication that a move toward free trade with the United States would not be a good thing for this country, either from the economic or the political point of view. I believe that from both points of view it would be a disaster.

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, there is no denying that I too agree with this bill which was introduced by my government when it was in power. I am pleased to see that the minister is here. I should like to open a new bracket concerning this Customs Tariff Act. In the riding I represent, that of Argenteuil, we find the largest airport in North America, that of Mirabel. On rereading this bill, I decided to speak to this House of a problem that exists at Mirabel but that could easily be solved. It would be very easy to do if the minister decided to make of Mirabel a free port where primary products would be taken, processed then exported to the United States where we would have a market of over $200 million. It is most important to realize that such a project would be a first in North America; this type of thing does exist only in a few countries where what is commonly known as "duty-free zones" have been developed——where the manufacturing and assembly processes could be created in order to expand our market to our neighbours, the United States. We have in this country, especially in the riding of Argenteuil, the necessary manpower and technology. The only thing we would need is the facility through an amendment to the customs law.

[English]

[Translation]

It would be a cinch considering there already is on the Mirabel property the infrastructure of an industrial park, access to the specialized work force of the neighbouring automobile industry in the riding of my colleague from Blainville-Deux-Montagnes; and then I see the list of material to which these amendments will apply: typewriters, phonographs, record players, cameras. In short, all that is being amended by this bill could easily be assembled within a duty-free zone; and when I say that, Mr. Speaker, I merely mean an area in which primary goods could be imported duty free, assembled there and then exported to another country.

Argenteuil has numerous advantages and, of course, our friends the Tories have always called Mirabel "a white elephant" but nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it exists. It is there and it will not disappear. We might as well stop politicking and make out of it something that will benefit all the population of my constituency. Close to Mirabel, you have the city of Lachute where many businesses had to close down for various reasons. Here again, Mr. Speaker, we find a demographic concentration that could benefit from a duty-free zone for assembling and manufacturing factories, which could be easily established. I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) will take this statement under consideration and remember that his Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) often says the time has come for action.

The Tory government can now use this tool to act, and I think that this amendment to the Customs tariff should include a provision to make Mirabel a duty-free zone in order to aid Quebec manufacturers and others who may want to settle in this region which is full of opportunities for industry and a population who would certainly welcome this move.

This bill includes provisions on vegetables. Market gardening is very important in the area surrounding the Argenteuil riding, and the eastern part of the riding as well as the Deux-Montagnes area are great apple producers. This could lead to a canning industry for export which would also benefit the area.

● (1630)

[English]

The object of this amendment would be to create jobs for the population of Argenteuil, the population of Quebec, in this year when we need a most comprehensive attitude from the government.

[Translation]

Not only is it very important to deal with an issue such as this, but I suggest that the present government should give top priority to the industrial and commercial development of Mirabel. Enough with all these demands. We must live with an elephant, Mr. Speaker, and it is the taxpayers of the whole of Canada who must assume the costs of its maintenance.

To those who blame the previous government, I can reply that I had no part in it. But they will not be able to blame me for not doing my duty and failing to urge the House to create an industrial region which would include the Mirabel area, in order to create the many jobs which are required in the Argenteuil riding where the rate of unemployment can reach 33 per cent during certain periods of the year. That is the reason for my insistence, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the minister and his parliamentary secretary will look into this problem which Quebec is now facing. This is of utmost importance, Mr. Speaker, since we all seem to agree to this legislation, so that the minister may introduce his budget in the House as soon as possible.

During the months preceding the election I have seen our Tory friends opposite criticizing the budget tabled by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) and saying how bad it was that such a budget be supported by a government. Maybe it is due to my naiveté or my lack of experience, Mr. Speaker, but I do not understand why the Minister of Finance now sitting in this House cannot bring in a budget some six months after having assumed that position. What is he waiting for? Or is it that the budget brought down by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice was so good, and I believe it was, that he is simply going to carry on with the budget presented by the former minister of finance.

I will now conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by renewing my request for his department as well as the Department of National Revenue to study seriously the matter I have raised and I hope that during the coming sessions we will have opportunities to discuss it more thoroughly and that very soon the ministers concerned will be in a position to transform the expropriated area of Mirabel into a duty-free zone to help the manufacturers who want to export and assemble goods in Quebec and especially in Argenteuil.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): As Mr. Speaker is aware, second reading of a bill was devised to discuss the principle of a particular bill. I would suggest that discussions which range all over the atmosphere, all over right field and left field in second reading of a bill, are not only incorrect but accomplish really nothing.

There are two principles in which I am very interested in regard to this particular bill. Imports have a place, but when we are talking about tariffs and the farmers of this country, whether it is for fruits, vegetables or anything else, the major principle which must be considered is: How does it affect producers? When we provide tariffs which will destroy industry inside our country, certainly we are doing our producers no good whatsoever.

Over the years we have seen situations where imports have made it almost impossible, if not impossible, for producers in the country to produce. That is why so many of them have gone under during the last ten years. Any law pertaining to producers should ensure that the tariffs will not destroy or injure the Canadian production of foods. If we keep that point in mind, ensure that Canadian producers have a fair show in producing, and then provide them with a reasonable return for their production, we will be amazed at what can be produced in Canada through the use of hothouse agricultural technology, etc.

The second principle is: How does it affect the consumer? When we raise tariffs and leave them on continually, so that during the last two or three winters the people of this country had to pay $1 a head for lettuce, they are certainly not accomplishing their purpose. Not only is it inflationary, but it is causing consumers either to go without or is providing lettuce only for those who have plenty of cash. That is not the purpose of a tariff. I believe the purpose of a tariff should be to give producers a chance and an incentive to produce. Also it should provide as fair a price as possible to the consumers of these important products. If our tariffs accomplish these two principles, we will see a thriving industry in the country and we will ensure that our consumers get the food they require to build strong, healthy bodies.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate which I think is the second one that can be called a liberal measure; for example, on the 22nd you vote "blue". All Quebeckers remember that famous slogan of Mr. André Payette who is now I believe the Prime Minister's adviser on public relations and who was at that time in the advertising business and was interviewing a lady buying her groceries. She was flabbergasted by food prices and was saying: Mr. Payette, the only solution I see to those prices is to vote "blue" on the 22nd. Some Canadians believed it more than I would have liked, and finally, on the 22nd, they voted "blue" to give us that government opposite, that government which in spite of its many promises, introduces a Liberal legislation.

Like my colleague from Windsor West, I support this legislation because it was first introduced by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) in a budget beneficial to all Canadians; but I am outraged that this government was not more original and did not introduce its own legislation.

I am pleased that consumers will be protected against overly massive imports of foreign products. Farmers in my riding will also be protected. Potatoes, strawberries and other fruit and vegetable growers in my riding will have access to the Canadian market at a better price for Canadian consumers. The advertising of the Progressive Conservative Party might have been dishonest or misleading, and perhaps the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Lawrence) should set up an inquiry and at the same time look at the embassy issue.

On the night of May 22, the people in my riding were very disappointed to see that a Progressive Conservative government was in power, but they thought: With all their promises, they will certainly introduce legislation to help us, especially as concerns food costs, since even the commercials named the guilty party. Most Quebeckers saw this. The former prime minister was to blame for the increase in the price of bread and for everything else.

Now I am wondering whether we are making this government guilty of plagiarism. During the campaign, they had answers for everything, and now their only answer is to salvage the Liberal solutions. All members of my party and myself will support this because we hope it will help the Canadian producer and give some respite to the consumer.

However, Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I am extremely disappointed because even though I did not have any confidence in this government, I thought that they must have something ready to suggest in view of all the promises that they were making.

In this case, for instance, we see that they want to help reduce horticultural imports. They had also promised to do the same for dairy products. Since this subject is not covered by Bill C-18, I hope that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), in co-operation with his colleagues, will succeed in reducing imports in this area. The government wanted to stop importing cheese and other food products. As a matter of fact, one of their famous promises was on this subject.

They have not found anything better to suggest than the Liberal proposals. I had to smile when I read in one of the schedules of the bill the reference to the import of coffins. I invite Parliament to pass this bill as soon as possible in case the government itself needs a coffin after tomorrow evening.

I have nothing to add and I wish only to remind the government that the motto of Quebeckers is: "Je me souviens" and that we remember those famous promises, that famous commercial and we shall not forget it for quite some time. I hope that at the time of the coming budget, should the government last until then, we shall be able to judge its performance. Mr. Payette, who did a commercial with so much verve might use a little more verve to try and convince his leader to participate more actively in the referendum debate.

Mr. Speaker, those were the few remarks I had to make on the subject. We shall ask more detailed questions when studying the bill clause by clause.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am amused by the discussions that are taking place under this old ways and means motion contained in Bill C-18. I was particularly amused by the remarks of the hon. member who preceded me and who said "Je me souviens". They remember whatever the hell they want, and they forget whatever they don't want to remember.

Cheese was mentioned, but I point out that this problem did not exist until the former prime minister went to Europe and made a deal for gradual entry into the common market, establishing what is called a shoulder to shoulder sort of relationship. He made that deal and the price was the entry of 45 million pounds. That was the price of that deal. Hon. members remember what they want to remember and forget what they do not want to remember. I suppose that is always the case.

One of the problems we have with this kind of a bill is that it does not say anything or it says everything, depending on how you interpret it. It has become a means by which people speak in favour of high tariffs or recommend free tariffs. I suppose civil servants who understand something about tariff practice know what is being done, but I am sure most members of Parliament cannot understand these ways and means motions, how these things come about, or what the situation was before amendment. I can read as well as anyone and I would be quite happy to refer to some of the items.

A previous speaker mentioned lettuce and suggested that if it were not for the tariff structure we would not be paying high prices in the wintertime. It is indicated that the tariff on lettuce is 85 cents a pound, which I think is high, or free. It is free in any 12-month period ending March 31. It states that it shall not be maintained in force in excess of 16 weeks, which may be divided into two separate periods, and the free rate shall apply whenever the specific duty is not in effect. In other words, it does not apply throughout the year. So the tariff is not really the reason for these high prices, except during those periods when Canadians are producing either at the beginning or at the end of the season.

We have before us a bill that the minister has said he will favour, support and endorse. He did not go so far as to say that he was going to understand it. Most ways and means motions introduced in this House leave a lot to be desired. We have references to South Africa and whether we should maintain the preferential treatment which was extended in 1932. We have heard about other arrangements which were made many years ago, and some references to whether we should now accept or continue those arrangements. The bill does not say what those arrangements were, it does not include an explanation of them and it does not indicate what are the recommended changes. In fact, the words in the ways and means motion only relate to changes that are going to take place.

In relation to the New Zealand agreement of 1932 clause 11 says that we will strike out tariff items 104a and 106 and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duties set opposite each of those items. Then it goes on to say that any enactment founded upon the motion shall be deemed to have come into effect on October 24 and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said motion imported or taken out of the warehouse, and so on. There are another two or three lines that do not mean any more than the lines to which I have just referred. Then the bill goes on to provide much the same things for Australia and South Africa.

● (1650)

The Australian trade agreement goes back to 1960, but the South African trade agreement goes back to 1932. The members of this Parliament are being asked either to pass this bill or turn it down. If we pass the bill, what have we done to our agreements with New Zealand, Australia, or South Africa? I imagine there are very few people on the tariff board who know what is mentioned in the original agreement. If the government wishes to amend an act, it should at least give the section. I probably have the 1960 amendments in my office, but I do not believe that any member, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), would have the amendment which was negotiated in 1932.

An hon. Member: It is in his head.

Mr. Peters: It may be in his head. He has just arrived and he can give that information himself. However, I do not think that it is in this bill, and how can we make even small changes to a tariff agreement with another country that was negotiated in 1932 or, for that matter, in 1960, when the government does not give the sections of the act that it is amending? I do not think that it matters one way or another. It has not really made a great deal of difference to anyone as to what happens with regard to tariff adjustments. These adjustments have been made many times, and there are always changes indicated in the ways and means motions.

In the agricultural field, however, there are too many problems which are of an immediate nature and which can have a detrimental and catastrophic effect on farmers of various commodities. The soft fruit industry has almost entirely disappeared from Canada, such fruits as peaches, cherries and strawberries. Most of the fruit industry in Ontario has disappeared simply because it could not compete in world markets. As I understand it, most of us in this House would like to have free trade and believe that it is a wonderful thing, provided it does not affect our commodities. Naturally, we want to protect our commodities, and I suppose that is true of every business from the peach producer to automobile manufacturer.

But what has happened? Certainly you, Mr. Speaker, have had personal contact with this situation and are aware of the inability of the trade board to operate fast enough to provide the kind of protection necessary with regard to agricultural commodities. It is interesting to note that in all these changes the tariff only applies to a specific field when it comes to agricultural products. The tariff is applied in the period when the surplus in another country is at its peak and our system is either beginning or ending, in most cases beginning.

This prevents countries with which Canada does not have anti-dumping laws from dumping in our country during our peak periods. They would normally be in a position to dump their agricultural products in Canada at the beginning of our season when production costs are still very high and the production period has not yet begun. The government is allowed to make these changes. If one were to take any commodity, and I will use cauliflower as an example, free rates shall apply during the months of January, February, March, April and May. I presume that is because our storage facilities will not hold cauliflower over a longer period. During the remaining months, however, in any 12-month period ending March 31, the specific duty or ad valorem duty, as the case may be, shall not be maintained in force in excess of 20 weeks, which may be divided into two separate periods, and the free rate shall apply whenever the specific duty or ad valorem duty is not in effect.

The reason for 20 weeks is that that is our period of production. We have always found, whether it be cauliflower, cherries or any other commodity, that the tariff board never reacts quickly enough to protect the farmer. The farmer is the victim of the improper or slow use of the regulatory tool with regard to applying tariffs. There may be one or two reasons for this. One may be that the government wants to make money, and they may be able to collect more money from the tariff than from their share of the production. I presume that this is true with regard to many of the commodities in Canada.

The Department of Agriculture does not have a say as to when the tariff shall apply. This means that by the time the matter has gone through two or three departments the problem has developed to a stage where the tariff will no longer alleviate the problem. This was found to be the case with imported meats. For a long time offshore meats were imported into Canada at a rate which was considerably below what the Canadian market could stand. Boxed meat was being brought in from Australia and South America, and this constituted unfair competition to the meat producers in Canada, which meant that the price of beef was depressed for a considerable period of time.

When supplies of this offshore meat dried up, Canadian producers could not meet the demand and consequently the price jumped, which was a great detriment to the consumer because of the advantages taken by the importers and those in the wholesale meat business. That situation could have been balanced out to the best advantage of both the consumer and the producer. The producer would not have been subjected to the low prices then and would not have experienced the difficulties created in a market where the price to the consumer was too high.

One of the reasons that we have had so much difficulty with agricultural production is simply that the Department of Agriculture has not had the mechanism to control agricultural structures and has had no way of applying these tariffs at the most opportune moment. I am not suggesting that there is anything wrong with these tariffs or the periods which are mentioned in the bill. It may well be that 30 weeks is the right amount of time for cabbage because cabbage keeps a lot longer than cauliflower. It may well be that 20 weeks is long enough for cauliflower.

PENITENTIARIES

IMPLEMENTATION OF SUBCOMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That a special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be established to monitor the government's progress on the implementation of the recommendations of the previous subcommittee on penitentiaries, and to conduct such further inquiries and to travel as may be required.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as indicated in the notice of motion, the purpose of the motion this afternoon, which I hope will receive consent on all sides of the House, is basically to revive the terms of reference of a subcommittee established on October 21, 1976, well over three years ago. The reason for the notice of motion is that, despite the fact that the subcommittee had extensive meetings and came up with a unanimous report, today far too many of the recommendations of the subcommittee have yet to be implemented.

As I have indicated, it was on October 21, 1976, that the original subcommittee was established with consent from all sides of this House. I think it is important to indicate to the House that one of the reasons for that was that in the month preceding the establishment of the subcommittee, there had been three major riots—at Laval Institute, at the B.C. penitentiary in my province and at Millhaven in the province of Ontario, in which a total of over $2 million damage had been done. A subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs was struck, which subcommittee, I might add, contained a number of very distinguished members of this House who are still members of the House. I should particularly like to commend the work of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) who so ably chaired this subcommittee and who, I know, earned the respect not only of members of this House but of people all across Canada from the very many organizations involved in the field of corrections. He did an outstanding job and he deserves to be recognized for it once again by this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): In addition, there were a number of distinguished lawyers on that committee, such as the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) who today is chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and a number of other very distinguished members of this House. The hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) was a member of the subcommittee, as was the hon. member for Rosemount (Mr. Lachance) who is not in the House today. So was the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) and Mr. Stuart Leggatt who is not now a member of the House but is in Ottawa today. He played a very active role in the recommendations that led to the subcommittee report.

The subcommittee reported on May 26, 1977 with what might be considered record speed. It interviewed a large number of witnesses and travelled all across the country and to other parts of the world to examine penitentiary systems.

The subcommittee report, which I have before me, was a unanimous one. Members of the House will appreciate the significance of that. The report was perhaps an example of non-partisan politics at its finest. There was obviously some compromise but there was no question that the entire subcommittee unanimously supported the recommendations in the report. The key recommendation was No. 1 and I will read any excerpt from that into the record as follows:

A crisis exists in the Canadian penitentiary service. It can be met only by the immediate implementation of large scale reforms. It is imperative that the Solicitor General act immediately on this report as a matter of the utmost urgency.

That was in May, 1977. Unfortunately, the response of the then solicitor general was disturbing, to say the least. On this key recommendation with respect to a crisis existing in the penal system, a crisis detailed by a committee which had travelled from one side of the country to the other, the solicitor general, from the security of his office, said, "No, there is no crisis in the penal system; there may be problems, but crisis is perhaps not an appropriate word".

Things deteriorated from that point, Mr. Speaker. I might also add that during the period in which the subcommittee was making its investigation there was no violence whatsoever within the penal system. I think all components of the penal system had an air of expectation and had hoped that the subcommittee would come up with broad and sweeping recommendations for change, which, of course, it did.

Since that time, there have been a number of occasions both in committee and in the House where hon. members from all sides of the House have had an opportunity to monitor the implementation of the subcommittee's recommendations. It has been a rather sorry state of affairs.

I must again commend the former chairman of the subcommittee, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, who despite the fact that he was a member of the government spoke out very articulately and forcefully, expressing his concerns about the failure of his government to implement a number of key recommendations of the subcommittee on penitentiaries. Certainly if his tones were strong, there was no question whatsoever where members of the Conservative party and members of my party stood on the recommendations of the subcommittee.

[Mr. Robinson (Burnaby).]

For example, in February this year, only a few short months ago, as a member of the opposition, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), now a member of the government, speaking on the motion for concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, said as reported at page 2929 of Hansard:

We are as mad as hell, we are not going to take it any more, we are fed up with being ignored by the government.

He went on to talk about contempt. Later at page 2932 of Hansard he said:

What we are debating here today is this government's attitude to—one could almost say contempt for—parliament.

There was no doubt that members of the Conservative party who are now members of the government—the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the hon. member for St. John's East and a number of others, were very disturbed that the key recommendations of the subcommittee were not being implemented in areas such as ensuring an adequate scale of pay and recognition of working conditions within our penitentiary system. The fundamental concern was that those persons who work in such a penitentiary system be recognized as being basically in the front lines of what is a very arduous, difficult and demanding job. That has to be recognized not only in terms of pay, but in terms of pensions.

Surely it is wrong that the government should have to come before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and ask for supplementary estimates in order to give pensions to the widows and families of guards who are killed within the penitentiary system. What kind of recognition is that of the outstanding job being done by those persons who work within that system?

In addition, the subcommittee recommended that there should be voluntary retirement at age 55. Once again this recommendation has not been implemented by the government. In a moment I shall deal with the government's attitude toward implementation of the recommendations.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we have to recognize the critical role that the staff within the penitentiary system plays. Morale has certainly not been high. There is no doubt about that. I have recently visited the B.C. penitentiary and a number of other institutions. There is no question that those persons who work in such institutions expected, and had every right to expect, that action would be taken, if nothing else at least on these critical recommendations with respect to working conditions within the penitentiary system.

● (1710)

In addition, the committee recommended in the strongest possible terms that there must be a separate, independent professional penitentiary staff system. This is very important, and it is a recommendation which to this date has again not been implemented by either the past or present government. There were concerns expressed about the size of our pentitentiaries. There were concerns expressed about a number of different areas. In fact, what we saw was a gradual erosion of the number of recommendations stated to have been implemented by the government.

For example, on August 5, 1977, the then solicitor general, the present hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) indicated that he had accepted 53 of the recommendations in whole or in part. In February, 1978 the solicitor general at that time said 37 of the recommendations had been implemented or were in the process of being implemented. In October, 1978, the then solicitor general talked about 22 recommendations that had been completely implemented.

Mr. Leggatt in his speech of February 6, 1979, indicated that it was his view that some 14 recommendations out of a total of 65 had in fact been implemented over a period, at that point, of one year and eight months since the subcommittee reported to the House. I repeat, that—14 out of 65 recommendations had been implemented. The hon. member for Yukon, who is the present Minister of Public Works, in that same debate stated in no uncertain terms that his grievance was not with the solicitor general's department in terms of what it had done but in terms of what it had not done. He stated that the Liberals, Conservatives, members of the NDP and Social Credit parties had agreed unanimously, that this report ought to be taken as a package to be effective.

Its core recommendations have been completely ignored. He went on to say, I think quite rightly, that it is not irresponsible to suggest that unless something is done in a meaningful way about the adoption of the package of these recommendations, we will be back at square one. We all believed that this is what would happen when we submitted the report. To say we will be back at square one is a rather disturbing scenario, to say the least, if one bears in mind what I indicated square one was shortly before this subcommittee was established.

We have seen recently that one can build the finest institutions possible, where physical surroundings are flawless, and where living units are included etc. But where the basic recommendations of the subcommittee in terms of professionalization of staff and in terms of a number of other key recommendations, such as those relating to the grievance procedure, are not implemented, one can have the best institution in the world but we will still see flare-ups of the kind that took place at Kent institution within the past couple of weeks. In that case over half the prisoners were involved in a very expensive and damaging destruction of a substantial part of the Kent institution.

Where do we go from here, Mr. Speaker? We have a new government. We have members of this new government who have been active in opposition in calling for implementation, and full implementation, of the subcommittee's recommendations. As I said, we had the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) saying that they were fed up with the previous government's delay in implementing the recommendations, that they were not going to take it any more, and that they were fed up being ignored by the government.

These people are now members of the government. They now have an opportunity to implement those recommendations about which they were so concerned only a few short months ago. What do we see in response? Last week the Solicitor General (Mr. Lawrence) appeared before the justice and legal affairs committee with what he called a progress report. I have the document here. It concerns the implementation of the parliamentary report on the penitentiary system.

The present government has indicated that its view regarding implementation of these proposals is identical to that of the previous government. What kind of hypocrisy is this? What kind of charade are we being subjected to when, in opposition, members of this government, including a number of cabinet ministers, actively and outspokenly called for the implementation of the recommendations of the subcommittee? Yet when these people get into government and have a chance to implement the various recommendations, what happens? They are captured by the same bureaucracy, and we receive a report which might have been a photocopy of reports of January 1979, November 1978, March 1978, or August 1977. There is no change in the attitude of this government to the implementation of these recommendations.

I think that is a scandalous situation, Mr. Speaker. It is a scandalous situation when on the one hand the party in opposition can call in the strongest possible terms for the implementation of certain recommendations, yet when these people are in government and have a chance to act, what do they do? They carry on along the same course. It has been said by others, "progressive in opposition, conservative in government".

I want to say a word or two about the specific terms of this motion in the couple of moments I have left at my disposal. The motion calls for the establishment of a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which would be charged with the responsibility of examining the implementation of these recommendations. These were the recommendations which members opposite, now on the government side, were so concerned be implemented as a package. I say this subcommittee is essential, that there must be a body specifically charged with the responsibility of ensuring that these recommendations—all the recommendations, not just some of them—are implemented.

I understand that my friends on this side of the House will be supporting this motion. I would also hope that friends on the other side will not talk the motion out. I must say that I did speak with the Solicitor General, who indicated that he was prepared to accept the substance of this motion. He was prepared for there to be an ongoing permanent reference in line with recommendation 65 of the subcommittee, and he was prepared to appear, as he put it, whenever the committee asked him to appear with his officials. That is all well and good, but members opposite have a chance this afternoon to put their money where their mouth is and to allow this motion to come to a vote. It will be interesting to see whether, in that spirit of non-partisan debate which characterized the deliberations of the subcommittee, we will now be allowed to vote on this motion itself.

It is a straightforward motion. The recommendations of the subcommittee are clear. The attitudes of members opposite to those recommendations, and the failure to implement a number of them, have been clear for some time. I only hope that that will be reflected in the vote taken today and that this motion will be passed unanimously by this House, just as the recommendations of the subcommittee were passed unanimously.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I say, I will await with interest the response of members on the other side of the House.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion put by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I am not going to take long because I want to make sure this motion has an opportunity of getting through. The last thing I want is to contribute to the talking out of a motion as important as this one. In fact, not only do we support this motion, but we have in effect made the same proposal ourselves.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) raised the question of implementation of recommendation 65 both in the House and in committee.

[English]

The most charitable thing to say about the response of the Solicitor General (Mr. Lawrence) on both of those occasions was that he was evasive. He was evasive in the House, although he later claimed he misunderstood the question put in the House. We gave him a chance to put it right in committee but he was even more evasive. To indicate that this may even go beyond evasion, on the one hand he suggested that this recommendation was one of those which had been wholly accepted by the government. It was not on the list of those which had been rejected or was under question; it was on the list of those that had been accepted. Despite that assurance the Solicitor General said in committee that we do not need a reference of this kind, that we do not have time to deal with it, and that in any event it would be impossible to have this kind of reference. So much for his devotion to the implementation of recommendation 65.

● (1720)

Let us just take briefly each of those arguments. He says we do not need this kind of reference because of the fact that he is prepared to appear before us at any time. If we do not have a reference which enables us to hear him, how will he appear before us without a special order of reference? The House is well aware that the main estimates are due back in the House some time early in December. At that time the power of the committee to question the Solicitor General on this issue will expire, unless there is a special reference. It is a special reference we are talking about in this case.

He says we do not have time for it because we will have so much else to do in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It is precisely because of this problem of time that we so strongly support the idea of a special reference. If that reference were to a subcommittee, if the subcommittee were a small one with one representative from each party, for example, the subcommittee could continue work on penitentiaries while the rest of the committee dealt with the work before it. That would be a way of dividing the business before the committee and enabling it to do both things at once.

The argument the Solicitor General made actually turns back on himself. He attempted to argue procedure, that it is impossible to have a permanent reference. We were anticipating on the one hand that the government would some time soon make it possible to have permanent references to committees or even provide that they do not need orders of reference. This is supposed to be in the package of proposals which the government is going to be making to this House for the reform of the rules. It is one that meets with considerable favour on this side. If that is not the case, there is certainly the possibility of continuing orders of reference each session which achieve the same over-all purpose. It is splitting hairs to maintain it is not possible to give the committee these powers.

We on this side of the House have a suspicion that the implementation of this report by the correctional service is a largely nominal one. Not entirely, since there has been a lot of good implementation. But we were given a lot of statistics in the committee, a lot of things we did not have the opportunity to follow up. We have our suspicions about how deep implementations may be intended to go.

It is for this reason that we feel we need additional time to look at this problem. We simply cannot do the kind of job which this subject requires, we cannot do justice to the work of the subcommittee on penitentiaries which members on all sides of the House say they admire, unless we have the opportunity to continue it in detail in the future.

There is a lot more I would like to say about this subject. I would like to use this motion as a springboard to talk about penitentiaries and I am pleased the hon. member for Burnaby has given us this chance, but I will eschew the opportunity on this occasion. I want to hear whether the government is going to allow this motion to pass or whether instructions have been given to its supporters on the other side to talk it out.

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those topics where there seems to be little middle ground, and when one does speak out and take a stand, either one if viewed as believing penitentiaries should be like dungeons or that they should be like hotels and the prisoners the guests. Obviously, neither view is reality or what we as a society want our correctional service institutions to be. We as legislators must always be cognizant, even in the most serious and disturbing of times, that penitentiaries are there not because criminals are a bunch of mixed up kids. Criminals are there because they committed crimes, possibly violent crimes, and incarcerated only after due process of law and all its avenues have been exhausted. A prisoner or indeed anyone can be helped only if they want to be helped. Consideration and a want to help the inmate will only aid the rehabilitation process; it will not be the factor that will cause change.

The motion before this House today seeks to have a permanent reference during the Thirty-first Parliament to enable the House to review the implementation of the MacGuigan report. Certainly no one who believes that Parliament is important, indeed the place where the laws of the land are made, could disagree in principle with this type of motion. However, and I will speak further about this a little later, when there is good faith from a new minister and 51 of 65 recommendations are in process of implementation or shortly to be acted upon, and only five recommendations because of circumstances outside the control of the minister will not be acted upon, then I believe a motion to ask for a permanent reference to check their implementation is not only redundant but a waste of our time.

Mr. MacGuigan: Why does he say it has been implemented?

Mr. Beattie: To answer the hon. member's question, the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) asked about and agreed with the terms of reference at the meeting last Thursday. Certainly until the private members' hour is changed, it does a disservice to the more important matters that could come before the House. I was pleased, however, to hear him mention the good work and results achieved by the committee. I concur with him in that regard. I had the opportunity to have a discussion with two former members, Mrs. Holt and John Reynolds, in Vancouver on Saturday night. They were not only more than pleased to have sat on that committee but pointed out the great work that had been done by the chairman of the committee. That is as far as I will go in support of the motion of the hon. member for Burnaby.

I think it is worthwhile before looking at the report or the motion to look at the situation that caused these recommendations. The relative peace before 1970 ended in that year and between 1970 and 1976 the number of cases of hostage taking, violence and murders in the Canadian penitentiary system increased alarmingly. In the 42 years between 1932 and 1974 there were 65 major incidents in federal penitentiaries. Yet in the two years 1974-1976, before the subcommittee was struck, there were 69 incidents which included 33 hostage takings, 92 victims and one who was killed. The whole process of violence in federal institutions was not just increasing but rapidly accelerating. This situation was judged by the House of Commons to be unacceptable. The matter was referred to the justice and legal affairs committee which set up the subcommittee on the penitentiary system in Canada.

The situation had deteriorated so far that it just was not an intellectual argument of prisoners' rights or a simple matter of a few troublemakers. It was a question of credibility, credibility not only of the institution and the inmates but also of the institution and the general public. There was deep concern, and let us not forget this point, as to who was really running the institution in the minds of many average Canadians. The public could not be sure if the violence was the result of too much suppression and oppression from the security guards or because there was too little supervision and control being exerted.

With Canadians in that sort of quandary, action had to be taken to bring back some sense of order to the penitentiaries in the minds of the citizens. The problem of credibility between the institution and the inmates was a totally different matter. Here it was not just a matter of perception or of public relations, but a question of intense frustration and anger at the lack of change in the institution. Mistrust had been allowed to developed which brought the inmates and staff to a state of anarchy. This whole attitude and situation reflected the state of the whole penitentiary system, not just one or two of the institutions.

The committee's work was intensive. It interviewed more than 2,000 inmates and staff, toured 24 institutes—seven of them outside Canada—and also held 72 formal meetings, lasting over 200 hours. The job done by the committee was just magnificent. The important thing about the 65 recommendations which came from this all-party subcommittee was that they were unanimously endorsed.

The recommendations covered a wide range of topics, from different types of rehabilitation to requirements for staff, to prisoner grievance procedures, to types of permissible treatment of prisoners, to reorganization of the system, and to new structure for the bureaucracy running institutions. The breadth of the recommendations, I think, represents the seriousness and the responsibility with which the sub-committee undertook in its task.

While one may have disagreements with any or all of the recommendations, it is an obvious fact that the 1970-1976 violence has definitely subsided. That is the important thing. Since that time only 17 hostage takings have occurred, which represents an over 60 per cent decrease just since the process started, therefore before any of the recommendations were implemented. The credibility of the system both in terms of the public and inmates has improved. Most Canadians today not only know who is running the correctional system but also feel that the rehabilitation process is much more effective than it was before 1976. Certainly with less violence one has to believe that the inmates have less outright hostility than they did prior to that time.

It is only natural in a penitentiary system that violence will occur from time to time. The important thing is that the violence which does occur is isolated and is associated with individual problems, not over-all grievances regarding the total correctional system. With the success of the sub-committee recommendations one would feel that on the whole they are moving the correctional service in the right direction.

However, to ask now as this motion does today for a permanent reference on the implementation of the recommendations is like shutting the barn door after the horses have bolted. The process of implementing the proposals is not starting but finishing, and not only is it finishing but it is doing it with a guarantee of co-operation from our new Solicitor General (Mr. Lawrence). He is not ducking the issue, as the hon. member suggests or shirking his responsibility. On the contrary, the Solicitor General is being very open and, indeed, very supportive of the wishes of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

This motion by the hon. member for Burnaby, while in principle acceptable, is really not needed. The hon. member knows that it is not needed, at least not at this point in time. The Solicitor General and, indeed, the two previous solicitors general have over the past two years regularly reported on the progress of the implementation of the report to the House. They have informed, as they should, the members of this House, the legislator of the land, of their department's action.

I listened to the Solicitor General last Thursday in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs detailing the remaining recommendations which have not as yet been acted upon. Of the remaining 14 recommendations, nine have been accepted in principle, and only five at this point in time will not be implemented. The reasons for the delay or the rejection of the recommendations were explained at that time. I cannot understand why the hon. member for Burnaby insisted on going through with this motion today. It is not a motion which threatens to implement any of the rejected recommendations but only asks this House for what is already taking place.

The frankness and the openness of the Solicitor General should be welcomed, not ignored, by this House. This motion rejects implicitly the reasons for not implementing the other five recommendations. The reasons range from jurisdictional problems to a belief by the minister that other, more appropriate changes have taken place and will suffice, and to where the Solicitor General feels he should remain responsible for his department and therefore, directly to Parliament, rather than shifting that responsibility to a committee which would report to him on the activities of the correctional services. Like many other programs in Canada's federalism, the recommendations will have to be negotiated by province.

To conclude and to reiterate, private members' hour is an important and valuable time period if used in the proper manner. This particular motion, in my opinion, is a useless occupation of hon. members' time in a parliamentary session which has much more to offer in terms of sensible legislation.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion, as did the last speaker. I regret that my address will not be as helpful to people who have not read the MacGuigan report as it will to people who have, but I will try to make it as clear as I can, bearing in mind that many people here probably have not read the MacGuigan report.

My remarks will deal with four aspects of the problem. First, I will review some of the events leading up to the MacGuigan report. Second, I will give some ideas on the penitentiary system. Third, I will discuss some of the principles underlying the recommendations in the MacGuigan report and the difficulties involved in maintaining a prison system. Fourth, I will give an indication of the progress of the implementation of some of the recommendations.

By way of background, between 1932 and 1974 a total of 65 major incidents occurred in Canadian penitentiaries. In 1975 and 1976 a total of 69 such incidents took place, including 35 hostage takings. This prompted the House of Commons to establish the sub-committee about which we have been talking today. That committee did very thorough work. It held 72 formal meetings. There were 407 witnesses. The committee conducted informal interviews with more than 2,000 inmates and staff. It toured seven U.S. institutions. The result of the inquiry was the MacGuigan report containing 65 recommendations.

The response of the government was an implementation committee which was established in the Department of the Solicitor General. To date, 51 of the 65 recommendations have been or are on the verge of being implemented. Five have been rejected, and nine are under review. The hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) were present the other day in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs when the new Solicitor General (Mr. Lawrence) explained why at least some of those five were rejected.

A word about penitentiaries. "Penitentiaries" is an American term for an institution which was started in Philadelphia in about 1789 as a more humane alternative to the harsh punishment of the day.

Mr. Peters: What is the matter? Did you get the pages mixed up? That sounds like the beginning, not the middle of it. You should have come to that first.

Mr. Kilgour: The thought was that imprisonment under conditions of isolation—

Mr. Peters: Re-number the pages from now on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I think the courtesy of the House should be extended to the hon. member who is now speaking so that he can carry on.

Mr. Peters: He is not speaking. He is reading.

Mr. Kilgour: I will put my notes down.

Mr. Peters: It will be a better speech.

Mr. Kilgour: The original idea was that penitentiaries, by offering isolation and opportunities for work, would provide an enlightening atmosphere, which would render people convicted of crimes penitent and reformed. The original reason for penitentiaries was a benevolent one, but unfortunately it did not work out that way.

Charles Dickens, after a visit to a penitentiary, wrote, and I will have to read this:

> —I hold this slow and daily tampering with the mysteries of the brain to be immeasurably worse than any torture of the body; and because its ghastly signs are not so palpable to the eye—and it exhorts few cries that human ears can hear; therefore, I the more denounce it as a secret punishment which slumbering humanity is not roused up to stay.

• (1740)

Mr. Baldwin: That sounds like the NDP caucus.

Mr. Knowles: I never saw you at one.

Mr. Kilgour: Since Dickens' condemnation of the prison system, there has never been a time when the correctional system did not appear in need of rapid and substantial change. David Rothman, the historian, wrote the following:

Each generation discovers anew the scandals of incarceration, each sets out to correct them and each passes on a legacy of failure. The rallying cries of one period echo dismally into the next.

Actually, there has been a great deal of change in the last years, and prisons in Canada are very different now from the first Canadian penitentiary in Kingston in 1835. Large scale reform took place in 1960 as a result of MacLeod Committee's Correctional Planning Report. There were improved work programs, training and education were introduced, facilities were improved, new buildings were constructed. Two major changes were brought about: first, regional offices were established, and second, prison staff was unionized, becoming part of the Solicitor General's component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

If there is any inadequacy to my speech, Mr. Speaker, it is because of the flu from which I am suffering. I am afraid I have come from my sick bed this afternoon.

Mr. Knowles: Don't be away tomorrow night.

Mr. Kilgour: The MacGuigan report argues that the two changes which I have just mentioned have led to a breakdown in authority, creating a confusion of roles and responsibilities which, when coupled with more militant inmate attitudes, have produced the violent upheavals that have been the chief characteristics in the 1970s.

Two important principles expounded in the MacGuigan report are: first, that the purposes of imprisonment are the protection of society and the denunciation of criminal behaviour. Imprisonment is a legitimate measure as a last resort where a wrongdoer, having been given the opportunity, has wilfully failed to comply with other, more constructive and less severe alternatives to imprisonment. Second, protection of society as a purpose of imprisonment includes not only protection during a term of imprisonment by the physical removal of a person who is dangerous or who has failed to respect values that are protected by the criminal law, but also the protection of society after his release by means of a prison system designed to assist him toward personal reformation.

These principles were fully accepted by the new Solicitor General who has expressed before the members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the hope that the future attention of the committee will be focused on the provision of alternatives to incarceration.

Let me discuss these two principles in terms of the penitentiary system. In prison terms, protection of society means the collective control of violence. The MacGuigan report was undertaken with the understanding that the aim of prison systems is the collective control of violence. In practice, the control of collective violence has been achieved by constant supervision and regimentation with elaborate systems of rules and regulations. In the past, some of these have gone to excesses. The maintenance of custody and order, the prevention of riots and escapes, have overshadowed every other consideration.

The MacGuigan report has properly recognized that to control collective violence, successfully, four conditions must be met: first, justice; second, alternatives to boredom; third, socialization; and fourth, good management.

The second principle refers to the idea of the prison system reforming the offender. The concept of rehabilitation is a fairly modern one which was not accepted in the past. For example, the last warden of New York's Sing-Sing prison believed that the aim of prison was to change inmates' behaviour rather than their character—to make them, if not better, at least more obedient to the criminal law. In his view, this was the only reform which society could expect.

In Canada the idea of rehabilitation arose in the 1950s in the Archambault and Fauteux reports, and stayed in the 1960s in the Ouimet report. It was to replace the "warehousing" approach which sought only to accomplish the task of keeping prisoners away from the public. The rehabilitation model caught on and was justified on humanitarian grounds and on the idea of transforming reformable criminals into law abiding citizens. But rehabilitation has proved to be a failure.

The MacGuigan report has also rejected this model. It believes that the incentive model is superior. It bases this on the principle that only the wrongdoer can bring about reform in himself, but the penitentiary system must be structured to give positive support to his efforts at reform by providing essential conditions. These conditions, as mentioned before, are: justice, work, and socialization.

Under the heading of justice, the condition of achieving justice in penitentiaries as stated in the MacGuigan report is based on three principles, which are, first, the sentence of imprisonment imposed by the court constitutes the punishment. People who work in the penitentiary system have no authority, right or duty to add to those penalties. Second, the rule of law must prevail inside Canadian penitentiaries, and third, justice for the inmate is a personal right and also an essential condition of their socialization and personal reformation. It implies both respect for the person and property of others and fairness in treatment. There must be clear rules, fair disciplinary procedures, and the provision of reasons for all decisions affecting inmates.

I cannot stress enough that these principles have all been accepted by the new Solicitor General. The rule of law is an axiom of common law. The concept that justice must prevail in every place and in every situation in Canada includes prisons. Indeed, someone has said that you can judge society not by what goes on outside prison walls but what goes on when someone has had liberty denied them. Where prisons are unjust, hatred is encouraged, and this ultimately leads to violence and the loss of control.

A number of steps have already been taken in the area of inmates' rights. First, as a result of recommendation No. 36 regarding inmate grievances, a new grievance procedure has been implemented which features speed in handling complaints, inmate involvement, and outside review. There is also a new system of a pre-grievance procedure. Second, in response to recommendation No. 29 which urged that the commissioner's directives be consolidated into a consistent code of regulations, a project was started to implement this recommendation. A project which involves rewriting the commissioner's directives that deal with the custody, treatment, training, employment and discipline of inmates, has also been begun and it should be operative by the spring of 1980. Also, all maximum and medium security institutions now have legal materials from which inmates can borrow on request.

I would like to say a word now on work and socialization. "Activity carries within itself the seeds of its own reformation", as was stated by Samuel Johnson. John Carlyle stated that "work is the grand cure of all maladies and miseries that ever beset mankind". Whether Carlyle and Johnson had prison in mind when they made these comments is certainly open to speculation, but these sentiments fit the second and third conditions in the MacGuigan report, that is, alternatives to boredom, and socialization, which the MacGuigan report believes are necessary.

The Solicitor General has assured the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs last Friday that, to his knowledge, every able and willing inmate is employed. Apparently, facilities for printing, audio-visual and microfilming now exist in several federal prisons. There is a new system of inmate pay, which is not at the rate that a lawyer or someone else might be paid, but it is being developed to provide an economic incentive to develop training skills. Farm production, kitchen gardening, horticultural programs, dairy and meat production are being increased.

● (1750)

Social interaction is another concern expressed by the MacGuigan report. According to the Solicitor General it is now a reality. I should like to give some examples. Common dining now has been established in nearly all institutions. Contact visiting has been made available. All inmates except those in dissociation and some in protective custody, of which I concede there are far too many, are now out of their cells for the greater part of the day and evening.

In response to the recommendations concerning socialization of inmates, new ideas such as the team concept, living unit and various treatment programs have been introduced into prisons. These are part of the concept of the incentive model recommended by the MacGuigan report. It goes without saying that his model is not necessarily popular with all inmates. The incentive model is based on the belief that the undesirable behaviour of others can be changed, even if this is done through somewhat coercive means. This coerced cure may be an advance in the prison system, as long as we keep in mind the words of Norval Morris, director of the Centre for Studies in Criminal Justice at the University of Chicago. He said:

> Rehabilitation, whatever it means and whatever the programs that allegedly give it meaning, must cease to be a purpose of the prison sanction. This does not mean that the various developed treatment programs within the prisons need to be abandoned; quite the contrary, they need expansion. But it does mean that they must not be seen as purposeful in the sense that criminals are to be sent to prison for treatment. There is a sharp distinction between the purpose of incarceration and the opportunities for the training and assistance of prisoners that may be pursued within those purposes. The system is corrupted when we fail to preserve this distinction and this failure pervades the world's prison programs.

I should like to make a comment on staff. Much of the MacGuigan report concerns itself with the inability of the staff of penitentiaries to function as a self-regulatory force to control the actions of a minority of offending guards who have contributed heavily to the atmosphere of confrontation in prisons. These negative impulses which affect the prisoner once incarcerated are the crux of the problem facing penitentiary services. The social problem has been at the root of the difficulties facing penal reform. The MacGuigan report succinctly points out, with regard to past programs of reform, that the changes which have occurred have failed to break down the core of repression upon which the system was built. With regard to this, and with reference to the correctional staff, the MacGuigan report sets forth principles five and six which read as follows:

> (5) Ways must be found to enlist the commitment, the reservoir of correctional expertise, the basic humanity and the capacity of the custodial staff to act as successful role-models for inmates in a co-operative effort to accomplish the great tasks that lie ahead of the Canadian Penitentiary Service.
> (6) A staff that is well-selected, well-motivated and well-paid is a key to any program of penitentiary reforms. Penitentiary work should be a professional career service modelled as far as practicable on the RCMP.

According to the MacGuigan report the incentive approach also should be applied to the staff. The idea of a professional attitude on the part of prison staff is stressed. I see the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has returned to the chamber.

Mr. MacGuigan: Just to hear the hon. member's comments.

Mr. Kilgour: He stated in a speech to the Canadian Association of Provincial Court Judges in Halifax:

> Only professionalism can guarantee the existence of strong staff attitudes which will both prevent collective violence and offer the possibility of reformation of inmates.

The MacGuigan report lays particular stress on recommendation 26 which suggests the following:

> . . . penitentiary service under the board must be an independent agency of the government and not subject to the Public Service Employment Act or the Public Service Staff Relations Act. It should resemble the RCM Police in its discipline and professionalism. Employees should be subject to discharge for misconduct or incompetence.

As expressed in the recommendation itself, the MacGuigan report had two reasons for this recommendation: the achievement of proper discipline among the employees, and the development of professionalism in the service.

The Solicitor General told the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that a special task force has been developed to meet the recommendations dealing with the two reasons I have just mentioned. The primary objective of the task force is to remove correctional service from the jurisdiction of the Public Service Employment Act. This will be achieved by referring to provisions in the Penitentiary Act which were rescinded by order in council in 1969. A schedule has been established for the continued work of the task force and the implementation of the recommendation involved. It is anticipated that by March, 1980, a new separate employer status will be created, along with the benefits which accrue to that status.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion put forward by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) with all respect for the importance of the issue and for the sincerity of the hon. member. I do this after reviewing the status report offered as evidence that in fact the recommendations put forward, with the exception of the five which have been considered unacceptable for complicated reasons, are acceptable. After suggesting that he will maintain an openness and availability to the committee, the minister in fact has fulfilled his responsibilities, and plans to continue doing so.

I should like to comment on several issues contained within the minister's report. I applaud several of them, but I should like to comment on one in particular. Because of the shortness of time, I will deal with the one which I hope we will expand slightly. I am referring to recommendation 62 which promoted the concept of a special institution to be established in British Columbia for the exclusive treatment of drug addicts. At this time the federal Department of National Health and Welfare is conducting a national study into the problem of drug dependency and addiction in Canada. The results of this study are not available as yet and when available should be carefully considered, especially after the recent British Columbia experience, before this recommendation is acted upon.

I have had personal representations from persons from Alcoholics Anonymous who have grave concern regarding the treatment of drug addicts and alcoholics within the penitentiary system. On this point in particular I plan to make personal representations to the minister. It is clear from my experiences in medical practice that in fact we are inadequate, in the penitentiary system and throughout society, in our ability to deal with alcohol and drug problems. Other people who are much more qualified than I are looking into this area and developing reasonable policies to bring us to a point where we can deal in a more meaningful way with alcoholics and people who are dependent upon drugs. But particularly within the prisons system there is a circumstance where people who enter into the system with an alcohol or drug dependency problem, are perhaps worse when they come out.

The conditions within the penitentiary system do not allow for the normal interflow which can occur outside prison, especially with the association of Alcoholics Anonymous. If there was an opportunity for this association to deal directly with prisoners in penitentiaries, it might improve the ability of the system to deal in a meaningful way with people who have been convicted. I plan on making personal representations to the minister in that regard.

There are several other matters that we could comment upon, but may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, to amend the Customs tariff and to make certain amendments to the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932, the Australian Trade Agreement Act, 1960 and The Union of South Africa Trade Agreement Act, 1932, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, when the House broke off consideration of Bill C-18 at five o'clock I was attempting to make the point that customs bills, and the ways and means motions that precede them, do not provide enough information to enable the average member of Parliament who is not familiar with a specific tariff problem to comment on whether or not they should be passed and, if they are passed, on what difference it will make.

The passage of such customs bills and ways and means motions changing tariffs makes a great deal of difference to the government, as the government collects a lot of money through tariffs. One hon. member suggested that perhaps it is for this reason that the price of lettuce is so high during many months of the year. I suggest that is only part of the reason. In any event, there is a need for tariffs. The Canadian public is not yet aware, and may not be aware for some time, of the difficulties that are created in many fields of agriculture as a result of international agreements at GATT. As we compete in this world with large industrial countries it is almost inevitable that a country the size of Canada will come out badly in negotiations. Many of our small industrial and agricultural areas are affected by changes, modifications, and upgrading of GATT agreements.

I am pleased to see the former minister of agriculture here tonight as one of the problems we have experienced over the years has been the result of the Department of Agriculture trying to defend and protect fruit producers, vegetable producers, and the producers of many other agricultural products, while at the same time attempting to ensure a supply of these products to the consumer at reasonable prices and to promote the entry of those products into other markets. This situation has been affected by tariffs, and by the very limited role the Department of Agriculture has been able to play in deciding when tariffs should apply.

Many producers have felt that the application of controls has not been fast enough to provide even minimum protection for the industry. If that is not true, then how can we explain the fact that we have lost many of our markets for Canadian agricultural products? We have lost most of our fruit markets. I suppose Niagara Falls will soon be remembered only as a honeymoon centre rather than a fruit growing area. That may now be the case, except for the fact that a few wine companies are still hanging on despite great difficulties in that industry.

Not long ago one could go into a store and buy a crate of Canadian grapes or a barrel of apples at a reasonable price. Today most people cannot afford to buy fruit in that quantity. It has been claimed that the high cost of these fruits and vegetables is directly related to the high cost of picking the fruit and harvesting the vegetables. I do not think that is any more expensive in Canada than in the United States.

One problem that we have faced is the shortage of volume to supply canneries. I cannot speak in detail about the situation in the Niagara peninsula and the loss of canneries in that area, but I am aware of the situation in my own area of northern Ontario which is not too well known for its production of vegetables. On probably three or four occasions we have been the world potato king. We have held on a number of occasions the Pea King award. We have received awards for several other vegetables, including turnips, which now have a new name.

Mr. Whelan: Rutabaga.

Mr. Peters: Yes, rutabagas or something. At one time in my area, the little clay belt, we had a canning factory which canned peas. Those peas were under the label of Northern Pride, Wabi Valley and several other names. They were produced for two or three of the large chain stores as well. It was a very good industry for the farmers in the area and was owned by a very small company. This company got an offer from Canada Packers, and Canada Packers did the same thing as these packing companies have done all over the country; they bought the factory, operated it for one year, and then closed it down. Now no peas are canned in the little clay belt. This has happened with peaches, pears, apple sauce, cherries, and many other commodities. They are being bought out in Canada, and instead of the tariff structure allowing a steady inflow over a long period of time, the only fodder available for the canning factories in this country appears to be only in areas where the large bulk of that produce is grown.

The minister indicated that the reason for those limitations in this bill is to alleviate this problem so that we would be able to extend our season through imports. The majority of our products would be under tariff, and when we were finished our producing season then we could import, which would meet the needs of the canning industry. Unfortunately, this does not happen. If I go into a store and buy jam, I probably buy jam packaged in the United States. Some Tory members would tell me it is probably because of the cost of picking the fruit. I do not think that the wages for fruit pickers are higher in Canada than in the United States, so it must be something else.

I would not hesitate to pay a few cents more to buy jam, a car, or anything else that was made in Canada. I once thought that I had purchased a car made in Canada because it had the word Canadian written on the side, but it turned out not to be a Canadian car at all. These tariff adjustments probably will not produce the outcome which Canadians anticipate. It has been suggested that we need free trade. I am all for it because it is great for selling gold, lumber, iron pellets, and many other things which we produce. It is great for selling grain, grass seed, and other commodities, but it is not great for the guy who manufactures cars, or the farmer in the country who is located a number of degrees north of his competitors and who experiences a longer growing season. That is the reason for tariffs.

If we have to use tariffs, surely the government can be fair to the members of Parliament and explain to them the tariff regulations involved in this bill. There are pages of numbers and general changes. They do not show where the numbers came from, what they apply to, what they affect, nor show in any way why there should be a change or where preferential treatment should be increased or decreased. It is all very well when the government has a majority for it to ram through ways and means measures every time it wants more money or it wants to change the tariff structure, but it seems to me that in a minority government it behooves all members to participate. The explanation given for this bill is:

> This bill would implement the ways and means motions relating to the Customs Tariff that were tabled by the Minister of Finance on October 23, 1979.

That does very little to explain all the appendages to this bill which include such areas as medicine, aircraft engines, coffee, electricity, steel, soap, gelatine and so on. It goes on for two pages talking about one very simple commodity. I thought that sugar was sugar, but there are two pages on the different kinds of sugar. I suppose that we have learned something about the degrees of good and bad sugar, but the form in which this bill is presented is not sufficient to explain and justify the passage of tariff or customs legislation.

I have mentioned that the bill also amends the New Zealand trade agreement of 1932, the South African trade agreement of 1932 and the Australian trade agreement of 1960. There is no indication on page two of this bill what those amendments mean. As I pointed out earlier, even my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), was not here in 1932, so he would not have the bill in his files. I do not know where we could get the bill.

An hon. Member: In the archives.

Mr. Peters: Yes, perhaps in the archives. This bill is important to Canadians. The form in which it has been presented certainly does nothing for the freedom of information policy of the government. I believe that when we pass this bill we will be passing a pig in a poke. I doubt that even the people who have dealt with the specific segments of the bill could even get up and indicate what the changes are, people such as the former minister of agriculture. Will this bill produce the required changes to eliminate the problems of the producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) talked about this bill and what effect it would have on certain people. I think we should understand why this bill is before the House, Mr. Speaker. It has not come about because of one day, one week, one month or one year of work, but because of many days, many weeks, many months and several years of work on the tariff board report and on the negotiations at the GATT meetings in Geneva.

Earlier this afternoon we heard some remarks about consultation. According to that hon. members you would think that this sort of thing had never taken place before in Canada. I was going to inform the government House leader earlier today—I did not want to take up the time of the House—but I should like to inform him now, through you, Mr. Speaker, that these tariff changes have come about as a result of such detailed consultation as had never taken place in our history before. I refer to meetings between producers, processors, consumers—all the people involved in the trade who are concerned with the changes in tariffs on food in Canada. There was never such consultation before and the record will show that never have there so many people involved.

Producers and people from different parts of the processing industry and the retailing industry were sent as observers, and as advisers to the negotiators in Geneva. They put forward their ideas on the changes that should be made. That kind of consultation had never happened before. These people were not just from the Liberal caucus but were from all walks of life, from farm organizations, producer marketing groups, provincial governments—some provincial ministers actually took part in the discussions. They were free to do that; in fact they were asked to do that.

Some gains were made, Mr. Speaker, although from the remarks made by the hon. member who spoke just before me, you would get the idea that we gave everything away. I believe he used lettuce as an example. Mr. Speaker, you could use that old story about the best salad in the world—"let us alone". Mr. Speaker, lettuce is left alone except for 16 weeks of the year when it is in production in Canada. The rest of the time it is admitted duty free. The Canadian horticultural industry and the producers' organizations can arrange that it be admitted for one sixteen-week span, two spans of eight weeks each, or for two spans of ten weeks and six weeks in the two production seasons. In this country we have an early spring season, and then the second crop later in the year. It is left to the producers to decide whether they want a straight 16-week span or two eight-week spans at different times, or whatever. This is arranged through consultation; it is not forced upon them.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is not in the House tonight, but shortly after his appointment he issued a press release announcing some of these new tariff changes and pointing out how beneficial they would be to agriculture. You would have thought he had accomplished this in his two weeks as minister. Mr. Speaker, we started meetings long ago. Our chief negotiator would return from Geneva and we would have meetings late into the night to discuss the changes and concessions that were offered. We had to take some very tough positions, as is obvious by what has been accomplished in these negotiations. The minister's press release pointed out how beneficial these changes would be to some agricultural production entities in Canada.

A good example of some of the benefits that have been gained is in the production of tomato paste. This will affect southern Ontario, southern British Columbia and, with new varieties, many other parts of Canada such as the Annapolis Valley will benefit. Some hybrid varieties are proving very successful in areas of the country that do not have the same number of heat units as southern Ontario. The new varieties require less heating units and thus require fewer frost-free days to produce a mature crop.

We know that the processing industry is on the verge of expansion because the protection given to the tomato paste industry has been raised to 13.5 per cent. This will make it possible for the producers to know what they face and what their competitors will have to pay in order to bring that product into Canada.

Mr. Jake Warren, who was our chief negotiator in Geneva, formerly our ambassador to the United States and High Commissioner to Great Britain, is one of the most capable men I have ever met. Certainly, we did not always agree. When I remarked that on one occasion, someone replied, "For Whelan to always agree would be an amazing thing in the first place." Mr. Warren was a tough negotiator, and when we told him what we wanted, he went to Geneva with our demands, and generally that is what we got. Naturally, he did not win everything, but he won some concessions for the agricultural industry. Some of them were things that we should have had previously. The hon. member who spoke before me said that some industries had been disappearing in parts of Ontario, parts of Quebec, parts of British Columbia such as the Fraser Valley which produces vegetables, and some parts of the maritimes.

We must face facts, however. We should concentrate on growing those products which are suited to our climatic conditions and in which we have proved our efficiency. This bill will help us accomplish that although, of course, not to the degree that will satisfy everyone.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Gene Whelan's bill.

Mr. Whelan: Humility just about overcomes me, Mr. Speaker, because my hon. friend said, "That's the Gene Whelan bill."

Mr. Peters: It sounds like one.

Mr. Whelan: It may be said that the bill does not provide enough protection for those vegetables that require a great deal of hand labour. The hon. member who spoke before me talked about having some kind of immediate surcharge or border control that could be activated if damage is about to be sustained by producers of a certain commodity and cheap imports are going to destroy their return. This is one of the things that was recommended in the tariff negotiations and it was expected that an agreement could be worked out.

The Minister of Agriculture, who is not present in the House, issued a press release about the changes in the implementation of an import surtax. The Canadian horticultural industry and the tariff board made a recommendation that an automatic surtax should be applied to imports of horticultural products as they cross the border, if the cost fell below a "trigger" price based on an average of the previous three-year f.o.b. import prices. That is not what we got, Mr. Speaker. We have something that can take as long as 20 days to implement. That is not what I had suggested and it is not what I thought would be brought forth in this House by the minister. He comes from an area that is involved in all kinds of production. When you consider the kind of consultation that has to take place before the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce can implement that surtax, you can see that it is going to be too late to be of any benefit.

The Minister of Agriculture is one of the key ministers in this matter, but if he should happen to be out of the country there is nothing in the bill, that I can find, that provides for action to be taken in his absence. It appears to me that nothing can be done if these products are coming into Canada while he is out of the country—unless they find him so that he can issue an order, and then they go through this consultation process. That is a bunch of bureaucratic nonsense. Hardly another country in the world that would allow that. I fought against that same thing and I was so sure that we would be successful. I am so disappointed that we have something that will take as long as 20 days.

Some Canadian products have only 20 or 30 days' production. It takes 20 days to put in an order. My God, Mr. Speaker, it will be too late. Destruction will take place and you then discourage production of that kind of a crop. Anyone who knows about high risk crops will understand that. Talk about the amount of money involved! The Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is not here. There is one minister here, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKinnon). He is going to defend the government's stand on these things. But the Minister of Finance is not here.

Talk about vegetables and things which require a tremendous amount of hand labour. These are the things for which farmers borrow. Over 50 per cent of farmers' total income goes in interest on that kind of borrowing because they need so much capital to operate. From the time they plant seedlings to the time they transplant them, they cultivate them, baby them, harvest them, pack them, and all those things, over 50 per cent of their expenditures go on interest rates and this was when they were below 10 per cent.

I have letters from farmers who are paying 15 ½ per cent and 15 ¾ per cent on greenhouse operations to keep going for this winter's operation. They do not know what will happen to them. They do not know whether they should continue. Some are not, because of the insecurity that exists. The insecurity is still there because the surtax, the program announced by the new Minister of Agriculture is just not satisfactory. It is just not what the horticultural industry asked for. It is not what the over-all industry asked for and it is just not what the former minister intended. He wanted to make sure Canadians had the opportunity to consume Canadian products and wanted to give them the kind of protection and security they needed, so that when they do go to the bank manager—

Mr. Peters: Why wasn't there a trigger mechanism in the bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I think the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan), should carry on.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Whelan: It is up to the government to implement the regulations. But I know what those gals and guys in Industry Trade and Commerce think about farmers in negotiations. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret) in the other place answered a question the other day. I can find no place where this has been changed. They were talking about negotiations on quotas and chickens coming into Canada. He said that that was the Minister of Agriculture's job. I can find no place where that authority has been vested in the Minister of Agriculture. I can find no place where the Minister of Agriculture went to Washington to negotiate chickens at all. A bunch of bureaucrats went to Washington to do it. Let me tell you when I was Minister of Agriculture they were not allowed to do that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: When we went to Washington and the secretary of agriculture for the United States sat across the table, if we did not agree then we went to GATT and let an independent court settle the problem. We did not give away the kitchen with the stove and the cupboards and everything in them. We knew that we were right. My, the controls that the Americans have. When a Canadian tries to export products to Americans he finds that the controls are much stricter than the Minister of Agriculture is suggesting now. We want at least equal to that or even better than the Americans have to protect their producers.

Most people try to get across that Americans are not protective of their society. They are not trade restrictionists, so people say. Mr. Speaker, they are the greatest trade restrictionists that I know of any place in the world. I base this on my nearly seven years as Minister of Agriculture studying and looking at what other countries were doing to protect their producers. They have some of the most restrictive trade practices anywhere. Some have been wiped out under these negotiations. There are hidden tariff practices. If there is evidence of their using them, you can take them to GATT to find out why they are using them, and appeal for compensation in those cases.

If one checks the history of negotiations, one will find there have never been any more detailed negotiations. This applies not to just the horticultural sector but to the meat sector also, probably the most successful of all negotiations that took place at Geneva. They were probably most beneficial for that industry, the most important industry of all, the over-all agricultural industry of Canada.

As I said, most of it was agreed by consultation with the provincial ministers and in some instances with the provincial premiers. If they wanted to be involved they could be. One or two of them actually took part in the negotiations. They went there themselves to make suggestions and to consult with the people who were concerned.

I could not agree more with what was stated earlier. Ministers have had since June 4 to draft a new bill or have a new policy to inform people. But what we should have is an old schedule alongside this one to make a fair comparison and to see what changes have been made, how they have been made, whom they will benefit and whom they will harm, etc. There will be some who will say that they have been harmed by this.

If you read this bill as an ordinary layman it says: an Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to make certain amendments to the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932, the Australian Trade Agreement Act, 1960. I believe the Australians and New Zealanders are given one more year of phasing in the tariff changes on pears, and it makes it a little better for British Columbians who export some cherries to Australia and New Zealand. One would think that was the main part of the act. But when one looks at the act and sees the tremendous amount of changes that have been made not only for horticultural crops but for the many other entries produced in Canada—some we hope will be produced more abundantly than—ever before because of this legislation—it will be a challenge to a lot of producers in Canada. It will be a challenge to a lot of people thinking about processing here.

Our biggest customer is the United States. We are their biggest customer in the world for these particular products. Many people are not aware of this fact or are not aware of the amount of trade that takes place between our two nations. That does not mean that we cannot discuss or disagree, or go to GATT if necessary to have those kinds of discussions. It does not mean we cannot put things on the table and allow a free and independent body to make that decision for us if we cannot come to a harmonious agreement between ourselves. We will see as we go over the schedule the many changes that are made. I hope that any members who do not have the answers before them will be provided with them when the time comes for this bill to follow that stage.

I have had some discussions, not in as much detail as I would have liked since the ways and means motion has been tabled. I think we should have had the opportunity to discuss in full detail some of these things with the Canadian Horticultural Society, the Canadian Food Processors Association and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. How many members have done this? I have not had time to go over each item to see if there are other changes. Maybe I should not even be concerned about that because the ones that are being changed from the original negotiations I believe are mentioned at the front of the bill.

Some questions will be asked by members who were not involved in the negotiations. These people will want to know if it will protect the potato growers. We think the tariff on potatoes is probably something farmers have wanted for years and years. Equalization, fair trade, and fair opportunities are what these tariff negotiations have brought for Canada and the United States. The Americans removed their quota. I do not have the figures in front of me. I believe their quota was around 400,000 cwt., and that has now been removed. The exorbitant rate that was put on after reaching a certain amount was removed from the United States tariff program. There have been concessions in the potato industry in Canada. For a long time this industry has wanted to be on an equal footing.

The increase in production will not take place overnight with these commodities, even if we have the know-how. I know that in Your Honour's constituency there is a tremendous potential for certain horticultural crops. I was recently there. I saw some of these commodities left in the field.

The other night there was a program over CBC which showed grain rotting in Stavely, Alberta. The next morning I called the Alberta Pool to see how much had been lost. I was told that the amount lost was unreportable. The other night the head of the Canadian Grains Commission appeared before our committee. I asked how much grain is lost this way in western Canada. He informed me the amount was so small it could not be measured. Because of that report, editorials were written about what a crying shame it is that our grain is rotting while people are starving in other parts of the world.

The other day while driving down highway 115 through Victoria county I saw acres and acres of pumpkins that had not been harvested. There are tomato fields in my area that were not touched because production was so good. Because of their capacity for processing, they could not handle all the production. One farmer had 500 tons on his farm that were not touched. His acreage was that good that he was able to supply his share of the market off the other part of the field. The processing facilities of the other companies were filled to the brim. The gods were good to us.

Some of this kind of production could be used for tomato paste. Tomato paste does not require the same high quality product as ketchup, canned tomatoes and tomato soups. In Canada we maintain a very high standard. These tariff changes will allow us to keep that high standard of which we are so proud. We are superior to any other country. Any country that exports to Canada must meet the same high standards that we impose on our producers and processors.

Let us hope that some of this waste will be overcome. Some producers may be enticed to crowd their facilities a little if they have this kind of protection. They could gear up their facilities to take care of the extra tomatoes.

Fast food outlets are rapidly becoming a way of life in Canada. The pizzerias and similar establishments use a very high quality tomato product. It contains vitamin C and other minerals necessary for a healthy diet. That was something that was considered in these tariff negotiations.

I am sorry I was not here earlier today to hear the Minister of Finance introduce this bill. I hope he gave those responsible for these tariff changes some credit. They worked hard on the negotiations that took place. There was horse trading, bartering, and travelling back and forth across the ocean to see if they should bend a little bit, and so on.

Our world is small and becoming smaller all the time. We are trading in a world community, in fact a world neighbourhood. No matter what happens, we are going to be affected. Something may happen that would never have happened 10, 20, 30, 40 years ago. We are affected almost instantly now.

With satellites we now know what production will be ahead of time. We can pretty well tell whether there will be a lack of food before harvesting, because of the pictures continually sent to earth by these satellites. Our Canadian Department of Agriculture shares in some of these satellites. We are in a better position to know how to deal with our fellow man not only in trade, but to assist him in a time of need. Are we doing that?

We in this country have some of the best know-how on production and processing. We have the most modern means for processing. We also have some of the best methods of research. In addition to our own researchers, we have signed agreements with other countries which have top notch researchers and scientists.

We have an exchange program with the United States for scientists. In January of this year we signed an agreement with Israel, which has some of the most competent scientists. They do an excellent job on horticultural crops. Their research is available to us through agreement. On projects where we do better, their researchers work here instead of duplicating the work in their country. Their researchers work on projects here and ours work on some projects in their country. This could be with regard to apples, pears or peaches, or any kind of vegetable crop.

Israel's irrigation expertise is superior to any in the world. It can be beneficial to Canada. Their research has come about because of the tremendous amount of energy it takes to pump their water. Nearly one-third of their energy consumption is to irrigate crops in desert or semi-desert areas. Although there are different climatic conditions there, this research can be used for many of the crops produced in Canada.

Possibly Bill C-18 is not considered by some to be important. However, it is a very important bill for the horticultural industry. They have been asking for it for a long time. I note that two concessions are being made to Australia and New Zealand concerning pears. I do not see much wrong with that. I am not saying I would have given them because we are always being told if we do not do something, they will. However, they are Commonwealth trading partners and members of GATT. If it will be beneficial to one part of this nation, allowing our producers to expand their production, that is all right with me.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan) will accept a question. In his speech he talked about seeing fields of tomatoes in Ontario that were not harvested. He has always been a great advocate of governing boards. There are boards that govern wheat and other commodities. Does the hon. member not feel that if we had the law of supply and demand governing, maybe these tomatoes might have been harvested? The hon. member made a great speech. Why is he so extravagant in his suggestions as to what happened? I would like to hear what he has to say. I do not live in a tomato area. I live in a wheat area where young farmers today are questioning even the Canadian Wheat Board and government interference with private enterprise. I would like to ask the hon. member about that.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, first I want to say that the tomato marketing board was put into effect in Ontario long before I even came on the scene. That was under a Conservative government which has been here for 37 years. The Canadian Wheat Board was put into effect by a Conservative government, and it had reasons for setting up the Canadian Wheat Board. One need only read history and refresh his memory about the unfairness which took place.

The same thing happens with any other crop. If you happen to be a big tomato grower and are a good friend of the processor, you might just deliver all your crop. However, if you are out in the country a little farther away and perhaps not such a good friend of the processor, you may not deliver yours. Under the marketing system of Ontario under that great Conservative regime, all producers are treated equally and fair. They are producing the product they contract to produce. Nothing stops them from being efficient or producing the best tomatoes. They strive to produce more per acre than they did previously, and they up their production per acre all the time.

remedy. I know that even this government, with all its undoubted ability, will find it difficult to make 48 hours out of only 24, and even if there were 48 hours we could not legislate in this Parliament for all the problems which exist.

We must have a system whereby, through the regulatory process, we can implement in some detail the general principles laid down in Parliament. But in doing so, there must be some remedy. It is not for this House to allow governments to cut the umbilical cord. When we give authority by a statute through an enabling section to a government, a government agency, a government corporation, the governor in council or the minister, to proceed by regulation, we must guarantee to the people we serve that there will be a remedy for them to come back and say, "this is unfair, this is unjust". When that happens, when the public is aware of this, then the bureaucrats—and we have been making a little fun of them but I have deep respect for the people in the public service who serve this country—will have to realize they have a responsibility and that the attempts to govern by regulation must always be subject to the supervision of the House. Anything less than that is not good enough.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly tonight to congratulate the government for introducing the bill with which I agree entirely, Bill C-18, to amend the Customs tariff.

Mr. Speaker, if we have those trade agreements, if we have customs agreements, it is still important that we have customs clearing centres. As member for Laprairie, a riding which includes six cities, the cities of Saint-Lambert, Candiac, Lemoyne, Laprairie, Brossard and Greenfield Park, I rise on behalf of my riding and the whole south shore to ask the minister if he would not consider it appropriate in 1979 to support for the whole south shore the establishment of a customs house. The riding of Laprairie is the place where all trucks coming from the United States pass to go to Montreal and there are now in Montreal only two customs clearing centres and those centres are overworked and nearly have a monopoly. In light of the volume of goods being moved by truck and also the extent of the energy crisis that is coming in our society I believe the time has come for us on the south shore to have a customs clearing centre. When I talk about the south shore, I am talking about a territory that includes the riding of Beauharnois, the riding of Chambly, the riding of Longueuil, the riding of Verchères, the riding of Shefford, several ridings which would be directly affected and would benefit directly from such a center. Do not forget, Mr. Speaker, that this summer we on the south shore had to put up with the inconveniences of repairs made to the bridges linking my riding and the surrounding ridings with the island of Montreal. Champlain, Victoria, Jacques-Cartier bridges and the Hyppolite-Lafontaine tunnel-bridge as well as the Mercier bridge were very congested.

The reasons for that congestion in addition to the repairs were precisely that heavy traffic caused by trucks hauling those commodities so essential to our survival coming in from the United States. And precisely, Mr. Speaker, if we had had on the south shore that customs clearing centre which comes entirely under the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) and to whom I have already spoken about this problem, I am sure all people in general would have benefited from it.

[English]

The present sufferance warehouse facilities are becoming increasingly congested and the addition would make the present facilities more efficient and give a better service to the community at large. The prime location of the proposed warehouse being at the focal point of the main highways from New England, New York and all states on the eastern seaboard, and the fact that trucking companies would be able to proceed on delivery without having to incur crossing and recrossing of bridges as it is with the South Shore industries, would reduce traffic congestion of the bridges to and from the Island of Montreal. Also the non-productive mileage incurred would be reduced drastically.

• (2110)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deniger: If the hon. minister would permit me, I have seized him of this matter and I hope that he will give it his usual wisdom.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I thank the hon. member for his comment, but I want to assure him tonight that the question of a customs house at Candiac is under very active consideration by the department.

Mr. Deniger: I want to thank the minister for his kind words. I hope he will see this matter through, because it is very important to my entire region.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say a few words on the Customs tariff bill because I do not think one has come before the House in the last seven years on which I have not spoken. I had quite a lot of input into the customs tariff question before coming to the House of Commons. I see the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan), is coming into the chamber. Certainly I give him some measure of credit for this bill, but I would not give very much credit to the Liberal government when it was in power. I do not believe the former minister had very much clout in the cabinet because it took so long to get this type of bill before the House. I know the hon. member likes to take credit for it, but I would give an awful lot of credit to the people in the industries and the farming communities through their horticultural councils and other organizations, as well as the tariff board. They made a comprehensive study of what was going on. Also I would like to give a lot of credit to the negotiators at the tariff negotiations.

For many, many years the former Liberal government gave agriculture away in its negotiations. It gave away tariff concessions for agriculture in this great agricultural Canada of ours. It gave it away to other types of industry which had high tariff protection. Because of this we had to do a tremendous amount of work. We even went so far as to point out that Canada was a saint in the world of sinners when it came to tariffs for agricultural products. Canada had nothing when compared to other countries, to protect its agriculture.

It reminds me of the Kennedy Round of Negotiations. This type of thing happened to us. The Kennedy Round negotiated the removal of the tariff on apples over an eight-year period. What happened to us? No sooner were the negotiations finished and they came back, and the former minister of finance removed completely the tariff on apples coming into Canada. Then he told the people in the agricultural community that the United States would do the same. When he went to the United States asking them to do the same, they said, "Look, when we make a negotiation that is what we mean". They did not take their tariff off. We had nothing; they had something. It was things such as this that were happening to agriculture in Canada. It was difficult to receive any information on what was going on in the negotiations. It was very, very hard to get any information. Organizations such as the horticultural council and others in Canada spent years and years trying to get something which would help the situation.

Perhaps I will say that this bill goes a long way toward doing something to assist the situation, but it does not go all the way. It does not give us a protection similar to other agricultural countries. Certainly it does not give us the protection which exists in Australia. Australia partakes in tariff negotiations, but if that country does not like one's product, it finds something to stop it completely; it is not even let in. I am not happy about concessions to Australia on canned pears. I do not understand exactly what the concessions are with Australia.

Mr. Breau: Cherries.

Mr. Whittaker: I hope the concessions will not do too much. The hon. member mentioned cherries. The former minister of agriculture said that we shipped cherries to Australia.

Mr. Breau: Crosbie said, "Cherries".

Mr. Whittaker: That will be the day. They would not have them; they would not take them.

Mr. Breau: Your minister said that.

Mr. Whittaker: Well, okay.

An hon. Member: Why do you believe him now?

Mr. Breau: I do not believe him; neither does he.

Mr. Whittaker: Perhaps the hon. member could rise and make a speech after I am finished. Sometimes he makes good ones. I agree with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) on what he said about orders in council and regulations being established without consultation and knowing what was happening. That type of practice will not continue.

The former minister of agriculture mentioned what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said a few months ago about Customs tariff. There was a complete and utter mess left for us when the election was called. It had to be straightened out.

Mr. Whelan: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whittaker: This bill was brought in approximately a month to six weeks before the election was called. Why was it not brought to the floor of the House? Why was it not passed? There would have been no trouble having it passed through the House quickly. It was not brought in. It was given as a concession to keep the minister quiet. Certainly his government was not willing to bring it in, and the election was called. When the season for fruit came around, there was a complete and utter mess which had to be straightened out.

Mr. Whelan: That is not true.

Mr. Whittaker: I will tell the hon. member that I have never seen such fast action in my life as that of the present cabinet. The mess was straightened out and put on the right footing.

Mr. Whelan: Tell us what they did.

Mr. Whittaker: The Minister of Agriculture contributed greatly.

Mr. Breau: It is a good thing Ray was not responsible for it; they would be bankrupt.

Mr. Whittaker: I can tell the hon. member that the minister contributed greatly because he had some clout in cabinet. The President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker), who is charged with the responsibility of collecting these tariffs after the bill is passed, was involved. His input was fast, sure, and decisive. The Minister of Agriculture had to come in and make some press releases.

We have heard members talk about surcharges. We have not asked for a surcharge for a great many years. The first time I was involved in a request for such a surcharge was in 1955, but we got absolutely nothing. There was no such surcharge established before the election. We did not obtain a surcharge because, as I believe, the then minister of agriculture could not get his five-ring circus together, and I mean the five departments that are involved. Our Minister of Agriculture has been able to accomplish a great deal in a very short time on behalf of the consumers and agricultural producers.

The hon. member for Essex-Windsor says it will take 20 days to bring a surcharge into effect. The Minister, being honest, says it could take up to 20 days even though they will work with the speed we saw at the end of last June in cleaning up the mess left by the former government. We do not have to These tariff negotiations are something they have wanted for some time.

There is no guarantee that we can stop the waste. But if the matter was left to the open market system everybody would grow tomatoes and hope somebody would buy them. Tomatoes are a perishable crop. If they are two days too long on the vine and the wrong kind of weather comes along, they are destroyed immediately and completely. They are unfit for processing, and unfit for human consumption because they burst and rot in the field.

If the hon. member wants to come down to Ontario and grow tomatoes, I do not think the Ontario government would let him. He could grow all the tomatoes he wanted in the Fraser Valley or some other area, but I do not think he could find a grower in all of Ontario who is in an area where there is a tomato processing plant who would grow them without a contract, even if he had the right to do so, because of the terrible things that used to happen. It is not new for these products to be wasted. I think there are about 30 products in Ontario which are regulated under provincial marketing legislation provided for the protection of producers. They are guaranteed nothing. They are guaranteed compensation only if the proper grade of product is delivered. If junk is delivered, producers are told to take it home. They have to meet the grades and standards provided for under the legislation.

Let us consider the Canadian Wheat Board. If a farmer was 20 miles out in the country and got to the elevator late, he would find the elevator was full, and he was told, "No room; go home." R. B. Bennett set up the Canadian Wheat Board because of the unfairness that existed regarding quotas. If we could find a way to get rid of all of our grain and if we could sell it all on the world markets, quotas would be opened up and there would be practically free delivery. I am sure the hon. member knows that from time to time farmers just said they would wait for a better price. They were not going to deliver even where quotas were opened wide. However, the Alberta Wheat Pool told me an interesting thing. They said, "You know, Mr. Whelan, this year 60 per cent more grain than last year was delivered to our elevators". I asked why. They said, "Our grades are better. We do not have so much tough and damp grain and we are able to store it without worrying about it spoiling". If they did not have drying facilities and if they took in tough and damp grain—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please.

Mr. Whelan: I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I appreciate the speech made by the former minister of agriculture.

Mr. Roy (Laval): A great speech.

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly it was great, and I know the hon. member would like it, but let me point out one simple factor. When R. B. Bennett set up the Canadian Wheat Board, it was not on a compulsory basis. McFarlane was head of the Canadian Wheat Board. Later during the war it operated on a compulsory basis. The hon. member was very verbose in making a speech in support of boards. He was talking about tomatoes and other products, but when he dealt with R. B. Bennett's setting up the Canadian Wheat Board he did not point out that it was not set up on a compulsory basis. Only when the Liberals got back in after the depression did it operate on a compulsory basis. The hon. member's brother was in the socialist government in Saskatchewan, and the hon. member believes in boards. I am not saying boards are all wrong, but I am referring to some of the complaints he made tonight. I hope the Canadian people and the farmers of Alberta and Saskatchewan know that when the Canadian Wheat Board began operating on a compulsory basis—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will agree with me that he is raising more a matter of difference of opinion than a point of order or a question of privilege, which has to be related to procedure and practices in the House. An abuse of a rule does not excuse another abuse, unless the hon. member wants to make his case.

Mr. Woolliams: I would still like to finish one thing. The former minister of agriculture has been basically hypocritical in what he has said.

An hon. Member: Hypocritical?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, in his statement. I am not saying he is a hypocrite. He believes in boards, and then complains about abuses.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member's case was not too good as far as questions of privilege are concerned. He just had another opinion.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to be a perfectionist. The hon. member almost appears to be saying he is. A perfectionist is a person who takes infinite pains—and then gives them to others. The hon. member referred to my brother. He has brought my family in on this. My brother has lived in Saskatchewan since 1946. The hon. member said my brother was a member of a socialist government.

An hon. Member: Isn't he?

Mr. Whelan: I point out to the hon. member that the Conservatives have been in power in Ontario for 37 years. They are strong marketing board people. R. B. Bennett forced the Canadian Wheat Board on the people. They never had a vote until the Liberals came in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will agree that we are faced with a difference of opinion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a few words before the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan) retires to receive first aid for his arm with which he has been vigorously patting himself on the back. Before he does that, I want to remind him that he was a member of a government which collected together the greatest galaxy of bureaucrats with which this unfortunate country was ever cursed.

Mr. Whelan: Not in my department. We only added 23 in seven years.

Mr. Baldwin: I sat on a committee which examined some of the work of the bureaucrats in the hon. member's department. I will admit that after the joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments had occasion to rebuke the minister and his department, they did mend their ways. There never was a government which got together such a group of bureaucrats who would never use one word when they could use 100, particularly if those 100 were couched in a form which was unintelligible to the ordinary person.

Getting back to the bill, from which we seem to have departed, and looking at the bill, at first blush, clause 2 says:

The Minister may order

(a) that the specific rate of duty . . . shall apply in lieu of the ad valorem rate of duty—

Then we go from there to clause 6 (2) which says:

Notwithstanding anything inserted in Schedule A to the customs tariff . . . the Governor in Council may, at any time during the period commencing with the coming into force of that section . . . by order effective on and after . . . increase a rate—

Then we come to look at the fine print, and I happened to turn this up at page 27 Schedule III: a new tariff on "Aircraft, not including engines, under such regulations as the minister may prescribe". These have been the curse of this country, the attempts by governments, at the instance of their bureaucracy, to control this country by order in council and by regulation.

We sat on this committee, which was a good, all party committee, which acted unanimously. I recall one of the victories, which we should have won but which we did not, when a member of the party of the hon. member for Essex-Windsor, the former member for Vancouver-Kingsway, Simma Holt, was persuaded to bring in some very legitimate complaints about non-tariff structures brought into effect by order in council which had a very deleterious effect on the entry into Canada of certain types of footwear. She made a very strong case—she showed there had been much injustice—but nothing was done.

This is the trouble we face, and I am sure the minister will agree with me in his heart because he knows it to be so, that the former government intervened so massively in every aspect of the private lives of people, giving itself the right through its bureaucrats to act by order in council, that the rule of law and the rule of Parliament ceased to exist. That is what we face today. I call attention very briefly to the fact that here in a very simple bill amending the tariff structure we find—

An hon. Member: It is not simple.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) brought to my attention the difficulty which ordinary people have in understanding the legislation, and not only understanding it but realizing the extent to which, at the whim of the minister on the advice of his officials, the government may vary, change and alter not only these tariffs but the non-tariff structure, and the people who are involved will not know anything about it until it is over and done with.

I am fortunate to be able to sit on the same committee in this ensuing session, and I hope that the committee will continue to give to the people of Canada, as an arm of this Parliament, an opportunity for them to stand up and complain about the practice of using orders in council and regulations under this act without there being some remedy. One of the things which we have suggested, and I hope this government will bring it into force—and I see my hon. friend, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker), who is charged with this bill and is a very useful member of that committee, and also the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), both of whom, I hope, will see to it—is that in cases of this kind there be pre-publication of rules and of orders in council as well as of regulations so that people who are affected will be advised. This will be done by notice so that those who will be affected, the producers and the consumers, will have an opportunity to make representations directly to the government or to the tribunal which will be making the decision, or to members of Parliament who, in the final analysis, are the ultimate harbingers of destiny, as it should be, of the affairs of the nation.

There is no doubt in my mind that a continuation of this practice is the easy way to do things, to sit cosily up in your office and enact the regulation or order in council. Nine times out of ten the minister does it on the advice of his advisers. I am not saying that in a disparaging sense, because it is utterly impossible in the kind of society we have for ministers to be on top of all the data, all the orders in council, and all propositions which are put before them.

Mr. Whelan: You have super ministers over there and they have three departments!

Mr. Baldwin: The trouble with new ministers is that they are like Hercules.

Mr. Whelan: Come now.

Mr. Baldwin: They have the old stable to clean up with a hundred years' accumulation of you know what.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles: They were not in power one hundred years; it just seems like that.

Mr. Baldwin: It is time the matter received the attention of this House. I am sure that from time to time this committee will be bringing in recommendations when it has come to their attention that there have been abuses of the regulatory process, so that the public of Canada will know that there is a worry about the lack of speed in respect of agricultural matters at this time. These things can and will be done.

Under this new minister most of those things that have to be known to keep the agricultural industry out of trouble are known very quickly. Most of these things are known two or three weeks before the trouble develops. Under the previous administration we had great difficulty in getting things done. I should not say that we never got tariffs imposed, because I remember shortly after coming here the hon. member for Essex-Windsor did impose a surcharge on cherries. I think he was able to do that because other members of cabinet did not realize or understand what was going on. As soon as they did, that was the end of it, and we did not see another rapid imposition of a surcharge to provide the protection needed.

Under the previous administration we thought we were going to see a formula developed. We had hopes that the former minister would be able to sell that formula to his cabinet colleagues. He was unsuccessful because five years or six years later we still did not have a formula. We have such a formula today, and I am quite proud to note its existence. This is a formula that can and will be workable.

Mr. Whelan: You know it is a halfway measure.

Mr. Whittaker: The former minister says it is a halfway measure. He did not bring in anything so we did not have any measure at all. I do not believe this is a halfway measure. That hon. member can sit there and say those kinds of things, but let us wait and see how this works. When we see it work we will realize it is not a halfway measure. I think it is going to work, and the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Essex-Windsor—

An hon. Member: He will be the minister again next week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whittaker: If he is going to be the minister again next week, God help the country. That hon. member keeps patting himself on the back, and he did so while watching the producers and the canners in this country go down, down and down. I have in mind the tomato industry in southern Ontario, which is now in a really sad situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Whittaker) should be allowed to make his speech without constant interference by other members in this chamber.

An hon. Member: They just do not like to hear the truth.

Mr. Whittaker: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was coming to the end of my remarks at any rate. The catcalls from the other side sort of worked me up. At any rate, I am sure that the industry will be pleased to see this bill passed. It should have been in place for last year's crop. Some products did receive the protection required through an order in council by our government. Some products did not receive the protection needed. When we pass this bill it will go a long way toward helping the agricultural industry in this country but, as I said before, it does not appear to me to provide the protection in Canada that other countries have in respect of agriculture.

Mr. Ray Chenier (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, the tariff board and the horticultural industry recommended that an automatic surtax be applied to imports of horticultural products as the produce crossed the border when the price fell below a "trigger" price based on an average of the previous three-year f.o.b. import price.

The present proposal is not automatic and is not what was requested by the industry or the tariff board, and the news release of October 22 is erroneous and misleading.

The improved faster system is unlikely to be any different from the present system, for the following reasons. There is a time delay between the produce crossing the border and the industry authorities verifying the information to bring to Agriculture Canada's attention, resulting in a probable delay of several days. The imports are usually made in summer months when cabinet ministers are frequently on holidays or absent from the office and cannot take the fast and effective action necessary. Officials of both departments need time to consult and go over the information, and this will result in more delays. This type of procedure requires notifying the exporting country, and consultation prior to the surtax being put in place, with more delay.

It is common knowledge that the three-year average proposed as the trigger price base did not take into account the inflation rate, and the 85 per cent of the three-year average is unlikely to be of much help under present economic conditions.

Since the season for crops like sweet cherries, etc., is very short, about three to four weeks at most, and injury can occur within a few days and a few shipments, the proposed system will not be of any real value because it is not automatic. The season will be over and the injury will have occurred before any action will have been taken. For commodities not named, the 20 days to make a decision is completely unworkable. The opposition among the two departments from a bureaucratic standpoint is well known, and since there is nothing new in the proposals to overcome this opposition, these time delays will be long. I cannot see that this proposal will be any different from the present procedure.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this bill will implement the ways and means motions relating to the customs tariff which were tabled by the former minister of finance in the last Parliament on October 23, 1978. Essentially it removes the tariffs on imported fruits and vegetables at certain times of the year and reinstates them during our growing seasons when domestic produce is available. It helps the consumer at times when food is scarce and expensive, and it protects our producers at other times.

Unfortunately the new government did not see fit to recall Parliament in June to deal with these matters. In the situation in which we find ourselves now, it becomes clear that this bill and other measures are needed more than ever.

● (2130)

Consumers are bearing substantial increases in food costs. U.S. trucking costs have increased 45 per cent since last winter, and those increases are expected to drive imported food prices to record highs this winter. The increases in gasoline prices in Canada which the government is about to impose, will further drive up prices, as the energy costs involved in the food chain—transportation, storage, processing and packaging—are passed on to the consumer. The decline in the dollar will add 15 per cent to the cost of imported foods. When imported foods become more expensive, we have seen that domestically produced foods go up in price too, because there is less competitive pressure from imports.

In all these circumstances, this bill which is before us and which is left over from the previous Parliament, is necessary, and it is also very necessary that other measures be introduced. I hope that when this bill is passed, the government will introduce its own measures in response to the current situation. The food policy group, for instance, in the consumer affairs department needs to be strengthened, not, as rumour emanating from the new government would have it, included in the Department of Agriculture. With this change, it would be difficult to see how this group could maintain a strong, independent voice for consumer interests.

Food policy decisions which have been in abeyance need to be implemented. The new government has said that it is committed to bringing down the cost of inflation. One of the key places to start is with food prices. People must shop for food every week, and when they are faced with increasing food prices it tends to trigger more demands for wage settlements as people become concerned about how they will cope with the cost of living. While I commend the government for belatedly introducing this measure, I would also point out to ministers that, in our present circumstances, it is a very small measure. I trust that they will soon bring in their own measures and address the question of rising food prices.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCain in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, as we begin consideration of clause 1 in Committee of the Whole, could the parliamentary secretary indicate exactly where the changes are? I understand that there are some changes in this bill in the ways and means motion of this Parliament as compared to the motion in the previous Parliament. We will give the parliamentary secretary a minute to get organized and for the officials to be seated. Before we go any further, we would like to know what the changes are.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I will start by giving some of the changes involved, and when the officials arrive I will make sure whether or not I have the complete list. The change on canned pears from Australia has already been mentioned. It extends the phasing out of the preferential tariff by a year and gives a slightly more favourable rate in the interval than the original ways and means motion of the last Parliament. There is an inclusion, and I believe this is a change which is not related to fruit and vegetables. It extends numerous temporary tariff reductions on consumer goods which were scheduled to expire on June 30, 1979. Most of these were originally introduced in the budget of February, 1973, and have been extended from time to time since. The main products subject to these so-called temporary reductions are raw sugar, motor vehicle parts, cameras and films, vacuum cleaners, pharmaceuticals, chinaware, bottles, and hand tools.

These temporary reductions will become permanent when the bill is introduced on the results of the multilateral trade negotiations and is enacted. There is I believe one other change with regard to sugar. The temporary rates on sugar and related products now in effect were based on the recommendations made by the tariff board in its 1971 report on sugar. By virtue of this bill these rates will be continued indefinitely rather than just to June 30, 1980, as provided in Bill C-51 in the last Parliament. Those are the changes about which the hon. member inquired.

Mr. Breau: While on clause 1 it is customary to make some general comments. The hon. member for Windsor West mentioned to the Minister of Finance that perhaps the other bill could be tabled and, before it is passed to third reading, referred to a committee of the House for detailed study as was done ten years ago when the Kennedy Round was brought before the House. This would do two things: it would give hon. members an opportunity to study the bill in greater detail, and it would facilitate the passage of the bill when it comes before the House again. This is the approach that we hope the government will take. Can the parliamentary secretary tell the House whether that is the government's intention?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I have not consulted with the minister on this matter, but I thought about it myself in the interval. It seems to me to be a very sound suggestion. However, subject to checking with the minister, I cannot confirm just what we will be doing.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, what will the situation be with regard to cheese? As part of the GATT negotiations, I understand that we agreed to allow the Europeans access to our domestic market. During the election campaign, when the Prime Minister was leader of the opposition, he said in a speech in southern Ontario and one in Quebec that he intended to reduce the import quota on cheese by ten million pounds. I am not quite sure at this point whether we can take as the government's intention, the GATT agreement of last June or the Prime Minister's statement when he was leader of the opposition, during the election campaign.

● (2140)

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I will have to take that question as notice because I am not informed on the subject and it is not, of course, affected by the current bill.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would like an explanation. This is a fairly simple section. It reads as follows:

Section 15 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Normally when you are making an amendment to a bill and have it before you, you also have what it amends. In this case, however, we have the following:

15. (1) The minister may order (a) that the specific rate of duty provided for in tariff items 8702-2, 8703-1, 8704-1, 8706-1, 8707-1, 8709-1, 8710-1, 8715-1, 8717-1, 8720-1, 8721-1, 8722-1, 8724-2, 8728-1, 9201-1, 9202-1, 9203-2, 9205-2, 9206-2, 9208-1, 9210-1, 9211-2.

It is continued on the next page where it reads:

—and 9402-1 shall apply in lieu of the ad valorem rate of duty or the free rate of duty.

Mr. Chairman, we are asked to pass that. What in hell does it mean? What is the point of putting it in there in that form? There is no explanation of what it modifies, and no explanation of any of the figures. Why did they not just put in the numbers from 8702-2 to 9201-1 inclusive? Why did they leave some out? Why is it not a full series of numbers. Now we are going to pass it. Why? What does it say? What does it tell me? What does it tell you? We can go on, as there is a whole lot more.

If anyone here thinks they understand it, I will read it for them, but I do not see any sense in reading it. It does not make any sense to me and I do not think it is going to make sense to anybody else. There is nothing to put it against, as the former minister of agriculture pointed out. How are we going to make a tariff change by a number that does not apply to anything, is not related to anything, does not modify anything, and when there is no indication of what product is affected? Can we guess? The hon. lady who spoke a minute ago mentioned cheese. Is that 8704-1 or 8722-1 or could it be 9211-2?

During the war this kind of code was used to confuse the enemy; here it is used to confuse hon. members. There is no bloody way we should pass this kind of junk, and that is all it is. I do not think I ever remember not having something to put it against. If we are going to modify something we should say what we are modifying. The act is not mentioned nor is the section that is to be modified. The page supplied for notes is blank on what is being modified.

I do not know if this is good or bad, Mr. Chairman. I do not know anything about it—I do not know what any of those numbers are. I am pretty sure not many Canadians know what the numbers are, either. I do not think there is any sense in me saying, "pass Mr. Chairman, pass, Mr. Chairman"—pass for what reason? If we wanted to give this government a blank cheque we would do so, but we do not need to do it in this form.

We got a little lecture on freedom of information tonight—and I agree entirely with it—but Mr. Chairman, this is not freedom of information or freedom of anything else. The explanatory note comprises three lines which read:

This Bill would implement the ways and means motions relating to the Customs Tariff that were tabled by the Minister of Finance on October 23, 1979.

I lost the ways and means. I asked the Table officer to send me a copy, and he did. It is identical to what is here. It does not tell me anything different. What does tell us something? If the parliamentary secretary wants to tell me what these specific rates of duty provided for in tariff item 8702-2 are, and later is going to tell me about 8703-1, then I would also like to know why 8702-1 is not included? Why do we not do something with that one as well? Maybe he wants to tell me that and maybe he does not. I do not know.

We do some very stupid things as members of Parliament, Mr. Chairman. Today I was considering the salary we are paid and I am surprised how highly paid we are for our efficiency. If we were to pass this, it seems to me that we do not deserve any kind of salary. We are being asked to pass something that does not relate to anything and that does not have any yardstick to measure it against—obviously it is modifying something. It reads, "Section 15 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:". The note in the margin reads, "Application of specific duties or ad valorem rate in certain items." It does not say what they are nor whether they are additions.

Clause 1, which we passed, referred to: "Strawberries or cherries, pickled or preserved in salt, brine, oil or any other manner,". That covers a wide variety of things.

Mr. Froese: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The schedules are attached to the bill and the numbers are there. I realize they are not the same as they were in former years. I cannot understand the hon. member, with all his years of experience in the House, not knowing what the numbers were in previous years. I personally have looked up the areas that are important to me and I know where the changes have taken place. When it comes to fruit and vegetables, I know what the numbers are. I feel the schedule shows the changes that are going to be made, and there must be a record in Parliament of what they were before.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am duly chastised, humbled, and highly sorry that I cannot understand it. We are not on the appendix, are we? Maybe I missed something—maybe we have reached the stage of the appendix, or maybe we are going to discuss the appendix separately item by item. If we are at that stage, then I missed something. I was of the opinion that we were on clause 2. If I am, it does not list the appendix in this section. When we come to the appendix I presume we will discuss that. I am pleased that the member is familiar with the tariff numbers and that he understands. I would guesstimate that there are 250,000 tariff numbers. Maybe that is a conservative figure. In 20 years I have not given much attention to memorizing that list. It is not the Canadian Tire catalogue, and I am not going to get a prize.

I am still of the opinion that we have listed these numbers but have not indicated what they are put against or to what they apply. Maybe I should ask a very simple question. Why do we underline some of them and why do we not underline others? Why is "rate" underlined? Is that a new item?

Now we go on to some of the clauses under proposed section 15, and ad valorem—I suppose that means value, does it? They cannot even write the damn thing in English. It is not even in French. It is written in another foreign language. Whatever it means it says ad valorem. It says here: "rate of duty provided for in tariff items 8718"—they are not in the list—and it carries on to say "shall apply in lieu of the free rate of duty."

Proposed subsection (c) reads:

(c) that the specific rate of duty, or ad valorem minimum rate of duty, as the case may be, provided for in tariff items 10 8702-1, 8705-1, 8708-1, 8712-1, 8720-2, 8724-1, 9203-1, 9205-1, 9206-1, and 9211-1 shall apply in lieu of the free rate of duty,

There is an indication that subsection (c) is a substituted section and I would like to know for what it is substituted. Is the underlining showing the changes that were made?

I know this has been translated into the second language, whichever way that is, but we always have room on the other page to put the explanation of what we did. We are not doing that. It seems to me that we can pass this if we want, but we will not have understood it or have done much about it if we do. We are not sure whether it is good or bad. I am not sure. But I am sure that some of these changes must mean something. It does not mean that we have had people in Geneva negotiating GATT agreements, in many cases getting the worst of it for several years. Yet we are going to come up with a total change in our tariff and Customs structure that is obviously not going to be good for everybody. It will be worse for some and better for others. I would like to know first who it will be good for and who it will be bad for: Those things that are good for the people that I represent, I will vote for. But I would have to look seriously at the ones being taken away.

We are all Canadians, but we differ in some respects. Some people depend on agriculture, some on natural resources, and some on manufacturing for their livelihood. I would imagine each of these tariff items will affect something. I would like to know what they are. I do not imagine that when I sit down the parliamentary secretary will tell me what they are. I know that I can look back. But let us take a look at No. 8702-2. This is in schedule I at page eight of Bill C-18. This concerns asparagus processing. My friend knows all about this one, he knows that number off by heart. It says that if it is British Preferential Tariff—and I do not know whether we get asparagus from Great Britain, I would doubt it but maybe we do—asparagus can come in free. On what is it free? What does this mean? Is it free on two cases of asparagus? I do not know. But we are not buying any asparagus. If we get it from the most favoured nation, we will pay 3½ cents but not less than 10 per cent, or free. That is nice, but what does it mean? It is not going to be less than 10 per cent, or free. What does it mean?

It does not mean anything to me. It is going to be 3½ cents but not less than 10 per cent. I do not think I can get any asparagus for three cents. Now, if we buy it under "general tariff" it says 3½ cents but not less than 10 per cent, or free. That has not told me anything. Has it told hon. members anything? Has that told us what it was before? Does it tell us where it was moved from? How do we modify it? To what extent will it apply? However, it does say: "In any 12 month period ending 31st March, the specific duty or ad valorem duty, as the case may be, shall not be maintained in force in excess of 8 weeks, and the Free rate shall apply whenever the specific duty or ad valorem duty is not in effect." What does that tell me? I suppose if I were in the business it would tell me something about it.

I listened with great interest to what the former minister said. He said it would be triggered by the horticultural society. Then he was a little indefinite as to how they were doing it. I may have got confused by him saying that in some cases it took three weeks to make the kind of order they were going to trigger.

It is all very well, but I suppose there is some reason why we made this change. I do not see why we should pass all these numbers. The hon. member may know, but we are not supposed to be flipping to the schedule and the annexe until we come to them. We are supposed to follow some order, confusing and unenlightening as it may be. Before we pass these items we would like to know whether there was any increase or a decrease.

What was the most favoured nation tariff last year? Was it two cents or five cents? I do not know whether or not it was raised. It does not even say plus or minus. It does not say it was increased or decreased. There are some very serious omissions in the way we are presenting these Custom tariff amendments, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to call it ten o,clock so the department can think about these things and perhaps supply some additional information.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SOCIAL SECURITY—REQUEST THAT PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES BE MAINTAINED

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): On October 24 last, Mr. Speaker, I put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) a simple and direct question, to wit whether he was in favour of universal family allowances. As it has been customary for Progessive Conservative ministers ever since they came into power, he spoke entirely beside the question telling me how much he approved the child tax credit created by the Liberals.

Why did I suddenly ask such a question? Because serious rumour in women's organizations and in social planning councils has it that the Progressive Conservatives have decided to remove part of the family allowances to finance their credit, that is some $575 million for the first year.

We saw during the weekend that the cat was again out of the bag as evidenced by an article in the Toronto Star and another in Dimanche-Matin. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) in Gander was compelled to admit that such an idea was being considered by the Progressive Conservative government. Again today I put my question to the minister who once again answered beside the question, this time referring to the redistribution of income and to poverty. He also deceived the House and the Canadian people when he made them believe that I had myself initiated a review of family programs for children which he only carried on. This is entirely false. The work which I undertook in my former department dealt with the creation of a Canadian guaranteed annual income plan.

As long as an annual income guarantee proposal is not put forward in this House, I will find it unbelievable that a minister whose mandate is to improve the family policy can be so weak in front of his cabinet colleagues as to consider taking the family allowances from certain children. Is the minister for children ready to sacrifice nearly $1 billion in fiscal exemptions for children, and a good part of the $2 billion family allowances, in order to finance the Conservative election promises of his Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie)? He would then be on an equal footing with the minister of the underprivileged, which he is at that, who will sell out Canada's poor during a secret meeting of the welfare ministers Monday next, November 12, behind closed doors, at the Four Seasons hotel in Toronto. Is he so weak in cabinet—he who is not even in charge of the committee on social affairs—who is not political minister from Toronto, who is the junior to the future superminister of social development who is not even appointed yet, that he cannot hold his own before the Treasury Board bureaucrats and the economics ministers, who do not give a hoot about the seven million Canadian children who are still receiving family allowances? To whom and for how much will the children's budget be sold out in a country where provincial governments do not develop policies for the support of families, and where 2,000 day care places were lost during last year only? No redistribution policy, Mr. Speaker, and I shall conclude on this, can replace a family policy. And neither should be sacrificed by any minister who cares, who believes in the quality of life.

Family allowances, after all, are but a timid step to promote birth and prove to young couples and especially mothers that our society believes in and wants to help Canadian families. In cases where a couple earns $35,000, Mr. Speaker, the wife does not get that salary, and often the only cash that goes to the mother is the family allowance cheque.

I therefore conclude on this suggestion: a government that intends to do such a thing and cancel family allowances is totally cut off from the grass roots.

[English]

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member raised her question about family allowances the other day, the minister made reference to developments a year ago when the hon. member occupied the post of minister of national health and welfare. At that time the hon. member sponsored new legislation which reduced the amount of the universal family allowance from approximately $28, which it would have reached last January under normal escalation, to an even $20 per month. At the same time a new child tax credit was introduced in association with the income tax system under which families could receive an annual amount of up to $200 per child depending on the amount of family income. This was, in effect, a move away from universality and an increased emphasis on selectivity in the provision of child benefits.

We on this side of the House supported that legislation at the time because it represented an attempt to ensure that government assistance to families to meet the costs of raising children was being directed more efficiently toward those with the greatest need. Of course, we recognized this was a new step. It was an experimental step, so to speak, but we felt it was something worth a try, and therefore we supported the legislation in this House.

It may well be that the hon. member may be posing her question in order to give the minister an opportunity to expand on the government's future policy in the child benefit system. He is not prepared to do that at this time, and I think it is reasonable for him to take that position after only a few months in this portfolio. I know that the hon. member opposite and her colleagues spent many years studying the child benefit system and possible improvements to it before they were able to come to a decision which led to the legislation a year ago. While the minister does not intend to take as long as his predecessors in coming to conclusions, I think it is only reasonable for him to have a little more time to look into the whole system of child benefits which the Government of Canada administers at this time: the universal family allowance payments, the more selective child tax credit and, of course, the tax exemptions under the income tax system.

I will simply say at this time that the minister is aware of the important role the universal family allowance has played in Canada. He also regards the experience with the child tax credit over the past year to have been an interesting one and something worth careful consideration and assessment. I can assure the House that the whole field of child benefits is one of the minister's priority interests in his portfolio, and he will be giving serious study to possibilities for improving the system. Indeed, this government accords a high priority to social programs generally and to seeking improvements which will ensure that the needs of Canadians are met as effectively as possible.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PURCHASE OF NEW FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Hon. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, on October 23 of this year I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKinnon) two questions regarding the new fighter aircraft program. The first dealt with the dearth of industrial benefits being offered by the two contenders on the short list. The second question was directed specifically to the engine problems being encountered with the F16 and the performance problem with the F18A.

When the short list containing these two aircraft was announced last November, the present minister described it as a peculiar choice. Now he seems to be moving with unseemly haste. The minister must be aware—and if he is not, he should consult his colleague, the Minister for Science and Technology (Mr. Grafftey)—that it is absolutely crucial that Canada be assured of solid industrial benefits and offsets when making such a major purchase. There is grave doubt as to whether either the F16 or the F18A will be able to provide these. We have not been nearly as bloody minded as countries like France and Sweden in using our major military procurements to aid and assist our high technology industries.

Let me deal with the industrial benefits proposed by General Dynamics, the manufacturers of the F16. Of the $2.3 billion involved in the purchase, only $10 million is for advanced programs and advanced technology. There is absolutely no system or subsystem work. When there are large electronics contracts, they call up "manufacture of card assemblies, castings," and other built to print hardware, in other words, a sophisticated form of paint by numbers.

If one assumes that in a modern fighter aircraft about 35 per cent to 40 per cent is for electronics, then the real amount of electronics transmitted on this aircraft is a pitifully small percentage of the total. There is, in short, almost no significant technology transfer. The General Dynamics proposals will guarantee our accelerated obsolescence and continued build-to-print handouts.

The Industry, Trade and Commerce evaluation report which was completed in July of 1979 stated, concerning General Dynamics:

If the attitude displayed by General Dynamics' negotiating team is typical of other aspects of its operations, one would have to be seriously concerned about the seriousness of their intentions to live up to any industrial benefit commitments.

General Dynamics' past record indicates that this concern is well founded.

When General Dynamics sold the F16 to the NATO consortium in 1976, they made a series of commitments. Let us look briefly at what has happened to them.

The price per aircraft was "not to exceed" $6.09 million. By 1977, each aircraft was costing $11 million. According to the general accounting office in the United States, there is no common understanding of the term "not to exceed". What is being said now is that the price was only a goal—any modifications made to the aircraft would push up the price, and the European countries must in turn pay for all such increases.

General Dynamics also promised 58 per cent in offsets to the European countries—a commitment which would guarantee 25,000 new jobs. An average of only 48.5 per cent has been achieved, with the resulting 11,000 jobs, with no outlook that this number will increase.

The high technology transfer has been, at best, negligible. The European countries have become subcontractors; all the research and development has taken place in the United States. The NATO consortium does little more than assemble parts.

Congressman Jack Edwards, the leading Republican on the house appropriations defence subcommittee, said recently that the engine problems "leave us in a right disastrous position", to use his words, and that if he were building the F-16 powered by this engine, "I'd be nervous". To add insult to injury, strikes at the Pratt & Whitney plant together with a shortage of parts mean that by the end of this year planes will be delivered with "gaping holes where the engines should be".

The other contender on the short list is the F-18A, built by McDonnell Douglas. Here again, there would be no high technology transfer for Canadians. McDonnell Douglas has included a $507.5 million package of Standard DC-9 and DC-10 work. This "offset" is clearly outside the guidelines established for the NFA program. So far as the aerospace subsystem work is concerned, again the ITC evaluation stated that:

Neither company's industrial benefits in this category are considered to make an adequate contribution to a life cycle support capability in Canada, nor do they extend the technological expertise of the eventual Canadian industrial participant.

The F-18A is now running into significant cost overruns on the U.S. order of 1,366 planes.

Serious deficiencies are showing up during the test stages of the plane. Of major concern is the combat radius and range shortfall. The F-18A is having to come home early because of its inability to stay in the air; there is a range loss of between 10 per cent and 15 per cent. The U.S. navy does not know why they are seeing this loss of range. Nor is the F-18A achieving a proper speed of acceleration. What is specifically important here is the fact that the aircraft cannot get to the sector of the area where the intruder is. The enemy may be out of radar range and the radar of the aircraft then cannot pick it up.

On Friday last, there was an accident involving the landing gear on the F-18A. The plane had gone through two days of testing on an aircraft carrier; however, when it came to make its first land approach, the landing gear broke. Because the landing gear is so complex, there could be serious problems and expense involved in maintaining the aircraft in a land role, which is the stance for which Canada intends to use the aircraft. We think it would substantially and significantly push up its life cycle costs. There is clear evidence that there is no effective competition between the two contending aircraft. The potential industrial benefits package does virtually nothing for Canada's high technology industry. Moreover, both aircraft show serious deficiencies in their performance capabilities. In view of this, I urge the minister to add the F-18L to his short list. We would be in on the ground floor. It would offer significant technological advantage for Canadian industry. I feel strongly that that is something members on all sides of the House would like to support.

● (2215)

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the only gaping holes we have are in the presentation made by the hon. member this evening. I have complete confidence in the Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon) and his officials. They will not buy any aircraft with landing gear falling off, or gaping holes. The hon. member can be assured that we will ensure industrial benefits for every province in Canada.

On October 23 the Minister of National Defence replied to a question by the hon. member for London West (Mr. Buchanan) regarding an article which appeared in the Washington Post. The article in question reported upon delivery delays and other problems being encountered with the engine which powers the General Dynamics F-16 aircraft, one of two finalists being considered by Canada in the new fighter aircraft competition. Having now had an opportunity to examine the article, the minister asked me to elaborate upon his earlier reply, which I am pleased to do.

For the past 2½ years, the fighter aircraft project team of the government has been investigating both the F-16 and F-18A aircraft in most minute detail. Before any decision is made by the minister, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that he will have received a very comprehensive assessment of the situation, and that this factor will be considered carefully in the government's forthcoming selection of a new fighter aircraft, together with many other factors which affect the decision, including all aspects pertaining to both final contenders.

It is worth bringing out that two separate problems were discussed in the article. The first involved late deliveries of new engines to the United States air force because of extended strikes at two American companies supplying components to the engine manufacturer. Both strikes are now over, and there is no reason to doubt this problem will be cleared up by the time Canada starts receiving CF-16s in mid-1982, should that aircraft win the competion. The second problem involved technical difficulties with the engine itself. I can only reiterate that all technical aspects will be examined fully before the final decision is made.

I am reluctant to say more at this time because of the highly competitive stage we are currently at in this lengthy competition. I can assure the hon. member that there will not be a repeat of the Liberal disaster in purchasing LRP aircraft for Canada, in which there was complete disarray among all government departments and costs were very, very high to the Canadian public. I assure the House that the present minister will not repeat the past mistakes of the former government.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR MINE IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on October 19, 1979, in answer to my questions on financial assistance for the proposed Donkin mine in Cape Breton, the minister told me that the matter is under very active consideration at this time and will be discussed in cabinet before very long.

Since we are now getting toward the middle of November, and in view of the remarks we are hearing practically every day in the House from the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that the goal of the present government is self-sufficiency in energy by 1990, it seems the cabinet and Treasury Board are taking a long period of time in making a decision about the Donkin mine. Recent evidence for this is the statement attributed to the premier of the province of Nova Scotia as carried in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald on October 22. It reads as follows:

We have determined that we are not going to be held up on this. We are going to move on it ourselves so that when the final decision is made we will be right on schedule.

Considering that the mine when it is completed after five or six years will be producing or is slated to produce in its first stage two million tons of coal, and this will permit the replacement of some eight million barrels of oil per year, it is difficult to understand why the premier should have to make the threat that Nova Scotia will go it alone, at least in respect of the clearance and preparation of the site, as I understand it, during this winter. Surely the minister will acknowledge that if the drill ships had been leased and done their work in June or July we should actually have started by this time, not next spring. The tunnels should be on the way to being built so as to get the coal to the market as early in the mid 1980s as possible.

The minister in his answer to my questions has said:

The timing of the production of the mine is very important to ensure that market conditions and forecasts are such that it will come on stream at the most opportune time.

I think the minister will agree with me that, given the precarious situation as far as imported oil is concerned, which could become even more desperate if there is a counterrevolution or further trouble in Iran, then the market for that much coal is certainly there. The president of the Nova Scotia Power Corporation, Dr. Lester Kirkpatrick, told the industrial committee of the Nova Scotia House of Assembly on March 30, 1979, that the absence of assured coal supplies over the next decade and the need to find alternatives to oil-fired generation forced the power corporation to take a share in New Brunswick's Point Lepreau nuclear power plant.

I think it is obvious this means that we should not postpone the opening of Donkin any longer. The extra test hole drilling that began in September is now finished and confirms more accurately the quality and quantity of the coal in the Donkin area, as well as off Point Aconi.

Considering that in the first two years of constructing these tunnels to get at the coal about 500 persons will be employed in the construction process, and that when finished 1,150 will be employed at the mine by 1985 or 1986, if it is started now, and when you consider the help this would be in terms of our balance of payments problem, which is now very acute and will remain so for some time, the minister will understand why we are impatient with the speed at which this mine is being developed.

Surely the financial cost to the federal government, through the Cape Breton Development Corporation, will be high, but it would be spent over a period of four or five years and there is a good chance that all of these capital costs would be returned to the government because the prospects for this mine are so good.

We have thousands of people looking for jobs at the Cape Breton coal mines. The savings in unemployment insurance and, in some cases, in welfare payments, would be very noticeable in such an area. The spinoff effects from this mine would give a stability to the mining areas on the south side of Sydney Harbour which they have not seen since the Second World War, and this time it should be of much longer duration.

I hope the minister will convince the cabinet to proceed quickly on this vital labour-intensive and energy-intensive project that would be good for the province of Nova Scotia, the people of Canada, and the industrial area of Cape Breton.

A friend whom I have known for many years, with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, has warned me that, given the present restraints program, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) might prefer to help two private foreign firms to invest in Cape Breton coke production. He estimated that this would bring about 400 new jobs. We are anxious to see the Cape Breton coke production increased since that could only be good for the area, including the coal mines. Surely, though, the minister will not allow the priority of the Donkin mine, with its 1,150 potential employees, to be scrapped by the Treasury Board in favour of private foreign firms producing coke that would give us 400 jobs.

● (2225)

If the coke oven consortium can be a viable thing for Cape Breton, it should go ahead as soon as possible after the Donkin mine is started. Such productive expenditures could only be good for this long suffering area of Nova Scotia and, as I mentioned, ultimately redound to the good of Canada.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my friend opposite that I enjoyed the informative presentation which he made tonight. I want to assure him that, as far as I am concerned, there is no danger of scrapping the Donkin mine per se in favour of any coking operation.

As the hon. member knows, because he is knowledgeable about mining and comes from that area, currently Devco supplies coal to two distinct segments of industrial activity. He knows that there is high grade metallurgical coal for coke making operations as well as thermal coal which is purchased by Nova Scotia Power Commission. Devco has demonstrated over the past five years the capacity to develop markets for its coal. As its production has increased I believe from one million tons to 2.6 million tons, a planned increase of the thermal portion of this coal production from 1.3 million tons to 4.2 million tons over the next five years will require the development of further markets.

The major increase in consumption is expected to be from the Nova Scotia Power Commission. There is also a possibility, of course, that should it be possible, as the hon. member has said, to have an auxiliary coking capacity because of some merchant coking operation, that would also require additional coal. The corporation intends to press ahead with plans by the new mine.

The premier of Nova Scotia has recently indicated that for the best long-term advantage of Nova Scotia, a further reliance must be placed on coal. Like the hon. member opposite the premier of that province is impatient for this to commence. There has been excellent co-operation between the two levels of government, and the drilling operations that were conducted this year, and for which the province of Nova Scotia will be reimbursed, were in my view done within the proper time. They could have been done a few weeks or months earlier, but the main thing is they were done within the limit of the weather which would have soon made it impossible had weather conditions worsened.

The hon. member also knows that very shortly there will be financial and technical people from the Cape Breton Development Corporation appearing before the standing committee. He can be assured that he will have an opportunity to speak to these people about these conditions and the Lingan mine which has had a strong performance recently. The No. 26 collery is of particular interest because of the type of coal it produces. There is also the Prince mine.

As far as segregating funds or giving the member a definite commitment about the precise amount of money that will be used, for example, in the Prince mine, or the allocating of funds for the starting up of the Donkin mine, I have to be honest and say that at the present time I do not know what kind of money is involved for each of these operations. They are all part of the general coal strategy. It is a high priority with myself and my government. It is true that some time has gone by since I indicated to him that we would be talking about this matter in cabinet. We are still at the discussion stage and I am hopeful that quite soon we will have more definite information for him. In the meantime he can pursue this matter with myself and the officials in committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON QUEBEC WHITE PAPER TO ESTABLISH POLICY ON REFERENDUM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Since the white paper on the referendum was tabled in the Quebec National Assembly, the Canadian people have been shocked and dismayed at the incapacity of the federal government to respond to that threat to the survival of Canada. Considering the step taken by the Ontario premier and his statement supported by the Liberal leader in that province, and since the Ontario premier, given the inaction of the federal government leader, has been compelled to speak on behalf of Canada and condemn the sovereignty-association option in specific, clear and convincing terms, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent):

That reasonable time be allotted to the House to hold a debate on the white paper so that hon. members may direct the government towards a referendum policy which the government is idly searching for or has not the courage to adopt.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the presentation of this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN MENTAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION—REQUEST LEVEL OF FEDERAL FUNDS BE MAINTAINED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas the Canadian Mental Health Association is one of our very valuable national volunteer agencies dealing with Canada's number one health problem, and since the president of this organization has noted that the restraint program carried out by the federal government means the loss of preventive treatment for the emotionally ill in their own area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this government stop playing Scrooge with the mentally ill of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of this motion for debate at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT REFUSE TO IMPLEMENT UNJUST AND DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES WITH FAMILY ALLOWANCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an urgent and important matter.

As the present government intends to cancel or considerably reduce family allowances, and low and medium-income earners will be most severely affected, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbeault):

That the government forgo immediately the implementation of such plans which would be unfair and discriminatory.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

THE ADMINISTRATION

PROTEST AGAINST POLICY STATEMENTS BEING MADE OUTSIDE HOUSE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the speech yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in Toronto, where he described his remarks as his first major policy speech, and in view of the fact that his party, when it was in opposition, vehemently opposed policy statements being made outside the House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger):

That the Prime Minister instruct his cabinet ministers to make their policy statements in the House of Commons in order to fulfil his campaign pledge of making Parliament more relevant.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HARMFUL EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that present interest rates are increasing at an alarming rate, and that as a result many small businesses, including realtors, are suffering a drastic reduction in the level of business, and that as a result businessmen of the city of Thompson, including prominent Conservatives, presently are organizing a petition against this Liberal policy now embraced by the Conservative government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: —I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House states its opposition to the government policy of allowing interest rates to increase, and that the government should immediately reverse this drastic and dangerous policy which is creating extreme financial hardship to all Canadians, including pensioners, farmers, consumers, the unemployed and operators of small businesses.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

RENTING OF AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL IMPLEMENT RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of this House to move a motion on an urgent and important matter.

In view of the fact that the new policy at airport car rental counters has met with the disapproval of Canadian rental companies, and since this policy gives foreign companies easier access to the rental market, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House call upon the Minister of Transport to make the changes and amendments recommended by the Canadian rental companies so as not to favour foreign companies at the expense of our own national companies.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be introduced only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT PROTEST TO IRAN FOR KIDNAPPING OF U.S. EMBASSY PERSONNEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43.

In view of the contemptible attitude of the Ayatollah Khomeini of Iran toward the civil liberties and rights of not only his countrymen, but those of legitimate aliens domiciled within Iran's borders, and his support of actions of blackmail and terrorism against these defenceless people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Government of Canada extend its protest to the government of Iran against the latest act of criminal aggression: the siege of the U.S. embassy and the kidnapping of its staff and their families.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) and seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

REPORT OF COUNCIL THAT INCREASED PRICES OF ENERGY WILL HAVE DISCRIMINATORY EFFECTS ON EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the report of the Economic Council of Canada released last week states that higher-priced energy could reduce the unemployment rate because secondary workers—by which the council means primarily women—would leave the labour force, and in view of the fact that in the Speech from the Throne the government promised a full employment strategy for women, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this government move quickly to introduce programs that will effectively counteract the discriminatory effects on employment for women that the Economic Council of Canada has predicted will result from higher energy prices.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of this motion for debate at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST CERTAIN MINISTERS BE ADMITTED TO INNER CABINET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I seek the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

There are in Canada over two million senior citizens, 700,000 unemployed and seven million people whose income is under $10,000 a year. Unfortunately, these poor people are represented only by back-row or second-class ministers—the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Employment and Immigration—who are not part of the inner cabinet which takes the main decisions such as those having to do now with the oil price increase. We are all aware of the serious consequences this decision will have on the low and medium wage-earners who will be the first to be affected by this increase and who will lack the necessary income to meet it.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Savard):

That the Prime Minister appoint forthwith these three ministers to the inner cabinet in order that they may defend the interests of low income citizens and fight against excessive oil price hikes.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

AVAILABILITY OF OIL SUPPLIES TO MEET NEEDS THIS WINTER

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He will be aware that the National Energy Board, on Friday, released an up to date assessment of oil supplies in Canada, especially looking toward the winter months.

● (1415)

In view of the disquieting statement contained in the report, to the effect that there is no certainty that Canadians will be free from oil supply problems this winter—including home heating oil—will the minister, in light of this most up to date reassessment of our situation, tell us what fresh steps he is contemplating to ensure that Canadians, particularly those in Atlantic Canada and Quebec, will have the certainty of oil supplies this winter? That is the issue at stake. Canadians are entitled to know with certainty that oil supplies will be provided for this winter.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I take issue with the emphasis which the hon. member has placed on the press release of the National Energy Board. The report indicated that we would see ourselves through this winter, notwithstanding the rather unfortunate position that the previous administration left us in with respect to the supply situation in Canada.

The hon. member knows full well, as a member of that administration, that when this government came into office we were faced with depleted inventories and that we have taken some very great initiatives.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will, in fact, name them: there are quite a number. I assure hon. members of this House that we have taken initiatives with respect to the supply situation, and I can list them seriatim if the hon. member has the time. I propose to deal with these initiatives in the debate this afternoon, since the Leader of the Opposition has indicated that he wishes to discuss this matter during the course of the debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in the hon. member's apologia about his inadequacies at the moment. The National Energy Board report states quite clearly that it would be rash to predict with any certainty that Canadians will be free of oil supply problems this winter. I would draw to the minister's attention the press release containing these very words.

In light of the resignation of the government of Iran today, the political disturbances which exist in that country at this very moment, and Canada's dependency for a considerable portion of its annual supply on Iranian sources, can the minister tell the House whether the government has made any approach at the political level to authorities in Iran to ensure the continued supply of this vital oil for Canada which amounts, as I understand it, to about 100,000 barrels a day?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the statements made by the hon. member cannot assist in terms of the outlook for next winter, in the sense that he is attempting to dramatize that which ought not to be dramatized. We in this government are taking steps with respect to policies which the opposition does not want to support but which will allow us to reach self-sufficiency and increase our supply in Canada.

As far as dealing with the government of Iran is concerned, obviously, the information has just been received. We will, of course, be in touch respecting this matter of continuing supply. We are taking steps to increase and maximize the amount of available domestic production, and we intend to continue to monitor the situation very closely. We are confident that we will be able to make it through this winter, and we will do the very best we can in terms of domestic production, domestic availability and international supply to assure that this particular objective is reached.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister speaks about confidence in facing the situation this winter. The National Energy Board report states that it would be rash to predict with any certainty that Canadians will be free from oil supply problems this winter.

Will the minister depart from that complacent attitude to understand the gravity of what the National Energy Board report states, and move with some speed to establish the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board? What is the minister's justification, in light of the report of the NEB and the instability in the Middle East, for not having appointed the members of this board? If he has not done so to date, will he do it today so that somebody can get on the job, even though the minister does not seem to be on it at the moment?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, all I can say to the hon. member is that he clearly does not understand the question. He did not understand it when he was in government, and that is one of the reasons we are facing any serious prospect with respect to this winter.

The fact of the matter is that the department is setting up a support basis upon which any emergency allocation would be available. This is in place and is proceeding. As the hon. member knows, it only comes into effect when there is a crisis and the matter is reported to the House for debate under the legislation which was passed in the last Parliament. We do not have a crisis situation now. The Energy Board release indicates that the situation is manageable, but points out that there are circumstances that will cause the situation over the winter to be fragile.

I have encouraged the National Energy Board to make these reports available to the Canadian people. I think we should have this openness in terms of assessing the situation in Canada today, so that people can realize this is a commodity which should be treated with care and that there should not be the attitude that was taken previously with respect to energy supply—the stand-pat, do-nothing attitude of the previous government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEETING OF PROVINCIAL MINISTERS ON OIL SUPPLIES THIS WINTER

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the minister may very well say that there are no problems, but the National Energy Board has stated that it would be rash to predict with certainty that Canadians will be free of oil supply problems this winter.

In view of the fact that the provincial energy ministers thought there could be an emergency this winter, when they met last week or the week before in Calgary to discuss this problem, and undertook to provide a report to the minister, can the minister tell the House if he has received this report? If he has, what is in it, and what will he do about it?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the hon. member's question is a week late: it has already been asked in the House by one of his colleagues.

I did receive a report from the provincial ministers. On a previous occasion, when responding to his colleague who sits not very far from him, I pointed out that we have been in close consultation with the provincial ministers. There was a suggestion that the technical advisory committee with respect to allocation be considered for reinstatement. I pointed out on previous occasions that there is some legal impediment with respect to the creation of that advisory committee, due to possible combines implications.

We are, in fact, in close consultation on the question of allocation with the provinces and we keep them informed. We are providing them with full details of the supply situation on a monthly basis, and I have taken steps with respect to that matter to have open statements made to the Canadian public about our supply situation. The National Energy Board is now issuing a press statement on a periodic basis. These are the things that are being done by this government which the previous government refused to do.

Mr. Breau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister does not answer questions, we must continue to ask them. Can the minister tell the House if he has done anything to make sure that in the event of interruption of oil imports to Quebec and Atlantic Canada this winter, that western Canadian oil can be transported to eastern Canada? That is a simple question. Forget the rhetoric and just answer the questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROFIT INCREASES—DECLINING STANDARD OF LIVING

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I wonder if he can reconcile two different sets of figures which have recently been released to this House. The first set is the one released today, showing that profits have gone up 51.9 per cent in the third quarter, and in some industries they have gone up as much as nine times in the third quarter.

Would the minister like to reconcile that particular figure with the figure released two weeks ago showing that the standard of living of the average Canadian was falling behind the rate of inflation? Would he like to compare the social justice of those two figures for the House?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer the hon. member to the report of the Economic Council of Canada—an independent body, of course, with no axe to grind. In their latest report, they show that the real inflation adjusted rates of return which they have computed on business profits dropped significantly during the 1970s as a result of inflation, that the tax system increased the real decline of business profits despite various measures introduced to counteract that, and that the decline in real profits in that period adversely affected business investment, and that it is only in 1979 that the real rate of return is being restored to previous levels.

● (1425)

Therefore, I point out to hon. gentleman that these increases which he mentioned in percentage terms are not accurate. You have to compare them to what they are being increased from. It is this year, for the first time in five or six years, that business profits are becoming adequate; so that the aspersions he is casting on the business sector are quite unjustified, as usual.

An hon. Member: Put some life into it.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the spontaneity of that answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: I would like to read to the minister a statement that he made last week, not in this House but in the Empire Club. He said:

> But neither have I found Canadians so unrealistic, so naive as to expect and believe that we can achieve our economic goals without real sacrifice.

Relating the two figures that I have just given the minister, and of which he is fully aware, I ask him a very simple question: In this fight against inflation which the minister has embarked upon—helped, as he is, by the "Horsemen of the Apocalypse"—can he tell us who is making the real sacrifice in our society? Is it the food companies whose profits have increased 900 per cent in the third quarter, or is it the workers whose wages have fallen behind the increase in the rate of inflation?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon gentleman's questions are predictable and that is why I have here a response ready from the Economic Council of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: His jeers and sneers against the business community, the risk-takers and entrepreneurs of this country are very predictable. The kinds of figures that he uses and the kinds of comparisons that he makes are equally predictable and inaccurate.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, in light of the increasing evidence that the inflation from which we are suffering is caused by administered prices both in the energy field and elsewhere, I ask the minister if it is still the policy of this government to follow the policy set out by the Prime Minister in his statement to Executive Magazine in May, 1979, that competition policy is being placed on the back burner.

In addition, I ask the minister why he still has the ideological attachment to his opposition to the notion of a fair prices commission which would give Canadians the sense that in the pricing mechanism there is at least an element of justice as we face hard times in the 1980s.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, we are not for a wages and incomes control policy; therefore, we are not for a partial wages or incomes or prices control policy. As far as statements by the leader of our party are concerned, I certainly pay a great deal of attention to them and I hope that the hon. gentleman does also. I might also add that housing starts rose last month.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. member did not ask about housing starts—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Algoma.

ENERGY

PLAN FOR EMERGENCY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES—REACTION OF PROVINCES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the National Energy Board report last week, I ask the minister if, in fact, a plan has yet been formulated for the emergency allocation of petroleum supplies, and what is the reaction of the provinces to that plan?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated on a number of occasions in the House and earlier in my replies to the hon. member's colleagues, planning is going ahead at the official level. We have been in consultation and we are having the greatest amount of input into the process with the provinces. As I say, we have the support structure in place with respect to any pricing situation which might occur. I want to reiterate that it is not the opinion of the government at this time that we are in that particular position.

I want to assure the hon. member that we are looking at making it through this winter in terms of the fact that we have built up the inventory quite substantially over the course of the summer months, but while we have not attained in some instances the level of inventory that would be desirable from a perfect point of view, we are not in a bad position with respect to facing next winter. We are taking a number of initiatives to avoid the necessity of having to look at a pricing situation. I assure the hon. member that if that situation does occur, we will be able to move very quickly with respect to the implementation of the provisions as may be necessary.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, in light of the minister's answer, could he confirm reports that the plan will not be available until the early winter months of 1980; that in fact the provinces are quite upset that they have not been consulted and have not had an opportunity to have input into such plan?

● (1430)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I cannot confirm that, Mr. Speaker. In my estimation, it is not correct.

[Mr. Rae.]

REASON EMERGENCY SUPPLIES ALLOCATION BOARD NOT ESTABLISHED

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will the minister explain why Bill C-42, which was passed by this House on March 21 and accepted by the opposition at that time—now the government—has not been followed? Specifically, why has the emergency allocation supplies board as prescribed in that bill not been established?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. member that we are taking steps to bring into effect a substantial part of that legislation which may be required in the event of an emergency. As hon. members will recall, there are elements with regard to the allocations bill with which we did not agree when in opposition. I am considering bringing in some amendments to that legislation. I intend to do that as soon as the necessity arises and space is available in terms of the legislative timetable.

I assure the hon. member that in terms of our energy supply situation, we want to take initiatives that will increase the supply, that will turn the direction of the leadership which the government gives this country toward increasing supply in Canada and toward increasing alternative sources of supply. We are working in that direction in our policy, as opposed to the previous administration which the hon. member supported, which looked at everything in a crisis way.

Mr. McRae: The minister has not explained why we do not have a board. If there is an emergency supply situation—and it is very possible there will be one in eastern Canada—if the other oil companies will not do something about it, is the minister prepared to instruct PetroCan to actually make deliveries during that emergency?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the hon. member that we have been taking steps. Earlier this year, during the month of September, I asked the National Energy Board to look at the system of allocation of western crude to eastern Canada. As a result of my request, the National Energy Board approached Interprovincial Pipe Line with respect to its method of allocation.

I can tell the hon. member that on the basis of the initiative that I took, there has now become available for independents in Quebec a very substantial additional supply of crude for that part of the country and for the benefit of eastern Canada. I had to take those initiatives as a result of the dreadful situation I was left with when we came into power—remnants of the previous government.

CRUDE OIL—GUARANTEES GOVERNMENT WILL OBTAIN FROM REFINERIES RESPECTING CANADIAN SUPPLY TO INDEPENDENTS

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources has just indicated that as a result of representations made to the National Energy Board, it is now possible for eastern independent distributors to obtain Canadian crude. This is all very well, Mr. Speaker, but according to my information, the independents who have obtained western Canada crude through the Interprovincial Pipe Line have not yet been able to find a refiner willing to refine this crude oil in Montreal. What action has the minister taken? What guarantees has he obtained, what firm commitment has he obtained from the refiners? First, did he get the assurance that they will refine the crude oil obtained by the independents and second, that they will also supply heating oil to Quebec independents?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will know, from his brief experience as a parliamentary secretary, that the department is in constant touch with regard to the whole question of supply. He will know that an initiative was taken by my predecessor, the energy minister in the previous government, with regard to an inquiry into the supply for independents. That particular report languished with the previous government; they apparently had to wait until after the election to release it.

I moved immediately to release the report. I distributed it to the parties involved, indicating to them in no uncertain terms that we were going to look very carefully at the whole question of allocation to the independents, and that there would be no attempt to increase the market portion by any of the refiners and terminal operators. I simply want to point out I followed that up with a telex during the month of August, in which I very clearly pointed out the rules of the game as far as terminal operators and refiners are concerned.

[Translation]

REQUEST GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE REFINERIES WILL SUPPLY INDEPENDENTS

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I just reminded the hon. minister of some facts: first, that if the independents get crude oil from the west, it is thanks to the minister's initiative, and I commend him for it—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a supplementary, would he put it now?

Mr. Bussières: What will the minister do now to ensure that refiners will, indeed, refine the crude oil, because crude oil cannot be used in furnaces, that is the problem? Also, what assurance can he give us that refiners will supply independents with heating oil?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to point out to the hon. member, and to hon. members generally, initiatives I have taken with regard to making crude available to the independents in the province of Quebec. If the hon. member has any specific instance that he wants to bring to my attention—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The hon. member can talk in general terms and rhetoric; he can make an allegation. I simply say that if he wants to have a particular situation looked into, if he brings it to my attention he can rest assured that I will give it the most serious attention and do what I can to alleviate any isolated incident.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR FULL-TIME MINISTER

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the strong and justifiable request by veterans across Canada to have their own full-time Minister of Veterans Affairs, and because it is essential that the Canadian Armed Forces have a full-time minister, when is the Prime Minister going to split the present dual departments of National Defence and Veterans Affairs and give a full-time minister to each department?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the government, the veterans and the armed forces of this country are very fortunate to have a Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of National Defence as competent as the hon. Allan McKinnon who is able to carry out these dual responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, we are not questioning the ability of the Minister of National Defence and Veterans Affairs; we are questioning the inability of the Prime Minister to appoint ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister's decision to give only one minister to these two departments indicate that this is the first move to phase out the Department of Veterans Affairs; and, if not, why does the Prime Minister obviously continue treating these two very important departments, these two people-oriented departments, as minor priorities on his list?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I noted through the last Parliament the hon. member's great concern about the inability of the former prime minister to appoint at least one minister whom the hon. member had in mind. He has my sympathy on that.

The hon. member asked a particular question about the future of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I can assure him, without any equivocation or qualification, that we intend to retain an independent and strong Department of Veterans Affairs as an independent unit in the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FOREIGN AID EXPENDITURES FOR COMING YEAR

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister confirm to the House that owing to inflation there will be, in real terms, a decrease in Canada's foreign aid expenditures this coming year? If so, can she indicate to the House why she continues to speak at international forums about the necessity of providing increased aid to those in need, while at the same time cutting back the real value of that aid?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the actual figures for our aid program will become known to the House and to the country when the estimates are tabled next year. I cannot give the hon. member that information at this time. I can say, however, that there will be no fewer dollars paid out in aid to developing countries in the next year than there has been this year.

As well, I would like to emphasize that we have made recent payments to foreign countries such as Bangladesh through a new program of food aid totalling some $40 million, and there have been new pledges to the Caribbean of some $10 million. Then just recently there was a pledge of some $15 million to Kampuchea to help meet humanitarian needs in that part of the world.

● (1440)

Miss Jewett: I realize there will be no fewer dollars. The point is that with inflation running at 9 per cent, and aid increasing at—probably—only 2 per cent, the real value of our aid is declining.

Can the minister give us an equal assurance that the increase in aid to Kampuchea, of which we all approve, will not mean a decrease in the other foreign aid which is provided, including that provided through non-governmental organizations?

Miss MacDonald: I can assure the hon. member that the attention and the importance we shall be attaching to the work of the non-governmental organizations will increase, not decrease, in the years ahead.

[Mr. Clark.]

SOCIAL INSURANCE

USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Treasury Board. Can the hon. gentlemen indicate, generally, what his responsibilities are—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clarke: —and, specifically, whether they include investigation of improper use of social insurance numbers? If so, I want to ask him what measures he is taking to prevent the unnecessary use of these numbers by government and by business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of State (Treasury Board)): I am tempted to respond to the first part of my hon. friend's question by saying the information is classified. The fact is, the Prime Minister has asked me to take responsibility within the government for matters relating to bilingualism within the public service, as well as privacy and compliance with part IV of the Human Rights Act. I will be tabling legislation dealing with the Crown corporations' omnibus bill, and responding on behalf of the government with regard to both regulatory reform and the Lambert commission experts.

As to the second part of the question, I do, indeed, have responsibility for developing a policy on behalf of the government with respect to social insurance numbers. I expect that within a matter of a few days I shall be able to announce to the House the fact that the government will be following a policy very different from that of the previous government: we will be rolling back the use of social insurance numbers in the federal government to a very minimum—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: —and setting an example for the private sector—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. MacEachen: Ten o'clock.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER DECISIONS ON IMPORTANT PROJECTS IN QUEBEC WILL BE ANNOUNCED SHORTLY

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. In light of the meeting held yesterday in Montreal during which several federal and provincial ministers had discussions about projects to be undertaken in the province of Quebec and in light of the comments we heard last night from provincial ministers as well as from Senator de Cotret, could the minister tell us whether he intends to announce immediately or very soon the decisions that his government will make as to the sums of money which will be invested in projects that have already been announced in Quebec and I am, of course, referring more particularly to the proposed fiscal data study centre in Jonquière?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to answer the hon. member's question. That meeting was excellent. I would not venture to say that the Quebec ministers told us what their priorities were, but they told us about their projects in general. We listened to them as equals—

Some hon. Members: As equals!

Mr. La Salle: Yes, we listened to them as equals. The discussion was quite fruitful for both sides. That is something new for you, but not for us. The discussion left a good impression. Now, to give a very clear answer, the projects in question have not yet been announced, but they will be very soon, as the hon. member said.

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The minister is very satisfied with the results of the meeting, but according to some statements he made, his counterpart Mr. Landry, was a lot less satisfied with those results. He has nothing whatsoever against being consulted or against participating in a dialogue, but what he is mostly interested in is knowing the government's decision. Is the minister going to wait several months again before announcing his decision? Could the Minister of Public Works, who is smiling, go ahead soon, if he is authorized to do so, of course, and erect those buildings, because they will be needed?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure the hon. member as well as Mr. Landry. It will not take several months.

FISHERIES

COD QUOTAS ON HAMILTON BANK

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The hon. gentleman met yesterday with the Premier of Newfoundland and among other subjects discussed was the allocation of cod quotas on the Hamilton Bank.

Can the minister confirm that the position of the Premier of Newfoundland was that cod quotas be reserved exclusively for the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador? Can the hon. gentleman tell us his response to that submission, and whether any agreement was reached between the premier and himself at the conclusion of their meeting? Can he report to the House the results of that meeting yesterday?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we had a very useful and co-operative meeting with the government of Newfoundland. I indicated it was our policy that primacy, or first call on the Hamilton Bank or northern cod stocks should be for the Newfoundland inshore fishermen, recognizing, of course, the importance of that cod stock to the maintenance of the north-east coast inshore fishery.

Mr. Rompkey: My supplementary is to the Prime Minister. We know the Prime Minister had a meeting with the Premier of Newfoundland on the question of the jurisdiction of offshore oil and gas and we are aware of the outcome of those discussions.

Can the right hon. gentleman tell us whether he has taken part in similar discussions with respect to jurisdiction over fish stocks, and can he tell us whether his position with regard to fish stocks would be the same as his position with respect to jurisdiction over offshore oil and gas?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a meeting with the Premier of Newfoundland to discuss the question raised by the hon. member, although the Minister of Fisheries has been meeting with Newfoundland officials, as he has just said, to discuss ways in which federal and provincial governments can co-operate to strengthen and develop the fisheries serving Newfoundland and Canada.

INQUIRY WHEN PRIME MINISTER INTENDS TO ANSWER LETTER FROM MR. ROY (BEAUCE) ON OIL SUPPLIES TO INDEPENDENTS

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Late yesterday I sent him a letter concerning two very important matters. One has to do with the supply of gas and heating oil to the eastern provinces, the other with the supply and the securing of supply quotas to independent distributors. I have waited until the end of the question period. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he has received my letter, whether he has read it and, third, whether he intends to take action on it today.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did receive the hon. member's letter. I even read it. I intend to speak later today during the debate which is to be opened by the Leader of the Opposition and which relates to the questions raised by the hon. member.

INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS AT PLYWOOD PLANT IN BURNABY, B.C.—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, in the apparent absence of the Minister of Finance whose flippant answers to serious questions are rather useless.

In view of the fact that the largest plywood manufacturer in Canada, Weldwood Limited, has just announced the lay-off of 700 people, stating that the major reason for the lay-offs is the government's high interest policy which is having a disastrous effect on the Canadian housing market, can the Prime Minister advise the House what action he intends to take to get these people back to their jobs?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): I shall certainly be prepared to have officials of my government meet with representatives of the company and of the workers to see if there is some action we can take which will get them back working productively.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): That is a rather unfortunate answer to a serious question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): The manager of the plant said this morning the government's high interest rate policy was like a drug which cured the disease but killed the patient. What message can I take from the Prime Minister to the 700 workers and their families who are now without income as a direct result of this government's high interest rate policy?

● (1450)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can take back to the 700 workers, in whose name he presumes to speak, the fact that the Government of Canada and the Prime Minister of Canada are concerned about their situation. We are prepared to do what we can to try to help remedy their situation. I would suggest to the hon. member, and to the workers, through him, that they might find it more productive to get in touch with me directly.

Some hon. Members: Arrogance.

An hon. Member: No respect for Parliament.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF NUCLEAR ENERGY AND REACTORS—DELAY CAUSED TO PROMOTIONAL EFFORTS

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. In view of the announcement, still to be debated in the House, of the creation of a committee to look over the whole question of nuclear energy, including the export of nuclear reactors, I am concerned about the possible effects of that announcement and of the creation of that committee on the Canadian marketing efforts to sell nuclear reactors so important to our balance of trade.

Can the House be assured that the promotional efforts of the Canadian government are continuing now, and have instructions to that effect been given to various departments involved in it, such as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Department of External Affairs, particularly through the Secretary of State for External Affairs and trade commissioners, or are we going to witness another hiatus of the type we had on the Jerusalem issue?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the question of the export of nuclear equipment is very important to this country. I believe that in the Candu system we have a very important export product. Last week, I met with Mr. Donnelly, president of AECL, as well as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That is the second meeting we have had in the last couple of weeks to discuss this very point. I would expect that this series of meetings will be continuing in order to develop broader trade packages which co-ordinate with our nuclear export activities and to follow through in the direction in which the member is suggesting we should go.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I gather that the minister has the support of all his colleagues in the cabinet for that effort. I should like to hear it very strongly and publicly.

In view of the importance of the sale of a Candu reactor to Japan, in particular—something which is very important for the future of the program—is the minister ready to go to Japan, possibly taking some of his colleagues, such as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to promote the sale of a nuclear reactor to Japan as soon as the government of that country is formed?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, Japan was one of the countries we discussed. I have also been in touch with our embassy. Embassy officials are keeping us in close touch with the way discussions are going in Japan. The hon. member must be aware of the fact that there are some differences of opinion in Japan as to which way to go. We are following this very closely, and if it is appropriate for me to visit Japan in furtherance of our export activities, I will do so.

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTOR TO MEXICO

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same minister. In answer to my colleague's question of October 24 with regard to trade with Mexico, the minister said two months ago that a committee had been set up. That was on October 24. What was the study carried out, when is the report going to be tabled, and can we expect from this government some interest in AECL?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, when I made reference to that study, I believe I also said that the study would take about six months to complete. The study is continuing, and we expect that following its completion we will have something to announce.

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Speaker, Canadians have fresh in their minds the bungling of the Conservative government of this industry back in the 1950s, when Canadians were becoming increasingly worried about the fate of our Candu program. I want to know if we can get an answer before six months elapse.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, to repeat my answer, we will not have an answer before that six months period is up. These contracts on Candu reactors are very complex. They have to be co-ordinated with the countries involved. The study is going on with people in Canada as well as with Mexican officials to see how we will be able to co-operate in the export of that product.

U.S. POLICY ON ATTENDANCE AT CONVENTIONS—REQUEST GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): I have a question, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the U.S. legislation on convention expenses, the Canadian hotel trade has lost almost $100 million in revenue. What progress is being made in the negotiations with the U.S. government in this regard, and what kind of representations does the Canadian government intend to make to the American government so that they will change their legislation?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this question of convention business coming to Canada from the United States, which has been affected by the legislation concerned, is of very real interest to us.

We have had discussions at the official level with the United States, and these are ongoing. I believe that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has had discussions on this matter with the Secretary of State of the United States. They are aware of our concern and they are also aware of the concern we have for the linkage they have made between convention centres and border broadcasting. We are following this question very closely, and I hope there will be a satisfactory conclusion in the not too distant future.

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does he intend to discuss this specific matter with President Carter during his forthcoming visit to Ottawa and what priority does he, personally, give to this issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed I intend to raise this matter with President Carter as it is one of our priorities.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—REQUEST QUESTION BE RENEGOTIATED

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for International Trade. In view of recent figures indicating that there is a $2.9 billion trade deficit in the auto trade, in view of the fact that the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association has recommended to the government their need in particular for further investment and the need for a special fund for research and development and retooling and, further, that the government should seriously consider discussing the whole question of the auto pact and whether it should be opened up for renegotiation with the President of the United States—that being also a specific recommendation of the government—would the minister please tell us what he intends to do about these recommendations?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the brief to which the hon. member referred was presented to my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, about two weeks ago. We had a good discussion with the representatives at the time. Since then I have discussed it with other members of the association. It is currently under review. This is an important issue, particularly in the area of trade.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): What about the present?

Mr. Wilson: The hon. member might address that question to the Prime Minister.

AUTO PACT—REQUEST PRIME MINISTER DISCUSS QUESTION WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I address my supplementary question to the Prime Minister who, I believe, heard my first question to the Minister of State for International Trade. Part of that question was whether this whole matter, serious as it is, will be discussed with the President of the United States this Friday by the Prime Minister.

I would also ask, in conjunction with that, whether the Prime Minister would indicate to the House whether he will discuss with the President of the U.S. the whole question of aid to Chrysler. As he knows, Mr. Miller, in the United States, has indicated they are giving loan guarantees of, I believe, $1.5 billion to Chrysler in that country. Mr. Miller indicated that perhaps similar action should be contemplated by other jurisdictions, particularly in view of the fact that the Chrysler Corporation, I believe, lost some $40 million this year and some $80 million last year. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether he is prepared to discuss that matter also with the President on Friday?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): I am going to raise with the President discussions relating to the auto pact, and I have no intention, today, to raise questions relating to Chrysler.

FISHERIES

OVER-THE-SIDE SALES OF SQUID

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The minister is aware of the difficulties maritime fishermen have had in selling squid. Also, he is aware a representation was made earlier this summer for over-the-side sales and that the request was refused on the basis that processors had guaranteed that those squid could be purchased and processed in Canada.

Can the minister give some guarantee to maritime fishermen that he will reconsider the decision of his department to refuse over-the-side sales for maritime fishermen in regard to the dumping and the waste of that fishery resource?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to a situation recently in Nova Scotia in the area of St. George's Bay, where there was a request to sell over-the-side to Japanese freezer-trawlers. At the time the request came in, Canadian processors were buying and continued to buy from Canadian fishermen.

Mr. Breau: At 12 cents a pound.

Mr. McGrath: Also, the hon. member should bear in mind that there is a very difficult market situation at the present time as a result of an oversupply situation, resulting from an oversupply in Canada and an oversupply in the other squid fisheries of the world off the coasts of Japan and New Zealand. As a consequence, Canadian freezers are bulging at this time with squid which cannot be sold. Consequently, it is not our policy to license any more foreign over-the-side sales as long as that situation prevails.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the same concern exists in Newfoundland and that Newfoundland fishermen will want some guarantees, some policy statement from the minister as to what might happen to their squid and mackerel fisheries next season?

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that concern. I can assure the hon. member and the House that government policy in this regard will be announced in due course.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED EFFECTS ON JUVENILES OF HEAVY MILK DRINKING

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): On a lighter note, Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. According to a press report last week, Alexander G. Schauss, director of the Institute for Biological Research at City College, Tacoma, Washington, stated that studies of juvenile delinquents have shown an apparent relationship between heavy milk drinking and antisocial behaviour.

Such statements should not go unchallenged; therefore, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he would consult with his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to refute publicly such irresponsible statements which, if left unchallenged, could do irreparable damage to dairy farmers and the dairy industry.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the hon. member, I regret that I have not had an opportunity to read the article to which the hon. member referred. I can think of a number of factors which might encourage juvenile delinquency, but certainly drinking milk is not one of them. It seems to me that it is just about as ridiculous as the statement made and reported that eating too much beef makes one ferocious.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—ANSWER OF PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects not only my rights as a member of Parliament but those of all members of this House. In response to a serious question asked by myself of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) the clear implication of the answer given by the right hon. Prime Minister was that the persons whom I represented in asking that question, some 700 families, perhaps would have received better service had they gone directly to the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I ask the right hon. Prime Minister to refute categorically any suggestion that I might not be serving properly my constituents: they had every right to come to me as their member of Parliament; that it will not be necessary to bypass individual members of Parliament; that we are not nobodies, as the right hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) has called us. I ask the right hon. gentleman to withdraw the insinuation that it is necessary sometimes to bypass individual members of Parliament and go directly to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on that question of privilege, let me first assure the hon. member that I intended no such insinuation; and, second, I congratulate him for his great speed on his feet.

MR. ROSE—PROPOSED U.S. NUCLEAR POWER PLANT—ANSWER OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 17(2) concerning what I regard—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have notice of the question of privilege of the hon. member. He indicated in the terms of it that his question of privilege relates to an incorrect statement made in the House a few days ago which, within its terms, puts him in some difficulty. The hon. member will know that questions of privilege have to be raised at the first available opportunity. It is difficult to open the practice of members raising questions of privilege several days after they have occurred, unless of course the hon. member has some special reason for doing so.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, the matter just came to my attention, and the minister to which I wish to address my question of privilege was absent from the House. So I beg Your Honour's indulgence that I might be permitted to proceed on this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise because of an inadvertent, misleading statement made in the House a few days ago. Before I begin, I should like to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) for a letter which was delivered to my desk a few moments ago indicating that the government has at least gone part way toward the request I made last Wednesday.

My question related to a nuclear power plant close to the Canadian border at Sedro Woolley, Washington. Even before the accident at Three Mile Island, the people in my part of the country were extremely worried about this prospect.

I should like to address myself now to the question. My question last Wednesday, as reported at page 802 of Hansard, reads as follows:

—In view of the fact that a huge nuclear power plant is proposed for Sedro Woolley, in Washington's Skagit Valley, and since the site chosen is only 35 miles from population centres in British Columbia totalling almost one million people and should an accident ever take place massive environmental and evacuation problems would likely be encountered, what is the government's attitude toward the building of this nuclear power plant so close to our border? Is it one of official approval, disapproval, or indifference?

The reply I received from the Secretary of State for External Affairs reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker, this is a concern that has been expressed to me by many members on this side of the House as well as members in the opposition parties. While it is impossible for Canada to determine where the United States, or interests in the United States, will locate their nuclear power plants, nevertheless we have raised this subject with officials of the U.S. State Department.

I regard this as a reassuring reply. I and other members were left with the distinct impression that the phrase "we have raised this subject with officials of the U.S. State Department" meant that Canada had opposed the site at Sedro. That is precisely what the minister's answer implied, although perhaps unintentionally. One could hardly be blamed for assuming, because members on both sides of the House had expressed concern, that the minister was concerned too, that Canada had done more than merely raise the subject with the United States but in fact had declared its opposition to the location.

However, I have received a diplomatic letter, an aide memoire, which indicates precisely the opposite. Referring to page 3 of the aide memoire dated August 29 this year, it reads as follows:

Therefore, although the Government of Canada is not opposed in principle to the construction of a nuclear power station near the border, it wishes to be kept informed of project developments, particularly with respect to questions of public safety and environmental risk.

Regardless of what was said to me and other members of the House, the official policy of Canada is not to disapprove of new plants near our border. On the contrary, it is one of approval, or at the very least one of non-opposition.

In conclusion, when the minister rises to respond I hope she will report that Canada has now reversed its policy and will advise President Carter when he visits on Friday of this new change of heart.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member explained the basis for his question of privilege. Now he is making a representation to the minister which goes a little beyond the bounds.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest to the hon. member that in his opening comments, in response to Your Honour's admonition that one should raise a question of privilege as soon after statements have been made in the House as possible, he left the inference that the subject had not been raised because I was not in the House. This subject first came up on Wednesday, October 31. I was in the House for question period on both Thursday and Friday of last week. The only day I was absent was yesterday when I was in New York speaking at the General Assembly. I would like to have that on the record so that he does not infer that I was not present here during question period.

● (1510)

In the second place, Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. member that in no way did I mislead the House or try to mislead the House. The words I used when addressing his question in the House of Commons are, indeed, quite clear. He had asked about the Sedro Woolley proposed nuclear plant in Washington state. I had said in reply that nevertheless we had raised this subject with officials of the United States State Department. I went no further than that. I had said we had raised this subject.

However, he will know, having looked at the aide memoire to which he made reference—that is the aide memoire of August 29, and my letter to him of today following his letter to me of November 1—that we had told the United States government that we wanted to be fully informed about all aspects of this proposal which is very much in a preliminary state at the present time. We indicated that we want to be fully informed on all aspects of this proposal that relate to safety, particularly safety in regard to transboundary implications. The aide memoire states—and I think, sir, perhaps the hon. member should have read right through to the end of the aide-mémoire:

—it is aimed at eliciting information which will enable the Canadian government to determine whether the Skagit Nuclear Plant, Units 1 and 2, would present a significant risk of injurious transboundary impacts. If so, the Canadian government may request consultations for the purpose of addressing unilaterally any problems that we may perceive.

In other words, if there are significant environmental and safety impacts on any part of Canada, we would want to discuss that matter directly with the United States government, and that is what was conveyed in the aide memoire of August 29.

Furthermore, as I stated in my letter to the hon. member today, he will recognize that the hearings in connection with this plant—and that is the hearings for the licensing of such a plant, not the hearings for zoning within Washington State which are taking place later this week and which involve a local matter—have been postponed indefinitely by the nuclear regulatory commission in the United States. Therefore, it is not a matter which is imminent and before the government at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House will realize, of course, that we have an area of perhaps disagreement between the two parties. Therefore, this does not fall within the ambit of a question of privilege.

I think I must take this occasion to say to the House that up to this point in this session I think I have been lenient in allowing members the opportunity to rise on questions of privilege, even though they essentially have been raising areas of disagreement with a minister. The difficulty in my continuing to do so is clearly that whenever this takes place, the member having put one side of the question it is only appropriate, of course, that the minister have an opportunity to respond.

I do not single out this particular case today as there have been a number of them, but the end result is that the member who raises such a disagreement with a minister is in effect extending the question period and getting an additional go-around which every member would like to enjoy.

If I am to be generous in this regard, and then allow equal time for a minister to respond in each case, what I will in fact be doing out of this generosity is inviting members to do more than they can accomplish in question period by attempting to extend the question period through some procedural point after the question period is over. That would be patently unfair and would also take up a great deal of debating time as, for example, today when there is a motion which, of course, the House is anxious to debate.

I do not distinguish this case from any others that have taken place. I do not take a more severe view of this case than of any other case. I simply say to the House that I will have to take a little harder line in respect of these questions, and if members rise to their feet and indicate at the outset a matter not of significance immediately but rather one of disagreement, I will probably have to stop them before they develop the point for too long and, therefore, before it would be only fair to invite a minister to respond.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. PAPROSKI—ALLEGED SLUR ON INTEGRITY OF MINISTER BY HON. MEMBER FOR YORK CENTRE

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which relates to a question appearing at page 935 of Hansard put by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). He has involved me in a gratuitous and unjustified manner in his question, and slurred my integrity as a minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Perhaps he did it unwittingly, as he does so many things. I do not accept the premise of the question posed by the hon. member for York Centre. I would like him to be very careful of the way he distorts his questions. I want him to be aware that on page 33, and you will know this, sir, of the annual report tabled by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey), where it states, "the principle of family reunification" etc., etc., and I will not read it right now—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Paproski: Sir, you were on a trip to the U.S.S.R.—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the desire of the hon. minister to make an intervention. However, he is seeking the floor on a point of order essentially to take issue with something that took place yesterday, and I think it would be an unwarranted extension of our rules to permit that to take place at this time.

MR. HARQUAIL—REQUEST MAJOR STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS BE MADE IN HOUSE

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I rise by way of a point of order on what may very well be a question of the collective privilege of all members of this House. It has to do with the position of the government in making statements outside this House.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and members of the government have said repeatedly that they would show respect for this Parliament, yet we saw yesterday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) at the beginning of his speech in Toronto saying in fact he was making a major announcement. I feel that is totally unacceptable to members of this House. Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister, I would enjoin him to show more respect for members of Parliament. If he has major statements to make on air transportation policy or any other aspect of his department he should show respect to the members who represent Canadians in this House and make such major statements in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order or question of privilege, and I am not sure which, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the hon. member. The speech I delivered in Toronto was, indeed, a policy speech. It was about 30 minutes long and I know, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you and other members are aware, that statements on motions are to be made in this House in a short, succinct fashion. I did not think, in view of the length of this speech, that it would be appropriate to deliver it in the House as a statement on motions.

If hon. members would want me to read the speech into the record I would certainly be prepared to do that right now. I would be very delighted to do that, Mr. Speaker. But I did not think it would be proper for me to take the time of the House when all members will be receiving a copy of the speech and will certainly have an opportunity to question me in the House and in the committee. The estimates are before the standing committee and I would be very glad to respond to any questions. Perhaps during the intervening period of time hon. members will be able to examine and review the statements I have made and, after reflecting on the speech, their questions will be a little more incisive and deliberate, rather than the kind of hodge-podge we get from members across the way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House will know, of course, that it is the prerogative of ministers to make such statements inside or outside the House, and their choice in either direction does not constitute a point of order or a question of privilege.

DUTY FREE SHOPS—LAND FRONTIER POINTS

Question No. 156—Mr. Herbert:

Is the government considering the establishment of duty-free shops at Canadian land frontier points and, if so, what are the considered benefits and is an early decision likely?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): As announced in the House on October 26, 1979, approval has been given to the principle of establishing duty-free shops at land frontier locations and criteria for applicants should be announced shortly. Potential benefits would be increased employment opportunities, greater sales of Canadian manufactured products, and the generation of new tax revenues for all levels of government.

Question No. 195—Mr. Herbert:

How many (a) permanent (b) term employees were on the Department of the Environment's payroll on March 31, 1979?

Question No. 196—Mr. Herbert:

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—SEVERE ECONOMIC HARDSHIP FOR CANADIANS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House has no confidence in the government because it will cause severe economic hardship for the Canadian people this winter: first, through its neglect of the grave possibility of shortages in heating fuel; second, through its failure to support existing intergovernmental agreements on oil pricing and supply; third, through its inability to conclude agreements preventing immoderate price increases in the future; and, fourth, through its acceptance of record high interest rates.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Members will note that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9), and not later than 9.45 o'clock p.m. today, every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings on this motion shall be put forthwith.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when we became the official opposition we were determined not to resort to filibustering in Parliament, but rather to propose alternatives to any bad decisions or policies made by this government. We were aware of the economic problems that prevailed in the industrial sector. We also knew what it was to govern, how important it was and, as I said, we wanted to help the government in the major areas.

Today, as we are dealing with energy policies, our task is made much easier because, as early as June 1973, the then minister of energy, mines and resources, Mr. Macdonald, had set forth for the country the main points of an energy policy that can still guide us today. I had myself developed those points some five months later in the House and finally, in the first six months of 1976, the then minister of energy, mines and resources, Mr. Gillespie, had proposed an energy strategy for Canada.

Today, our task is rather simple. It is only to suggest that the government re-examine those documents based on the principles we had then put forward and that it waste no time in making up for its mistakes of the past five months. Our energy policy covered many important aspects for Canada, but today I should like to dwell only on the two major ones: the question of energy supplies and that of energy pricing in our country.

Do I need to remind the House, Mr. Speaker, that as far as supplies are concerned, the government realized as early as 1973, during the OPEC crisis, how important it was for Canada to get involved in marketing so as to secure adequate energy supplies for Canadians? That is indeed why we set up PetroCan, whose various responsibilities I need not mention, but let me remind the House that because this Canadian company—which has become in four years the largest oil company in our country—felt that exploring and developing energy resources from non-conventional sources in frontier areas was important, it succeeded in increasing our gas reserves by a few trillion cubic feet. Also, this company acted as an agent for the government when we wanted to enter into bilateral negotiations in order to secure supplies for our country.

Last year for instance, following the first crisis in Iran, when we realized that Imperial Oil, the Canadian subsidiary of Exxon, had diverted to the United States oil shipments originally intended for Canada, the government through its minister and Petro-Canada immediately initiated discussions with the government of Venezuela which assured us of its willingness from now on to deal directly with Canada, that is to say with Petro-Canada.

I urge the government to return to this policy and to assure us that it will follow the way the former government has shown. We did the same thing when the Mexican minister visited Canada and successfully secured an agreement which was signed as early as last May and which was to come into effect in September, that is two months ago, an agreement under which Mexico would provide Canada with some $2 billion worth of oil in exchange for Canadian products.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I merely urge the government to avail itself of this signed agreement and invite the President of Mexico to visit Canada as soon as possible so that this winter Canadians may benefit from this agreement, something we ourselves had looked forward to.

So, Mr. Speaker, on those two points I would simply remind the government that our proposals would be easy to implement, and they would bring even now some measure of comfort and security to the Canadian people. The government could admit that it erred when it proposed the dismantling of Petro-Canada and neglected to follow through on the agreements with Venezuela and Mexico, it could say that it is quite willing to implement them now without delay.

There is another problem, Mr. Speaker, which the House has already looked into, namely that of the security of supplies. My government, once again as a result of the Iranian crisis, made the House of Commons understand the necessity of passing an emergency supplies energy bill. That bill was passed in July of 1978. The hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) has urged this government to act and set up the board provided for in that act to ensure equitable supplies to Canadians, should we have energy problems this winter. Even today, the House leader of the opposition (Mr. MacEachen) got the government to admit that it had not set up that board, when in fact the National Energy Board warned us last Friday that, this winter, heating oil supplies for Canadians will only be secure if there is no crisis or disruption of services. Now we have just learned that Iran is in a state of crisis and that we can foresee, or at least chances are, that we will have a hard time guaranteeing supplies this winter. Here again, I take it upon myself to urge the government to go back to the Liberal policies and set up that board as soon as possible to ensure equitable energy supplies to Canadians.

The second important policy that our government had to establish in the matter of petroleum was that of pricing, Mr. Speaker. As early as December, 1973, within a few months of the start of the OPEC prices, we had established a firm policy which essentially said that we would have one price for all Canadians, and we have kept that price below the world price. That was the policy put into effect by our government.

Severe Economic Hardship

It is a policy which has ensured immense advantage, not only to the industrial sector of our economy by ensuring that jobs would be created by industries which were getting energy in Canada at prices below world prices, but also, even at the level of the householder, for instance, just last winter ensured that the homeowner in Alberta would be paying some $280 less than he would if he had been paying world prices for petroleum. In Newfoundland it was closer to $240 per year, and I believe in the central provinces where heating problems were more grave than in Alberta, and Newfoundland, it meant a saving of some $200 because of this one-price policy for all Canadians and a pricing below world prices.

I plead with this government, which has managed to change its mind on so many issues, to come back to Liberal policies in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I plead with it once more to govern by "U" turn and to come back to what was a good, sound policy for Canadians, a policy which ensured security of supply and prices below world prices.

What does the government see as its policy? Apparently it is scrapping the existing price agreement and is telling us that it is going to move toward international prices. What will this mean, Mr. Speaker? If international prices were to come very soon, they would mean about $400 per year more for home heating oil and $250 per year more for the average automobile driver. They would mean loss of jobs to industry. They would mean, Mr. Speaker, that the economy, which has already been subjected to the shock of record high interest rates, would be subjected to the double shock of heating oil and petroleum prices which cannot be accepted and assimilated by the economy at this time.

I just want to disagree with the government when it seems to accept the thesis that we have to go to world prices in order to ensure supply and conservation. First of all, I want to remind the House that our policy was set out quite clearly in the "Energy Strategy for Canada" published in the early months of 1976. I should like to read from page 127 on which the following passage appears:

> We must continue the process that began in April of 1974, of phasing the price of domestic oil towards international levels. Canada does not necessarily have to go to international prices. Because we have domestic resources to develop, we have a degree of independence from the oil-exporting cartel that many countries do not enjoy and that is to our advantage.

Our policy was to have prices at a level where resources could be found, where they could be developed and delivered. That does not mean any price which could be established by a cartel acting on international markets in a way which would be deemed illegal if it so acted in Canada. There is no reason why we would have to follow world prices, no matter what level they went to.

Severe Economic Hardship

We agreed when we reached various understandings with the government of Alberta, the government of Saskatchewan and with other provinces that prices could not remain at the levels that had prevailed before 1972. We agreed that there had to be some increase if exploration and development were to continue in Canada. But we never did agree, we do not agree now and the country does not agree, with a policy that says that no matter what this cartel decides Canadians who have energy resources of their own will have to go to those cartel prices. We do not agree to that on oil and we did not agree on other natural resources.

I just remind this House of a policy announced in April 1969 by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin), who was then minister of industry trade and commerce, that copper prices would be sold in Canada at prices below the London copper exchange prices, because those London prices were established in a way which was not guided by the free law of supply and demand but by action on that market which was not fair, free and unfettered. We did that on copper, we did that on oil, and what is more, Mr. Speaker, we did it with the agreement of the Premier of Alberta. We did it at a time when many provinces wanted to see no increase at all.

We stated then and we state now that our policy is not to increase prices indefinitely. We hear from Syncrude that the price of extracting a barrel of oil from the tar sands is now estimated at between $15 and $20. Our experts think that it is closer to $14 or $15 a barrel. Never mind, even taking Syncrude's figures, surely there is no need to go to $25, $35 or $50 a barrel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: If that should be the decision of some international cartel, of which we are not a member, surely what Canadians want is a firm statement by this government that it will ensure a price which permits further exploration and development but no more. There is no need to have prices which will permit the multinationals to increase their profits even more which they then use either to buy other sectors of the Canadian economy or to increase foreign ownership even of our energy industries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Under our government, in the last two years foreign ownership of the domestic oil industry has been reduced from 90 per cent to 75 per cent. If the non-governing by the present government continues, this trend will not be continued, it will be reversed. What justification do we have from this government to set aside or to create uncertainty regarding the agreement that we have put in place and which lasts until July 1 next—an agreement incidentally which was then denounced by most of the Tory premiers in the provinces, including Premier Davis of Ontario who now wishes he had supported it. What reason could the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) have to set aside these agreements and let the confrontation develop which we see now, particularly between Ontario and Alberta?

In the Speech from the Throne the Prime Minister promised us a new era of federalism, one where there would be harmony, one where all the provinces would get together with the federal government and solve their difficulties and one which would be in contrast to our government, which allegedly caused confrontation everywhere. Let me just say that within two weeks of the Speech from the Throne the Premier of Alberta, speaking to 900 Progressive Conservatives at a fund-raising dinner in Alberta, said that they were in confrontation, that price increases and negotiations in 1973, 1974 and 1975—when we were putting together those negotiations—will be like a kindergarten compared to talks in 1979 and 1980. The Premier of Alberta said that Alberta was being asked to keep both oil prices down and give up part of its heritage savings trust fund. He said that was the position being presented.

We do not know from the Prime Minister or from the minister of energy what position is being presented. In the name of open government they have not yet told us, Mr. Speaker. But we do know that the Premier of Alberta is complaining about having to give up part of his heritage savings trust fund, something that even in the darkest days was not an accusation levelled against our party when we formed the government.

Sure we did not elect many members in that part of Canada, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Not many?

An hon. Member: And less next time.

Mr. Trudeau: Hardly less, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps the same. Because I read in the report of October 25 that the premier was grimfaced throughout and said that he expected the 21 federal MPs from Alberta to support his argument for raising the price of oil.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Stand up.

Mr. Trudeau: I see the Prime Minister smiling, as one of those 21 MPs from Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: And perhaps we have there an explanation of the policy that this government seems to be bringing us toward, a policy that is absolutely unacceptable to this country and on which we express violent disagreement. This new era of federalism, what is it now replaced with? Provincial ultimatum, declaration of economic sovereignty, war by press release, uncertainty reigning over all Canada.

From 1973 to next July we were able to establish agreements every year with the province of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think that our enjoinder to the government to return to these Liberal policies to re-establish that pricing policy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I see NDP members are anxious to get into the fray.

Mr. Lefebvre: The seagulls again.

Mr. Trudeau: They will want to tell us about their disagreement with the Premier of Saskatchewan. I am sure we will hear about that when they get up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I just want to conclude on this very important subject.

[Translation]

Canada is now up against tremendous problems. We may be on the brink of a recession the like of which Canadians have not seen in several decades. We know what threat that represents not only to industry, and the resulting loss of jobs, but especially what danger there is that oil prices be fixed by an international cartel on the backs of the people, which would make heating their houses more costly and would also make the cost of driving their cars go up.

We know indeed that it is not easy to run a country these days. We know that there is inflation in the world, that there is unemployment, but we say to the government, Mr. Speaker, that it is precisely in such circumstances that governments have a crucial and fundamental role to play. We cannot afford to have a government which remains in the background and watches the provinces fighting together. We cannot afford to have a government which thinks that top performance for a government is to let things go. What have we witnessed over the last six months? We have seen a government which is trying to apply a maxim whose author and main proponent is Jim Gillies, always the same, the senior adviser to the Prime Minister, who said:

• (1550)

[English]

"The best government is no government". That indeed is what we have, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: On the supply of essential petroleum supplies, we have a government which dismantles Petro-Canada and lets the multinationals decide on supply to Canada. On emergency situations, we have a government which does not even bother to set up the energy supply allocation board. On prices, we have a government which stands aside and says that we will let OPEC and the province of Alberta decide. On interest rates, it says we will let the United States decide and we will follow their policy, no matter how high it goes.

We have a government which has abdicated the role of government. We have a government which again yesterday was giving us as the greatest examples of being able to bring harmony to federal-provincial relations and to put a new face on federalism, a government that had managed to rid itself of Loto Canada and a government which had managed to rid itself of its jurisdiction over the offshore resources. This is a government which decides that no government is the best government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Again yesterday the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), in reply to questions on the Quebec referendum, refused to say whether his ministers and supporters would campaign for the "No" option. I understand that the Prime Minister corrected himself by saying that the Progressive Conservatives would participate in the umbrella committee, I believe—

An hon. Member: The lightning rod committee.

Mr. Trudeau: —or the lightning rod committee, the umbrella committee under Mr. Ryan. I do not know if I am interpreting the Prime Minister's statements correctly, but I think that in essence was the correction he made. Yet last Friday, the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) and myself tried four times to get the Prime Minister to say that his ministers from Quebec would campaign for the "No" option. He repeatedly refused to answer this question, and we still do not know what position his ministers are going to take.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by saying that if the Prime Minister honestly believes that he is going to win Quebeckers by offering them Loto Canada and telling them that his government is prepared to change the status quo, without specifying how he is going to do that, then this government and its Prime Minister do not know Quebeckers very well because they want a government that stands on its own two feet. Quebeckers are going through what is certainly the biggest crisis in their history, a crisis which affects the entire country and challenges its very existence, and which most probably leaves them undecided.

There are some who want sovereignty or independence or separation. There are many more, we believe, who want Canada to survive but they do not want it to be—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: But they will respect neither a Canada nor a government without leadership; they will not respect Canada if it does not play a role in which Canadians of all origins and especially Quebeckers can recognize themselves. That is why I say to this Prime Minister: the first role, the first duty of a government is to govern and, in the energy field, we urge them to do so.

[English]

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard why the phrase which was used by my colleague, the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), was so accurate. The Liberal party is clearly a party not in opposition but in exile. It lost its raison d'être when it was in government and it has not found its purpose for itself now that it is in opposition.

I rise to support the motion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Our friends in exile laugh. I will see if they are laughing in a minute. We support the motion. We support the words but not necessarily the motives behind them. I can tell the House that.

In campaigning for the May 22 election, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) campaigned on the economy. Before May 22 he said he was concerned about the devastating effects that interest rates were having on the people of Canada. He said they were causing an increase in the cost of living, producing more unemployment and contributing to a lower rate of economic growth.

The Prime Minister was right before May 22; high interest rates do all of those things. My party says that what they did before May 22 they have continued to do since. We have not been able to understand the scintillating logic behind the present government's position. Before the election the Prime Minister was saying that if you have a high interest rate policy, it will produce those bad things. He turned out to be right, but what is his conclusion? His answer was to reproduce the policy which caused all the bad things.

We know that high interest rates are bad for Canadians. We further know that they are unnecessary. I spent the last two days in western Canada. For the benefit of the Prime Minister and his government I want to give some concrete examples from western Canada of the results of his high interest rate policy. First in terms of the cost of living—and this should interest the Prime Minister, coming as he does from Alberta—the cost of living has its effect on every aspect of the economy, whether we are talking about bicycles, food, cars, or any commodity. High interest rates are devastating because they are all passed on to the consumer.

I was watching the news in Saskatchewan two days ago and there was an item coming from Calgary. It said that as a result of the increase in interest rates, not before May 22, not even in the first two months of the summer, but simply as a result of the increases in interest rates which have occurred in the last two months, the monthly carrying charge of a typical home in Calgary had gone up by $146 a month, which means that the average person in that city can no longer buy a home. The average Canadian living in Calgary who is reasonably prosperous can no longer buy a home as a direct result of this government's high interest rate policy. Another statistic which came out during the same program was that housing sales had dropped 22 per cent this year in the city of Calgary because of the escalation of prices, principally due to rising interest rates.

On the same visit to the west I spoke to farmers in Saskatchewan, I spoke to them in Prince Albert, I had a meeting in a small community by the name of Weldon and the farmers there are typical. A typical loan for a farmer, even if he is prosperous, can be up to $15,000 a year when the farmer has to borrow to purchase fertilizer and chemicals to run his operation on a continuing basis. Interest rate increases on $15,000 a year of the kind that have been taking place are devastating for the farmers of western Canada and elsewhere.

I had one moving experience with a man I would guess to be in his mid-sixties who has a farm in Saskatchewan. This man told me that up until last week his son had intended to buy a farm; he had planned to follow the family tradition of farming but with the last interest rate increase that young man concluded he could not afford to carry on the family tradition of farming. He could not afford to buy a farm. That is the fault of the Conservative government and no one else. There are literally in every part of this country examples of this kind that could be passed on, concrete, living examples of the effects of a high interest rate policy in terms of cost. But also they count very seriously and directly in terms of the impact on jobs, in terms of opportunities for Canadian men and women who want to work.

Today in the question period one of our members from British Columbia drew attention in the House to a decision of the largest manufacturer of plywood in that province, Weldwood of Canada Limited, to lay off a minimum of 600 employees. Why? Because of the decline in the housing market. If I had time I could quote a number of statements coming from both management and union in that company in the last 24 hours saying there is one reason and one reason only that housing is running down in British Columbia and across this land. Again it is because of the high interest rate policy of this government. The point I am making is that it is jobs that are affected in this case, not just the cost of living.

I particularly want to draw attention to small businessmen. Large companies in the main generate their own capital but small firms throughout the land do have to go to the banks or the credit unions or the caisses populaires. The problem facing small business is that in today's circumstances not only are they unable to obtain at reasonable rates the capital needed for expansion, but in some cases they are obliged to shut down completely and lay off Canadian workers. The point I am making, and it has been made by many members in my party not only since the election but before, is that a high interest rate policy, whether it comes from the Liberals or from the Tories, is equally bad for the country in its effect upon job creation and the cost of living.

I want in particular to pay tribute to the argument that was put by my hon. friend from Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—and it was not in any way answered—that not only are high interest rates damaging to the people of Canada, but they are unnecessary. I do not have the time to repeat the argument but I ask the Prime Minister, if he does not accept the argument coming from the New Democratic Party, to read the columns by Mr. Don. McGillivray, an independent economist, a fair-minded man who had reached the same conclusion. Will he read a report which was published, I understand, in the last 24 hours by two Toronto economists, Roger Donna and Doug Peters, who have done a critique of the Bank of Canada's policies over the past five years and, related to that, a critique, therefore, of the Liberal party and the Conservative party who have been responsible for the Bank of Canada policy. They drew the conclusion that not only are the effects of high interest rates harmful to our people in the short run; they are economically unnecessary and are very bad indeed for the long-range growth of this country. I say on behalf of my colleagues, the Prime Minister was right when he criticized high interest rates before May 22. The same arguments hold today and it is about time he lived up to his promise to bring them down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to turn now to oil pricing. The position of my party has been again consistent on this issue. We have said that at this time it is wrong, given the state of the Canadian economy, to move upward to world prices. We think that is a serious mistake both because of its effects on the inflationary side of the ledger and on the job creation side. It is very negative at this time to move in that direction. We have pointed out that other countries which are oil producers—Venezuela, Mexico, Saudi Arabia—manage to produce oil and gas for their own people at prices lower than they charge to the world community because they sensibly understand that with lower prices you help your domestic industry, you help your consumers. We believe our resources should be used for that kind of benefit here.

In this context we urged the government as recently as last week to establish what we have called a commission on oil prices and profits, not one which would arbitrarily roll back every proposed increase but one which would operate with some intellectual and economic sophistication, which would look at price increases and, where they are unjustified, as in the case of multinational corporations which have taken, as even President Carter in the United States recognizes, rip-off profits, would have the authority to order rollbacks.

Yes, we have said that and we believe it. We have also said such a commission should come before the government and make serious recommendations for price increases, if and when necessary, to produce investment, to get new sources of energy at terms we think reasonable and compatible with the Canadian national interest and not compatible simply with the interests of the multinational corporations. We stand by this argument today.

I say to the Prime Minister in this context that if ever there was a time for the relevance of Petro-Canada, it surely is when we are talking about oil prices. I say this in terms of the need for more competition at the retail outlets in Atlantic Canada where Irving and Imperial Oil own 60 per cent of the retail outlets, but more particularly I say it, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the negotiations taking place for the development of our tar sands, the oil sands project which is now being discussed, as well as others. Shell wants up to 20 per cent guaranteed profit for that development.

My party says that we have PetroCan which has acquired expertise in the Syncrude project and which has the technical know-how. PetroCan can get the equipment and it should be doing the job for the people of Canada without earning a profit in that project.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: So we are saying that all the oil price increases which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Prime Minister like to use to justify funds for resource development in the north are simply unjustified, because we have a Crown corporation that can do that job for the people of Canada at cost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Next I come to the very important matter of heating oil shortages. This is a real problem which cannot be ignored, and it is not something that is in the future. The National Energy Board said on the weekend that it would be rash to predict with certainty that Canadians will be free of oil supply problems this winter. That is a warning and it is not new now. We have been arguing a workable solution to this for a couple of years. On the one hand we have said that the National Energy Board should never be signing carte blanche authorizations for the export of home heating gas or oil months in advance. In every kind of export contract that is negotiated there should be a qualifying clause which says that if a shortage should emerge in Canada, oil and gas will have to stay to meet Canadian needs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The second point I make in that regard is that here again we have a clear argument for Petro-Canada. Just a couple of weeks ago we had an amendment to the Liberal motion which said that Petro-Canada should become the exclusive importer of offshore oil, and one of the reasons we made that argument—again, I repeat, not just currently but for some time—is that we saw what happened last winter in the province of Quebec when the Exxon Corporation and its subsidiary here in Canada, Imperial Oil, was detouring supplies headed for this country. We have seen the multinationals cut off the independent dealers when it suited their purposes, and we have said that Petro-Canada should become the exclusive importer of oil so we will not be held up to blackmail by the multinational corporations. On this particular point I underscore the reality that when we had that motion before us, not only did the government vote against it and the Social Credit party vote against it, but the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) and his party voted against it; and now they are expressing concern here.

For all these reasons, we will certainly support the motion that is before us today. The government has not come through at all in terms of its pledges to deal with the Canadian economy. Today I have emphasized in particular the question of interest rates. Second, the government has produced no energy policy at all except that dictated by Peter Lougheed on the one hand, and the multinationals on the other.

Having said that about the government, I now want to turn briefly to the Liberal party. We have seen a presentation today coming from what has become the most cynical political party in Canadian history without doubt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: They are utterly shameless about the way they have reversed themselves overnight, not only on matters in general but, as I shall indicate, on virtually every aspect of the motion they presented to the House today, and they do it shamelessly. The reality of the Liberal party at this point in its history is that it is functioning without either intellectual substance or a moral core. Its sole concern has become the pursuit of power. That is the raison d'être of the Liberal party as it exists today.

Mr. Axworthy: It takes one to know one.

Mr. Broadbent: The present Leader of the Opposition—and I use the words with some care because that is the title—has said that the Liberals in Canada have become a party of the radical centre.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Broadbent: A Liberal says "right on". I would suggest that a more accurate description is that they have become the party of the cynical centre or, more precisely, the party of the dead centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In every aspect of this motion we can see cynicism at work in the Liberal party. It was the Liberals who began, in the summer of 1978, the current economic philosophy that has been implemented by their friends who now constitute the Government of Canada. It was the Liberals who introduced UIC changes which brought in the cutbacks in the summer of 1978. It was the Liberals who first promised to privatize a number of Crown corporations and who produced, not one, not two, not three but seven increases in interest rates between January 1 of 1978 and the time when the new government was elected. Seven increases in interest rates! Now they have the nerve to get up hypocritically and attack the government for carrying on their good Liberal tradition. I ask you, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Similarly, the Leader of the Opposition has spoken with care about the problem of heating oil shortages. When shortages appeared last winter, the Liberals, who were then in government, responded in their typically direct, forthright and forceful way: they had an investigation. That was it. Then on the weekend—this weekend—when the NEB drew the attention of the people of Canada to the fact that we may have some shortages, they said the shortages were not due just to the present government permitting exports to take place of this important commodity but it was the previous Liberal government which last winter went on permitting NEB to negotiate export contracts for home heating oil that are now putting our people in jeopardy this winter. The Liberals were doing it themselves.

An hon. Member: Morals of an alley cat.

Mr. Broadbent: As to the question of oil pricing—Mr. Speaker, I see my time is just about up. I wonder if I could extend my comments for a few moments, if the House would courteously grant me that time to wind up my remarks quickly.

On the question of oil pricing about which the Liberals are so concerned today, I should like to quote the former minister of energy, mines and resources who, not five or six years ago but on November 30, said:

> Our policy has been and still is, to move crude oil prices at the well head toward world levels.

The motion calls our attention to changes which took place in terms of interprovincial agreements; that is of the then Liberal government and the provinces. I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that it was the present official opposition which, when they were in government last winter, changed the existing agreement. There was supposed to be a unilateral price increase of $1 a barrel last January 1, but the Liberals in government thought an election was coming for some reason so what they did unilaterally was to postpone—unilaterally, I stress for the Leader of the Opposition—the increase on January 1.

Mr. Trudeau: That is not true.

Mr. Broadbent: They initiated the change. The Leader of the Opposition can correct this later if he wants, but we all know that a change was to come into effect of $1 a barrel and it was postponed until July, July, of course, coming after the election. Now that they are in opposition they have changed their tune completely.

● (1620)

I should like to quote the Liberal energy critic who said the following in the House:

> Let us not slavishly follow a price set up by the international cartel which is called the OPEC countries.

That statement was made by one of the classic hypocrites to my right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In conclusion, the people of our country want a sensible economic policy, particularly as it pertains to interest rates, and a sensible energy policy, particularly as it relates to the questions of supply and price of oil and gas. They should look neither to the Liberals nor to the Tories because they are interchangeable. We support the wording of this motion, but we categorically reject all the cynical motives which lie behind it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in listening to the attack of the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party on the Liberal party. I will not try to create the suspense the leader of the NDP did, and I will announce at the outset that I intend to oppose this motion.

Regarding the speech of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) who introduced the motion before us today, I suppose the part which struck me most, and that I found frankly saddest about his remarks, was that frequently he urged this government to come back to the policies of his government, to return to the policies of his government, to look backwards. Fundamentally that is the reason why there was a change in government on May 22: Canadians had had enough of a government looking back. They wanted a government that was looking forward, that was prepared to come to grips with the challenges and the problems of the Canadian people. That is why we were elected. That is true.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I want to deal directly with the questions laid out in the motion, even though they were not all addressed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

[Translation]

I would like, first, to deal with the question of oil supplies to Eastern Canada, namely Quebec and the Maritime provinces. I believe the best way to describe the situation at this time is to say that it is tight but under control. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) as well as the chairman of the National Energy Board have been constantly monitoring the situation for weeks and months.

We did not wait until we had a crisis this winter to act, and concrete steps have been taken to deal with any major problem that could occur in coming months. That is why the volume of our exports of crude oil abroad have been reduced considerably, in fact nearly eliminated so as to fully meet the demand by Canadian refiners. With the approval of the government, the National Energy Board is allowed to swap Canadian western crude for additional supplies of foreign oil to eastern Canada. The National Energy Board recently approved swaps totalling 2.5 million barrels that will practically all go to Quebec refineries.

In addition, the National Energy Board asked Interprovincial Pipe Line to amend its regulations so as not to penalize corporations that have not done business with it in the past. That will have a direct effect on a group of heating oil distributors in Quebec who are thus given access to 450,000 barrels of crude oil from western Canada. Other steps that would take too long to enumerate here today have also been taken to ensure as much as possible the security of oil supplies to Quebec and the maritime provinces.

However, I would like to add that if we were to face major interruptions in coming months we will not hesitate to use the powers we have under the Energy Supply Emergency Act. I do not believe this will be necessary but if the situation ever called for it, my government will not hesitate to act so the citizens of Quebec and the maritimes will not have to face an oil shortage this winter.

[English]

I think there was probably no stranger part of the motion than the condemnation of the government for "its failure to support existing intergovernmental agreements on oil pricing and supply". All members of the House and the Canadian public should be very clear as to exactly what that means. It suggests that this government and this Parliament should be content to rest with the status quo, that we should ignore the need to face the facts of the Canadian future, that we should be content to rest in the past and to put up with policies which have failed in the past. That is the recipe, the prescription, of the former government opposite, that backward-looking group which earned its way out of office and now is forgoing any possibility of getting back into office because it refuses to look to the future and continues to be preoccupied with the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Let me spell out for the House and the country exactly what the oil policies of the old government have achieved and would achieve for our country if we were prepared simply to put up with the status quo. The policies of the old government have reversed dramatically Canada's traditional strength in international oil trade. In 1974 we had an oil trade surplus of $1 billion. Last year we had an oil trade deficit of $1 billion. If existing policies are left in place, we could have an oil trade deficit of $6 billion by the mid-1980s. That is the prescription of the Liberal party. That is not the future this government will accept for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Because of those policies and because of what they have done to our dependency on imported oil, the cost of oil has become a major contributor to the federal deficit. This year alone it is costing the Government of Canada $1.8 billion to offset our dependence on imported oil. Under the policies we inherited, that cost would double to $3.6 billion by 1985. The policies of which those opposite are so proud produced last year a shortfall of 345,000 barrels a day between Canadian oil production and Canadian oil needs. If we followed the advice of the former government simply to look to the past and ignore the needs of the future, those policies would widen that shortfall to 640,000 barrels a day within five years.

Severe Economic Hardship

The old policy has resulted in a widening gap between Canadian oil consumption and the discovery of new Canadian reserves. Since 1974, when OPEC alerted any government which had its eyes open to the need for strong national action, we have been consuming in this nation an average of 648 million barrels of oil each year and adding barely 100 million barrels to our known reserves.

Those same policies of the old government have done little to restrain energy demand in Canada or to encourage Canadians to eliminate waste and inefficiency in their consumption of energy. We remain the largest per capita consumers of energy in the western world. During the first nine months of this year, our consumption of gasoline was up more than 4 per cent. Not only does that represent virtually no progress in energy conservation, it threatens the commitments Canada made to its world allies through the International Energy Agency and at the Tokyo Summit.

Those are the principal results of the policies of members of the old government who want to turn back the clock and say that we should leave them untouched. They are a prescription for energy failure in a country which has a rare opportunity for energy success. They may be acceptable to the Liberals and the New Democrats, but I say to the House of Commons that they are not acceptable to this government and the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Because they are not acceptable is precisely the reason we have been conducting extensive negotiations with the provinces, to try to come forward with a new energy package that will not only deal with price but will deal with other instruments and other aspects of a policy and a package which can make this nation self-sufficient in energy by 1990, which can make energy a building block for the future of Canada rather than an obstacle to our growth, as has been the case with the policies followed and still pursued by the old government.

I want to deal with the accusation of an inability to conclude an agreement on energy pricing. My government is working towards agreement with the provinces in ways that were perhaps contemplated by the last government but were rarely pursued by them. We are making progress and we are confident of reaching agreement on an energy package soon. Obviously, with our discussions continuing, it is not appropriate for me to get into the content of an energy package today. But it is probably worth while, and even instructive to members opposite, to examine the process that we have followed.

We are not, and we do not pretend to be, miracle workers in getting agreement in a complex federation. It takes time to reach agreement in an atmosphere of reasonableness and in an atmosphere of co-operation. On the rare occasions when the last government talked to the provinces that must have been evident to them. I remember a day in 1976—

An hon. Member: Have you talked to Saskatchewan?

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. Clark: The leader of the New Democratic Party asks if I have talked to Saskatchewan. Yes, I have, and I wonder if he has.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I remember a day in 1976 when the then minister of energy, mines and resources reported that more than six months of talks and meetings had preceded decisions on new oil and natural gas prices. His statement to this House in May of that year made reference to meetings as long before that as December, 1975. Far more often, unfortunately, the government of that day, the old government, could not be bothered with that kind of consultation, although it occasionally paid lip service to it.

The prime minister of the day talked from time to time about not wanting to act unilaterally, about bringing the provinces into discussion, but what happened? What happened, as demonstrated clearly by the events of 1977, was that he would set a price agreement and then his government unilaterally broke that agreement, and consequently poisoned relations on energy questions between the federal and provincial governments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Sir, we do not operate that way. We are working with the provinces towards building a stronger Canada. We are planning and we are building together, and the current discussions on energy are part of that process. We are not raising in this chamber the spectre of unilateral action. We are not running around suggesting that we have an emergency power or a declaratory power with which we can threaten the provinces. That is what we are advised to do by the old government opposite, and that is exactly why, because they followed that approach, the old government opposite was so unsuccessful and failed so dramatically in getting agreement among the provinces of this country and the national government on how we can make use of our unique and virtually limitless, in all of its aspects, energy potential.

Let me be quite clear that we are prepared to accept our responsibility as a federal government to move by ourselves if we have to, but we do not use that as a club or as a threat or as a weapon. I believe that we must try, and must try 110 per cent, to get agreement by agreement before resorting to other alternatives of menace or of threat.

We have not yet reached that limit. Indeed, we are making positive advances towards agreement. Indeed, I can report to the House that we have now reached a point in the discussions with the provinces where I think it would be useful to bring together the first ministers of Canada to discuss energy matters; a broad package of energy matters. I will be convening a meeting on Monday next, November 12, here in Ottawa of the first ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Sir, our principal objective in working towards a new energy package with the provinces is first and foremost to achieve energy self-sufficiency for Canada by 1990, so that by then no Canadian will have to depend on insecure or unreliable foreign sources to heat his home or to drive his car.

In moving toward that fundamental goal we also want to reinforce the commitment of this nation to a new era of co-operation with the provinces, to demonstrate our belief that, given clear and stable direction, the private sector can meet Canada's energy needs, and to use the opportunity that self-sufficiency provides significantly to increase Canadian participation in the development of our nation's energy resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Sir, no one in this House is satisfied with the degree to which our energy development in Canada is dominated by firms controlled outside Canada. But it is important as we lament and oppose that situation that we understand how it happened. That situation arose because of past government policies, going some distance back, that made it more attractive for foreigners than for Canadians to develop our resources. It was reinforced by existing fiscal policies which, without any offsetting initiatives, tended simply to reinforce the status quo. Sir, we in this government are determined to change the status quo in terms of Canadian participation in Canadian energy development.

The additional investment resources that will be available through changes in pricing policy will provide us with an opportunity to do that, and we intend to seize that opportunity to help more Canadians control more of the Canadian energy industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Among the elements of a new energy policy under discussion with the provinces we are proposing the creation of a national instrument to provide a significant source of capital investment in major new energy projects across Canada. That concept appears to have general approval among the governments involved and we are hopeful that such an institution would have broadly-based support from those governments.

The creation of an institution like that will provide a specific source of funding, separate from other claims on the fiscal resources of government, to support projects ranging from coal development in Nova Scotia through a gas pipeline in Quebec and the development of additional hydro resources in Manitoba and Newfoundland.

By placing a strong public financial commitment at the front end of those projects, their development will be more certain, their development will be quicker, and they will come on stream to serve the interests of Canadians much more quickly than they would without that instrument.

In supporting those policies, in supporting those projects and in investing those new financial resources, it will be a basic principle of this government to encourage the maximum possible Canadian participation. We all know, those of us who are prepared to look at the facts of what is happening in the energy industry, how the use of special incentives by the government of Alberta in regard to increased exploration and development of natural gas led to a considerable increase in the role of Canadian-controlled companies in that area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The leader of the New Democratic Party scoffs. I ask him to check the record because the record is there. It was a method that was brought in and it has resulted in Canadian control to an increasing degree of an industry that has too long been controlled by foreigners.

I sympathize with the leader of the New Democratic Party. It is often difficult when reality collides with ideology, but this government is determined to govern on the basis of the real situation and the real potential of this country. We differ from the New Democrats in that we are not caught up in ideology. We differ from the Liberals in that we are not preoccupied with the past. We are determined to build a Canadian future in this country.

I had referred to the experience in Alberta, and I say to the House that I am convinced that an ability to back up the entrepreneurial skills and technical expertise of Canadians with major financial support can be equally productive in strengthening Canadian participation in other important energy developments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1640)

Mr. Clark: The last item in the Leader of the Opposition's motion concerns interest rates. No one in this House, and I am sure no Canadian, likes high interest rates. We all want them lowered and this government is determined that they be lowered, not by instant magic, because there is no magic, but by taking the tough decisions now that are essential if we are going to restore the Canadian economy to the kind of strength that will allow more moderate rates of interest in the future. That, sir, is our medium-term goal and we are dedicated to it.

However, the issue in this motion is the short term—whether the government had any immediate alternative but to accept the advice of the governor of the Bank of Canada and, indeed, what the consequences following an alternative course might have been. The hard reality is that the economic circumstances we inherited from the old government left us with no short-term alternative. In fact, on becoming the government it became apparent to us that the mess was even worse than we suspected and that our immediate options were even more limited than we thought they were. We knew that we were inheriting a budgetary deficit of $11 billion, the largest in Canadian history. We knew that we were stuck with a balance of payments deficit of some $7 billion, the worst per capita deficit in international dealings of any western nation.

But let me tell the House a few of the facts we found out only after we became the Government of Canada. First, because of the previous government's commitment to secrecy, we did not know that the trend in government finances was exactly opposite to what Canadians had been told by the old government. We found that long-range forecasts, which we made public for the first time, showed the federal deficit increasing to $14 billion by 1983 and the public debt actually growing dramatically again with the next five years.

Secondly, we had been told by the former minister of finance, as recently as his last budget, that the Canadian economy was entering into a period of, to use his words, "sustained expansion". What we found in fact was an economy here and in the United States sliding toward a recession, not moving toward sustained expansion.

The third thing we found was that the accounts of Canada, as presented by the old government, simply did not represent the true financial position of the country. In the Accounts of Canada Adjustments Act, the previous government proposed to write off some $3.5 billion in dubious assets, an action which might not affect cash requirements but which certainly had an impact on the country's net debt and debt servicing costs. Similarly, we found Crown corporation borrowings of as much as $1.5 billion which were not entered in the accounts, even though they were a contingent liability of the government. We found a number of capital projects with costs virtually out of control, from the Prince Rupert grain dryer, where costs had multiplied five times, to the Mirabel Airport losing $1 million a week and requiring expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars before it could even achieve solvency.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, faced with this legacy, no responsible government had any other alternative but to accept rising interest rates. Our government made a difficult but responsible choice. Let me also tell you the other solution we could have adopted. The Liberals as well as the New Democrats have hinted to the Canadian public, without ever making their position clear, that there was an obvious way out, which as Canadians should know, which had the full support of the opposition, namely, to reject the advice of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Such a decision would have had dire consequences. The governor might have felt he had to resign, as the government's decision would amount to a lack of confidence. Given the present economic situation, such a resignation might have provoked a wind of panic on the Canadian stock exchange and dealt a hard blow to Canadian currency. Even without the Governor's resignation, our dollar would have been affected by our $7 billion trade deficit, followed by a drastic depreciation of our dollar and serious inflationary consequences for our country.

Such was, Mr. Speaker, the short-term choice the government had to make. I hope the representatives of the two parties opposite will have the courage to rise before this debate is over and tell this House and the Canadian people that it was the option they supported.

[English]

We are faced here with a ritual motion of non-confidence from a government that is so preoccupied with its past that it will—

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Government?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —by a group who consider themselves a government and who are so preoccupied with the mistakes that they made in the policies to which they were committed in the old days that they refuse to face the future of Canada. We on this side of the House are not afraid of the future of Canada. We will not accept the advice of those opposite, that we either succumb to ideology suggested by the New Democratic Party, or we lock ourselves in the past and shut our eyes to the future that can be gained in this country.

We have in the energy resources of this nation a tremendous potential upon which to build as a nation. It is a potential which was there under the old government, but which it refused and failed to take advantage of. We do not intend to perpetuate that failure or to continue in the path of shutting our eyes to the great energy potential which exists in this country. We are a nation which need not depend on foreign sources. We are a nation which need not subject the people of Quebec and Atlantic Canada to an increasing dependence upon unstable foreign sources. We are a nation unique among the nations of the world which has the possibility to build upon our own energy strength. That is what this government intends to do.

If those opposite want to risk a general election on a question of the past versus the future, then we will go with confidence into that election, speaking to the future and certain that the people of Canada, given a choice or forced to make a choice between a government that wants to govern and a party opposite that wants to politic, will share with us the confidence that my ministers and I have in the future of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see three members seeking the floor and, of course, it is my responsibility to choose. Since the first day of this session, I have attempted to reconcile in my own mind events that have taken place and which, I am sure, have not escaped the attention of the members of this House. They relate to the position of the members of the Social Credit party in the House.

We ought to be clear at the outset that it is not a transgression of propriety to mention the name of the political party or the members who are involved; it is the Social Credit Party of Canada. Its members are members of this House of Commons and their leader is the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy). Those are the realities.

What the House dealt with on opening day, as is its long-standing practice, was a motion which related to membership on a striking committee. I indicated at that time that the result of that vote carried much more significance than simply that, that each participant in the debate indicated that it related to the opinion of the House on the rights of the members of the Social Credit party vis-à-vis that particular committee.

There was no doubt in anyone's mind that this House was addressing itself to that rather larger question of the entitlement of the Social Credit party at that time, even though, naturally, the members of that party have raised, by way of a point of order, the question whether or not it was a proper thing to do or whether a proper significance could be drawn from that vote.

• (1650)

I want to go back to that and stress again to the House that that vote, even indicating, as it did, that the House was reacting or expressing itself on the position in which a member or members of a party holding five seats finds itself in the House of Commons, I think we ought to be clear that that is the status: we have a political party with a leader and with five members in the House of Commons. The vote under no circumstances, may I say, can be taken to pass out of existence a political party, nor can it be taken to render as independent members the group which has been recognized as a party and which has, in fact, been seated together as a political party. The Social Credit Party of Canada exists as a political party and the five members exist as members of that party under their leader.

Faced with the decision by the House on the one hand, which was, in my opinion, an expression of what the entitlement of that group then becomes, the House decided at that time that that group, as a political party in the House, was not entitled to membership automatically on the striking committee. The House is entitled to make those expressions because the House has to decide whether a party of five members is entitled to the same things as a party of 26 members or a party of 112 members. Those are decisions that the House has to make. The House, in my opinion, made a declaration to that effect on that day, and I have said so several times. I have no intention of retreating from that position.

On the other hand, it seems to me that the responsibility of the Chair and the responsibility of the House of Commons is to protect whatever rights minorities do enjoy and, therefore, it seems to me that I must conclude what it is that the members of the Social Credit party are entitled to. For example, as I have said, participation in the question period is their right, the same as any other group of five members. It is not difficult to calculate mathematically what five members are entitled to as a proportion of the 26 members and a proportion in terms of the 112 members that sit opposite them. Therefore, I come to the conclusion that the members of that party are entitled to a certain participation.

The House will recognize in what I have tried to do, I think both representing the spirit of the protection of minorities in the House and also, I think, the generosity of the House, that what those members are entitled to can be given to them with a generosity and a recognition that respects the fact that they are members of a political party, so long as it does not give them an advantage that they would not otherwise enjoy as five members and, secondly, so long as it does not deprive other members of their right to participate in some way.

Let me extend that thinking so that there can be no doubt about it. For example, if this were a Wednesday and we were concluding debate at six o'clock, it would seem to me that to recognize a member of the Social Credit party at this time would be to give them a right which they would not otherwise enjoy because the debate would stop at six. It would give them a participation in the debate which is disproportionate to the presence of five members in the House.

On the other hand, this debate is not going to stop at six o'clock; it is going to stop at 9.45 p.m. I therefore take this view, as I have done in question period, that members of the Social Credit party are not entitled to put a questioner up every day. They are entitled to two out of three or perhaps three out of five in a week. It seems to me, however, that the sensible and proper thing for the Chair to want to do, giving them only what they are entitled to, is to try to give the opportunity to them in such a way as to recognize the existence of a political party. It is not something that the House can simply wipe out of existence.

Similarly, today when I see on the list that in rotation the hon. member for Beauce is going to address the House in this debate, it is therefore to no cost of other hon. members in terms of participation for the House to take the generous attitude that he ought to be treated as a party leader, which he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, guarding always the position that I must examine and that no privileges can be given to that party which might unfairly cost the participation of other hon. members, always when I can I ought to try to give them their fair participation and fair share in that way. Again I say that in the question period not every day shall it follow right after the participation of a New Democratic Party member, but some days it will. Other days, as it did today, it will come later in the question period. Where possible I think the House ought to extend at least the generosity to give members of that party what they are justly entitled to, but to give it to them wherever possible in such a way as to recognize their position as, in fact, a political party in Canada.

For that reason I therefore now give the floor—

[Translation]

—to the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy).

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Thank you very much—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can be spoken to and consulted about this at another time. It is always at the absolute discretion of the Chair which member shall be recognized. The hon. member for Beauce.

Mr. Pinard: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is not fair.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. The hon. member for Beauce has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier), that the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) be now recognized.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will realize that he must have the floor to put that kind of motion. The hon. member for Beauce has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: He did have the floor. You recognized him.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have just realized a number of things.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): There are still honest people!

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, we have before us this afternoon a non-confidence motion put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau). The motion reads as follows, and I quote:

> That this House has no confidence in the government because it will cause severe economic hardship for the Canadian people this winter: first, through its neglect of the grave possibility of shortages in heating fuel; second, through its failure to support existing intergovernmental agreements on oil pricing and supply; third, through its inability to conclude agreements preventing immoderate price increases in the future; and, fourth, through its acceptance of record high interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that making up one's mind on such a motion is a very difficult and delicate task. Canadians who are now listening to us must also be in this same predicament for if such a motion were to be accepted, this non-confidence motion against the new government would be tantamount to a confidence motion for the previous government.

Since coming to this House, I have heard hon. members from the opposition question the government. They ask the same questions the new government members were asking when they were the opposition. And I have heard government members, the new Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) for instance, give the same answers as the previous government did when they were in power. I see the Prime Minister shaking his head. If he would read his statements and compare them with those made by the former prime minister, he would have to agree on this.

I paid close attention today to the speech delivered by the mover of the motion, and to the answer given by the Prime Minister, after listening of course to the remarks made by my colleague, the Leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Broadbent).

The former prime minister said the new prime minister was an irresponsible leader, that he was incapable of finding solutions to our economic and energy problems. On the other hand, the new prime minister suggested that the former prime minister, when in government, was totally incapable of solving the economic problems and bringing true solutions to any of the areas of concern to Canadians. In other words, they accused each other and Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to use these terms, because they are hardly parliamentary, they accused each other of being incompetent, so to speak. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether both were not right to some extent. The Canadian people chose to elect a new government on May 22, and why? Because things were not working any more, and the previous government's deficits had become unacceptable. I heard the former Prime Minister suggest earlier before the House that the high cost of energy will amount to about $300 per capita, and this seems inevitable.

But he did not mention that in the last three years, budgetary deficits have put a yearly $500 debt on the back of every Canadian. The former prime minister did not mention that. And yet, it is a fact, because every year Parliament has to vote huge amounts in order to pay the interest on such a fantastic debt that long-term borrowings are now needed to make up the yearly budgetary deficits.

Mr. Speaker, how can we believe that the former prime minister, the sponsor of this motion, is sincere when he or his group does not seem any more able today than they were six months ago to settle our problems? That is why I would like to come back to the motion which is in four parts. First, it mentions the grave possibility of shortages in heating fuel. I feel this first part of the motion is extremely important. The second part deals with agreements to prevent price increases. I must say that to prevent an agreement on price increases in this inflationary period shows a very partisan attitude, because the present system, that no one on either side of the House seems willing to change, should be really improved so as to bring about the same results on both sides. So I really wonder if the second part of the motion can be called anything but partisan.

As concerns the third part according to which the government does not support intergovernmental agreements and which refers to future negotiations, I think that only a prophet could predict the future. That is why I find somewhat ridiculous the third part of the motion. The fourth refers to interest rates, and I contend, Mr. Speaker, that it is completely irrational.

I had the opportunity, like my colleagues from various political parties, to question the governor of the Bank of Canada when he appeared before the parliamentary Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and I asked him personally if he always had to follow the lead of the Federal Reserve Board in increasing interest rates and if he had to pursue the policy of the previous government because, as loyal knaves, they faithfully repeated, as if they had been tape-recorded, the decisions of the Federal Reserve Board. They have followed exactly the same policies. Neither government has proposed any short, medium or long-term solutions. So, when the former government speaks about Quebec when it has absolutely nothing to propose, I say it is wasting the time of the House.

As reported in Hansard, the governor of the Bank of Canada said that he had practically no room to manoeuvre and no authority, when he implied that the huge budgetary deficits of the government, the huge deficits of the balance of payments do not leave him any room to manoeuvre, and in order to save the dollar or maintain its value, he has to follow the instructions of the Federal Reserve Board.

When such an important man, a man who holds the high office of governor of the Bank of Canada, is reduced to saying such things, there is something wrong. If he could, he would say that had we had governments able to govern, able to make decisions in the interest of all Canadians, he would not find himself in such a ridiculous situation.

Obviously, a motion of non-confidence like the one before us today is exactly the kind of motion designed to make people believe that after four months of reflection and frustration in the opposition, some already have answers to our problems. This is an attempt to fool the people of Canada and to mislead them by throwing a red herring across the path so as to divert everybody's attention from 15 years of negligence and administrative irresponsibility.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider that the sum total of these deficits represents almost 6 per cent of the gross national product and consequently erodes—

An hon. Member: The hon. member is afraid of losing his job!

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Some hon. members are annoyed. It always hurts to be told the facts. However, since my arrival in this House, I have always had the courtesy to listen without ever interrupting, and I ask to be treated with the same courtesy.

Severe Economic Hardship

When one considers that the total of these two deficits represents close to 6 per cent of the GNP and consequently erodes nearly 25 per cent of the present and future savings of Canadians, it is time to start asking ourselves some serious questions. To blame this government when you are the ones mainly responsible is somewhat ridiculous, but still not surprising coming from those who brought about the present situation.

The infringement of civil liberties—we shall have some other chance of bringing this up. The encroachment upon provincial rights—we shall have the chance of discussing this much further during the forthcoming few weeks or months, also the basic violation of the right to economic progress of the Canadian people throughout the country. The third point is absolute nonsense: blaming the government for failing to bring about agreements preventing price increases is pure fantasy. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the situation inherited from the previous government amounts to a complete surrender to foreign capitals. We have become a sort of subsidiary for foreign financial interests and the Canadian monetary policy no longer originates in Canada. We have no such policy. It is based solely on the decisions of others, and both the present and the previous governments have admitted to what extent the situation has deteriorated and the new government seems to realize the facts.

Mr. Speaker, this abdication before foreign capitals is reflected by the constant increases in our exports of raw materials. We export our raw materials and import finished products. We have only to look at our trade balance to realize this. This complete abdication is reflected by the naïve will to believe that pious wishes can replace political leadership. When I say "pious wishes" I am referring to both the new government and the former government because they are no longer responsible for the management of the nation's business.

This surrender is reflected in the fact that the financial situation which the present government is facing is such that they must borrow to pay the interest on the debt, to improve our balance of payments and to attract international capital, which makes us even more dependent on foreign finance and in the long term only increases the deficit of the balance of payments.

Because of the legacy of the previous government whose basic misunderstanding of business structures becomes more obvious every day, the Leader of the Opposition is stating in his motion:

—its inability to conclude agreements preventing immoderate price increases in the future;

In the first place, agreements on price increases, as far as I know, are prohibited; I venture to say that the Leader of the Opposition has made a mistake. Second, future prices—there again is the height of ridicule. Through what, where, when and how was the future revealed to the Leader of the Opposition? After all, these people should be more serious.

Mr. Speaker, I could dwell at length on our economic situation, on the way the country has been managed during the 15 or 16 years of Liberal rule, on the way this wavering government seems unable to make decisions and depends on foreign powers and decisions made outside Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to come back to an important matter, a fundamental one, energy. That is why when we learned about the motion to be introduced by the Liberal party, we wanted to make a positive effort. Instead of criticizing the government, we wanted to ask them to assume their responsibilities. I therefore took upon myself to write a letter to the Prime Minister in which I stressed two points, letting him know that it was extremely important that his government should announce immediately to the Canadian people the measures he had taken or intended to take and the guarantees he could give to prevent any risk of shortages, and avoid the panic that could result in unreasonable price increases.

● (1710)

Second, we said to the government, through the Prime Minister, that it was also extremely important that every step be taken to protect quotas and make sure they were available to independent distributors. Just today the Prime Minister sent us a very lengthy letter of four pages in which he provides particulars following our request which we considered to be constructive. We asked for some explanations and since verba volant, scripta manent, the Prime Minister is bound by the comments he made in his letter. The Prime Minister answered that the short-term situation—unfortunately I will not have enough time, because the Standing Orders will not allow me to read the entire letter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I think the House would be very interested to let the hon. member read out this very important answer and even to table it. I am sure he would have unanimous consent from the House.

An hon. Member: Hon. members on the government side seem to be very interested.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. To answer the point of order raised by the hon. member, I would like to remind him that the rule requiring a minister to table a document does not apply to an ordinary member even if the letter was sent to him by a minister or by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): I shall do whatever they want because these people need to learn. I shall do whatever they wish and send them a copy of my letter because by reading you do indeed learn something in the long run.

[Mr. Roy (Beauce).]

An hon. Member: No, read it, it is important.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, of course I do not have to take orders from them but I will read only the most important parts of it. I quote:

> The short-term situation as we found it last June was also far from satisfactory. Inventories had been seriously depleted and there was considerable uncertainty about the adequacy of gasoline supply for the summer and heating oil for the winter.
>
> The government acted promptly to improve the situation and to secure equitable treatment for the independent sector of the business. Thus:
> 1. With the co-operation of the government of Alberta and its agencies, production of crude oil in western Canada has been brought to maximum levels in recent months.
> 2. Exports of our valuable light crude oil were reduced from 55,000 barrels a day in September to 14,000 barrels a day in October and virtually eliminated in November in order to make this oil available to Canadian refiners.
> 3. With the government's approval, the National Energy Board has continued to allow the exchange of western Canadian oil for additional supplies of overseas oil to eastern Canada. The Energy Board recently approved exchanges totalling some 2.5 million barrels, virtually all of which are for the account of refiners in the province of Quebec.
> 4. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has authorized the payment of special import compensation in the amount of $745,000 to enable a Quebec refiner to import a badly-needed cargo of crude oil despite an unexpected increase in its price.
> 5. On July 13 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources released a report of an inquiry into problems which distributors, particularly in Quebec had faced last winter. The recommendations of the inquiry are being vigorously pursued.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Be patient, please. Don't be so nervous.

> 6. On August 15 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources telexed the refiners regarding the question of supply for the independent sector of the business. He referred to exchanges being used as a means to assure supply to the independents.

Mr. Speaker, surely I cannot read the whole letter, but I can say that our information on the first point, namely the assurance of adequate supplies to Quebec and the maritime provinces, gives us cause for a certain amount of satisfaction, because more has been said today than ever before.

An hon. Member: In 15 years!

Mr. Roy (Beauce): My colleagues tell me that they have heard more than they ever had, over the last 15 years. Yet, Mr. Speaker, they—

An hon. Member: You believed that, ha, ha!

An hon. Member: Go and tell Mr. René Lévesque.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, they will not let me speak. I did not think my speech was that interesting. Since the Prime Minister mentions it in his letter, he tells me very seriously that concrete measures followed the recommendations of this study group, I would like first, and I am telling very seriously the Prime Minister and asking him to take note of this—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I suggest hon. members should let the hon. member for Beauce complete his remarks without interrupting. His time has expired, but I will allow him another four minutes in order for him to complete his remarks. The hon. member for Beauce.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I certainly want my hon. colleague from Beauce to have the floor, and I would also like to know by virtue of which special privilege he can have four additional minutes since the Chair mentioned earlier no previous agreement was made to allow him to go on. The Chair did say it was exceptional. Is it for that purpose, again because it is exceptional—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is no privilege involved here, it is just a matter of fairness because of the interruptions the hon. member has had to bear during his speech.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your great wisdom.

I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister to give us more information regarding independent distributors. The words procedure and recommendations have been mentioned. We are not aware of these recommendations. We would like to get more detailed and precise information. When the Prime Minister talks about procedure, we would like to know which ones have been followed to ensure that all necessary measures have been taken so that people will not suffer any hardships arising from this situation. The Prime Minister also informed us that a telex had been sent to the refineries. I would ask him to provide us with a copy of this message, to table it so that we know where we stand. We would also like to know whether the refineries and other companies have to submit regular reports to the National Energy Board in order to enable the latter to monitor the situation closely and regularly and also to prevent the development of a crisis situation, such as the one we now risk facing. Everyone knows of course that energy is at present an extremely important issue.

I would therefore ask the Prime Minister to give us this information before six o'clock if possible because we want to do a serious job. We are not in this House to play games. We want to go beyond words because even if we are bound by the rules to take a colleague's words, we still want to check the mechanisms, we want to be sure, at some point, of everything the government has done in that area. We want to be informed, and I would ask the Prime Minister to address his letter correctly, and I think he knows what I mean.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lévis on a point of order.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, you said a moment ago that since he is not a minister, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) is not entitled to table a document that I consider highly important, namely a letter addressed only to him and his party, relating to commitments made to a party which was afforded partial recognition this afternoon and to the hon. member for Beauce. I seek the unanimous consent of the House to ask that the Prime Minister release the correspondence exchanged with the Social Credit Party of Canada.

● (1720)

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) is quite serious in his remarks, he knows quite well that when an hon. member writes either to the right hon. Prime Minister or a cabinet minister, he is under no obligation to disclose that correspondence to the House itself. I think the hon. member for Beauce has been quite generous in giving the main features of that letter, and more confidence ought to be forthcoming.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lévis on a question of privilege. Is this on the same question he put earlier?

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, it is a question of privilege. In answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse, I would like to indicate to him that I am quite familiar with the rules on the question of correspondence between members of this House. But what is involved here is not a more exchange of correspondence, it is a policy statement from the Prime Minister to a member of this House. Was it a commitment in order to secure his vote this evening?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate hon. members may rise on points of order, but I must attempt to meet a schedule which will bring us to a decision before the day is over, without depriving other members who would like to contribute. And in order to meet the point raised by the hon. member from Lévis, I must point out to him citation 327 from Beauchesne, fifth edition, which reads:

(2) It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the Table of the House, if it can be done without injury to the public interest.

(3) A public document referred to not be tabled.

A careful reading of that citation will remind the hon. member that the document must be quoted by a minister of the Crown. The hon. member who receives a letter from a minister of the Crown has no such responsibility. So actually, an hon. member referred to a document he had received from the right hon. Prime Minister, and on the basis of citation 327 from Beauchesne, it is his absolute right not to wish to—and indeed he may not even table the document. I recognize the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel of course that your decision is right.

[English]

I must say this is the first time I have ever seen an opposition party filibustering its own motion. But that is their privilege.

[Translation]

If the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) agrees, I am quite happy to table this part of the letter.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Beauce.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): About the point that was raised, I have no objection whatsoever to the tabling of the letter by the Prime Minister so that all members can read it because it is a matter of public interest, we do not have any secrets, we do not have anything to hide.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. As the right hon. Prime Minister does not have the floor, the only way I could allow him to table the document at the request of hon. members is to have it done through unanimous consent. Does the House give its unanimous consent to permit the right hon. Prime Minister to table the letter addressed to the hon. member for Beauce and which he quoted in his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For letter above referred to, see appendix.]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the English version of the letter from the hon. member for Beauce but I have here two copies of my answer in both official languages and I suppose we will manage to obtain a translation of the letter from the hon. member for Beauce.

Mr. Lefebvre: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The right hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) on a point of order.

Mr. Lefebvre: Thank you for the promotion, Mr. Speaker. I wish to know if you could give me some explanation on a very important point. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) asked for leave to table the correspondence he exchanged with the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy). Will those two letters be an appendix to Hansard for today to avoid the problem we had about three days ago?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must say that here again we need unanimous consent to have the letter appended to Hansard.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are very anxious to avoid a number of things, one of them being to avoid a filibuster of this debate by a party which brought a motion of censure. Of course we shall give consent, and if the hon. member would like his picture appended to Hansard we would give consent to that as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it on the same point of order? I must deal with them one by one.

Mr. Olivier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) on the same point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I only wish to say that we agreed to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) tabling letters, notices and correspondence between the hon. member for Beauce and the right hon. Prime Minister not for the purpose—he said that he was seeing for the first time a filibuster by the party proposing the motion. I think it is much more serious than that. We want to see if indeed a party paid the price to get the support of another party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that the Chair can allow such an allegation from the hon. member. I believe that this really constitutes a reflection on the integrity of an hon. member, and if the hon. member for Longueuil did so with jocularity and without any malice, he could perhaps clarify his comments. However, as I interpret his comments, I cannot allow him to let this go.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, to clarify what I said, I believe that the Canadian population is entitled to know whether there were any such rumours. I am not saying that there were. The Canadian population is entitled to know if these rumours are founded, if there was a price to pay. Mr. Speaker, I did not say that the right hon. Prime Minister had paid a price, but I stated that there were rumours to this effect. I want to know whether the rumours that the party in power paid a price to have the co-operation of a party are true or not. I am not saying that this is so, I simply want to know if it is. There is a difference.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to hear the hon. member for Longueuil say such things in the House. He does not state anything, but he is starting rumours himself. I have seen no such reports anywhere. He is very wily. He would be able to kill a cat without drowning it. This is certain. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully ask the Chair that the hon. member for Longueuil withdraw his comments because they are unparliamentary. I do not accept that such a rumour be started in the Canadian Parliament and that it be implied that others have started it. I therefore ask the Chair to request the hon. member to simply withdraw his comments, especially the first that he made.

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As I understood the intervention of the hon. member for Longueuil, he simply asked a question. Now the member who has just spoken and the members of his party act like offended virgins. We were not the ones who held a press conference yesterday, Mr. Speaker, to say that we would ask the right hon. Prime Minister to make certain concessions if he wanted our support during the vote this evening concerning energy supplies—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. As concerns the point raised by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard), I cannot enter the debate and discuss what was said outside the House or in the newspapers.

● (1730)

The point on which I cannot accept the remarks by the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) is quite simply his insinuation that a member, whether the Prime Minister or not, sought by way of a letter to buy or obtain the favour of another hon. member, which might reflect on the integrity of the two hon. members concerned.

In brief, I think at certain times the House may allow some light improprieties but the way the hon. member for Drummond made his remarks is more acceptable, I think, than the direct insinuation that was made by the hon. member for Longueuil who, I think, can easily moderate his innuendo.

Mr. Pinard: If I may complete the remarks I was making, I am convinced that what the hon. member for Longueuil meant when he put his question, which was interpreted by some as imputing motives, is quite simply that the effect of that letter was to seek an understanding between two political parties to come to an agreement on a vote. I do not believe the hon. member for Longueuil meant that a party had bought out another member or anything of the kind. But the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the remarks of the hon. member for Longueuil must be interpreted in their context. What the hon. member for Longueuil made reference to is precisely those specific facts I explained, that yesterday a press conference was held outside the House, and you must take those facts into account to understand the remarks by the hon. member for Longueuil. I do not believe there is a need to withdraw anything at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I fail to see how the hon. member for Drummond is helping the Chair to deal with the problem. I do not see why he feels responsible for the comments made by the hon. member for Longueuil. It would be far easier if the latter would repeat almost word for word what the hon. member for Drummond just said and what I have just heard.

The hon. member for Longueuil.

Mr. Olivier: I also rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I entirely agree with the comments of the hon. member for Drummond and, moreover, I am trying to protect our dearest possession, democracy, and the office of Prime Minister of Canada. I think that a Prime Minister should be unassailable and this is extremely important. That was just my point. I would like those foolish rumours to stop. I think that the office of Prime Minister is tarnished when such rumours are going around. And it is passing strange that no member from his party would want to stand up for him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must say that the last remarks by the hon. member are quite acceptable to the Chair, and to all other hon. members.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I think I have been dragged enough into this to have the right to voice my views.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. As for the remarks of the hon. member for Longueuil, I have accepted his explanations. As far as the supplementary reasons he gave us as a justification for what he might have said or for what I understood him to suggest, I accept them entirely. Now I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have the right to rise at the first opportunity. That is why I ask you to allow me to speak now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certain things have been said which still leave room for all kinds of doubt. It is not the first time I sit in a parliament, and this kind of situation is altogether unacceptable from people who have respect for their colleagues. I ask that the hon. members for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) and for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) not only withdraw what they said but also apologize.

Mr. Olivier: Never!

Mr. Roy (Beauce): So, Mr. Speaker, I must come to the conclusion that they lack courage, that they do not have enough courage to spell out their accusations when they have something to say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: While I can understand the reaction of the hon. member for Beauce, I must say that the Chair has already made its decision on this point of order and has already accepted the explanations of the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) to the satisfaction, I believe, of the majority of members. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thought this moment would never come. I should say to hon. members opposite that while some of my colleagues have some concern, I have another prurient interest in this first instalment of the love letters between Fabien and Joe. The reason why we would like to have them tabled and appended to Hansard, I suspect, is that they will become a great best seller, particularly when we see the second instalment as we have heard the disclaimer of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) of unrequited satisfaction, and we hope to see the second letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) by about 9.30 p.m., so that we know exactly what the love letters in the second instalment really have to say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am very sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but there is a technicality regarding the point of order which has been raised which I forgot to pursue. I am referring to unanimous consent to permit the House to have the two letters of the correspondence attached to Hansard. I am not sure that I heard whether there was consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am happy that this has been agreed to, and may I point out that it does not necessarily mean that my picture has to be in Hansard.

Mr. Clark: Thank God for that.

Mr. Axworthy: If you want my picture, Mr. Speaker, you are welcome to it. I do not care.

I want to say a few words on this motion of non-confidence. First, I should like to start by speaking about the purpose of the non-confidence motion. We have heard certain allusions to the motives for this non-confidence motion today. The Prime Minister simply said it was a ritual. If that was a ritual, then he has gone to an awful lot of effort to make a deal on that ritual.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I think, Mr. Speaker, it is far more than a ritual. I would also say that the kind of vitriolic and poisonous words which we heard from the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), again challenging the reasons for our motion, only shows a man who is so frustrated by his own unrequited desire for power that he really should be challenged as to whose ethics are worse, and whether he is prepared to support a motion from members whose motives he does not accept. If the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who is a theologian of great standing, according to his own description, were here, he would find that the ethic as to whether the NDP can so willingly support a motion put forward by a party which they find so reprehensible is questionable. Perhaps it is because they are so used to looking at their own image.

The real point at issue is the purpose of a non-confidence motion. This is a serious motion—no one is treating it lightly or treating it with the kind of frivolity that hon. members opposite seem to have shown. We take the position that there is one basic fact that perhaps hon. members opposite tend to forget, that is, that they are a minority government. They neither command a majority of members in this House nor do they command a majority of votes in the country. As a minority government, they have the direct obligation and responsibility to listen to the majority. They have not been listening to the majority since this Parliament opened.

Today, we heard the Prime Minister express to the member of Parliament for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), I think, that he does not even want to listen to members of Parliament any more—he can rule by divine democracy, he can do it directly himself. But the point about minority government is that it must rest upon the confidence of the House, and the confidence of the House is held by the majority of members who are not sitting on that side. They are not Progressive Conservatives. We on this side represent far more of the population of Canada than members of the government.

● (1740)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: With all the brave protestation about speaking for the people of Canada and listening to Parliament, it is about time the government started to listen. If the government were listening, it would hear the people saying that they are tired of interest rates over 15 per cent or 16 per cent and their businesses going broke. They are tired of not being able to buy houses, even though the promises are there. They are tired of having a national government being pushed around by provincial premiers. They are tired of living in the jeopardy of accelerating energy prices with no commitment to any form of support or cushion for those prices. A lot of people are tired of the government acting in a fashion which indicates that it is not prepared to listen to the majority of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: The point of bringing in this non-confidence motion is very much like the old story which is told in western Canada. A farmer was seen hitting a donkey over the head with a two-by-four; he was asked why and he said, "To get its attention". We have brought in this motion to get the attention of the government, so that it will start listening to what Canadians have to say. That is the purpose of the motion, not the cynical motives contributed by the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party nor the rituals described by the Prime Minister. We are talking about a very serious initiative. It is one instrument available to an opposition party to provide a message to the government, a message which is particularly significant for a government in a minority position. It is about time the government began remembering that fact every day; we will keep reminding it.

The reasons are clear. Since Parliament has opened we have had direct denial and contradictions of the commitments, promises, and proposals put forward by members of the Progressive Conservative Party in the election campaign. They have not been prepared to live up, by their actions, to the words they expressed at that time. It is about time their actions began to lie closer to the truth, to what they believe.

We talk about interest rates. We recognize that this is not an easy problem. We do not have a simplistic, socialistic solution like the sparrows in the corner who twitter away. There is no magic answer to the problem. There is an economic time bomb on the international monetary scene. We recognize that the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) must be careful and cautious about the rates charged. Also we realize full well that they must protect the dollar. But they have an obligation to protect Canadians as well, and to ensure that the small businessman who spoke to me in my riding on Saturday has protection. That gentleman had a line of credit of $250,000. He said, "I can last two months and then I go under because I have no protection; I have no satisfaction and no way of getting any assistance." The government should be listening to that kind of person.

We have been trying to say, during question period and meetings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, that if there is a requirement to raise interest rates, there is an equal requirement to help those people who are hurt by those interest rate increases. There is an equal requirement to ask a question which I do not think has been asked: do the rates have to go as high as they have? An hon. member from Thunder Bay, gave the Minister of Finance clear documentation showing that the spread between the nominal rate and the real rate has been growing larger over the last three months, not smaller, and therefore can justify a somewhat lower interest rate. But the Minister of Finance is so busy being a down-east version of Johnny Carson that he cannot concentrate long enough to decide what economic and fiscal policies he is prepared to introduce.

We listened with great interest to the declarations of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie). In a provocative and sentimental statement the minister said, "I am concerned about the people in need." I believe that minister is concerned about the people in need, but the Minister of Finance is not because he is prepared to put $575 million into the budget this year to pay for a mortgage credit plan which has no economic use and is not going to the people in need. Is that good economics? Also I listened to the minister of housing who I think is a sincere, honest, forthright minister. On Thursday in committee he said, "Yes, there are real problems in the housing market". He indicated that people are defaulting on their mortgages, housing starts are going down, and the housing market will be in chaos.

An hon. Member: They are up this month.

Mr. Axworthy: The hon. member opposite does not know much about housing. By the first month in 1980 housing starts in the country will be down 30 per cent. That information comes from every industrial spokesman. The minister of housing said that he knew there was a problem, but he had no fiscal room; he had no money to spend. Why is the Minister of Finance laying $575 million on the table for a program which will not provide additional home ownership opportunities? In fact the HUDAC group indicated that 875,000 families have been eliminated from the housing market. Not only has the government failed to add new opportunities, it has taken opportunities away from close to 900,000 Canadian families. How can the government be treated seriously? How can Canadians accept the government at its face value? How can Canadians accept the government's word when it engages in contradictory policies which have no sense or substance?

One cannot justify the lack of action, protection and cushioning in a period of intense interest rates when one knows that the Minister of Finance is sitting on his bundle of money which he is prepared to spend foolishly.

I sat here in absolute amazement when the Prime Minister said, "I have got secret information". This is the man who believes in openness. He has secret information indicating that because of the awful job the Liberals have done, he can project the deficit going up to $14 billion.

It is no secret why the deficit is going up to $14 billion. It is the Conservative government which decided to spend $2.3 billion on its mortgage deductibility plan. It is the Conservative government which talked about spending $2.7 billion on the national deficit to buy back Petro-Canada. We know what is causing the deficit; it is their initiatives. It is time the government stopped trying to pawn it off on the previous government. We are asking the government to become concerned about the present and not the past, rather than engaging in frivolous leaps into the fuzzy future about which the Prime Minister likes to talk. He said that we will have oil by 1990, but the people are concerned about what they will pay for oil in 1980. They are concerned about the fact that if the $4 increase goes into effect, they will be paying an additional $300 a month for fuel oil. That is what they are concerned about.

When we asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the living example of altruism and obtuseness, what exactly he will do, he said, "I think I have something in the way of a taxation policy". That comes as big news. The minister is providing no assurances. He is providing no security for the people who must face the prospect of substantial heating bill and gas consumption increases because of that $4 increase. In my own province the $4 increase will pull close to $200 million out of the provincial economy. That is $200 million which we can ill afford.

What answer do we receive from the first minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? They say, "Don't worry, we will make a deal with Mr. Lougheed". I know what kind of deal will be made. Mr. Lougheed has said what the deal will be. The only deal Mr. Lougheed will accept is: when he gets all the money he will lend it back to Manitobans at a 12 per cent interest rate. That is the deal Mr. Lougheed wants. It is an interesting example of Tory economics. They take the windfall rents off those resources, transfer them to one province, and lend the money back to other provinces at exorbitant interest rates. How can that so-called energy package be justified? It is a package which has become unstrung and untied very quickly.

The question of pricing is really the key issue at the heart of our non-confidence motion. There is no credibility or acceptance on the part of Canadians concerning the government's energy package, because they know the facts. They know the facts when it comes to those interesting allocations that we will give oil companies.

During question period today, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister said that we must rely upon the multinationals to supply us with energy. I have an interesting column which indicates that multinationals are spending their profits, not on exploring for new energy, but for tomato greenhouses in southern Ontario. I have nothing against tomato greenhouses in southern Ontario, but why are they spending the excess profits from natural resources to build subdivisions in Alberta, tomato farms in Ontario, and fast food restaurants along the 401?

How can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources gain any kind of acceptance on the part of the Canadian public when they know that the excess profits now being earned are not being turned back into exploration and development but are being diversified for takeovers, acquisitions, mergers, and new commercial ventures which have nothing to do with energy problems? They call that an energy package; they call that an energy policy? Of course the minister is now prepared to accept that because he has his deals in, he has his arrangements made, yet we know that kind of transfer of wealth, with all the tomato farms in southern Ontario, is only going to the treasuries in New York, Chicago, Geneva and wherever else.

When we are talking about the deficit problem in this country, what is a greater addition to the deficit than additional excess profits to multinational oil corporations which are immediately transferred out of Canada? How do we justify those kinds of profits when this minister gives us no assurance that he is prepared to step in to ensure that the profits will not be used for these extraneous, superfluous purposes, but will in fact be used to gain self-sufficiency? There is no assurance of that kind forthcoming, and again the actions speak much louder than the words.

[Mr. Axworthy.]

We note the same kind of arrangement when we consider the pricing arrangement as far as energy is concerned, particularly in terms of development itself and public accountability. I listened again with frank amazement to the first minister today who said we can be sure that the government will set up an institution to take public moneys and reinvest it in energy development. That sounded to me like a pretty good description of Petro-Canada. Why are we going through the silly exercise of ripping Petro-Canada apart, selling off bits and pieces and adding to the public deficit $2.3 billion, in order to set up another institution which is going to do the same thing? Surely members opposite, even those from Alberta, must be able to figure out that this can cause serious duplication and wasted effort.

Let us take the first minister at his own words. Let us have a reversal of his Petro-Canada stand and let us have a windfall profit tax. Let us take the money from that tax and put it into PetroCan so it can invest in new oil developments, tar sands, offshore developments, and renewable resources. That is a great, sensational idea. But, let us do it with the instrument we have and let us not waste time, the taxpayers' money, the efforts of this government and the time of this House wrecking apart a vehicle and a mechanism which is already in place.

Again, how can the government ask people to take it seriously? That is why the two-by-four has to come over the head so we can bring them back to their senses and make them realize what they are really doing. If the first minister is honest and forthright in what he is saying, and I accept that he is, then we say go ahead and do this and we will support him. If the government puts the money into PetroCan, the money it gets from the windfall profit tax, there will be no argument from this side of the House.

We also think there has to be substantial concern about the recycling of those additional, excess profits. There should be a very clear statement about this rather than the fuzzy vagueness we have heard so far about the need for consumer credit. We should recycle this right across the country to ensure that the consumers do not have to bear the full brunt of those increased prices.

It is only a national government with a full range of instruments at its disposal that can undertake that kind of activity. Perhaps the fact that frightens us the most on this side of the House is the same fact that was noted in the report of the Economic Council of Canada, that increasingly the ability of the federal government to manage the economy and to make decisions work in the interest of a number of regions in Canada is being evaporated and eroded by the giveaways and the erosions of the federal structure. That particular process has proceeded faster and further in the last six months than in the last 16 years in this country.

This Prime Minister and this government have given away more power, more jurisdiction, more authority and more instruments, and are talking about doing so even more, than any other government in the history of this country. Yet they turn around and say they want to manage, they want to be tough and they want to be strong. One needs something in his hands in order to do that. One needs some tools to do the job. We cannot get by on empty rhetoric and words. If the first minister of this country thinks he can get by with his acts of friendly persuasion, without having any leverage, anything to call to account and anything to take to the bargaining table, then he is in for a sorry surprise.

I was in the provincial legislature for six years.

An hon. Member: It shows.

Mr. Axworthy: Of course it shows. I think it is worth while that members opposite hear of some of my experiences. The fact of the matter is that provincial jurisdictions are not large enough and do not have the capacity to make decisions that serve the entire country. I have no bone to pick with Alberta as a province. I think the premier of that province is doing what his mandate tells him to do, which is to defend the interests of Alberta. However, when we are here to defend the interests of all Canadians we must recognize that we cannot allow one province to make economic decisions for the other nine. That is just not right, and the fact of the matter is that one province containing only 8 per cent of the population, and a small part of the land mass, does not have the scope or the ability, or in fact the mandate, to speak for the entire country. Yet we constantly throw back to that province the right to make those decisions.

An hon. Member: How many Liberals are there there?

Mr. Axworthy: I would suggest to the hon. member opposite that he should look to the next election because I think there will be a very interesting change taking place in that area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: The member laughs now. I find that interesting, but he should talk to some of his colleagues in that area because they are finding that they are part of a national government which at least presumes to have to take decisions in the national interest, and that is going to start working against those regional parochialisms. People are going to recognize that that sort of favoured Tory straw man that was kicked around western Canada for the last 20 years, called the federal government, is now going to be their government and not ours, and that is going to make a very interesting political change in that province. I suggest to the hon. member that he should really start looking to his own constituency rather than laughing.

The point of the matter is that they cannot govern this country if they are giving it away. They simply cannot govern this country if they are giving its instruments away. Whether they call it the theology of privatization, or the orthodoxy of neo-conservatism, what is really running at cross currents is the philosophical position of a right wing Conservative party with the essential responsibility of governing. I would try to provide hon. members with this suggestion. It is about time they stopped fighting their philosophical battles and started worrying more about where this country is going to go.

The Prime Minister talks about the future of Canada, but there will not be much future if there is not a national government to protect and enhance it. There will not be much future if all we have left is the right of the Prime Minister to be invited to meetings of a confederation of provincial barons when they decide to make decisions, and he comes and opens the door. There will not be much future left in this country after we have dismantled and taken apart the taxation and resources of a national reservoir and simply passed this on to the provinces. The government simply cannot make decisions when it does not have the wherewithal and the means to do so.

I suggest there are interesting opportunities in this country. There are richnesses that we can develop and use. The point of this non-confidence motion is that we have seen nothing from this government to give us confidence that they understand that we need a strong national government in order to provide opportunities.

There is nothing in what this government has shown so far to indicate that they recognize that the future of this country depends upon a national government that speaks for all Canadians and not just for one or two regions. There is nothing that this government has shown to indicate that they understand the concerns of Canadians—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: After all the foolishness that has gone on, sir, let me call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at six o'clock p.m. the motion of the right hon. the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) was under consideration.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I appear to be slightly out of breath it is because I was trying to conserve energy and I ran over here. I want to express my appreciation to the opposition for giving me a chance to get involved in this particular debate. On the basis of what transpired this afternoon, I thought that we might have points of order and points of privilege extending right up until the time of the vote. I was concerned that these points of discussion might intrude on my time. I know that there are hon. members who want to make a full contribution to the issues involved in this particular motion. I know that my colleagues on this side of the House are interested in participating, so I will try not to take any more time than is necessary.

Severe Economic Hardship

Today in the course of the question period and in enquiries made by my colleagues in the Social Credit party, there were some questions raised with regard to the supply situation in eastern Canada. These are questions to which I have addressed myself during the five months I have occupied this portfolio. I would like to spend some time this evening reporting to this House with respect to the actual situation. I am concerned about the approach taken by the official opposition with regard to this particular topic, because it seems to be trying to sow fear and apprehension in the minds of Canadians.

I want Canadians to know that I too am concerned about our supply situation. This is not a new concern for me because I was concerned during the time I was in opposition. Upon taking over this portfolio, I took steps with respect to this very serious problem. It does little good for the members who made up the previous government, and who bear a responsibility for the circumstances in which we find ourselves today, to raise phantom concerns in the minds of the Canadian people. I want to bring to the attention of this House some of the facts that I have gone into in my assessment of the current situation and the outlines of some of the objectives, as I see them, for our national energy policy, some of which were articulated so well by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) this afternoon.

Despite strenuous efforts to limit Canada's need for oil imports in recent months, it is projected that in the fourth quarter in 1979, one quarter of our national oil requirements will be imported. These projections suggest that the provinces from Ontario eastward will rely on foreign oil for over one third of their requirements. Canadian demand for oil products has continued to grow. In the January to September, 1979, period demand for oil products was 3.4 per cent higher than in the same period in 1978. Gasoline use was 4.3 per cent higher.

The petroleum products supply outlook reflects the rapid rate of consumption in the January to September period. Refineries in Canada produced 6 per cent more gasoline in that period than in the same period in 1978. Even so, gasoline stocks this September remained lower than in September, 1978. Production of heating oil in preparation for the coming winter is almost 11 per cent above January to September, 1978, production. Yet stocks this September remain below the September, 1978, level. The level of heating oil inventory is important to assure adequate supplies for unusually long cold periods. However, the current situation is not a crisis. It is tight but manageable.

Canada should have access to sufficient supplies from imported and domestic crude oil and petroleum products to satisfy demands as currently projected. On the basis of the steps which have been taken by myself and the government, and the steps we intend to take with respect to our objective of energy self-sufficiency and restraining demand and, in fact, with respect to increasing supply in Canada, we hope to lead Canada to a new possibility and a new potential for the 1980s.

Unlike the previous government and its seat of the pants approach to energy management, this government has taken concrete and specific actions to ensure that Canadians do indeed get through this winter with adequate supplies of heating oil. Some of these actions were referred to in the House today. They include increased production of domestic crude, and a reduction in exports of oil exports of crude to the United States. The reduction will go down in November from 55,000 barrels a day to virtually nil or nominal exports. The purpose of this is to provide Canadian refineries with a maximum quantity of Canadian crude supplies.

They include a change in the allocation system of the Interprovincial Pipe Line to allow independents access to this Canadian crude supply. In November of this year independents will have access to upwards of 5,000 barrels of oil a day each to supply the people of Quebec and eastern Canada under the new approach which is being taken with respect to Interprovincial Pipe Line allocations from western Canada. I have referred on a number of occasions to a telex which I sent out on August 15 this year. In that message I made quite clear to refiners and terminal operators in this country that I expected fair and equitable treatment for the independents of our country, to ensure that there would be no attempt to grab a larger share of the market. I continue to monitor the situation.

A very important element in refining with respect to the initiative we are taking is that my department consults, and will continue to do so fully and frequently, with the provincial governments, the refiners, and the independents so as to maximize the flexibility of our supplies and transportation systems. It should not be necessary for me to take these actions. Unfortunately, however, they were required because of the ineptitude of the previous government and its inability to provide energy leadership and energy management.

I want to deal also with the question of the emergency allocation legislation, Mr. Speaker. I have indicated that there is no crisis and no emergency in our country today. We know the terms of that legislation, Mr. Speaker. It requires that if there is such a situation, then there must be a declaration which will be referred to Parliament for consideration.

Should we be faced with a disruption in supply or an emergency situation in Canada, I can assure this House that the government is prepared to use the powers available to it, in order to conserve supplies and provide for their equitable distribution. In this regard I have indicated, in answer to questions in the House, that I intend as a matter of course and without any indication that there is a particular emergency in Canada at the time of introducing administrative amendments to the Energy Supplies Emergency Act 1979, to announce appointments to the Energy Supplies Allocation Board. Part of the responsibilities of this board will be to co-ordinate activities with respect to supply matters and to plan for a possible emergency. It is not intended, by making appointments to this board, to indicate that there is an emergency. I am taking this action only out of an abundance of caution, and will likely make the appointments at the time of the introduction of the amendments.

It should be underlined again that a support structure has been put in place, in case of an emergency. My department has been consulting fully with the provinces and with the industry, as well as with those people who are involved in transportation. A support basis is available to them so that they can move quickly and firmly in the event of an emergency.

I think we should examine the realities of Canadian oil prices and assess our position in the context of a national energy policy. Canadian oil prices are more than $10 per barrel below the cost of imports, and about $8.50 per barrel below the average cost of crude in Chicago. Canadian oil is now further below the international price than at any time since 1973.

These low prices for crude, combined with an exceptionally light level of taxation of petroleum products compared to other western countries, provide Canadian consumers with the lowest petroleum product prices of any major industrialized country. For example, at the end of September, 1979, the average price of gasoline sold in Canada was approximately $1.05 per gallon, significantly below the $1.37 which the average U.S. consumer paid for a comparable gallon of gasoline. Compared to other European countries, the low comparative price Canadians pay for gasoline is even more evident. For example, in the United Kingdom the average price of gasoline at the end of September of this year was $2.59 per gallon, in West Germany $3.17 per gallon, in France $3.62 per gallon, and in Italy $3.75 per gallon. Canadian prices do not compare with prices in other countries and, in fact, are much lower. Canadians now pay less for gasoline in real terms that they did in the 1950s.

Canadians intuitively realize the bargain that oil products are in this country and, as a result, have not reduced their demand because there has been no incentive to do so. The signals that the marketplace and the former government were providing to the Canadian consumer, were the wrong signals. Instead of saying, "Slow down, it is expensive and needs to be saved", the past government's policy implicitly said, "Go ahead, use more, it is really a bargain."

The pricing policy of the previous government was a $1 per barrel increase every six months in the wellhead price of crude. A continuation of this policy would see Canadian prices continue to fall further behind international levels. While it is difficult to forecast international prices accurately, it is expected that the present policy would lead to a price gap between domestic and international prices of about $13.00 per barrel in 1985.

Mr. Benjamin: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would ask the hon. member to go back to Regina and ask the premier of his province what is wrong with it. He would be told very clearly what is wrong.

On imported oil, this gap would have to be covered by federal government subsidies under the oil import compensation program. On the basis of the former government's policies, by 1985 the federal government would have to pay almost $4 billion in oil import compensation because of the difference between the international and the domestic prices. The needless payment of Canadian funds of this magnitude into foreign hands is something that the Canadian government cannot condone, and the Canadian economy certainly cannot bear this burden. Canadians in this situation would, in effect, be paying $4 billion in one year for foreign oil and, most important, would be forgoing the opportunity of developing domestic resources and moving Canada towards oil self-sufficiency.

The goal of this government, as has been stated many times in the House and outside it, is to achieve energy self-sufficiency by 1990. For a country with the energy potential such as Canada has, any lesser goal would not be acceptable to the Canadian people. It is the intention of this government to get us to energy self-sufficiency and, in the course of that, to increase Canadian ownership and participation in resource development.

During the last two months I have had intensive negotiations and consultations with the provinces regarding the development of a comprehensive energy package and its crucial pricing component. There are important elements with respect to our energy package that I want to bring to the attention of the House tonight.

First, the domestic price of Canadian crude oil must increase faster than it has in the past. Second, petroleum products sold in Canada must be priced more realistically than they are today. Third, Canada's abundant supplies of natural gas must be substituted for oil as much as possible. Fourth, the petroleum industry in Canada must be encouraged to develop Canadian petroleum resources as quickly as possible. Fifth, more Canadians must be encouraged to participate in the resource development of their country. Sixth, the federal government and the provinces must actively encourage an acceleration of energy projects in Canada. Seventh, new initiatives to promote and encourage conservation by Canadians must be developed. Eighth, offset measures must be introduced to counteract as much as possible the economic effects that higher prices will cause to those least able to absorb them.

That is the basis of the energy policy that this government is bringing forward; that is the basis of the policy to which we are committed in this House.

I think it would be appropriate to review, in the context of the motion placed before us today, a statement with respect to the policies of the former government, the party moving this particular resolution. Its terms are vague and they are rather equivocal. I suggest we should examine the position of the former government with respect to energy policy and oil pricing in Canada over the years.

Last week the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) told hon. members that the current pricing agreement with Alberta was sufficient and that no new agreement was necessary. I think that was the essence of the representation he made and the position he put forward in the course of his remarks. I have already outlined some of the consequences of that policy: increased oil demand, more reliance on foreign oil, higher oil compensation payments, and no chance for oil self-sufficiency. The former government referred to this policy as "energy self-reliance". Whatever it is, it is certainly not oil self-sufficiency. Times have really changed as far as the former government is concerned.

Let us examine the Liberal record, Mr. Speaker. On December 6, 1973, in a debate in this House on petroleum policy, the then prime minister, now Leader of the Opposition, outlined his government's national oil policy objective as follows:

The object is Canadian self-sufficiency in oil and oil products before the end of this decade.

Times have really changed, Mr. Speaker, as far as the position of the Liberals is concerned. In March, 1974, the then minister of energy, mines and resources, making a statement on oil and gas policy, said:

• (2020)

The most fundamental principle which the federal government would like to advance is to sustain the capacity for continuing self-sufficiency.

We would propose that western well-head prices rise . . . to equivalent international prices now prevailing in Montreal.

And again in April, 1975, at the federal-provincial first ministers' conference, the Leader of the Opposition said:

We cannot expect those who search for oil—whether they be Canadian or other—to look for it and develop it in Canada if our prices are far below those in other countries . . . We cannot expect Alberta and Saskatchewan to go on year after year selling their oil to Canadians at a price which is far below what they could get by exporting it. So my colleagues in the government and I have come reluctantly to believe that the price of oil in Canada must go up—toward the world price.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but I have to inform him that his time has expired. He can continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by simply pointing out that in terms of Canada's energy policy we have a great potential in this country. Frankly, I take a rather different attitude from that taken by the opposition in the context of its motion. They have taken a negative, defeatist approach with respect to oil policy and have not presented any clear alternative, or any alternative at all. Instead, their attitude is one that merely criticizes situations that have not yet occurred and are not taking place at the present time.

In Canada we can achieve energy self-sufficiency. It is a possibility for us. It is not an arduous or an onerous obligation. It is a possibility that will result in a decade of progress, and a decade in which we in Canada can and should develop our energy resources. We should take advantage of this in a non-partisan way as much as possible. Members from all sides of the House should participate and give suggestions, not in a negative or in a partisan way for the purpose of political one-upmanship, but one in which we as Canadians can join in achieving together that which we wish to achieve, namely, energy self-sufficiency. This means a departure from reliance on offshore imports. I simply ask members in this House to consider the implications of a vote today which would indicate a negative attitude toward our objective of energy self-sufficiency.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

[Translation]

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that my speech will be very brief. I share the feelings just expressed by the minister, that we are here in a non-partisan way and that we have proposals to make to the government to help it improve the energy policy. I am very happy to have this opportunity to participate in the debate because it deals with a matter which is of the utmost importance to Canada.

The whole question of energy, its availability and its price all affect the life of every individual and every company in every sector of our society and economy. Therefore, the importance of this debate cannot be overestimated.

The other aspect of this debate that strikes me tonight is the profound difference that lies between my party, the Liberal party, and the Conservative government on the issue of energy as well as on other subjects. Mr. Speaker, how often have we heard remarks and comments by our friends on my left, on the far left, to the effect that both the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal party carry the same message. They like to say we are one and the same. But I reject this and indeed the difference between our two parties appears clearly in this debate tonight. It appears in the approach we have towards society, toward responsibility of the government.

As I said, the difference between our two parties is obvious and so is the concept we have of society and of our role. At the same time, one must admit that to a certain extent we do share the same philosophy. I can give you an example. The Progressive Conservative Party merely carries on with the economic policy without presenting a new budget, it is quite satisfied with ours.

Besides, just like the Progessive Conservatives we believe that the private sector is the main driving force within our society. We must give impetus to the economy of our private sector and stimulate the open market, but we are not so radical about it as some of our hon. friends opposite. And when we see that some people are unfairly treated, that there are no equal opportunities for everyone across the country, that some people cannot defend themselves, then we do not hesitate to intervene to protect them and ensure the safety of each and every Canadian. That is the fundamental difference between the two parties. And I hope our hon. friends to our left will realize this difference because, as I said earlier in my remarks, it is quite evident in the case of the energy crisis in Canada.

The Progressive Conservative Party has always been the party which fought to defend special interests in Canada, having neither the capability nor perhaps the will to offer us—and when I say us, I mean the Canadian people—programs likely to benefit all Canadians. As an example of this, Mr. Speaker, I shall mention the nearly complete absence of a social program on the platform of the Progressive Conservative Party when it held power before and even after the war, as well as when it was in the opposition. I cannot say the same thing about our hon. friends to our left, but from the Progressive Conservative Party, nothing.

Now, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) would like to create the impression that his party has abandoned its traditional position in order to move more to the centre, but during this debate on energy tonight in the House. Mr. Speaker, we have come to realize that nothing has changed and that his party still represents special interests just as before.

[English]

What are these special interests that this government represents in this debate? Of course three immediately come to mind. First, obviously, are those who are interested in an accelerated rise to world prices, as opposed to the Liberal policy of organized slow rise toward prices on the international level. Obviously the oil companies are interested in that, the companies and persons associated with oil companies. Who can blame them?

• (2030)

Second, there is of course a certain provincial government that is particularly interested in a rapid increase in oil prices to world levels. Then there is the federal government itself. They are interested in finding ways to finance, for example, the mortgage tax credit scheme to which my friend from Winnipeg made reference earlier in his remarks.

Beyond that, what about Canadians at large? What about the small businessman? What about individuals? What about the poor? Those in the poor areas of my riding are concerned—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Johnston: He laughs because he knows nothing about my riding, Saint-Henri-Westmount, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we have much poverty in some areas.

[English]

What of those people? Is this policy of a rapid rise to world levels really in their interest? Is it really in the interest of all Canadians, or is it a classic Tory position of being interested in special interest groups? In this case there are the three that I cited, the companies and the governments of Canada at the provincial and federal levels.

What of other Canadians? Do they not have reason to be outraged at the fact that here is a Canadian natural resource they can buy as easily from an international cartel as they can at the same price from their own country? Are they not going to question the advantages of being Canadian? What are these resources for that we have in Canada, if they are not to stimulate and provide some kind of competitive advantage for Canadians?

What do they tell us? They say, "It is good for you," that it is "a long-term remedy," that "you may freeze, you may go bankrupt and you may not be able to travel, but the optimistic side is that in the long term it is good for you." I suppose this is not unlike the message that was delivered to the Christian heretics as they stood at the stake, the optimistic message was that in the long term it was good for them. That is the kind of situation we are facing in this energy issue.

Let me carry this one step further. Referring back to the comments of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) this afternoon, he made reference to the cartel, and a cartel it is, the OPEC cartel. I am not criticizing the legality of that cartel. Under our Combines Investigation Act, as I recall it, we do accept a cartel at the international level for our exports. However, domestically our law dealing with cartels, or what is known as price fixing, is perhaps the most serious crime in the Combines Investigation Act.

This government is telling us that we are to follow this cartel which would be illegal under our domestic law. If any companies in Canada engaged in such an outrageous cartel, the officers responsible would be put in jail. However, we are told that we are to follow the artificial prices set by this cartel.

Frankly, I find this shocking, even coming from a Conservative government. If we go back to the nineteenth century, to the unfettered free enterprise system, monopolies and cartels were the order of the day. It may be that our Conservative friends are seeking their historical roots.

We are dealing with a cartel. As far as I am concerned, we have no business tying Canadian domestic prices to cartel prices in any way, shape or form.

We heard about conservation from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn). He said the Liberal government had encouraged Canadians to "go ahead," and I wrote down the words, "and use more, it's really a bargain." Those are the words he used. That is not my impression of what the Liberal government was telling the people of Canada. In fact conservation measures had been foremost in the minds of the Liberal government and in the message they conveyed to the Canadian people.

I suggest there is no evidence, but perhaps the government has some to offer, that increased prices will create conservation. When I was a student in France in the late fifties, gas cost $1 a gallon. I do not know how many here have driven around Place de la Concorde or anywhere else in Paris or Europe. There is no evidence that people have conserved. There is evidence that they have sorted out their priorities and they probably compromise in some other area of their lives rather than sacrifice their automobiles which, of course, are fundamental to the infrastructure of society in this country. Therefore, to talk conservation in these terms is absolute rubbish.

We are told that the rising price of oil will make us look for more resources. We are told that if we follow the shock treatment and increase prices, people will be conscious of the fact we have to find other sources of energy, that that is the message we have to get across.

[Translation]

Let us be serious, Mr. Speaker. I am convinced that Canadians today are well aware of the fact that there is an energy crisis. They do not need an electric stimulus like mice to react. I find that it is an entirely stupid argument. The Canadian people are very aware of their own priorities and the national priorities. I would like, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government also to be aware of them.

[English]

What about exploration, new frontier exploration in particular? That is something I have not heard discussed in this debate. Of course I was absent from the House for part of the day. What are we doing about new frontier exploration? Rising prices are supposed to stimulate that. We have some very major fiscal policies in place to stimulate development in the new frontier. Canadian development expenses can be written off at 30 per cent on the declining balance. Canadian exploration expenses are deductible at 100 per cent.

We have in addition to that, depletion. We have depletion of $1 for every $3 earned, which is the normal depreciation. Beyond that we have super depletion which gives the additional $2. In fact there are circumstances where there is no money at risk in drilling for oil on the new frontier at the present time under our fiscal system. Now we are being asked to compound that by bringing the price to world levels. Surely there has to be a trade-off here somewhere. Canadian taxpayers are already paying an exceedingly heavy price for oil development in the new frontier. That seems to have been forgotten by those in the benches across the aisle. Perhaps it is the right program. Perhaps those fiscal programs have stimulated an enormous amount of drilling in those areas where obviously the risk is high.

However, there has to be a rationalization. If these gentlemen are prepared to let Canadian oil prices domestically rise to world prices, surely we have to reassess the fiscal implications of that on the other side of the balance sheet. To my knowledge that has not been done.

What bothers me about this whole debate is that I really did not hear gentlemen on the other side speaking for Canadians. Our leader has often said they do not believe someone should speak for Canadians, but surely in this House we have a responsibility to speak for Canadians.

● (2040)

Canadians do not understand why they should have to pay world prices for resources which are theirs, resources which companies are permitted to extract with enormous tax benefits. I do not regard it as any kind of rip-off to permit Canadians to have some kind of competitive advantages. They have enough disadvantages. They have distance. They have climate. They are caught up with all the other problems of this country, and here we have one advantage we can confer on them as we have done in certain cases with respect to hydro electricity. But no, we have to go to world prices in the name of conservation, in the name of looking for alternative sources of energy, all of which I agree with, particularly looking for alternate sources of energy, because, as we know, conservation is a short-term proposition at best. We have to find other sources of energy, and the situation I drew to your attention earlier, Mr. Speaker, means Canadians are conscious of that; they are prepared to make that investment, they know that problem, and they are going to move in that direction.

[Mr. Johnston.]

Let us for once, in this debate, talk about people. Speakers from this side of the House have, and I carry that over to my friends in the New Democratic Party. I do not think I am essentially considered a left-wing sympathizer, but I am realistic about what the opportunities are in this country and I think I am realistic about what we should be doing in terms of protecting Canadians against the disastrous effect of inflation in terms of our competitiveness, in terms of putting upward pressure on rate settlements and so on, if we follow the policy which this government is apparently following, namely, to force oil prices up to world levels as quickly as possible.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today a motion standing in the name of the Liberal party which says that this House has no confidence in the government because of their bungling of various aspects of the national energy policy, namely, the possibility of a home heating oil shortage this winter, a high energy price policy, and a high interest rate policy.

I should like to ask members of the Liberal party, who was in power for the last 11 years while this situation with regard to energy and high interest rate policy was allowed to deteriorate? It did not happen over night and these problems did not just begin with the Conservative government. They only continued with the Conservative party once it obtained office. Who was it who allowed the multinational oil companies over the past decade to control 90 per cent of the oil industry in this country, hence preventing the present government from getting a handle on national energy policy and the direction we should be taking in the development of our oil industry and prices fixed for its products?

Indeed, even with the establishment of Petro-Canada, 80 per cent of the oil industry still remains in foreign hands. That is an indictment of the energy policy or so-called energy policy of the Liberal party while it was in power. Indeed, it was that party in the late sixties which allowed these same oil companies to export half our total production of oil to the United States, thus contributing to the very shortages we are facing today. It is also the Liberal government, as stated in its energy policy in 1976, which said their policy was to move toward world prices. So the only difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives is that the Conservatives are going to do it in one big jump while the Liberals were going to do it gradually. So it is very hypocritical of them to argue, now they are in opposition, that we should not move toward the world price demanded by the OPEC cartel. That is the very policy the Liberal minister of energy was defending while his party was in power.

If we turn to the other aspect of the motion before us tonight, criticizing the government for its failure to deal with the potential shortage of home heating oil, who was it who allowed the National Energy Board last year to increase exports of oil products to the United States thereby contributing to shortages we may face this winter in home heating oil? It was the Liberal government.

If we think back to interest rate policy, it was the Liberal government which began the increases in interest rates seven times in 1979 before the last May election, and the Conservatives are only continuing the interest rate policy begun by the Liberals. Yet here in this motion we find the Liberal opposition criticizing the Conservative government for following the same policy. I can only conclude that the motion we have before us is a desperate act by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) in an attempt to give the impression somehow that this defeated party is the real opposition in the House. I believe the people of Canada in the past month have seen through that kind of hypocrisy and that kind of duplicity.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

An hon. Member: Why do you vote for it, then?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order. I am sure it would be more pleasant for the House if they could hear the remarks of the hon. member for Sault St. Marie.

Mr. Symes: I know the truth hurts sometimes. You can tell by the squeals to my right. We have the spectacle of the Leader of the Opposition, this Ozymandias of the Liberal party, a party now discovering that his feet are of clay, desperately trying to rally his troops behind him to think that he is the real opposition though we know that he is leading a party that is disillusioned, bankrupt of any principle, and bankrupt of any policy for this country. This was evident in the last general election.

If the Leader of the Opposition has discovered he has feet of clay I think it has become evident that the people of Canada have discovered that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has a head of clay when it comes to national energy policy.

I am reminded of the story of the three party leaders flying over one of those unstable South American countries. The plane crashed, but fortunately all three survived. In their attempt to escape from the jungle they were captured by a group of revolutionaries who saw them as interlopers and wanted to put them to death before a firing squad. Well, they took them out one at a time, and the first was the leader of the NDP. They lined him up against the wall and just as they were about to give the order to the firing squad to shoot, the NDP leader came up with an idea for a plan to escape and shouted "Earthquake! Earthquake!" The firing squad dropped their rifles and scattered for cover and the leader was able to escape.

Meanwhile, Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Clark were watching through the prison windows and decided they had better try something, too, because, of course, they were next before the firing squad. The Leader of the Opposition was taken out and he quickly decided he must think of a plan of escape and, just as they were about to fire, he shouted "Volcano! Volcano!". Again the firing squad dropped their rifles and ran, and he was able to escape.

Meanwhile, the Prime Minister was sweating behind the bars because he knew he was next. He was called out, the firing squad was lined up ready to shoot, and he came up with a brilliant plan of escape. He shouted "Fire! fire!".

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I wish we could light a fire beneath this government in terms of an energy policy. We were promised last August that a national energy policy would be coming forward. We have not seen it to date. Instead, we have seen drift and incompetence, and indeed a kind of pricing policy which, I predict, will become public on Monday when the first ministers' conference is drawn and we as Canadians, as I said in the House the other day, will get a horrendous Christmas present from the Prime Minister in terms of energy pricing.

● (2050)

This government is determined to move to world prices as soon as possible, and in reports that I have received, I find their plans are to move to the world price, or close to it, by 1983. The price facing Canadians in that year will be $29.75 a barrel for oil, an increase of some 120 per cent over the current price of $13.75 a barrel. That kind of dramatic escalation in oil prices in Canada will not achieve the goal that this government has argued it will, namely, self-sufficiency, but instead will cause the most severe recession and economic dislocation that this country has seen in modern times. That is why we argue that it is folly to pay a price escalation on an artificial cartel price, namely, OPEC's. Instead, we will argue, and have been arguing, that we should base it on the real cost of bringing on new supplies in Canada, and phase in a price increase in a way that the economy and the consumer can absorb it.

If we proceed with this government's plan to escalate to the world price, or to 90 per cent of it as soon as possible, that means that by 1983 Canadian consumers will be paying an extra $700 a year just to heat their homes and drive their cars. I think that this is a burden for people faced with already high inflation; it is unjustifiable, illogical, and should not be proceeded with by this government.

We also know that this government is bent on destroying one of the most successful options we have in the oil industry, namely, Petro-Canada. The government wants to dismantle it, to privatize it, to let go an effective tool that the federal government has in national energy planning and development. The government is arguing that the private sector can do it better than a Crown corporation, and the private sector, and others have argued as well as I have, for reasons to keep Petro-Canada.

Let me quote a good summary of why we should keep Petro-Canada. It reads:

> Petro-Canada supplements the job being done by the private sector and takes appropriate risks where the private sector is reluctant. Petro-Canada provides Canadians with a better insight into the complexity of finding and developing new oil and gas reserves.
>
> Petro-Canada can and should, along with the private petroleum industry, play a leadership role in achieving crude oil self-sufficiency for Canada by 1995.
>
> . . . urges the federal government not to "reprivatize" Petro-Canada but to retain essential functions within a national petroleum company.

Mr. Woolliams: Who wrote that?

Mr. Symes: The hon. member opposite asks me who wrote that. The author is none other than the deputy premier of Ontario, and minister of energy, the honourable Robert Welch. The Conservative government of Ontario presented this to its federal Conservative counterpart here in Ottawa.

The Conservatives are all over the place on the issue of Petro-Canada, and I wonder how the Ontario members of Parliament in this House are going to vote on that issue, and indeed on the pricing issue, when obviously their own colleagues in Queen's Park object strongly to the course of action that they are taking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: This reliance on the private sector which I have described really means reliance on the multinational oil companies which have a stranglehold on the oil industry in Canada. Both the Liberals and the Conservatives accept the kind of tax policies that have been put in place over the past decade, tax policies which benefit these companies, and both have accepted the high profits over the years that these companies have been making at the expense of Canadian consumers. Only recently, in the past few days, do I get some inkling from the Liberal party that there may be something wrong with these extraordinarily high profits. I wish I had heard that a couple of years ago when the profits were increasing at almost the same rate.

Indeed, it was the Liberal government that implemented a tax regime that is still being followed by the present Conservative government, which means that for every $1 the oil companies spend on exploration in Canada, we, the taxpayers, put up 65 cents in terms of tax concessions given to these multinational oil companies operating in Canada. What do we get in return? We certainly do not get any kind of ownership or control in the way they exploit this resource which belongs to the people of Canada. Contrast that with the role of Petro-Canada which we, as Canadians, own, and the ability we have, through Petro-Canada, to take some real action in the interests of Canadians without the kind of blackmail tactics which the multinationals have adopted in the past.

Indeed, we have seen the Liberal government, again supported by the Conservatives when they were in opposition, allowing these oil companies to accumulate up to the end of 1978 a total of $1.5 billion in deferred taxes, taxes which have not been paid to the federal treasury. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) wants to look for a source of funds to reduce the deficit, I will tell him it is right there before his very eyes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: It is the former Liberal government which allowed—a policy continued by the present Conservative government—the effective tax rate of the multinational companies, with their record profits, to decline from 35 per cent in 1974 to 21 per cent in 1978. Indeed, Shell Canada, which in 1978 made a profit of $151 million, paid not one cent of federal income tax. That was the kind of tax policies that these two old line parties adopted in the past, and I find it utterly hypocritical for the Liberal party in its motion today to criticize the Conservatives for doing the very same thing they did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: Indeed we have in the private sector, which this Prime Minister wants to develop, Imperial, Shell, Texaco and Gulf which were allowed to increase their profits by $880 million, an increase of 55 per cent. We will get only more of the same from the two old line parties in terms of their attitude toward the private sector.

The motion before us criticizes the government on the issue of home heating supplies for the winter. On October 15 I raised this very issue with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and I pointed out to him that in my province of Ontario home heating oil reserves are down 20 per cent over the same period last year, and we have, in the most recent report from the National Energy Board, a situation where all oil products have declined some 8.3 per cent as of October 1. What are the reasons for this decline?

We hear of refinery breakdowns, we hear that the pipelines are at maximum capacity, and that there is a scarcity of foreign supply at short notice. We do not hear very much about an investigation that has been taking place for the past six years, carried out by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, of collusion and price fixing in the oil industry in Canada. I should like to see that study come to light so that we may judge for ourselves whether or not there is, by way of collusion, a manipulation of supply that is contributing to a potential shortage over the winter, and yet we have no report forthcoming from this government.

We also find that the reason to which I alluded earlier for this potential shortage is that the National Energy Board has allowed exports of oil products to increase some 21 per cent between January and mid-summer of this year, and again that kind of increase took place under the regime of the former Liberal government which is now criticizing the new government for failing to have enough oil on hand.

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says the situation is fragile, it is an indication that he has no contingency plans in place, or at least has not made them public to the House and the people of Canada. We can only conclude that he is giving us a bland assurance, rather than some concrete evidence that the mechanisms are now in place to move fuel oil quickly from one region of the country to another in order to face eventual shortages.

I fear for the consumers of eastern Canada, especially those in Quebec and the maritimes, this winter in the event of a possible disruption of supply. I learned tonight that the Iranian government has stopped loading American tankers with oil. I hope we do not face another Exxon situation, as we did last spring when the multinational oil companies began to reduce Canadian allotments from their supply pools in order to meet shortages in other markets.

The government must implement a policy which makes some sense. We agree with the motion, that the government has not met the criteria which we advocated in terms of what an energy policy should be. In light of the state of the economy, there should be a current freeze on energy prices. When we move the price up, any increase beyond the present price should go into a national energy development fund so that we will be assured these moneys will be spent on energy development in Canada to meet Canadian interests.

We would have a commission to investigate oil company prices and profits to ensure that consumers were not ripped off.

We would preserve Petro-Canada, promote alternative energy, and a massive conservation program. We have not seen this forthcoming from the government, and for these reasons we will vote against it tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, for a moment or two I should like to reminisce a little bit about the history around here. I recall December, 1973, when the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) told us and Canadians about the importance he attached to constitutional reform. He said that it was much more important than doing anything about Alberta. He said, "Don't worry about Alberta oil in Quebec and Atlantic Canada; we have more important things to do".

The energy spokesman of the New Democratic Party should be reminded that it was his party which kept the present opposition members in government in 1972, 1973 and 1974. During that period all of the oil drilling rigs in this country left and went south, because the then government drove them out of the country by its policies and attitude. They were not seized then and they are not seized today of the urgency of the oil situation in the country. I remind hon. members of that. There were many more important matters in this country than getting oil to Quebec and eastern Canada, according to the leader of the then government. Certainly the urgency of the oil situation was not among the reasons cited by the then government.

Of course it is not clear what the direct impact or effect of increased prices will be on demand. We know from world experience and limited Canadian experience that in fact for every 10 per cent increase in the price of oil, demand will be constrained by some 3 per cent to 4 per cent over a period of three years to six years. Those who have followed our problems will recognize the shallowness and superficiality of that as an argument with respect to the need on the part of this country to move toward world prices.

We do not need the damnable nonsense about rapid and swift increases in world prices. The economy could not stand it. They know it and we know it. There is some responsibility on this side of the chamber for the first time in 16 years. Canadians should thank God that we are responsible.

An hon. Member: Show it.

Mr. Forrestall: It is interesting to note that we saw no frontbenchers up speaking. I saw some pretenders to the throne of the opposition. As a matter of fact my 3½ year old son, Mike, wondered at suppertime what the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was talking about. He said, "Dad, I thought it was an energy debate. What was he doing; going after another job?"

In a post-embargo and a post-Iranian world, which is what we are in and have been since 1973—

An hon. Member: It is a post-Tory world.

Mr. Forrestall: I did not see the frontbenchers, the leftovers, or the remnants of the former government up on their feet contributing to this question. Where were they? They went to the second and third rows, some pretenders to the throne. It is too bad they did not talk about oil. Perhaps it was because they did not know anything about it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: If hon. members opposite wonder why we must move toward world energy prices, they should remember that we can no longer live in the artificial world created by the Liberal government over the last 16 years. In the 18 months prior to the election, when the whole country hiccupped at the will of the former prime minister, because the election was on one day and off the next, not once did we see them confront a serious problem in the country. What did they do? They hid, they ran away, they avoided. They avoided coming to conclusions and making decisions respecting important matters such as the security of energy supply in this country.

They should go to Europe and talk to any trader. We are a trading nation. They should ask any trader what feedback he is getting from his colleagues in Europe and talk to any trader. We are a trading nation. They should ask any trader what feedback he is getting from his colleagues in Europe and from other trading nations or trading partners. They are saying to Canadian traders that if they do not move, they will stop buying from them because they are practising unfair competition in the marketplace.

As recently as two weeks ago, 15 member countries of NATO approved a motion here in Ottawa which directed Canada to get out from under the artificiality of the world in which we are living and to move toward world prices. They indicated that we would feel the consequences in our international trade if we did not. We cannot live in an artificial world any longer. I am saying nothing more than the Liberal government were seized of five years or six years ago. We are in the post-Iranian crisis. The price of oil in the world today is not a political price, it is a market one. The former government knew it and chose to do nothing about it. What will we do about it? For the first time a government on this side of the chamber has moved; the Prime Minister has moved—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Were hon. members opposite present to listen to their leader when he was over here and not moving? If they had listened, they would appreciate what I am saying tonight. Thank God Canada has a Prime Minister and a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who are living up to the obligations of running this country in the way it should be run.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: The manner in which the Liberal party sees the intelligence of the people of this country is something to behold. Not one member opposite gives anyone in the country the benefit of having a bit of brains or intelligence. They do not have the time of day to consider the impact of not moving seriously.

Oil is a finite product. We may be the most fortunate of all western nations. We may have enough energy in the form of oil, coal, gas, hydro, solar power, and bio-mass energy to last us well into the next century, and probably well beyond that, but oil is finite. The former minister of energy, mines and resources, Mr. Gillespie, failed to recognize that in each of his major pronouncements with regard to oil supplies in this country. He failed to recognize that throughout the years that he served in that portfolio, and the consequence of that failure is that this country will face oil shortages in the 1980s. There is no question about that. Whose fault is that? Who has to take the ultimate blame and responsibility? I suggest there is no question but that it is the responsibility of that minister and his government.

What they failed to do in six years we cannot do in five months, but we will do it in eight or ten months. We will turn around the thinking in this country. We will turn it around so as to encourage true conservation through the substitution of other energy forms for oil, through effective home insulation programs and all of the other things that tend to provide protection and balance. We will turn this around so that this country, not by the turn of the century as the Leader of the Opposition and the former minister of energy, mines and resources would have it, is self-sufficient some time after the turn of the century—we will have self-sufficiency in this country by 1990 and we will accomplish that through conservation of our oil, through the development of additional conventional oil, through tertiary improvement and recovery of those oil resources, through the development of frontier oil both in the north and off the coast of eastern Canada, and we will do that by whatever means are necessary. We will not do it on the backs of those people who cannot afford it, as some hon. members over there would have us believe.

The Prime Minister of this country has said on a hundred occasions that he is aware of the situation and that his government intends to move to protect those people who would be most directly affected by increases in the direction of world oil prices. No one in this chamber knows the situation better than I, and I am glad to note in the gallery the presence of the minister of finance and the minister of development for the province of Nova Scotia. They will tell you, if you want to ask them, that maritimers are already paying twice the national average for domestic electricity. The Prime Minister of this country has said this is not acceptable, that it should be lower. He has indicated that the minimum that is acceptable to this government is domestic electricity rates for the maritimes that do not increase any more than the national average.

Where is the great impact? The cost will not increase. Where was the minister when he was needed? Where was the former minister of regional economic expansion when we needed money for coal? Where were you when Devco wanted resources? Where were you, and what were you doing? What was your leader doing?

What happened in respect of Donkin, Lingan and Devco? What did the former government do about the use of coal to back out oil? Where were you at that time, and what did you do? Where are the new coal mines? Are they in place? Where are the additional plants for the generation of electricity, using coal? You did not do anything about these things because you did not care; you didn't give a damn. Our minister of energy cares and our Prime Minister cares.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: It has been said, and it is true, that there is no energy crisis in Canada today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: What there is in Canada today is a potential shortage of oil and a potential major crisis at any moment. We noted today that Iran has stopped loading oil, some of which presumably is destined for eastern Canada.

Let me talk for a minute or two about the critical situation that faces eastern Canada. For six or seven years, since 1973, the former government ignored the situation. That government was seized of the absolute knowledge that it must store strategic oil five years ago, in 1974. What did that government do? Where is the development at Port Hawkesbury? Where is the development of the mines at Belle Isle, Newfoundland? Where is the storage in Atlantic Canada as a result of pre-planning? It takes three to four years to put in place good, positive, strategic storage capacity. That government knew in 1974 and 1975 that this had to be done. That government had the opportunity to piggyback on U.S. strategic reserve planning, but that government procrastinated.

Who is suffering today? Where is the potential for suffering and for harm? I suggest it is in Atlantic Canada. It exists in the eastern part of the former minister's own province. What good are all his words this afternoon when there is no oil to put in storage in those parts of Atlantic Canada that require storage this fall before freeze-up, in order to have supplies throughout the winter? What happens if the oil is not in place? Whose fault will that be? I suggest it will be the former government's fault because they did not move with storage. They did not move in respect of strategic storage.

Mr. Gillespie, the former minister of energy, told me in response to a question back at the time of the Iranian crisis; "Don't worry about it, son; we will look after it." He did not do much of a job. That minister and his government did not do much of a job. That is all I have to say. They did not put much storage in place. They did not move in respect of coal liquefaction. They did not move with regard to fluidized beds. They did not move with regard to Fundy tidal power. They did not move in respect of a demonstration project on the Annapolis River.

For years there has been $9.5 million in banks in Nova Scotia for the purpose of getting into low head electrical generation. Did that government use the money for that purpose? Where is that money now? It is sitting in the Bank of Nova Scotia in Nova Scotia, instead of being out invested in the production of electricity. Where do we get our electricity? We get it from oil powered generating plants. Where do we get that oil? Every drop of it comes from offshore.

For the first time in ten years there is a government in this country which is concerned about the situation and in fact is doing something about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: We are the slaves of expensive oil supplies, Mr. Speaker, as a direct result of inaction, indifference, irresponsibility, and downright and damnable immorality in respect of—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Hon. members opposite did not do anything when they were warned. They did not co-operate with the United States when they had the opportunity. They did nothing about opening new coal seams in Cape Breton. They did nothing about Prince Edward Island. They piddled and puddled around with the Maritime Energy Corporation to the point where it is almost impossible to resolve that situation. That former government did nothing about the power grid, and it set up Petro-Canada because it was forced to by those colleagues now to their left. It was seven years of panic, seven years of concern for anything except the security of oil supply in this country. The former administration did nothing to encourage offshore development or development in the north, and PetroCan did less. The Canadian Commercial Corporation was more effective in securing state to state contracts.

● (2120)

I would remind hon. members opposite that the International Energy Agreement to which Canada was a signatory comes into effect when there is a 7 per cent reduction, and this includes every member country. To Canada 7 per cent west of the Ottawa valley means absolutely nothing. Seven per cent of our supply represents 25 per cent of our imports most of which supplies Quebec and Atlantic Canada. I wonder if the Liberals knew about that.

What did the former government do about asking the OECD, the other signatories to the IEA, to open up negotiations and make a special case for Atlantic Canada because it has to rely, as do Japan and the European countries, on imported oil? Why did the former administration not go to this group and say that 7 per cent results in 25 per cent of supply to five of our provinces? If there is a serious shortage and the IEA is brought into force, we will have a reduction of 25 per cent in our oil supply in Atlantic Canada. That will be the responsibility of the Leader of the Opposition, and he will have to carry it on his head. His failure to act, coupled with his stand-pat, do-nothing attitude and the less than useful help of his socialist friends to the left, who as well have done nothing, contributed nothing to the well-being of Canada. His government had no intention of doing so. That party will follow to its grave the old principle of "look after the middle and the devil take the regions. The regions can look after themselves as long as we keep the centre strong, and to hell with Atlantic Canada, to hell with the north, to hell with Quebeckers." That is their economic policy.

Mr. Lessard: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this motion deals with both energy supplies and interest rates. I think that my colleagues who have spoken have dealt most effectively with the Conservative efforts to raise our energy prices in Canada rapidly to world levels, something that will be most harmful to Canadian consumers and Canadian businesses. In fact the hon. member who just spoke forgot to point out that Premier Davis of Ontario has also spoken most effectively against the ideas put forward by the government in this debate. If the government wants to get advice from someone of its own party, I suggest that it stop listening to Premier Lougheed and start listening to Premier Davis.

This evening I want to speak particularly about interest rates, because they are not, in fact, something that is remote from the daily lives of Canadians. Interest rates are costs, and costs are a part of prices. They affect everything done by Canadians and their families. The present record level of interest rates, which is supported by Conservative policy, cuts back the ability of Canadians to buy goods and services of all kinds—cars, homes, food and clothing, everything people need. These high interest rates cut back the ability of factories and businesses generally to expand, to create more production and jobs. These high interest rates limit the ability of business, especially small business, simply to operate at basic non-inflationary levels. Therefore these high interest rates mean losses of production and jobs now and over the coming winter months.

The Conservative government has been saying that these high interest rates are needed to fight inflation, but they in themselves drive up costs and add to inflation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) said when he was still leader of the opposition only last March 2, "record high interest rates virtually guarantee more inflation by bidding up the price of money itself". How soon they forget! All this has been demonstrated by the jump in the cost of living last month of one full point, obviously incorporating increases in costs due to increases in interest rates. The government has allowed these increases to go into effect in the period since it has been in office.

However, even if high interest rates do fight inflation, why should we have the same interest rates which the Americans say are required to fight inflation in their country? Our inflation is some five points lower than inflation in the United States. The government also says that high interest rates are needed to finance the deficit in the balance of payments and to maintain the exchange value of our dollar and that, therefore, we must keep in step with the United States. This deficit is there mainly because we have been sending out more interest and principal to repay previous borrowings for this purpose. It is a never ending treadmill, and the Conservatives want to keep us on it forever.

The deficit is also there because of the high level of foreign control of our economy, which means that we are sending out tremendous amounts of interest, dividends, management fees and the like, to foreign parent companies.

A week or so ago the Americans said they had made a mistake in applying their monetary policy. They thought that their money supply had grown by $3 billion and that therefore they had to raise their interest rates again. Then they found that their money supply had not gone up by $3 billion and that they did not need to raise their interest rates. Surely this American error helps to show the folly of the government continuing to raise our interest rates almost in lock-step with the United States. Upon learning of this error, Henry Reuss, the respected chairman of the banking committee of the U.S. House of Representatives, said that "it was a monumental goof and a monetary Three Mile Island". Surely we cannot let the Conservative government create an economic Three Mile Island for Canadians and their families this winter.

This government should be tackling the basic structural problems of our economy through an industrial strategy to make it more productive and efficient, including dealing with problems within it like the high level of foreign control. These structural problems should not simply be masked with high interest rates. The Conservatives should not be making it harder for Canadian business and agriculture not only to expand, but simply to operate, because of these high interest rates. The government's high interest rate policy is having an adverse effect on the entire economy.

This impact is especially severe for small businesses which are primarily Canadian-controlled and which rely mainly on borrowing from banks to operate. The Globe and Mail reported on October 15 that "more bankruptcies will be the end result of the Bank of Canada's recent epidemic interest rate increases". It quoted Paul Jerabec, vice-president of Dunwoody & Company, who said, "All sizes of business will be susceptible—small, medium and large".

Last December 13, 1978, the current President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), while speaking on behalf of the Conservative party, said "that for every one half point interest rates go up, it costs business $375 million". This means that the Conservative high interest rate policy has already cost Canadians over $2 billion. John Bullock, the President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, a leading spokesman for small business, has expressed fear that a downturn of consumer spending because of this high rate policy will leave small retailers with larger inventories of unsold goods, thereby increasing the number of business bankruptcies. Nothing has been done by this government about the hardships that will be created by these policies for Canadian small businesses and their employees.

• (2130)

The effects of the Conservatives' high interest rate policy are also damaging to farmers, especially beef producers. They also rely on bank financing in order to operate. High interest costs for them mean higher food costs. Peter Hannam, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, is reported in an article which appeared in the Toronto Star on October 10 as saying that the mood of Ontario farmers "is turning to near outrage" at the high interest rates they must pay on loans for land, buildings and machinery. He is also reported as saying that the decision to fight inflation by raising interest rates "is ironic because in the food industry it is just feeding inflation."

These high interest rates are also bringing the housing and construction industry to a halt, with a potential loss of thousands of jobs in that sector alone.

I have in my hand the latest issue of Focus, the publication of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada. It quotes its president, Keith Paddick, as saying in a telegram to the Prime Minister:

> —we must also express our concern with the increases in prime lending rates and their effect on the residential construction industry and on the cost of doing business in general.

That publication goes on to state that he pointed out that "the high interest rates were discouraging initiation of new construction programs with the resultant loss of employment." Because of these high interest rates, Mr. Speaker, many people will not be able to afford new housing or to refinance existing housing. Any benefit that people might have expected from the new Conservative mortgage interest and property tax credit plan will be cancelled by this Conservative high interest rate policy.

The Conservatives did not promote the first version of this plan as a way of helping people to bear some of the burden of future high interest rates; instead, they said that people would be better off than they were before the plan and before the election—that they would spend less money than they had been spending on mortgage interest and property tax payments. This will not be the case now. Instead, people will be back where they were before the Conservatives began raising interest rates. Many will obviously be worse off. It will cost many Canadians more for mortgages, even after the tax credit plan is in effect.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservatives' high interest rate policy has already adversely affected the economy. These effects will be even more clear as we move into the winter months. This is confirmed by the economic analysis done by the Department of Finance. I persuaded—perhaps forced—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) to table this document before the finance committee when he appeared there a few days ago. In the document, the effects of this Conservative policy are laid out clearly for all to see. It was prepared by the minister's own advisers within the Department of Finance.

The Conservatives now say that they cannot keep their economic promises and that they cannot do anything because the economy is in such bad shape. I say this is not accurate, or at least it was not accurate when they took office five months ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Not only was the economy in better shape then, than it had been for a long time previously—of course there was still room for improvement—but both the cost of living was lower and the rate of unemployment was lower than they had been for some time. If the Conservatives thought the economy was in such bad shape, they certainly have not proven it by their actions since becoming the government. They have allowed the economic policies of the previous Liberal government to continue almost unchanged in the almost half a year since they took office. What an endorsement that is! What a contradiction of their election arguments and their present claims about what Liberal policies have done to the economy!

They could have called Parliament sooner and had a budget four months ago, but instead, all we have seen is the support and encouragement by the Conservatives of a policy of moving interest rates in Canada to record levels—above 14 per cent. Before the election the Conservatives pledged that if they formed the government they would bring interest rates down.

The New Democratic Party has been showing a great deal of worry about the Liberal party's position on interest rates. Perhaps it is because when the Liberals are, in fact, liberal in policy orientation and action, the NDP is condemned to remain forever what they are now—the party of the radical nowhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: The public can see through the sanctimonious pose and the self-righteousness of the NDP, and realize they have no valid claim to any special concern for the problems of average Canadians and their families. These are the concerns of the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, and this is demonstrated by the position taken in this motion of non-confidence.

For some members on this side, Mr. Speaker, there may well have been an argument for allowing interest rates to rise a year ago when it still meant they were only one or two points above the level of inflation, but when the Conservatives allowed our interest rates to go above 14 per cent, five points higher than the rate of inflation, then I think it is a different matter. It means a frontier has been crossed into dangerous, uncharted territory for the Canadian economy. As a result, I believe it is right and necessary for Liberals to take a new approach and a new look at interest rate policy.

But most important, it was the Conservatives who said, before the election, that if they formed the government they would bring interest rates down. That is what the Prime Minister said when he was leader of the opposition. The Conservatives did not say they would do this only after allowing interest rates to rise more and more until they reached record levels. They did not say they would do it only after the economy was better, so how can they say now that they cannot act because, they claim, the economy is worse than they expected?

Last July the Minister of Finance admitted that the economy was better than ever the Liberals had said it was going to be. In any event, the Conservatives have not shown that they have found any significant new information that was not available to them before the election about the state of the economy.

They promised low interest rates and a lot of other things at a time when they were saying that the economy was a lot worse than, in fact, it has turned out to be. They are the government now, they have the power to act, and they are doing nothing except allowing interest rates to rise.

When they eventually bring down a budget, if there is anything useful in it, it will likely be too late to help the economy. It takes six months for measures designed to help create jobs and increase production to work their way through the economy and have a beneficial effect.

I will continue, therefore, Mr. Speaker, to speak out, and Liberals will be speaking out and calling for policies like the implementation of an industrial strategy, a program involving co-operation between business and labour, but requiring something that we have not had up till now, and that we will not get, and that is federal government leadership to make sure that our economy is more productive and efficient. This means a policy to deal with problems like our balance of payments situation and the high level of foreign control of our economy. It means a policy which makes it possible for Canadian industry to meet more of our needs in Canada and to sell more abroad in competitive world markets. I am talking about jobs, and progress for millions of Canadians and their families, Mr. Speaker. That is something that the Conservatives and the NDP are not capable of providing.

The case for this motion when it deals with interest rates was made even before it was tabled, by leading members of the Conservatives such as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), and the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). The case was made well before the Conservatives even took office and began the series of increases in interest rates which has brought them to their present record levels.

As I have already pointed out, on March 2, when the Prime Minister was speaking as leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, he said that "high interest rates block growth and there is no proof that they stabilize the dollar." He also said that "they put in question major construction projects, by adding significantly to their capital costs and hit particularly hard at small businessmen who do not have the market power to pass along high money costs." At that time the Prime Minister also said that "interest rates must come down if we are to get the Canadian economy growing at its full potential." He promised that "it would be the policy of a Progressive Conservative government to gradually bring those interest rates down."

So, Mr. Speaker, when the Conservatives ask for alternatives to their present high interest rate policy, I want to tell them that one alternative, which has not been rebutted, would be to implement their own original policy as stated by the Prime Minister—"bring those interest rates down." The Liberals and I generally want action taken now to prevent the hardship this Conservative high interest rate policy is creating for millions of Canadians and their families.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: That is why we Liberals, speaking on behalf of Canadians generally, are urging this government to do something constructive in the interests of Canada, the Canadian people and the Canadian economy. That is why I am urging this House to vote in support of this motion of non-confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Gray: Yes.

Mr. Nowlan: My question to the hon. member who just finished speaking is this: after 16 years in government and a few months in his own office as critic, could he give this House and the Canadian people tonight one specific policy that would help lower interest rates?

An hon. Member: This is your job.

Mr. Gray: Yes, I would be delighted to do it, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my speech, we need an industrial strategy to deal with our balance of payments deficit.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. Gray: We need an abandonment of the Conservative intention to raise energy prices to record high levels—to world levels—something that will add to inflation and something that this economy cannot stand if at the same time we have Conservative high interest rates and Conservative high energy prices. It is not necessary. My hon. friend forgets that he and his colleagues campaigned around the country saying that they knew what to do, and now they are in office the hon. member gets up and asks whether we would mind telling them what to do. They do not know what to do. They have no ideas. He asks us what to do. My hon. friend has just shown the bankruptcy of his ideas. He has shown the bankruptcy of ideas of his party. No wonder we are asking for this motion to be passed. They do not deserve to govern.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Janelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle) has only one minute left.

Mr. Janelle: I suspect my former colleagues of the opposition do not even want to allow me what little time I have left. Still, I should like to say that the Liberal party has not changed much over the years. It has always dealt in scare tactics, and continues to do so. It is trying to scare people to death with regard to pan-Canadian supplies, when we know very well that the present government has promised all Canadians, and especially those of eastern Canada, that it will see to it that they have adequate supplies this winter.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt the debate and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings now before the House in accordance with section 9 of Standing Order 58. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Trudeau) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Fabien Roy, M.P.
Room 358
Centre Block
House of Commons
Parliament Buildings
Ottawa, Ontario

Dear Mr. Roy:

This is in response to your letter to me of November 5, expressing concerns about oil supply for the coming winter, particularly in the eastern part of our country.

When the government came to power, we found that the situation regarding oil supply and pricing was out of control. Necessary long-term measures to assure an adequate and secure supply of oil for Canadian consumers had not been taken. The country is now paying for the previous government's lack of foresight and as a result faces a period of probably growing import dependence. As you know, we are now working vigorously to reverse this situation and to put in place policies which will achieve national oil self-sufficiency by 1990.

The short-term situation as we found it last June was also far from satisfactory. Inventories had been seriously depleted and there was considerable uncertainty about the adequacy of gasoline supply for the summer and heating oil for the winter.

The government acted promptly to improve the situation and to secure equitable treatment for the independent sector of the business. Thus:

1. With the co-operation of the government of Alberta and its agencies, production of crude oil in western Canada has been brought to maximum levels in recent months.

2. Exports of our valuable light crude oil were reduced from 55,000 barrels a day in September to 14,000 barrels a day in October and virtually eliminated in November in order to make this oil available to Canadian refiners.

3. With the government's approval, the National Energy Board has continued to allow the exchange of western Canadian oil for additional supplies of overseas oil to eastern Canada. The Energy Board recently approved exchanges totalling some 2.5 million barrels, virtually all of which are for the account of refiners in the province of Quebec.

4. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has authorized the payment of special import compensation in the amount of $745,000 to enable a Quebec refiner to import a badly-needed cargo of crude oil despite an unexpected increase in its price.

5. On July 13 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources released a report of an inquiry into problems which distributors, particularly in Quebec had faced last winter. The recommendations of the inquiry are being vigorously pursued.

6. On August 15 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources telexed the refiners regarding the question of supply for the independent sector of the business. He referred to exchanges being used as a means to assure supply to the independents. You can assume that this was a consideration in the National Energy Board's decision to make exchange oil available to certain refiners under item 3 above.

7. Full use has been made of the capacity of the Interprovincial Pipe Line Limited, the carrier of crude oil from western Canada, to deliver oil to Quebec.

8. In response to a National Energy Board request, Interprovincial made certain changes to its regulations in October with a view to avoiding discrimination against companies which have no history of shipment through the pipeline. As a result of these changes, a group of Quebec heating oil distributors will receive about 450,000 barrels of crude oil directly from western Canada in the month of November for processing into the oil products they need.

9. Finally, my staff have kept continuously in touch with officials of provincial governments, the oil refiners and independent distributors regarding oil supply. These consultations have contributed to a better understanding all round. The number of resellers facing supply problems has sharply diminished.

Should we be faced with a disruption of oil supply sufficient to cause a national emergency, then I can assure you that the government is prepared to use the powers available to it under the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979, to conserve supplies and to provide for their equitable distribution.

In this connection, you may have noted that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated his intention to seek some administrative changes to the Energy Supplies

Emergency Act and at the same time announce appointment of an Energy Supplies Allocation Board. Part of this board's duties under the act is to ensure that Canada is fully prepared to meet any petroleum supply emergency with well-prepared and timely plans for action. Emergency planning has been proceeding in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for some time and the level of this activity has been stepped up this year, with co-operation from private industry and the provinces.

While emergency planning is an essential and ongoing activity, I believe that the efforts of the private oil industry together with the government measures I have outlined will result in sufficient oil supplies being available for the coming winter. This assumes of course that there will be no major disruptions in oil imports or in the operations of our own oil industry. In this general connection, I would draw your attention to the National Energy Board's statement of November 2 regarding short-term oil supplies, a copy of which is attached.

In conclusion, I can assure you that the government attaches the highest priority to the development of policies and programs which will assure oil supplies for Canadian consumers now and in the longer term. We are determined to overcome the oil supply problems left with us and the Canadian people by the previous government.

Yours sincerely,
Joe Clark

FISHERIES

REQUEST HOUSE COMMITTEE STUDY QUESTION OF GROUNDFISH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Considering the reactions prompted by the decision of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) to admit trawlers of 100 feet or more in the 4T zone in the Gulf of St. Lawrence; considering that the estimates of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans have been referred to the House Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and that the Standing Order provides that an automatic report on the consideration of those estimates should be tabled in the House on December 7, 1979, which will not allow all parties involved to state their views on that matter; and given the failure of the minister to consult before taking such an important decision which benefits only to two or three large companies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc):

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to study the plan suggested by the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory subcommittee for 1980 and that the committee report to the House after having heard the group of fishermen and plants involved.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST HOUSE COMMITTEE STUDY LICENSING OF FREEZER-TRAWLERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the statements by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath) as reported recently in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, to the effect that he is about to issue licences to freezer-trawlers, and in view of this government's clearly-stated intention to be an open government and to consult, particularly with Parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc):

That the question of the licensing of freezer-trawlers be now referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry so that the fishermen of Canada, through their elected representatives, can debate this issue which could have a serious impact on their livelihood, particularly those who fish inshore.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced at this time only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR POWER

LOCATION OF U.S. NUCLEAR PROJECTS NEAR CANADIAN BORDER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Noting that the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission is changing its position almost daily over the question of nuclear plant safety, and that a freeze on new American nuclear power installations has now been imposed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That this House urge our Prime Minister to convey to President Carter that Canada, too, is considering changing its position from non-opposition to nuclear power projects near its border to one of outright disapproval, at least until the people and environment of Canada are adequately protected.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of this motion for debate at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

REQUEST NEW BRUNSWICK AND NOVA SCOTIA BE REPRESENTED IN INNER CABINET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the awful and incredible reality that New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are not represented in the inner sanctum of cabinet, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan):

That this House instructs the Prime Minister to appoint forthwith the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the hon. part-time Minister of State for Transport to the inner sanctum of cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RENAMING OF CERTAIN STANDING COMMITTEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, inasmuch as the business of this House is being impeded by the archaic names of two of our standing committees.

I propose that the name of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts be renamed the standing committee on culture and communications, and that the name of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be changed to the standing committee on transport. After consulting with the parties and the members of the committees involved and having received their approval, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley):

That Standing Order 65(1)(b) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

65(1)(b) "Culture and Communications, to consist of not more than 20 members;"

and that Standing Order 65(1)(l) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

65(1)(l) "Transport, to consist of not more than 20 members;"

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like an opportunity to consider this proposal before it is put to the House. Perhaps it could be put later, when it may receive a more favourable result.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, my obligation is to put the question as to whether there is unanimous consent for the presentation of the motion at this time. I presume there is not, but that there may be unanimous consent at some other time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NORTHERN PIPELINES

FINANCING OF ALASKA HIGHWAY GAS PIPELINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move the following motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the statement by the commissioner of the Northern Pipeline Agency yesterday, that all that may be needed for proceeding with the whole of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline is an assurance about financing, rather than having the funds in hand before a prebuild of the southern portion could begin, and since this statement is contrary to the intent of the Northern Pipeline Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House instruct the Prime Minister to obtain an ironclad guarantee from President Carter that the necessary financing for the whole project will be in place before Canada will consent to prebuild the southern portion of the gas pipeline.

Mr. Speaker: The unanimous consent of the House is required before such a motion can be introduced for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REQUEST GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Given the fact that five bills dealing with capital punishment are on the order paper, that the Prime Minister stated several times that he was not opposed to a debate on the issue nor to the taking of a free vote after the debate, and also given the fact that I heard news during the weekend to the effect that at least 15 backbenchers on the government side intend to introduce bills on capital punishment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Duquet):

That the House urge the government House leader to give priority to those bills and that they be considered as a government measure.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

PUBLIC AIRING OF IMPLICATIONS BEHIND POSSIBLE EXPANSION OF TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that the Minister of Transport indicated in a major address in Toronto several days ago that, contrary to commitments by the previous government, he may well expand Toronto international airport, and considering that such an action will directly affect not only the environment but the actual physical and mental well-being of many thousands of people through added noise and air pollution, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren):

That this House urge the Minister of Transport to hold public hearings and release all studies on the implications of expanding Toronto international airport before proceeding with such an expansion, and that meanwhile the minister assure this House that flight curfews and landing and take-off rotations continue as agreed to by the previous government.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

FURTHER CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION BEFORE REMEMBRANCE DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provision of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I move:

That this House reminds the Minister of Veterans Affairs that Remembrance Day is only four days away, and expresses the hope that before that day arrives he will present his promised amendments to the various statutes affecting veterans, so that we can honour the dead by making things better for the veterans who are still with us, for their families and for their survivors.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION OF HUMAN RIGHTS WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, who has already admitted to the House that he made a botch of his first foreign policy initiative in the Middle East.

There is a meeting coming up on Friday with the President of the United States, and we are quite fearful about the possibility of adding further to Canada's declining credibility in foreign affairs. For that reason, we wanted to focus the Prime Minister's mind today and to give him some background briefing that he will need for this encounter with the President.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: In view of the well-known proclivity of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for high-profile foreign policy initiatives which usually end in disaster, including, especially, human rights—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacEachen: —and in view of the embarrassing retreat made by Canada at the United Nations this week in withdrawing the proposal of the foreign minister to establish an undersecretary for human rights at the United Nations, does the Prime Minister intend to raise the question of human rights with the President, and does he intend to enlist the wisdom and guidance of the President in securing some acceptance for his proposals, which his own minister has not been able to achieve?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

DISCUSSION OF OFFSHORE OIL DRILLING WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will have to do better than that with Jimmy Carter if he intends to stay in the room for more than five minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I will try the Prime Minister on a domestic question, now that he has failed on the UN test.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to protest to the President of the United States the intention of the multinational oil companies in the United States to conduct extensive oil drilling on Georges Bank, which in the view of Nova Scotia fishermen poses a great threat to the rich fishery in that area of Nova Scotia?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly understand the sensitivity of the hon. member opposite about how long one stays in rooms where foreign policy is discussed, because he had to leave the room well before his choosing, at the decision of the former prime minister.

I am aware of the concerns of the fishermen in relation to Georges Bank, and will be looking into that matter to see if it would be useful for us to raise the question in discussions with the President on Friday or Saturday.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister will focus his mind on that question, raise it, protest to the President and express the concerns of Nova Scotia fishermen. Will he also, with respect to the fisheries of Nova Scotia, express to the President the rising impatience of Canada at the failure of the American authorities to conclude satisfactorily the agreements on fishing boundaries and fish stocks on Georges Bank?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that has been done by our government. We will, naturally, make the point again to the President. I am sure that the interest of the hon. House Leader of the Opposition in constituency questions must relate directly to the success of his strategy last night.

An hon. Member: Arrogant.

DISCUSSION OF INTEREST RATES WITH U.S. PRESIDENT—NATIONAL OIL COMPANIES

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of this government's slavish adherence to interest rate policies that are clearly made in the United States—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: —would the Prime Minister tell us whether it is his intention to discuss the policy initiatives of the Federal Reserve Bank of the United States during the President's visit here, and whether he will do this with the hope that perhaps he could convince the President to give us a new interest rate policy from the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, in light of that enlightened answer, I ask the Prime Minister this question: Given that Mr. Carter, the American President, has indicated a clear intention to establish a national oil company in the United states similar to Petro-Canada, will the Prime Minister take the opportunity to discuss national oil companies with the President, in the hope that the Prime Minister will derive some new insights into this issue which up to now have apparently escaped him?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the people who are unable to see new insights into national oil companies are members opposite who slavishly resist the idea of extending to the citizens of this country the possibility of participating directly in the ownership of a national oil company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISCUSSION OF URBAN TRANSIT EQUIPMENT WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see how one can extend ownership to people who already own something.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: My question to the Prime Minister also concerns President Carter's important visit to this country. In view of our $12 billion trade deficit in manufactured goods, most of which is with the United States, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government attempted, before President Carter comes, to get a change in U.S. regulations which effectively exclude hundreds of millions of dollars of potential Canadian exports of urban transit equipment to the United States? If so, what have been the results of these efforts?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a serious question, in relation to the visit of the President of the United States, from the Leader of the New Democratic Party. It is a matter we intend to discuss with the President when he is here. There have not been extensive representations to the President of the United States or to the United States Administration prior to his visit here. Instead, we have directed our energies toward preparing a presentation that can be brought to the attention of the President and his officials when they are in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, considering there is in the United States some $50 billion worth of potential business in the transit field, and these regulations have been known for some time and have already caused two Canadian companies—who are very competitive in this field—to lose contracts in the United States, could the Prime Minister tell the House why nothing was done in advance of the President's visit to obtain changes before more Canadian jobs are lost?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, there have been no contacts by myself with the President of the United States on the implications for Canada of the Buy America program beyond the indication on my part that it was a matter I wanted to discuss with the President when he is here. Naturally, there have been discussions, on an official basis, on the part of representatives of the Government of Canada with representatives of the Government of the United States to draw to the attention of that government the very serious concern our government feels over the impact in Canada of that program.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would like confirmation from the Prime Minister. Is he saying the Government of Canada realizes that one-half of the potential growth of this business for Canadian firms, who are very competitive in this field, actually lies in the United States, and unless the Canadian government obtains fairness from the American government and they recognize that trade in manufactured goods is a two-way street, the Government of Canada will be failing in its responsibility to maintain existing competitive jobs in this country?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, yes, we understand very well the importance to Canada of developing markets, not only in the United States but also in the Third World in this highly important and innovative industrial sector in Canada. That is one of the reasons we have put it on the agenda for discussion with the Americans.

DISCUSSION OF GARRISON DIVERSION PROJECT WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Prime Minister concerning his discussions with President Carter: it is on the topic of the Garrison diversion.

● (1425)

Has the Prime Minister received a communiqué from the National Indian Brotherhood which shows that the ongoing and continuing construction of the Garrison project in North Dakota will result in the biological distortion of the entire Lake Winnipeg waterway, and the livelihood of some 17,000 members of the Manitoba Indian bands will be eliminated at a cost of between $50 million and $100 million?

In light of that kind of evidence, is the Prime Minister prepared to ask the President, this weekend, to order total cessation of all construction on the Garrison until such time as those facts can be assayed, and construction will not continue until we assess the proper impact of the ongoing construction?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the concern of Manitobans and other Canadians about the Garrison project has been brought to my attention by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboia, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and a number of others. Although my office may have received it, I have not yet seen the communiqué to which the hon. member refers. I will certainly look at it.

I should say that it has been our plan since the arrangements were completed for a visit here by President Carter to place on the agenda the very serious implications to Canada of the proposed Garrison diversion plan.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware that the matter is on the agenda. What I am presenting to the first minister is that there is a clear and imminent danger to the entire environment and economy of the province of Manitoba which justifies a direct request that construction be stopped.

I would, further, ask the Prime Minister if he is prepared to take other action, such as supporting the legal action in the courts that the Action Coalition is presently instituting. Is he prepared to order additional technical studies? Is he prepared to ask for meetings between the congressional committees of the United States and elected members from the province of Manitoba, federal and provincial, so that we can make the case that if the Americans continue, it will seriously damage our province for the next 100 years?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the action that I can most effectively take when I meet with President Carter, and when our Minister of the Environment meets with United States officials, will be to communicate with them directly, on a Prime Minister to President basis and on a minister to minister basis, the very real concern that we have about the various implications of the Garrison scheme.

I want to look at the telegram to which the hon. member referred in his first question and have an assessment made of the impact that the concerns expressed in that telegram should have upon the representations that we make to the American authorities.

DISCUSSION OF OIL TANKER TRAFFIC WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Prime Minister concerning the visit of President Carter. It concerns a subject that matters a great deal to people on the west coast, namely, tanker traffic down the west coast, which I know is on the agenda.

The question really arises from recent reports that environmentalists—particularly two federal environmentalists—have come out favouring, on environmental grounds, the Trans Mountain proposal over the Foothills proposal. Does this indicate further uncertainty in the government's support of the Foothills proposal for transporting oil?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the reports to which the hon. member refers, but the direct answer to his question is no.

Mr. Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the reports were detailed just a couple of weeks ago in the Vancouver Sun. My further question to the Prime Minister concerns the fact that President Carter has also received advice from his officials to the effect that the northern tier, U.S. route would be the better one. If it comes to a choice between the northern tier route and the Trans Mountain route, does the government intend to back the Canadian Trans Mountain route?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the terms of the hon. member's question are hypothetical in their very language.

● (1430)

DISCUSSION OF RECOGNITION OF PLO WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. According to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Canada has achieved a very high profile in its policy in the Middle East. Can the right hon. gentleman inform the House whether he intends to raise with the President the very important question of recognition of the PLO?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of bringing up that matter with the President of the United States, and I doubt that he should want to do so with me. With regard to the Middle East generally, we trust the work of the hon. Robert Stanfield will help all hon. members determine what options are open to Canada for improving our relations with all countries in that part of the world.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: A further question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister discuss with the President what the difference is between Mr. Stanfield's mission with the PLO and the action of Mr. Andrew Young, who was fired because he met the PLO? Can he explain to us how these two cases differ?

Mr. Clark: I suppose to answer the hon. member fully I would have to refer to the precedent established by the former government, which the hon. member supported, in terms of approval given to meetings between representatives of the Canadian government and representatives of the PLO.

I do not have the full list of those meetings with me in the chamber today, but I would be pleased to prepare a letter which would enumerate them for the edification of the hon. member. We could then certainly publish that letter so it would be seen that the practice of having meetings among Canadian representatives and representatives of the PLO began under the former government and that, indeed, it was endorsed explicitly in a statement by the former secretary of state for external affairs, Mr. Jamieson.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISCUSSION OF OIL TANKER TRAFFIC WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister assure the House that, with the support now given to a permanent west coast tanker route and port development, he will—this week—make President Carter aware that Canada's interests in the environment and fisheries will be protected by this government, and that strict clean-up and routing legislation will be promptly introduced to protect the British Columbia coast?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): It would be my intention to first announce legislative initiatives in Canada here in the House of Commons. I will certainly be making the President of the United States aware of our very real concern about the environmental implications of decisions his government might make, whether they relate to the east coast or the west coast.

Mr. Fulton: In light of the fact that there is an agreement about to be signed, I have a question to ask of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister advise the House why a vessel traffic management agreement for only the Strait of Juan de Fuca is about to be signed, possibly this week, when, in fact, the entire British Columbia coast is suffering from dangerous tanker traffic and ongoing trickle oil spills? Would the minister assure the House, and British Columbia in particular, that this legislation will be expanded to cover the entire British Columbia coast?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are very pleased indeed that this initial step is to be completed this weekend and that we will have a guarantee that tanker traffic through the dangerous Strait of Juan de Fuca will be monitored and made more safe for the future. And that is just a beginning.

DISCUSSION OF CANADA'S JOINING OAS WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the recent statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Inter-American Press Association in Toronto, to the effect that Canada is seriously looking into the possibility of becoming a member of the Organization of American States, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not he intends to discuss the matter when he meets the President of the United States with a view to obtaining the views of the President on the subject, so that this government, which caused considerable damage to the reputation of Canada on the international scene, might at long last make an enlightened decision on a matter of foreign policy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States always discuss several matters. But we shall have only one full day, and half a day on Saturday. I doubt that it will be possible to discuss in depth all matters of concern pertaining to foreign affairs, and I certainly do not intend to bring up the question of the passive participation of Canada in the OAS. However, the Secretary of State for External Affairs may have occasion to take it up with her American counterpart.

CANADA'S JOINING OAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister tell the House what specific factors are now under study with a view to reaching an enlightened decision on the participation of Canada in the Organization of American States and when does she intend to announce the decision of the government on that matter?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I suggested during my visit to Toronto two weeks ago that this be part of the review that the external affairs parliamentary committee is going to undertake this winter and next spring.

DISCUSSION OF NON-TARIFF BARRIERS WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the question asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party regarding the problems of entry into the United States market faced by Canadian manufacturers of urban transit equipment, the Prime Minister indicated that he would raise the matter with the President of the United States.

I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether he intends to place this important question in a yet broader spectrum of concern about the non-tariff barriers which so adversely affect our trade with the United States. Is it the Prime Minister's intention to raise this broader question in the course of his discussions with the President and, more specifically, does he intend to seek an early date on which these problems can be discussed with the U.S. government for the benefit of Canadian consumers and Canadian industry?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Given the limited time on the agenda, I do not intend to pursue that question at any length with the President but I shall certainly be raising the question with him. I will consider the suggestion of the hon. member that there might be some value in establishing a more formal mechanism by which there could be discussion between the representatives of the two countries.

DISCUSSION OF NEW FIGHTER AIRCRAFT WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Hon. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Disturbing newspaper reports this morning indicate that the U.S. defence department has demanded that McDonnell Douglas not include the $545 million cruise-missile business in its new fighter aircraft package for Canada. Does the Prime Minister intend to pursue this matter with the President of the United States, to ensure that yet another half billion dollar deal does not "go aglimmering" the way of the oil pipeline, the Candu reactors, or our Middle East trade?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will review the newspaper article to which the hon. member refers, and if there is any need for me to raise the matter with the President I will, of course, do so.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, Calvin Coolidge said, "The business of America is business." The Prime Minister seems to be saying that the business of this government is losing business. Will the right hon. gentleman guarantee that he will pursue this matter with President Carter to ensure that this half-billion dollar business is maintained and kept for Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

THE ADMINISTRATION

COMBINING OF DEPARTMENTAL PORTFOLIOS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the hon. minister from Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe in a little, staged "pas de deux" with the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, stated that his main ministerial duty is to be in charge of SIN—social insurance numbers. He said his job is to roll back SIN. That has a nice ring to it—"the minister of state for SIN"—and it may well take all that minister's capabilities.

But how can the Prime Minister reconcile such a whimsical cabinet assignment when he continues to combine other very onerous double-departmental portfolios under single ministers, such as the Department of the Solicitor General and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of the Secretary of State and the Department of Communications, and the Department of National Defence and the Department of Veterans Affairs? How can the Prime Minister reconcile those extraordinary contrasts in duties?

● (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State indicated yesterday the range of responsibilities with which he is charged. We have introduced into the concept of government in Canada the idea of ministers of state to assist in departments which are either unusually complex or where there is an unusually high priority attached by this government.

Certainly, on the question of the Treasury Board in relation to achieving greater efficiency in government spending, in relation to making direct progress on deregulation, in relation to dealing with the effectiveness of governments which we believe were not sufficiently well addressed by the previous government, we have taken the decision that it would be useful to have a very strong team of ministers; and that is what we have.

Mr. Andras: Is this current structure of double-departmental portfolios to be permanent? Does the Prime Minister intend to get rid of these dual set-ups and enlarge his already fairly sizeable cabinet later, or is the real intent to wipe out the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Department of Communications?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, of course that is not the intention. I believe the former minister wanted to pose a serious question when he asked if I intend any ministerial changes. I do not intend any.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

PLACE OF COAL IN NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

An hon. Member: He is not here.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Before the days of oil and gas, coal was widely used to warm our homes and fuel our factories and industries. We still have millions of tons of coal both in western Canada and eastern Canada. The Liberal administration, in its Energy Supplies Emergency Act—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Yes, sir, I have. Will the minister advise the House whether coal will have an important place in any national energy policy, and will it be considered by the allocation board along with gas and oil in meeting the fuel requirements of Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I can assure the hon. member—who shares my interest in the coal industry in Canada—that there will be a high and increasing importance attached to the role of coal in Canada's energy future.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

PROGRAM FOR EXPANSION OF CHRYSLER OPERATIONS IN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in the continuing absence from this House of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Now that the United States government has announced a $3 billion rescue operation for Chrysler Corporation, when may we expect that the Government of Canada will come forward with a program for the expansion of Chrysler operations in this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the question of Chrysler of Canada and the proposals it has made to the Government of Canada is very much under study right now. My colleagues, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry, and I will be meeting representatives of the company tomorrow.

We have had a series of meetings with the company. A great deal of information is being studied by officials of the department. I should underline, however, that the difference between the U.S. corporation and the Canadian corporation is that the Canadian corporation is making a proposal for a long-term program in Canada, whereas Chrysler Corporation in the United States has called for short-term assistance. We are studying all aspects of this long-term proposal and hope to make an announcement in the not-too-distant future.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his assurance, but my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister.

Since last week the United States Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Miller, indicated at his press conference in Washington that he expected the Canadian government would be a very important part of the rescue operation—Chrysler having to raise $1.5 billion in addition to the U.S. government guarantee—and that assistance was supposed to come, in part, from the Canadian government, I wonder if the Prime Minister would reconsider the statement he made yesterday, that he does not plan to discuss this matter with the U.S. government; or is there perhaps already an agreement with the U.S. government that Canada will come forward with assistance?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I do not intend to raise the matter, although it may well be raised by other ministers in meetings with their American counterparts. There is no agreement in place.

FISHERIES

MINISTER'S CONSULTATION WITH CERTAIN PROVINCES BEFORE ALLOWING LARGE TRAWLERS TO OPERATE IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and relates to his statement of August 27. His statements are ambiguous. At the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry he said that his decision was based on expert reports, yet on October 31 he informed the House, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc), that inshore fishermen were represented at the advisory committee when the decision was taken. Yesterday, a spokesman for the Nova Scotia government stated at the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry that he had pressured the minister into allowing vessels to enter the Gulf. Can the minister, therefore, inform the House whether, besides Nova Scotia, he consulted with Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island prior to taking such a decision?

[English]

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated in the House and before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, there was consultation at the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee level. The hon. member understands that. There was not direct consultation at the ministerial level, but the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee has provincial representation on it at the deputy ministerial level. There was consultation; there was advice; I made the decision; I take full responsibility for it.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL MEET WITH MINISTER OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS CONCERNING DECISION MADE

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the right hon. Prime Minister, who has said repeatedly that there is now in Ottawa a government open to the provinces' aspirations and capable of changing attitude. He has also spoken of jurisdiction over offshore resources. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, however, does not seem to share that same openness toward Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether, in view of the statements we have heard in the House, he intends to meet with his Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to shed light on a decision which was taken without proper consultation with the provinces?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on at least three occasions the minister has stated in the House that consultation had taken place with an organization which included representation from the provinces concerned.

AGRICULTURE

CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS WITH U.S.—DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT CARTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister; and I will switch from fish to chicken. I am sure the Prime Minister is aware that the poultry producers of this country are very concerned about the high level of imports from the United States, namely, over 6 per cent of our consumption by the year 1982, compared with the historical average of 1 per cent.

Can the Prime Minister assure this House that he will ask President Carter, when he meets with him, whether the President of the United States will reopen negotiations on the level of chicken imports from the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture has answered in the House several questions similar to this one, indicating that the Government of Canada has been able to secure a reduction in the amount of imports of chicken into this country.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that is just not true. It is a case of "Whelan's chickens coming home to roost." The Minister of Agriculture said in committee the other day that if he made the chicken marketing board the first receiver in this country, the Americans would object. The Dairy Commission and the Wheat Board are both first receivers. Would the Prime Minister ask the President of the United States whether he can give the assurance that there will be no objection to the broiler marketing board being the first receiver? If it is not to be the first receiver, Loblaws and Maple Lodge will have control over the retail price of chicken in this country.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we can certainly consider the usefulness of raising that kind of request with the President of the United States to determine what his reaction would be. If it appears that it would be useful to raise the matter, naturally we will do it.

HOUSING

REQUEST CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM BE EXTENDED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Home Insulation Program. I am not sure whether it is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, or the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You will never learn.

Mr. Whelan: You have been here long enough now.

Mr. Blenkarn: On April 20, the program was extended to include houses built up to 1961. Perhaps the minister knows that houses built in the 1950s and even up to the 1970s had approximately the same standard of insulation. I was wondering whether the program is to be extended, or whether there will be some element of fairness introduced into it so that people who had houses built in 1962, 1963, and so on, can receive the same type of benefit as their neighbours who had houses built prior to 1961.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as a representation.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN TAX EXEMPTIONS RELATING TO DIVIDENDS AND INTEREST

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. By his present policy, the minister is trying to reduce inflation. When preparing his budget could he, for instance, consider adjusting the $1,000 exemption now enjoyed by taxpayers who derive income from interests or dividends? This exemption has remained unchanged for the past four years and it should be adjusted to encourage small savers to keep saving and thereby perhaps contribute to lowering the rate of inflation.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider representations for additional relief as the hon. member suggests. I hope that his leader will be back with us tomorrow, after the severe drubbing he received last night.

TARIFFS ON IMPORTATION OF FIBRE-OPTICS

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask the minister whether he can confirm to this House that as of June 30 he lowered the tariffs on the importation of fibre-optics into Canada. Can he tell us who he is helping by doing this, when the former government specifically excluded certain telecommunications products?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as a result of my prodigious memory, I am able to say yes, I think that the tariff of fibre-optics was lowered on June 30. This was in an effort, of course, to help Canadian consumers. The tariff has been lowered, and that action is being reviewed at the request of my colleague who sits next to me.

An hon. Member: What is his name?

Mr. Crosbie: If there is any further decision in that connection, it will be announced.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Can he tell me why he accepted the lowering of tariffs on fibre-optics, when he knows only too well that the government has entered into partnership with industry in order to help the Canadian industry develop a new product which we hope will hit international markets on time to compete with other countries? He told me that at the federal-provincial conference and discussions he had with the ministers of communications, they discussed this subject in order to enhance the position of Canadian industry. How is this lowering of the tariff helping Canadian industry?

Some hon. Members: Hear hear!

[Mr. MacKay.]

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the former minister knows, the whole matter of tariffs with respect to fibre-optics is a complex one. This particular decision was taken—

Mr. MacEachen: That is the first page of your briefing notes.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am not looking at briefing notes; I know the issue a bit better than that. It is a matter of considerable concern to a very important telecommunications industry.

As the Minister of Finance indicated, at the moment we are reviewing the particular policy. Also, we are talking to various interested parties both in terms of the industries involved and some provinces which would like to expand their own potential telecommunications industries. Because this government has a very real commitment to developing the potential in this industry, I know that proper steps will be taken to achieve that end.

NATIONAL UNITY

VISIT OF PRESIDENT CARTER—INQUIRY WHETHER QUESTION OF QUEBEC REFERENDUM ON AGENDA

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Days after the Parti Québécois came into power in November 1976, one of the first acts of the new government was for the Premier of Quebec to rush down to the United States to reassure the Americans about his sovereignty-association project, followed a few months later by the Prime Minister of Canada, who set the facts right. Is the matter of the Quebec referendum listed on the Prime Minister's agenda to be discussed during his meeting with President Carter this week?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss the referendum specifically, but I know that the President of the United States and the citizens of that country are interested in the question of Canadian unity. I will indicate my views to President Carter and my optimistic outlook concerning Canadian unity.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour.

In view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare may want to deprive thousands of mothers of family allowances, their sole source of income, and in view of the fact that many Canadian workers earn only $2.90 an hour, did the minister consider raising the minimum wage for employees under his jurisdiction?

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the minimum wage at the federal level now is $2.90 an hour.

Miss Bégin: That is what he just said.

Mr. Alexander: I can assure the hon. member that this matter is under very serious consideration. It is my expectation that action in this regard will be taken in due course—and I hope, by saying "in due course", in the immediate future.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST WORKERS EARNING MINIMUM WAGE BE ABLE TO DEDUCT TRANSPORTATION EXPENSES

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): I would like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker.

Since an hourly wage of $2.90 is inadequate and a huge increase will soon hike the price of a gallon of gas to $2 or $2.20, has the minister considered the possibility of allowing employees who are paid $2.90 an hour to deduct from their income tax their transportation cost to work? Those people lose the equivalent of two hours' earnings because of what they have to pay for gas. Is the minister prepared to do as much for them as he does for doctors, lawyers and professionals?

(English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can promise the hon. gentleman that if there are any increases in energy prices or any increases in the cost of gasoline, we will be looking after lower income Canadians as well: he can depend on that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION OF ACID RAIN FALL-OUT WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mrs. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. When he is discussing acid rain and its tremendous problems with the President of the United States this weekend, does he intend to tell the President precisely what the Canadian government has done so far with respect to acid rain, and more specifically, what directives the Canadian government issued to major Canadian polluters responsible for acid rain fall-out in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because of the very great importance that both the President and I attach to the acid rain question, we arranged for an opportunity for the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment of Canada and his counterpart in the United States to meet for some time to discuss in detail the possibility of arrangements which might be made between the two countries.

Naturally, I will be raising the question in a general way with the President, but the details of the discussions between Canada and the United States will be carried on the Canadian side by the Canadian Minister of the Environment.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR MANDATORY DESIGNATION OF BILINGUAL POSITIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of State for the Treasury Board.

One of the minister's responsibilities is to review bilingual policies within the public service. Since the declared policy of his boss, the President of the Treasury Board, is to reduce the number of public servants through attrition, could the Minister of State say whether he has instructed the public service or the government departments to provide for a certain proportion of mandatory designation of bilingual positions? I am sure he knows what I mean by "mandatory designation of bilingual positions". Did he get the assurance, for the President of the Treasury Board or for himself, that departments have received firm instructions to provide for that designation among federal public servants?

● (1500)

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am, indeed, responsible for the conduct of official languages within the public service and, unlike my hon. friend's colleague, the hon. member for Thunder Bay, I consider it a very heavy and very serious responsibility.

My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, has indicated that as the government undertakes a policy of attrition in the public service, a commitment will continue to be made in order to ensure that the public service remains representative of the linguistic balance of the population at large. This commitment, which is unswerving on the part of this government, is one we will keep.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ILLEGAL ACTS COMMITTED BY POLICE OFFICERS

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, during a meeting of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, the Attorney General of Canada indicated that the Solicitor General was considering legislation to deal with the commission of illegal acts by police officers in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Would the minister indicate what aspects of this problem are being dealt with in that legislation, and whether the legislation will reflect the well-publicized view of the right hon. Prime Minister to the effect that illegal activity could be authorized by a minister of the Crown on an ad hoc basis?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. We are certainly reviewing the whole RCMP Act at the moment. We have already opened discussions with the provinces, as well, in respect of the general powers of police officers generally in the fulfilment of what might otherwise be looked upon as the normal investigatory powers of the police. But certainly, the rule of law must be paramount in this country, whether it affects the police or the average citizen, and certainly the police have to pay attention to the law in exactly the same way as does everybody else.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his reply. He knows that the whole question of police activity and political control over police activity is now within the terms of reference of the McDonald inquiry. I appreciate the reply the hon. gentleman gave; but is it his intention at this time to introduce the legislation which he describes prior to the McDonald inquiry submitting a report to the government?

Mr. Lawrence: Probably not, Mr. Speaker. There was some confusion earlier, which I think I conveyed to the House, as to the deadline by which the McDonald commission itself expected to have its core report before the government. There were dates being bandied about—as late as the end of 1981. The Prime Minister has since reported to the House, however, that we expect to have the main core report of the McDonald commission in our hands by June 1980.

When we are dealing with such a massive subject as the powers of the police in this country, with the consultation and the research that obviously has to be done respecting that and which is going on right now within the government, I rather expect that the recommendations and the advice from the royal commission will be in our hands in time for us to seriously consider them prior to the introduction of that legislation in the House.

However, it may be that we will have a draft bill ready for the House at about the same time, in which event I would expect it to be given first reading and then perhaps allowed to percolate over the summer so that everybody can consider it.

[Mr. Beatty.]

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have received three notices of privilege, and the order in which I received them is: first, the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard); secondly, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet); and third, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen). They all relate in one way or another—and I will certainly hear from the members—to a report in the Toronto The Globe and Mail and to incidents which took place in the House yesterday.

I want to say to the House in just two sentences, before hearing from the hon. members, that I read the report of yesterday's proceedings on the front page of this morning's The Globe and Mail, and there seemed to be an indication there that representations may have been made on the part of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) to me on behalf of the Social Credit party.

I should, of course, indicate that in the first place any reports which would indicate that concessions can be made by anyone else in the House respecting the question period except the Chair are quite incorrect and unfounded. Secondly, I can assure the House that the President of the Privy Council has at no time made a representation to me concerning the status of the Social Credit party in the House, except those that were made in common with the House leaders of the other two parties whom I have consulted on more than one occasion in the last two to three weeks. I wanted to put that on the record before calling on the hon. members.

[Translation]

MR. PINARD—RIGHT OF SPEECH IN THE HOUSE

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, as you mentioned, my question is twofold. It deals, on the one hand, with certain incidents that occurred in the House yesterday and, on the other, with an article that made the front page of The Globe and Mail this morning.

First of all, with regard to the incident that happened in the House of Commons yesterday, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on the motion of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau), you naturally recognized first, the Leader of the Official Opposition, then the leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and finally the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). As a result of the intervention of the right hon. Prime Minister, you spontaneously deemed it timely to explain why you were about to recognize the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy). During the few minutes that your explanations lasted, we listened very closely, and I have absolutely no intention of criticizing your remarks at that time. On the contrary, I think they were not required and that anyway you had the discretionary power to recognize whomever you chose in the House at that time. Whether that discretionary power was used advisedly or inadvisedly, possibly it was used advisedly, possibly it was used inadvisedly, it is not for me to say. That is not what I want to do today.

As I did yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I will refrain from commenting on your remarks at that time. You will notice that after your remarks I only tried to be recognized on a point of order. I must admit that I had quite a lot of yelling to do in both official languages before finally saying simply the words which can be read at page 1010 of Hansard and which in a way constitute a motion to give the floor to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I did not make any comments on your remarks. I was not questioning at all your decision to recognize the member for Beauce. All I was doing as a member, Mr. Speaker, was to exercise a right provided by Standing Order 29 which reads, and I quote:

When two or more members rise to speak, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who first rose in his place; but a motion may be made that any member who has risen "be now heard", or "do now speak", which motion shall be forthwith put without debate.

And that might certainly have made the situation more complex if my motion had been moved and accepted and if there had been a vote before 9.45 last night when some members were on their way in; perhaps my motion might have enabled one more Liberal member to take the floor on the motion introduced by the Liberal party and prevented the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada from being recognized that day, giving us the impression that despite not being recognized in principle that party is recognized de facto in the House.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question of privilege I am raising now, the first point, is to know what we are to expect as members of the House in the future. I am not asking you in any way to change the decision you made yesterday, I have no right to ask you that. I am well aware of that. Anyway, there is no possible remedy to the damage done, if any. However, in future, as a member I would like to know if at any time, when I think a member other than the one you are recognizing should have the floor, I can use Standing Order 29 or if I am bound by the remarks and the decision you made yesterday.

I would like to know what comes first, the standing orders of the House or the interpretation given by you last night in the heat of the debate. This is the first point of my statement, Mr. Speaker. As for the second point, in order to conclude with this matter, for the record I would like to quote from Beauchesne fifth edition on page 99 of the English version and I quote citation 302, subparagraph 1:

● (1510)

[English]

When a motion that a member "be now heard" is defeated, it is assumed that the member originally recognized by the Speaker has the floor.

What does that mean? If the moving of such a motion is justified by the fact that somebody else has been recognized, how could I seek the floor other than by raising a point of order? That is the first part of my intervention.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should help the hon. member for Drummond with the first part of his argument. I would hasten to add that this argument is absolutely sound. There is no other recourse than that which was open to the hon. member to try to seek the floor by way of a point of order. That is the only effective way to take advantage of Standing Order 29. Therefore, in attempting to do deal with the matter by way of a point of order, the hon. member was attempting to do it in the only way that was open to him. So everything was correct in what he tried to do yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, the hon. member's argument today is absolutely beyond reproach. There is, however, a dilemma in our proceedings in respect to the use of Standing Order 29 in two respects. The first is that it is in opposition to our general practice to move a motion under a point of order. This is not the ordinary way of doing it.

It was not expected that I would be in this role yesterday at this particular hour and, therefore, I had not in any way advised the House. I had not expected to be making this decision at that time, although I had given the matter four weeks of thought because we have all been conscious of this problem. But in doing so, I was doing more than simply what was envisaged by Standing Order 29, which is that of choosing one member or another. I had in fact combined that step with a decision on a matter that has been troubling the House for some time, and that is the decision on the position in principle of the Social Credit party.

This matter troubled the House on the second day of this Parliament when we began an argument about whether or not the leader of that party could participate in the leaders' day debate. During a subsequent deliberation, I suggested to the House that it might want to resolve the problem directly by having it sent to a committee, which is a course of action that the House, for many reasons, has not seen fit to adopt. Therefore, the decision in some respects was returned to me, and I did not expect to be making the announcement on that matter at that particular time yesterday; but I knew that I would have to do it some time.

Having done that, it would appear to me that we would be in conflict with another practice, and that was that since I was resolving a procedural situation yesterday, to permit the use of Standing Order 29 in that way would have seemed to me to permit an appeal against the ruling that I had made, which we do not permit.

Mr. MacEachen: We don't accept that nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Therefore, I indicate to the hon. member that his only recourse was the method that he tried to use yesterday, and I did not accept it in the circumstances. But he was perfectly correct in his attempt.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the second aspect of my statement refers to this article on the first page of

The Globe and Mail; in order to clarify my remarks, for the record I would like to quote a very short portion of this article. The interesting part is as follows:

[English]

Mr. Baker said in an interview that he made some representations to Speaker James Jerome on behalf of the Socreds because he was moved by Socred Adrien Lambert's look of genuine outrage when the five-member Quebec party recently walked out of the House in protest.

Mr. Jerome granted Mr. Roy "the generosity of the House" yesterday and allowed him to speak in the debate immediately after the other three party leaders—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure that you moved today to clarify your attitude on this most serious allegation made by a journalist on the front page of such an important paper as The Globe and Mail. I am expecting just as much from the government House leader, because since the Winters-Beaudoin incident in 1956, during the pipeline debate, and I checked the record, there has been no instance of a government leader daring to take the steps implied in the article, and which hopefully will be strongly denied by my hon. colleague, daring to set the business of the House without the presence of other members of other sides, through some sort of collusion, some back-door arrangement with the Speaker. I do not believe this has happened.

I do not want the Canadian public to remain under the impression this might have been done, although there is an unfortunate chain of facts that, taken independently, are meaningless but that, put together, are strongly presumptive. Those facts in legal terms are serious, precise and concordant, they require a formal denial. There are five such facts, and I will state them briefly.

First, and it is important that this be put on record, there has been this summer in Drummondville, in my constituency, a meeting of 73 unsuccessful Progressive Conservative candidates from Quebec, who expressly requested that the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Clark) not officially recognize the Social Credit Party of Canada. They must face that situation. Second, the truth for everyone who is not blind, is straightforward and is not a hypocrite, is that in the short term it is in the government's interest to enjoy in this House the support of the Social Credit Party of Canada on non-confidence motions. There can be no doubt about that.

Third, in the long term, it cannot be denied that on the other hand the disappearance from the Quebec scene of the Social Credit Party of Canada leaves the opposition field open to the Progressive Conservatives. This is another fact of life.

Fourth, we have seen over these last few days, despite an order from the House of Commons whose servant you are, sir, and as you indicated the first day, that there is now a gradual de facto recognition of the Social Credit party. All those facts together, Mr. Speaker, coupled with the way in which my intervention based on a rule that could have brought a vote before 9.45, that coud have prevented the Social Credit Party of Canada from taking the floor, that could have antagonized the Social Credit party and perhaps influenced the vote that evening, all these facts put together leave us skeptical when we read that The Globe and Mail report I was referring to earlier, and indeed the Canadian public is led to wonder what is going on, if it is true that dealings can be made by the government leader without the presence of the House leaders from opposition parties, to prevent a government from falling or to make things easier for the government when there is a non-confidence motion.

This is serious, very serious. I am not making implications, I am simply stating facts. The solution is quite easy, Mr. Speaker. You did so very clearly in your intervention, from the start, as soon as today's question period was over. It is now for the government House leader to deny formally and unequivocally, to state that The Globe and Mail report is absolutely false, he never gave such an interview, in the interview he never made the allegations stated as his. This is essential in my view, if there is to be continuing respect for our democracy, if this institution is to be respected by all hon. members and by all the Canadian people.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that you made the representations that you did at the beginning of the question of privilege raised by the hon. member. I think that it is quite important for the operation of the House of Commons that you said what you said because it is precisely true. However, I am concerned about the implications of the remarks by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard).

● (1520)

If I follow his argument that it would be forever improper for any member of this House of Commons to attend upon the Speaker of the House of Commons in order to apprise him of a difficulty he may be having as a member or, in the alternative, a sense of atmosphere that might be developing in the House of Commons over any particular matter, that is quite within the realm of any member of this House and is certainly not outside—

An hon. Member: But you are the leader of the government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —the position of the House leader of the government. I have something here that I want to read that has perhaps escaped the attention of hon. members opposite. I hope my friend from Cape Breton will understand it. It is a quotation from a paper prepared by the Library of Parliament dated October 17, 1979, entitled "The Government House Leader in the Canadian House of Commons". The relevant section reads as follows:

'The unsung heroes of the House are the party House leaders. Each must have a dual loyalty: to his party and to the House', according to John B. Stewart, parliamentary secretary to the government House leader between 1966-68.

As Leader of the Government in the House of Commons I wear one hat, but as leader of the House of Commons I wear a hat that perhaps some members on the other side do not understand.

What I saw developing in the House of Commons as a result of your decision—which I cannot dispute and do not dispute—with respect to the striking committee was an atmosphere where a group of members of this House who regard themselves as a party, even though they are not regarded as a party anywhere else in this House of Commons, felt they were being denied certain rights that ought to flow to them, having regard to their own point of view.

What I was concerned about when I saw that was an atmosphere developing in this House of Commons where it would become an unproductive, argumentative place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am prepared to accept the word "argumentative" in the healthiest sense of the parliamentary system; but in the negative way in which it was developing, I went to you, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: You did?

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a conversation going on close to me and I did not hear what the hon. member just said. Could I hear that again?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I went to you, Mr. Speaker, in your office. You will recall that I expressed concern to you about the atmosphere which I saw developing in this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lefebvre: Talk to the other House leaders.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Subsequently there were meetings of representatives of parties, so I understand, where this matter was quite properly discussed in terms of the operation of this House of Commons. That occurred—

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The date it occurred, I do not know.

Mr. Speaker: For the benefit of the hon. member and the record, and so that the House will know, my memory does serve me on this.

The President of Privy Council is referring to a Thursday meeting which was initiated at his suggestion on the Thursday morning prior to the House sitting at two o'clock on that afternoon. I brought into consultation the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to discuss the suggestion which had been made to me on that day and which I acted upon that afternoon. I can remember it was a Thursday afternoon because the following day was the Friday on which the five Social Credit members left the House. That was the extent of the consultation that had taken place and that is why I indicated at the beginning that there had been no representation made to me, except that which had been discussed in an open way with the other House leaders.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you for clarifying that, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry I could not remember the date and thank you for going beyond that.

I think that is within my duty as leader of the House of Commons. I have some responsibilities with respect to that and it was in that atmosphere that it occurred.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the next day, Friday, I guess because the members of the Social Credit party were not happy, they decided to walk out of this House.

Mr. Whelan: Let them stay out.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): As a leader of the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, no matter what other—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Government House leader.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): As the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons I was very much concerned about what I could see developing as a result of the attitude of at least one party in this House of Commons toward a particular group of members. So that the issue was made clear.

I want to tell members of the House how I regard the members who call themselves the Social Credit party in this House. I regard them in this way: they are not a party under the Senate and House of Commons Act and they are not a party as a result of a vote of this House; but Mr. Speaker, whether the members of the Liberal Party or the members of the New Democratic Party or anyone else regards them not as a party, they regard themselves as a party.

Mr. Breau: So?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And so, sir, in their own minds they regard themselves as a party, and I recognize—so that it will be absolutely clear—that they are much more than a group of independents. They are entitled to certain courtesies and as a result of that, notwithstanding the fact that they are not a party and that there are only five of them, they have been given six positions on committees of this House of Commons.

I have expressed to you and to my colleagues in the House that I have no objection whatsoever if they are extended the courtesies that would normally apply to a party because of their particular position in this matter, and from the point of view of obtaining some form of peace with respect to the operations of this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Let me just conclude by saying that I am not responsible for the attitude of the former government to any group of members in this House of Commons. I really do not care whether they agree or not with respect to my attitude to my job in this House. My own role in this House of Commons, sir—

Mr. Lefebvre: You care about five but not about 112!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): My role in this House of Commons is that even if one of the members of the Liberal party came to see me, I would do my best to help him, if that were the case—

An hon. Member: Thanks a lot.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —and all in accordance with the proprieties and appropriateness, and after consulting with my House leader colleagues. I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, that you made it clear that there was the appropriate consultation with the representatives of the other parties with respect to that meeting which you and I had together, you in one capacity and me in another.

I frankly think that if I have a job at all in this House of Commons, it is certainly to lead the government and the House so as to ensure that we can have a recurrence of what occurred last night—that is, the victory of the government over an opposition that should not have brought a silly motion in any event.

I have another job as well, and that is as leader of the House of Commons to ensure that you, Mr. Speaker, and others connected with this House are aware of the atmosphere that prevails in this House of Commons. I frankly think that the representations made by the hon. member for Drummond are quite frivolous and I am sorry he made them.

An hon. Member: Deny it.

Mr. Speaker: In addition, I have notice from the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and from the opposition House leader, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen). I do not know whether they touch the same subject. I would like some guidance as to the most orderly way in which to receive all of the representations. Having heard those who have given me notice, I think then I might hear any others who wish to participate and pursue the question of privilege before making any kind of a decision.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to really one of the most incredible performances ever given in the House of Commons. The hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) raised a question of privilege based upon an article in The Globe and Mail which stated that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) had made representations to your Honour. The article said he had waited upon your Honour. Then the article said he had made that approach because he was moved by the look of genuine outrage on the face of one of the members of the Social Credit group. Then, lo and behold, there developed what he described as generous treatment of the Social Credit party in the House of Commons. That is the gist of the article. The hon. gentleman has confirmed in his statement that the article is correct. There is no explanation either from the hon. gentleman that later on, after he had had his private meeting with your Honour, other House leaders were called in.

I have been leader of the government in the House of Commons for quite a long time in the past, and never to this day have I called upon the present Speaker or the former Speaker, Mr. Lamoureux, in order to express my views as to what was going on in the House. Never.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I must say I often felt like it, but I never did because I understood the consequences of that particular kind of activity—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: —that a member of the government, with the authority of the government, waits upon the Speaker with respect to what the hon. gentleman described as the maintenance of peace in the House of Commons. Whose peace?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I hope the House does not forget the kind of atmosphere that prevailed in the House of Commons when I was a new member when a member of the government in the midst of a crisis in the House waited upon the Speaker.

There has been an impending crisis in the House of Commons and in the midst of it we are told that the President of the Privy Council has waited upon Your Honour. You have told us, and we accept your word, that representations did not influence your conduct in any way. But I object very much indeed that the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons would go privately to Your Honour and speak about matters relating to the operation of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. MacEachen: It is very serious. I confirm what Your Honour said, that you called others, my distinguished colleague from Winnipeg, myself and the President of the Privy Council, to discuss matters; but I do not recall that I was ever informed that that meeting had been preceded by a meeting with the President of the Privy Council. I may have been, but I do not recall. So I say to the President of the Privy Council that I intend to have more to say about it, because events occurred in the House of Commons, as my hon. friend said, which drawn together cast great skepticism upon the operations of the chamber.

Why was the member for Drummond not permitted to put his motion, which might have changed the whole course of events yesterday? Your Honour has given us a statement, and we accept it. Nevertheless, the question will linger in our minds. However, we have an even deeper question about the motives and conduct of the President of the Privy Council. I have had good relations with him but I am deeply regretful that he went to the Speaker privately.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Unbelievable.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is also in two parts. First of all, I find quite unacceptable that in our parliamentary system the integrity of the Chair can be brought under suspicion as irrespectfully and as irresponsibly even, as the government leader did in his statements to The Globe and Mail reporter. This is the first part of my question of privilege.

This is even more unacceptable since we have just heard the leader of the government in the House explain his position in this matter. He was interrupted by you, Mr. Speaker, when you noted that the representations that he made privately to you occurred on a Thursday, the day before the five Social Credit members left the House in such a—

An hon. Member: Dramatic manner!

Mr. Ouellet: —dramatic manner, as someone has just said. If this is true, I am much more willing to believe the Speaker of this House than the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). If it is true that he waited on you privately before the five Social Credit members left the House, then The Globe and Mail article is inaccurate since it states that Mr. Baker came to you because he was moved by the look of genuine outrage on the face of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) as he was leaving the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, either there has been another meeting of which we are not aware or else the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton deluded the members of the Social Credit into thinking that he would ask you to grant them a better treatment in the House to win the vote last evening.

Mr. Speaker, some facts have to be recalled in this House. As the government House leader spoke for a long time let me say this.

The difficulties of the Social Credit Party of Canada in gaining recognition in this House since the beginning of the session were created in the first place by the government leader himself. On opening day it was the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who rose to propose the names of hon. members who would form the striking committee of this House. Yet, he was the one who decided not to include a representative of the Social Credit Party of Canada.

He was the one who decided before anyone else in this House that the Social Credit party should not obtain official recognition as a party in the House of Commons. He was the one who decided not to allow this political group to be represented on the striking committee of this House. It was even his leader who went and raided the ranks of the Social Credit party to convince the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle) to join the Progressive Conservatives, thereby reducing by that much the representation of the Social Credit Party of Canada in this House. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the government leader had a lot to be forgiven by the Social Crediters. I do not know what happened.

I do not know what was arranged behind the curtains of this House but I do know that in today's edition of The Globe and Mail it is reported that Mr. Baker said in an interview that he had made representations to you to get a better treatment for the Social Credit Party of Canada. I believe that the office of Speaker of this House must remain completely objective and above those kinds of influences and deals which can only tarnish the good reputation of Parliament. I am prepared to take your word, Mr. Speaker. I am prepared to accept what you said earlier but I am really puzzled by the remarks just made by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton who, contrary to his customary eloquence and self-confidence, was today stuttering, imprecise and anxious to hide something from us. I wish, in the spirit of sincerity, honesty and co-operation with yourself, Mr. Speaker, he would tell us everything that happened and clearly specify not in an evasive way as he did, but clearly state what he did in an attempt to have the Social Crediters vote with the government to defeat last night's motion.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is a fundamental one because we believe at this time that the government House leader used you to hoodwink the Social Crediters, that he has deceived that political party and won a vote last night that he should normally have lost.

The second part of my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, relates precisely to what you said yourself yesterday as reported on page 1009 of Hansard, which I think was to the point and should be the element to be remembered from everything that has taken place these last few days concerning the Social Credit Party of Canada. You said that it seems that the Social Credit members should be allowed to participate as they are entitled to, since they are members of a political party and also because they form a group in the House, that they are five members all seated together in the House, and that they chose a leader, first, you said, so long as it does not give them an advantage that they would not otherwise enjoy as five members and, second, so long as it does not deprive other members of their right to participate in some way.

My question of privilege is the following, Mr. Speaker. I would have liked to take part in the debate yesterday. The House had before it a motion presented by the official opposition. It was, according to our rules, an opposition day, in fact our day. What happened? We see from the last pages of Hansard, where there is a list of all members who took part in yesterday's debate, that among those who were recognized there were four government members, four Progressive Conservatives, out of 136 in the House, two of the 26 members of the New Democratic Party, one of the five members of the Social Credit Party of Canada and four Liberal members out of 112. So, here is what citation 301 of Beauchesne, fifth edition, says. I noted that citation a while ago. Citation 301 reads as follows:

● (1540)

[English]

It is customary for the Speaker to try to arrange for speakers, for and against the motion, in a reasonable rotation.

[Translation]

If, on a day allotted to the official opposition which is called the loyal opposition and also has its rights and privileges here in the House of Commons, as many members of other political parties as there were yesterday are to be recognized, I say it is clearly an infringement on the rights and privileges of other members. I think that you spoke wisely yesterday when you talked about the right to recognize, sometimes, a member—

Mr. Speaker: I must correct the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) because he referred to the fact that according to him, there were four Progressive Conservatives, I believe out of 136, the fourth of whom was the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle) who spoke at 9.44 last night, and then for only one minute. That was merely to start a new round, but in fact there were only three active participants among the Progressive Conservatives, four among the Liberals, two among the NDP and only one Social Crediter.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Ouellet: I accept the correction of the Speaker. If we refer to what happened last night we see that in fact the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) intervened in the debate with a long question that took up part of the time which should normally have been allotted the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle). In any event, it is essential, Mr. Speaker, that you keep in mind that the five hon. members who are called the Social Credit Party of Canada have chosen a leader as they had the right to do, but that there is also a political reality that is supreme, Mr. Speaker, that stands way above all the rules we may adopt here in this House of Commons, and that is that the people of Canada had the opportunity to decide, at the time of our recently held election, that the Social Credit party presented candidates, and that the people having expressed its will, denied that party the 12 members who would have allowed the so-called leader to receive the additional salary as leader of a party. Attempts have been made to build a case for the Social Credit Party of Canada and give it a special place in this House because its history goes back quite some time.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is important to recall that in the days of Mr. Thompson and Mr. Caouette, the Social Credit party was truly a national party with candidates in several provinces of Canada. Since the waning political party led by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) was not even in a position to run candidates in every Quebec constituency and had no candidate in any other Canadian province, therefore it is neither a national party nor the group led by Mr. Caouette or Mr. Thompson, but it has become a small regional party which has some rights and privileges. We on this side do not intend to deny to those democratically elected members the right to take part in the proceedings of the House, the right to speak here, the right to uphold the interests of their electors who trusted them.

However, I think that you rightly stated yesterday Mr. Speaker that rights and privileges should not be granted to that small party. I knew what I said when a while ago I used the word "waning" because this party is fading away. Mr. Speaker, it should not be granted rights that will unduly reduce the rights and privileges which with good reason belong to the loyal opposition in the House. I think that in the future, on opposition days, either those of the Liberal party which constitutes the official opposition or those of the New Democratic Party which ran candidates in all provinces and is truly a national party which may speak in the House, as I said, on those opposition days of the Liberal Party or the NDP, Mr. Speaker, you should not recognize each time a member from the Social Credit Party of Canada. Otherwise you would infringe upon those rights and privileges that the Liberal party and the NDP were given by Canadian voters during the last election, on May 22. If the Social Crediters want to have more rights in the House they should try to have more members elected. Only then shall we respect them for what they will rightly be but not until such time.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, for quite awhile I was determined to sit this one out, but things have been said, particularly about Your Honour, which make me feel I must say a few words.

Before I come to the main point that brings me to my feet, namely the reference to Your Honour, I should like to say a few words about the situation with respect to the position of the Social Credit party in this House. It has been a difficult one, and whatever may have been said or done on the floor or at meetings among House leaders, it is my conviction that Your Honour from the chair has been doing your best to straighten the matter out in terms of fairness and in terms of generosity, the word you used yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: The record is quite clear that when I spoke on October 9 on the motion for setting up the striking committee my position was, if anything, a bit severe. I was concerned, as were all my colleagues, over the possibility that immediate and wholesale recognition of the Social Credit group as a party could have a bearing particularly on the question period, as a result of which we would suffer. We believed we might lose some of the rights we felt we had earned by the increased numbers returned to Parliament to sit in this corner of the Chamber.

I have been looking over what I said that day and I find nothing wrong with it, nothing that needs to be corrected. The debate and the vote that day solved the problem in part, making it clear that the Social Credit group is a small party and that certain things which they might claim, they do not necessarily need to have. But it did not solve the whole problem. The matter of their rights in the question period, the matter of their order in debate together with a few other considerations were left to the Chair, and I find that in my remarks I made a plea that that be the case.

I felt yesterday that Your Honour's submission was an excellent one. You pointed out that what has to be considered is just simple arithmetic. I believe there is far too much discussion around the words "status" and "recognition". Those words have no real meaning. The Liberals are recognized as having the status of a party in this House. We are also recognized as having the status of a party in this House, but that does not give us the same rights the Liberals have. It does not allow us the number of questions in the question period the Liberals are allowed, and there are many other things where we have to take second place because we are 26 as opposed to their 112. There are remarks from the back which I hope are on the record as to the kind of opposition party we are, but that is irrelevant to this debate.

● (1600)

My point is that, in my view, Your Honour was quite correct yesterday in saying that from the chair you have to look at the arithmetic of the situation and that you have faced the fact that the Social Credit members in this House call themselves Social Crediters, are a party and have a leader. If there are rights to individuals and to minorities, I think all minority parties, including the Liberals, should be recognizing those rights. I am prepared to leave in your hands, sir, the protection of the rights of all members of this House whether on the government side, in the official opposition, in our corner or in the corner opposite.

I do not like some of the suggestions which have been made, particularly by the last speaker, which seem to be that we should take that right away from Your Honour. In my view you have had a difficult task in handling this situation during this last month, but I think that instead of your being criticized, you should be commended.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I suspect that the problem of this relationship will last as long as this Parliament lasts, but in the meantime I contend that we should pay attention to, and perhaps even read again, the words of Your Honour yesterday when you ruled on the question of the spot in the day when you would see and hear the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy).

However, I am not sure even yet that I would have taken the time of the House to make these remarks were it not for the fact that I felt that other things which have been said today made it necessary for me to get to my feet. I know from experience, and most members of this House know from experience or from their reading of history, that the integrity of the Chair and the respect of all members for the Chair is a basic sine qua non to the operation of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I do not like the suggestion that in one way or another you, sir, have been involved in some conspiracy or some arrangement somehow connected with how members would vote on a certain motion. My friends to my right do not like it, but they have come awfully close in what they have said today to impugning the Chair. I do not believe that should be done unless there is a case for it and one is prepared to go all the way. I know of one such occasion. I participated in the debate when there was a motion to criticize the Chair, and that Parliament was one of the sorry ones in the history of this country. Let us not get anywhere near that sort of thing.

Because my name has been mentioned two or three times, I want to give what evidence I can about the situation. I do not know everybody's conversation with everybody else, but I know that Your Honour called me one morning and told me that you would like me, with others, to come to a meeting in your chambers. In that telephone conversation Your Honour indicated quite openly and without any question that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) had expressed concern to you about the mood of the House because of the Social Credit situation and that you had made a decision as to what you were going to do. I believed you then, and I believe you now. You called us in and told us that you had decided that the Social Crediters were entitled to roughly three questions a week in the question period and that you planned that day to call on the hon. member for Beauce for a question during the first round. You wanted to let us know. You made it clear that you were not asking for us to confirm your decision. You were not consulting us; you were letting us know.

Miss Jewett: Was Allan there?

Mr. Knowles: I am asked whether the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) was there. I forget whether he was there, nor can I remember whether the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) was there. I see that you are nodding your head, sir. Perhaps the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso was there, but the point is that we were told that this would be the plan.

Mr. Speaker: I might as well refresh the memory of the House again. The hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso was there, and he indicated he would not want to accept or reject that suggestion without taking it up first with the caucus of his party.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, now that you have raised the point, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said that he received a telephone call from you telling him what had taken place earlier or later. I want to make it clear that I received no such telephone call.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I give evidence of the things of which I am aware. I know I was told, and there was nothing which gave me any indication that the conversation between the President of the Privy Council and the Chair was a conversation in which pressure was put on the Chair to take a certain course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I am not concerned about protecting the reputation of the President of the Privy Council; he can look after himself. But I am concerned, for the sake of this House, about the reputation of the Chair. If I had thought at that point that there was any suggestion of a kind of governmental pressure being put on the Chair and that the Chair was paying any attention to it, I can assure you, sir, that I would have given you some avuncular advice. However, I certainly did not feel it to be necessary, and my feeling throughout the whole piece is that you have tried to handle the matter on your own as fairly and honestly as you could.

You Honour may have made some mistakes. You have already admitted that you may have made a mistake yesterday in not letting the hon. member for Drummond put his motion under Standing Order 29. We can discuss that back and forth. We can discuss the question of how we are going to get along in the House as long as this Parliament lasts. But one thing I do not want this Parliament to do is question the honesty or the integrity of the Chair unless there is absolute evidence, in which case we go the whole way.

The Globe and Mail can make its assertions. An editorial writer from another newspaper in another city telephoned me this morning. I suppose he had read The Globe and Mail and he asked me whether I thought it was true. Over the telephone I said categorically that I was convinced that it was not true.

Mr. Ouellet: It is not for you to defend the President of Privy Council, and that is waht you are doing.

Mr. Knowles: Not at all. Apparently there is no denial of the fact that the President of Privy Council talked with Your Honour, but the point I want to make is that I am satisfied from Your Honour's reporting to me about that conversation that it was not a case of governmental influence or governmental pressure on the Chair. That I regard as completely out of court, and I think the President of Privy Council may have made a mistake in going to Your Honour on his own.

Mr. Ouellet: Of course he did.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Knowles: It might have been better had he asked Your Honour to call a meeting of all of us. I said a moment ago that it might have been a mistake, and now I will say it was a mistake. My main concern is that this House have respect for the Chair, that there be no question about the integrity of the Chair, and I insist that any suggestion that the Chair was involved in how certain members would vote last night or that the Chair has been doing things at the bidding of the government is not fair to the Chair or to this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it might be appropriate for me to intervene very briefly here. With respect to the article in The Globe and Mail, I attempted to point out to the House early in these discussions that there was an aspect of that report in the newspaper which had to be incorrect because it seemed to me to indicate that if the President of Privy Council had made a representation, he made it as a result of the look on the faces of the Creditistes when they left the House. In fact, I pointed out to the House that the only thing which could have been interpreted, in my opinion, as any such representation by the President of Privy Council was on the day before that took place.

The second thing is that if that is to be interpreted as a representation, then I think we are setting on our course of conduct here a set of scruples which we may have to observe. However, my recollection is simply this. On that day the President of Privy Council had a suggestion to make to me, as has happened on several occasions not just by him but by other members of the House of Commons. The tone of the suggestion was very much: I have a suggestion to make for your consideration. Is it worth discussing with the other House leaders? That is as regular as clockwork in this building.

In turn, before coming into the chamber on that day and in fact recognizing one of the members of that party, I spoke with the other two House leaders and said: This has been suggested to me. What do you think of it? That was only one of several discussions which we had subsequent to that concerning what to do about this particular situation. Also I may say that I had several deputations, single, double and triple, from members of the Social Credit party who came to me to plead their case. There was nothing extraordinary about that. They indicated that they were fighting for more than simply a question or two; it was a matter of principle that they had set and so on. There was nothing irregular in any event, and I do not think any of it is a surprise to the House.

I want to set the record straight. It may have been, in the most scrupulous of standards, a mistake, as has been said, for the President of Privy Council to have done this, but I never considered it to be a representation. It was a suggestion that was made to me. The tone of it was ordinary, that I would take it up with the other two House leaders, which I did. It may very well be that that kind of conversation with one member ought never to take place. If that is the case, certainly

I am prepared to follow that standard of conduct. But it eliminates something which I have done on a regular basis for five years with all kinds of senior and junior members of this House who have, in the corridor here, or on other occasions, simply put a question to me.

I put a case in point. A new member of the House of Commons, a day or two after the original vote, spoke to me to ask about whether the vote had the significance the House had attached to it. We discussed it.

Mr. MacEachen: But there is a difference.

Mr. Speaker: There is a difference, I grant, but if there is any suggestion that a representation to me carries with it some later pressure from the government, of course that would be something I and the House would reject out of hand.

I accept in all seriousness the point raised by the hon. members who are here today. I want to assure the House—and I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said so—that at that time the discussion was very brief: a minute or a minute and a half, almost passing in the corridor. A suggestion, it seemed to me, was being put forward for discussion with the other House leaders. There was no suggestion of anything other than that. I am sure my response was that I would, in turn, take it up with the other House leaders, and I did.

I do not want to appear to be rushing to the defence of the President of Privy Council any more than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre does. But at the same time I want to say that I did not take this suggestion at the time it was made, as anything more than a brief suggestion. My immediate reaction was to say that I would take it up with the other House leaders, which I did. It was a suggestion we have discussed several times since that time.

Furthermore, I want to conclude by saying that not since that day more than two weeks ago—and during which time I have tried to decide how to deal with the Social Credit party during question period—has the President of Privy Council spoken a single word to me about the status of the Social Credit party in the House.

Mr. Pinard: Contrary to the report in The Globe and Mail.

Mr. Speaker: Contrary entirely to the report in The Globe and Mail.

Mr. Pinard: Which he did not deny.

Mr. Speaker: All right, but I only put the record straight. I understand entirely that the members who raised this point exercised two or three things: first, it would appear in the content of the article that there is more than a suggestion; there is a statement in the article that in fact the President of Privy Council took responsibility for offering participation in question period. It is something he does not have to offer. That is under the control only of the Chair. The second error is that which I have pointed out to the House. The third touches a position of a political party in the House upon which the members have been outspoken. I recognize that is a very serious point. The fourth relates to the matter which was very discretionary and upon which I confess a very strict interpretation of the rules was applied against the hon. member for Drummond last night.

I think the point is very serious; it needed airing and it needed exposure. I hope the House has benefited from it. If it is necessary to be super scrupulous in the future in terms of conversations with the House leaders, that can be done. But I hope that it will not eliminate forever and a day the time that a House leader may express to me a suggestion which I might take up with other parties of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, there are only two points I should like to make, but first of all I should like to assure you that nobody on this side criticized you or questioned your integrity and honesty.

Mr. Speaker, we have the greatest respect not only for your duties but also for your person. We have known Your Honour for quite some time and nobody criticize or even tried to criticize your decision.

The two points I should like to make are these: first, the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) has dared the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) to tells us that the article published by The Globe and Mail is false as regards not only the facts, but also the motives it attributes to him.

An hon. Member: He refused.

Mr. Breau: But, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about these motives, they might very well be motives unknown to you. It is quite possible that some discussions are going on outside the House, some negotiations you know nothing about. We have nothing whatsoever against the fact that you, as Speaker of the House, agree to discuss with a member, be it a minister, the House leader of the government or a new member. Indeed you have always done that and we want you to continue doing that. Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said a moment ago, nobody criticized your decision or doubted your integrity. The member for Drummond never talked about a conspiracy involving the Chair and the government. What he said was that there is a series of facts and that from them some persons could draw conclusions and that we want to clarify the situation. But what we note this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is not that you have not correctly answered the question, you have, and it never crossed our minds that you had been influenced by the President of Privy Council, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. What we do note is that he did not have the courage to deny—

An hon. Member: He is afraid.

Mr. Breau: —to take up the hon. member for Drummond's challenge to deny the intentions that The Globe and Mail report attributed to him. What we take exception to, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, is not that you agreed to see him, but that he probably tried to negotiate with a group from this House in order to get their support, that he decided to act in this way, as government leader, with all the power and weight that supposes, because we must realize that it is the government which is in effect responsible for what goes on in the House.

Mr. Speaker, it was the President of Privy Council, a member of Parliament and a senior government minister who decided to try to see you with the hope of perhaps getting the support of another group. It is not that you agreed to see him but that he, in the hope of gaining another group's support by making them an offer, decided to go and see you. That is what we object to, Mr. Speaker, and not that you agreed to see him.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, following the question of privilege that has just been raised, I do not wish to rub it in. As we always say: in front of wolves, one has to howl with the pack. And I will honestly admit that this afternoon, I was rather afraid that your brothers of yesterday would devour you because you refused to howl along with them. It breaks their heart that we should be recognized in the House. I would now like to tell the public that it is not up to political parties in the House, not up to our opponents to decide whether or not we are entitled to speak, whether or not we are entitled to sit here, because our electors have decided that themselves.

So I would not want to dwell any longer on this, Mr. Speaker. In his remarks a while ago, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) took it upon himself to comment on last night's vote. I regret that very much, but it is definitely not very distinguished and not very sincere to comment on the vote by one of our colleagues in the House. Perhaps in the heat of the debate the hon. member wanted to imply that the decision had influenced our vote yesterday. I would ask him simply to withdraw his words because this is not the case. We simply voted against a motion that did not make sense, a hypocritical motion, a motion that was introduced only for politicking purposes. So I would ask the hon. member kindly to withdraw his remarks. If he is a man, he is going to withdraw. I never insinuated things like the ones he mentioned this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Papineau.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Rimouski is asking me to withdraw remarks I cannot withdraw because I did not make them. He undoubtedly misunderstood my intervention. I brought to your attention the fact that on an opposition day assigned to the Liberal party, the official opposition in this House, four Liberal members out of 112—or 113, if we include you—Liberal members elected to the Parliament of Canada were recognized whereas by recognizing two members of the New Democratic Party and one member of the Social Credit Party of Canada, three members who in the end hold only 31 seats in this House got a representation in that debate that is not proportionate to what they should have had.

I know that earlier the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the great expert on procedure, referred to mathematical considerations. He reminded you that the way we should treat members of the Social Credit Party of Canada from now on is not as if they were a recognized political formation. Social Crediters are not recognized in this House, even if they say they are or if certain reporters make headlines by saying that the Social Credit party is finally recognized. It is not, it was not recognized by the President of Privy Council who did not want to give them representation on the steering committee. It was not recognized by you when you clearly explained that five members claiming to be members of a political formation are not enough to have all the powers and privileges inherent in a recognized national party in this House. They are not recognized and they cannot be recognized unless they have the opportunity in a future election to have enough members elected.

But what we do not deny them, Mr. Speaker—and I want this to be very clear in the mind of the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard)—we on this side of the House, as members of the Liberal party, do not deny them the right to speak in this House. They have the right to speak as long as they want but not when it should be members of the Liberal party who obtained more votes and more seats in this House than they did. It is as simple as that, Mr. Speaker. That is the point I made and I make again, and I hope the hon. member for Rimouski will understand that there are certain privileges in this House. We are very pleased when they exercise these privileges, but we do not want them to step on our feet and take some of our time when we are the ones who truly represent the largest part of Quebec voters voting in the Parliament of Canada.

• (1620)

[English]

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is a pity the Chair has had to suffer the "usual accuracy" of the press. I doubt Your Honour will receive an apology from the press, even as those of us who sit below you do not receive apologies when we are misquoted and otherwise go through the tortures of the damned.

I do want to make two points. The first is the point made by the former president of the privy council, that he himself did not see any Speaker when he was the government House leader, a practice that should be followed by all future House leaders. I think the dangers of that kind of procedure are obvious to us today when we find ourselves in a situation which is most uncomfortable and quite embarrassing.

I believe there are two points that have not been raised. The first point has regard to the meeting that took place between Your Honour and the House leaders to discuss the role of the Social Credit group at question period. I am not prepared to say whether three questions a week are too many or too little, but I do not think that was the question at issue. What we are discussing is what happened yesterday when the leader of the Social Credit group was given preference in a party way over a speaker from this side of the House. That was a different principle than what had been discussed at the meeting of the House leaders. That is quite significant, because if that practice is to be followed in all debates it will mean that the Social Credit group would be recognized fourth on every round. I do not think that was discussed at those meetings, and I think if that were to be the case, I would be most vociferously opposed to any kind of process under those lines.

I think it is important to keep in mind that we are discussing two things; the question period, which was discussed by the House leaders; and secondly what happened yesterday under your decision, which was in this particular case that the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) could be heard immediately after the speaker for the NDP. I feel strongly about that because the normal process has been that when a political party puts forward a motion on a supply day that party usually is allowed the extra speaker if there is one to be allocated. Yesterday, the first supply day we have had, we did not receive the benefit of that extra speaker.

The second point I want to make is that, however justified the position the Social Credit members have taken, with the dilemma in which they find themselves, and the dilemma in which the rest of the members of the House find themselves, we do find it surprising, to say the least, that a solution was found immediately before the vote last night.

It may well be that there has been considerable discussion going on, but as the hon. member for London West (Mr. Buchanan) put it today, Calvin Coolidge, who said "the business of the United States is business", was right in that it seems to me that the business of the President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) is to make sure that the government stays in power. It is very upsetting to me that this kind of apparent buying and selling should take place in such a blatant way on the floor of the House of Commons.

I feel very strongly that there are legitimate bargaining points political parties can have. I think, for example, of the demands the hon. member for Beauce made in terms of guaranteeing oil supply, employment programs and what-not. They are entirely legitimate, but the resolution of this problem taking place in the way in which it did, immediately before the vote last night, could do nothing but cause suspicion on the part of those of us on this side of the House, and certainly can cause nothing but suspicion in terms of the electors who elected that government over there and those members who sit to its right.

The last point, Mr. Speaker, is that it is most regrettable that the Chair has been implicated, however indirectly, in this kind of play. Whether it was done deliberately or accidentally, the fact of the matter is that in this particular case the President of Privy Council by a conjunction of circumstances has served to cause a great deal of suspicion for those of us on this side to overcome as to what actually went on. We feel that is most regrettable, and we feel it is going to be necessary under the circumstances of this minority government for the Chair and for members of all parties to consider again how to conduct themselves because of the example we have had from the government to date.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief as the debate is already quite protracted and everybody, I believe, tried to give some explanations. I would like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that I supported the motion moved yesterday under Standing Order 29 by the member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard). I would also like to draw your attention to what the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said about minorities in the House. That is extremely important. I believe that in your decision you said you had to protect certain minorities, about the risk of misinterpretation concerning minorities in the House, but in my opinion there are no minorities in the House. I believe that all members are equal in the House.

There might be a risk, if we accept the explanation given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre about minorities, and it is that it could be very easy for me to say: Well, listen, I am a Francophone in Canada, I belong to a minority, I must also be recognized as a member of a minority in the House and I am entitled to your protection, Mr. Speaker, because I am a Francophone and because I am a member of a minority. I think that is extremely dangerous. If we are to accept the arguments of the member for Winnipeg North Centre, and to a certain extent what you said, this might mean danger for this chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to the decision you took yesterday concerning the motion moved by my colleague from Drummond. Today you explained the reasons for your decision and I accept them. I supported the member for Drummond yesterday, but I believe that all the discussion today was to be expected, when we tried yesterday to show what was going on in the House. Mr. Speaker, I therefore draw your attention one more time to the fact that I do not believe that there are minorities in the House. I believe that all members are treated as equal. It is to this point that I would like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to intervene in the debate again, but I feel I should. At the outset I indicated that what you said with respect to what had occurred was within my recollection and my knowledge of the circumstances, and I thought that that would have been enough for my colleagues on the other side of the House; but given their state of paranoia, I guess it was not.

I repeat that statement for their benefit so that it will not be lost to them. I share very much the concern that was expressed by the House leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), with respect to the statements made by the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who seemed to imply that a member of this House of Commons, whether a minister or otherwise, could somehow speak to the Speaker and influence the Speaker of this House of Commons. I guess I must have much more faith than does the hon. member for Papineau in the judgment and integrity of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: It was you who spoke to him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It would be a most inappropriate act for any member, minister or otherwise, to go and speak to the Speaker with respect to making a representation or driving a Speaker to a decision on something. It would be a very sorry day in this House if any member of Parliament did not have the right, either singly or otherwise, to go and speak to the Speaker. You yourself, sir, alluded to the possibility that that sense of openness with your office may have to be reconsidered. I hope that that will never be the case, because it would not be appropriate to the proper functioning of this House of Commons.

If my going to you, sir, under those circumstances should ever cause you to change the status quo, I would regret that very much. I think that the understanding that I have of your position and of my position is one of respect for our different roles in this House of Commons. I indicated as articulately as I could what I thought my own role was with respect not only to my own party, but with respect to the House of Commons as well.

There is another matter that I wish to raise, and it is with respect to the remark made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) to the effect that somehow the government House leader was, and I think his words were, "apparently buying and selling votes on the floor". I hope I will be forgiven if I refer for my best example as to the role of a government House leader in trying to seek compromises among parties in the House that will keep the government in power to page seven of the document which I quoted from earlier, where there is a description of the opposition House leader. The hon. member is a respected parliamentarian, and I respect him as a parliamentarian, as the opposition House leader and as a colleague, as I respect the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In any event, I would like to read from this paper, because I think it is apropos of what my friend from Kenora-Rainy River has said. Here is a description of the opposition House leader:

> He was a respected parliamentarian and, as his mentor Lester Pearson described, an old smoothie. MacEachen, a Liberal left-winger, had advised Pearson during his early minority governments and served in several ministerial posts—

We are referring here to the 1972-74 Parliament when the government was a minority one. He goes on to say this:

> During this time a lasting friendship, based on mutual respect, developed between Stanley Knowles, the NDP House leader, and MacEachen. His negotiating skills contributed immeasurably to the government's survival.

In that case I suspect that the opposition House leader—and they are both blushing now—when he was government House leader did his job very well. He contributed to the government's survival. That is my job now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I would hate to have what I regard as an honourable practice, in which I emulate my colleague from across the way, described as merely "apparently buying and selling votes on the floor of the House of Commons". It is an appropriate parliamentary practice.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is quoted in the same document at page eight. I think that it is quite important that I put this in context, and I would like to read what he said.

Mr. Pinard: What about The Globe and Mail?

An hon. Member: Do you deny it? Answer yes or no.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The document reads—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The document reads:

> During this period the Liberals, to survive, depended on co-operation with the New Democrats. Stanley Knowles and Allan MacEachen could, as House leaders, meet several times a week to negotiate even though their parties were officially "stand-offish". Mr. Knowles explained:
>
> "If David Lewis were seen dealing with John Turner (Finance Minister), there would be an awful fuss, but Allan and I can meet as often as we wish and it is perfectly natural".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I would like to read one more paragraph:

> In fact Mr. MacEachen arranged meetings between Knowles and Health Minister Lalonde to bargain about raising the Old Age Pension. Any increase would have to appease the NDP without appalling the Liberals.

That is an indication of the difficult job of a House leader in a minority Parliament.

Mr. Pinard: How does this relate to the Speaker?

Mr. Breau: Did he talk to the Speaker?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the statement made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and trying to refute that statement. I think it was quite appropriate to read those statements in.

I have said twice now, and I will say it a third time, that I thought that the exposition you made at the outset of this matter arising in the House of Commons was quite correct. Your explanation, sir, is my explanation of what went on.

I am not the master of the pen of the reporter of The Globe and Mail!

Mr. Pinard: Do you deny it?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If there is some issue with respect to timing in the report in The Globe and Mail, as to when I looked and saw a look of outrage on the face of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert)—and it was certainly there—I do apologize for not indicating it.

I hope that as a result of this matter you, as Speaker of the House, sir, will not develop a closed door policy. If I may say so without being over-weaning, one thing which has been a pleasure to me in this House, whether I was in the position I am today or whether I sat where my friend the opposition House leader now sits, is that you, sir, did in fact, quite appropriately, come forward on the matter. You, sir, were always open to representations by members.

Mr. Breau: If you have any guts, deny The Globe and Mail article.

• (1640)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do hope that continues. If, sir, I have put you in an embarrassing position—

Mr. Whelan: What have you done to that reporter?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —if I have done that, then I would be the first to apologize. I want you to understand that, because I feel I have the responsibility toward this House and toward you as Speaker of this House of Commons.

An hon. Member: What about The Globe and Mail?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are now seven other members who seek the floor. The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne).

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege on the remarks just made by the President of Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) responded to a request by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard). He took quite a lot of time to reargue the point, I thought. If he has anything arising out of what has just been said I will hear him, but there are seven other members who have yet to intervene and I think I have to hear them first. The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Globe and Mail—

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, are you telling me I will be recognized at a later date this afternoon?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): —reports, and I quote:

Mr. Baker said in an interview that he made some representations to Speaker James Jerome on behalf of the Socreds because he was moved by Socred Adrien Lambert's look of genuine outrage when the five-member Quebec party recently walked out of the House in protest.

This afternoon in the arguments, sir, you said at the outset that the House leader of the government had made no representations to you, and obviously we accept your word. Later, in his own intervention, the government House leader said that he had spoken to you but he could not remember the date. At that point you reminded him that the date was the Thursday, the day before the Socred members walked out of the House of Commons.

I think the government House leader owes it to you and to this House to get up in this House and either deny outright and categorically the story in The Globe and Mail, or make an outright apology to all members of this House. Nothing less will do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some comments on two points that are before us today. The first refer to the comments in The Globe and Mail. I think the Liberal member had a right to raise that question but I think you have made it very clear, Mr. Speaker, that you were not influenced by any discussions that may or may not have taken place. Perhaps the members of the Liberal party do not think the government House leader has denied it as vigorously as he should.

An hon. Member: He has not.

Mr. Nystrom: They are saying he has not. They are saying he did not deny it, so I think, Mr. Speaker, that they may be questioning your word to this House as well.

What I want to say to the members of this House is that they are on very serious ground here. They are close to imputing motives as to what the Speaker has said to the House.

Some hon. Members: No way.

Mr. Nystrom: The Speaker has said very clearly that he was not influenced in any way whatsoever by what may or may not have happened.

Mr. Breau: That is not the only issue.

Mr. Nystrom: If Liberal members believe that you have been, then we are getting on to very dangerous ground. I think we should take the word of the Speaker as it was, namely that he was not influenced. If they have more evidence and if they are going to have to pursue that, I think that is a very dangerous course.

My second point concerns the Social Credit members of this House. An hon. member has said, "There are no minorities, we are all the same." I realize that if we do not have, perhaps, any official recognition of political parties in this House, we do have de facto recognition of parties in this House. We do have groups. We have the Liberal party, we have our party, and then we have a group of five other people who choose to call themselves Social Crediters. They may not have 12 members but they ran on behalf of the Social Credit party of this country. Five were elected and they received some 4 per cent of the votes in this country. So I think they have to be given a status as more than just individual members.

An hon. Member: No way.

Mr. Nystrom: May I remind the House that a democracy is judged on how that democracy treats its minorities. I think that is pretty important.

The Speaker has basically said that he is trying to be fair and using arithmetic will recognize members of the Social Credit party roughly three times every week. Sometimes he may recognize one of them on a series of lead-off questions and on other days I assume he will not. Because they have five members in the House, however, every once in a while they deserve a lead-off question, just as every once in a while, in fairness, the leader or someone else from that party should have the right to make a statement after the leaders of the other parties.

From what the Speaker said yesterday, I gather he is not going to follow that as a precedent. He did it yesterday but I am sure from what he said that it is not his intention to do so on every important statement. But because the Social Credit party have five members in the House, we have 26 and the Liberal have 112, they deserve a certain percentage of the opportunities to speak on the first round of debate. That is only fair.

I think that is all you are trying to say, Mr. Speaker. You are trying to balance things and use arithmetic in the fairest way possible.

I plead with this House to leave that question in the hands of the Speaker and to trust to the discretion of the Speaker to be fair to the Social Credit group in the House, as the Speaker, I think, is being fair to those of us grouped in the other three parties in this House.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, there is an essential question that I believe has to be clarified by you, sir. Certainly it is my observation that there is no question whatsoever as to the integrity of the Chair. With respect, since the opening of this House when we had a motion before the House on which we voted, it was soundly expressed by all members of this House that we would agreed with the government leader that the Creditiste members of this House would not be named to the committees when striking the committees of this House.

I think that laid the very fundamental groundwork for guidelines that would be followed by you, sir, in terms of whether you would recognize Social Credit members as an official party in this House.

I am sure that all members have been wondering where the direction would come from on this question, whether you had the absolute authority to state, and would state it in the House publicly, that you would not recognize members of the Social Credit party as an official party within the House of Commons. The government House leader has indicated that they have taken their decision that the Social Credit would not be permitted the privilege of being named to committees of the House. They made their position very clear, that they were not recognizing the Social Credit party as a party within this House.

We then went to a vote, Mr. Speaker, which, as I understand, it is the essence of Parliament. We voted on the matter and we were very clear. It was a case of five members voting against all the other members on that question. We said in a vote of this House of Commons that they would not be permitted to be recognized when we were striking the committees of the House of Commons.

I took it that you would also incorporate that decision of the House of Commons as grounds for your future rulings and decisions and interpret it to mean that the Creditiste members of the House of Commons were sitting as independents and not as an official national party within the terms and definition of political parties in Canada as we understand them.

I believe that the five individual, regional members from one province who sit in the House today as members of the Social Credit party are in no better position than was the former member for Moncton when he sat here and complained that he could not be recognized at meetings of the standing committees of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to stop the hon. member but he is rearguing a matter that we have had before us now for four weeks. The question of privilege that we have before us today relates to a report in The Globe and Mail about an action of the President of Privy Council. I tried to make my position as clear to the House as I possibly could, but I shall repeat it so that the House will understand.

I thought I made it abundantly clear in my decision yesterday that the decision whether or not a group is a political party is not just taken inside this House; it is taken elsewhere. What I simply was expressing to the House yesterday was that in certain circumstances, since members of the Social Credit group were entitled to something, they ought to be able occasionally to have that entitlement in a way which recognized their position as a political party. Yesterday, the decision we were talking about was not whether the hon. member for Beauce was going to debate; it was a question of when. Similarly in question period, it is not whether a member of the Social Credit party is going to participate in the question period; it is when and how. Those are the only two questions we are talking about.

Yesterday, the list that I assumed when I came into the Chair had the hon. member for Beauce listed just after the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). The effect of my intervention was to change the order, that is all.

• (1650)

I was also at pains to say yesterday, and to make it perfectly clear, that had yesterday's debate been on a Wednesday afternoon, which then would have concluded at six o'clock, I would not have recognized anyone from the Social Credit party. To do so would have given them participation in excess of their significance as a group of five members.

I do not know how to make it any clearer. All I am attempting to do is to give to them what is their right and entitlement, but to give it in a way that simply recognizes that they are a political party. There are many dangers in attempting to adjust the minority here because mathematics do not always fit. You cannot adjust participation with scientific precision. The number five does not always divide into the other numbers in the House. For example, three members of the Social Credit party—and incidentally this is an event which went almost unnoticed—participated in the throne speech debate. That happens to represent 60 per cent of their total membership in the House. No other party in the House had anything like that percentage participation. However, if that number had been one less, perhaps we could have adjusted participation a little more accurately. It was an eight day debate but the fact that three members got up over a period of eight days did not alarm the House. If you try to apply a mathematical formula, the Social Credit members began in the very first debate with far more representation than they were entitled to as a group of five. But at that time nobody was calling them a political party.

I think we have to recognize that no matter how they are described or thought of in the minds of members, either inside of the House or outside of it, they are still entitled to some participation. My only intervention was to give them that participation to which they are entitled, and in a way that recognizes their position as a party and nothing more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief. I hope that in no way would this debate be a reflection upon you. The issue is quite clearly generated by an article in The Globe and Mail which makes reference to certain alleged remarks made by the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker). The other issue of whether the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) should or should not have been recognized you have dealt with, for the moment at least, to my satisfaction. But as to the issue whether or not the President of Privy Council did or did not say those things, no matter whether he tells us today that he did not treat them as representations when he went to see you, unless he stands up and says that The Globe and Mail report is inaccurate, deliberately or otherwise, in what it said, then he and he alone is the issue in this discussion. It is his actions alone that are the issue in this discussion.

I have known, as my colleague the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen), has known, the President of Privy Council for some years. I have said publicly that I have respect for him. He has risen two or three times in this debate, but not once have I heard him unequivocally say that The Globe and Mail has misreported him absolutely. He has not done that. That cannot but leave doubt in people's minds as to whether he talked to The Globe and Mail, whether he said that, or whether he was reported accurately in whole or in part. That means that he thought, and repeated to somebody else, if it is accurately reported, that his meeting with you was in fact a representation. That leaves a serious doubt about the motivation of the hon. member. For his own sake and to clear up the doubt left in this debate, he should deny it unequivocally, categorically and in detail.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion there are two points that have been raised which deserve clarification, not just for what has passed, but for what lies ahead.

It seems to me the first question is the status of the Social Credit party. I want to reiterate the remarks that have been made by my House leader, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I know it is hard for hon. members to listen when they are not speaking, but I would appreciate it if they could try to recognize that parties even smaller than theirs sometimes have contributions to make to a debate.

The status of the Social Credit party has been accurately stated by yourself. Whether or not the Liberal party recognizes the Social Credit party is irrelevant. In my view, that needs to be stated. It is obvious from what has been said consistently since the election that the Liberal party does not recognize the Social Credit party. With respect, that is of philosophical interest to those members who take that point of view.

I respectfully suggest that although it is a small party with only five members—

Mr. Breau: Who are you to change the law?

Mr. Rae: I am not changing any law. I would not try to change the law. I was simply recognizing what are sociological and political facts. If a party presents itself in an election as a party—

Mr. Breau: That is not what the law says.

Mr. Rae: —and is elected to the House of Commons as a party—

Mr. Breau: You read the House of Commons Act.

Mr. Rae: —then for some purposes that party is a party. I suggest to Liberal members here that they ask the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) whether when he sat for five years in the Manitoba legislature he sat as an independent or as leader, the only member and a one-man band for the Liberal party, just as Mr. Notley sits as a single member and leader—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: Obviously I have touched a sensitive chord of the New Democratic Party in the province of Alberta.

An hon. Member: What about The Globe and Mail?

Mr. Rae: We will get to The Globe and Mail. The point I want to make, despite the interruptions and barracking from the party to my far right, the Liberal party, is that it is up to you, Mr. Speaker, not the Liberal Party of Canada, to decide who speaks in this House, and in what order. It is not up to the Liberal party to decide upon the allocation of questions nor upon the allocation of recognition in this House.

An hon. Member: That is not the point.

Mr. Rae: It certainly is the point. What the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and other members have said indicates that it is the Liberal party who will decide who is recognized.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: If one looks at the record to see what the member from Papineau said, that is the clear implication of the statement that he made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: If he wants to deny it, fine, but I think that is the implication.

For our part, Mr. Speaker, we would far rather trust you with our rights as a minority in this House than we would the Liberal party, either in this House or outside of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: I do not trust members on the opposite side either. I am saying that you are the one whom we trust.

The second question raised is a fundamental one. It was raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen), a member everyone holds in the highest regard in this House. It concerns the relationship among House leaders of the parties and yourself, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour raised this question when you participated in the earlier round of discussion. The President of Privy Council said he thought that he had the right, indeed the obligation, as leader of the whole House—if I understood him correctly—to speak and make representations to you concerning what he felt were problems that might arise in the course of the proceedings of this House.

I am a new member and I am certainly not a member of any experience.

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Rae: That is fine, but we all have a right to speak, a right to listen and a right to be heard. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that one example which you might follow is the practice of judges meeting counsel in chambers. From your own experience you will know that no judge would meet a counsel in chambers alone. There is always a danger that a situation could arise where something might be said or suggested which could influence a decision of a judicial nature, not simply of a political nature.

With respect, I think your function in the House in recognizing members, attempting to allocate questions and attempting to be fair is a judicial function and not a political one. I am not making an unqualified recommendation because I recognize that what I say may have some holes in it that I have not yet seen, but it seems to me that the President of Privy Council may want to consider whether, when he goes to the Speaker of the House of Commons, he is not simply going there as the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton—and he knows this—or as the President of Privy Council, but as an active member of a government party.

An hon. Member: That is the point.

Mr. Rae: The hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso was absolutely right in saying that we were in a delicate situation yesterday. The question of recognition and the right to be recognized could have affected the outcome of last night's vote; there is no question of that. I suggest that one thing you might want to consider, Mr. Speaker, is—

• 1700

An hon. Member: A committee.

Mr. Rae: —not a committee but a recommendation that discussions between House leaders should not take place without all of them being present. No House leader should feel that he can make a representation of a judicial nature rather than a political nature to the Speaker of the House of Commons in exercising his judicial functions.

We have had experience of phone calls to judges. We have had experience with other attempts, with the best of will and the best of intention, to make representations of a legal nature to somebody in a judicial capacity. That has been the subject of criticism, and quite worthy criticism. We now have rules of conduct and so on for members of Parliament. All of us recognize there are things we cannot do.

I suggest to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) and to the other House leaders that it may be necessary in the future for House leaders to meet with you, Mr. Speaker, in considering matters of a judicial nature, and that representations, however well intentioned—and I certainly do not question the good intentions of the President of Privy Council—should not be made privately.

I myself have made representations to you, Mr. Speaker, on a couple of matters, one of which is still outstanding, of a private nature. As members of Parliament, I think we are all entitled to raise these questions of concern. This is different. I am speaking here as a private member of Parliament to you about a private matter affecting, in this case, my conscience. I am suggesting that when the President of Privy Council is making a representation to you that is not on a private matter of conscience, that is not a private matter affecting his personal privileges as a member of Parliament, that he not make that representation without the other House leaders being present. I think that would solve a potentially difficult problem.

The President of Privy Council raised as a comparison the relationship that existed between the president of the privy council at that time, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, and my House leader in another Parliament. The difference with that experience was, of course, that the Speaker of the House of Commons was not involved in any way. That is a very significant difference.

There will, of course, be discussions and negotiations in a minority Parliament. We are grown up and recognize that these votes do not take place without prior discussion. However, there is a very real distinction between those kinds of negotiations and a discussion involving recognition, the status and position in debate of a party which is also involved, as is well known, in a political discussion with the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the President of Privy Council concerning a non-confidence motion. There is clearly a distinction between those two things.

Where there is a judicial function being performed, that should not be done without everyone being present. The Speaker should in no way be involved in political discussions, and that is where I leave it.

Mr. Speaker: To get back to an earlier point in reference to the intervention just made by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), we are all aware of the wisdom of the suggestion he has just made. The difficulty is that functionally it eliminates most of the contact and conversations that take place in the House. For example, several times upon a decision by the Chair a member of an individual party who has been adversely affected by that decision of the Chair will show up and say, "Are you sure you thought of this?" That is a courtesy call. I do not think the member is trying to reopen the question. The member is coming in to say that he did not quite understand my point on this. He is obviously dejected and disappointed. I could at that point say, "Look, it is not proper for me to discuss this unless we have present members of other parties".

Similarly, we get into the same situation if after a given question period a House leader comes into my office and says, "Look, our people are not happy with the number of questions". I must say, "Stop right there, I have to call in the other House leaders to discuss things of this sort". These are plain representations about business that is going on in the House.

I think we can follow the structures of court practice, as the hon. member has said. The only trouble is that it will put us in a formal structure that will make it less pleasant to do the business of the House. I think trust is much more useful.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say it hardly requires any evidence to realize that we all deeply respect the position of the Speaker of the House and of the person of the Speaker himself. I feel it is rather sad that things should become so convoluted that in the course of this discussion it has been perhaps misunderstood that many of those who have stood up, in my party at least, to express their concern stood up in order to express the very deep concern that the Speaker of the House, both in his office and in his person, should not be involved, should not be impugned and should not have any light cast upon him except the highest respect which this House holds for him.

Therefore, it is particularly tragic and unfortunate when we are raising a question which is not at all directed at the Speaker but in fact is directed at the very direction of the Speaker's name—the protection of the honour of this House of Parliament—that this should be misunderstood. Perhaps there were things that were said incorrectly or which were misunderstood because they were not put well, but certainly that was not the intention, so far as I have any knowledge of it, of my colleagues. What is at stake, and this is important, is that we did not ever mention the name of the Speaker of the House of Commons. We did not bring it into the press. We did not involve the name of the Speaker in terms of events that occurred last night. It is precisely because we did not that the question arises, who did?

It is this kind of thing we are concerned about. We are simply seeking to have it made clear that the people of Canada will lose respect for the parliamentary system about which we have heard so much idealistic speaking in the Speech from the Throne and so on, that that very respect which we all want to establish may in fact be put under suspicion.

Therefore, when an article appears in The Globe and Mail that seems to link a statement by some member of the House of Commons which might involve or is alleged to have involved the idea that he said he had some influence with the Speaker, it endangers the position of the Speaker.

It is this about which we are speaking, not about the Speaker himself. This is what is at stake. We were expecting, and hoped it would be said, that it would be made clear by the President of Privy Council through The Globe and Mail or anyone else that he does not intend or want to influence the Speaker, that he was sorry if it was misprinted and said in this way so as to imply that he had done such a thing, that indeed he has no intention of trying to give the impression that he gets credit for having achieved something with the Speaker of the House.

That is what is at stake. It is not the Speaker of the House who is at stake but in fact his good name. It is not that it took place at all but that people have the idea that it took place. It is not what happened, but what is perceived to have happened, that is at stake. It is this which we wish to have clarification of.

It would be very simple to say not "if I have" but simply that it appears that my involvement of the word "Speaker" in this conversation with The Globe and Mail has led to this misunderstanding, one which has taken up the whole afternoon of this House. It is simply that we all, everyone in this House, want to protect the sanctity and the position of the Speaker in whom we all have trust.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, it has been very seldom in the career I have had in this House of Commons that I have taken part in a question as substantial as this. Not being a lawyer or an expert on parliamentary rules and procedure, I have usually left this to some of my more learned colleagues. However, there is something I would like you to help me, a private member of this House, clear up.

I do not think anyone in this debate this afternoon has mentioned that they doubted Your Honour's word. Rather, it has been directly the opposite, that we are fighting to protect the integrity of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

I have not had time to consult my colleagues, but I have no objection if the House leader of the New Democratic Party wishes to consult you on matters that affect the interventions of his members in this House of Commons. I have no objection of any kind to that.

[Translation]

If the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) wants to phone or write to you, Mr. Speaker, and asks to see you in your chambers here, in the House of Commons, of his own initiative, for his group, regardless of its status or non status as an official party, if he wants to speak on behalf of the group he represents in the House—

● (1710)

[English]

The government House leader, holds a very responsible position in this House, and I think he will agree that I have shown respect to him and to the office he holds, or to any other government minister whether I be in opposition or on the government side of the House. Why should the government House leader—this is the fundamental, bottom line of the question—go to you, sir, on his own placing you, inadvertently perhaps, in a position that is very precarious? Why should he take it upon himself to speak for the members of the Social Credit party, officially or not? They are very articulate people. Anybody who has seen that party operate in the House of Commons must agree that even though they are only five they are very articulate and can handle themselves very well when it comes to speaking to anyone, whether in this chamber or to you in your chambers. Why is this sudden protective umbrella held up by the government House leader?

I repeat, I think this is a fundamental question. If the House leader of the official opposition makes an appointment with you to discuss our interventions in this House, our rights and privileges in this House as the official opposition, that is one thing. If the government House leader does the same on behalf of his party, I see no objection to that. But why should he all of a sudden appoint himself an officer to protect the rights of a five-member group who are well known for their ability to get up and speak and look after themselves?

I suggest this would change the complete atmosphere of this House. I repeat, with all due respect to the government House leader, that this argument could be over in five minutes or five seconds: all he has to do is stand in his place and deny the story which was carried in The Globe and Mail this morning.

[Mr. Lefebvre.]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), for whom I have a great deal of respect, really answered the question himself as to why I sought out the Speaker. I tried to put that at the beginning of my argument. He said the government House leader has a responsible position in this House. That is exactly the reason. I think I said in the course of my argument that I have two responsibilities. As I view my responsibilities—there may be some disagreement with respect to this—I do take my responsibilities to the House of Commons quite seriously, and when a group of members of Parliament have some difficulty which I interpret as causing some difficulty in the operation of the business of the House of Commons, I think it is not improper for me to go to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

You may overrule me with respect to this, Mr. Speaker, and I will be prepared to abide by your ruling, but it has always been my understanding, and nothing has happened this afternoon to indicate that that understanding is wrong, that members of the House of Commons have a right to mention a concern to the Speaker. Members of the government have a right to mention concerns to the Speaker. Members of the opposition, their leader, have a right to mention concerns to the Speaker. What would be wrong would be a representation in the sense the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) spoke of it.

I would take issue with him with respect not to his solution but with respect to his use of the word "representation". I think it is important when any member goes to see the Speaker for any reason at all that there should be no attempt by that member, whether he is a private member or a member of the government, to require an advance ruling or to preclude proper discussion of a point of order or to bring undue pressure on the Speaker. Mr. Speaker, you yourself have answered that argument today. You have indicated you were not influenced by what I said except that you decided to call a meeting at which the hon. member for Pontiac was there representing his party, my parliamentary secretary was there representing his party, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was there representing his party.

Let me just say with respect to the division of the parties in this House that the concern I expressed to you was sufficient for you to call a meeting of representatives of the parties. I regret I could not have been there, as I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso regrets he could not have been there. But all parties were ably represented. I think that is the position in which I find myself.

I want to say to hon. members that if I am seen speaking to Mr. Speaker in the hall—I say this through you, sir—it would be in that way that I would be speaking to Mr. Speaker. It would be on that assumption. I want to say to the hon. and reverend member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) that that is exactly the way in which I have always approached my role. I think it is a responsible way to approach my role. I think it is a responsible way to approach my role.

An hon. Member: Just deny the story.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have indicated that I am not responsible for the essence of timing in the story that might appear in The Globe and Mail or the Carp Review.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) indicated that sometimes difficulties can occur. I might have been inarticulate in what I said. I may be at fault for what appears there by being inarticulate, and if that is the case I accept the responsibility. But the bottom line of all this is whether or not the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, who happens to be the President of Privy Council and the leader of the government in the House of Commons, went to you, Mr. Speaker, and had the temerity even to think of influencing, let alone undertake the influencing, of the Speaker of the House of Commons. If I did that, I ought not to be a member of this place, and if you accepted it in that way, you ought not to be Speaker. Neither of those things occurred, and both you and I know it.

Mr. Speaker: I know the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) seeks to intervene because he was referred to earlier in the context of whether or not he would withdraw. We have had a long enough discussion, it seems to me, and I really wonder if there need be any more participation.

Mr. Ouellet: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. In his second intervention the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) mentioned that I had imputed motives and cast some doubt on Your Honour's integrity. I want to say clearly that my intervention had nothing to do with your conduct but rather it had to do with the conduct of the President of Privy Council himself. He has had three occasions this afternoon upon which to clearly express his point of view. I must say his third intervention was better than the second and much better than the first one, which was pretty shabby and very bad.

• (1720)

I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in my intervention at that time I wanted clarification from the President of the Privy Council of what he said to The Globe and Mail. Quite clearly, we know what he told Your Honour. We know very well that Your Honour cannot be influenced, but we are still uncertain as to what the President of Privy Council said to The Globe and Mail and what he said to the representative of the Creditistes in this House. This is still in doubt, and my representation to Your Honour has been on that very point.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is the second time the hon. member has tried to reargue, and I respect what he is trying to do. He was referred to. He is not withdrawing anything he said, and I think I must limit him here.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to be very brief in my intervention. In my seven years here this is the first time I have witnessed a day such as this. Having worked under Your Honour for three years I seriously question the intervention of the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) on three occasions. His declaration to The Globe and Mail questions Your Honour's integrity. I feel seriously about that, and I would very much like him to retract that. We have respect for the Chair, and I would like him to have that same respect.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise again only for a moment because my name was also mentioned by the President of Privy Council. He did so indirectly by reading an interesting article written by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). In that article there are references to the many meetings the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) and I had during the Parliament of 1972 to 1974. The President of Privy Council said we were both blushing. I think we probably blushed only because of the normal modesty of politicians when their names are mentioned.

However, I should like to assure the President of Privy Council and this House that far from being concerned about references to those meetings I am proud of those meetings and proud of what we won for the people of Canada because we held those meetings.

Mr. Speaker: I knew we would occasionally wander a little off the topic, but I did not think we were going to get back to the Parliament between 1972 and 1974 before we finished.

The questions raised by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) first of all and, in turn, by the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen)—

Mr. MacEachen: I still have a question of privilege to raise, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: I have too, but not on the same subject.

Mr. Speaker: We have been dealing so far with the questions raised by the hon. member for Drummond and the hon. member for Papineau relating to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail yesterday. The question raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso does not touch upon The Globe and Mail itself. The matter raised is a matter which the House, of course, takes seriously. I also take it very seriously, and I think the House has had a very extensive discussion. Yet, perhaps because this is a minority Parliament, we can feel ourselves under an obligation to be extremely cautious about things of this sort.

Perhaps over five years as the Speaker dealing with members who now are party leaders in this House—although two of them have changed seats—because we came to know each other there would be a natural tendency toward informality in our discussions. That is only natural, and I think a trust and confidence was built up during that time which it is only natural for me and other members to rely upon and perhaps to take for granted. I am absolutely satisfied that what the President of Privy Council was doing on this occasion was speaking to me in a way he did many times as opposition House leader in the last Parliament.

I do not set aside lightly the points raised. They are very serious, and I know the hon. member takes it seriously when he apologizes to the House. If in any way—even as I think the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) said in his last intervention; I think he used the word "inadvertently"—in his suggestion on that day he had put me in an awkward position and in turn put the House in an awkward position, he again apologizes for that.

The hon. member for Papineau said that the third intervention by the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) was better than the first two. Perhaps, then, we can just concentrate on that one. The President of Privy Council, it seems to me, at least in that intervention—that is the one I remember best because it was the most recent—said first of all that if the quality of the report in The Globe and Mail is not what it should be, he accepts responsibility for that and lays the blame on his inadequate expression to the reporter. I am paraphrasing, but he accepts that.

Second, if his making a suggestion to me, which I subsequently discussed on that same day with representatives of all parties, was seen at any time as a representation which was improper in any way, he apologizes for that. If in the future conduct is such that we must be more scrupulous between the parties in that regard, which has been suggested—that is to say, all members and the Chair—it is something which I think all members would regret.

I think it again indicates to us that in a minority situation where the representations are so close and the situation so fragile perhaps we do have to be a little more formal, a little more careful, exercise more caution and perhaps less friendliness and informality. I hope that is not the case, but in any event I accept—as I am sure the House does—the intervention of the President of Privy Council, who says he intended no such influence, would never dream that such would be taken by me in that context, and that he had only the intention of making a suggestion knowing it would be discussed at a meeting later that day which in fact took place and at which all parties were represented. I and I am sure the House accept that. Perhaps, however, the one benefit from this discussion is that we are cautioned to be extremely careful about all these matters.

I close finally by returning to the point of the hon. member for Drummond who raised, I thought and as I indicated earlier, a very valid point relating to the use of Standing Order 29. For the benefit of those who are puzzled by the application I made of it yesterday, I can indicate that it is my understanding that when the Chair makes a selection as envisaged by that rule, a member can only seek the floor to question that by putting, on a point of order, the motion which is contained in Standing Order 29.

I have given the hon. member my reasons for not allowing him to do that yesterday. I was attempting to settle a problem which had been outstanding in the House for quite some time, so I was more than just recognizing a member for debate; I was also deciding a procedural point which I thought ought not to be the subject of appeal by the House at that time. These two rules came in conflict, and I had to decide rather quickly how to apply them, and I did; but I think the hon. member might be comforted by knowing that if in future he wishes to take advantage of Standing Order 29, he should do it in exactly the way he tried to do it yesterday.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I might also point out in conclusion—and I thought I should put the substantive matters forward first—that since by neither motion am I asked to take any particular action on procedural grounds—I have no motion before me to consider, in other words—I therefore set aside the questions of privilege on the dispositions I have just made.

MR. MACEACHEN—ENERGY SUPPLIES ALLOCATION BOARD—ANSWERS OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time I have ever raised a question of privilege in the House of Commons. If that is not correct, then it is one of the few times.

My question of privilege has to do with the events which took place in the House of Commons yesterday, but in a sense it is not unrelated to the discussion we had earlier. I have no desire to reopen that discussion, although I am tempted to say that a certain benefit has been developed, because in referring to the co-operation which the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) alleged existed between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself, he obviously made a declaration of a very close and co-operative arrangement between his party and the Social Credit group.

On the same subject I say to my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that obviously the influence of that contact with the government which he had in those years of great progress, as he said, has not really left him because he sounded very much today like a member of a government party rather than a member of the opposition, which is his normal role.

I intend to be brief and to the point. Yesterday in the House of Commons I clearly asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) the question whether he would move to establish with some speed the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board. I asked him to justify why he had not appointed members of the board, and if he had not done so to date, why would he not do it at that very moment and announce it to the House. Later the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) asked the same question.

● (1730)

In reply to both of these questions the hon. minister clearly and certainly misled me. The only reasonable conclusion which can be drawn from his answers was that he had not moved, and was not intending at that time to move, to establish the membership of the board. He said to me that I did not understand the situation because "the fact of the matter is that the department is setting up a support basis upon which any emergency allocation would be available". He went on to say that if a crisis occurred, which he did not think existed, then he might move to establish the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board.

I accepted the minister's answers. I went to a meeting and at about 5.30 or six o'clock I received a message that the Canadian Press had put on the wire a news report that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) stated Tuesday that the government will establish an Energy Supplies Allocation Board which, under existing legislation, would have the power to impose petroleum rationing.

I asked the minister between two and three o'clock, and at five o'clock or thereabouts, the Canadian Press was told. Then it was disclosed in the House that the Prime Minister had written a letter to the leader of the Social Credit group. In that letter he told him the following:

> In this connection, you may have noted that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated his intention to seek some administrative changes to the Energy Supplies Emergency Act and at the same time announce appointment of an Energy Supplies Allocation Board.

That is a letter from the Prime Minister to the leader of the Social Credit group. It was tabled by the Prime Minister some time before the adjournment at six o'clock.

An hon. Member: At 5.25.

Mr. MacEachen: At 5.25 p.m. I asked the question, the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan asked the question, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources just concealed the information from us. I have a tendency to believe that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not know what was in the Prime Minister's letter. If that is the explanation, I hold him free and uncriticized. But if he knew the information at that time, then it was his duty to let it be known to the House of Commons. The open government policy has proclaimed respect for Parliament, but it was totally ignored in this case.

Further I must say I am astonished that the Prime Minister, who obviously had written the letter or was writing the letter to the leader of the Social Credit group, and who was listening to my questions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, did not send him a note and say, "Minister, bear in mind I am notifiyng the leader of the Social Credit party that we are going to do that". It all fits together very nicely. I was denied the information, the House was denied the information, but it was conveyed in a private arrangement to the Social Credit group by a letter from the Prime Minister, so that the government would get some points and some support, presumably, that evening from the Social Credit group.

I object very strongly, but I withhold further comment because I realize the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister are not in their places.

I lay the foundation for raising the matter when the minister is in his place, because he had the nerve and the audacity to say in his speech after eight o'clock that he had announced already in the House the information about the establishment of the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board. This is very serious, and I want to indicate to the minister that if he does not have a pretty good explanation for the House, then certainly we will have reason to change our attitude to him and to what he tells us in reply to questions in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I want the situation which we are in to be clear: we are not concluding this point. The hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) simply indicated that he is giving me notice. He raised the point and intends to pursue it, which of course is his right; it is very customary. When the other two members to whom he has referred are in the House and the point is raised, I expect to hear the hon. member of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso. If other hon. members want to participate in the matter, logically it ought to follow that intervention. But if they intervene now, of course, I would not be able to hear them a second time. I ought to hold open the right of the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso to complete his intervention. If I go on and hear others now, I do not think I can get back to them. That puts me in a rather awkward spot. If I am reserving it at this time, I will stop it now while the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso has the floor. I do not think I can give the floor to anyone else on that point.

[Translation]

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday I was recognized by the Chair and asked the following question, and I quote from page 1014 of the official report:

> Thank you for the promotion, Mr. Speaker. I wish to know if you could give me some explanation on a very important point. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) asked for leave to table the correspondence he exchanged with the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy). Will those two letters be an appendix to Hansard for today to avoid the problem we had about three days ago?
> MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must say that here again we need unanimous consent to have the letter appended to Hansard.

And two seconds later, with leave from the government House leader, the House gave its unanimous consent. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I have just read yesterday's Hansard and unfortunately, through some mistake, and despite the fact the House gave its unanimous consent to the tabling of the two letters in question, only the letter written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) was printed, and not the letter addressed to the Prime Minister by the latter. Can you shed light on this very important issue, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, obviously there is an omission from the unanimous consent. I am grateful to the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) for bringing it to our attention. Perhaps it might be agreeable to all members of the House if Your Honour reviewed this matter and had the correspondence attached to Hansard today. I would be prepared to agree to that, if it would be helpful.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to do that. I do not want to hold up the business of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lefebvre: Excuse me, hon. members opposite did it often, if they do not mind. They are silent now that they are sitting over there. After receiving unanimous consent of the House yesterday, could somebody please tell us why it was not done then?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it relates to the earlier intervention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) when he was asked if he could table the letters. He said at the time that he did not have the English version of the letter from the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy), that he had his own and that he was prepared to table it. Also he indicated that if we could get the letter from the hon. member for Beauce later, it would be tabled as well. Simply there may have been some confusion. It was not clear whether the undertaking of the Prime Minister was to table one or two letters. In any case I think it was the consensus of the House that both letters should be tabled, and I believe the offer of the President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) was to complete that. One letter has, of course, been appended to Hansard as tabled yesterday.

• (1740)

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I think it is exactly on the same point. In my opinion the mistake which may have been committed yesterday should not have happened if one carefully reads Hansard and the speeches made by hon. members who took part in this exchange between on the one hand the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) and on the other hand the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), the member for Saguenay and others.

It is quite clear that we want the whole correspondence and not just the French and English copies of the letter written by the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Beauce. To understand better the debate, we certainly want to see the letter written by the hon. member for Beauce to the Prime Minister. If we really want to understand what actually happened we must be able to read what the hon. member for Beauce, the hon. leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada, wanted to ask the Prime Minister for him to take time to answer it. In any case, the Prime Minister's reply is quite clear to us because he recognizes—and that to us is very important—if you read that letter very carefully that:

[English]

Should we be faced with a disruption of oil supply sufficient to cause a national emergency, then I can assure you that the government is prepared to use the powers available to it under the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979, to conserve supplies—

[Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton).]

[Translation]

So this is very important to us because this answer from the Prime Minister is quite revealing of the new intentions of the government which is now prepared to use legislation passed by the former government. Indeed we would like to know what the hon. member for Beauce asked the Prime Minister that justified such an interesting answer for those who follow the debates closely. I think our hon. friend is probably right when he says that it must have gone unnoticed. However, it did not go unnoticed to us since we are trying to find out what the hon. member for Beauce could have asked the Prime Minister to receive such an extraordinary complete answer and so quickly, the very same afternoon, of course, of a debate which ended in a very important vote last night.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Again I say the simple answer is that the conversation at one time would indicate that the Prime Minister was only tabling his letter because that is all he had, and subsequently the other letter was not available.

An hon. Member: It was, but only in French.

Mr. Speaker: That is right, but the President of Privy Council has now undertaken to assure that that tabling will be completed so we will have both letters.

In order to clarify the situation, as we went through this a few days ago, this is correspondence. It was written originally, in this case, in the French language by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) because that is the language he chooses to operate in, and it will not be translated by the House unless the House now orders that this be done when it is tabled and appended to Hansard as if it had been read as part of the record. Does the House agree and so order?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For letter referred to above, see Appendix "A".]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege just raised, I want to indicate that I want to participate in the discussion regarding the response yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) concerning the establishment of an Energy Supplies Allocation Board when that matter is raised.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 7, 19, 22 and 30.

REDPATH SUGARS LIMITED—TATE AND LYALL LIMITED

Motion No. 7—Mr. Herbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all agreements, correspondence, notes and other communications relating to the requirement by the Foreign Investment Review Agency that Tate and Lyall Limited reduce its shareholdings in Redpath Sugars Limited.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the reply in the name of the minister is as follows: The Foreign Investment Review Agency has been advised by the senior legal adviser to the agency that the papers are privileged under section 14 of the Foreign Investment Review Act. I would, therefore, ask on behalf of the minister that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Motions for Papers

POLAND'S KWIDZYN PULP AND PAPER COMPLEX

Motion No. 19—Mr. Herbert:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before the House copies of the latest financing agreement by the Export Development Corporation for the sale of services and equipment for Poland's Kwidzyn Pulp and Paper Complex.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Again, Your Honour, I would advise in the name of the minister that the documents requested involve papers that are confidential and not of a public or official character, and their production would publish information received by the EDC in confidence from sources outside the government. We would, therefore, ask that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE BETWEEN DORION, QUEBEC AND HAWKESBURY, ONTARIO

Motion No. 22—Mr. Herbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for the latest study by the Department of Transport into the feasibility and location of a bridge to cross the Ottawa River or the Lake of Two Mountains somewhere between Dorion, Quebec and Hawkesbury, Ontario.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Again, Your Honour, in the name of the minister, the requested study on the feasibility of the location of a bridge to cross the Ottawa River, or the Lake of Two Mountains, somewhere between Dorion, Quebec, and Hawkesbury, Ontario, cannot be made available. The reason is that it has not been performed by or for Transport Canada. We would, therefore, ask that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—SOFT DRINK BOTTLES

Motion No. 30—Miss Nicholson:

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I say on behalf of the minister that the study has not yet been prepared but will be sent to the hon. member when it is completed. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Miss Nicholson: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

● (1750)

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I regret having to raise this point of order so late in the afternoon, but as you are aware this is the only time I can raise a point of order in connection with the production of papers. On October 31 the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Kilgour), as it is reported in Hansard at page 810, said:

—notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 29 and 31 are acceptable to the government.

On page 811, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is reported as saying:

—I rise on a point of order. I hope it has not escaped the attention of the House that when the first four motions for the production of papers were called, the motions were granted.

My point of order is in two parts. The first part deals with my motion No. 29 and motion 31, which belongs to the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). As of this day these papers have not been tabled. Under the rules, there appears to be no time limit for the production of papers. My point is that I am somewhat confused about the agreement because there has been an apparent agreement to table papers and, therefore, the motion is removed from the order paper as though the papers have been produced.

I can understand a delay of one, two or three days, but it seemed at the time it was agreed that the papers would be produced or that the papers had been found and were therefore readily available. Is there any limit as to the time the government can take to produce these papers? That is my first point.

My second point also deals with the production of papers on that same day. The Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council said at page 810 of Hansard:

Notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 18 and 23 are acceptable to the government subject to the authorization of the government of Quebec.

The first motion deals with flooding in the Lake of Two Mountains area, and the second with the public transportation situation in Montreal west. The assumption is that when the province of Quebec gives agreement, then these papers will be produced. My difficulty, first of all, is that I have no idea if the government has contacted the government of the province of Quebec to inquire whether it is possible that they may give their agreement to release these documents. Or alternatively, if the government knows that the government of the province of Quebec will not agree to the production of these documents, the government is able, under the guise of producing papers, to make this statement in the House which leaves me to believe that at some future date I may receive these documents.

My last point is that I would assume from what I learned on October 31 that the government will make some effort to see whether it is possible for those papers to be produced. I therefore wonder if any effort has been made on their part, whether it be by phone call, letter or whatever, that at some date in the future—hopefully not too long—there will be a statement from the government of the province of Quebec that they agree to the production of these papers or, to the contrary, they do not agree, at which point in time I will then be able to continue with any arguments on which I wish to proceed in this House.

There are two points I am making. The first concerns the documents which the government agreed to produce and on which there appears to be no time limit. The second is that the government says "subject to the actions of someone else", without indicating whether they intend to pursue the matter or whether even, in my capacity as the hon. member for Vaudreuil, I must now contact the government of the province of Quebec to see if I can get a release of the documents which I require.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself briefly with the comments made by the hon. member for Vaudreuil and to point out the difficulty in which members are placed. When the government says that it has no objection to giving us papers, the order for the motion to produce papers is struck from the record, but then in fact the papers are not produced. My staff has made innumerable telephone calls without any success.

The motion which I put was a very simple one. I asked for all the form letters which are now being used in connection with establishing relationships in the case of sponsored relatives in Southeast Asia. It is a matter of importance to the people of Toronto. It is a contentious issue on which we hear a lot of different opinions, and having those forms to examine would assist my work.

The government has said that it is willing to produce the forms, and yet a week later, apparently, there is no hope in sight of my getting them. My concern is that the motion has now been stricken, and this gives the impression that my request has been granted when it has not. I am sure that there is no deliberate intent to obstruct, but in raising this matter I hope that a solution will be found.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I will take notice of the remarks made by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). The hon. member for Trinity has mentioned phone calls. Certainly no phone call has come to my office from the hon. member. If she could have phoned a week or two weeks ago, I would have been delighted to look into the matter instead of taking up the time of the House to deal with the matter this afternoon.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to pursue this matter unnecessarily, but since the parliamentary secretary, perhaps unintentionally, seems to be questioning my truthfulness, I could provide him with a list of days, dates and names of people to whom the phone calls were addressed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This will come up daily almost.

Mr. Breau: Weekly.

Mr. Speaker: Weekly. Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I may have missed your calling of motions, but I have a motion which I would like to put, if I may, before we get on to orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: I called it very slowly in both official languages. In any case, I am sure that we will have the consent of the House to revert to motions. Do we have that consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Ottawa, November 5, 1979

The Right Honourable Joseph Clark, Prime Minister,
Room 409,
Centre Block,
House of Commons.

Mr. Prime Minister:

The population of certain areas of Canada, especially the eastern region, that is Quebec and the maritimes, is seriously concerned about the security of gasoline and heating oil supplies next winter.

It is therefore vitally important that your government announce immediately to the population of Canada what action it has already taken or intends to take and what guarantees it can give to avoid any possibility of a shortage which could cause panic and eventually lead to an excessive price increase.

Moreover, it is also extremely important that all necessary action be taken to protect and guarantee the quotas of independent distributors.

I therefore hope for a quick reply, in the form, for instance, of a ministerial statement.

Sincerely yours,

Fabien Roy

FINANCE

REQUEST HOUSE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATE ALLEGATIONS OF DR. CELOVSKY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In today's Ottawa Citizen, Frank Howard, under the byline "Bureaucrats," publishes a letter dated November 6, 1979, written by Boris Celovsky, assistant director, labour division, Statistics Canada. In this letter, Dr. Celovsky makes serious allegations about the integrity and the reliability of Statistics Canada's information to the government and the Canadian public.

Considering that in Dr. Celovsky's own words, "Statistics Canada's performance record over the past few years has become rather spotty," and that, further, "the bureau has wasted and continues to waste public money on projects which were badly designed and should never have been launched", and considering the accusation by Dr. Celovsky that the labour income, one of the largest components of the national account, is said to have been adjusted, cooked or fudged without consistent technical basis, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier):

That the government make an immediate statement concerning the serious allegations of Dr. Celovsky and that this disturbing matter be referred to the appropriate standing committee for immediate investigation prior to the tabling by the Minister of Finance of his overdue budget.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion at this time would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC WHITE PAPER ACCUSATION THAT FEDERALISM STRANGLING AGRICULTURE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering the timid and lukewarm reaction of the Prime Minister and his government to the Quebec white paper, and considering the absolutely false information contained in its pages, as exemplified under the heading of "Agriculture", accusing federalism of strangling agricultural development in that province, when in fact the opposite is true, if one considers, for example, dairying, egg and chicken production in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier):

That this House instruct the Prime Minister and his government to launch forthwith a vigorous, total and relentless attack against the perpetrators of this scandalous and wilfully misleading propaganda fabricated to destroy our beloved country.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—CRITERIA GOVERNING DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that newspapers have reported a statement made by the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Jarvis) indicating that his department will soon be distributing to certain Quebeckers information files which could be used in the campaign preceding the referendum, and since the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has stated that he would not take part in that campaign, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart):

S.O. 43

That the House direct the government to clarify its position on the referendum and make public the criteria applied to select those Quebeckers.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

FORESTRY

REFORESTATION—CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT DEPLETION OF RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Chenier (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that Canada's forest industry accounts for over $7 billion in exports—as much as mining, agriculture, fishing and fuels combined—and in view of the fact that our forest resources are being depleted at an atrocious rate, far ahead of the rate of reforestation, particularly in northern Ontario where the growth cycle of trees is lengthy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais):

That the government convene a conference of resource ministers to discuss and take strong action on reforestation before it is too late and the heart of Canada's economic security is cut out.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING VISIT OF PRESIDENT CARTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. Since, tomorrow, we will be visited by Mr. Carter, President of the United States and candidate for the investiture of the Democratic party, since he will be addressing a joint sitting of the House and Senate, since this Parliament and Mr. Carter are quite preoccupied with respecting democratic tradition, and since yesterday that process was served in the United States by another candidate's announcement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd):

That this House recognize the traditional necessity for equal time and invite Ted Kennedy to address himself to us.

[Mr. Savard.]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

BASIC RATE OF WAR DISABILITY PENSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the rate of a 100 per cent disability pension was related in 1972 to the composite pay of five public service groups, and this basis was reaffirmed in 1978, and in view of the fact that the disability pension has now fallen behind that composite rate by $213 this year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael):

That this House requests the Minister of Veterans Affairs to introduce immediately legislation establishing the basic rate of war disability pension on the basis by which it was determined in 1972.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for discussion at this time, pursuant to the Standing Orders, only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

REQUEST CONTINENTAL ENERGY POLICY BE DISCUSSED WITH U.S.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. Since three prominent United States politicians in the last few months—Senator Kennedy, Governor Brown and Mr. John Connally, who share other matters in common—have also spoken out on a continental energy policy involving, as it does, Canada and Mexico, and since the Prime Minister is meeting with the President of the United States tomorrow for only a very short period, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the House instruct the Prime Minister to discuss with President Carter the pros and cons of a continental energy policy, and also the possibility of a further meeting for a longer period of time with the President of Mexico, the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada, and to report next week to this House on the outcome of those discussions.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST EVIDENCE OF WRONGDOING BE SUBMITTED TO PROVINCIAL ATTORNEYS GENERAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the serious allegations of criminal wrongdoing which have been uncovered during the course of the McDonald commission inquiry, and in view of the respect which all members of this House hold for the principle of the rule of law, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That this House call upon the Solicitor General to immediately turn over all evidence of criminal wrongdoing to provincial attorneys general for possible prosecution.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSAL THAT ADJOURNMENT DEBATE BE HELD AT SIX O'CLOCK EXCEPT ON FRIDAYS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Yanakis):

That henceforth the adjournment debate provided for under Standing Order 40 be held at six o'clock on all sitting days except Fridays, when there shall be no debate.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the reasons for such a change are obvious and that there is no need for extensive explanations, except perhaps to point out that besides having an adjournment debate on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, there would also be one on Wednesdays. All other conditions and procedures surrounding the debate as set out in Standing Orders 39(6) and 40 would remain unchanged except for the advance notice the Speaker is required to give every day at five o'clock. The Speaker would then give notice of the matters that would be raised during the adjournment debate on the next sitting day of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion can be debated at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

RECORD DEFICIT IN AUTOMOTIVE PARTS—REQUEST AUTO PACT BE DISCUSSED WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Figures that came into my possession today, which are widely known, would indicate that we will have a record deficit in automotive parts trade with the United States to the tune of $2,220 million for the first nine months of this year. I indicate to the Prime Minister that this is the highest deficit ever experienced. Also, the projection is that it will be $3.1 billion by the end of this year. This is a 400 per cent increase over the previous year.

Could the Prime Minister indicate to the House just what stress he will put on this intolerable situation in speaking with the President tomorrow, and what action will he ask of the President in order to correct this situation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, no doubt there is an increased level in the buying patterns between the two countries. It is partly related to a higher degree of buying in Canada relative to the United States.

As I said yesterday to the hon. member, this matter was the subject of a brief by the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association. It is under review right now, and we are proposing to get back to them to discuss some points as soon as we have completed our study.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I found the answer on the part of the Minister of International Trade not too intriguing. He may recall that in 1971, when treasury secretary Connally was in this country, Canada was experiencing a small surplus. In 1970 it was $204 million, in 1971 it was $198 million, and in 1972 it was $44 million. This is a pittance compared to the type of deficit we are now running with the United States.

At that time, treasury secretary Connally said the situation was intolerable from the point of view of the United States and that the United States would be taking unilateral action to correct the situation no matter what Canada thought. Since our deficit is now so horrendously high, is the minister prepared to indicate a strong stand on the part of the Canadian government to President Carter tomorrow?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister said that he would be raising this matter tomorrow with the President at their meetings. We are very concerned with the level of this deficit and we are going to do something about it. We have been discussing this question with the manufacturers. That is the extent of what we can say to date.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the reason I am pressing this matter is that I hope there is not the same type of inprecision, confusion, and ambiguity—

Mr. Crosbie: That there was when you were over here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —that the Canadian government showed to all Canadians with respect to the Foothills project, which we are in great danger of losing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I hope the Canadian government does not repeat that with respect to the auto pact. I ask the minister, is he prepared to indicate to the President that, since Canada shares 10 per cent of the entire North American auto market, we hope and expect the United States will agree that we at least get that percentage in terms of new technology with respect to any new generation of automobiles, and that until we get assurances of this kind and corrective action regarding the deficit, we are not prepared to accommodate the United States with respect to any of their bargaining points?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I think all the problems that this industry is facing have been building up over the last five, six or seven years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: We are going to take action. The previous government had a report prepared by Simon Reisman which was slipped under the desk. We have not heard anything more about that. We will review that report once again in light of the brief from the automotive parts manufacturers. We are going to do something about it.

• (1420)

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—FAIR SHARE FOR CANADA OF CAPITAL INVESTMENT

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I hope he can be induced to answer a question on the automotive industry. Recently, General Motors of Canada announced a $1 billion expansion program at its parts plants in Windsor and St. Catharines, along with another $1 billion for updating other facilities. This capital investment was welcome news for the communities involved, but is certainly insufficient for Canada's national interest since it is only a drop in the bucket compared to the $38 billion the parent company will be spending on capital investment in the United States.

[Mr. Wilson.]

In light of the fact that the president of General Motors of Canada described the Canadian proportion of the investment as a good share, even if not a fair share, can the Prime Minister inform the House what steps the government will be taking to ensure that the automotive multinationals give Canada a fair share, and not just a good share, of investment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the hon. member now speaking in this House on matters relating to the automotive industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We will review, including perhaps directly through conversations with the presidents of the automotive companies involved, steps they think might be appropriate for the Government of Canada to take to achieve that or any other realistic goal.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken more in this House on the automotive industry than anybody on that side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: My supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. Since the deficit in automotive parts is now predicted to be about $4.5 billion for this year, what action is the government prepared to take in inducing the Big Three to source more parts in Canada and in assisting the automotive parts manufacturers through a repayable loans fund for investment, tooling and research development in Canada?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of State indicated moments ago, that is a matter we are looking into as a result of the various reports that have come before the Government of Canada.

ENERGY

OIL IMPORTS—CONTINGENCY PLANS TO MEET POSSIBLE REDUCTION OF SUPPLIES FROM IRAN

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the present threat of an interruption of oil from Iran, and the fact that we have no emergency back-up supplies to meet a sizeable reduction in imported oil, can the minister tell the House what contingency plans are now in place to meet either a partial or full cut-off of Iranian oil? Can we get by without rationing?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I welcome the opportunity to indicate that my current information is that there is not now the immediate prospect of the Iranian government curtailing any shipments to Canada. In fact, the information I have is that the shipment to Canada is nowen route with respect to our anticipated share, and we will be in a position to have sufficient supply which will reach us well into the winter on the basis of the shipments that have already left Iran and are en route to Canada.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an answer from the minister in terms of a contingency plan. In view of reports out of Iran that oil tankers destined for the United States are not being loaded, and this will mean the multinational oil companies will try to reduce oil shipments to Canada in order to make up for shortfalls in oil destined for the United States, what assurance does the minister have from Imperial Oil and Exxon that we will not face a repetition of the situation we faced last spring, when oil destined for Canada was diverted to the United States to make up for their shortages?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to state that the information which the hon. member gives to the House is not in accordance with the information I have received. Indeed, the best information we have from government sources in Iran, and also with respect to the industry itself, is that there has been no shutdown and that oil for export from Iran is proceeding normally.

• (1425)

All I am saying is that we have en route and on the sea now the supply anticipated for Canada. We do not expect that this will cause us serious concern. We are watching developments in Iran carefully, but we now have sufficient supply to see us through well into the winter.

Mr. Symes: I think consumers in eastern Canada can take small comfort from those assurances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Symes: The minister says he is watching the situation. What action is he taking? What contingency plans are in place, bearing in mind that this is such a fragile situation, as the minister himself acknowledges? Why does the government not use Petro-Canada to pursue vigorously arrangements to increase supplies from Mexico and Venezuela on a government-to-government basis to offset our dependence on the multinational companies and unstable Middle East oil?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The faint applause the hon. member gets from his own colleagues indicates the preposterousness of his question. The hon. member well knows that negotiations are continuing in a very satisfactory manner with Mexico and Venezuela. Incidentally, the Leader of the Opposition indicated on two different occasions that somehow an agreement had been reached with Venezuela. That is incorrect. He was not telling the correct truth about that matter. The fact is, we have been carrying on those negotiations. We are sending a delegation there next month to continue the process. Negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily and I want to give that assurance to the House generally.

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL MAKE OVER-ALL OFFERS CONCERNING CONSTITUTION

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question to the right hon. Prime Minister refers to the statements made recently by the western premiers and the Ontario premier, as well as to an editorial which appeared in this morning's Washington Post which reads in part as follows:

[English]

The newspaper said the next move in the debate over Canada is up to Prime Minister Clark, who "huffs that the whole idea is absolutely unacceptable." The newspaper added:

But he's going to have to do better than that. If he refuses any larger concessions to French Canadian concerns he will only confirm the separatists' charges—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question to ask, will he please ask it.

[Translation]

Mr. Dawson: Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether, in view of this editorial, he will submit to Quebeckers concrete proposals beyond the vague promises and ambiguities he is creating, and whether he will undertake to propose, between now and the referendum, global offers concerning the constitutional position of his government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): As I have often indicated to the House and the rest of Canada, Mr. Speaker, our government's position concerning a renewed federalism is well known to Quebeckers who want changes and a new approach from the new government regarding the federalist issues. Voices, often silent until now, have asked us to advise them of our position and to accept changes to the constitutional status quo which the previous government had refused.

Mr. Dawson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary question. The hon. member for Louis-Hébert.

Mr. Dawson: Mr. Speaker, I have one more quotation. It is an excerpt from the Quebec white paper—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, he should ask it immediately.

Mr. Dawson: Mr. Speaker, at page 41 of the white paper, the Quebec government says that the new Conservative government does not seem prepared to face the constitutional problem head-on since it is not one of its priorities. Is Mr. Clark prepared, before next Monday, to assure the premiers that before the referendum he will table very clear constitutional proposals and not only electoral promises and speeches?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to carry on the process that we have already started, as a new government, by showing, through concrete action, that we are bringing specific changes in the federal government approach to constitutional matters.

SOVEREIGNTY-ASSOCIATION WITH QUEBEC—REQUEST GOVERNMENT PUBLISH REBUTTAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered the question of my colleague. He is giving the same answer he has been giving in this House for the last two weeks. He should get new writers.

This week, Tom Wells, the Ontario minister for intergovernmental affairs, will publish a detailed rebuttal to the Quebec white paper on sovereignty-association. Will the Prime Minister commit the resources of his government to publishing a similar, detailed rebuttal from the Canadian point of view, or is he going to be—as my colleague said the other day—Canada's Chamberlain of the 1980s, appeasing and backtracking until this country breaks up?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will devote the same enthusiasm and vigour to defending the future of the country in the province of Quebec as he is now to defending the past of his government—a past which, because of the very aggressiveness of the propaganda campaign which was waged by that government, contributed appreciably to the growth of separatism in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister saying that he cannot recognize the threat to this country which Premier Davis does, and is he willing to sit on the sideline and let the premiers do the job for him?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that I recognize, as I believe most Canadians do, that when the previous government opposite came to power, separatism was a particle—a minority fringe group in the province of Quebec. Indeed, it was declared dead by the present Leader of the Opposition.

However, after ten years, and particularly in the last three or four years when the only presence of the federal government in the province of Quebec was a confrontationist presence which took issue with every positive development which occurred in that province, and which created a sense of continual conflict between the people of Quebec and the government at Ottawa—what happened after all that was that separatism moved to a government status and the threat to this country was enlarged substantially.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We got 62 per cent of the vote.

An hon. Member: We have 67 Quebec members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before carrying on with another supplementary question on the same topic by the hon. member for Nipissing, I think we ought to recognize that it is fundamental to the operation of the question period—

Mr. Lefebvre: He doesn't know what the hell is going on.

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Turkey.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It remains essential to the conduct of the question period, as it does to any of our proceedings, that while strong and vigorous questions are put, and answers are the same, it is not going to be possible for either if the attention of the House is not given equally to both the questions and the answers.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT URGE PREMIER OF ONTARIO TO RECOGNIZE FRANCOPHONE RIGHTS IN PENETANGUISHENE

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, in order to restore calmness, I would simply like to indicate to the right hon. Prime Minister that indeed the results of the May 22 election in Quebec have been very favourable and that we sit in this House with a very strong Francophone representation. I would also like to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that every time Francophones outside Quebec have been deprived of their rights, the fact has been badly acknowledged by Anglophones—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to ask a question, he must put it now.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me I still have the right to make preliminary comments, that the rights—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has offered, first, an interjection, a comment on the Prime Minister's last answer, and now he is into a lengthy preamble. If I am to grant him this kind of time, only five or six members will be able to rise in the question period. It does not cost the Chair anything: it costs the hon. member's colleagues the opportunity to participate in the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, my question, therefore, is the following: In view of the fact that the credibility of Premier Davis' statement is undermined because he himself has not recognized the rights of French minorities in the province of Ontario, as evidenced by the Penetanguishene incident, is the Prime Minister prepared to recover his initiative and leadership in this area by urging the Ontario premier to accede to the demands of the French population by granting them a French school?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course, in an atmosphere of calm as the hon. member promised at the beginning of his question, I think it will be possible for a respected and calm Prime Minister to persuade his provincial counterparts to contemplate some changes. As far as Ontario is concerned, the government of that province has made a lot of progress, and in the case mentioned by the hon. member, the federal government made a gesture which contributed positively to solving the problem.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER PARTICIPATE IN THE DEBATE

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard of a gesture on the part of the federal government. My question was directed specifically to the right hon. Prime Minister. As he is, in fact, the Prime Minister and though he does not seem to realize it, he has been Prime Minister of this country since May 22 and is expected to prove his leadership, will he, therefore, intervene—I am staying calm—and take positive steps? I point out to the Prime Minister that this week his Minister of Justice indicated he had received no instructions from the Prime Minister with regard to the referendum. I am therefore asking him to face up to his responsibilities.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I feel that we on this side have adapted to the results of the May 22 election much better than hon. members on the other side of the House.

As I have said before, I would be willing, as Prime Minister, to speak with the provincial premiers and encourage whatever action is possible with regard to the rights of the minorities. We have made considerable progress in the province of Ontario and in the province of New Brunswick. I feel that it will be possible again, in a spirit of co-operation and not one of accusation, to achieve greater progress.

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE TO SAVE JOBS IN QUEBEC SHIPYARDS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport. In view of the extremely serious situation in Quebec shipyards, especially those of Davie Shipbuilding Limited at Lauzon, where over 1,700 workers were laid off in the last year, and in view of the fact that about 3,500 other jobs in that sector are being threatened in that province, can the minister tell us whether or not he intends to take immediate steps to save thousands of specialized jobs in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. J. Robert Howie (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for bringing this matter to my attention. I met with about 20 leaders of organized labour in the province of Quebec yesterday afternoon and we had a very good in-depth discussion of this very important matter. I have it under consideration with my officials, and I will be raising the matter with my colleagues and making some specific recommendations which I sincerely hope will help these people.

● (1440)

Mr. Rodriguez: My supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. We all recognize that actions speak louder than words when it comes to the question of Quebec and Canada. Can the Prime Minister give the assurance to the House that his government, to ensure that the contract for the construction of the ferry for which the CN at present is tendering abroad, for use in eastern Canada, will be given to a dockyard in eastern Canada so that we can maintain jobs in eastern Canada, particularly in Quebec dockyards?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howie: I have met with the president of CN Marine, and I made very clear to him that I feel very strongly that any ferry to be paid for by Canadian dollars and to be supported by Canadian citizens should be built in Canada.

Mr. Rodriguez: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Northumberland.

FINANCE

CONSIDERATION OF LOWER INTEREST RATE FOR SMALL BUSINESS AND FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that high interest rates have put small business loans and farm improvement loans beyond the reach of those who are trying to start or to expand a business or a farming operation, and as the creation and expansion of such operations in large volume is necessary for the continued health of the Canadian economy, will the minister give consideration to making these loans available at a considerably lower interest rate than the one prevailing at present, which is the bank prime rate plus 1 per cent?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the concern of the hon. member for farmers and small businessmen is well recognized by all, I am sure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I share his regret at the actions of the last administration which have left the economy in the present state and have resulted in higher interest rates for farmers and small businessmen. I would point out to the hon. member that the Farm Credit Corporation is granting loans at a 12 per cent interest rate which is, of course, not the prime rate. The Liberal prime rate today is 14 per cent, and 15 per cent is the banking rate. So there are some loans available at less than the prime rate.

I will certainly take the hon. member's representation under consideration. In the upcoming budget we are certainly considering the situation of farmers and small businessmen who have been left in a bad way by ten years of misrule by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

NATIONAL UNITY

REQUEST FOR ENTRENCHMENT IN CONSTITUTION OF LINGUISTIC RIGHTS OF MINORITIES

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister does not know the difference between agitation and indignation. I must indicate, as spokesman for a minority group, that our feeling at this moment is one of indignation over the answer he gave my colleague from Nipissing. The fact that the right hon. Prime Minister and his ministers do not intend to get their feet wet during the referendum campaign means that they will have plenty of free time. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister at least to ask his ministers to meet with provincial premiers to try and convince them that the protection of minority rights, the freedom of language rights held by the minority groups in this country, should be enshrined in the constitution and not only provided for by acts which can be abolished at the whim of a government of the day?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is something we certainly want to discuss with the premiers with a view to achieving some agreement or consensus among the premiers. That is not something we want to force down the throats of provincial governments, because we have seen in the past that actions imposed by the federal government are not always effective.

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Will the Prime Minister recognize there is a difference between a solution that is imposed and one that results from a moral leadership which is needed in this matter, or will he speak for so long that the calmness to which he was referring a moment ago will be the calmness of people who will have disappeared as a cultural minority in this country?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, moral leadership is precisely what we want to give the premiers and the provinces; however, it is not possible to have effective moral leadership if there is always a threat in the air.

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—REQUEST GOVERNMENT PUBLICIZE ITS PROPOSALS ON QUEBEC

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister.

In Quebec's recently published white paper, it is said that it is desirable, at the federal level, that federalist positions be precise and made public soon enough so that Quebeckers have ample time to think about them. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister, given that he wants a country with a flexible constitution and where there will be no confrontations, to make known before the referendum clear and precise proposals, as the present government of Quebec calls for?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we intend to pursue the process started on May 22 and demonstrate, through concrete steps, the changes that the federal government has already achieved.

Some hon. Members: Like what?

Mr. Clark: We must go on with the implementation of that process and we are now considering means to bring it about. To that end, we are not merely going to propose changes, to make broad commitments that we would not be able to keep. What we will do is make specific proposals and take concrete action that we can achieve.

Some hon. Members: Like what?

Mr. Clark: To change the status quo. Hon. members ask "Like what?" I have often made reference to—

An hon. Member: Loto Canada!

Mr. Clark: I have already referred to at least two specific changes that we have made: first the lotteries, yes indeed, and second the jurisdiction over offshore resources. We have achieved two changes that the former government had refused to carry out.

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary, bearing in mind that the road to hell is paved with good intentions, when exactly does the Prime Minister, understood as being the government, intend to table his proposals because, let us not forget it, the referendum is a certainty? So, in order to give Quebeckers time to consider those proposals, exactly when does he intend to make counterproposals? Before or after the Christmas season?

An hon. Member: Ask La Salle!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we have had decade of inefficient proposals from the federal government. It is now essential and the time has now come for us to have concrete measures and not just proposals.

FISHERIES

RATIFICATION OF CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT RELATING TO GEORGES BANK

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the need to secure ratification of the fisheries agreement between Canada and the United States as it relates to Georges Bank—a matter which is of extreme urgency and importance to Atlantic Canada—will the right hon. Prime Minister undertake to discuss this question tomorrow with the President of the United States in the hope that we can secure an agreement on this very important issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has followed very closely the representations that have been made by the Government of Canada, and indeed his advice has been helpful in forming those representations to officials of the United States. Naturally, I intend to raise with the President during his visit here our very real concern about the earliest possible ratification of that agreement.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE SALE OF DE HAVILLAND AND CANADAIR TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the Prime Minister's homily the other day that we should avoid ideology and look at the facts, I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board would have another look at the experience of the aerospace industry with the private sector, and look at the success it has had with the public sector at de Havilland and Canadair, and whether he would be prepared to reconsider the decision which he announced over the summer months when Parliament was not in session to offer these industries up for sale to the highest bidder?

• (1450)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the process of privatization in respect of Canadair and de Havilland continues, and it will continue. I would remind the hon. member that in the case of Canadair alone, the former government—with some hangover under this government—had to draft comfort letters involving $350 million to support that concern.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board, who sounds more and more like the Rex Humbard of capitalization rather than a responsible minister of the Crown. In view of the complaints about the government at the time these two industries were bought, that Parliament was never consulted, I wonder whether the President of the Treasury Board can at least give us the assurance that if he is determined, regardless of the experience of the industry and the facts, to go ahead with the sale, that we in Parliament will be allowed to debate this issue and we will be allowed, in committee, to meet with union officials involved and members of the industry so that we, as parliamentarians, can cross-examine those people on the effects of the government's policy and how it is going to affect the future of this industry and the jobs of the people involved?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the financial critic of the New Democratic Party, who is perhaps the Oral Roberts of this House, I would remind the hon. member that he was not in the House at the time, but both Crown corporations to which he refers to were purchased by the former government with a minimum of parliamentary debate.

In fact, I can recall the evening when de Havilland was purchased by a vote on an appropriation bill, notwithstanding the fact that at that time we were demanding certain information in committee that the government denied us. In truth, if the former government was able to buy them without parliamentary review, why is he suggesting that the sale should be subject to parliamentary review?

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

URBAN TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY—POTENTIAL FOR EXPORT TRADE

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for International Trade. In light of the Prime Minister's concern about the Buy America program that he mentioned yesterday, and the transport minister's comments that the government strongly supports increased research and development in urban transportation and sees high potential for an export-oriented manufacturing industry arising from the urban transportation industry, is the minister prepared to provide the same kind of efforts in international marketing as he and his government undertook in the sale of Candu reactors, and can we suppose he will be more successful in this area than he has been in respect of the sale of Candu reactors to Argentina?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall any action that was taken by the other side, when they were in government, to support the sale of Candu reactors. The last minister who was in Argentina was there seven years ago. The whole time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: On the question of urban transportation, there is no doubt that this is a very important market for Canada and it is a matter which has been discussed among officials. It was discussed this very morning by me with the ambassador from the United States, and we propose to take up the matter again. The Buy America program is a matter of great concern to us and we want to explore ways in which we can reduce the impact of that policy on Canadian industry, particularly urban transportation.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that our former minister, Mr. Chrétien, was in Argentina last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT IN URBAN TRANSIT—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. The minister has said in recent statements that he is eager to become more involved in the area of transportation research and development.

In view of the fact that since July, 1979, the government has had an application from Ontario's Urban Transportation Development Corporation for assistance in proceeding with its newly-developed urban transit system, can the minister give us some indication as to when the government will make a decision, because if it is not done within two weeks it may be that Canada will lose a great deal of industrial capacity and, furthermore, there may be a selling off of a great deal of Canadian technology?

Hon. J. Robert Howie (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his interest in research and development. I can assure him that it is very much shared by this government. The matter to which he alludes is currently under very intensive study, and while I cannot make an announcement today I will take his representations and respond to him in the very near future.

[Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore).]

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL ASSIST URBAN TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Since the U.S. government has granted $13 billion over the next ten years for urban transportation research and development, and since representatives from the United States have recognized that Canadian industry is considerably ahead in this field, can the minister tell the House what kind of aid his department is considering for this industry so that Canadians can stay ahead in the field of urban transportation?

Hon. Heward Grafftey (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned last week in the House, I cannot at this time announce a direct subsidy to this industry, but I will soon be making an announcement relating to our challenge of 2.5 per cent of the gross national product. As far as industrial R and D is concerned, my announcement will, both directly and indirectly, deal primarily with the issue raised by the hon. member this afternoon.

IMMIGRATION

REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES—DIFFERENCE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism. I hope he will not be muzzled again today as he was the other day, because I know of his great concern for the reunification of families.

I would ask him, therefore, if he will take steps to try to get the Minister of Employment and Immigration to change this report on immigration levels for 1980 which is so adverse to family reunification and which changes what was the existing practice with the former government last year.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased the hon. member has asked me that question today, because I found the way he asked the question the other day—which appears at page 935 of Hansard—repugnant as far as I am concerned. The hon. member knows how I feel about family reunification. He was in the U.S.S.R. with me, and he knows how I feel—that this issue is very dear to my heart. He put a curve in the question and did not give me an opportunity to answer it.

I want him to know that this government is very strong on family reunification. He knows the way I feel about the way he has advanced his question, and how I feel about the reunification of his people and my people behind the Iron Curtain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I know all about that, Mr. Speaker, and that is precisely why I ask the minister why he will not act to change the report which says the government will increase the proportion of immigrants selected against economic criteria, meaning that family-sponsored immigration will be of a smaller proportion. Why do you not stand up against that?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1500)

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, that question could have been answered today by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who was present at the committee, but the hon. member was not there.

PUBLIC WORKS

DREDGING OF MIRAMICHI RIVER—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I would like to direct to the Minister of Public Works. When the minister announced earlier this fall that he was cancelling the project for the dredging of the Miramichi River, he made a commitment to the government of New Brunswick and the people of Miramichi that he would present that project again to the Treasury Board. Is the minister now in a position to tell the House whether or not he has presented that project for approval to the Treasury Board; and, if so, what is his priority for that project?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is a distortion of the truth to say that I cancelled the project, because it never had project approval from the Treasury Board in the first place. The hon. member should know that for the past 16 years he has had the opportunity to put that matter before his government when it was in power.

I have given the hon. member, the Premier of New Brunswick and my colleague, the Minister of State for Transport, the assurance that the estimate for the Miramichi project will be included in estimates to be submitted to the Treasury Board for consideration for the fiscal year 1980-81.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the project was indeed approved by the previous government and tenders were called. The present minister cancelled the tenders.

I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Transport and ask him if he has included in his estimates to Treasury Board the funding for navigational aids for the Miramichi estuary, and if he can give us, as well, any hope with regard to the awful situation of the wharf at Chatham.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that our government is, indeed, a government of hope.

Mr. Breau: Hope and faith.

An hon. Member: You said it all.

Mr. Howie: I am prepared to propose, in the estimates, a sum of about $1.6 million for navigational aids for the harbour in question. These will include light towers, the lighting pier and other navigational aids. As for the Chatham wharf, it is operated by the Department of Transport. The Minister of Public Works, on the recommendation of the Department of Transport, is responsible for the maintenance and repairs.

I have been in touch with our very able Minister of Public Works in this regard and, as usual, in his efficient manner a consulting engineering firm, Crandall and Associates of Moncton, New Brunswick, are conducting an engineering evaluation. That report will be in the hands of the minister in the near future.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: I have received three notices on matters of privilege, two arising from the question period, one from the hon. member for Verchères (Mr. Loiselle), and the other from the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan); and I have also received a notice of privilege from the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd).

[Translation]

MR. LOISELLE—SUBSIDIES TO ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR PRECISION

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question was directed to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) who, surely by mistake, indicated that upon receiving the Reisman report last year the former government shelved it, especially its recommendations, whereas in fact, as the House will remember, a document was published in March, 1979, containing the reply of the federal government to the recommendations of the Reisman report. Out of 17 recommendations, nine were accepted, three were taken under advisement and five were turned down. So, Mr. Speaker, I should be thankful if the Minister of State for International Trade would shed some light on his remarks to the effect that we, as the former government, shelved the report. In addition, I should like to put two brief questions to him. One recommendation advocated an increase in the EDP budget. I was advised recently that the Treasury Board had refused to increase it. As that was recommended by the Reisman report, I should like an explanation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows very well that that is not a question of privilege but a matter of his views differing from those of the minister.

[English]

MR. KAPLAN—REASON FOR NON-ATTENDANCE AT STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of the answer which the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism (Mr. Paproski) gave to a question that I just asked, suggesting that somehow or other I was derelict in my duty by not attending this morning at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. I am familiar with the answers of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey), and that is partly the reason why I did not attend that meeting. I know the minister's views on the subject because they are stated in the report, and that is that, as far as he is concerned, the proportion of immigrants admitted by economic criteria should be increased and, therefore, that the proportion of family assisted immigrants should be decreased.

There is a second reason I did not attend that meeting, and that is that it had been agreed in the steering committee not to deal with immigration questions this morning, but rather to deal with questions arising under the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I knew perfectly well that his official on immigration would not be there and it would be a breach of agreement among the members of the committee to pursue the matter there.

I was interested in knowing how the minister of state responsible for multiculturalism felt about the matter, because that portfolio has a tradition of—and it is the minister's responsibility—standing up for family reunification, which is of so much concern. I did not know whether the minister had heard of this report on 1980 immigration levels. Obviously, the minister had been overruled if he had made any representation. I wanted to know whether he had made any representation, whether he accepted the report and what he was doing about it. The mandate for multiculturalism should lead the minister into virtually every other portfolio of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member raises a narrow point, that reference is made to the minister's failure to assist in the proceedings of that committee. I think that the hon. member has had ample opportunity to put forward his statement on the matter.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member had his opportunity today to express his likes, dislikes or how he felt about the matter in front of the committee on manpower and immigration. I want the hon. member to be particularly aware of the fact that I have read the report. The member can read the report for himself, but I would briefly quote from it at page 33:

> The principle of family reunification will continue to govern the admission of close family members—

[Mr. Loiselle.]

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) also produced a report which states that family and independent immigration will not be reduced in 1980 because of special refugee programs and that the principle of family reunification will continue to govern the admission of close family members. I do not know what the hon. member would like us to do, but he knows the government's position on this matter. I would not want him to try to misrepresent something which he may have in his own mind and which does not exist as far as this government's policy is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Once again we have launched into a procedural discussion which attempts in a way to extend the discussion or to open up new discussion. There are no procedural grounds upon which we can proceed on this matter at this time.

The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd) is not proceeding with his question of privilege at this time.

The hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) has an outstanding question of privilege which shall stand over until the parties agree that it is a convenient time to proceed with the matter.

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has misrepresented my remarks, and I think that it is important for the record, given the important principle involved, that I correct the matter. I do not know for what partisan or non-partisan political purpose the hon. member has chosen to distort my remarks, but the principle of the report is that family reunification will continue to govern—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. minister realizes that what has been expressed by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) is his opinion of what that report contains. If the minister wishes to disagree and take issue with it, that is a matter of debate and not a matter of procedure.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I should appreciate the President of the Privy Council giving us an idea of the business planned for the House today, tomorrow and next week.

● (1510)

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the time has come in this session of Parliament to go beyond this week and next week. I should like to take this occasion to indicate what we feel ought to be determined and dealt with and finished by this House, and in some cases by Parliament, by the time we normally adjourn for Christmas.

First, let me say that there has been some confusion. Various members on all sides of the House have expressed confusion about what we might be doing on Monday. I want to make it clear that the House will be sitting on Monday, November 12. I do that to clear up the matter in the minds of some hon. members who have spoken to me about it.

We will require royal assent by Christmas for the following bills: first, the appropriation bill related to interim supply; the appropriation bill for the main estimates; Bill C-17, the income tax amendments; Bill C-18, the customs tariff amendments and Bill C-10, the borrowing authority bill which I understand is out of committee now and can come back to the House. All of these are really housekeeping matters in terms of the operation of the government and of this Parliament.

With respect to other legislation for which royal assent is required by the Christmas adjournment, there is Bill C-20, the property tax credit bill, standing in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie).

An hon. Member: No way.

An hon. Member: Forget it.

An hon. Member: We stay here.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do not want to enter into an altercation with respect to that but I want to point out to members that if that bill does not pass by Christmas there is no way home owners in Canada will receive the benefit of it when they file their income tax returns in 1980 for the year 1979.

The other bill for which we require royal assent by the Christmas adjournment is Bill C-6, the old age security amendments and spouses' allowance bill. There is also Bill C-14, the Bank Act. The reason I put that on the list is that it has had an extensive hearing as a reference in the last Parliament and amendments to the bill basically reflect the work of the House of Commons.

There is a bill in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon) with respect to veterans' pensions which we will be putting down very quickly. We require royal assent for that bill before we adjourn for Christmas as well. It is a very short list, really.

With respect to other bills, we will require and ask the House to complete second reading debate on Bill C-15, which is the freedom of information legislation, so that the committee can begin studying it. We will ask that the Municipal Grants Act, Bill C-3, be completed at least through second reading and into committee so that it can be dealt with after we come back.

It is my intention to table in the House in a relatively short time—and I will consult with my friends as to when that can be done—a position paper with respect to parliamentary reform. I would hope we would have moved the reference on parliamentary reform, so that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization can get at the job that has been hanging around for a long, long time and examine how this Parliament operates and review it in terms of the views of hon. members and the views that will be expressed by the government in that paper.

There is a matter of law that must be dealt with by Monday. It is my intention to call on Monday, unless other factors intervene, the redistribution reference standing on the order paper in my name. I am required to bring that forward to Parliament and I intend to do so.

That is basically what I would call the particular legislative package for Christmas. If there is time, and I hope there will be—I should like to have my friends discuss that with me because I recognize there might not be time—we hope to call and have dealt with motions standing in the names of various ministers of the House with respect to the four select committees dealing with rehabilitation, the cost overruns, the reference of which is standing on the order paper, and have a parliamentary review of that matter. Then there is the parliamentary review of the Foreign Investment Review Act and its operation, and voluntarism. That is for the purpose of establishing committees and getting Parliament working on those subjects. There is also the question of establishing a joint committee of the House and Senate on the question of nuclear energy. We should like to have that reference made as well, if there is time to do it.

There is one other matter which is basically dealing with the procedure of the House in which I know Your Honour has an interest as you chaired the committee in the last Parliament, and that is with respect to televising the proceedings of the committees of the House of Commons. I hope we can set that up prior to Christmas.

I think it appropriate to give as broad a picture of the expectations of the government as I can for that period of time. However, with respect to the four select committees that I dealt with, the joint committee on the nuclear inquiry and the committee on televising the proceedings in House of Commons committees, I am suggesting these to my colleagues so that they may come back to me to see if we can take those before Christmas. The other items I mentioned and the stages I mentioned are essential to the government prior to the Christmas adjournment.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that we on this side of the House are ready to co-operate. I did not ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) to read the order paper at length. What we want to know is what is going to happen in the near future in the House. I asked the President of the Privy Council to indicate to us what we are going to do today, tomorrow and next week. As for the long list of bills which he has given us, for some there is no complication, but for others the members on this side at least would like to take part in a more thorough discussion. But I feel it is expecting a great deal from Her Majesty to be seeking assent for the 12-odd bills mentioned by the minister. He is dreaming of a white Christmas. However, I would like to know what we are going to do today, tomorrow and next week. And I would rather not have to ask the question every evening so that on this side of the House we could get ready to speak intelligently and thus closely co-operate with the government to pass legislation as quickly as possible. It would be quite useful to know where we stand in the short term.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among House leaders and representatives of the House leaders with respect to that matter. There is a motion to concur in the estimates and a bill will come out of that. We want to deal with that today. Of course, we will only be sitting until one o'clock tomorrow because of the visit of the President of the United States.

On Monday, as I indicated, all things being equal, and assuming we can make progress on the motion to concur and the bill that will follow it today—in other words, to advance the two stages—on Monday I would be calling the redistribution motion. If we cannot make that kind of progress I may have to reconsider, but I would not do anything without informing my hon. friend. That would get us into next week. I think the next priority is to complete the borrowing authority bill, which would bring us to the first part of the week. Beyond that, I will consult with my friends.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I would like to ask one last question, Mr. Speaker. The President of the Privy Council says that today he intends to move the motion for concurrence in the supplementary estimates and the motion to concur in interim supply and then to introduce a bill. Naturally, the consent of the House will be needed for second reading of that bill so that we may sit in Committee of the Whole. We are prepared to go along with all these things, Mr. Speaker, in order to speed up the business of the House and in a spirit of co-operation with the government. However, I want to bring to the attention of the President of the Privy Council who referred to the last three meetings between the House leaders that in each instance he was warned to avoid including in the motion to concur in interim supply an item which would put us in a position where we would have to concur in twelve-twelfths of the interim supply.

For all practical purposes, if we are asked to approve twelve-twelfths of interim supply, it is a matter of principle; we are being asked to approve the total amount of the estimates. So, Mr. Speaker, I note that in paragraph (b) of motion No. 5, we are asked to grant an additional three-twelfths of the total amount of Energy, Mines and Resources votes 15 and L75. That would add up to twelve-twelfths. It seems to me that goes against what we told the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker). That might lead us to move an amendment that might mean a non-confidence motion against the government which might require a vote very soon if it were to take place on second reading.

[Mr. Pinard.]

I do not intend to move that amendment on second reading, precisely not to embarrass the government and so that things will go more quickly. However, in Committee of the Whole I want to warn the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue that if he does not amend that motion or if the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) does not agree to reduce paragraph (b) of motion No. 5 to two-twelfths rather then three-twelfths, in Committee of the Whole, we will be forced to move a motion to amend in accordance the bill that will follow shortly. I draw this to the attention of the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue immediately. If he wants open co-operation, let him respect the will that was conveyed to him on three occasions at meetings of the House leaders and not include in his motion items that will result in twelve-twelfths of interim supply being approved. And I warn him immediately of our intention to move an amendment, not on second reading, but in Committee of the Whole.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that, but I do not know whether it is appropriate to deal with it now in terms of a point of order during house business. However, I appreciate the notice given of the intention to move and I am grateful for it. It is perhaps a matter that could be taken up with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens).

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) decided the House was going to sit Monday and that, unfortunately, Monday is Remembrance Day, a day to remember our veterans who died in the last wars, first the civil service will be on holiday, second the employees of the House will have to work because of the government's decision. Is the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue prepared to recommend that those employees who will be working Monday be paid time and half, because I do not see why those people should have to work because of an unexpected decision.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether that is within my purview. Perhaps I could discuss with you in the company of my colleagues as to the purview we may have in that respect. I point out, however, that I would be interested; I understand the situation that some members may have difficulties in getting back.

I hope all members will understand that starting from today, given the fact there is a budget to come and there will be a budget debate—

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Crosbie: Next week.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —that there are allotted days for the opposition granted by our rules, and given a legislative program which I have pared down as much as I possibly can, I think there are 21 government legislative days left between now and Christmas. I believe the House would understand the necessity of keeping that time available.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, although there are a number of points that might lend themselves to discussion, the first comment I should like to make is that I welcome the assurance of the government House leader that the bill to amend various statutes affecting veterans will be introduced very shortly. As he knows, it was my hope—and I have stated it a number of times—that that could be done before November 11. It seemed to me that to do so would put more meaning into the tributes that we pay on that occasion. Nevertheless, I hope that what he said will mean that we will know the terms of that bill perhaps some day next week.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I hope so too.

Mr. Knowles: The government House leader has done two things. He has given us an overview of what he wants between now and Christmas, and he has indicated what he has in mind for the next few days.

With respect to the many matters on which he would like action between now and Christmas, may I point out that in the case of those four select committees on voluntarism, the Foreign Investment Review Act, the cost overruns and the handicapped, I indicated to him that in so far as our party is concerned we would be prepared to make arrangements to deal with the four of them in one day's debate. If he wants those committees to get going, and I believe he does, I hope that he will consider that offer.

With regard to the freedom of information legislation, I know that the government House leader expressed the hope that this could be done with a minimum of debate. There was even some suggestion of one speaker per party. We have a number of members who wish to take part, but we would agree to a debate of not more than two days at second reading of that bill. I am trying to make suggestions that might help him to draw up a schedule.

The minister has mentioned certain bills that he feels should be through before Christmas. I realize that it is important to get on with the Bank Act so that we do not run into extending the ten years into 11 or 12 years, but I believe that Parliament does have until March to get that legislation through. Nevertheless, as I say, we recognize that that bill is important.

When the minister was pleading for the legislation regarding the property tax credit to be put through before Christmas, I was thinking that the minister is not only the government House leader but also the Minister of National Revenue. I wonder if this means he has already ordered the printing of the income tax forms as though that legislation had been passed. That, of course, is a bit risky.

Generally speaking, we appreciate the concern about these bills and we shall do our part. As I say, as opposed to some things that we may want to debate at length, I have indicated four resolutions regarding committees and one bill concerning which we think action could be taken fairly early.

As to the debate today, and Monday if it is carried on, my understanding is that first of all we will be debating the motions that are on the order paper in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), and that for those debates Mr. Speaker will be in the chair. It is only after those motions have been passed that a bill is to be introduced. I understand it is to be one bill incorporating both supplementary estimates and interim supply. If at that point it is necessary to give consent to move from first reading to second reading, we will give that consent. But as I say, first of all, we protect our right to discuss these motions at the motion stage.

At that point we can go further into the very serious point raised by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard). I certainly do not recall, and I have been around here for a while, interim supply ever being given for a full twelve-twelfths. Yet simple arithmetic tells me that nine-twelfths plus three-twelfths is twelve-twelfths.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is excellent, Stan!

Mr. Knowles: Maybe my hon. friends have not been over there long enough to do the simple addition of fractions. However, we will be discussing these motions with Mr. Speaker in the chair. If these are completed today and first reading follows automatically, we will give consent to go on to second reading.

I wish the government House leader would be a little more specific as to what we will do on Monday if the supply motions and bill are not through today. Will we carry on with them on Monday, or does he intend to interrupt them for the redistribution measure?

• (1530)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On that last point, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to my friend I am bound by the law to introduce that reference as a result of an amendment to the appropriate statute to do something by Monday. That is the last day. Unless there is some discussion later today as a result of which we might deal with it in a perfunctory way today, I would have to begin with that work on Monday. I hope that answers my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister also not bound by law to get the supplementary estimates through before November 9? If he is caught with those two legal requirements, what is he going to do?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thought I indicated clearly that I was taking the first course because I thought we could handle it, and I will discuss how with the hon. member and my hon. friend. I think we can take care of the legal requirement under the statute dealing with the reference to redistribution appropriately on Monday, so I am determined to call it first. As I said, I am anxious to get Bill C-10 through which, I understand, is third reading. We do have an atmosphere in the House which will require some co-operation among all members. I think I indicated that when I was answering the question of the hon. member for Drummond.

I want to express my thanks to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for the offer he has made with regard to one day's debate on those four references—and I am prepared to consult as to how we divide the time—and also not more than two days on the freedom of information legislation. I think that is quite generous. The hon. member for Drummond is here, but his House leader is quite justifiably away today. We can discuss this matter. If that agreement is forthcoming from the official opposition, it would be very helpful and we can schedule these important matters to allow the committee and Parliament to work, which is in the best interests of members of this House.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, a moment ago there was an exchange of words across the floor that was probably picked up by Hansard. It seemed to indicate that the Minister of Finance was saying we would have a budget next week. I do not know if that is a littly wry humour or if he has something we do not have officially on the record, that Hansard might indicate otherwise. I gather no budget next week. Is that the case?

Mr. Crosbie: I had better clear that up, Mr. Speaker. Although I am enthusiastic about getting a budget before the House, what I said was I will get into the budget next week.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the government House leader. It concerns the work of this House but with special interest regarding private members' work. Is it the intention of the government House leader to refer to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization the subject matter of the motion I moved earlier today with regard to advancing the hour of the so-called late show, the adjournment debate, from ten o'clock to six o'clock, a time that would be much more convenient to the majority of members in this House? I think there is some predisposition in the minds of most members to do so.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to speak to me beforehand. I indicated my support for the principle that he discussed. I sent him a note later. I felt at the time, on reflection, that perhaps it was an appropriate thing for the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to look at. I believe he will be very pleased with at least that aspect of the position paper that I intend to table in the House of Commons, with the idea of referring it to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, before the government House leader breathes a sigh of relief and subsides on this issue, I would like to make a suggestion and also ask him a question. It may be very productive, having in mind the events of the last day or so, for the government House leader to proceed with all due speed to bring in a motion for Parliament to reform. It might be advantageous for this House and for the people of Canada.

I would like to ask him a question with respect to the motion I brought under Standing Order 43. I know the hon. gentleman is doing his very best to see that engrossed in the form of a motion the House can deal with. However, it would be idle to proceed with the freedom of information legislation until we have some opportunity to discuss that antiquated obscenity which masquerades as the law under the Official Secrets Act. I hope this motion can be brought in at the same time so that the committee will be seized with jurisdiction.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I never cease to marvel at the qualities of the hon. member for Peace River for creating adjectives to describe things he does not like. He expressed sentiments which most of us share. I should report to the hon. member that in fact there is a motion prepared. It is my hope we can deal with it at the same time as the freedom of information legislation. I hope so. I could not put that down today because, quite frankly, I have not had time to consult with the hon. member for Peace River, but I have talked to him about the actual wording of the motion. He knows the intention of the government. Now that he has raised it, and I was going to raise it later, I want the House to know that we will probably be putting that motion on the order paper, I guess within a day or so, so that the House can see what we have in mind.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NYSTROM—LENGTHY PREAMBLES TO QUESTIONS PUT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In a way, I hesitate to do so. I want to say a word in support of something Your Honour said earlier today during question period when you were chastising—perhaps that is the word—the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) about being loquacious and using a very long preamble.

It is a fact that when that is done in the House by members of Parliament, it cuts out members of the opposition from pursuing questions. In other words, it cuts off some members of the opposition. I know Your Honour has been more than fair to all members of the House. It just happened today that, because of lengthy preambles by members of the Liberal party, we were reduced to asking three questions instead of four.

This might be an appropriate time to say that we support any policing of preambles which Your Honour may see fit to do in the House. This would mean there is more opportunity in this House to participate. Perhaps a suggestion that could be made is that if some members are consistent in terms of having long preambles, their party should be penalized and not members of other parties.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am very happy the hon. member has brought this to the attention of the House. I will undertake to speak to the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) and other members of my party if the hon. gentleman who has just sat down will speak to the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who probably takes up more time than any five members.

An hon. Member: Bionic mouth.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, it may be that my ability in the French language, which is a second language for me, is not as fluent as some members to my right. I certainly do not engage in long preambles. I do not think the Chair has ever permitted those preambles. It may be that in debate, when we had points to make about the way those to my right conducted themselves when in government, something needed to be aired and we took the appropriate time permitted under the Standing Orders of this House to do so. The hon. member who previously spoke is so completely out of order that he should withdraw that remark.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise as a member who for only a few months has watched some of the members of the Liberal party asking questions. I believe the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) should be paid heed to when he states that when they take up a lot of time, we suffer and not them. They should suffer. With respect, I say Your Honour should crack down on them.

Some of us, perhaps, have an excuse for being a little long winded and stuttering a little, since we are new in the House, but members sitting on the front bench over there have no excuse and Your Honour has done nothing about it. I think you should, because we are suffering from the effect of these long answers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said he hesitated even to raise this matter as a point of order. There are two considerations in play here all the time. One of them is an attempt to proportion participation in the question period, which has really been quite an exciting part of my responsibility in this Parliament, much more so than in the last. But trying to apportion it with mathematical precision does not always work. There will be some days when, if we tried to measure the participation of members by a mathematical formula, we would find that one party was slightly ahead of another. I have always been quite careful that if participation from the back benches of any party is prejudiced as a result of long-winded questions or answers from the front bench, that that prejudice stay in the same party as it originated in. The fact that I was not able to do this with extreme precision today can be laid to the lengthy answers which needed to be given. That is very difficult to assess. Sometimes questions can be asked very quickly but the answers are long, not because they are drawn out deliberately but because sometimes they have to be long. That is very difficult to judge.

I do not think we can try to argue on the floor exactly how this should be done with mathematical precision every day, but I certainly understand and appreciate the sentiments of hon. members who have expressed themselves so far. I see the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) is seeking the floor. This is one matter, I am sure, they cannot blame on the Creditistes because they were not up today and they were not up yesterday. I am sure he wanted to make that point clear.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, hon. members of the New Democratic Party have undoubtedly got their message across, but we of the official opposition expect the same treatment that the official opposition in the last Parliament received.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

Supply

That Supplementary Estimates (A), 1979-80, laid upon the table Thursday, October 11, 1979, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the intention of the House to consider more than one motion at the same time, or does the House prefer to take them one at a time? The one motion then, the motion of Mr. Stevens which I have just read.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about the supplementary estimates and make some comments in particular with respect to the whole area of labour, the whole field of employment opportunities in Canada. I want to take the opportunity, using this motion, to place some thoughts on the record because I think they are extremely apropos at this point in time.

Since 1979, the proportion of the national work force employed in the manufacturing sector has fallen from 26 per cent to 19 per cent. In 1970, 21 per cent of our exports consisted of manufactured goods, whereas today the figure has fallen to 10 per cent. In 1970, our trade deficit in manufactured goods was $3 billion and now the figure has increased to more than $11 billion. Foreign ownership of the Canadian economy continues. It dominates our economy. Petroleum, base metals, rubber, cars, electrical products, resources in general, are all foreign-controlled. This means the profits and dividends, the licence fees, the interest payments and the management fees must all leave the country. Indeed, that is the greatest problem with respect to our current account deficit.

I believe that when on May 22 some 37 per cent of the electorate of Canada voted for the Conservative party and that party formed a government, these people expected a change. They expected a new direction. During that campaign the Conservative party pointed out very correctly that inflation was indeed a very serious problem for working Canadians.

An hon. Member: It was public enemy No. 1.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, that is right. They also pointed out that unemployment was the twin brother, or the twin sister, depending on your orientation, of inflation and that these are extremely serious problems. The fact of the matter is that the government which now sits opposite is acting on the same philosophy and pursuing exactly the same policies as the government it replaced, a government which followed them for 16 years and, before that, for 106-odd years, or whatever. It is a dangerous policy. It is one which says government has no place in the board rooms of the nation and, in effect, that the government ought not to interfere in the private sector, that the government ought not to involve itself in economic management. This has created the situation we face today.

I do not think it gives us much comfort when we look at the front benches opposite and see the who's who of the corporate world sitting on those benches. These are the very people who have created the problems in this country. The corporate interests in Canada today are not interested in Canada or the Canadian people. They are not interested in the welfare of Canadians. They are interested in their own narrow concerns of accruing greater profits and diversification of the industries to which they owe their loyalty. There is no doubt they are prepared to sell their mothers-in-law if the price is right. It seems to me they would sell anything, if anything was for sale in this country.

One has only to look at the latest report of FIRA to see how quickly they would abandon this country, take their profits and run. When we look at the front benches of this government we see the incestuous relationship between government and the corporate world. We have a finance minister who is the scion of an entrepreneurial family in Newfoundland. He used to be a Liberal. He started his own party. He crossed the floor, back and forth three times in the Newfoundland legislature. Today he sits here saying he is a neo-Tory. Sounds to me more like he is a suppository.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: We go down the line and we see the "happy hacker", the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) and the little hackers around him. He is the man who failed as a potential president of the Bank of Western Canada.

• (1550)

Mr. Symes: That is why he wants to sell off profitable Crown corporations.

Mr. Rodriguez: He is a failed banker, and he talks in this House about selling off—privateering—businesses which Canada was forced to go into in order to preserve Canadian jobs because foreign-owned companies were closing down and laying off Canadian workers.

Then there is the economic adviser to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), the éminence grise, Jim Gillies, formerly member of Parliament for Don Valley. When he was a member of Parliament he said in a speech in Toronto that there was nothing wrong with our being hewers of wood and drawers of water. That role is being played out on the Tory benches today.

The hon. member for Scarborough West is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Wightman). I received a little notice the other day from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. The association was congratulating the parliamentary secretary on his appointment. The notice said, "As you all know, Bill was our industrial relations director for many years". It must have been a manifestation of the sense of humour of the Prime Minister which made him appoint the hon. member for Scarborough West to the position of Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour. Is it not wonderful for labour to know that its future and its interests lie in the hands of a former water boy for the Canadian Manufacturers' Association?

Then there is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ritchie). He is a former big wheel at Imperial Oil. He sits in the back smiling. He should smile. The profits of oil companies today would put a smile on the face of any parliamentary secretary, especially if he came from Bay Street.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) was a member of a law firm which acted for Inco. We all know what Inco did to the Sudbury basin and about its commitment to job creation in this country. The minister has hired as his policy adviser Elizabeth Parr Bond, who was a big wheel at Inco.

The Conservative party has among its caucus research staff a chap named Walter Gray, another Inco boy. They are all finding homes now. They have come out of Bay Street or the Toronto-Dominion Centre, and now they are all living here in Ottawa. Thank God that nest across the street burned down.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Rodriguez: But now they are living on Parliament Hill; God help us!

Someone once told me that the Rideau Club was well located beside the American embassy. In the one building policies were made, and in the other building they were fired. The people making policy for Canadians now are making policy which has a bias. Let me give examples of the kinds of things which take place. I have outlined why hon. members opposite are helpless to do anything. The system needs to be challenged. Those who control the purse strings of the nation, those who are surrogates to those on Bay Street, are in no position to challenge the economic structure. Every day they say that we have to depend on the private sector to create employment.

I have never known of a corporation which was in the business of job creation. On the contrary, the business of business is business. Somebody said that in the House the other day. Therefore, the job of a corporation is not to create employment. Its job is to maximize profits and minimize costs. That is a legitimate undertaking, but what is legitimate for government? A legitimate government undertaking would be to plan the economy so that it expands and creates employment opportunities. There has to be a strategy. There have to be some rules. You either play by the rules or you go away; you do not play on the team any more.

If an immigrant came to this country and did not act in its best interests, he would be deported. That is fair ball. Those are the rules. But we have multinationals which come into this country and behave as if it is their private playground. Whenever a government says anything, they threaten, bribe and cajole. If they are not happy, they put their capital on strike. We saw that when the oil companies wanted an increase about three years ago. They took up their drills and this and that and took them to the Arabian Sea. Then we said, "Oh, boys, don't go away, we will give you a few more billions". Like the swallows returning to Capistrano, lo and behold, they came back because the price was right. The Canadian people paid it, and they still are.

Indeed, as a result of three proposals with regard to the Income Tax Act they can be paid more money to drill dry holes than actually to discover oil. That is the way it is. They have come into Canada and done exactly what they wanted. Let me give a specific example. Everyone knows the famous IT and T. We have seen that company perform in Chile and throughout Latin America. It came to the north shore of the St. Lawrence at Port Cartier. It was going to build a pulp and paper mill. It was supposed to be a modern operation. The federal government forked over $23 million. The provincial government forked over $100 million. Every time there is a problem, we throw money at it. So, IT and T came. The plant is now six years old. What did the company do? It just shut the plant down. The plant was appropriate for Georgia and Virginia, but it was not very appropriate for the north shore of the St. Lawrence. A whole set of problems was created. The solution was to close the plant down, and 1,300 workers are out of work.

The Minister of Finance is sitting over there with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath). I would have to call them the odd couple. Both of them are from Newfoundland. I recall the situation at St. Lawrence, Newfoundland where an Alcan fluorspar mine closed down and put 400 workers out of work. That represented the whole working community because that was the only operation in St. Lawrence. They are out of work. They are on unemployment insurance. In the case of the IT and T plant in Port Cartier, 1,300 workers went on to the rolls. There have been other examples of operations being closed down. Multinationals do not like to be pressured. They want to get all the benefits and advantages, so they cajole and threaten and elect their own to the House of Commons so that they can continue. It seems that there is no will to challenge that structure. There is no will to challenge the suggestion that Canada must jump every time multinationals decide they need more for their coffers. That is not acceptable.

Let us consider another example, the shipbuilding industry in this country. I point out that 40 per cent of the workers in the Canadian shipbuilding industry are located in the province of Quebec. The Prime Minister has said in this House that he does not want to get into the referendum debate in Quebec because he thinks actions speak louder than words. I agree with him. In effect, we could say as well that inaction speaks louder than words. Here we have a situation where 1,700 jobs have disappeared in the Quebec shipyards in the last year and another 3,500 jobs are threatened.

I want to say that that kind of situation undermines the interests of Canada. It is more destructive than any rabble-rousing speech by any separatist in the province of Quebec or the province of Alberta. I think that that is a very destructive situation because, in the long run, a person has to decide if there is more benefit to be derived from being part of a united Canada, with all the strength and diversity that that carries, or if it is better to go it alone. They cannot do any worse. It seems to me that the Prime Minister has an opportunity here in assisting the shipbuilding industry in the province of Quebec or, for that matter, in eastern Canada.

There is a lot of talk about having our own merchant marine, and there are some navy ships to be built, but action must be taken now. These cannot just be promises which are going to be held up and recycled election after election. There has to be some action taken to get this going. We certainly saw the demise of the merchant navy under the Liberal party when it formed the government. Now we have Tweedledee out and Tweedledum in, and they are telling us that they will bring back the merchant navy.

So, true to form, they set up a committee to study the matter. They must be the most studious group over there, because everything is being studied. When they were in opposition, they had all the answers. They did not need any studies. In fact, they accused the Liberals of always doing studies on everything. Now they are in government, it turns out they do not have the answers at all. They have embarked on make work projects for all the backbench Tories who did not get cabinet posts. They give out a press blurb that Joe so-and-so from the back benches has been appointed chairman of a committee to study ingrown toenails and, lo and behold, he gets the committee going.

Now they are saying we should have a merchant marine and that is how we are going to stimulate the shipbuilding industry in Canada. As a result of that campaign promise, the leader of our party wrote to the Prime Minister and received the following reply on October 16, 1979:

Dear Mr. Broadbent:

I have your letter of October 1, 1979, regarding the Halifax shipyard and Panamax drydock.

You will be pleased to know this government places a high priority on the improvement of the Canadian shipbuilding and repair industry. The economic development committee of cabinet, under the chairmanship of the Minister of State for Economic Development, is presently reviewing the shipbuilding and repair industry in general, and the Panamax drydock in particular.

Given the urgency of this matter, I expect the committee will bring forward their recommendations at a very early date.

I take this opportunity to express my thanks for your support in our continuing efforts to establish an economically viable merchant marine.

Yours sincerely,

Joe Clark.

"We have set up a study and we are going to study the merchant marine now", they say. When they were in the opposition, they said: "we must have a merchant marine now". I ask, what is the study for? It seems to me that what we have to do now is to look at ways and means. We should lay out a plan. We all saw the leader of the Conservative party meeting with all his minions at some resort around here with lots of books, and those were the blueprints for change. Now we are finding out that all these problems have to be studied as if they had to look at the reason why we need a merchant marine after all. While they are doing that, jobs are going down the tube in this country, jobs are disappearing. In effect, this government sits on its hands and says, "We are studying the problem".

We asked a question today with regard to an order for the construction of a ferry which the CN is placing, a ferry to be used in eastern Canada. Where are they looking to construct the ferry? They are looking to place the order for its construction in the United States. For example, this country needs legislation which would say that if we are going to build a merchant marine and if we are going to spend any money on shipbuilding, the building and the spending should be done in Canada. We should delineate that policy very clearly. After all, Bill Davis, when he discovered that the street cars he was buying would be cheaper in Montreal than Thunder Bay, forced TCC to purchase them from Thunder Bay because there was a need to create jobs in northwestern Ontario in particular. So, in effect, the Ontario government intervened by directing job creation.

It seems to me that we need to have a policy. It is surprising to note—it is not surprising for me and for those of us who live in the Sudbury basin, but it is surprising for people who are not from there—that 50 per cent of the nickel mined in the Sudbury basin leaves the Sudbury basin in a semi-processed state, in matt form. Then it goes to the United States and it goes to Wales and is finished in its final form, following which it is sold back to us. It seems to me that at this point in time we need to have a clearly defined policy to direct that our resources will be refined to their final stage at the place where they are mined. This should also apply to our forestry resource. We are still shipping our pulp in a semi-processed state from the east coast of Canada to Europe, and we buy back fine paper. It seems to me, for example, that our economic strategy should clearly define that Canadian resources must be refined by Canadians in Canada.

It is becoming very clear that the employment factor is in the manufacturing sector, not in the ripping out of resources. The ripping out of resources is capital intensive, but jobs are in the refining and manufacturing of the resource.

The government has done an analysis of research and development. That is another area where we do not have a clearly defined policy. They should no longer be studying what has caused problems in the economy. When they were in the opposition, they knew what the problems were. What we should be doing now is putting in place some policies to achieve full employment.

We have the spectacle of the President of the Treasury Board saying the government are going to sell de Havilland and Canadair, keeping in mind that de Havilland and Canadair came as a direct result of the analysis which I have just given in terms of foreign ownership. Those were two industries whose foreign owners decided they were no longer going to keep them in Canada and so they decided to close them down. It was the fear of all those jobs being lost which caused the Canadian government to step in and take those two companies over and build up these industries, which gave us some expertise in the aeronautical industry. Now that the gang of 138 is in—

An hon. Member: It's 136.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Rodriguez: The gang of 136 is now saying, "We have to privateer these companies." The suffix "ize" should only be added to one noun, and that is "fertile".

● (1610)

It seems that when they are talking like this, saying they are going to privatize or privateer de Havilland, one should remember that the President of the Treasury Board, in a meeting with the United Auto Workers which represents the workers of de Havilland and who are concerned about jobs and Canadians working, and not interested in Canadians going on unemployment insurance and on welfare, said he is not prepared to give them guarantees. Representatives of that union attempted to get some guarantees from the minister that if the government proceeded with the sale it would be sold to Canadian owners and that whoever buys the industry will not be allowed to pick up the plant and put it in some other part of the country, creating a great deal of hardship for the thousands of employees of those operations. The President of the Treasury Board in his usual mild and self-effacing way told them he was not prepared to give those guarantees.

When the minister was pressed to bring the matter to Parliament he got into a great big spiel about how they actually came into public ownership. He mentioned some dollar item in the estimates as though that was relevant. What is relevant is the situation now, not what was done previously. In effect, this government has embarked on the principle that Parliament is supreme and that Parliament is the place where these decisions should be made. Indeed, we had the example of a bill passed in one day just two weeks ago making legal an increase in postal rates which has been in effect now for a year. The argument was that it was done by order in council under the Financial Administration Act, but Parliament should decide the increase in postal rates.

These corporations come under the Financial Administration Act and they are infinitely more important than an increase in the postal rate from 14 to 17 cents, yet we observe the arrogance of the President of the Treasury Board in ignoring Parliament and denying Parliament the opportunity to debate the matter. He now sits there and smiles. This is not a smiling matter, it is an extremely important matter, particularly to the 23,000 workers of de Havilland.

Mr. Stevens: How many?

Mr. Rodriguez: There are 23,000 in all their various operations. They are concerned about what happens if that plant and those operations are sold and relocated somewhere else in the country. That is extremely important to them. The President of the Treasury Board can laugh all he wants. He does not have to worry about where his next pay cheque is coming from because he knows darn well that he can move on to the Senate. He knows that if he was defeated he would go to the Senate. He knows they will find a niche for him somewhere in the corporate structure.

An hon. Member: He will become a bank president.

Mr. Rodriguez: We are coming to the Bank Act in a minute. It seems to me that this is a perfect example of what this government is attempting to do. They are putting us back into the hands of the very people who created the problems. You know what happens when these corporations close down and move on. People go on unemployment insurance when that happens and this government is now tightening up on unemployment insurance.

These fellows to our right did their trick when the Conservatives were in opposition. The Conservatives in opposition opposed the previous Bill C-14, having to do with the latest changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) carried out a campaign in eastern Canada pointing out how terrible the Liberals were to bring in changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, changes that would have devastating effects on the poor people of eastern Canada. Now that they have been elected and are sitting in the government benches, one would have thought they would at least have scotched that. But no, what they have done is continue the changes and allow them to come into effect. Those changes are detrimental.

This government has no control over the economy and is allowing these corporations to put Canadians out of work. When that happens Canadians go on the dole, on unemployment insurance. When that happens the government turns around and blames the victims for the conditions in which they find themselves. They start tearing away at the humanity of fellow Canadians, men and women. They start saying things like they are ripping off the unemployment insurance system, they are stealing, they are lazy, they are young people and do not want to work, they are only women, secondary earners, and so on. This is a very dehumanizing thing to Canadians who are unemployed. All this makes these people feel guilty about receiving unemployment insurance. They became unemployed because of unilateral decisions on the part of corporations.

I know the Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander) is a very nice, hearty, hail and bluff fellow. He gets up and says, through an intermediary, an unknown official in the labour department, that he is concerned that he does not have enough importance in the cabinet. I think he is in the outer ring. Some members are inners and some are outers, and apparently he is an outer. He wants to get to be an inner.

An hon. Member: It's an in and out house.

Mr. Rodriguez: An "in house" and "out house", I get it. That minister wants to enhance his role and that of his department. He says it only has a budget of $40 million and "X" number of man-years of employees, so he wants to take over more of the responsibilities of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He makes a good argument. He says: "After all, we are both paid the same ministerial salary, allowance and everything else so why should I not share the work?" He does not have to take anything away from the Ministry of Employment and Immigration. He should bring in some legislation that puts some flesh on the labour structure of this country.

For example, there ought to be adequate notice of shutdown. There should not be this business of a company deciding that six weeks from today it is going to close down its plant. In some countries corporations are not allowed to do that. In some countries the notice for a shutdown or layoff in some cases is a year or more, so that if there is something structurally wrong they can look for alternate ways to employ the workers, or to change the operation and retain the workers.

The Minister of Labour has a wonderful opportunity. We have the Bank Act. The banks want some changes. They want security for Canadian banks. They do not like foreign banks. They want security for themselves in respect of operating in this country. However, they will not provide any security for their employees vis-à-vis the efforts to organize bank employees. The banks have fought tooth and nail against the organization of bank workers into unions.

What has the Minister of Labour been doing? He does not have changes to the labour code he intends to bring in to provide the Rand formula which has been accepted in this country for so many years. As a result, we have situations in which the banks refuse to negotiate in good faith. They will not agree to the Rand formula with regard to the collective agreement.

There are many changes that must be made to the labour code to enhance the working place, to make the workplace a more human place. For example, there is much to be done in the field of occupational health and safety. There are thousands of chemicals that come into the workplace in this country every month, yet there is no pre-testing. The only testing is in the acutal use of those materials and the subsequent results years later when we fight a rearguard action to improve the quality of the workplace. There is a whole new spectre with regard to stress in the workplace, a new danger in the workplace, but that whole area has not been looked at by the Minister of Labour.

For example, part IV of the labour code says that the minister may set up health and safety committees in the workplace. There is nothing in the labour code which says that it is mandatory. To date the minister has not set up one health and safety committee in a workplace under federal jurisdiction. It seems that he has so many problems to deal with, such as the question of technological change and the impact of technological change on the work style of workers in this country. There are so many things that should be done, but the Minister of Labour has not touched any of them.

It seems to me, as we take a look at what has been happening in Canada, that there is no reason to have any confidence in this government. It seems that they are carrying on the disastrous policies established by their predecessors. This government is not prepared to challenge the corporate structure in Canada, to place Canada first, to take a firm stand with respect to economic planning or to step in and say that the government has a role to play in the planning of the economy. All these things must happen, otherwise we will continue to rip out our resources, and to lose, therefore, many job opportunities.

Interest rates are rising, Mr. Speaker. The government says that we are locked into the American interest rate structure, and that if their interest rate rises, so must ours. What has happened is that it has sneaked continentalism in through the back door. The effect of high interest rates on industry is illustrated in British Columbia where the Weldwood plant has had to lay off 700 workers because interest rates have made it uneconomical for the plant to keep these people.

This government has said that things will get worse before they get better. It is the old story, the operation was successful but the patient died. The government keeps saying that raising the interest rates is the way to fight inflation, but in fact it causes inflation. How does one bring inflation down by allowing interest rates to rise? When they were in opposition, it was wonderful to hear the Conservatives make all their arguments against rising interest rates, but now that they are the government, they say that we are locked in.

If one looks at the answers in Hansard given by the minister of finance of the previous government with regard to interest rates, one will find that they are exactly the same answers the current Minister of Finance has been giving out. The government does not have a new approach or a new deal. All they say is that we must renew initiatives and let Canadians pull themselves up by their bootstraps. It is operation bootstraps. It is forward into the past. That is the myth today, that somehow or other having a free enterprise system and competition will solve our economic problems. It will not solve our problems.

This government has brought in the supplementary estimates which were introduced by the previous government, but they could easily be the supplementary estimates of this government because they have accepted holus-bolus the basic philosophy on which Canada is run, economically speaking.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, recognizing that the NDP has decided that they would speak on this motion, I want to put on record the reason my party will not participate in the debate. It is because we would prefer to wait and have our day in Committee of the Whole. We are prepared today to go into Committee of the Whole on the bill with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath). It is not because we are not interested or that we agree that the House should give passage to this matter of supply without asking any questions of the government about what they have done. Or I should say what they have not done, because they really have not done very much. That is the position of our party.

We recognize that the NDP has decided otherwise, and we do not question that. They see it as their duty to participate in this debate. What we want to do is get at these ministers and bring them before Parliament and the eyes of the public to show the public what this government has not done in the past five months.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a couple of remarks in response to the remarks made by the poverty-stricken member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I share his concern that when government contracts are given out, we ought to preserve as many jobs as possible for Canadians. The hon. member referred to the proposed ferry to be built by Canadian National and said that it ought to be built by Canadians if at all possible.

My mind then went back several years when the hon. member for Nickel Belt was on a Commonwealth Parliamentary Association trip to Sri Lanka. The hon. member came back with a Persian rug, much like the Persian rugs found over in the Rideau Club which he eschewed so much. When the hon. member landed in London, he went straight from the airport to the English Channel in order to catch a ferry to France so that he could buy a headlamp for his French car. It was not a Renault or Peugeot but a Citroen. That is the hon. member's way of preserving Canadian jobs. I hope when he hires help to look after his race horse that it is Canadian help.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member got this idea. He may have been on some sort of Arabian Night's dream. I do not know on what basis he makes those accusations about my purchasing non-Canadian items. I do not frequent the South African embassy, and therefore do not have an opportunity to enjoy South African wines. I do not know what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, on the point raised by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), I would like to make it very clear that I support him completely. We would sooner get into Committee of the Whole and call certain ministers to reply in this Parliament to specific questions, rather than make long speeches and get no answers. The members of the NDP have chosen, which is their right, to filibuster on this bill and not go into Committee of the Whole. As the official opposition we will watch their actions, and if they continue to filibuster we will also put up some speakers.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on this matter, but then I heard the remarks of the Liberal whip.

Mr. Darling: What is that in your hand?

Mr. Nystrom: I will tell you what it is in a minute. The Liberal whip has said that the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), by making an eloquent and tremendous speech, is leading my party on a filibuster. I would like to know, as the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) asked, what the hon. member's definition is of filibuster.

We are dealing with supplementary estimates here which are very important. I think the reason the Liberals do not wish to participate is that they are embarrassed. We are dealing with estimates proposed by the previous Liberal government. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) is nodding his head. He is now piloting some Liberal goodies through the House of Commons. Perhaps that is why they are embarrassed to speak. They are looking for any excuse to avoid participating in this debate.

• (1630)

I want to say to my Liberal friends that some very important things are happening in this country, and so it does no harm to spend a few hours on this stage of the debate. When government members were in opposition they used to do this quite often.

I should like to refer to one issue which I think is very important, Mr. Speaker, and that is the speech made in Calgary yesterday, by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), who is responsible to the Canadian Wheat Board, to the United Grain Growers. We are dealing today with the estimates that concern transportation, the movement of grain and things that are very important to farmers in the west. I should like to quote one or two things from that speech. The minister said:

I am frustrated—

I suppose he is frustrated at being a member of that cabinet. He continued:

—at present because we are passing up sales—perhaps worth $1 billion per year—because of limitations in our transportation system. I can't help thinking what it would mean to producers and to Canada if we were exporting 50 per cent more grain and oilseeds. There would be a tremendous increase in cash flow and net income for producers. The additional sales would earn Canada $2-$3 billion a year in badly needed foreign exchange. . . . And it would generate an additional $4 billion a year in domestic economic activity.

I want to make the point here that we are dealing with a resolution on the estimates of the old Liberal government. The administration which Otto Lang headed as minister of transport cost this country literally billions and billions of dollars per year for the movement of grain. The Minister of Transport says that about $1 billion was lost last year because the grain could not be moved, and an extra $4 billion was lost as a result of reduced economic activity that would have been attendant upon the movement of the grain.

I think it is important to register our dissatisfaction with the amount of money provided in the supplementary estimates for the movement of grain. I want to make it clear that I expect the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie)—the Ayatollah Crosbie—to include several hundreds of millions of dollars to repair the branch lines on the prairies and to purchase hopper cars when he brings down his budget. The Minister of Transport is complaining that the grain was not moved due to the inefficient system left the country by 16 years of Liberal party rule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I hope the Minister of Finance realizes that his backbenchers are applauding, meaning they agree this should be done. I see him nodding—I can hear him from here! I hope he takes very seriously representations made by the backbenchers of his party and by members of this party. We cannot afford to lose $4 billion per year. It would seem to me good economic sense to invest a few hundred million dollars in order to reap an additional $4 billion per year in economic activity in the west.

I have another concern about the speech made by the Minister of Transport in Calgary yesterday, Mr. Speaker. He spoke of the possibility of getting rid of the Crow rate or changing it. He said that if there is any change of application of the Crow rate it will have to be coupled with adequate service guarantees. This morning, speaking on the CBC, he elaborated on the possibility that the Conservative party may change the Crow rate. I do not know what kind of change they are thinking of, so I think it is important that someone in the Conservative party should make their stand clear as soon as possible.

I should like to take a moment to point out to members of the House how important the Crow rate is to Canadian farmers, Mr. Speaker. Many years ago the CPR was given a lot of land, mineral rights and property. In return for that, they guaranteed to haul the farmers' grain at a set price in the years ahead. That price is set in the statutes of this country, and to the farmers that is very important. If the Crow rate was varied it would cost farmers from 400 per cent to 600 per cent more to haul grain to market, compared to the cost for the equivalent distance in the United States.

During the election campaign last May the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said that if the Conservative party was elected it would guarantee retention of the Crow rate. The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has not given that assurance, however, and now the Minister of Transport is saying that they are considering getting rid of or changing the rate.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the spirit of Otto Lang lives; the spirit of Otto Lang is reincarnated in the Minister of Transport!

An hon. Member: Be serious.

Mr. Nystrom: I am being very serious, Mr. Speaker. Many members of the Conservative party have spoken about abolishing the Crow rate. The Hall commission report, however, recommended the retention and extension of the Crow rate to cover processed raw materials.

Just a week or so ago I heard the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) comment on the radio that the Crow rate should be changed. The Conservative governments in Alberta and Manitoba have spoken about altering the Crow rate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hargrave) has said that the Crow rate should be altered. As well, the newly appointed western grain transportation coordinator, Hugh Horner, brother of the famous Jack, has spoken of the possibility of abolishing the Crow rate.

Where does this government stand, Mr. Speaker? Do they stand behind the Crow rate? Do they stand behind the farmers of western Canada? The member for Lisgar says, "Oh, baloney". I am sure he knows whereof he speaks because he speaks a lot of baloney about Crow rates. I am sure that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would be one of the first to tell him that.

There are a number of other issues that are important when it comes to moving grain, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago the hon. member for Lisgar made a statement to the effect that the port of Churchill should be abandoned; that we should not haul grain to the port of Churchill. I wonder if that is Conservative party policy? During the election campaign the Conservative party advocated using the port of Churchill, and indeed that its use be increased. Where do they stand on the question now?

These are questions that should be answered when we are dealing with the supplementary estimates. Perhaps the great Minister of Finance or the President of the Treasury Board could enlighten us before the debate ends.

I should like to point out to the House, Mr. Speaker, what the effect would be if the Crow rate were abolished. According to the 1977 Snavely report, if the Crow rate were abolished prairie farmers would lose $290 million, and with spin-off effects this would take over $1 billion out of the western economy. We can take the town of Wakaw, in the Prince Albert area, as an example of what this would mean. The Crow rate from Wakaw to Vancouver is 24 cents per 100 pounds of grain. The CN charge for grain on domestic shipments to Vancouver is $3.12 per hundred pounds—or 13 times Crow.

It is important for the government to tell us where they stand on Crow rates, Mr. Speaker, because on November 19 the people of Wakaw will be voting in a byelection. One of the questions they are asking now is where the Conservative party stands on Crow and whether they will have to pay 13 times more than they do now to ship their grain if they keep this government in power. Where do they stand? I ask that question because we have had conflicting stories from ministers across the way. The Minister of Transport wants them reviewed. The minister of energy said that the Crow would be guaranteed. I want the Minister of Finance or someone responsible on the other side to tell us precisely where the Conservative party stands.

There are many more things one can say about the supplementary estimates that are before us. There are many more things that are important to prairie farmers. But on the Crow itself, which is perhaps the most important and emotional issue out there, the Minister of Transport is talking about the possibility of the Crow benefit being extended to farmers in other ways. For example, he said that perhaps the money set aside to maintain branch lines could be used to subsidize the farmers. If he used that money, what happens to the branch line?

These are questions that have to be answered. Is it the intention of the government across the way to abandon these branch lines? In the election campaign we were told that any line would be kept open if the elevator company on that line was willing to provide service and have a decent elevator to handle the farmers' grain. Now we have a one-man task force appointed by the Conservative party, namely, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), who is studying rail line abandonment and what to do about that question.

These are important questions because the previous Liberal government has intentionally allowed the grain handling system in this country to become run down over the last 16 years. Yesterday in Calgary the Minister of Transport said that the Crow rate may be abolished, or that the Crow rate in this country may be changed.

Next we come to the Wheat Board. We are dealing here with supplementary estimates, and in that connection I include the Canadian Wheat Board. I want to know what the government's intentions are regarding the Canadian Wheat Board. There are some members who are very powerful in the Conservative party. The hon. member for Lisgar is listened to as the eyes and ears of the Minister of Transport. It has been said that we should have more competition, more free enterprise and more of the open market, and that the port of Churchill should not be utilized. Does that mean we will have less and less for the farmers in the estimates when it comes to the Wheat Board or when it comes to using the port of Churchill?

An hon. Member: Wait and see.

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member across the way says wait and see. I am very nervous about what I am going to see. That is why I am not waiting before registering my objections to the direction which the Conservative party and the Government of Canada seem to be taking.

The minister who yields a lot of power, the minister in charge of privateering, is privateering almost everything. I want to know what plans there are for the Wheat Board, for the Crow rate and for the Farm Credit Corporation. These are things that are most important to prairie farmers and for which they fought for years and years.

I am sure you will know, being a farmer yourself, that the Hall commission recommended the Wheat Board be given more power to co-ordinate grain transportation and that the grain movement co-ordinator should be a Wheat Board employee. What did the Conservative party do? The government appointed Hugh Horner. As I said, little Jack's brother was appointed to that powerful position of grain transportation co-ordinator.

What about Hugh Horner? I have no doubt the guy is sincere, intelligent and competent. But what is his attitude vis-à-vis the Canadian Wheat Board? I think he is biased against the Canadian Wheat Board. Hugh Horner was quoted by the press as saying that he would like to see the quota system abolished. That is the very system that creates equality of delivery opportunity for farmers, be they small or large. Hugh Horner would like to abolish that system. It seems to me that he now has immense power in his hands.

Where does the Minister of Transport stand when it comes to some important issues like the quota system, the Wheat Board, quarterly marketing, the Crow rate, the Hall commission report, the Snavely report, the port of Churchill, etc? These things are vital and important to the farmers on the prairies. I ask again, where does he stand? All we have to do to get an answer is look at the supplementary estimates. We know where Otto Lang and the Liberal party stood. The Minister of Transport in a speech made in Calgary said that we probably lost $1 billion worth of sales last year. When I was in China recently the Chinese pointed out that we could transplant hearts, fly to the moon and do all of those marvellous things, yet we could not haul grain on time from the farmer's granary to the ship. The Chinese asked why we could not do that.

Mr. Axworthy: Did you speak in Chinese?

Mr. Nystrom: I know my Chinese is not as good as that of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), but the Chinese were concerned. The Chinese have now turned to the United States for grain and will sign the first grain contract with them in years. I am very happy the Americans are establishing normal relations with the Chinese, but I am also very concerned that Canada and its farmers will lose potential markets because we do not have a grain handling system.

How can we solve this problem? That is what I am asking the Conservative party across the way. I ask where does it stand on these important issues. I want a definitive statement from the Prime Minister of this country about where he stands on Crow. If the Crow rate goes, so go the small farmers. Some Conservatives have said, "Well, you can pay the Crow benefit." In other words, one takes the cost difference between the commercial cost of shipping grain from point A. I use the example of Wakaw where the cost is 13 times higher than the Crow rate. One can take the difference between that and the statutory rate and reimburse the farmer. Over 100,000 farmers will be reimbursed in the form of a cheque sent in the mail. I think that is a very complicated, bureaucratic and indeed potentially dangerous way of making sure the farmer gets the Crow rate benefit. It is very bureaucratic.

With members such as the President of the Treasury Board who is interested in cutting back on government spending and hacking away at government expenses, who will guarantee that that minister or one of his successors will not decide some day to cut back on the Crow benefit program? There is no guarantee that that will not happen.

The railways are interested in a profit and will charge a higher commercial rate for branch lines than they will for main lines. They will charge a higher rate for a little town such as Wakaw than they will for a city such as Prince Albert. Then we will have de facto abandonment of the rail lines and de facto abandonment of the branch lines. These issues are important. They are vital to western Canada.

By spending a few minutes this afternoon on the Liberal supplementary estimates before the House and introduced by the party across the way, I have pointed out some of the problems we have had in the past that have not been solved. However, I see in a speech made by the Minister of Transport that the Conservative party may have some solutions, but the solutions may be more of a problem than the existing situation for many farmers on the prairies.

In conclusion, if the Conservative party goes ahead to abandon or change the Crow rate, it will be in for a fight. It will be in for a fight not only from the people on the prairies and the NDP and its federal caucus, but also from the wheat pools, the co-operatives and the progressive farm groups. It will be in for a fight like it has never had from the government of Saskatchewan.

• (1650)

I serve that as notice to the party which sits across the way. They must not tamper with the Crow rate. They must keep the Canadian Wheat Board strong. They must strengthen the board as a co-operative agency so that it will handle the grain of the farmers on an equal basis. They must retain a quota system so that all farmers, rich or poor, close to delivery points or far, with an early harvest or a late harvest, have an equal opportunity to deliver their grain. We must not follow the law of the jungle, first come first served, or the law of capital, the elephant and the mouse, where the big guy outmuscles the small.

These issues are important. I hope that before this debate is over someone in the Conservative party will stand up to tell us where they stand on these issues which are crucial to the people of my province and region of Canada.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that the supplementary estimates have failed to meet the needs of my constituents and of the people in the rest of the country. Perhaps I can briefly describe my constituency in order to help members better understand my remarks on these estimates.

The Churchill constituency encompasses the northern two-thirds of the province of Manitoba. It has over seven degrees of latitude, over 400 miles, and 12 degrees of longitude. There are many Indian reserves and a number of Métis communities. The Churchill constituency has five mining towns, including Flin Flon and Thompson. The Pas, also in the constituency of Churchill, is a historic community for fur trading and now has some agriculture, the CN and forest products which provide employment for that region.

In The Pas, the Manfor project, formerly called CFI, is an example of what happens when government relies on and gives millions to private enterprise in order to provide employment and develop our resources. An official inquiry and the courts have proven that we were robbed blind. The case was so bad that the present premier of Manitoba forgot that he went to Zurich to sign the original agreement—a very poor memory.

Also within my constituency is the port of Churchill. It is an orphan of Tory and Liberal governments. It has been deserted by its parents. Why has the port not been developed? Why is grain not in the port at the beginning of the shipping season? Why has the CN line to Churchill not been fixed?

Why does the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) call the port a luxury we cannot afford? He was appointed by his government to look into grain handling. Why does he speak to the press about an issue of this nature, presumably speaking for his party and the government? The minister had to correct and deny the allegations and comments of the hon. member for Lisgar.

The port of Churchill is important not only to my constituency but to the prairie provinces and, indeed, the country. We cannot allow that port to be downgraded by this or any other government. Northern farmers as well as those in the south of Saskatchewan use that port because of its benefit to the people and farmers in those regions.

When the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) talked about being from the riding of the dinosaurs, and that it is also the home of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), I presume he meant to connect those two matters.

Churchill is the fossil of political promises made by members opposite and by members of the Liberal party. The people there were promised heaven but were given hell. These supplementary estimates are just a stopping place, purgatory. They and the main estimates provide to the people of the community of Churchill and the larger constituency of Churchill only a brief respite from the economic domination and damnation provided by these governments. Our resources are developed, our land is scarred and flooded, but the real values of these economic activities are not of benefit to the residents of the north, be they white or native, especially native. The native population is not being employed in the mines, at least in any great number, or at the permanent hydroelectric stations, and the great CFI giveaway limited the access of native groups in terms of harvesting our forests. They are not allowed to harvest certain areas of the north because of the agreement the Conservative government of Manitoba signed with the multinational corporations.

Within the supplementary estimates of fisheries and oceans there is no provision to develop the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Presently Canadians buy only a very small fraction of the fish caught in northern Manitoba and in the other freshwater areas of the country. This lack of initiative of government and reliance on corporations like Safeway to provide our daily bread has meant that it is virtually impossible to buy fresh fish in my home town of Thompson, yet we are surrounded by a number of communities in which fishermen are trying to make a living. In Thompson we can buy frozen fish that has been imported from other countries but we cannot buy fresh fish. This problem was created by the present government and the previous government.

Instead of providing funds for the FFMC to expand its operations, the government in Ottawa is allowing the Manitoba government to let American buyers back into the market. If this is allowed, the fishermen in the north will again be put into economic serfdom. The FFMC want to keep out the American buyers in order that the fishermen in these communities can have a guaranteed income and be provided with an honest living. If it is allowed to go back to its previous state, the fishermen in my constituency will suffer.

[Mr. Murphy.]

While I am discussing the state of our native people, I would like to turn to the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. How can they expect to promote Indian economic development when freezing the Indian economic development fund and centralizing control of these operations? For example, in British Columbia the final control of the Indian economic development fund has been taken away from the regional director and placed in the hands of the ADM in Ottawa. Treasury Board is winning the battle of control. Soon no regional government employee will be able to do anything other than shuffle paper, pick up requests from the natives, say nothing, pass it on to Ottawa, receive it back from the bureaucrats in Ottawa, again say nothing and return it to the native people. This government claims to believe in decentralizing. However, for them decentralizing does not mean providing service on a regional basis but providing a shield to protect those who make the decisions from the people who make the requests. That is not decentralization.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

REPORT ON FEASIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING CROWN CORPORATION FOR FORESTRY RESEARCH

The House resumed from Thursday, November 1, 1979, consideration of the motion (Mr. Herbert):

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest report on the feasibility of establishing a Crown corporation or other body to carry out forestry research.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me an opportunity to say a few additional words in response to the motion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for the production of papers concerning the intention to establish a Crown corporation or, in his words, some other body that would in the interests of all Canadians establish some kind of an effort toward the research and development of technology and techniques which could be brought in to manage our national forests.

In his opening remarks the hon. member spoke of the previous government's efforts to establish a national forests policy. I have followed these efforts with keen interest over quite a number of years now, and I cannot share the enthusiasm the hon. member brought to the House since I have never been much impressed with the efforts which were made. Indeed, since 1963, over the last decade, the efforts of the Canadian forest service have been cut in half. There is roughly about half the manpower in the Canadian forest service today as there was ten years ago. Of course, many of the scientists who carried out the research and development upon which the industry relied so heavily have left the department and what we find here today are administrators and bureaucrats. There is really no major effort at all being carried on in the area of research and development in this important industry.

The results of this kind of deterioration are very noticeable. Our world position, shown by the percentage of world markets which we once enjoyed, has declined by over 20 per cent in the last ten years and the United States' share of the world market has increased by almost the same percentage.

There are very good reasons for this. One American company alone—the Warehouser Company in the United States—spends more money annually in research and development than does the entire Canadian forest service. This has to be a matter of concern to us, particularly when one considers the crucial importance of the forest industry in our economy and its effect on the well-being of the country in general.

The forests generate more income than gas and oil, agriculture, fisheries and mining combined. Forest companies shipped last year $13 billion worth of goods; $8 billion went to export earnings and contributed to our balance of trade. Every man, woman and child in this country shares or owns the equivalent of about 20 acres of productive forest land. We have about 800 million acres of productive forest lands in Canada. Unfortunately, over that ten year period of which I spoke earlier, 60 million acres of this vital resource, this productive forest land, have been left idle. There has not been a sufficient effort to regenerate these important lands and put them back into operation.

There were some efforts made by the former government; the latest took place just before Parliament dissolved. The one we are well aware of, because the subject was raised in this House on many occasions, was the effort to privatize a very important portion of the federal research effort, namely that of the forest products lab here in Ottawa and on the west coast in Vancouver. It was proposed to turn these efforts over to private companies.

The question has to be asked: To what extent can we expect private industry to take over these efforts? I am talking about research and development which needs to be carried out to protect all our forests, to carry on the kind of husbandry which will preserve our forests in perpetuity for future generations. One is faced with this question when one takes into account the fact that last year the federal government took in $1 billion from the forest economy. In the same period of time, on an annual basis, all provinces combined take in about an equal amount, namely $1 billion. This accrues to governments in the form of revenue from taxes, leases, royalties and so on. It makes up a total of $2 billion. And now governments are telling the industry that it will have to carry on its own research and development efforts.

The industry is always prepared to assume these responsibilities providing that governments reciprocate. What the industry would want, in return, is some kind of security of tenure. It would need assurances that if the industry does the research, the regenerating, fertilizing and replanting, the results of such activities would accrue to their benefit in the future. In other words, they would seek longer tenures, ownership of forest lands and so on. It has been the policy of most of the provinces and the federal government not to give industry that kind of control over this vital resource. It is my opinion, therefore, that we should not expect the industry to carry on the research and development that is required to preserve this vital resource in perpetuity.

On this side of the House we are asking ourselves what the former government has done, how far it got in developing a national forest policy. Sadly, sir, we must report that there has really been no advance in the development of such a policy.

What needs to be done, then? Well, the present minister has already taken some important initiatives. There is presently a major review in the terms of reference given to departmental officials. There has to be a concentration and a centralization of the various jurisdictions responsible on behalf of the federal government in the forest policy area. No fewer than 26 different departments of the federal government are in some way responsible for forests. There is the Department of the Environment, DREE, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce—I could not begin to name them all. The idea is, as a result of this review, to bring back and re-establish a component of a Canadian forest service which will once again assume the responsibility for a co-ordinating role with the provinces to preserve this vital resource. That may well mean a structural change in the make up of the committees.

I have just come from the committee and I am half out of breath. Even as I speak here the minister is answering a question I posed to him in that committee. Unfortunately forestry is tied in with the important committee on the environment and fisheries and members of this House are having a difficult time running back and forth trying to determine on what day the chairman of that committee or the steering committee of that committee chooses to talk about forests. There is nothing about forestry in the estimates at all. There is no reference, no mention of forestry in this big blue book. I know the minister is very concerned about this, as I am. Structural changes are required, including the appointment of senior officials in the public service to assume responsibility and advise the minister in these important areas.

The industry is ready and stands prepared to assume and to share in the responsibility. We made recommendations to the former government on how this sharing should take place. If one fifth of the money which is paid to provincial governments in the form of royalties, or 50 cents on every thousand board feet of lumber harvested and manufactured, were returned into an effort which could be carried out by provincial and federal governments, it would mean that the 60 million acres which are presently lying idle could be regenerated over a five-year period. I am talking about a massive infusion of funds, to the tune of $250 million, which would accrue to the two governments in one year. If that amount of money which comes from private industry were matched by the provinces and by the federal government, we could indeed realize a very significant turnaround and a renewal in the commitment and responsibility we have for preserving this vital resource for future generations.

I am confident that the minister who is presently responsible is as serious as I and, I am sure, most members of the House, about bringing about this kind of structural and administrative change and about bringing about once again the pride and commitment our public servants had to this vital resource which they manage for us. I am confident that over a short period of time we will see a significant turnaround and that our industry, which once enjoyed a very unique position in the world in shipping and delivering this resource to world markets, will once again see the kind of stability and confidence they had in their endeavours before.

I am confident as well that the minister is cognizant of the crucial importance the forests have in terms of the environment and the total eco-system that generates our water and our clean air; and I am also confident that the minister is aware of the incredible importance our forests have in social areas and in tourism where forests provide the backdrop for a $250 million industry every year.

I am confident of all these things, but I am not as confident as the hon. member for Vaudreuil, who is well intentioned and who has given us this opportunity to debate this matter, that another Crown corporation or some other agency, as he suggests in his motion, could fulfil this need. People expect significant change from new governments, and I am confident that this new government is committed to recognizing our forests and our forestry efforts in light of what I have said.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSTPONEMENT OF VISIT OF PRESIDENT CARTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to apologize to the House for interrupting private members' hour.

I have just been informed by the President of the United States, Jimmy Carter, that because of the hostage situation in Iran the official visit to Canada must unfortunately be postponed. The President and I are very disappointed that Canadians will not have the opportunity to welcome President Carter in Ottawa tomorrow, and we are hoping to be able to reschedule the visit for early in the new year.

[Translation]

In the meantime, various issues of urgent nature will be discussed over the next few weeks and months between certain Canadian ministers and their American counterparts.

[English]

I know that all hon. members will recognize the enormous pressure on the President and the American people in these difficult days and join me in assuring the President and the people of the United States of the hopes and prayers of all Canadians for a successful resolution of a most difficult situation.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the official opposition I would like to extend thanks to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) for having come into the House today to inform us as quickly as possible of these sad developments.

We understand that the situation of the American citizens in Iran must be President Carter's first preoccupation. We wish him well in trying to find a solution to this grave problem and pray that his fellow citizens will find safety and peace in very short order.

We trust that this important visit can be rescheduled in the very near future, as a visit from the President of our closest neighbour and friend, the United States, is an event to which I am sure all Canadians were looking forward. We hope President Carter and his family can come soon, as we know that he would have received a very warm welcome from all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, I trust that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Clark) will indicate to Mr. Carter that all Canadians are praying for him and hope that he will be able to find a rapid solution to this most serious problem.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we of the New Democratic Party join in expressing our regret that the visit of the President has had to be postponed but, in common with the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the whip of the official opposition party, we fully understand the situation and that it is necessary for President Carter to remain at home. We join in the fervent hopes which have been expressed that the situation in Iran may soon be resolved.

We are pleased to note that the Prime Minister is already making arrangements with the President for a visit some time early in 1980.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that because of our anticipation of the visit of the President of the United States arrangements were made to adjourn the House tomorrow at one o'clock so that this chamber could be used for an address to us and to our colleagues in the other place. This is now unnecessary, regrettably, so I wonder if I could have unanimous consent to move a motion. In order to indicate the extent of the motion I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre):

That the order adopted by the House on Tuesday, November 6, 1979, as follows:

"That the House adjourn at one o'clock p.m., on Friday, November 9, 1979;

That the address of the President of the United States, Mr. Jimmy Carter, to be delivered in the House chamber on Friday, November 9, 1979, before members of the Senate and the House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House; and

That the President's speech, attendant and related remarks be made available to the media for transmission in the usual way by the House of Commons broadcast system."

be discharged.

I hope I have unanimous consent to move that motion and that it will be agreed to so that the House can carry on tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) shall have the leave of the House to introduce that motion at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) could confirm what the business of the House will be after two o'clock tomorrow, at the time we normally would come to orders of the day.

M. Lefebvre: You mean twelve o'clock.

Mr. Breau: I understood that the time of the House would be taken up with announcements on motions until one o'clock.

Mr. Lefebvre: Oh, yes.

Mr. Breau: Could the President of the Privy Council confirm what the business will be under orders of the day?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my anticipation is that we will be carrying on with the matters which were before us today just before private members' hour.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

REPORT ON FEASIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING CROWN CORPORATION FOR FORESTRY RESEARCH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Herbert:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest report on the feasibility of establishing a Crown corporation or other body to carry out forestry research.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the motion in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has very clearly proved one point: there is evidently in this House a very keen interest in and a consensus on the matter of forestry conditions in our country and perhaps even as to how those conditions could be dealt with by the federal government.

● (1720)

I suppose that other interventions will clarify this point further, but it seems to me that at least it can be said fairly at this point that there is a deep concern on the part of members, who in turn reflect the views of their constituents, that our forests need attention. It is surprising to some of us to be told by experts that the picture of seemingly limitless forests and woods is in good part an illusion. The national forest regeneration conference, which was held in Quebec city in October of 1977, concluded that adequate forest renewal was nothing less than an urgent economic need. The conference was attended by some 250 representatives of government, industry, the forestry profession, universities and environmental protection organizations. These representatives agreed unanimously that, as they put it in their communique, inadequate forest regeneration is:

—indeed a serious and fundamental forestry problem. This concern is not yet felt by the general public or by politicians, and there is a real need—as demonstrated by the conference—to "spread the bad news".

Studies released at the conference indicated that only about half of the statistical surplus is "economically accessible". This means that it can be harvested at a low enough cost to enable the producer to sell the end product at a viable price on the world market.

The communique went on to say that:

The new forests which are developing in areas which have been harvested or affected by natural disasters are frequently poorer than the forests they are replacing. They are often inadequate in terms of preferred species, quality, density of stocking, insect and disease resistence or location suitable for economic wood supplies to existing mills.

The expert consensus was that up to 20 per cent of the land harvested every year does not and will not regenerate properly.

Let me remind hon. members that that was said about two years ago.

The communique goes on:

When areas where regeneration was been blighted by insect infestations, fires, and wind damage are added, a total of 647,000 acres is lost from the nation's potentially productive forest stock every year.

This is being added in turn to a backlog of unproductive forest land accumulated over many years which the Canadian Forestry Association estimates at a staggering 60 million acres. Large parts of this wasteland are to be found in every province. In fact, no province can claim that regeneration within its boundaries is even keeping pace with the yearly cut.

Also, according to the association:

Inadequate attention to forest regeneration is responsible for restricting expansion possibilities in some regions, has reduced employment in others, and will result in a continuing decline in future forest based jobs and revenues.

Some experts predict really critical shortages by the end of the century if large scale forest management and renewal programs are not put into effect.

The question therefore arises as to whether or not Canada can catch up. Some of our leading forestry consultants say yes, and I will quote from a report prepared for the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association which states the following:

A more intensive program of forest management is imperative if market opportunities are to be realized and emerging timber deficits offset.

What needs to be done, and we have the know-how and the means, is to develop or apply improved species that grow faster and have more resistance to insects and disease than those seeded naturally. It will take, of course, a deliberate commitment on the part of governments, industry, and indeed the public at large, to ensure that our forests meet our future needs. There are difficult problems of cost, responsibility, ecology and the claims on the forest of industry and recreation which will have to be resolved.

All these elements put together lead to the conclusion that the provinces have demonstrated that they alone cannot achieve this important economic goal as it relates to our forest industries. I submit to the House that Canada needs a national forestry policy. We have evidence, as demonstrated by reports, conferences and statistics which have been published in many quarters, that not only do we need a national forestry policy but we must have such a policy soon, taking into consideration the limitation imposed by our constitution. This policy would offer terrific opportunities.

I would summarize today's problems and opportunities with regard to our forestry industry in this way in submitting the urgency of and the necessity for this policy, which I would like to impress upon members of this government, on the minister responsible and on the government backbenchers who, as we have already seen in the course of this debate in their interventions, feel strongly and positively about this issue.

First, a national forestry policy will have to deal with the deteriorating competitive position of the industry. The industry needs attention and needs certain incentives. Second, it will offer a challenge and an opportunity to the industry in the provision of adequate forest replacement. Ottawa, in co-operation with the provinces, could launch a program to double the present rate of plantation to 400 million trees a year. This is an investment for future generations of Canadians in the regeneration of our forests to provide for the needs of our consumers and for maintaining our capacity to export this commodity to foreign markets, thus improving our balance of payments.

There is a third aspect which demands enunciation in the launching of a national forest policy, and that is the recent development of the slowing down of the regrowth process which is apparently caused by acid precipitation. This has become a very serious problem which, if not dealt with effectively, could result in the lengthening of the growing cycle of the forest.

Fourth, a national forestry policy would give a coherent approach to the better utilization of wood as a renewable resource, particularly because of the potential it offers to replace fuel. Wood can be used for the production of methanol to replace gasoline. The industry would develop and create jobs in Canada if we were to start a national effort to exploit and use wood for this purpose. This cannot be carried out by an individual province. It is a function that rests squarely on the federal system and on the facilities and resources that the federal government has at its disposal through the National Research Council and other departments.

Another facet of this national forest policy has to do with the environmental impact of forest fires and pests. We are told that over two million acres of forests have been burned over annually for the past ten years. We are also told that insects and other pests damage large tracts of timber each year, the spruce budworm being just one example.

Again, since the causes of these diseases and damage do not really know provincial boundaries, and since the federal government has a fairly sophisticated Department of Agriculture and Department of the Environment, it also has the capacity and the ability to address itself to this particular facet. A national policy, in my view, cannot be developed by ten provinces acting on their own. In the field of forestry we have a classic example where federal leadership is not only needed but is most desirable.

I would, therefore, commend the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), and those who have spoken before me in such positive terms, for having emphasized the importance of this issue and for having given us an opportunity to register with the government the urgency of this matter and the hope that the government will address itself to an announcement in the field of launching for Canadians and for future generations of Canadians a national forestry policy.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate, in the limited amount of time that is left, in this debate on the need for enhancing a national forest policy. In my riding of Sault Ste. Marie there is a federal government forest research centre that is doing splendid work in terms of trying to control the problem of the spruce budworm, as well as research into other areas of interest to our national forests.

In the last Parliament I spoke out very vigorously against announced cutbacks by the former Liberal government in the budget of the forestry service, and pointed out the necessity of enhancing research and development in this vital sector of our economy. To that extent I was supported by my friend, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), who also argued for enhancement of this important research sector of the federal service. I hope he is effective in convincing the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment (Mr. Fraser) not to proceed with some of these cutback policies initiated by the former government, but to establish a more vigorous profile in the forestry section of the department of the environment in expanding the good work it has been doing.

There have been repeated warnings that we have not been taking the necessary steps to ensure the future of this vital sector of our economy, namely, our nation's forests. Some 12 per cent of our productive forest land is inadequately stocked, and another 500,000 acres are being added to the backlog annually. The plain fact is that neither the federal government, the provincial governments nor private industries concerned are taking the initiatives required in reforestation so that we will have the trees for our lumber and pulp and paper industries in decades ahead. The warning clarion has been sounded, yet I fail to see either at the provincial or federal level a recognition that we have a serious problem and that we have to mobilize funds and manpower to redress what is happening to our forests here in Canada.

Indeed, in my part of the country in northern Ontario we are dependent on the forests and, unfortunately, they are not being restocked. The good timberland is being used up too rapidly, and if we do not replenish these valuable renewable resources it will mean a severe, if not disastrous blow to many communities in northern Ontario and, of course, in Quebec and British Columbia as well.

When we look at what has been happening in the forestry service we have to be alarmed. The strength has been cut drastically, by 1,000 man-years since 1968. These are highly qualified scientists and technicians. We have lost them, and as a result many experimental programs in long-range research, so vital to finding solutions to a number of the problems, have not been going on to the degree necessary. Our forest service budget is one quarter of that of the scientific and technological fields of fisheries, energy, mines and resources, or agriculture. I think it is high time the new Conservative government recognized that forestry must have a higher priority, not only in funds but in terms of staff. Indeed, I would argue that a separate ministry of forestry should be established so that this sector of our economy can get the kind of attention it so richly deserves.

In the last Parliament I spoke against the privatization of the forest products laboratories which the Liberal government undertook, and which I understand the Conservatives are still following through. This, in my opinion, will not fulfil the goals the government has proposed. We opposed this privatization because we know that the kind of research the private sector carries on is short-term in its outlook. It is quite naturally designed to try to improve the present product situation in terms of new methods of developing and selling products. The private industry does not have the long-term kind of research goals the federal government can have, and this is where we are falling down if we rely on the private sector.

We need more, not less basic research. We need more of an indication from the private sector, which is being subsidized by the taxpayers through all the various forms of government research, that the private sector in turn will reinvest some of its profits in this vital area of research, and that it will really support and do work parallel to that being done by government laboratories.

We need an impartial agency to supply data to foreign powers. I do not think this will be served by private laboratories as there will be a suspicion that the figures are self-serving, particularly because the industry has always performed development work on products and processes, but not the kind of basic research I have described that is so vital to the forestry sector. What we need to find are the technical innovations required to maintain a competitive position, or the Canadian forestry industry will start to deteriorate.

Indeed, we have a morale problem in the Canadian forestry service as a result of the cutbacks initiated last spring. Many of the scientists are moving off to other countries or into the private sector, and those remaining in the federal domain are, as I say, suffering a severe morale problem, wondering to what end is their scientific research.

It seems to me there are four key areas where the federal government must assume some responsibility. We need a continuous statistical survey of resources, and the federal government, looking at the nation as a whole, can carry this out in a way the provinces or private industry cannot. We must have up-to-date information so we can assess the areas where we need to improve forest rehabilitation. We need a program of intensive forest management.

● (1740)

I think we can learn a lot from the Scandinavian countries. For to say, that we have vast acreages of forest in Canada that we need not worry about the future, flies in the face of all the most recent reports that this so-called renewable resource is dwindling. I would like to see a crash program initiated by the federal government, with some kind of financial assistance to the provinces, in order to begin reforestation to the degree that it is necessary. Indeed, we need an industrial strategy—and how often have we heard that word—for long-range planning to make a stable environment for investment in this sector of our economy.

For example, a report prepared by F.L.C. Reed and Associates about a year and a half ago for the federal government points out that although provincial legislation has been in place for the last 20 to 30 years, forest management is not practised at acceptable levels and Canada lags far behind her major competitors in management of her forest industry. For example, production of seed trees in Ontario nurseries between 1972 and 1976 decreased from 77 million to 51 million, despite increased requirements. We are in an emergency situation and the times demand action.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time provided under Standing Order 48(2) for the consideration of this motion has now expired. There is a provision in that Standing Order which allows a minister of the Crown to contribute to the debate for five minutes and which allows the mover of the motion an additional five minutes to close the debate, whereupon the question could be put. I do not see any ministers of the Crown in the House.

Mr. Joe Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the minister is not present because he is engaged this afternoon before the standing committee which is considering the estimates involved with his particular department, including that of forestry. The motion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has presented members of this House with an opportunity to debate the forestry issue and matters relating to forestry. It has given the minister an opportunity to present the government's side of this very important aspect. The motion by the hon. member deals with the production of certain documents which the minister has stated do not exist.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The parliamentary secretary is going beyond the bounds of a point of order. He is debating for the minister what the minister might have said. I would refer the hon. member to the wording of the Standing Order which is very clear, and on which the Chair has already ruled on different occasions, and which has not been contested. Standing Order 48(2) reads:

> When debate on a motion for the production of papers, under the order "Notices of Motions (Papers)", has taken place for a total time of one hour and thirty minutes, Mr. Speaker shall at that point interrupt the debate, whereupon a Minister of the Crown, whether or not such Minister has already spoken, may speak for not more than five minutes, following which the mover of the motion may close the debate by speaking for not more than five minutes —

Of course, the parliamentary secretary may feel that parliamentary secretaries should be allowed at different times in our proceedings to replace ministers. If the Standing Order had meant to allow someone to speak in the name of the minister, it would have been stated in the Standing Order. The Standing Order does say that even though the minister has already spoken, he is allowed to speak again for five minutes. I do not think that that opens the door to his parliamentary secretary, however.

I have in front of me a ruling made by the learned Deputy Speaker of the time on March 15, 1979, on the same point. He referred to a previous ruling made on April 17, 1975, when the Acting Speaker at that time mentioned that the only way the parliamentary secretary could speak after the 90 minutes had expired would be by unanimous consent. There seems to be a disposition to act quickly on this matter and perhaps, to save time, the parliamentary secretary could seek the unanimous consent of the House. By doing so we would not be creating a precedent or forcing the Chair to permit him to speak. Would there be unanimous consent to allow the parliamentary secretary to say a few words?

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the hon. member speaking. He is a new member and a new parliamentary secretary. You have explained the rules, and I hope that this will not set a precedent.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, for this occasion we are quite prepared to let the parliamentary secretary speak on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent then, the parliamentary secretary will be allowed to speak for no more than five minutes.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I thank this House for the consideration hon. members have given to the minister who, by reason of his other duties which he feels take priority at this particular moment, is absent. Basically the motion called for the production of certain documents, and particularly a report relating to the feasibility of establishing a Crown corporation or other body to carry out forestry research matters. We submit that that report does not exist.

In the opening comments of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), he referred to certain other documents which constitute a report entitled Forestry Imperatives for Canada—A Proposal for Forest Policy in Canada, and which was prepared for the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers and presented at their annual meeting in Kelowna, B.C. in June of this year. I would like to table these documents now with the unanimous consent of the House. With that tabling, we submit that the motion has been fully answered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The parliamentary secretary is seeking unanimous consent for the tabling of the documents to which he has referred. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, we have been through quite an interesting exercise last week and again this week. In my opening remarks I referred to this particular study which was presented to the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers in June. It was from remarks made by the previous minister of the environment that I learned that such a study existed.

I can only say in these few minutes left to me that I found it quite interesting that the parliamentary secretary and other representatives of the government seemed to get very up tight about the words "Crown corporation" included in the motion. The motion refers to the latest report on the feasibility of establishing—and if we ignore the words "Crown corporation"—some body to carry out forestry research. That is exactly what was being considered—somebody to carry out forestry research in order that a proposal could be made to this meeting of the ministers of the environment in June of this year.

• (1750)

Obviously the need for that was underlined by the parliamentary secretary, when he commented on the fact that in the province of Quebec shortages are occurring, especially for saw logs. He speaks also of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick experiencing deficits in soft wood supplies, and he goes on to say that the existing industry in New Brunswick could utilize 25 per cent more wood than can be produced on a sustained yield basis, under existing standards of management. Obviously, what is being emphasized is the need for something to be done, presumably additional research, because of the difficulty that is being experienced in one of our major industries.

It is rather interesting that the then minister said that he would seek to find the document referred to and that, if it existed, it would be made available. I suggest that it might have saved a lot of time if a more thorough search had been made for this document originally, in which case it could have been tabled, instead of there being a denial that it existed. I hope, as a result of this example, that in future, instead of being anxious to stand up in this House and say "documents refused"—I do thank him very seriously for tabling the document—but despite the fact that it has been very pleasant to air this important subject, maybe it will not be necessary to go through a similar exercise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am faced with a dilemma—to put to the House a motion that an order do issue for a copy of the latest report to be made available, when that document is already on the table. Maybe the best thing I could suggest is that the motion be withdrawn and that the order be discharged.

Is it agreed that the motion be withdrawn and the order discharged from the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Kempling: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, and the time provided for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Supplementary Estimates (A), 1979-80, laid upon the table Thursday, October 11, 1979, be concurred in.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is again a great privilege to speak to the "whole" House this evening. Co-operation and consultation are words we learn about daily from the government benches. But how do the native people feel about this government? Do they feel they are being consulted?

This week the ITC heard about the development of the Arvik mine. They did not hear about it from the minister, or the government, but from the press. In the Yukon, the Council of Yukon Indians heard about the minister granting de facto responsible government on Friday before the announcement was made. That is not consultation. That is not co-operation. It is a fait accompli.

The unilateral decision of the minister of Indian affairs to allow mining and pipeline construction before native land claims are negotiated is pure folly. The government is denying the native people any say on land on which they have lived for generations. These developments will have an adverse effect on the life, the culture and the economic livelihood of the native people. This has certainly been the case elsewhere in Canada.

Last week when the minister refused to ratify the already concluded COPE agreement, it again proved that the government is not interested in the concerns and rights of native people. The assumption by Tories, southern Canadians, and even a few northern Canadians, that responsible government is always just and progressive and will always protect the rights of minorities is just not so. The Manitoba school question and the treatment of the Metis people in Manitoba has proven that this is not the case.

Governments based on cultural identity were accepted before Confederation. For example, the creation of the province of Quebec accepted this very principle. Before that, Upper Canada was created for the United Empire Loyalists. Treaties have always recognized native government and the creation of geographic territories called reserves. Manitoba, in becoming a province, allowed for the ethnic composition of its population. Unfortunately it also demonstrated that the rights of a minority cannot always be left to the goodwill of the majority.

As long as we are talking about the duty of government to protect minorities, why has the federal government continually stalled in selecting an arbitrator for the northern flood agreement? The initial agreement was signed over two years ago. This government and the former Liberal government could have worked faster and harder on this item.

Many questions regarding compensation that northern residents should receive for the flooding of their land cannot be settled and, as usual, it is the natives who suffer. The land is flooded, the fishing affected, and the natives still do not have adequate compensation.

I understand that the native people and the provincial government have agreed on an arbitrator. It is only the federal government's lack of action that prevents an appointment from being made.

The housing of native people is deplorable and a national disgrace. How does the government expect Indian people to build a house for $12,000? Why does CMHC not provide funds for native people? These are only a few items which these supplementary estimates do not touch. If these estimates dealt with national health and welfare, Mr. Speaker, I would cite a number of examples of neglect and federal-provincial buck passing—and I mean the pun—that are also a mark against this country, and matters that the minister of external affairs would be speaking about in the UN if some other country was perpetrating this disgrace.

The actions of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) have further decreased employment in northern and native communities. The elimination of the Canada Works Program in a number of provinces was both conservative and cruel—the words have become synonymous. The addition of some dollars to the LEAP program did not come close to what Canada Works formerly offered. In my constituency $3.9 million was spent last year on the Canada Works Program. This year there is nothing.

Mr. Breau: A good Liberal program.

Mr. Murphy: A good Liberal program which the Liberals wanted to cut back. The only difference is that the Conservatives reduced it by a further $1 million.

Mr. Breau: We never cut it back; we added to that.

• (2010)

Mr. Murphy: The hon. member does not know what he is talking about.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration talked about flexibility guidelines for the LEAP program. He said these flexibile guidelines would allow for some of the damage done by the ill-planned actions in cutting Canada Works. The minister announced this, announced it again, and announced it again. The only thing we do not have yet is the flexible guidelines. Perhaps the minister should announce those guidelines before he is denounced.

These estimates, and we all know they are Liberal estimates which the Conservatives have blindly accepted, just like they blindly accepted high interest rates, unemployment insurance cutbacks and other measures, prove that at best they are creating economic stagnation in this country. These estimates prove that the Conservatives have no economic policies of their own except a stupid and lemming-like desire to ruin PetroCan. By doing this, they reject the voice of the Canadian voter.

[Mr. Murphy.]

The proof of the success that PetroCan has already demonstrated, and the logic of the Canadian government keeping the last instrument of control it has on the oil industry, and the shameful state of foreign domination of our natural resources, are a result of the past blindness of Liberal and Conservative regimes.

The blindness of the past is not irreversible, but this Conservative government cannot see that. The Conservatives are out to prove that hindsight is not 20-20, certainly not for those who believe that economic leadership means let the corporations run the country and let the people of Canada suffer the consequences.

As I look at these supplementary estimates I have trouble telling the difference between Liberal and Conservative governments. I believe that on the matters before us, like on the devastating increases in interest rates, there is no difference between these two old line parties. Both parties sound progressive when in opposition, and conservative when in government. The only difference is that in the choice of a name for their party the Progressive Conservatives are honest; well, at least half honest.

Both parties have forgotten the unemployed, and the small businessmen, especially when it comes to advocating and accepting high interest rates. Both have failed, as is evident in these estimates, to prepare a development plan for northern areas. Instead they have relied on large multinationals and allowed them to create a boom and bust cycle, to ignore the needs of northern residents, to let small business fail when these multinationals desert our northern towns, allowed them to pollute our fish and forests with acid rain, and to fail to employ the indigenous people of northern areas, despite all the promises given when these corporations start up.

If government is to take the reins and provide economic leadership, then it must have a northern development plan, a plan made by northerners within the framework of a national economic strategy, a plan which allows the north to develop its own goals and recognizes the cultural and environmental factors in operation in northern regions, a plan which will help northern residents to benefit from their resources, and a plan which will allow northern residents to become more self-sufficient and to assist in the development of all of Canada.

It is the lack of a northern development plan by the Liberals and the Conservatives that helped in part to have me elected to this House. It has helped to elect a number of other members of my party at the provincial and federal level. In this House there are four members, including myself, who lived in the Churchill constituency during the seventies. They are all New Democrats, and all lived in the riding and saw the effects of Liberal and Conservative neglect. Now they are here to change that.

In conclusion, I would remind the members opposite and the members to my right—before they, like the member from Bow River's dinosaurs, become politically extinct—I remind them that there were 10,000 Manitobans who had to leave their province last year because of the lack of economic planning, the economic devastation that the Lyon Conservative government is causing there. Those 10,000 people are going to go to the constituencies of each and every one of you. In the future there will not be four members from the Churchill constituency in this party in this House, there will be 283, and that includes the seat of each and every one of you, unless something is done. Those economic exiles from Manitoba will be elected to this House unless the government provides the economic leadership it should.

Motion agreed to.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That a sum not exceeding $16,407,550,945.50 being the aggregate of:

(a) nine-twelfths of the total amounts of the items set forth in the Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980, laid before the House of Commons on Thursday, October 11, 1979, $15,930,016,225.50;

(b) an additional three-twelfths of the total amount of Energy, Mines and Resources Votes 15 and L75, Industry, Trade and Commerce Vote L30, National Defence Vote 10, Public Works Votes 35, 50 and 80, Secretary of State Vote 65, Solicitor General Vote L30 and Transport Votes 20, 30 and 40 (Schedule A) of the said Estimates, $214,537,939.50;

(c) an additional two-twelfths of the total amount of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Vote 5, Energy, Mines and Resources Vote 1, Finance Votes 5 and 20, Indian Affairs and Northern Development Votes 15, 35, L40, L45, 60, 65 and L70, Industry Trade and Commerce Vote 55, Justice Vote 5, Public Works Vote 25, Secretary of State Votes 15, 20, 45 and 95, Transport Votes 5, 25 and L55 and Treasury Board Vote 10 (Schedule B) of the said Estimates, $189,717,458.83;

(d) an additional one-twelfth of the total amount of Agriculture Vote 50, Energy, Mines and Resources Vote 30, Indian Affairs and Northern Development Vote 25, Justice Vote 40, National Health and Welfare Vote 35, Privy Council Vote 1, Public Works Votes 10, 30 and 85, Supply and Services Vote 1 and Transport (Schedule C) of the said Estimates, $73,279,321.67; be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask whether we can now be given an answer to the question that was first raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard). As that hon. gentleman pointed out, it is understood around here that when interim supply is granted, the government always leaves at least one-twelfth to be considered when the main estimates are passed, yet in this motion we have a proposal that nine-twelfths of every item in the estimates be granted, plus an additional three-twelfths of the number of the items set out in paragraph (b). As I said this afternoon, in my simple comprehension of arithmetic, nine-twelfths plus three-twelfths adds up to twelve-twelfths. Even my banker friend who is now the head of the Treasury Board will agree that that arithmetic is pretty hard to challenge.

When the question was asked this afternoon by the hon. member for Drummond, supported by some of the rest of us, there seemed to be a bit of fluttering on the government side as to what to do about it. I realize we are not in committee at this point and therefore not in a situation where we can have questions on a back and forth basis. However, it seems to me that before this resolution passes and before we get the bill to be based on the two resolutions, we should have an answer to this question.

As I say, I do not recall in the time I have been in this House that any government ever asked for the total amount of supply before we reached the point of passing the main estimates. That, Mr. Speaker, is one point we would like to be sure about before we agree to this resolution.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am very willing to give assurance to the hon. member that I will give a full explanation of the twelve-twelfths requested that he has rightfully mentioned that is now before us.

The short answer at this stage is that in all cases the funds on which we are requesting authorization have literally been spent or it is anticipated they will be spent by the end of next month. In other words, in the time frame that we are looking at, the funds have either been expended already or certainly it is anticipated will be spent roughly by the end of the year.

Our dilemma in this connection is, for example, that the oil compensation amount appearing in the supplementary estimates is the additional amount to what was previously mentioned in the main estimates, and we find that the original amount has already been expended because the oil compensation payments have been so high compared with what was originally anticipated in the main estimates that it is literally all gone. So we are asking for the twelve-twelfths, as the hon. member has quite correctly indicated, because it is the only thing that makes sense; it is no use asking for eleven-twelths because all the money is gone.

I would suggest that this situation has arisen because of the unique situation in which we find ourselves. The main estimates were tabled in February. We have gone through the electoral process, and this is the first opportunity Parliament has had to actually review those estimates and finally approve both interim supply and the main estimates. I should like to assure the hon. member that when we reach report stage I will give an explanation on each occasion when we are asking for twelve-twelfths, and I shall be pleased to try to answer any question which may be raised at that time.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate Your Honour's generosity in allowing me to ask my question and letting me have the floor again for a minute or two. It seems to me this is one of those occasions when one has to fall back on the old saying that two wrongs do not make a right. It strikes me it is wrong for all the money to be spent before it was approved, and that it does not make it right to come along now and break the rule about interim supply, which is that some portion is always left for discussion on the main estimates.

It is all very well to have an explanation about what the minister has done, but the hon. gentleman has been so high and mighty about the things he has discovered, about the mess he and his friends have inherited from the previous government, that it is surprising he should ask the House to approve this new departure under which the full amount of the estimate is put forward on an interim supply basis before we get to the main estimates. It is so long since we have gone through this kind of procedure—only because we have gone through an election and we are facing something unusual—but back in the so-called old days, every time there was a request for interim supply the government gave an assurance that some money was being left for discussion on the main estimates. If it failed to give such an assurance, one was soon sought by the opposition parties.

The main estimates are before the various committees right now, and in those committees some of the members will be discussing the amounts of estimates which, after the bill based on these estimates goes through, will have been entirely spent. I appreciate the assurance from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) that he will tell us the story of each individual case when we get into Committee of the Whole on the bill, but I register a very strong protest against this "holier-than-thou" government over there which was going to do things right making this kind of departure from the accepted practice of the House for a great many years, if not for 112 years.

Mr. Stevens: If it would assist the hon. member I would give him an assurance that the main estimates in all respects will remain before the various committees. If there is any question on any of these items with which we are dealing on a twelve-twelfths basis, we in no way intend not to answer those questions. This is a rather technical point we are involved in, as I shall be indicating later when we go into Committee of the Whole.

With regard to the 12 items we are dealing with involving the twelve-twelfths, the funds have been expended, or it is anticipated they will be expended very shortly. The only meaningful way to get proper authority is through Parliament, which we are endeavouring to do. The funds have been expended through warrants of the Governor General—that type of thing—and in effect we are trying to get parliamentary authority retroactively for some of the expenditures which were initially anticipated in the main estimates.

Mr. Knowles: I do not approve.

Mr. Breau: I admit I am not a specialist in these matters but it seems to me that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) have a good argument. While the minister appears to have a relatively good explanation I am wondering, since these funds would be approved in any case next month, on December 7 or thereabouts when the appropriation bill is expected to be brought down, why the hon. member, in the spirit of open government and the participation of members of Parliament—two parties here are concerned about this even if it is only a technical matter—it does not give rise to any legal problems because the money will be approved in the main estimates in the appropriation bill right after December 7—does not agree to change his position and not ask for twelve-twelfths at this time but just ask for what has been asked for traditionally and leave one-twelfth open.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question also concerns the same problem. I rose on this point of order earlier today. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) is in the House now and I would like to know whether he definitively intends to amend paragraph (b) of motion No. 5 to change—

[English]

—an additional three-twelfths to an additional two-twelfths.

[Translation]

If you were willing to amend the text of the motion to avoid arriving at twelve-twelfths as we have asked three times at the various meetings of the House leaders, perhaps we would not have to consider introducing an amending motion at this stage, because if we present a motion to amend the motion and this is put to a vote, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) is well aware that this will become a motion of non-confidence in the government if it is refused.

Of course, I do not want to raise the possibility of a new motion of non-confidence today, but I would like the President of the Treasury Board to give a serious explanation to the House and tell us why, in spite of the representations that we have made repeatedly to the President of the Privy Council, he now insists on keeping paragraph (b) of motion No. 5 in its present form, that is twelve-twelfths of the appropriation, when we say that we could avoid the problem by a simple change which would consist in a reduction of one-twelfth at paragraph (b) of motion No. 5. However, I must say quite frankly to the President of the Treasury Board that I will not introduce a motion to amend the main motion, but that it is quite probable that we shall reserve the right to introduce an amendment to the bill to achieve what we want in the Committee of the Whole when the bill is introduced later on and after unanimous consent for second reading is given today, tomorrow or Monday. However, it would be very simple for the President of the Treasury Board to give us a valid argument to justify going against the wishes expressed at the meetings of House leaders and insisting on maintaining the three-twelfths mentioned in paragraph (b) of motion No. 5 instead of amending this paragraph by putting in two-twelfths.

It seems to me that this would avoid the problem, that it would not put him in an embarrassing situation, and that it would be in accordance with all the provisions of our Standing Orders concerning the business of supply.

• (2030)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome the hon. member's suggestion as to whether I can in effect get by with eleven-twelfths as opposed to twelve-twelfths, and I can certainly keep an open mind on that. I think in Committee of the Whole on every explanation I give I can ask the officials if there is any technical or legal reason why, if we revert to eleven-twelfths, we will be creating a problem. My understanding is that in all 12 instances, however, there are in fact legal problems, and that is my dilemma. It is not just as easy as saying, "Let's have eleven-twelfths because there will not be some type of an ongoing problem".

To give the House an idea of the explanations I would be willing to give at Committee of the Whole stage, I could start indicating them now. I just felt it would be more constructive to wait until we got to the report stage.

Mr. Knowles: You mean Committee of the Whole stage.

Mr. Stevens: I am sorry, Committee of the Whole stage.

Mr. Knowles: There is no report stage on this bill.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, "Your Honour".

Mr. Knowles: No charge.

Mr. Stevens: However, Mr. Speaker, I am in the hands of the House. If hon. members would like me to go through all twelve explanations, I could go through them at this stage. I felt that a more constructive suggestion would be to go through each explanation at Committee of the Whole stage and if there was some questioning I could deal with it at that time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Because of the fact that the minister has already spoken, he could give the explanations at this stage only if he received the unanimous consent of the House. Otherwise, this would have to be done in Committee of the Whole. The problem is not for the Chair. It is for members of the House, who have to decide whether they are ready to go as far as what the government is proposing.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, if I need to call a point of order to get to my feet again, I remind the government House leader that he told us at our meetings that in no case would we be asked for more than eleven-twelfths. He told us there would be lots of eleven-twelfths, but here we are with twelve-twelfths. Since the motion does go beyond what we were asked for, I think that the explanations should be given now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the minister to speak again for the purpose of giving those requested explanations?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank all hon. members for facilitating these explanations. If I may, I will read the formal explanation for each item.

The proportions requested in this bill are intended to provide not only for all necessary requirements of the Government of Canada up to December 31, 1979, but also to approve the granting of full supply for some 12 votes which received more than eleven-twelfths under the authority of special Governor General's warrants due to the seasonally oriented nature of the programs and other special circumstances.

The following is a listing of the twelve votes including the reason we are suggesting that we must exceed the eleven-twelfths in each case:

Energy, Mines and Resources—Vote 15—Oil Import Compensation Payments. Higher than anticipated price increases of imported petroleum and petroleum products. Additional amount of $835 million for 1979-80 was included in Supplementary Estimates (A), 1979-80.

In short, the overrun is being reflected in the supplementary (A) amounting to $835 million, which brings the total oil import compensation plan payments to something exceeding $1.5 billion.

Energy, Mines and Resources—Vote L75—Loans for the purchase of Port Hawkesbury Heavy Water Plant. Full draw down to Canadian General Electric was due April 1, 1979.

Industry, Trade and Commerce—Vote L30—Advances to Canadian defence industry. All advances expected to be made before December 31, 1979.

National Defence—Vote 10—Contributions to NATO Agencies. By agreement, funds are due on or before October 31, 1979.

Public Works—Vote 35—Marine Capital. Seasonal operation—most work carried out before December.

Public Works—Vote 50—Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Home Insulation contributions. Full amount expected to be spent before December 31, 1979. Additional amount of $15 million for 1979-80 was included in Supplementary Estimates (A), 1979-80.

Public Works—Vote 80—Public Works Lands Company Limited—Operating—Gross amount paid pending approval of authority to spend revenues which are to be credited to the vote.

Secretary of State—Vote 65—Canadian Film Development Corporation. Seasonal activity—most of feature film work done in the summer.

Solicitor General—Vote L30—RCMP Mess Operations—Working Capital Advance Account. Full amount required to finance new mess in Winnipeg.

Ministry of Transport—Vote 20—Atlantic Pilotage Authority. Full amount paid in April, 1979 to meet the Authority's urgent cash requirements.

Ministry of Transport—Vote 30—Great Lakes Pilotage Authority, Ltd. Full amount paid in April, 1979 to meet the Authority's urgent cash requirements.

Ministry of Transport—Vote 40—National Harbours Board—Redevelopment of Old Port of Quebec. Full amount will be paid by mid-November to meet urgent cash requirements for construction.

As I indicated earlier, if there is any questioning on any of those items, I would be very willing in the Committee of the Whole stage to attempt to answer them, but those are our explanations as to why we have unfortunately, in our view, had to get into the twelve-twelfths concept at this stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

Mr. Stevens thereupon moved that Bill C-23, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1980, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. Knowles: By leave, now.

Mr. Stevens thereupon moved that Bill C-23, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1980, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may we have copies of the bill? After all, if we have given it first reading and we are about to give it second reading, we should at least see the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Copies of the bill are to be distributed immediately.

Mr. Knowles: Let's just sit for a minute, then.

Mr. Stevens: You are going to like it.

• (2040)

[Translation]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

[English]

On clause 2—$17,409,059,663.50 granted for 1979-80.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if there could be some understanding, or perhaps some direction from the Chair, as to how we are going to handle this bill which consists of a number of routine clauses that always make up a bill of this kind. It also has four different schedules with different departments under those schedules. Are we just going to allow each member to take up whatever subject he wants, or can we organize it by calling schedules and calling departments? I have no bill of goods to sell in this respect and I am not trying to get something, but it seems to me that it would be simpler, if we were on fisheries that we stayed on fisheries for a while, or if we were on national defence, that we stayed on national defence, instead of jumping all over the waterfront. Perhaps I will put the question to you, Mr. Chairman. How do you intend to call the bill? Having called the clauses, do you intend to call schedules A, B, C and D, or do you intend to bring them down by the various departments?

Mr. Pinard: So far as we are concerned, we were ready to let the different clauses of the bill be approved, but when you would call the schedules, we would intervene with regard to any of the departments. We were ready not to discuss the clauses but to make our points on any item under any department in the schedules. That is what we would suggest. If that suits members of the House, we would be willing to go along those lines.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that seems reasonable to us. As a matter of fact the opposition House leader and I had a discussion about that. He was going to indicate the areas in which he was interested so that we could have our ministers here in order to answer questions. If that is agreeable to you, Mr. Chairman, it is certainly agreeable to us. It seems like a reasonable and sensible way of handling it.

The Chairman: Order, please. If we are to proceed in the normal way and according to the practice followed in Committee of the Whole, we could approve the clauses first, or we could stand clauses 2 to 6 inclusive and then, if the committee is agreeable, go on to the schedules and only then come back to the clauses.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I think that is a happy compromise. There are items in clause 2 which might be discussed after we have considered the individual departments. Clause 2 is where we get this twelve-twelfths business. I would go along with the proposal that we stand clauses 2 to 6 inclusive—of course we stand clause 1 until the end of the show—and that we proceed to call the schedules.

Mr. Pinard: We would be agreeable to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): So would we, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is it agreed by the committee that clauses 2 to 6 inclusive be stood and that we proceed directly to schedule A?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On schedule A—

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, we have some suggestions for the minister of fisheries, but before we start with those questions—and we will have questions in the hours, days, and weeks ahead here—I want to sketch in some context for those questions.

The context was really begun by the hon. member for Nickel Belt this afternoon when he set the scene in his remarks by indicating the direction in which this government is going. Some people maintain that the government is directionless. That is not true. There appears a certain clear direction and it is the direction of business in this country. We want to show that that direction is being maintained in the fisheries policy as well as elsewhere. Indeed, there is already evidence to show that this is a fact. I am not putting the blame for that policy line at the door of the minister of fisheries. We on this side have a high regard for the minister as an individual, but the government party is now in the hands of the corporate interests represented by Bay Street, and the President of the Treasury Board is becoming known in the Atlantic provinces as "the slasher". I believe the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood had another name for him, but that is the name by which he goes in the Atlantic provinces.

Let me point to some of the evidence for the direction that is taking place in small craft harbours, for example. If that is the government that claims to be on the side of small boat fishermen—which I know the minister of fisheries is—then why was $11 million cut from the small craft harbours' budget this year? We questioned this in the standing committee, and it was quite clear to all of us that $11 million less will be spent on small craft harbours than was going to be spent last year. Those of us from the Atlantic area, not only from this side of the House but also the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte on the other side, will remember the time we spent in the committee on public works improving the small crafts harbours budget, in fact tripling it. The hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, when he was the minister of fisheries, continued the practice that the minister had started before him, and improved it.

This year $11 million less will be spent on small craft harbours. I do not know how many members are aware of the importance of this facility in the Atlantic provinces, but there is no point in trying to catch fish if you do not have boats, and you do not have boats if you do not have protection for those boats in the form of wharves and breakwaters, and if you do not have something to pull those boats up on in the wintertime. That is the importance of this to small boat fishermen and that is the importance of it to the Atlantic provinces, but that is the direction this government is taking, and that is the kind of policy line we are getting from this government.

Before I leave the subject of small craft harbours let me say this. Right now the Minister of Employment and Immigration has on his desk waiting for approval certain Canada Works projects in the Atlantic provinces. Whatever other members may think of these particular programs, they have been God-sends for the inshore fishermen in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec. They have had facilities built that would have been built no other way and with no other funds.

Right now ready for approval are Canada Works projects for building wharves, breakwaters, haul-outs, slipways and fishing stages. However, there needs to be complementary money from the small craft harbours budget, and that money is just not there. Those projects will not be approved. In addition to the $11 million of small craft harbours money in the main estimates that will not be spent, these Canada Works funds will be unspent because of the lack of money in the small craft harbours budget. This is a sad situation in the Atlantic area, and I hope I can make clear to the House how serious it is.

The second piece of evidence relates to fishing vessel subsidies. The previous government and, indeed, the present government, have been encouraging small boat fishermen to improve their boats, their catching capability, their technology and their gear, but since June we have not had any fishing vessel subsidies.

A 53-foot longliner in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec costs $500,000. Can you appreciate the difficulty of small boat fishermen, small entrepreneurs, raising that kind of money? The federal government normally pays 35 per cent of the cost of such a vessel, or at least in my province it does. That money has not been there since June. This means that boats that were supposed to have been built have not been built, and this means that fishermen have gone without, in spite of the fact that groundfish are coming back and stocks are being rejuvenated. The fishermen have not got boats with which to prosecute the fishery. This is, indeed, a sad situation.

In addition to that, the shipyards which normally build these vessels and provide additional employment to people in that area have been lying idle. If this is a government of small boat fishermen, where is the small craft harbours money? If this is a government of small boat fishermen, where are the fishing vessel subsidies? They are not available in my province which has the highest unemployment rate in Canada. That province is represented by two ministers in the federal cabinet, and the present premier won his election by saying we had two stars in Ottawa now, and suddenly the heavens were going to open and rain gold. We are still waiting for that gold to rain. Six, seven months have gone by, and still we have not seen the evidence of the work of the two hon. gentlemen in the cabinet. I am not laying this at their doors; I am laying it at the doors of the people who are controlling this present party in government at the present time, and back of that party the interests of the large corporate organizations in this country.

The real issue that is developing in the fishery, at least on the Atlantic coast, and I suspect on the Pacific coast as well, is not a conflict between the provinces, and not a conflict between the provinces and the federal government. Richard Cashin, the president of the Newfoundland Fish, Food and Allied Workers Union, in a statement yesterday in Newfoundland defined it very well. He said that the real issue that is developing is not so much a constitutional conflict between the provinces and the federal government or, indeed, between the provinces, but a conflict or a power struggle within the fishing industry, a struggle between the large corporate interests and the small boat fishermen. That is the struggle that is emerging, and that is the struggle we want to address ourselves to on this side.

Let me make it quite clear where we in this party stand, as we have stood before. Whatever the hon. member for Nickel Belt may say about the lack of difference between the parties on both sides of the House in policy, it is quite clear that at least in respect of fisheries the policy of this party has been to favour the disadvantaged, the powerless, the people with the least economic and political powers in the fishing industry, and that has been the fishermen.

If there is one thing that the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent was known for it was as the minister of fishermen, not so much as the minister of fisheries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: The struggle that is going on within the fishing industry is indeed that struggle between the corporate interests in the fishing industry and the small boat fishermen.

Let me make it quite clear where we stand. We, as a party, want to defend the people whom we have represented over the years and whom we continue to represent in our ridings, and they are the small boat fishermen; the inshore fishermen. We do so not simply because we want to improve their economic position but, indeed, because the small boat or inshore fishermen are tied up in a very integral manner with the way of life in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec. Our communities and our families exist because of the inshore fishery and because of the small boats fishery. We want to protect that way of life, not simply the fishery, and not simply to improve their economic position. That is the issue in the fishery today. The question is: who will get the power and the control, and how will that power be shared among those various sections of the fishery?

I am not going to deal with the issue that has come up most recently, that issue in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I am going to leave that to my friend, the hon. member for Gloucester, who championed that issue from the beginning, assisted by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent and, indeed, by my colleague, the hon. member for Gaspé. They will deal with that issue in some substance. However, that is further evidence of the direction that is being taken in the interests of the corporate powers within the fishing industry.

The issue of freezer trawlers will be the next important issue we want to debate on this side. We think the minister has been premature in discussing with the Fisheries Council of Canada the issue of freezer trawlers within the fishing industry, because here again a conflict takes place. If we increase the number of licences in the fishery for large vessels with freezing capacity to take large amounts of groundfish, in addition to unutilized species, and there is no way they can be economic unless they take a certain amount of groundfish, and I doubt that they can be economic anyway, that is going to have—

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I am sure my friend would not want to mislead the House. I just want to refresh his memory. When the estimates were before the committee I indicated to him that I had not in fact discussed the question of freezer trawlers with the Fisheries Council of Canada.

Mr. Rompkey: I accept that from the minister, Mr. Chairman. All we are saying is that before any decision is made we on this side want consultation. We want to be able to debate that whole issue because it is of paramount importance. It is another sub-issue growing out of the one I have been trying to point out. We want to be consulted on that. We want a full debate on it. We want all the facts laid on the table, and we want adequate consultation with the inshore fishermen whose very livelihood is threatened by this issue of freezer trawlers.

When referring to the struggle between the corporate interests and the small fishermen I would suggest that my colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, who is not here today, would raise the issue of the squid fishermen of Chedabucto Bay and the Canso area. It is true that the freezers of the companies are full at the present time. The shame of it is that squid in the areas I have indicated is being thrown overboard because the fishermen cannot get rid of it. The companies say they already have their freezers full and they cannot sell it.

The minister is saying that over-the-side sales will not be approved in this area and that he will not allow foreign vessels to come in and take the squid as they have in the past. If the companies are saying that they do not have a market for their squid, will the minister of fisheries speak to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and tell her that there is a dire situation in Cambodia at the present time and we as the government have approved $15 million for that area?

I would remind the minister that the main market for squid which is emerging now is the Japanese market. Would the minister tell the Secretary of State for External Affairs that we have this situation in Chedabucto Bay and Canso, and would he arrange, through whatever means necessary, to ship this product overseas to the people who are in dire need of it at the present time? We in Canada have so much of so many other things. There are people who need that product, and I am sure that something can be worked out in the interest of the squid fishermen in that area so that they can get rid of that product that they are catching and having to throw away at the present time.

I understood the minister to say earlier that he was not against over-the-side sales in principle. I thought I saw in his press release that they probably would continue next year. I hope that the minister will clarify his position on the matter because I think that he has to do something about that situation. It is an important situation for these fishermen in that area and, once again, the people who are affected are the small boat fishermen who cannot get rid of their product. The large corporations are not affected because their freezers are already full with that product.

Another issue which I would like to bring to the attention of the minister of fisheries in the hope that he will pass it on to the Minister of Public Works or possibly the Minister of Transport is the issue of navigational devices on the east coast, and specifically the Loran program. The previous government earmarked $14 million for the installation of new Loran facilities on the Atlantic coast. That has now been put aside, and the project will not go ahead even though all the ground work was laid. The Fox Harbour, Labrador area, was to have a Loran station. It is very important to the fishermen in that area and, indeed, to the U.S. coastguard.

I understand that not only are the Canadian fishermen upset, but so is the U.S. coastguard because they cannot navigate in the Atlantic area due to the lack of those Loran facilities. The possibility of oil discoveries off the Atlantic coast is further evidence of the need for these navigational facilities at the present time. Both the present government and the previous government have been encouraging fishermen to get the most up-to-date equipment. That technology will use the Loran navigational equipment for fixes at sea. If the government is encouraging the fishermen to get into that kind of boat and that kind of technology, it must have the proper kind of navigational equipment. It would not make any sense at all to leave that money unspent because one goes hand in hand with the other. I implore the minister to speak to his colleagues, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Transport, to see if he could have reinstated that $14 million to provide those very necessary Loran facilities on the Atlantic coast.

There are other issues that we would like to raise during the course of this debate. We would like to ask the minister what he intends to do about the Atlantic salmon. He must make a decision on that matter soon. We now know that the stock is in a great deal of trouble and that the decision will not be easy. There are five or six different factors, and during the course of the debate we will be going into this matter in more detail. I hope that the decision on that matter will be in the interest of those who need that salmon most and, again, in our opinion that is the small boat fishermen.

One option open to the minister is to reduce or possibly eliminate the salmon catch at the present time in Newfoundland. Certainly, the policy taken by the government of New Brunswick would suggest that it has not brought the stocks back, and I doubt very much if implementing that kind of policy with regard to Newfoundland would make any more sense. I think that there are other ways and means to go about solving the salmon problem.

The difficulty we on this side see is the direction in which we are heading in fisheries policy. It is a clear departure from the policy followed by the previous minister of fisheries. If the hon. member for Nickel Belt is looking for a difference in philosophy or approach, then let him look at the fishery policy because, from our point of view, there is a clear difference which we do not like and which we would like to see changed.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it we are on Schedule A at the present time. The hon. member directed his comments I think to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, which is referred to in schedule D. For purposes of good order, I would suggest that each speaker deal with the schedule before us, and in that way we can proceed in a more orderly way with any questions that may be raised. The reason I say this is because schedule A is really where my hon. friend's points are going to come up on the twelve-twelfths. Schedule A deals with the three-twelfths that we are asking for in addition to the usual nine-twelfths that are dealt with in the bill.

Schedule B deals with the request for two-twelfths, the final schedule is the request for one-twelfth, and schedule D deals with the supplementary estimates A. It is supplementary estimates A that have the provision with respect to fisheries and oceans. I could suggest that we come to the various fisheries and oceans discussion points either in schedule D, or when we revert to some of the clauses which we have stood. For example, clause 2(a) is the general nine-twelfths provision which includes, of course, fisheries and all the other departments. I am suggesting that perhaps if we could deal with schedule A we could get that behind us and then schedules B and C, and hopefully we could get to schedule D quickly.

Mr. Breau: In view of the fact that we agreed with the government House leader that we would be discussing the fisheries estimates, we were prepared to go to that on clause 2. We stood the other clauses in order to be co-operative. In view of that, would it not be acceptable to the President of the Treasury Board, and to you Mr. Chairman, if we stood schedules A, B and C and went to schedule D, because we are prepared to discuss it?

We thought that we would be dealing with clause 2 and that we could do everything on that clause. That is why we would rather stand the others and go to schedule D. Would that be acceptable?

The Chairman: I have no objection. I had the same preoccupation as the President of the Treasury Board, but by stretching schedule A with regard to marine transportation, I found a way to accept the remarks of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, although at times he referred more to fisheries than to wharfs and shipbuilding. I also recognize the difficulty of hon. members and I have already discussed the possibility of having a further, detailed discussion on fisheries. I have no objection to that, but to stand schedules A, B, C, and go to D, would need the consent of the committee.

Mr. Rose: From the point of view of this party, Mr. Chairman, we are not prepared to stand this clause at the moment. We still have a number of speakers on it and I think we need its generalities in order to bring up things that are of great concern to those members who are present tonight and who will be present tomorrow, immediately after question period.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure if the hon. member who just spoke was here when his House leader agreed to stand clause 2. We have prepared ourselves to discuss clause 2. If they want to discuss something else, we have no objection to the Chair recognizing them proportionately, for the evening. I think it is unfair of the hon. member to bring this up now, when we have agreed to his leader's suggestion to stand clause 2. We are not saying they cannot discuss whatever they want to discuss, if they want an equitable share of the time for debate, but it is very unfair of the member from the New Democratic Party to refuse us the opportunity to discuss what we want to discuss.

We have no objection, Mr. Chairman, if you recognize them equitably this evening—as you always do, of course—but I wish the hon. member would not refuse consent for us to discuss what we want to discuss. We were ready to go ahead on clause 2. It was only in order to be co-operative that we decided to stand the clause and go to the schedules. I appeal to hon. members to be a little more co-operative, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, it is true I was out of the House so I do not want to contradict any commitment made earlier that we would prefer to stay with schedule A, standing the various clauses. That is what I heard when I came into the House. I am not aware that we have any objection to that, as long as we stay with schedule A.

The Chairman: I will try to be helpful. I do not want to get involved in the essence of the bill. In schedule D there are votes 15a, and L36a which deal with energy, mines and resources and payments to refiners. Would that be enough to allow the minister and hon. members to discuss the questions they want to discuss on schedule A? I am not learned enough to answer the questions that I ask myself.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, certainly we have no objections to standing schedules A, B, and C. If hon. members want to speak on the fisheries and ocean item, it does most appropriately come under schedule D. As you have indicated, schedule D is pretty wide anyway. I think our friends in the NDP can probably bring their remarks in under schedule D.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, would it not be possible to allow us to raise questions involved in all four schedules? I do not see what the problem is, if the gentleman to my right wants to speak to schedule B and we want to speak to schedule A.

The Chairman: The problem arises when amendments are offered. The Chair has to help the committee to proceed in an orderly way, so that we do not end up with confrontation or differences of opinion among members who are talking on one schedule or on another schedule. As far as schedule D is concerned, I do not see any difficulty in the minister answering questions that seem to occupy hon. members in the NDP on the subject of energy, if that is what they want to discuss at the same time.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is really no problem. If we accept the advice you gave the committee in the first place, we can talk about fisheries under the marine transportation program and we can ask the questions that we want to as well.

The Chairman: The committee will have to decide for itself. Right now I am faced with a decision that has been made to stand clauses 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. We are on schedule A now. If hon. members cannot agree among themselves, we will have to proceed with schedule A and I shall try to keep the debate as orderly as I can.

Shall schedule A carry?

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Chairman, if I understood your last remark it means there will be a fairly free-ranging discussion. That is probably the way most hon. members would like it.

[Mr. Breau.]

This is a new experience for quite a few of us and I suspect the wise and learned views of some of our colleagues would have been useful in the last few minutes. However, we shall muddle through.

Any discussion on fisheries must take place in a rather bizarre context for those of us who remember the period of 1974-75. Most of the tensions and the debate taking place in regard to fisheries matters at the moment are caused by a problem of riches. There is an abundance of fish. It is because the fishery has become so attractive to so many that a lot of discussion is taking place. I modestly take some slight credit for this abundance of riches, although I suspect the oceans are mainly responsible for creating the biological wealth. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans now finds himself approached on many sides by those who want to get in on the action.

The first time we took issue with him was on the decision to allow the larger vessels back into the Gulf of St. Lawrence which came about as a result of conflicting fishermen's interest groups competing for the same fish. The hon. member for Gloucester will have more to say on this issue a little later. I suspect a whole series of issues of the same nature are pending. Reference was made to freezer trawlers. If these vessels are to receive additional licences and not replacements, we will want to know who is to get that next generation of licences. If it is those who can afford them because they already have large fleets, then we will want to know the criteria under which the licences were issued.

We will also want to know if the minister has abandoned the policy enunciated in 1977, to the effect that the holders of fishing licences should not also be the processors or marketers of fish, that there will be a separation of the fleet to create a clientele, if I can use that word, of fishermen who own their boats individually or collectively and who go into the business of fishing while others go into the business of processing and marketing.

When I held that portfolio I concluded that the system whereby large trawlers could transfer some cost other than the cost of catching the fish, created unfair competition for a lot of small boat owners.

In any discussion about the next generation of licences, I would be interested in hearing the minister's views on an idea which I suggested and which the Premier of Newfoundland espoused at an open federal-provincial conference. It was a matter of public record that the idea of the next generation of licences, or the increase in the licences, should not be in the hands of those who already have them, but should be distributed or put in the hands of a consortium. This consortium could be comprised of a company in which government, present processors possibly, and fishermen, would be represented and in which they would have a say. Fishermen will certainly want to have something to say about the allocation of what I call the next generation of licences.

There are a number of other areas in which the sources of conflict between competing groups, not only fishermen but of processors and fishermen, are coming to the fore. Look at the situation on the sale of squid. It is possible that that market has slowed down. Have the companies, before asking the minister to intervene on their behalf, made available to fishermen through their organization all information which would allow fishermen to make a reasonable judgment? The fishermen of British Columbia in the herring roe know the market can bear roughly 90 thousand tons. Way beyond that figure market conditions and their income as fishermen would be in danger. This knowledge is shared among companies and fishermen and they arrive at a reasonable decision.

Those companies which were at my door when I was minister and must be at my successor's door in order to get access to the offshore squid have created very little employment. Squid was caught by freezer trawlers. These ships were chartered. The squid was then transferred to carrier or reefer vessels and taken to the Japanese market. Those companies at that time were not overly worried about the glut condition of the market. I suspect that having their freezers full and having served themselves very nicely, thank you, then the fishermen who would like to sell fish to Japanese freezers in bays like St. George's Bay—the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion knows very well what I am talking about—find themselves prohibited by this minister whose instincts I am sure are repelled by having to make this sort of decision.

The minister will have to learn one thing, that he will have to resist a popularity contest with the large processors in the fishing industry who have traditionally exercised pressure and who have resisted some of the policies I advocated to allow fishermen to come home as equal partners. He will have to resist the blandishments of those who spoke yesterday to the committee that one had to exploit the fish on what one had to call an economic basis, that is, the fastest buck for the fewest possible. Then things are closed down and the government is left to worry about the rest.

Obviously this is a resource which belongs to the people of Canada and in which there has been almost no investment by large processors. The only investment has been in vessels acquired, accompanied by good tax write-offs, to capture the fish.

An hon. Member: A Liberal write-off.

Mr. LeBlanc: If the hon. member to my left listened, he might learn a few things.

Mr. Breau: Like the difference between cod and herring.

Mr. LeBlanc: The principle of saying to fishermen that when companies do not like it, one must not be allowed to sell fish directly to a foreign freezer, is one that will be hotly debated. We cannot hold the fishermen of this country as hostages to the sort of rhetoric we heard this week in the House of Commons Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

If the minister wants to be on the side of the fishermen he will have to take his lumps from those who can advertise in The Globe and Mail—

An hon. Member: At the taxpayers' expense.

Mr. LeBlanc: Yes, at the taxpayers' expense, because obviously this is written off. These are the people who were so poor a few years ago that at one point they asked me to take over the fleet. They were telling me they could not afford to run it any more. Now that the government has bailed them out with millions and millions of taxpayers' dollars, they are right back to where they were a few years ago.

They are not interested in long term policies like market consolidation for the foreign market effort of Canada. They are not very much interested in developing new markets as long as they can make a fast overnight dollar in some quick chartering operation. The minister will have to come down on one side or the other. I hope that he is brave enough to resist these ideological neo-conservatives who are developing some new altars on which we are supposed to sacrifice in the next few years. As the minister from Nova Scotia said, the fishermen of Cape Breton have been suckered in when trying to defend their interests as small inshore fishermen.

The minister will have to decide if he will speak on behalf of the fishermen or if he will speak on behalf of those he called good corporate citizens the other day. I suspect at some point he will not be able to speak comfortably for both.

I had intended to say a few more words, but I will conclude by saying that I think fishermen's organizations must not be prohibited, as they are in certain provinces, where by law fishermen do not have the right to organize—I am embarrassed to say that my own province of New Brunswick is one of those—

Mr. Breau: Under a Tory government.

Mr. LeBlanc: Yes, under a Conservative government. The fishermen of this country must be given a chance to defend their interests as every other group of society is allowed to do. Not only that, but they must be actively encouraged by being heard and listened to. I intend to speak on some other items, but for the moment those are my general remarks.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to talk about fish.

Mr. Breau: Do you know what cod is?

Mr. Rae: I want to ask a particular question of the President of the Treasury Board. It will take only three minutes and it arises from discussions I have had today. Can he tell us whether it is the intention of the government to announce before Christmas further sales of additional Crown corporations?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether or not that comes under schedule A but I will answer the hon.

member in this way: it is likely that the privatization candidate list with respect to Crown corporations will be increased, and an announcement will be made sometime between now and Christmas.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is here in committee. In the last few weeks there have been many subjects that we have wanted to raise with him and he has been good enough to make himself available in the committee on fisheries and forestry. We appreciate that.

I want to say, as have my friends, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, and the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, that it is nice to see the Minister of Fisheries sitting with the President of the Treasury Board. One could not exemplify better the problems that are happening with fisheries now. Because this is the start of the session, we want to be nice; we are not going to be difficult right away. As I have said many times in this House to the hon. member for St. John's East, we hope he will be able to do those things that he wants to do.

I wish the President of the Treasury Board would forget his ideology and his blanket cutbacks and slashing on discretionary spending, and realize that what he is doing is humiliating all his colleagues whose departments have, as a vocation, spending and development. After four or five months I do not understand how the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans can sit at the same desk as the President of the Treasury Board, considering the difficulties he has caused. I do not understand how the minister can go back to Newfoundland and the rest of the Atlantic provinces to give an explanation to the fishermen, town councils, village councils, chambers of commerce and all kinds of industrial companies. You know what I am talking about, Mr. Chairman. It must be extremely difficult for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to explain why, for philosophical reasons, changes were made on a certain date, June 1.

I want to take this opportunity to say what a good job was done by the former minister of fisheries and oceans. Everyone in the Atlantic provinces who knows anything about fisheries agrees with that. Yesterday or the day before in the regional development committee none other than the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was saying how prosperous rural Newfoundland had become. He stated how economic activity in rural Newfoundland and in fact all over the Atlantic provinces was really alive. That is only because the former minister had influence on the government, something we hope this minister will have before too long.

As I said, we will be nice for a while and give him the benefit of the doubt. The previous minister had influence in the government because our party thought that fisheries was important. That is because external affairs and the diplomatic infrastructure of this country pushed at the Law of the Sea Conference to get the 200-mile limit settled. I was present at many discussions where the former minister pushed the government into unilaterally declaring the 200-mile limit.

[Mr. Stevens.]

It was not only because of the 200-mile limit the fisheries began to prosper. It was because we had a minister, a government and a party which believed we should put our money where our mouth was. That was what we did.

The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador stated that the budget for small craft harbours last year was about $41 million on a yearly basis. It is now being cut to something like $32 million. That is shameful. We have lost a building season in small craft harbours.

This is the first time in 20 years in my constituency that the traditional construction companies had to lay off men in the month of July. I cannot speak for all of New Brunswick, but I know that in northern New Brunswick, which encompasses three constituencies, not one contract has been signed by the Department of Public Works for any marine structure for fisheries paid for under the small craft harbours program since June 4. That is shameful.

The fishery is an important sector. It is important to the culture and the life of our communities. For a government to accept a fiscal policy to freeze discretionary spending is not only humiliating for members like the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans but it is a policy that does not make any sense. In the past three or four months I have met with fishermen and development associations. They cannot believe the Government of Canada wants to follow a policy of freezing discretionary spending for small craft harbours.

My friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador mentioned that the Canada Works program brought in by the Liberal government was a good program. We have worked with officials and community organizations in our constituencies with regard to making as much use as possible of this program to repair wharves and build small structures, something that can be done by those in the communities. This too was initiated by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent while minister of fisheries. He convinced Treasury Board and the bureaucracy that it would not only provide employment for fishermen but would be more economical and efficient. As my friend said, hundreds of thousands of dollars had been approved under Canada Works.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and his officials will have to tell the community organizations that they are sorry, they have no money. That is shameful. I wanted to emphasize what was said by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, because the President of the Treasury Board is in the chamber.

I wish to discuss a subject that I am sure we will have ample time to discuss with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in the days before this bill is approved. On August 22 the minister announced a decision to increase the quotas for cod in regions 4T and 40 in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. He also announced he would provide 6,000 metric tons off that quota to fishing vessels, trawlers 100 feet or more. He permitted them to come back to region 4T of the Gulf of St. Lawrence for the first time since 1975, at which time they had been asked by the then minister, the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, not to do so. I spoke to the minister since that time. We raised the matter in the House.

[Translation]

The minister has been told, I do not know how many times, that if he really made a mistake, we would understand that: it is quite possible for a man who has been a minister for only about ten weeks to make an error; there is so much material to be gone over and assimilated in so short a time that a mistake would be understandable; but, Mr. Chairman, what this minister did was to make an irresponsible decision. He decided to allow trawlers of 100 feet or more to enter the 4T zone in the Gulf of St. Lawrence without consulting anyone but the owners of those trawlers. The minister has replied several times in the House, and I have a few answers here in my hand which I would like to quote because I think that the minister, though he may not want to mislead the House deliberately is trying to be "tortuous". And just in case someone does not understand what I mean by that, I want to say that——the minister has been devious.

[English]

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, on October 17, in reply to my colleague from Gaspé the minister said, and I quote:

[English]

Mr. Speaker, that decision was taken after scientific advice had come to us—

[Translation]

The quotation can be found on page 296 of Hansard for October 17.

[English]

—that we could take an additional 13,000 metric tons in the Gulf. On the basis of that advice, consultations were held with the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee. There was consultation, and on the basis of that consultation it was agreed that 4,000 metric tons would be assigned the Gulf-based vessels, which left an additional 9,000 metric tons. We decided—

When he answers he is very clever. He just spoke about consultations on the increase of the quota.

We decided that on the basis of that new TAC, we would assign 6,000 metric tons to the 100-footers, or the offshore fleet which had fished in the Gulf prior to 1976.

Again, yesterday, in the House of Commons the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Prime Minister, in answer to a question from the hon. member for Gaspé, said there had been consultations on the question of the entry of the 100-footers. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans should come clean with the House and tell us if he did consult with the governments of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Quebec and Nova Scotia on the question of entrance into the Gulf of St. Lawrence in region 4T of these large trawlers. If the minister wants to clear this up right now, I am ready to yield him the floor.

● (2140)

The hon. gentleman always answers by saying there was consultation with the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee. I have read the minutes carefully, I have spoken to the people who were here, and I have evidence here that would suggest that on the question of the 100-foot trawlers there was no consultation. An official of the Prince Edward Island government appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry this week and said there had been consultation only on the increase of the quota.

Before I go further I want to ask the minister whether he did, or did not, consult with anyone except the owners of the 100-foot trawlers or the plant owners? Did he consult with anybody whose fishery was based on the Gulf on the issue of 100-foot trawlers entering region 40 or not?

Mr. McGrath: This question has been raised in the House on a number of occasions. I have answered it. The hon. member has just quoted one of my answers from Hansard. He is now implying, whether inadvertently or deliberately, that I misled the House. I have given my answer in the House and I am prepared to put it, now, before the committee and to substantiate it when I reply to the hon. member. There was consultation. That consultation was explained in committee when the matter was before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. It was repeated on numerous occasions in reply to questions in the House. There was consultation. I intend to demonstrate, with evidence, that in fact there was consultation. I am saying to the hon. member, for whom I have the greatest respect, I am sure it is not his intention to imply that I have misled the House. That is the course on which he is setting out tonight. He has to accept my word.

Mr. Breau: I did not imply anything. The reason I asked the minister to stand up and answer the question before I went further was precisely because I respect him, too. I give him the benefit of the doubt. But I have evidence to show that on the question of the entry of the 100-foot trawlers some people say there was no consultation, and I am ready to quote, for example, the minister of fisheries for New Brunswick, Mr. Jean Gauvin who, in L'Évangeline—

[Translation]

I would like to quote from an article published on page 5 of L'Évangeline of September 21 under the title:

Large trawlers authorized to enter Gulf. Gauvin—

That is New Brunswick Fisheries Minister Jean Gauvin.

—surprised and concerned by the McGrath decision.

The Minister was surprised not only by the lack of consultation, in his view, but because he did not even know that this action was being considered. The reporter then describes the problem, Mr. Chairman, and I come immediately to Mr. Gauvin's statement. He said he was surprised, and I quote:

That the federal minister did not consult him prior to taking this decision, although Mr. McGrath may have tried to get in touch with him.

Now I can translate that:

[English]

I can translate that. The minister of fisheries of New Brunswick, Mr. Gauvin, said he is surprised that the federal minister did not consult him before making a decision.

Mr. McGrath: I said in the House there was no consultation at ministerial level. I said that yesterday.

Mr. Breau: Now we are starting to get more facts. Why does the minister not come out and say there was consultation on the increase of the quota at the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee meeting in July but that the question of the 100-foot trawlers being permitted to enter the Gulf was not discussed? Why doesn't he come clean and say that? I don't want to imply anything. I don't want to say he misled the House but I want the minister to tell the whole story and I want the record to show that when the minister says there has been consultation, there has been consultation at AGAC on whether the quota should be increased or not, but that on the crucial question of whether the quota should be taken by the large trawlers or not there was no consultation at all.

I wish the minister would admit he made a mistake, that he proceeded too quickly on an issue of great importance. He might, for example, tell us that he moved too quickly—that he was a new minister and did not have time to consider properly the briefs the officials prepared for him.

I have here the ministerial briefing note that the minister should have read and which explains very clearly what the problems were. It explains that the problems were not only scientific, not only related to establishing the total allowable catch, not only to whether the quota should be increased or not. The question is one of direction.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, this is a question of philosophical approach to fishery development. That is the question. Some members suggested we are questioning the competence of scientists. Such has never been our aim. Scientists deal with facts and data. The important thing here is that an area and a sector, coastal fishery—either near or further away from the coast—does not accept the minister's philosophy. It cannot accept that the minister should allow, two or three large companies owning some 50 trawlers 100 feet long or over to reap an extraordinary volume within the 200-mile limit.

I have figures here, Mr. Chairman, showing that this year—I have asked officials for figures for this year, and they are going to supply them later. But it is now my feeling, Mr. Chairman, that 100-foot or over trawlers will be catching this year, in 1979, about 120,000 metric tons of cod—only cod, 120,000 metric tons; by the end of August they had already taken 83,000 metric tons of cod. It is a matter of determining whether the Government of Canada which is responsible for managing a resource for all Canadians is going to decide to continue to give more to those who have a chance to operate elsewhere and endanger coastal fishing in all Atlantic provinces.

It is not only a matter affecting the Gaspé area, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, because if the philosophy of the minister is that all he is going to do is accept the recommendations of his scientists on some data and say, "There is an allowable catch of X thousand pounds, let those who have the boats"—and those happen to be the big companies, two or three big companies—"go and get that fish." Well, areas in the Atlantic provinces depend on coastal fishing, depend on smaller boats where there are hundreds of independent fishermen who are not good corporate citizens, as the minister suggested in the fisheries and forests committee as well as in this House when he asked what could be done against those companies because they were good corporate citizens. Mr. Speaker, hon. members know as well as I do that coastal fishermen of Canada, New Brunswick, Quebec, Magdalen Islands, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland are good Canadians: the only difference is that they are not corporate citizens.

But, Mr. Chairman, they are citizens, people who have been trying for many years to earn a better living and who see that, in this country, in the area of fisheries, with the 200-mile limit, they now have a better chance and they can go and fish in that 200-mile limit. Why? Because of those 400,000 to 500,000 boats, and they own boats 45, 50, 65 or 80 feet long, Mr. Chairman, it is not economical to go and fish off Labrador or Newfoundland or between Nova Scotia to the south, and Newfoundland, in zones 4X, 4W and 4VS in the Atlantic ocean. That is not economical for them. So they have to depend on fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and plants which depend on the Gulf for their fish supplies are also curiously underutilized. The minister says that they—

[English]

Mr. Chairman, I see that my time has expired. I would like to give an opportunity to the minister to come clean before we go further on this question and to admit that he did not consult anybody who was interested in the Gulf fisheries on the question of permitting 100-foot trawlers and longer to enter region 4T of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I would like the minister to admit that he made an error and to say that he will not do that again.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to reply. I wanted first to hear from my friend, the hon. member for Gaspé. I listened to the speech of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and the speech of the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, but I do not want the record to suggest that the hon. member feels that he has me over a barrel in any way. Just to correct the record, I am going to quote the minutes of the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee meeting which was held in St. John's July 11, 1979.

The representation at that meeting is listed here, and it shows, for example, that there was a representative of the government of the province of New Brunswick. It is not my fault if that representative did not report back to his minister, but that is in fact what happened. There was a representative from the province of Quebec. There was a representative from the provincial government of Newfoundland, and there was a representative from the provincial government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Breau: I have read all that.

Mr. McGrath: There was no representative from the province of Prince Edward Island.

Then the minutes list industry representatives as well, and I quote from the minutes as follows:

> Members generally favoured an increase in the current TAC; however, conflicting views were expressed over a possible TAC increase and allocations to vessels under 100 feet and over 100 feet.

It was discussed at that meeting, and on the basis of these discussions there were consultations.

As a result of these consultations regarding Gulf-based vessels it was determined that they could use an additional 4,000 metric tons of the 13,000 metric tons that we were allowed to allocate over the existing TAC. So we allocated 4,000 metric tons to Gulf-based vessels because that was all they could use. That left 9,000 metric tons. Of that 9,000 metric tons 6,000 metric tons were allocated to the over 100-footers or the trawler fleet based outside the Gulf, primarily in Nova Scotia and southern Newfoundland. They are now in the southern Gulf taking advantage of that allocation.

My friend, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, might be interested in knowing that as of today there are 16 trawlers in there, and the 16 of them are from south coast of Newfoundland fish plants providing good work for Newfoundlanders, and he opposes that. I am going to have more to say about that later on, but these are the facts, and I cannot help it if the hon. member does not read or does not understand what he reads. The facts speak for themselves.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Chairman, during this week there have been a number of comments made in this House to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the Garrison diversion project. Some of the comments were directed to the Prime Minister with regard to his discussing this with President Carter tomorrow. Unfortunately, President Carter will now not be visiting us tomorrow, and this matter will not be brought up, so I would like to direct some comments to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

In the province of Manitoba there is a very large freshwater fishing industry. This fishing industry will be seriously affected by the Garrison diversion project. I urge the minister to make representations to the Prime Minister on behalf of fishermen in Manitoba, in other provinces, in northwestern Ontario and parts of Saskatchewan who will eventually be adversely affected by the environmental pollution caused by the Garrison project.

Essentially the danger Manitoba is afraid of is that the Garrison diversion is causing a link-up between the Mississippi River and the Missouri River basin and the Red River, Lake Winnipeg, Nelson River or really the Hudson Bay basin system in Canada and parts of north central United States.

By making this link-up, certain species of fish will be brought into the Hudson Bay watershed which have not been in the Hudson Bay watershed for some 8,000 years. Among these are the gizzard shad, the rainbow smelt, and a number of others. The gizzard shad and the rainbow smelt in particular will cause serious and irreparable harm to the freshwater fishing industry in Manitoba. The gizzard shad particularly is a rather ugly and voracious little thing.

An hon. Member: Probably a Conservative.

Mr. Sargeant: Someone has noted that he might be a Conservative fish. There is probably a strong resemblance between the gizzard shad and the happy hacker. The gizzard shad will eat all of the natural feed of the Lake Manitoba white fish, the Lake Manitoba pickerel, the sauger and the northern pike. It will also kill the eggs of Lake Winnipeg fish.

The rainbow smelt is an incredibly rapid multiplier. He will also affect the food supply for the natural fish of Lake Winnipeg, Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis, and will also foul up the nets of Lake Winnipeg fishermen. Their nets will be filled with rainbow smelt and cause an incredible amount of work, while the rainbow smelt has no value itself. The rainbow smelt cannot be commercially used. Fishermen will spend hours emptying their nets of rainbow smelt.

Figures from studies by the IJC and recently a study undertaken on behalf of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood show that $3.1 million worth of Manitoba freshwater fishing will go down the drain. The fishing industry is somewhat larger than that, but the Garrison diversion will cause $3.1 million in annual damage, in today's dollars. This is something the people of Manitoba cannot accept. It is something which will affect native fishermen and non-status native fishermen in Manitoba. There are communities in the northern part of my riding and in the riding of the hon. member for Churchill which will be completely shut down if the fishing industry is lost. There will be nothing left for those communities.

I have a number of comments to make regarding freshwater fishing. I would like to make them at some other time. At this time I would just like to wrap up my comments by urging the minister once again to make representations to the Prime Minister and to do all he can on behalf of Manitoba fishermen to ensure that Garrison does not—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—REQUEST CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM BE EXTENDED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on November 7 last I put a question either addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) or, as it turns out, the minister in charge of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, with respect to the home insulation program. The program has laudable objectives. The main objective, of course, is to encourage people who own private homes to insulate them and therefore reduce the amount of energy they are consuming in order to heat their homes.

Originally the program provided financial assistance to those people who owned homes erected prior to 1946. In the middle of the last federal election, on April 20, the then minister of energy, mines and resources all of a sudden came out with a new plan. He extended the program to homes built prior to 1961 and arranged for people to obtain up to $500, a real scoop, in order to assist them in their home insulation.

What concerns many of my constituents is that the standards of home insulation for houses built during the 1950s and 1960s, indeed until the early 1970s when our energy problems became apparent, were virtually the same. The same type of standard of insulation was required in my municipality and, I suspect, in most municipalities across Canada. Yet the program was extended to provide for assistance to those persons who own homes that were built prior to 1961.

There are people in my constituency who live on the same street, and some of them have houses built prior to 1961 or in 1961. In both cases the houses are virtually the same in terms of design and insulation, yet what this package does is to make fish of some people and fowl of others.

Second, there are a great number of people in subdivisions who, being good and intelligent citizens of Canada, insulated their homes prior to April of this year. Some of them have written to me complaining bitterly that they paid for their insulation with their money and now it is their taxes that are being used to help their neighbours insulate.

It is not a question of a program to assist the poor. This is not a program to assist the deprived in our society. It is a program to assist home owners, a program to assist only certain home owners who happen to own houses built prior to 1961. It is not a program that is designed to conserve fuel oil. Indeed, that is the major energy resource of which we are short. We have lots of electricity, presumably we have lots of natural gas because we are exporting more of it, and we have lots of coal. Indeed, we have a surplus on the energy account of over $1.008 billion in trade. What we are short of is petroleum.

• (2205)

The program does not differentiate between electrically heated homes, oil heated homes, gas heated homes, or wood heated homes for that matter. It is a program that gives certain people for undisclosed reasons the benefit and the right of going to the treasury and saying, "Give me 500 bucks, please;" a program that says to others that they can pay the taxes to cover its cost.

I have raised the issue with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, though I must admit I have not raised it with the minister who is struck with administering the program, that is, the minister in charge of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The matter has been brought home forcefully in the committee where the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), in talking about the fiscal problems of Canada, has said that the program is costing a fortune and we do not know what the end to it will be. In looking at Supplementary Estimates (B) I see that there is another $120 million for this program in addition to the original $47,300,000 in Estimates (A). I am told, in talking with people more familiar with how to read these estimates, that buried somewhere else is another $15 million or $20 million, and the amount goes up and up. Where are we going, and why should some people get this and some people not?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to continue this discussion about this interesting topic in the House of Commons. Let me say to my friend, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), that he is quite right, it is an expensive program and a program that has been changed since it was first instituted in September, 1977. It is very widely utilized, and in the last few weeks applications have been averaging about 10,000 per week, and the payments represent a charge of $3.5 million to $5 million per week on the treasury. There have been about 800,000 kits made available to Canadians and there have been 289,000 applications received. There have been over 200,000 cheques sent out representing about $62 million spent so far in this fiscal year.

It is a matter of debate as to whether the program should be extended and made more universal. I am sure my friend realizes that if this is to be done, bringing houses built up to two or three years ago into the eligibility category, it is going to cost the treasury a lot of money.

The hon. member is also quite right in saying that CMHC only administers the program for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It may well be, if it meets with the approval of the House and members generally, that there is something to be said for making the program more universal. That would also be very expensive. I will undertake to the hon.

member to get some statistics on just how expensive it would be.

One hon. member opposite, the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), made the suggestion that it might be a good thing for some members of Parliament to look into this whole question of insulation on an objective basis. As we all know, architectural and climatic conditions are quite different across this country. The House might benefit from input from members of Parliament from different regions in this respect, in order to determine whether this program might be usefully combined with another type of program under CMHC, and to see whether it would be useful if an energy package could be devised to generate more revenues and to spend some of those revenues to make the program more universal.

I want to thank the hon. member for keeping this matter before the House. It is a very pertinent issue at a time when energy issues are among those most paramount in the minds of the public. I look forward to continuing dialogue and input in the House on this subject by the hon. member and other colleagues.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE—MEASURES TO PROMOTE CANADIAN EXPORTS

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, in addressing a question to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) on October 24, I had in mind the fact that governments today are everywhere more active in promoting exports. This is hardly surprising in a world where reduced tariff and non-tariff barriers offer additional opportunities. Canada is more dependent than most nations upon trade for its prosperity, and being outside the great trading blocs will feel this competition all the more.

In the past, our search for additional markets has been global. However, the combined impact of geography and investment has ensured that almost three quarters of our trade—much of which is in fact inter-company transfers—is today with one country, the United States. This involves additional constraints on our export opportunities. On two occasions recently the Minister of State has deplored the limitations placed by parent companies on the exports of certain foreign-controlled subsidiaries in Canada. The minister has, however, said nothing yet of what he intends to do.

With further reference to the United States, the minister announced some months ago that Canada's search for new overseas markets has failed. He urges that we must now concentrate on the United States. I would in turn urge the minister not to give up so easily. Both patience and determination are essential to develop new markets. Canadian initiatives in Europe, Japan and the Third World need not imply any slackening of our efforts to sell in the United States. We can do several things at once—and do them all well—if we but have the determination to do so.

In addition to the constraints on Canadian exports resulting from the high degree of foreign investment, another arises from a variety of barriers to internal trade. To achieve an internationally competitive industry generally requires a domestic launching pad. Various provincial purchasing, labour and investment policies are a self-inflicted handicap in creating such a domestic base, as well as contributing to inflation. What measures does the government intend to take to reduce or eliminate such barriers to industrial rationalization for the enhancement, inter alia, of our export capacity? While on the subject of federal-provincial relations, what does the government intend to do to encourage the elimination of the wasteful duplication in export promotion between the two levels of government?

My comment on our self-imposed barriers to trade within Canada leads to an observation about the continuing absence of an industrial strategy, a strategy that must focus on sectors, including their export potential, and provide a greater degree of consultation and planning among business, labour, and the federal and provincial governments. Without such a strategy much of the work of FIRA and the Canada Development Corporation must necessarily continue in a sort of vacuum. And so must some of our export promotion activities.

I hope that in replying, the minister will not merely refer to the national economic conference which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret) is reported to be planning. We do not need another conference to recognize that yet further improvement in formal consultation and planning among the major players in our economy has become a pressing necessity.

One more point about the need to relate export promotion to an industrial strategy is that, as a result of recent GATT agreements, we shall in eight years reach virtual free trade with the United States. If we fail in the time ahead to increase Canadian control of our own industries, and their ability to compete abroad, I am not confident that we shall be able to retain our remaining economic independence in what will virtually be a free market between Canada and the United States.

• (2215)

In raising a few fundamental questions about export promotion, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to overlook the shorter term techniques. In a recent speech, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce urged the private sector to do more for themselves in seeking export markets. The Canadian Press reported that the minister subsequently added, and I quote, that "government intervention on their behalf has ended . . . including market surveys and trade negotiations".

Is this a statement of new government policy, or has the minister been misquoted? Apparently, in way of explanation, the Minister of State for International Trade said in this House on October 24, as reported at page 549 of Hansard:

> There is no intention on the part of this government to remove itself from assistance on trade promotion or trade negotiations where it is appropriate for the government to be involved.

Does this mean that certain past trade promotion practices are now considered by the government to be inappropriate public sector activities? If so, what specific public sector activities does the government hope that the private sector will now assume? There is no point in the government lecturing the business community on their alleged shortcomings when the government itself does little more than confuse the observer about its intentions.

Does the government, in fact, intend to reduce or eliminate market surveys, as has been reported, at a time when the Canadian Export Association has made clear its dissatisfaction with both the quality and distribution of market intelligence? If the government does not intend to continue to engage in trade negotiations and somehow to leave these to the private sector, does it mean all trade negotiations or only certain ones? If so, which ones? Any withdrawal would seem especially paradoxical when the government itself forecasts a record trade deficit.

Against this background, how does the government intend to provide Canadian exporters with services equivalent to those available to our competitors? Let me cite two areas of concern. In export financing, Canadian exporters face disadvantages in competing with Europe and the United States.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I regret I have to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Etobicoke North (Mr. McLaren) has raised questions of fundamental interest, and it is a pleasure for me to represent my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson), this evening in order to respond to him.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has in place a series of export support programs and marketing services which have an excellent success record and have wide support in the export community.

The trade commissioner service, which has been in existence for over 80 years, enjoys a reputation as one of the world's finest overseas trade promotion organizations. This organization is the main focal point for the preparation of market surveys, to which the hon. member referred, and the question of information on trade opportunities abroad. Their efforts are supported in Ottawa by a number of sectoral and geographical specialists who provide marketing expertise as well as advising direction on trade negotiations.

Among the direct marketing programs administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is our program for export market development or, as it is known, PEMD. This program has been increasingly utilized by the exporting community. For example, there has been a 60 per cent increase in appplications for PEMD assistance in the last year.

I would also point out the current government initiative known as Export Canada "79". This is a $1.6 million initiative, aimed at assisting small and medium size manufacturers and processors, many of whom are new in export business.

In the area of overseas trade missions and trade fairs, I would point out that spending for 1979-80 for the promotional project program will be over $7 million and increased for $5 million in 1978-79.

The importance of export promotion is further underscored by the government's initiative in creating the cabinet position of Minister of State for International Trade. For the first time in history there is a minister whose principle mandate is to promote international trade. This appointment has again been most welcomed by the business community and, more specifically, the export business community.

While several of the aforementioned programs have been in existence for several years, the government is currently undertaking a review, under the direction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, with a view to making these programs more accessible to Canadian firms, more streamlined, and more cost-effective.

This review will include the final report of the private sector task force, which is examining the export promotion apparatus. This task force is studying how government can most effectively and efficiently support the private sector in its effort to sell Canadian goods and services abroad.

It is certainly not the intention of this government to simply maintain the status quo but rather to expand these programs so as to capitalize more fully on the efforts of the Canadian exporters.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—ELECTION CAMPAIGN PLATFORM OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my questions were raised on October 30 and November 2 with regard to an attempt on my part and on the part of my colleagues to uncover the validity of the government's favourite response to every question that has been posed by the opposition regarding economic issues, a response that indicates that no action is now possible and that the election promises made by the "now" government cannot be kept due to the terrible state of the economy left by the previous government.

My question was intended at that time, to show what I believe to be the facts, that the current government knew full well the state of the economy, and in spite of that knowledge made promises to the people of Canada that could not be kept after the campaign. They knew full well at the time that these promises could not be kept without creating economic chaos.

What response was provided to me? The response was precisely the same response that we had received for the previous four weeks. We were told that no action was possible due to some hidden factors that were only discovered by this government after taking office. We asked on another occasion in the same vein to specify in which area these hidden factors were to be found. Were they to be found in inflation? Were they to be found in economic growth? Were they to be found in the current account deficit, in investment, or in savings? Where were these hidden factors to be found? We have not to this day received even a semi-adequate response to any of these questions of an economic nature.

Mr. Speaker, the responses we have been getting in this House with regard to economic issues are pure and utter rubbish. Contrary to what people were led to believe, this government has no concrete policies in the area of economics. This government has wasted its years in opposition, years that an opposition should be using for reflection and policy formulation. This government wasted its time with vacuous criticism and the creation of what it knew at the time to be unrealistic promises.

I am certain that this government had clear knowledge of reality during those months prior to the election campaign. The evidence is there. The facts are well documented from comments made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens). These can be found in Hansard, and in the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and other committees of an economic nature. The questions that were asked and responses given in the House and in the committees indicated quite clearly that the government of this day knew full well what the economic situation was that they were getting into prior to the election. But they were more concerned with destroying the government than with developing policy alternatives. The result is what we see now: six months of inaction, six months of ad hockery, with no sign of well thought out priorities.

This government made promises during the campaign which they had no intention of keeping, no intention whatsoever. Let me cite examples. First, the embassy move. This was a clear case of crass political opportunism, one that has and will continue to cost Canada dearly. Second, the mortgage and property tax credit bill is another example. This is a costly, unaffordable, inequitable, ineffective and unnecessary election goody which the Minister of Finance admits is a millstone around his financial neck. This is crass political gimmickry of the worst sort and people are beginning to see the light.

The government says it has no options with regard to monetary and fiscal policy. That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. There are options. The problem is, and it is becoming clearer each day, that this government does not understand the nature of the problems we face. It has not considered the alternatives and it has not produced any new thoughts in this area.

This is a time for new initiatives. Instead of new initiatives, we are getting a stall game. The government has no new ideas for restructuring the ailing Canadian economy. It never did, and I contend that it is defrauding the Canadian public. The stall game will not work much longer. People are getting wise. I have heard it said in my riding and in my travels throughout Ontario that people are beginning to realize that this government is on the ropes. It is bankrupt. It is bankrupt, not financially, but intellectually and morally. The members of the government know that I am right.

We already hear of rifts in the Tory ranks, rifts which indicate that they never were firm on any major new policy directions before the election and are now frantically trying to find a consensus. Members on the other side are in for a rude awakening. The public is starting to demand action and answers. From what we have been hearing over the past few weeks, this government is going to be hard put to deliver either.

• (2225)

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) on behalf of my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bosley). I will try to confine my response to the question the hon. member asked and not to the other references he made. The question related to financial surprises that this government encountered after taking office on May 22. I would like to recite four or five examples of such surprises that we encountered.

First, the Liberal regime had never publicly forecast federal revenues, expenditures and the deficit more than 18 months in advance. On July 20, 1979, however, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) released to the public four-year forecasts to fiscal 1983 that had been prepared during the previous administration. What we discovered was most astonishing.

These forecasts showed a steadily increasing budgetary deficit from $11.8 billion in fiscal 1980 to $14 billion in fiscal 1983, and a doubling of the federal net debt from $51.5 billion in fiscal 1979 to $104.7 billion in fiscal 1983. The forecasts were in sharp contrast to the Liberal claim last year that the federal deficit problem was a temporary phenomenon.

Second, in his last budget the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), had spoken of a "sustained expansion" of the Canadian economy. According to the former minister, the expansionary forces already at work suggested that he should not stimulate the economy further. The new government found the U.S. and Canadian economies sliding toward recession. The official forecast on which the former minister's fiscal policy was based was wrong and known to be wrong by that government. Less than three months after it had been made, the former minister was already making changes to it.

Third, and most important, when it looked at the assets and debt of Canada, the new government discovered that the accounts of Canada did not properly represent the financial position of this country. In the Accounts of Canada Adjustment Act, the government proposed to write off more than $3.9 billion of assets, the carrying value of which was questionable. While the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras) was quite correct in noting that such adjustments do not affect the cash requirement, such adjustments increase the net debt of Canada by the amount of the write-off, almost $4 billion.

Further distortions were found in the treatment of some Crown corporation borrowing. Such borrowing, which exceeded $1.15 billion in fiscal 1979, does not appear in the accounts of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

TRIBUTES TO MEMBERS OF CANADIAN FORCES WHO SERVED IN WARTIME

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday at 11 a.m., this nation will officially observe a day of remembrance for the 115,000 Canadian men and women who gave their lives in the defence of freedom in two world wars and the Korean conflict.

Their sacrifice is remembered, not only at the National Memorial in Ottawa, but all across this great land and in many other parts of the world. Our allies also keep the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month sacred to commemorate the war dead. It is the time that our country stops to pay its respects in cities, towns and villages to those of our countrymen and women who paid the supreme sacrifice.

Three times during this century, young Canadians from the Atlantic provinces, from Quebec and Ontario, and from western and Pacific Canada went by sea and air to distant lands to defend freedom—France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Hong Kong and Korea were their destinations. Many of these brave young Canadians died in places far from their homes, places such as Vimy Ridge, Passchendaele, Dieppe, the Hochwald, Ortona and Kapyong.

It is their heroism that we commemorate today. We remember them with pride, for they served with distinction. We remember also with sorrow, for they forfeited their lives in the service of our country.

To those of us who remain, the legacy is clear: we too must dedicate ourselves to the service of our country. We must ensure that it remains "glorious and free", as they would want to see it if they could.

On this Day of Remembrance, let us resolve to live in peace and harmony with one another. Let us ensure that the tragic price paid by more than 115,000 young Canadians has not been paid in vain.

All hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply honoured to rise to pay respect, on behalf of the official opposition, to the more than 100,000 Canadians who died in the defence of freedom. These were young men and women with their whole lives ahead of them. By their sacrifice we have been allowed to live in peace in a country untouched by the physical ravages of war. For hundreds of thousands of Canadians the memory of loved ones lost remains vivid and painful. Those who returned have memories of the buddies they left behind, memories of joyous comradeship and of grievous, sudden loss. Once each year, Canadians gather at cenotaphs in every community to remember those who paid the ultimate sacrifice.

• (1110)

As Canadians, and especially as members of the Parliament of Canada, we should also remember those who returned with handicaps that have made it difficult or impossible for them to enjoy all that life has to offer. There are patients in veterans' hospitals across this country who have been there since the end of the first world war, over 60 years ago. Let us not forget these veterans who also paid a heavy price.

We can also honour the memory of those who perished by maintaining our commitment to the preservation of peace today by supporting our Canadian Armed Forces at home and abroad, in NATO and in their useful role as peacekeepers. To many who have no concept of the horrors of war, our present peaceful existence seems "permanent". We must never let down our guard. For citizens of a free country, every day should be a remembrance day, and by giving support to those who now defend Canada today we show respect and gratitude to those who served and died to ensure our freedom.

The last major world war came to an end over 34 years ago, but no one can deny that we have lived in times of almost constant turmoil with war remaining an every day part of life for millions throughout the world.

Let us in all seriousness realize that if we, along with other member nations of the free world, do not have the determination, the courage and the will to meet the challenges of our times, then we will not, in fact, be keeping faith with those who died.

I would like to quote a poem by Pearl McGinnis entitled "Today" which I feel is very appropriate.

> I have no yesterdays,
> Time took them away,
> Tomorrow may not be,
> But I have today.

We have today to honour those 100,000 Canadians who proved their dedication to Canada and who gave their tomorrows to us. Let us think constantly about these words as we attend various services this weekend.

There is a saying that those who fail to bear their own arms will eventually bear someone else's. Today we are honouring those who not only bore arms in the name of Canada, but indeed distinguished themselves in doing so. They answered the call of duty, and we will remember them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is probably one of the most fitting and appropriate things that we as Canadians do when on November 11 of each year we pause to remember those who gave their lives on our behalf for this country and for peace and freedom throughout the world in the first great war, in the second great war, in Korea and in other engagements, particularly in peacekeeping operations. So it is equally fitting and appropriate that in this House of Commons on this last sitting day before November 11 we take this moment to remember all of them.

We pledge ourselves not only to remember with respect those who gave their lives, but to remember those who are still with us, and indeed do everything we can for them. We pledge ourselves to remember their families and their survivors. We also pledge ourselves to do everything we possibly can to build the kind of world in which it will not happen again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, memory is a faculty which too easily forgets. This is why special days have been designated to enable people to recall their past; among them Remembrance Day is set aside to remember that if we are living today in a free country which provides us so much solace, it is because at a given moment in our history some people lost their lives to guarantee ours.

Thousands of soldiers died on the battlefields of Europe. Thousands of others were wounded. All fought bravely and courageously. Passing years make us forget many things, but never the sacrifice of a life. They died so that others may live. Referring to that ultimate gift, Winston Churchill said: Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few.

It is therefore quite in order, if not to show respect for life itself and for the example given us by those men, that we show our gratitude. If we really want to preserve that freedom guaranteed by those brave soldiers, let us not abuse it but always show due respect.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

SUGGESTED MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact, as reported by the press, that the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy) was successfully able to demand from the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) a ticket for the state banquet tonight in honour of President Carter for services to be rendered, even though many members of the cabinet were not invited to that dinner, and in view of the fact the dinner has now had to be cancelled, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson):

That this House direct the Prime Minister to table the choice of consolation prizes he is now offering the hon. member for Beauce.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

THE LATE SGT. TOMMY PRICE, PRINCESS PATRICIA CANADIAN LIGHT INFANTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to ask the unanimous consent of this House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In keeping with the tributes this House has today paid to Canada's war dead, and in light of the fact that few Canadians are aware that one of Canada's most decorated soldiers in the Second World War and Korean war was an Ojibway Indian from the Brokenhead Reserve in Manitoba, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House honour the memory of all Canadians who have served their country in time of war by paying its respects to the late Sgt. Tommy Price of the Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry.

Mr. Speaker: No matter how worthy the subject, the hon. member will realize that I have consistently ruled this kind of motion out of order with respect to Standing Order 43.

YOUTH

REQUEST THAT AGE OF DRIVING BE RAISED TO EIGHTEEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity—urgent because of the alarming number of deaths and injuries in traffic accidents across Canada, particularly in the 16 to 18 age category, and pressing in the interests of energy conservation. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Higson):

That the Prime Minister and/or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources take the initiative at the first ministers'conference next week to urge the provinces to raise the requirement age of driving from 16 to 18 years of age.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have very grave reservations as to whether or not that subject is within the administrative competence of this House.

JURISDICTION OVER RESOURCES—TAXATION OF MUNICIPALITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has pledged to hand over control of offshore resources to the provinces, and the Minister of Justice stated in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that he saw no reason why municipalities could not now assess, for purposes of taxation, resources that lie under the ocean and adjacent to the municipality, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais):

That the government instruct all their Crown corporations of this change so that the municipalities concerned can include these resources in their assessments for 1980.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the statement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) made this morning to the Canadian Press concerning his attitude regarding sovereignty-association, and I quote:

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FORESTRY TERMINAL AT QUEBEC HARBOUR TO INCREASE EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Given the fact that the Cossette report on the employment situation in the port of Quebec city recommends, first, eliminating one third of the jobs of the 365 longshoremen working in the port, second, reducing the number of working hours guaranteed each year to these workers and, third, lowering the retirement benefits of these men; and also given the fact that these recommendations have been rejected unanimously by the longshoremen gathered last Monday night in general assembly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. De Bané):

That the House ask the Minister of Labour to ignore the recommendations of the Cossette report and urge the federal government to take all necessary steps to facilitate the establishment of a forestry terminal in the port of Quebec city which would give jobs to all the longshoremen now working in that port.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

TREASURY BOARD

AUDITING OF AGENCIES RECEIVING PUBLIC FUNDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43.

In light of the fact that the National Indian Arts and Crafts Corporation receives considerable government funding, and since, after numerous complaints by native groups, the government ordered audit services to investigate NIACC; bearing in mind, also, that proper administration of these funds is important in the promotion of the native arts and crafts industry and that the government, though it received the completed audit in August, has consistently refused to present the audit to concerned groups despite all the rhetoric about freedom of information, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That this House insist on the tabling of the audit in question concerning the use of public funds and that the government live up to its promises of freedom of information and, in future, immediately present to the House reports prepared by audit services of agencies receiving public funding.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion at this time, under the terms of Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO RESPECT UNIVERSALITY OF OLD AGE PENSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on an urgent and pressing matter.

In view of the fact that there are six senior citizens' homes in the riding of Saint-Michel, that I have received numerous phone calls and letters from people concerned over rumours that universal old age pensions may be abolished and that these senior citizens are very vulnerable, anxious, troubled and almost panic-stricken, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger):

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STEPS TO ENSURE NO DANGER TO CANADIANS IN IRAN—OIL SUPPLIES FROM IRAN

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Bearing in mind the serious damage done to our political and economic relations with Arab countries by the government's policy on the Canadian embassy in Israel and by the irresponsible and foolish statements made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration last summer, and more recently by the policy adviser to the Prime Minister, can the minister tell us whether she has personally been in touch with our ambassador in Iran in order to ascertain that there is no danger to Canadians who are presently in Iran, and that there is no danger of an interruption of oil supplies from Iran to Canada in the months to come?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I trust that the hon. member will have the same concern about the grave situation which exists in Iran at the present time as do we on this side of the House.

I would like to assure the hon. member that my department has been in touch with our ambassador in Tehran on a continuing basis in order to be assured of the safety of the situation in Tehran and to ascertain how the situation affects Canadian nationals in Iran.

I can assure the hon. member that at the present time there is no real cause for concern. That information has been conveyed to us both by our ambassador in Iran and also by the chargé d'affaires of the Iranian embassy here in Ottawa.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. lady for her answer to the first part of my question. I noticed that she ignored the second part. I would, therefore, like to turn to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

He gives us cold comfort when he states that there is no danger of interruption of supply because there is at sea one tanker from Iran. He knows, or he should know, that the problem of security of supply does not concern just our relations with Iran, but also with all the other oil suppliers. Last year, Exxon—the owners of Imperial Oil—on the occasion of the Iranian crisis diverted supply destined for Canada coming from Venezuela.

Has the minister been in touch with multinational oil companies, and particularly with Imperial Oil, either directly and personally or through his personal advisers, or the director-general of the Conservative party, who all come from Imperial Oil—

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Crosbie: You are a jerk.

Mr. Lalonde: —as to whether we can be assured by these companies that there will be no diversion of oil supplies coming to Canada from any country, to other destinations?

• (1130)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member right away that this government will not regard very well and treat very seriously any attempt, on any account, by any company to act to the detriment of this country. I can assure him of that in no uncertain terms, and assure him that we will be watching the matter very carefully with respect to any diversion that is detrimental to our country.

I want to tell the hon. member that according to my information—and I want to bring him up to date with respect to Iran—loading is proceeding in the normal fashion. There are reports with respect to a 5 per cent cutback by Iran, but this should not have a serious effect with regard to international supply.

I want to advise the hon. member, with respect to Canadian supplies, that Gulf Canada—which is the principal importer from Iran in Canada—unloaded a tanker of 2.3 million barrels on November 3 in Canada. Gulf loaded a tanker, the Vanpet, on October 15, and this is due to unload in Canada on November 20. Gulf loaded another tanker, the Vanoil, on November 6, and this is due to unload on December 14—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I wonder if the minister could keep his reply short.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, this is very important.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: The minister has not been in touch with the multinationals to obtain from them an assurance that they will not divert from Canada to other countries to Canada the supply of oil. I urge him to get going and to get those assurances from the multinationals. My question has to do with the situation with regard to the supply in Canada over the winter. Last summer we urged the minister to get going, and he told us there was no problem. Lask week he told us the situation was fragile—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must be fair to both sides. If I cannot permit the minister to give long answers, I cannot permit long questions.

Mr. Lalonde: In view of the statement by the minister's own department yesterday that the situation was now extremely fragile and tight, when will the minister set up the Energy Supplies Allocation Board? He said he would, but we are still waiting for a firm decision on when it will be set up. Is it true that he is delaying appointing that board because he wants to amend the act in order to remove the representative of Petro-Canada who is supposed to be on that board, according to the legislation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if I may complete my answer to the hon. member's question, let me say that I wanted to point out to him that the next loading from Iran for Canada is due on January 1 and is due to unload on February 5 of next year. This should put the situation in perspective.

The second matter I want to put into perspective for the hon. member is the fact that when I assumed this responsibility, I must say I found the circumstances very unsatisfactory and I immediately moved with respect to other initiatives. If the hon. member had been doing his job in the former government, he would have acted much sooner in connection with the reduction of our exports to the United States from 55,000 barrels a day to provide Canadian sources with additional domestic supplies.

So far as independants are concerned, I have also initiated an investigation on the part of the National Energy Board and they have been in touch with Interprovincial Pipe Line. Interprovincial Pipe Line have now made arrangements to free some space on the line. I have taken initiatives that the previous government refused to take—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to keep reminding the House—I am not laying the blame at the feet of the two participants here, but the House can recognize the fact that it has taken ten minutes to complete the first round of questions, consisting of three questions and three answers.

If we are to continue that on a daily basis, it will be impossible for there to be much participation, and if members later in the question period can ask questions and give answers of a shorter nature, I do not see why it cannot be done in a co-operative way at the outset of the question period.

ENERGY

OIL IMPORTS FROM MEXICO AND VENEZUELA

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief. My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday, in response to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, the minister indicated that negotiations with Venezuela and Mexico were proceeding satisfactorily, yet it is becoming clear that due to the government's inaction over the summer, and due to the successes that Japan and other countries have had in their negotiations with Mexico and Venezuela, the chances of our receiving supplies this year are very slim indeed.

Will the minister confirm that despite the awareness of potential energy shortages in Canada in the winter, the government only started to negotiate with Mexico in late August, and with Venezuela only in September? Will he also confirm that it is this neglect that is the cause of the probability of our getting any extra supplies from these countries to be very slim indeed?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I reject out of hand any suggestion that we did not act directly and with some effect with the two countries to which the hon. member referred. In the case of Mexico, pursuant to the memorandum of understanding which was arrived at in May, we are proceeding with the negotiations. A delegation will be proceeding to Mexico again in December to continue negotiations and to determine availability arrived at under the memorandum of understanding. The fact is that it was not contemplated, under the original memorandum, that we would have commencement either by the end of 1979 or during 1980, even under the arrangement entered into by the previous government.

With regard to Venezuela, the Leader of the Opposition has indicated there is some agreement. That is incorrect; it is not true. The fact is that we have carried on negotiations and will continue to carry them out in order to arrive at a settlement with them as well.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I take it from the lack of response that the dates that I have suggested in my question are correct.

I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with regard to another issue. Yesterday, his department gave an excellent briefing on the energy situation to all members of Parliament, and I congratulate the minister on that; but in that report, a report on taxation and revenue-sharing was produced which said that required price increases over the next period of time will mean massive increases in revenue to the multinational oil companies, which will be sufficient not only for research and development in energy but beyond that. This morning, the Prime Minister, in his press conference indicated that he felt a significant—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member come to his question, please.

Mr. Evans: My question is as follows: In view of both these facts, is the minister prepared to make a commitment to the House that the multinational oil companies will not be allowed to receive any greater revenues than they have been under existing arrangements?

[Mr. Evans.]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that we are very much concerned with respect to the appropriate taxation regime, and we want to make sure that it is a fair and equitable one to allow the bringing in of new supplies and to do it in a way which would be fair and equitable to the Canadian people as well as to the industry.

I can assure him that these factors are under active consideration by me and by the Minister of Finance, and we will move ahead on a policy of energy self-sufficiency whether or not the official opposition wants to come along.

INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVERT LAY-OFFS—MEETING WITH WELDWOOD REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, this morning I would like to address my question to the Prime Minister. Massive lay-offs are being reported and predicted in this morning's press in both the lumber and the automotive industries in Canada.

In view of additional and significant lay-offs in the B.C. forest industry related directly to our high interest rate policy, when does the Prime Minister intend to meet with the union and management of Weldwood as he promised this week, and what specific action will he be bringing forward to stop the current nosedive in both construction in Canada and lumber sales, particularly in British Columbia?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I have received some communication from representatives of various unions, particularly in the lumber industry in British Columbia. I intend to have a meeting, either myself when I am in British Columbia or to have ministers of this government meet with the representatives of industry and the unions involved.

The problems are not confined to Canadian rates of interest, they are much more complex than that, as the hon. member will, in all fairness, acknowledge. But we think it would be useful for there to be an opportunity for representatives of the government to meet directly with representatives of the industry and the unions involved to see what we can do about a situation which is very serious for Canada.

● (1140)

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister would agree that the high interest rate policy and the relationship between that and lumber sales is because both the United States and Canada are pursuing the fallacy and the folly of a high interest rate policy.

I have a further lay-off question for the Prime Minister. General Motors indicated that there will be more than 11,000 lay-offs in its plants in Ontario and Quebec, which will cause extensive economic hardship. When does the Prime Minister intend to call in the executive of General Motors of Canada and obtain some kind of assurance that this country will no longer accept an unfair share of North American production, investment, research and development, so that such lay-offs can be avoided?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will know that the problems in the automotive industry exist on both sides of the border. That is of no comfort to Canadians whose jobs are threatened, but it indicates the broad nature of the problem we are facing. I have noted his representation, that it might be useful for me or the ministers of this government to meet with representatives of the automotive industry. We would be prepared to consider that. If we think it would be useful to do that, we would be prepared to. Also, naturally, we would extend that to see whether it would be useful for us to meet with representatives of the unions and the industries involved.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question. Since the government's high interest rate policy is a major reason for extensive lay-offs taking place throughout Canada, particularly in the industries I have mentioned and in small businesses as well, will the Prime Minister make a statement on motions indicating what specific actions his government intends to take to develop an effective industrial strategy for Canada, so that we can increase, rather than decrease, employment for Canadians?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will understand that I and most people do not accept the premise of his question. Regarding the development of a national industrial strategy, the hon. member will know that after real decades of neglect the government has indicated its intention, through a conference to be called by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development, to bring together representatives of all aspects of the Canadian economy.

An hon. Member: Another study. Study, study, study!

Mr. Clark: We hope, probably in early January, to start a process of planning and establishing a national industrial strategy which will serve the longer-term interests of the country. We do not intend to pretend that that can be done by government alone, nor do we intend to talk about industrial strategy, as members opposite have, and do nothing about it.

We are taking a concrete step for which preliminary plans are already under discussion with the provinces, the private sector and organized labour, that we hope will move the country toward an industrial strategy which will find support among all elements and all partners in the Canadian economy.

AGRICULTURE

REASON CANADA IMPORTS POULTRY FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, given that my question is related to the agricultural sector, and that several ministers are responsible for that sector, I will therefore ask my question of the Prime Minister.

This morning over 100 poultry producers came here to Parliament Hill for the visit of the American President which has been postponed. These people are here anyway, to protest the fact that the Canadian government has signed an agreement to import a large quantity of poultry from now to December 31, namely 8,750,000 pounds, plus 48 million pounds in 1980 and 52 million pounds in 1981. Would the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether such importation of poultry is due to a shortage, or to the inability of Canadian producers to meet the needs of the Canadian market?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I said recently and as the Minister of Agriculture said, we have managed a reduction in the importation of poultry. Today the Minister of State for International Trade met with the producers to whom the hon. member referred and the minister told me that it was a very useful consultation as far as the government is concerned and, I think, for the producers as well. It is in such spirit of co-operation that we intend to approach such an important question for Canada's future.

RELATIONS AMONG MAPLE LODGE COMPANY, GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO AND THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that an Ontario company called Maple Lodge is said to be largely responsible for the difficulties and fears expressed by poultry producers and also, to a certain extent, for the current sharp drop in prices, could the right hon. Prime Minister indicate, first, whether he is aware of the fact that this company has a close relationship with the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario and, second, what is the exact nature of the relationship which may link the company and the federal Progressive Conservative Party?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any relationship between the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario, the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, the Social Credit Party of Canada or any other party with this company. If the hon. member has concrete information to give me, I will gladly look into it.

STATISTICS CANADA

TREATMENT OF EX-EMPLOYEE, DR. CELOVSKY

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. As stated in a motion under Standing Order 43 by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier yesterday, there appeared to be very serious allegations contained in a letter dated November 6 from Boris Celovsky to the Chief Statistician which implied some doubt about the competence and integrity of Statistics Canada. Of course, this is extremely important in terms of economic decisions.

I must say that I have not had the opportunity to fully corroborate this, and that I am not offering it in any flamboyant sense, but today I am informed that Mr. Celovsky was grilled yesterday by security people in Statistics Canada and is now in the Queensway-Carleton Hospital under intensive care. Of course, this episode is alarming to all of us.

I would appreciate it if the President of the Treasury Board could enlighten us as to the treatment of Mr. Celovsky and the situation in that regard. Of course, there are other serious economic implications to explore.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the comment made by the hon. member concerning the grilling of Mr. Celovsky, I understand, yesterday. Certainly, I am most sorry if anything of that nature took place, and particularly if the gentleman is in hospital.

When I heard of this incident yesterday, I indicated that I would like personally to meet with Mr. Celovsky to hear first-hand his concerns with respect to the operation of Statistics Canada. I have so advised Mr. Peter Kirkham, the Chief Statistician. I was hoping, if not today, that certainly at an early opportunity I would be able to have that meeting and judge from that personal meeting what action should be taken, if any, as a result of any discussions I had with the gentleman.

PREPARATION OF BUDGET—EFFECT OF SUSPECT ECONOMIC INFORMATION

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I hope that there will be a thorough look at the treatment of Mr. Celovsky. I should like to move to the economic implications and pose my question to the Minister of Finance.

Most certainly, for everybody's sake—Statistics Canada and everyone else—it seems to me that there must be an immediate, factual and public assessment of this situation. For instance, how can the Minister of Finance prepare a budget in confidence if the economic information base is now suspect? Indeed, that is the result of these allegations. What confidence can there be in the economic decisions which he takes, or the economic decisions of the government, unless this matter is cleared up?

[Mr. Clark.]

I would, therefore, ask the Minister of Finance, since those many important economic decisions are based upon the reports of Statistics Canada on the economy, what immediate and public steps will the Minister of Finance insist upon in order to correct this situation and clear away this serious doubt?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, quite obviously, what was reported in Mr. Celovsky's letter yesterday were matters which occurred during the past two or three years in connection with Statistics Canada. These are matters which unfortunately were not cleared up by the last administration, and they permitted millions of dollars to be wasted.

I am as concerned as the minister of finance of the previous government should have been concerned, and as is the President of the Treasury Board, about this suggestion that there are wrong procedures being followed. The President of the Treasury Board has been looking into this matter and is looking into it now. If anything can be done about the situation, hon. members can depend on the fact that he is the man to do it.

STEPS TO RESTORE CREDIBILITY OF STATISTICS CANADA

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. We often hear expressions of concern, as we just have, from the Minister of Finance. Undoubtedly, the President of the Treasury Board is very concerned about the cloud that has been cast upon the credibility of Statistics Canada. What immediate steps will the President of the Treasury Board take to remove that cloud from the credibility of Statistics Canada and re-establish it as being a credible instrument for economic planning and other matters upon which so many of us depend?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that I was the first minister in 11 years to actually visit the premises of Statistics Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I also have a person on my exempt staff who has been given the assignment of keeping proper liaison between the ministerial office which I now hold, and Statistics Canada. This, incidentally, has been welcomed by Statistics Canada.

In direct answer to the hon. member's question, I think it would be most unfortunate if members of the opposition were to distort what was said yesterday. The comments yesterday were concerning personnel questions and certain programs within Statistics Canada which the gentleman felt were not properly conceived and had caused unnecessary expense.

Mr. Andras: He talked about the cooking and fudging of the economic reports.

Mr. Stevens: There is no over-all suggestion that Statistics Canada is not still the credible institution that it has been for many decades.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that the President of the Treasury Board has actually gone to visit the premises, but he should know that the material can be delivered directly to his office.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: My question to the President of the Treasury Board is, would it not be appropriate to appoint a special committee of this House to examine the circumstances of Statistics Canada and remove this question of doubt once and for all?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take that suggestion—I think it is a representation—of the hon. member into consideration. I felt that the first task of our new government was to get a good in-House view of what is, in fact, the situation with respect to Statistics Canada. I have been meeting with various officials and I intend to have more meetings. If it would be helpful to have a committee review the situation, then certainly I will consider it.

ENERGY

FUTURE RANGE OF OIL PRICES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. I believe he said in his press conference this morning that the federal government and the Alberta government had an agreement on, to use his words, the range of price increases in oil.

Could the Prime Minister confirm for the House that the increase will be at least $4 per barrel this coming year, which in our view will mean serious unemployment and a recessionary economy? If so, can the Prime Minister tell us—in his calm, honest and slightly Mackenzie King way—why it is necessary to bring this hardship down upon the Canadian people; and would he tell us what specific measures he proposes to introduce to cushion this increase to the average person?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are some insults that are just too excessive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): You will not be around as long as he was, Joe.

Mr. Lefebvre: You could do worse, Joe.

Mr. Clark: I would like to assure the House and the hon. member that there is no agreement in terms of any final resolution even on a range, although my conversations with various provinces—including, importantly, the producing province of Alberta—have given me a view as to the range within which we can find some agreement. I am not in a position to indicate exactly what that agreement will be.

I am in a position to say that it will be the stand of this government that there should be an increase, because if there is no increase we will be leaving Canada in a position of reliance in the future upon offshore resources that are very unstable.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I apologize if I insulted the Prime Minister, but at least it is better than being called, as the previous prime minister was, a reader of Machiavelli.

Mr. Lalonde: At least he read.

Mr. Waddell: The Conservative treasurer of Ontario, Mr. Frank Miller, said yesterday that the federal government and the Alberta government could not be trusted with increased oil revenues until, to use his words, "an agreement on redistribution of oil money is worked out"; and he doubted the ability of the governments to get the increase in oil prices back into the consumers' pockets.

Would the Prime Minister tell me whether or not he disagrees with the treasurer of Ontario and, if so, what are the specific measures which he will propose? The Americans have proposed, as I understand it, an excess tax on the multinational oil companies.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen Mr. Miller's statement so I cannot comment specifically on what he is alleged to have said. We are concerned about two aspects of any energy price increase and intend to act on them, although I cannot tell the House at this stage exactly how we will do that because that has not been decided.

One aspect which concerns us very much would be to avoid the creation of excessive profits for the oil companies. We have a proposal that we will be discussing with the premiers, and which we will probably bring into place, that will ensure that significant portions of that money help to enlarge the proportion of Canadian investment in Canadian energy development, while leaving enough operating capital for existing oil companies to carry on the expansion of Canadian supply.

Secondly, having regard to Canadians who will be particularly—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question begs a lengthy answer and I can understand the Prime Minister's attempt to give one, but I think I have to cut it off in the interest of other members.

CN MARINE

PROPOSED MOVE FROM MONCTON TO HALIFAX

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport who is responsible for marine transport in this country. It concerns information that CN Marine is planning a move from Moncton to Halifax. I am also informed by my colleague, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, that CN Marine made a commitment in April, 1978, to move parts of its administration, at least—if not all—to St. John's, Newfoundland.

I know that the minister is as concerned about this matter as I am, and would he tell the House if he has any information with regard to this corporate insensitivity by CN Marine with regard to the people and the economy of Atlantic Canada?

Hon. J. Robert Howie (Minister of State, Transport): Mr. Speaker, the headquarters of CN Marine are in Moncton, as they have been for a number of years, and there is no foreseeable move. CN Marine has a number of sectional offices to allow for more effective management of its responsibilities. The only recently proposed change will result in the establishment of a legal insurance section in Halifax, which requires the transfer of seven employees from Moncton. The legal department is in Halifax and the claims department is in Moncton. When the seven people in the claims department were hired, it was made known to them that they would go to the legal department in Halifax for a more functional operation.

● (1200)

The operational base for the Newfoundland coastal services and the dockyard is St. John's, and has been for some time and no proposed changes in the structure or numbers of employees have been modified. I think this probably answers the hon. member's question.

Mr. McCauley: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister if it is a fact that the president of CNR, Mr. Bandeen, made a commitment in a standing committee meeting of the House in April, 1978, that part of the administration, if not all, would move to St. John's, Newfoundland; and is it not a fact that further intended moves from Moncton to Halifax were stymied by the minister's intervention?

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I had representations from the hon. member and I heard rumours of the total move of CN Marine from Moncton to Halifax. I investigated and was assured that CN Marine was not planning on moving. As I say, they have sectional offices and there will from time to time be transfers of employees. I am not aware of the Bandeen statement because I was not at that particular committee meeting.

URBAN AFFAIRS

MEASURES TO PROVIDE JOBS IN CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the serious slowdown in construction in metropolitan Toronto, with many hundreds of people likely to lose their jobs and their homes, is the government prepared now to implement the plan prepared by the previous government, in consultation with metro Toronto and the province of Ontario, to free-up federal land and give financial assistance in order to provide an Ontario congress centre which would provide 2,500 construction jobs immediately, with the potential 10,000 jobs in the hospitality industry, as well as making a significant contribution to reducing the trade and tourism deficit?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that question. It is a matter that is under very active review by the government. I would hope we would be making an announcement quite soon.

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER AGREES WITH COSSETTE REPORT ON QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, my question is for either the Minister of Transport or his colleague the Minister of State for Transport. In view of the fact that the Cossette report recommends the elimination of one-third of the 365 jobs for the longshoremen in Quebec harbour, could the minister indicate whether he agrees with this recommendation and what action the government will take to protect the jobs of these workers?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report, but it is a matter that will be discussed with my colleague, the Minister of Labour. I think that is the spirit of the motion presented by the hon. member to the House earlier today under Standing Order 43.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT FAVOURS ESTABLISHMENT OF FORESTRY TERMINAL AT QUEBEC HARBOUR

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Could the minister indicate to the House whether the government will encourage the establishment of a forestry terminal in Quebec harbour to make sure that all longshoremen in this port can keep their jobs?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we will consider any move or any proposal that would ensure the continuance of jobs. That will be something I will discuss with my colleague, the Minister of Labour.

THE ENVIRONMENT

DEVELOPMENT OF LEAD-ZINC MINE ON LITTLE CORNWALLIS ISLAND

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question refers to a recent announcement by the government about allowing development of a lead-zinc mine by Cominco on Little Cornwallis Island in Canada's High Arctic. My question is directed to the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment.

In May, 1976, Cominco withdrew its bid to develop this mine because of social and environmental conditions imposed by the government. Since that time there have been no new environmental studies and no further consultation with northern people. Has the government, therefore, adopted a more lenient approach to this mine or has Cominco, in fact, agreed to meet all the conditions which they previously found so stringent and oppressive.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not fully familiar, I am sorry to say to the hon. member, with the matter he raised. I will immediately find out what the status is and report back to the hon. member and to the House.

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—INVOLVEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who I gather had a press conference this morning. I understand the Prime Minister said this morning in his press conference, with respect to the English language community in Quebec:

> I think the Anglophone community is very worried in Quebec. I hope they will take a calmer approach. My approach is easily subject to caricature. I could conceivably be hurt politically if I shook my fist and acted like a tough guy. I hope that's not the Liberal motive in pressing me to take a stronger position. I have to demonstrate that the national government is not always going to pick fights with Quebec.

He went on to point out—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Blaker: My first question is: Do we now understand the reason the Prime Minister is not getting involved in this entire operation or referendum in Quebec? Is it because he is afraid he is going to be hurt politically? Is this the leader of my country? That is his test of leadership. Can he explain this?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check the transcript. I believe that what I said this morning, and certainly what I intended to say this morning, is that I can run the risk—which I am prepared to run—of suffering politically outside Quebec if I fail to shake my fist and make empty threats to the government of Quebec.

I do not want to presume upon the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, but this is an important question. I think it highly important that we do not allow differences of approach to preserving and strengthening the federal system that exists on both sides of the House—that we not allow those legitimate differences to cause us to engage in the kind of accusation and ferocity of debate here that can harm both the image and the force of federalism in the province of Quebec.

There is an obvious difference of position and a difference of view, between members who supported the former government and members who support this government, as to the most effective way in which we can advance the cause of federalism in the province of Quebec.

I do not question the motives of hon. members opposite and I hope they will not question the motives of my government. I would hope that our conduct on this question in the future will be conduct that without question will advance respect for federalism in Quebec and across the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I respect the Prime Minister's intention, but he does not seem to understand precisely what I am putting to him. Yesterday, Claude Ryan, the leader of the federalist forces in the province of Quebec, said that the Péquiste—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. member respects the fact that we cannot get into debate. Does he have a supplementary question?

Mr. Blaker: Is the Prime Minister aware that yesterday the leader of the Liberal forces in the province of Quebec argued that the Péquiste position about federal confrontation is false? Is the Prime Minister aware that every time he uses that argument, he supports the Péquiste argument?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I think it will be helpful if no one here suggests that members of this House are doing things to help the Péquiste argument.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Secondly, to answer the question, yes, I am aware of the statement made by Mr. Ryan and, indeed, I agree with the statement made by Mr. Ryan. I think that is one of the major reasons that this government has adopted, quite deliberately, a policy of avoiding actions which can be seen as confrontations with the province of Quebec, while taking actions which can be seen as demonstrating the renewal of the federal system with a new federal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE SALE OF DE HAVILLAND AND CANADAIR TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday, I was rather astounded to hear the minister say, as quoted at page 1087 of Hansard:

In truth, if the former government was able to buy them—

Referring to Canadair and de Havilland:

—without parliamentary review—

Although earlier he said there was parliamentary debate.

—why is he suggesting that the sale should be subject to parliamentary review?

Is the minister seriously suggesting that the possible sale of de Havilland and Canadair, the fundamental elements of the government's privatization philosophy, will not be subject to parliamentary review?

● (1210)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, may I answer the hon. member this way: I simly point out him that he and other members of Parliament will have ample opportunity to review these sales and other possible sales. At the present time, of course, there is nothing of a definitive nature with respect to either de Havilland or Canadair.

But I bring to the attention of the hon. member that under Supplementary Estimates (B), at page 44, vote 6b, there is provision made to discuss Canadair and provision made under vote L41b to discuss de Havilland. These will come before the committee as the committee sees fit. I welcome any questioning. If the hon. member wants to call me for any discussion with respect to the privatization of either of those corporations, I would be most happy to oblige. The hon. member knows that his party has opposition days on which they may raise this subject. As I say, there will be ample opportunity, if either sale is contemplated, to have it reviewed by the House.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is again to the minister. Can I take it from his reply that what he had to say was erroneous and that before any sale of these two corporations is undertaken by this government, we will have a chance to review the whole situation on the floor of the House of Commons?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I think the hon. member has misread what I said yesterday. I did not indicate that there would not be a parliamentary review: I simply asked why members of the NDP were so anxious, when at the time of the acquisition of these corporations they stood mute on the subject as far as parliamentary review was concerned.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Fine.

[Mr. Clark.]

THE ENVIRONMENT

RIVER POLLUTION BY EURASIAN MILFOIL—CO-OPERATION WITH PROVINCES TO ERADICATE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of the Environment. We have a major environmental problem in Ontario. Since this problem also occurs in the province of British Columbia—the minister's province—I ask if he would give serious consideration to the problem of Eurasian milfoil. Is it possible to find funds so that an endeavour can be made to eradicate milfoil from the Trent system, and also from the province of British Columbia? Could we work co-operatively with the provinces in an effort to eradicate Eurasian milfoil?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. It is a matter that he, as a member of Parliament, has been pursuing. It is a matter of very great concern to my department and I accept the hon. member's representations. I can assure the House that active consideration is taking place now to see what co-operative programming can be entered into with the provinces along the lines the hon. member has suggested.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH BREACH OF LAW WOULD BE ACCEPTABLE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. On March 30 of this year he stated, in Kitchener: "It would be essential for us to have a system in place whereby any breach of the law that might be necessary could be authorized by a responsible official of cabinet."

Clearly, the Prime Minister at that time accepted that in certain circumstances a breach of the law by the RCMP would be sanctioned. Will the Prime Minister tell this House, today, whether this is still his party's position: and, if so, under what circumstances would such breaches of the law by the RCMP be acceptable?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Solicitor General said yesterday—I believe it was yesterday, or the day before—and as I attempted to say in Kitchener-Waterloo, our determination is to establish a system where the rule of law prevails in the case of every action by a law enforcement agent of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on May 4 of this year in Regina, the Prime Minister promised the Canadian people that he would, if elected, introduce a watchdog committee of members of Parliament from all parties to protect the public against RCMP abuses of civil rights. He promised that this committee would be introduced even if the McDonald commission had not yet completed its final report. Does the Prime Minister intend to keep this promise to the people of Canada and, if so, when will this important committee be established?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we are giving very serious consideration to the means by which a committee of that kind might be established. My colleague, the President of the Privy Council, is preparing a document proposing a variety of changes in committee organization in the House as part of a parliamentary reform package. One of the problems we have now, as the hon. member knows, is that this government has referred almost too much work to committees and we intend to refer even more with the establishment of certain select committees.

We do have certain difficulty in having to get agreement from the House to pass references quickly without debate, which can become too long once committees are established. We intend to reform the committee system of the House of Commons and we intend, in regard to the particular matter which the hon. member has raised, to give the most serious consideration to establishing a committee of that kind or some equivalent arrangement that will serve the same purposes.

FINANCE

MEASURES TO ASSIST UNEMPLOYED IN ATLANTIC AND GASPÉ REGIONS

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Given the fact that, according to a study made by the Economic Council of Canada entitled "Living Together", when the rate of unemployment for Canada goes up by 2 per cent, that for Ontario increases by barely 1 per cent while that for the Atlantic region or the Gaspé region rises by 4 per cent, can the Minister of Finance assure us that when he brings down the budget he will take tax measures to ensure that when expected difficult times come, the areas of the country whose economy is the weakest will not suffer more than the others from the recession, especially inasmuch as the Economic Council feels that tax and budget measures, to borrow their phrase, are like an elephant compared with the department of Regional Economic Development, which they call a flea?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly assure the hon. gentleman that I have areas such as he mentions very much under consideration, as does the government generally. We intend to make and continue to make a thrust to overcome so-called regional disparity. I will certainly keep his representation in mind. As far as that is concerned, any group of people who may be suffering in any part of the country will be kept very much in our mind.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LALONDE—LACK OF ANSWERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Outremont on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, during the oral question period this morning, you drew the attention of all hon. members, on both the opposition side and the government side, to the time taken up by the first round of questions and answers.

I can assure you, on behalf of the opposition, that we take your comments in good part and that we do realize that hon. members themselves are the losers when the first round lasts too long.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Outremont.

Mr. Lalonde: I also want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we are eager to co-operate with you and the whole House so as to make sure that during question period we will cover as many subjects as possible and give opportunities to all members of the House to ask the questions they want to raise about their constituents.

In addition, I would like to get assurance that we will obtain answers to the questions being asked. For example, regarding energy there were three simple questions asked this morning that could have been answered by a yes or no. The first concerned whether there had been contacts with the ambassador to ensure supply from Iran. The second one was whether there had been contact with the multinational oil companies to ensure there would be no diversion in supply destined for Canada. The third question was when the emergency board which was promised to be set up will be set up.

These were simple questions which could have been answered in ten seconds or less. What we had this morning was an example of what we have had since the beginning of the session.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Since the House met on October 9, the question of energy has been a prominent area of concern to all Canadians, not only to people in this House but all governments in this country. What we have been getting from this government has been a consistent refusal to reply, consistent tactics of obfuscation and waffling on very simple issues. All kinds of rumours have been circulating. There have been all kinds of contacts with the provinces about what the proposals are in the area of energy. However, this House and we, the representatives of the Canadian people, have not been allowed to get from this government what its proposals are and what its scenario is.

● (1220)

As long as we are going to be treated in this House the way this government has been treating the opposition on a matter as important as energy, we will have difficulty in abiding by a situation where we can have all the questions asked but we do not get answers. We have to assume what the answer is. We have to speculate in our questions about what the government intends to do. I hope the government will heed your admonition, Mr. Speaker, and give us answers in the future.

Mr. Speaker: I hope that by my admonition in the hope of greater participation in the question period I have not opened up the opportunity to debate something which otherwise would not be debatable. In fairness, I should give one share of equal time to respond to that non-question of privilege by the energy minister or the House leader, as the case may be.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not rising to respond because it is not within my jurisdiction, but the operation of the House is within my jurisdiction. I want to bring to Your Honour's attention a practice that seems to have developed in the House which is unfortunate. It amounts to a practice of extending the question period under the guise of a question of privilege.

Mr. LeBlanc: You should know.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I want to bring to your attention that a question of privilege, as I understand it, involves a matter that might very well have curtailed the right of a member to speak openly in the House of Commons. A question of privilege is not a grievance. Unfortunately, we do not have a process by way of grievance.

What has happened, unfortunately, is that under the guise of questions of privilege the question period as such has in fact been extended. I do not want to curtail or even suggest that the right of appropriate free speech ought to be curtailed in any way in the House of Commons. However, and I suggest this with respect, we do not want to allow too long questions on the one hand and too long answers on the other. I accept that.

I have had discussions with Your Honour openly on the floor of the House of Commons about this. We have to be very careful with regard to the rules respecting the privileges of members. These rules ought not to be diluted in any way. There should not be an attempt to extend the question period in the way I have suggested by raising matters which are really grievances. This impedes the operation of the House of Commons.

One of the rights of members is to assume that question period will in fact be a question period, that members on either side will not be subject to grievance procedures by way of questions of privilege when there can be no grievance under our rules. There is a place for debate in the House of Commons. That legitimate debate will not be curtailed by effectively extending the question period.

I raise this with great respect because, frankly, as leader of the government, and I guess leader of the House of Commons, if I can say it again, I am a little concerned about the practice that seems to have developed.

I want to say on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), the government and members of my party that if any of us stray into overlong answers in areas where we ought not in your judgment to stray, we accept that the Chair ought to intervene in those cases. Equally, it should be incumbent upon my friends to accept that, and I am sure they accept that with respect to questions.

Mr. Lalonde: Give us answers.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I hope that will be observed. I just wanted to give Your Honour an indication of what I believe to be the temper of the House of Commons. I sat in the opposition not too long ago.

An hon. Member: You will be back soon.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have experienced first hand the frustrations that can develop as a result of what opposition members traditionally allege are lack of answers. I say with respect that is not a question of privilege, nor is it a point of order. I believe we have strayed somewhat far in that. I have been watching it for the last few days and felt I should rise to make that respectful submission to you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think enough has been said on both sides. This is essentially a non-procedural point.

MR. ANDRAS—STATISTICS CANADA—SUGGESTION THAT ANSWER OF PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD MISLED HOUSE

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from part of the answer given by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) with regard to our concern about Statistics Canada and the allegations thereto. I am not arguing on the single point where the President of the Treasury Board seemed to imply it was wrong that I had never gone to Statistics Canada, because under our regime Statistics Canada reported to the minister of trade and commerce and not to Treasury Board.

The government has changed that, which is their right, but it was an irrelevant comment.

Second, it is not based on the failure to recognize that I was trying to be constructive and not be flamboyant in what is a very delicate situation. I got back a lot of homilies from them. Third, I want to point out that this letter is dated November 6, 1979, which is the time of the information service and it is clearly their responsibility, not that of the previous government.

My point is more narrow. During the reply by the President of the Treasury Board, he implied that the letter from Mr. Celovsky with regard to the competence and integrity of Statistics Canada really was based on more narrow criticisms of personnel or administrative policy. That is misleading the House. I will grant that it may be an inadvertent action by the President of the Treasury Board. We will see in a minute.

It is misleading the House, inadvertently at best, or implying that he really has not read or understood the implications and the allegations by a quite respected gentleman, Mr. Celovsky, about Statistics Canada. If he read the letter, he clearly should understand that there are many more serious implications contained in it that simply personnel or administrative policy.

I want to put one paragraph on the record in support of my question of privilege that there was in fact, inadvertently or otherwise, a misleading of the House. The letter, as reported, reads:

> A third example. For years the labour division has been putting together estimates of labour income derived from the bureau's various surveys and other sources. At the same time, in recent years, national accounts officials have struggled with the problem of ever larger residual errors. They naturally focused on one of the national accounts' largest components, labour income, and asked for revisions which are called in the jargon "macro-economic adjustments" but more colloquially known as "cooking" or "fudging".

● (1230)

That is not a personnel matter or a purely administrative matter. I can see no way in which that interpretation could be placed on this letter. It goes on to say—

> So that the published labour income data have been constanly yo-yoed up and down and up again the inevitable result has been that the users of these statistics, including ministers of finance, are totally confused.

Mr. Speaker, that is not merely an administrative or a personnel matter as alleged by the President of the Treasury Board when he seemed to dismiss the seriousness of the situation in his answer to me. I will accept from the hon. gentleman that, in fact, he has not read the letter, or that he has failed to understand it, but he cannot have it both ways. This is a very serious situation and one which really should be cleaned up on a non-partisan basis out of respect for the information base upon which so many economic decisions are taken in this country, not the least of which relate to the budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) will, I hope, be bringing forward in the not too distant future.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of the Treasury Board): I am, of course, more than willing to answer the point made by the hon. member but I think it would be helpful, Mr. Speaker, if you would indicate whether there is really a question of privilege involved here.

Mr. Speaker: This is an appropriate time to do so. I indicated just recently that I have perhaps been generous in encouraging members to continue the question period, much as the President of Privy Council (Mr. Baker) has just mentioned, by allowing members to get up to discuss what was essentially a disagreement. I think I ought to take a firmer line on non-questions of privilege of this kind and when I find a member simply voicing disagreement with an answer given by a minister, I think I ought to be quite strict. However, we have customarily accepted, at least in a preliminary way, any question of privilege which is based on a complaint that there has been serious misleading of the House, whether inadvertent or otherwise.

The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras) said today it is his view that the minister misled the House, perhaps inadvertently, and customarily whenever that phrase has been used. We have allowed the minister involved to indicate whether or not there was misleading. I have to judge whether it is simply a matter of disagreement or whether a misleading has taken place, and I do not want to be too strict on that. If the minister tells me that in his view there has been no misleading of the House, I am prepared to accept his statement and set the matter aside. But when this point is raised a minister would often feel deprived if I did not give him a chance to get up and at least indicate whether he has the same opinion or otherwise so as to set the record straight.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am only too anxious to assure the hon. member that there has been no misleading of the House in that connection. He has read the letter one way. I have re-read it since he indicated he would raise the matter as a question of privilege. I still feel it is a question of personnel disagreement touching on various administrative matters within Statistics Canada.

Frankly, we are concerned here with a group of highly qualified people dealing in a very technical field, and I think it only natural there should be disagreement from time to time as to what is the proper statistical approach in mustering the various data they need and preparing it for publication. As I indicated, we have an overview of this subject; I have a person who is in direct liaison with Statistics Canada. I hope to meet with the gentleman who wrote this letter—I am sorry he is in hospital. I intend to get to the bottom of it, but in the meantime I can only say I believe this amounts to a disagreement involving various personnel within Statistics Canada and the administration of that organization.

Mr. Speaker: The intervention of the minister places the matter within the area of a disagreement and not that of a question of privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rise on a point of order to designate Thursday, November 15, as an allotted day in accordance with discussions which have been held among the parties.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the President of the Privy Council for asking for that designation. Perhaps the House might like to know that the day will be ours.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

EXPLORATORY OIL DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, as you will recall, there was a question of privilege raised with regard to the tabling of documents on the Nerlerk incident in the Beaufort Sea. I indicated there were documents available and I would table them today in both official languages.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ASSURANCE OF APPLICATION OF PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, earlier under Standing Order 43 a motion in the name of the hon. member from Saint-Michel (Mrs. Killens) was carried by the House. The wording of the motion queried whether or not we would continue the application of the principle of universality with respect to the old age security program. I want to give full assurance to the hon. member and to all members of the House that the application of the principle of universality with respect to old age security is, indeed, secure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The practice of having responses to statements by ministers is discretionary under the rules. The minister is making a statement in response to an order of the House. It is not a declaration of policy initiated by him which in my opinion would bring into play further statements from hon. members and then, in turn, a question period. He has been ordered by the House to make such a statement today. He has made it, and I do not think we ought to get into counter statements and questions, as provided for when another kind of statement is made by ministers.

Miss Bégin: Ten o'clock!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 53, 88, 103, 141, 162, 206, 232, 354, 366, 373 and 381.

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

SMALL CONSUMER CONTRACTS

Question No. 162—Mr. Herbert:

1. Is the government aware of the legislation recently passed in the State of New York requiring small consumer contracts to be written in plain English and, if so, is a similar law being considered for Canada?

2. Is the government considering introducing a similar law which would apply to all federal legislation and regulations and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs):

1. This legislation was brought to the government's attention when it was first adopted in New York and we have followed its development carefully. The standard form contracts that are often used in consumer agreements can be very difficult to understand, and plainness in these contracts is important in order that consumers know their rights.

While many sellers and businesses in New York had already undertaken a simplification of the language in their contracts, the law itself is not clearly understood and revisions to it are being considered in view of certain problems that it is causing. In Canada, as well, certain financial institutions and others have been making an effort to simplify their contracts to disclose the essential elements clearly to the consumer. In addition, in Canada the courts have disallowed the enforcement of certain contractual terms on the grounds that the consumer was not likely to have read or understood them in the circumstances.

In Canada, matters of contract law are in the realm of "property and civil rights" and are generally within the scope of provincial jurisdiction. Hence, unless a contract deals with a subject specifically within a federal head of constitutional jurisdiction, it would be up to the province to regulate the form and content of such contracts. Almost all consumer contracts for the purchase of goods and services are within provincial jurisdiction. To pursue this problem on a national front, the federal and provincial ministers responsible for consumer affairs created a federal-provincial task force on consumer legislative programs which is looking into this question among its other high priority issues.

2. Most legislation which has been on the books for some time has been subject to interpretation by practice and custom and by the courts. As a result, changes to this legislation to make it easier to read or more simple to understand would inevitably also lead to significant changes in meaning, interpretation and ambiguity. One would therefore have to move extremely cautiously in taking on the mammoth and expensive work of simplifying existing legislation. The resources already devoted to the very specialized task of legislative drafting are already heavily committed but there is in the miscellaneous statute law amendment program an ongoing process of legislative clarification.

With respect to legislation and regulations which are currently being proposed by the government, every effort is made to keep such legislation plain and comprehensible but the primary objective is to avoid ambiguity and to be certain that any legislative provision is open to only one logical interpretation.

Specifically, with respect to regulations, the House of Commons and the Senate have a standing joint committee on regulations and other statutory instruments which reviews all regulations before publication to ensure, among other things, that they are clear.

ENVIRONMENT—HUMANE TRAPPING—TESTING

Question No. 366—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was the Canadian Wildlife Service responsible for testing traps for fur-bearing animals sent in by inventors for approximately three years?

2. Was the testing stopped by the Department of the Environment and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reason (c) how many traps were waiting to be tested at the time testing stopped?

3. Is the Department leaving the responsibility for testing entirely to the Federal-Provincial Committee for Humane Trapping and, if so, for what reason?

4. Is the Minister aware of the urgency of the need for the invention of humane traps and, if so, would the Minister make public the measures being taken to speed up such inventions?

5. What financial assistance, if any, is being given to inventors attempting to solve this problem and specifically, has any contract been issued to a research center, university etc. for the purpose of inventing a suitable trap or initiating research into other trapping methods such as the use of drugs?

6. What was the total amount of funds contributed in the past five years by the Department to speed the search into alternative trapping systems?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment):

1. No.

2. N/A.

3. Yes. That is the responsibility of the committee.

4. Yes. The Canadian Wildlife Service and the provinces gave impetus to the formation of the committee which is taking measures to speed up inventions.

5. The committee provides advice to inventors. It has assisted some inventors financially. It refers promising designs to the engineering department, McMaster University, for analysis and development. It arranged for the placement of an advertisement in the Research and Development Bulletin of DSS for space-age proposals for trap testing and trap ideas, but no new suitable proposals were received.

6. The department has contributed $65,000 directly to the committee. $80,838 has been provided in contracts to set standards against which traps can be tested by the committee. An additional $50,000 is to be allocated in 1979-81 on research for humane traps.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs):

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Question No. 381—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs hold conversations with his Ontario counterpart, the Honourable Frank Drea, on the problem of odometers on used cars being turned back by certain dealers before resale and, if so (a) has it been agreed that a consumer fraud problem does exist (b) has it been estimated that this alleged practice is costing Canadian consumers between $300 and $500 million per year (c) is the government taking any steps in co-operating with other provinces to strongly deal with this matter?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs):

The problem created by certain dealers turning back odometers of used cars was the subject of correspondence between the Honourable Frank Drea and myself in August of this year. We were seeking to ensure that Mr. Drea's proposed amendments to regulations under the Ontario Motor Vehicle Dealers Act were in general agreement with the appropriate section that deals with odometers in the Weights and Measures Act. Furthermore, the subject of fraudulent roll back of odometers was raised at the recent St. John's Consumer Affairs Ministers' meeting in September.

There most certainly is considerable fraud of this nature and the attempts to reduce the problem were well illustrated by many recent successful prosecutions. It is extremely difficult to estimate the dollar value of this type of fraud but figures have been used in the area of hundreds of millions of dollars. The government is taking steps to deal strongly with this problem through enforcement on a national basis of existing federal legislation and, where required, there is co-operation with the provinces.

Unfortunately, from our experiences, we know that identifying and taking action on odometer fraud is difficult and time-consuming. The long-term answer is a tamperproof odometer, and work on such an instrument has been done by some of the automotive companies, and is being investigated by Transport Canada. Until such time as such a solution is achieved, we will continue to use the existing legislation to tackle this type of fraud.

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the parliamentary secretary to indicate to this House at the earliest opportunity, namely on Monday, if it is true that up to now he has answered less than 2 per cent of the questions on the order paper?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT NO. 1—1979-80

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 8, consideration in committee of Bill C-23, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1980—Mr. Stevens—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Thursday, November 8, 1979, schedule A of the bill was under consideration, as clauses 2 to 6 inclusive were allowed to stand.

The committee might allow me to raise the question of relevancy. Yesterday when the committee sat, taking into account the late hour and the fact that there was only half an hour left, the Chair allowed quite a lot of flexibility in the consideration of schedule A. I allowed one or two numbers, with reference to the Department of Transport, wharves and breakwaters, to get into the question of fisheries.

However, I see again today the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and some hon. members who are concerned about fisheries, and I hesitate to let the committee proceed in the same way it did last night in using schedule A to go as deeply as they did into the field of fisheries. I wonder if there could not be some consensus to stand schedule A and to go to schedule D, which would allow flexibility regarding all of the subjects involved.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, we have no objection as to how it is done, but I suggest that another way would be to revert to clause 2, which covers the whole subject of appropriations. We have no objection, as long as we do not restrict hon. members from questioning ministers on any subject. Whether we stand schedules A, B, and C and go to schedule D or revert back to clause 2, which is a very general clause, I think it would be better to have wide latitude.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the intervention which has just been made, but it strikes me that Your Honour's suggestion is the better one. If we revert to clause 2, that also raises the whole question of twelve-twelfths. What we want to talk about are items in the departments. As a matter of fact, when we moved to schedule A, I thought the general understanding was that we would discuss all of the schedules. Your Honour is quite correct in saying that we have to be relevant, but if we stand schedules A, B and C and move to schedule D, it seems to me that the door will be wide open.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated yesterday, we prefer to talk only about relevant subjects with regard to schedules A, B and C, but if hon. members wish to stand those three and go directly to schedule D, we have no serious objection. We would just like to get on with the bill.

The Chairman: Hon. members should consider the fact that when we are considering clauses other than clause 1, we are operating under very strict rules. These rules are meant to prevent us from getting ourselves into a difficult situation and from ending up with amendments which relate to different clauses or different schedules at the same time. There seems to be a disposition, as I suggested, to stand schedules A, B and C and to proceed to schedule D. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The House will now proceed to the consideration of schedule D. The hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake had the floor last night.

On schedule D—

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Chairman, last evening I was speaking of the horrors which would be wrought upon the Manitoba fishing industry by two nasty little fish, those being the gizzard shad and the rainbow smelt, should the Garrison diversion be allowed to go ahead as envisioned by its North Dakota planners. Reflecting upon my comments last evening I am struck by an uncanny resemblance between this environmental pollution and a recent political pollution which has also crept northward from the United States. On the one hand, we have an environmental pollution which, through an accident of human engineering, threatens to move northward, wreaking considerable havoc on the economy of Manitoba. This environmental pollution would take the form of vastly increased amounts of chemicals in the water, harming community water supplies, farming industries and food processing industries, among others. It would also come in the form of those two previously mentioned voracious garbage fish.

The parallel political pollution promises equally horrible results for Canada. This pollution is the new wonder child of the government opposite, the philosophy of neo-conservatism. This political pollutant had its birth in the murky waters of the United States, as did Garrison's garbage fish. And like those fish, neo-conservatism has moved northward, devouring much of what is good in our country. Indeed, I can expand the parallel. The neo-conservative—

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member because I am very much interested in hearing about the problems surrounding the Garrison diversion and the effect it will have on the very important Manitoba fisheries, but I suggest that the hon. member is breaching the rule of relevancy when he goes into a tirade about neo-conservatism.

The Chairman: Well, actually I cannot be a policeman and be on my feet on every remark. However, and this does not really touch on the point raised by the minister, I am concerned because the hon. member was talking about the environment more than anything else. I was looking through the schedules to see whether the Department of the Environment is involved, and I can find no such reference.

Although the hon. member began on schedule A last night, I hope that his remarks will relate in some way to schedule D or to one of the items in schedule D.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Chairman, I will leave this subject for the time being since it is touching nerves on the opposite side.

Mr. McGrath: Just get on to the fisheries.

Mr. Sargeant: I will change the direction of my comments right now, and speak about a couple of matters of concern to inland fishermen, who may very well be falling victim to this nasty neo-conservatism. The first of these was discussed at some length last evening by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador with regard to offshore fishing. I would like to address the same problem as it applies to the Manitoba scene. In particular, I am referring to the 35 per cent subsidy on fishing boats. As the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador said last night, this has now been put in a holding pattern, and for some months none of the fishermen in Canada have been getting this subsidy.

In Manitoba at the present time this poses a rather serious problem. There are some 90 fishermen who have made representations to the department to get this subsidy. The total amount they are applying for this year is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $140,000 to $150,000. So far this year only $20,000 has been spent under this program in Manitoba. Last year $280,000 was spent, and in the previous year $180,000 was spent. Manitoba is getting the short end of the stick this year, as I see it. Furthermore, the problem is exacerbated in Manitoba because the Manitoba Credit Corporation will not grant loans to fishermen unless they have a 35 per cent equity. In previous years this has been no problem because of the subsidy.

● (1250)

Mr. Breau: Because of the good, Liberal program.

Mr. Sargeant: Yes, it was, but unfortunately it has gone down the drain. In Manitoba this not only affects fishermen but boat works in the province. In my riding of Selkirk-Interlake, two particular companies, Gimli and Lake Winnipeg Boatworks, are suffering considerably from it. They are both small businesses which rely on getting the boat business from local fishermen. When a subsidy such as this is suspended, these boat works feel the pinch. Right now these two companies are facing a bleak winter. In fact, it is very likely that they will have to lay off some of their employees and shut down completely for the winter.

Two other boat works in Manitoba, Lakeside Boatworks and Lake Winnipegosis Boatworks, both of which are in the neighbouring riding of Dauphin, have suffered more than the Gimli company because both have had to shut down their operations. The four Manitoba boat companies estimate that they have lost some $500,000 in business this year, which is a sizeable sum for small companies. It is interesting that 35 per cent of $500,000 come very close to the amount of the grants that have not been approved this year in Manitoba.

I should like to direct a question to the minister on this subject and ask him what, if anything, has been done to reinstate this program. If nothing has been done, can he foresee this program being reinstated in the very near future? May I ask whether it is normal procedure for him to answer now, or should I carry on and have my question answered later?

The Chairman: It is the hon. member's choice. If the hon. member takes his full time, he can use it to make his comments now, or, if he wants to obtain answers to his questions right away, the time which the minister takes up is counted in the hon. member's 20 minutes. So it is up to the hon. member.

Mr. Sargeant: I have another matter to raise and it will not take me too long to pose the question. First I will give a little background on it, following which I will put my second question, and perhaps the minister will answer them both afterwards.

The second matter regards the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. In recent weeks, the Manitoba resource minister, Brian Ransom, has stated he may possibly allow commercial fishermen to opt out of the corporation. As the minister is well aware and, as I am sure, most members concerned are, FFMC was set up originally in 1968-69 in order to provide an orderly marketing of fish in the Northwest Territories, the prairie provinces and parts of northwest Ontario. It is somewhat ironic that another disciple of neo-conservatism, Sterling Lyon, has been the prime force in establishing this corporation. The need for this corporation became evident in the mid-1960s when only a few American firms had the monopoly in buying and processing. This resulted in poor prices for fishermen.

The fear right now experienced by members of this party and by most fishermen in Manitoba is that without FFMC fishermen might gain some very short-term benefits, but in the long run the large U.S. firms will undoubtedly take over and again dominate the market and dictate prices. I understand that the minister's parliamentary secretary has been assigned the job of looking into FFMC and deciding its future.

I should like to ask whether the report has come back and what is the minister going to recommend. Will he recommend the dismantling of FFMC, or will he allow FFMC to stay in place but private interests to compete against the marketing corporation? My fear and the fear of many fishermen in Manitoba is that the cards would likely be stacked against the marketing corporation. Fishermen in Manitoba have generally expressed the desire to see the marketing corporation stay as it is. When private companies dominated the situation until the late 1960s, fishermen were often quoted a price at the beginning of the season, but come the end of the season the price would change and the fishermen would get the short end of the stick. They like the situation right now which works the opposite way. They are quoted a price by the marketing corporation at the beginning of the season, and at the end of the season the corporation has a higher price than anticipated, which is to the benefit of Manitoba fishermen.

To sum up, my two questions relate to boat subsidies for inland fishermen and the future status of the marketing corporation.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should apologize to the hon. member for interrupting him. I did not realize it was his maiden speech. I would be even prepared to listen to him on neo-conservatism.

The hon. member had two concerns with which I can deal now, although it was my intention to wait until all hon. members had made an initial submission, following which I would reply. The hon. member has raised two specific questions: one dealing with the vessel subsidy program, and one dealing with FFMC.

With respect to the former, it is our intention to restore the vessel subsidy program for the balance of this year and to bring in a modified form of the program for next year. But I should tell the hon. member, as we indicated to the provincial ministers of the Atlantic provinces in Quebec, that it is also our intention to phase out of that program. This is not to suggest there is no need for it, but merely to suggest that we do not see it as our role that vessel subsidies should be administered by my colleagues, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of DREE. We think that primarily it should be a provincial program supported by some program other than one administered by this department. There will be times, however, when it will be necessary to use various incentives to encourage the opening of new fisheries. That may be one of the means we would adopt to encourage people into a new fishery.

With respect to FFMC, my parliamentary secretary will be responding at greater length. There is a review under way and the parliamentary secretary has the responsibility for co-ordinating it within the department. We have met with most of the provinces at the officials level. There is one thing emerging, and that is that there is no consensus among the participating provinces on FFMC, which makes our decision more difficult. We are looking at all the options, but the evidence is not in yet in terms of the study. When it is, we will be making a decision with regard to the future of FFMC.

I should also remind the hon. member that it is my understanding that FFMC will be one of the topics before the standing committee next week when the estimates are once again before the committee. Perhaps at the time we will have an opportunity to go into the matter in greater detail in terms of what we found out so far as our studies are concerned. But I want to say to the hon. member that the study is under way, that until it has been concluded and there has been consultation at the political level, I cannot give the hon. member further information. I am afraid that is as far as I can go at the present time.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock, but before we adjourn may I ask the minister whether he will be present in the House this afternoon?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member should know that I am always in the House on Fridays.

The Chairman: It being one o'clock, the committee will now adjourn until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at 1 p.m., schedule D of Bill C-23, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1980, was under consideration and the hon. member for Gaspé had the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Today, I have no intention of giving a detailed account of the situation of Quebec fisheries. I merely wish to advise the House that the fishing industry in the Gaspé area has known considerable success since I have been its representative in the House of Commons.

The income of fishermen has gone up in no small measure in recent years in the province of Quebec and northern New Brunswick and that, Mr. Chairman, thanks to the policies implemented by the former minister of fisheries, the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent. However, Quebec fishermen, the owners of fishing businesses and processing plant employees are quite concerned about the recent steps taken by the minister of this Progressive Conservative government, and more particularly by the budget cuts that have already been made in or are being planned for the 1980-81 budget concerning small vessel ports. In the last ten years, the Liberal government has built wharves and harbours to meet the needs of the Gaspé fishing industry. But there is still much to be done because everything cannot be done at once.

The minister has many files in his Ottawa office that were sent him or handed over to him by the former minister which prove that there is still a lot of work to be done in Gaspé. I trust the funds will be available, Mr. Chairman, to build the buttress for the wharf at Sainte-Anne-des-Monts, to go ahead with phase II of the works at the Tourelle fishing wharf, the breakwater and the launching ramp at Cloridorme, the stone-bedding for the small wharf at Cap-à-l'Ours, phase II of the Anse-à-Beaufils harbour, to improve the dredging and harbour facilities at Sainte-Thérèse, the wharf at Grande-Rivière, and to do major repair work on the wharf of Newport as well as its launching ramp. In addition, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans had promised to assist in the development of coastal and tourist fishing harbours in that area under the Canada-Quebec tourist development agreement. As I said earlier, the files are in the minister's office, and I trust that part of the 1980-81 estimates will go to that.

● (1410)

The Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board say the former government increased the Canadian deficit too much. In the past, the government took steps to reduce spending, to lower deficits, but it never took them, Mr. Chairman, on the backs of Quebec or eastern Canada fishermen. That was a privileged class for the Liberal government. During the last election the Progressive Conservative candidate in the riding of Gaspé and all Progressive Conservative candidates in eastern Canada promised they would give fishermen access to fishing harbours for major repairs and would have launching ramps built here and there. Where is that work going to take place with the budget cuts announced by this government?

Mr. Chairman, I have been asking myself that question ever since this government took office and particularly with respect to the position taken by former Progressive Conservative members sitting on this side of the House who are now on the government side and the new members coming from Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland—where are they to defend the interests of fishermen? We do not hear from them anymore, Mr. Chairman. They are mute, as gentle as lambs. I am talking in particular of hon. members from Prince Edward Island, the hon. member for Malpeque, the hon. member for Cardigan, the hon. member for Hillsborough and the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications, the hon.

member for Egmont. We have not seen them yet rise in this House to defend the interests of fishermen, more particularly inshore fishermen, and criticize the department's policy with respect to large trawlers having access to the gulf.

I want to say to Quebec fishermen that if there are budget cuts, they apply not only to the province of Quebec but to all other maritime provinces. We rise on their behalf and I trust other members on the government side can do the same and speak loudly so fishermen can get justice from this new government. I now want to deal with the presence of large trawlers in the gulf. First of all, Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that the action taken by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans since he became a member of this government have done precious little to restore balance in the struggle for national unity. Since 1970, the previous government had made efforts to replenish the fish stocks in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and generally in eastern Canada, and we proved it when the 200-mile fishing zone was established. Moreover, when in 1976 the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent realized that the situation had become tragic and that all that was left was only small 15- to 18-inch cod in the gulf, he denied large trawlers access to the gulf.

Three years later, Mr. Chairman, the fishermen can now catch 25-, 30- and even 40-inch cod, something which had not happened for at least 15 years. To that end the federal government had to lower quotas in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and even reduce the fishing season for a few years. We have implemented 2 and 3 cents a pound programs to be able to subsidize fishermen, to help fish processors and processing plants, and even to subsidize large trawlers and help equip them to operate in the 200-mile fishing zone.

These programs cost $117 million to the Canadian taxpayers in four years. But they have been useful. We have increased the cod stocks in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, but the new minister has now opened up the Gulf and let in the big financial sharks, the large fish processing companies of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia.

The statement made by the hon. minister on August 27 took everyone by surprise. No matter that the hon. minister said in the House that there was consultation, I suggest that this statement took everyone by surprise. It may not have surprised either National Products or Nickerson or even the hon. member for South Shore, but it did surprise the rest of Canadians. The minister has stated in the House that the provinces were consulted through the groundfish advisory committee at a meeting held in St. John's on July 11. The minister, his officials and certain Progressive Conservative members of southern Nova Scotia seem to be interpreting rather strangely the minutes of the meeting of the advisory committee from which the hon. minister quoted in this committee last night, and they have also accused an official of the New Brunswick government of not having informed his minister that there were consultations during this meeting. The New Brunswick government official will probably have the opportunity to read Hansard for last night and today and to reply to the minister.

I was rather disappointed last night when the minister accused an official of not having done his job. I then thought that if he was now accusing a New Brunswick government official of not having done his job, he might do the same tomorrow for the Quebec government or that of Prince Edward Island. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I contacted this morning the Quebec government in relation to the interpretation of the minutes of the meeting held on July 11 in St. John's.

I would like to give a summary of the facts for those who are not aware of the situation as I see that many students are in the gallery today. On August 27, the minister stated that there was a 10,000 metric ton surplus available to fishermen in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and he announced at the same time that 6,000 tons should be allocated to trawlers of 100 feet or more. This last part of the press release is what surprised everyone.

The minister stuck up for himself, as shown on page 2 of the minutes of the meeting, and I quote:

> The members are, on the whole, in favour of increasing the present TAC; however, the possibility of higher TAC and quotas for vessels over and under 100 feet is giving rise to contradictory views.

Mr. Chairman, if that is called consultations with Quebec, I wonder what is meant by consultation. At 12.45 today, answering the question of an hon. member for the NDP on the price of salt fish, the minister said there should be consultations with the provinces and even consensus before making certain changes. I agree with him. That is the policy that should be implemented. But it was not when time came to allow 100-foot trawlers or more into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Now, here is the message I received from the representative of the Quebec government, Mr. Bourque, who was at the committee meeting. I quote:

> We discussed the 4T increase from 36,000 to 46,000 tons.
> A representative of the Quebec fishing industry, Mr. Richard Lapointe, suggested it. A consensus was reached with regard to increasing the quotas from 36,000 to 46,000 tons but not on their allotment, and the report states that. Later on, there was no consultation concerning their allotment. This is why the government of Quebec made representations on September 5, 1979 to the hon. James McGrath in a telegram which reads as follows:
> FROM: Rodrigue Tremblay, Minister of Industry and Commerce
> TO: James McGrath, Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.
> DATE: September 5, 1979.
> We are pleased about the increase in cod quotas in 4T and 4Vn to 10,000 metric tons which was announced in your release of August 27, 1979.
>
> On the other hand, we are opposed to the allocation of part of those 10,000 metric tons to vessels of 100 feet or more that are based outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence.
> This float of vessels of 100 feet or more based outside the gulf has benefited from a very generous increase in cod quotas in 4VSW and has made good catches in 2J3KL since the beginning of 1979.

We have accepted that vessels of 100 feet or more based outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence have quotas in 4RS, 3PN and 4V in 1979. However, this should be the last year.

With due respect we remind you that we want that the fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence be reserved exclusively for vessels based in the gulf.

Rodrigue Tremblay

Mr. Chairman, this morning the representative of the province of Quebec also told me that the owners of big trawlers, National Products and Nickerson, regularly come back before the committee. At every meeting they appear before the committee and ask to be allowed to enter the Gulf of St. Lawrence but they are turned down. There was never any comprehensive study or debate in the advisory committee, Mr. Chairman, about the access of trawlers to the gulf.

The hon. minister knows that Quebec is not the only province involved in this battle. Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick are in it too, as my colleague from Gloucester has underlined last night. In the end Quebec has always accepted a compromise in the debates between federal and provincial governments. But opening Gulf of St. Lawrence area 4T to trawlers cannot be an acceptable compromise for the province of Quebec because there have been no consultations. Compromise implies consultation. Without consultation, no compromise. Therefore the Quebec government, with which I am not always in agreement, is strongly opposed to the minister's action. Moreover, one of the representatives on that committee, the general manager of the Pêcheurs unis du Québec in a statement that cannot be read today for lack of time—he will be appearing soon before the committee anyway—himself indicates there has been no debate on the committee other than producers, boat owners—which means large companies—suggesting they would like to fish in the gulf. He states he heard of it only upon issuance of the minister's release, whereby big trawlers were allowed access to the gulf. Mr. Chairman, this is not a world where there are only government and big business. Labour unions also exist. I have here a telegram sent by Mr. Odilon Gionest, president of the Newport plant local of the national union, in which it is stated, and I quote:

We wish to inform you of our objection to the entry into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, starting from November 1, 1979, of trawlers 100 feet long and over, to catch 6,000 metric tons of cod.

We feel the fish so caught will automatically reduce next spring the fishing potential of trawlers under 100 feet.

He goes on requesting that representations be made. I have hundreds of other telegrams, Mr. Chairman, that I could read into the record.

I have only a few minutes left to ask the minister to reconsider his policy, to act like a good Canadian and remember the humble fisherman, as he used to do indeed. In a speech on northern cod delivered on August 30, 1979, in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, he said the following:

Our policy, my policy, on the matter is quite simple and specific. The coastal fishermen have priority of access to that resource. For them, for workers in processing plants, for their families, for communities where they live, the right and opportunity to have access to that resource is essential, because they have special ties with those stocks and the government of Canada recognizes this.

Mr. Chairman, if the Government of Canada recognizes the fishermen's priority of access to the resources in the gulf, I would like him to say so today and withdraw those policies that he put forward and by doing so, it would be in accordance with the meeting held in October.

[English]

That will conform to the report of the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Sub-Committee which, on page 6, recommends:

Trawlers over 100 feet be phased out of the Gulf groundfish fisheries between 1980-1986 to coincide with phase-out of the French treaty.

[Translation]

And it goes on to say that entry should be denied to certain vessels carrying equipment that can destroy the ocean floor. Mr. Chairman, in light of the position taken by the minister I would not want to leave unsaid the disappointment felt by Quebec fishermen, producers and all those concerned by the fishing industry. I would ask him to read all the telexes sent on July 5, 11, 17, 23 and 24 by Quebec United Fishermen asking him for this 10,000-ton stock increase; never was there any question of allowing trawlers over 100 feet to take this fish which is reserved for inshore fishermen. I put my trust in the hon. minister's good will to put an end to this dispute.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, as the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is here this afternoon, I should like to quickly ask him four very important questions concerning fishermen on the west coast. Since I may not use all my time in asking these questions, I want to ask about another cultural matter and perhaps we can deal with these together.

I was very interested in some of the debate last night, especially the contributions by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, the former minister of fisheries. The present minister was on the fisheries committee at the time the Davis salmon licences A and B licensing scheme was introduced. I believe, although I cannot recall for certain, that he opposed that. I know I did, because I felt we should be licensing people rather than boats.

The industry is in chaos at the moment on the west coast—especially the salmon industry—because of overcapitalization and certain other problems.

My first question to the minister is to inquire whether he has any plans to discourage this overcapitalization or to change in any other way the licensing procedures which, I take it, he opposed when they were introduced. If he has, I would certainly like to hear about them.

• (1430)

As far as overcapitalization is concerned, it means a bigger and bigger investment must go into gear and ships of various kinds to chase fewer fish. Therefore, it lowers productivity if productivity is figured on the basis of dollars invested compared to fishery return, even though the price has gone up over the last few years.

Does the minister plan to change the type of licences being issued? Is he concerned about overcapitalization within the industry? I will put all my questions, and if the minister can answer them and there is any time left, I would like to go on to a different subject, but still within the bounds of the sections we are on.

The Fraser gill netters, many of whom I represent and have represented over the years, are losing their identity. They cannot depend on the catch, although I must admit that last year was better than the previous year. In order to have a decent income they are forced to leave their natural identifiable area as gill netters in the Fraser. They must go out further in order to justify their investment. I believe they had 16 days last year, which is hardly enough.

I believe the minister has requested some suggestions from the industry for a better allocation. I think it is unfair to leave that whole matter entirely to the industry. I would be interested to know if there was any kind of government suggestion forthcoming, based on the report and recommendations of the Sol Sinclair report that has been tabled. At this time I know of nothing that is being implemented.

I have two questions as follows: When will we have implementation of Mr. Sinclair's recommendations? Does the government have any suggestions regarding catch allocation? This will avoid warring with the industry as well as problems with the Americans over tuna and other matters such as that.

I am concerned along with some of the people I represent about the back door approach to the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Of course, our Canadian fish companies have been largely controlled by American interests, but now Japanese interests are investing up to 25 per cent, for instance, in Canadian fishing companies. It seems to me there may be a possibility of a takeover by the Japanese without even going through the formalities—and that is all FIRA is in the main anyway, a formality—which is not to our particular advantage.

Last night the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent spoke about the real concern that we have about vertical integration in the fishing industry. In other words, the company owns the boats and the licences on those boats in many cases. They often allocate these boats. This reminds me of the Ernie Ford song "You owe everything to the company store." The minister might recall that when we were in Prince Rupert these contracts were described as unconscionable. In this regard does the minister share with the ex-minister his regret that we have allowed such a large measure of vertical integration in the fishing industry? Does the minister have any particular plans to reverse this? I think that is probably a clear question.

I will dispense with the rhetoric of how terrible it is today, that it is all the minister's fault and that everyone over here is an angel. However, since he is the minister—he must bear the responsibility, and if he wants to accept the fault, that is fine. The former minister expressed his regret that in his province fishermen have no bargaining rights. Except for UIC payments, I do not believe fishermen have any bargaining rights anywhere. They do not have the most primitive rights of trade unionists because the courts have considered them as co-adventurers. Every time they do strike it is considered a conspiracy.

I know the Minister of the Environment has been approached by the fishermen. He has met with representatives of the fishermen's union. By letter he has indicated that he intends to contact the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans as well as the Minister of Labour to see if, after 100 years of neglect by both old line parties, somehow during this session of Parliament there might be some form of equity given to the fishermen. I do not mean restoration of rights because they have never had rights in the first place, but there should be some kind of legislation to consider the needs of fishermen, who by and large are almost serfs on these vessels. Because they happen to get a share in the catch does not mean they are co-adventurers. I suppose only a legal mind could somewhow justify their being co-adventurers. They are more like feudal serfs.

I hope the minister intends to do something about this or take some kind of lead to see if there are some decent, modern bargaining rights for some of the most oppressed workers in the country. These people do get unemployment insurance. We can give the previous government credit for that. I admit that some fishermen in some years do very well. However, if one takes a look at the average earnings for the industry, they desperately need something, so that each time they feel they have a grievance and go on strike they do not have to go through police barricades and face the courts. I join with the former minister from Westmorland-Kent who regretted that there were no bargaining rights in his province. I support his view. Do the fishermen have to go through this procedure every time in order to get decent, modern civil rights or labour rights accorded other workers? I look forward to the answers to my questions.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to the questions posed by my hon. friend. I am pleased to welcome him back into the House and I look forward to his continuing participation and contribution to the debates in this place. I will try to answer his questions as succinctly as I can, bearing in mind that we will examine the questions more carefully to determine whether or not more comprehensive replies are warranted. If that is the case my parliamentary secretary will bring these replies to the committee at a later date.

With respect to the first question on A and B licences and the concern expressed by the hon. member regarding overcapitalization, he probably knows that there is a moratorium at the present time. There has been no increase in the number of A licences. As a matter of fact A licences have decreased from 5,800 in 1969 to 4,400 in 1979.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit some clarification at this point?

Mr. McGrath: Yes.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I was not concerned about the gross numbers but the continuation of this scheme. While there may be fewer boats, more sophisticated gear is being used. The requirement to obtain sophisticated gear means that many are overcapitalized.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, as I say, I can appreciate the concern of the hon. member. My understanding is that the trend is to smaller boats because of the moratorium. I will endeavour to get a more comprehensive reply and the parliamentary secretary will bring it in. I anticipated that we would be spending the afternoon discussing the southern Gulf of St. Lawrence respecting section 40 and cod. However, I will make sure that the hon. member gets an answer to his questions on the A and B licences as well as the whole area of his concern with respect to overcapitalization.

With regard to the recommendations of the Sinclair report, as the member suggests that report has been around since 1978.

Mr. LeBlanc: Late 1978.

● (1440)

Mr. McGrath: To the best of my knowledge it was never tabled in the House. Nor was it referred to a committee of the House. It is my intention, hopefully, to have the Sinclair report referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry so that the committee can examine the recommendations of Sinclair in light of the realities of the late seventies and the expectations of the eighties. I am hoping that the committee study into the Sinclair report and using Sinclair as a reference—

Mr. Rose: Not that Sinclair next to you.

Mr. McGrath: I am sure that Sinclair would make an equally positive contribution if I called upon him to do so.

Mr. Breau: You should refer him to the fisheries committee.

Mr. McGrath: The reference of the Sinclair report to the standing committee speaks to the whole need for a reappraisal of licensing policy, and in fact the need for a new licensing policy which is the cornerstone of fisheries management, whether we are talking about the east coast or west coast.

The hon. member referred to foreign investment and the concern on the west coast caused thereby. I appreciate that concern. Indeed, I had an expression of that concern on the occasions I had to visit the west coast since becoming Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is a growing cause for concern. However, the problem is one for the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Quite frankly, I do not believe the situation is as serious as many think it is, although I am not in a position to make that determination. That is merely a gut feeling I have as a result of the consultations I have had on the west coast with fishermen and those involved in the industry.

With regard to vertical integration, I am concerned about that, the impact it would have on the industry to restrict competition and the possible impact on the price subsequently paid to fishermen.

As to whether it has reached the point where that concern has to be expressed in a more tangible way, I am not in a position to make that judgment at the present time. It is a problem on the east coast. It could very well be a serious problem.

Mr. Rose: The effect it has had on licensing.

Mr. McGrath: That is right, and the whole business of the management of the fishery and entry into the fishery. Having said that, I will give an undertaking to the hon. member that I will, through my parliamentary secretary, endeavour to obtain a more comprehensive reply to the questions posed by the hon. member.

Mr. Rose: There was one other point with regard to bargaining rights. I wonder if the minister would address himself to that.

Mr. McGrath: With regard to bargaining rights, Mr. Chairman, that is a problem in some provinces. It is a problem that falls within the area of provincial jurisdiction. There are bargaining rights for fishermen, certainly in my province. This has been very successful. It has made it much easier for the minister of fisheries to get on with the management of the fisheries where you have a strong voice speaking for the fishermen.

Mr. LeBlanc: Right on.

Mr. McGrath: The union in Newfoundland has been very successful in that regard and has been very responsible in exercising the authority it has in speaking for all of the fishermen and those who work in the fish plants of Newfoundland. That I think augurs well for the industry. I would like to see that carried right across the country.

By the same token, the industry never speaks with one voice and that is a problem. You can very rarely get consensus on the industry side. I believe the industry is now making an effort to get its act together. They know how important that is in terms of consultations with the Government of Canada and in terms of having meaningful input into fisheries policy and the day to day management of the fisheries.

I hope the hon. member will be satisfied for the moment. We will endeavour to examine his questions to determine whether more comprehensive replies are warranted.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for his replies and look forward to the more detailed ones. I am a bit confused about his suggestion that it is up to the provinces to ensure the bargaining rights of fishermen. Deep sea fishing and salmon fishing come under federal legislation.

I am sure the minister will recall a session in which the union from British Columbia attended upon the fisheries committee. That was some years ago, maybe seven or eight. They protested this treatment as co-adventurers, as though it might have had something to do with federal influence. I am not prepared at the moment to say it was entirely federal. I am certain that part of it does impinge on federal jurisdiction.

Mr. LeBlanc: It was a Supreme Court judgment.

Mr. Rose: I am informed by the former minister that it was a Supreme Court judgment, a federal judgment.

I would now like to turn from fish to films.

An hon. Member: Filming fish?

Mr. Rose: No, not filming fish. I want to continue my representations to the President of the Treasury Board over the costs the National Film Board has had to face and their opportunities for the future as one of Canada's outstanding institutions. I say to the President of the Treasury Board publicly something that he already knows. I want everyone listening to know that we know too. It was not the original cuts that were imposed by the Conservative government which caused the trouble in the first place. It was the cuts imposed by the previous government which now, with inflationary conditions, amount to about 20 per cent.

This great Canadian institution has won at least five Oscars and I do not know how many other Academy Award nominations for shorts, documentaries and other innovative films. They provide all kinds of well trained film makers and various other kinds of artists and technicians for the private industry in Canada. We are told it is virtually on its last legs because it desperately needs money. It has had to fire at least 125 people as a result, some of the best people we have. I would say another Canadian success story will be headed for the block unless we do something about it.

The minister is quite familiar with this matter. The information I have is that approaches have been made to the minister for supplementary funding of about $1 million and they have received a kind of counter offer of $330,000. I remind the President of the Treasury Board that the cuts that have been imposed are all the more crucial because compared to all other agencies of government over the past ten years it has not grown at all significantly in terms of numbers or in terms of budget.

When I came here ten or 11 years ago the budget for the whole of the year was roughly $12 million. We thought that was terrible, that the sky was falling. That budget has now quadrupled. In those same ten years the National Film Board, an agency that has had all kinds of international acclaim, has not grown at all. There has been little or no growth in the past ten years. By cutting the budget 12 per cent, which through inflation has grown 20 per cent, you are cutting its throat. I know the minister and the government do not want to preside over the funeral of the National Film Board. Canadians would never forgive them. A $330,000 amount of saw-off may keep the patient breathing, but certainly will not perpetuate the quality and reputation we have come to expect from this agency.

• (1450)

Furthermore, the Secretary of State is anxious to regionalize the offerings and also the film-making on behalf of the National Film Board. There is no chance of that happening. There is not enough money to keep the office in Montreal operating properly. I am told there are film-makers answering the phone down there, which is rather nice in some ways because you can probably get hold of one of them occasionally; but apart from that little half satirical aside it is a very serious matter. I have letters from Lincoln Plaza, New York, from the television workshop, pleading with the Prime Minister not to allow the National Film Board to go under. Media Probe in the United States made similar representations—again this is a New York production outfit. They know the contribution in terms of training, leadership and innovative styles for which the National Film Board is responsible in the documentary field as in others.

May I close, then—

Mr. Breau: Any time you like.

An hon. Member: Right now!

Mr. Rose: We have a special case here, not just an ordinary case but one that calls for government attention because it has been neglected. The funds have been cut by the former government. I say to those people on my right who are anxious for me to be quiet, no wonder they do not want me to talk about it, because they did it to them. They have been trying to outrestrain the restrainers for the past two years. When they say things like that I am not likely to sit down before my time has expired unless I have severe chest pains.

The cuts have hurt the film board more than just by the 10 per cent or 12 per cent. There has been no growth in the last ten years, but since other departments of government which might have been making communications films, media films, advertising films, public relations films, if you like, have not been placing orders with them, the cuts are that much more damaging. I leave the committee with the plea that the President of the Treasury Board stand up here smartly and tell us that he has repented, that he is sorry he did it and that for the good of the nation he intends to restore those funds.

Mr. Stevens: I am not sure whether the hon. member will feel that what I am about to say is part of a process of recanting or not. I certainly agree with him that the estimates of the National Film Board were reduced under the former government. As I recall it, their total budgetary funding in the fiscal year 1979 was about $34.1 million and in the estimates now before us it is $30.3 million. It is true this has put the National Film Board under pressure. We are well aware of that, and we are particularly sympathetic.

I am a little uncertain, though, about the counter offer which, according to the hon. member, Treasury Board made with respect to the request for a further $1 million of financing. As I recall the circumstances, the minister did make a request for a further $1 million of financing, and we got into a discussion about the extent to which funds might be available in the board's budget in other categories and which, because they had lapsed for other reasons, might be used. That is where the matter now stands. We are awaiting information as to the extent to which funds which had been overlooked might be available. We are sympathetic to the plight of the film board, but faced with the staggering deficit which confronts us we are very reluctant to make further commitments if they can be avoided.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Chairman, first I should like to make a general observation with regard to what the minister of fisheries seems to be trying to do here. It seems to be an extension of the whole program of this government, a very elitist program, which follows quickly on the heels of the review of FIRA where they seemed to be wanting to bring in industry from outside at will without any checks or balances, as in the case of Petro-Canada where they turned the oil industry over to the multinationals. With high interest rates, small business cannot compete.

I see the President of the Treasury Board is smiling. Well, he should, because if anybody can be branded with responsibility for the elitist tone and the elitist programs of that government, it is certainly himself. The minister smiles. He knows that at various times I have presented requests from the Atlantic provinces, for example from the coal industry; in Sydney they had to cancel seven or eight vessels already this year because of lack of coal. But that does not matter to the minister. It does not matter that the coal can be sold. It is not the program of this government to invest in areas which need investment; it is the program of the government to invest in areas which do not, to make the rich richer. Is that not right? I must say there is one thing they do very well. When members of the government speak, their lips do not even move. I think that is remarkable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: With regard to the fisheries, I must say that the minister of fisheries seems to be preoccupied with the case of the processors, to the detriment of the whole fishing industry. I should like to ask the minister of fisheries how many processors he has seen go bankrupt in the last four years. The processors are certainly to be considered because they are very important to the industry. But it is the inshore fishermen who are most important of all and I say to the minister that he has completely neglected them. He has neglected not only their occupation but their way of life.

It seems to be a consolidation process on the part of the government to ignore completely the lifestyle of these people, their right to work in the villages and areas in which they have been working all their lives, to try to take away the means they have of earning their living in their own communities. I ask the minister of fisheries: what does he say to the people in the small villages of Atlantic Canada when he goes to visit them? What does he say to them when they tell him that the cost of a 53-inch long-liner is now $500,000 and that the government has taken away the means of financing these vessels? What does he say to them when they ask him how are they going to earn their living?

I ask the minister to reconsider his policy with regard to financing of vessels for the inshore fishery and to reconsider the policies which affect these people. I would ask him to look again at the policies he has implemented since coming to power with regard to the crab fishing industry. By letting large vessels into the gulf he has severely threatened this industry, one which is just beginning to emerge as a profitable means of employment for the fishermen of Cape Breton Island.

I would ask him to reconsider his stance with regard to the squid fishery. He listened very nicely to the processors when they told him that although there is presently a glut of squid, they do not buy squid.

• (1500)

That is not the end of the argument. The case for the small inshore fisherman has not yet been heard in this matter. The reason there is a sufficiency of squid at the present time is that processors were able to stock their freezers prior to this particular time with squid, and they were able to purchase at lower rates than are now prevalent in the market. What can small inshore fishermen do? To whom can they go? They cannot go to the minister because he is deaf to their requests.

Mr. LeBlanc: They cannot go to the government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacLellan: It has been proved that they cannot go to the government of Nova Scotia. Fishermen want to have the right to sell their squid over the side. That is not within the realm of feasibility, in the minister's estimation. How can the minister say that there is a glut in squid? Processors are saying that because they do not want to buy any more. How can we determine this?

We know the habits of certain fish on the Atlantic coast, but what do we know about squid stocks? How do we know when they are going to be back again? Where can we get information as to where they go? What information do we have that the market is saturated at the present time? If in fact there are buyers, why not allow fishermen the right to sell this fish over the side? If they are going to be captives of processors, not only will they lose but the processors will lose as well.

If the minister and the government are going to allow the small inshore fisherman to disappear and not allow him to carry on his fishing as he would like, how is he going to earn a living? How are processors going to be able to justify the fish plants they have in the midst of these pockets of inshore fishing? Those processing plants are going to close, and there will be a ricochet action. That will all be the result of the present policy of this government, and I think small inshore fishermen are right in being unanimously opposed to the policies of the minister. Those policies are certainly detrimental to the whole Atlantic region.

I saw the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion here earlier, and I am sure he would agree that these jobs are very important to the Atlantic region. If it is going to be the policy of the government to consolidate fishing into a small number of pockets here and there and centralize everything—it seems to be the case with the policy of going along with processors—certainly the Atlantic economy is going to suffer.

The Prime Minister, who is here now, said earlier that he is interested in small town Canada and that he wants to see it flourish. I think the Prime Minister would agree that in order for it to flourish there must be jobs for people. The situation with regard to squid deserves much more attention than the minister's department has given it.

In former times the question of Korean hake was studied. It was determined that there needed to be some assistance when the fact that Korean hake could not be sold on the United States market was evident. The former government took this problem into consideration, and the problem was met with the assistance of the government. The situation with regard to squid at the present time is not very different from the situation with regard to Korean hake a few years ago.

There are very important ramifications to what is going on at the present time. I received overtures—and I am sure the government has as well—from the province of Nova Scotia regarding the problem of the fish catch on the Scotian shelf. The province of Nova Scotia says that the fish stocks in the Scotian shelf are depleting, and because they are depleting the province of Nova Scotia is asking that large vessels be brought into the Gulf. The province of Nova Scotia is saying that if those vessels do not come into the Gulf, the Gulf fisheries will cease to exist for Nova Scotia fishermen. You cannot tell that to the small fishermen of Cape Breton, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland or Gaspé.

Mr. LeBlanc: Or Pictou County.

Mr. MacLellan: Or Pictou County. These men are making good use of the fish stocks in the Gulf. These are stocks on which they depend because they do not have vessels to go the Labrador coast or to the Grand Banks. The large fish companies do. They have the wherewithal. In fact large vessels from Nova Scotia were fishing on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland long before that became the industry it is in Newfoundland today. I am very worried that a precedent will be created by the minister's policies and that the minister's policy of allocating certain grounds for particular provinces and particular areas is going to make the case for Newfoundland when its representatives say that they want complete control over the fisheries of that province.

Mr. McGrath: I am going to do just the opposite.

Mr. MacLellan: The minister will never convince me with his policies. This is a very dangerous situation.

Mr. McGrath: I agree with you.

Mr. MacLellan: That is very good; I am glad the minister agrees. I accept his acknowledgment on that. I appreciate it, and I think the inshore fishermen of Nova Scotia appreciate it. We hope that the policies of the minister will reflect his thinking in this regard. This is a very serious situation. The policies of the government are creating very bad precedents.

The fish stocks in the Gulf belong to the people who have been fishing those stocks, regardless of what province they live in. This is an historical right of these people, and they do not want to start a competition in the Atlantic region. They do not want a war, literally, among the provinces as to who can fish in what jurisdiction.

Mr. McGrath: Agreed.

Mr. MacLellan: I would like to see the present situation remain.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Chairman, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans with regard to an article which appears today in The Citizen which refers to a statement by Dr. Harold Schiff, who is Canada's foremost ozone expert and who has been acting as chairman of a U.S. National Academy of Sciences committee studying the fluorocarbon problem.

According to Dr. Schiff, the ozone depletion problem caused by the emission of fluorocarbons is much worse than anyone expected. After a three-year study it has been determined that apparently it is twice what it was thought to be in 1976.

I realize that the minister is not in a position to give any kind of an answer today on what his department is doing about one particular part of the fluorocarbon problem, the possible effect the increase in ultraviolet rays caused by the breakdown of the ozone zone has on photoplankton which, as the minister well knows, is a nutritional mainstay for fish and other ocean creatures. Since this is a problem which affects several ministries—it affects human health, so the Department of National Health and Welfare would be involved; it affects agriculture; it affects the environment; and there are implications for consumer affairs—would the minister undertake to get together with his associates in cabinet with a view to making sure that all the expertise that is available in Canada which could be working on this problem will take a look at it?

Could we have an undertaking that the extremely competent fisheries research establishment will take a look, if it is not already, at the question of possible dangers to photoplankton? With regard to this threat would the minister undertake to consider with his cabinet colleagues a legal ban on the use of fluorocarbons as propellants, as well as their use in the spraying of polyurethane insulation? Would he undertake to do both those things?

• (1510)

Mr. McGrath: Of course, Mr. Chairman, I can give an affirmative reply to the hon. gentleman. In so doing I should tell him, however, that co-ordinating responsibilities in this area—and I have read the article to which the hon. member referred—are vested with my colleague, the Minister of the Environment. I will make sure that the hon. member's comments are brought to his attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Chairman, I would like to start by talking a little about my riding and I think it is the first time since Parliament reopened that we have been referring to that region. The constituency of Manicouagan as such is perhaps the largest in Canada. It stretches 600 miles along the shores of the St. Lawrence, and 1,250 miles from its south end up to Fort Chimo. It includes as well the Island of Anticosti. Most of the people I represent actually live between Sept-Îles, Blanc-Sablon and Anticosti island. It is therefore an area where there are many fishermen and yet which has been largely ignored in terms of its fisheries.

Since the House is in committee of the whole, I can stress these two peculiarities concerning the fishermen of my constituency, namely, the issue of their equipment and the issue of their fishing rights. From the interventions of my other colleagues I gather they are a lot more advanced in terms of fisheries than we are on the middle and the lower north shore as we call these areas. I would greatly appreciate the minister paying particular attention to what I am going to say because we seldom have an opportunity of raising these issues which are very real, given the fact that the area I represent is still at a very primary stage of its development.

We are facing a major problem when it comes to fishing equipment as well as grants for trawlers and small fishing boats, because we are having difficulty being recognized as people who depend exclusively on the fishing industry. When I refer to that area between Sept-Îles and Blanc-Sablon, as I explained earlier, that means 400 miles of coasts not serviced by road. This is very important. Therefore, those people who live in about 15 communities located all along those 400 miles of coastline depend exclusively on the fishing industry to make their living, and obviously their earnings are seasonal.

I urge the minister at least to take notice that he should do something for those fishermen so that they can modernize their equipment. The minister should also find ways of providing acceptable subsidies, because in many respects they are considered in fact as independent fishermen. There are no fishermen's organizations, of course, because of the long distances in such a large territory. I think it will be most important to make a detailed survey of the area I represent because we cannot talk in terms of fishermen's organizations now. I do not say that these would not be desirable, but they would just be unthinkable for the moment.

The fisheries policy which had been followed for some ten years has been very profitable for the people in my area, but the cuts that were made everywhere, which were justified in many regards, have brought us back 20 years in my area. The fact that we are so remote compared with the people of eastern Canada should make our area the primary target for fisheries planning and basic equipment. I hope that fact will be recognized because for us it is fundamental.

The second point I want to raise in this debate relates to access to the sea. Of course it is fundamental for a fisherman to have immediate and easy access to the water, and here we are still requesting, even begging for boat launching ramps. For the people of an area who depend exclusively on fishing, that is unacceptable. The facilities requested do not cost much but they are absolutely necessary. We got the most help perhaps for fisheries, boat launching ramps, and fisheries organization and equipment from the Canada Works program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maltais: I must point out that we have been forced for the last four years to take advantage of a program aimed at helping other people and other groups, and in view of the priority that fisheries represent in our part of the country, we had to use up considerable amounts of the Canada Works program to meet the needs of fishermen. I believe that is unacceptable and I think the fisheries department should accept its responsibilities. I think that everyone understands very well the request I am making. The matter should really be examined closely and we should find within the Department of Fisheries or other departments enough money to be able to help those people.

Another point is the famous decision taken by the minister to allow trawlers of 100 feet or more into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Everywhere there is an outcry. First of all, people were not consulted. Further, since the policy of the former minister of fisheries and environment was brought forward, the stocks were replenished and there were many more catches than before, which was greatly appreciated by the fishermen.

As I said earlier, the danger we are concerned about now is that the fishermen who are not organized will suffer definitive revenue losses and might not be able to meet the local demand because the larger and better equipped trawlers will make more catches. I believe that this kind of decision is really tragic for the people of this area. And I am even more surprised that certain provinces in eastern Canada have remained silent. The $117 million program established by the preceding government was extremely profitable and the province of Quebec was already benefiting from a five-year development plan.

This plan was developed in co-operation with the federal government of the time, at least as concerns budgets, and I now ask the minister whether his decision concerning certain cuts will directly affect the five-year plan of Quebec. As you will recall, some time ago the Quebec premier said that the major problem in decentralizing the Quebec fisheries department was to convince provincial public servants to move to the Gaspé area. He said it was more difficult to make the public servants move to Gaspé than to make the fish go upstream to Quebec City.

In view of the decision to allow trawlers to fish inside the Gulf, I wonder if some of the fish will still be able to make it upstream as far as Quebec city. I sincerely want to warn the minister about the risks of such a decision and to tell him that I believe that, in the interests of fishermen, it would be extremely important to review this position so that those who have been making their living in this industry for several generations can still do so because such a decision is extremely depressing for future generations. It will have, as a direct consequence, an exodus of fishermen from these areas. The budgets of former ministers of fisheries were aimed at keeping in these communities the people who are only asking to go on working in this industry. I believe that if the minister continues in this direction there would be grave consequences as we would risk witnessing an exodus of fishermen and an increase in the number of unemployed elsewhere in Quebec and Canada.

I believe that this would have extremely harmful social consequences and that the first duty of the minister should be to evaluate these consequences when making any decision, whether of an economic nature or as concerns allowing groups of companies to fish in the Gulf. When we try to solve the problem of the fishing industry by using these companies in this way, we can only cause even more serious related problems in the areas of unemployment, an exodus from these communities, unemployment insurance and social welfare. Therefore, if the government really wants to help fishermen remain in their own communities and develop economically, I believe that it should go back on its decision to allow trawlers of 100 feet or more to fish in the Gulf. In any case, since I am myself newly elected, I want to transmit directly to the minister the representations made to me by individuals, not companies, individuals and co-operatives. I believe that this message has been made clear since the President of the Treasury Board is in the House, and I believe that we have heard all the facts in view of what my other colleagues from fishing constituencies have been saying since last evening. I therefore urge the government to review this decision and make an announcement as soon as possible so that we can give happier news to the fishermen.

[English]

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Chairman, this is the first opportunity I have had to intervene in a discussion on fisheries since the beginning of this Parliament, following the last election. I want to take the opportunity to tell the minister that of course I was disappointed with the results of the election, but when I heard he was appointed Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, I thought at least that was a ray of hope. I am afraid that ray has vanished. The minister may yet be prepared to listen, but I am afraid the rabble rouser of the previous opposition has become the pussycat of the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Meow, meow.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): There was a good program in the Department of Fisheries for boat subsidies and the construction of small craft harbours, both of which fell victim to the hapless hacker at Treasury Board. It seems our Minister of Fisheries has been able to do little about it. In fairness I must say that during the recent provincial byelection in the province of New Brunswick, the minister was able to pry some funds loose from the Treasury Board for boat subsidies. It was not enough, not anywhere near enough, but he was able to do that to allow the Tory candidate in that provincial byelection, and the provincial minister of fisheries, to make the announcement.

An. hon. Member: He still lost the election.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): He still lost the election.

An hon. Member: I hear it was close.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Closeness only counts in the game of horseshoes. No wonder it was close. The government of New Brunswick threw all the resources of that province into that byelection in order to win it, but it could not buy the votes of the people. Unfortunately fisheries has become a political ball game. Also that is happening in the Department of Employment and Immigration where we have to wait six or seven weeks for approval of project applications, if they are not connected with provincial byelections. If they are connected with provincial byelections, they are approved within two days so that the Tory candidate can make the announcement. That is the kind of political game they are playing.

When the minister was in opposition, he was very self-righteous. He constantly criticized the former minister, the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, who in fact was one of the capable workers on behalf of fishermen, for not having enough money in his boat subsidy and small craft budget, etc. What did this minister do? As soon as he is elected, he allows the hapless hacker to take it all away. Some of the money from the point of view of boat subsidies has been returned to fishermen, but the criteria have been changed.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I know the hon. member perhaps was inadvertent in his comment when he referred to the hapless hacker. It is the happy hacker.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I am not prepared to comment on the state of happiness or unhappiness of the minister. I know that the fishermen are concerned with his actions; they are very unhappy. I have referred to him as hapless, and I shall continue to do so.

Since the election on May 22, the government has not approved, to my knowledge, a single penny for the construction of small craft harbours. I represent a riding in which about 40 per cent of the people depend upon the fishery for their livelihood. We had a very active and progressive program of construction and maintenance of small craft harbours before May 22. Since that date the only activity on any small craft harbour was the one put in place before the election, whereby the Canada Works program is paying for the cost of labour and the Department of Fisheries is paying for the materials. I hope I have not made a mistake in stating that, and all of a sudden the funds for materials will be cut. In any case, we are not receiving the emphasis on fisheries on the part of the government which we should.

Being from Newfoundland the minister has high hopes for the development of the petroleum industry in the offshore waters of that province. I understand that, and I hope it happens. But I remind him—and I hope he will remind the Minister of Finance, the local practitioner of buffoonery in the House—that long after scientists have come up with alternate sources of energy, and petroleum no longer has the value it has today, the products swimming around in our marine waters will be vital for the sustenance of the population of the world. It will still be the most valuable resource of the eastern provinces of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Right on.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I hope the government will change its attitude and not continue with the one which seems to be prevalent now, that it is petroleum versus fish, because it should not be so. All of the resources of this nation should not be going into one basket. We should continue to develop fisheries, but unless we have funds from the government to provide the necessary tools for fishermen to do their jobs, they will not be able to do them.

Also we have witnessed the spectacle of the large processors dictating their positions to fishermen as to what they will receive for their products, when, and where they will be able to sell it. We have witnessed the spectacle of the local, small, individual processors, small businessmen whom the government pretends to represent, being told, "No, you cannot enlarge your plant; you cannot get a subsidy from DREE. Even though DREE is willing to give it to you, we are not willing to agree because there are not sufficient quantities of fish." They are being told this when in fact right now plants do not have the capacity to hold the fish which fishermen want to sell them. Where are the minister and his officials when such idiotic decisions are made?

Will the policy for fisheries in Atlantic Canada be dictated by the large processors, the three or four large companies which must have made healthy donations to the Tory party? An important question is: will it be decided by the minister and the department in consultation with the people who risk their lives to bring in fish stocks?

The government has been in power for approximately six months, and already we see that patronage is more important than progress; the large processors are more important than fishermen; it is more concerned with the desires of provincial ministers and local Tory hacks than with the series of fishermen and the orderly development of the fishery.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): How long will this continue? When will the minister stop being a pussycat? When will he become the rabble rouser he was in opposition? When will he stand up to the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate the hon. member's anger; he wants to exhibit it. But I should like to indicate that there have been consultations among House leaders with respect to the availability of ministers for questioning during consideration of this bill before Committee of the Whole. Arrangements have been made for the following ministers to be present: the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who is here now, the minister in charge of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Arrangements were made to have these ministers available to answer questions from hon. members. The process that we are engaged in is a very good one in terms of the ability of members of Parliament to question ministers. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, because I know he feels strongly about the subject, and he can make his own judgment as to how he wishes to use his time, but the ministers are here and prepared to answer questions.

• (1530)

The Chairman: Of course I have no authority over the contributions made by hon. members. These agreements do not restrict the right of members to express in their own way their opinions.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Chairman, in total, including the interruptions I have suffered from ministers of the Crown, I have used up about seven minutes. I know that the chief government whip will be happy to hear that I am just about finished, because he does not like to hear the truth any more than some of the ministers. They do not like to be shown up for the kind of petty patronage players they are.

Mr. Nystrom: They learn from you, Maurice.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Now we have the happy socialists to my left tripping in. I am sure that the hon. member who is interrupting knows a lot about fish. Probably the only fish he has ever seen are the ones in the Parliamentary Restaurant.

Mr. Nystrom: Especially Liberals.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I was about to wind up my remarks when I was interrupted by the government House leader. The government and the other opposition party seem so anxious for me to sit down that I think I will say a few more things.

We are tired, after a period of only six months, of having this government use public funds for purposes of patronage rather than progress. If these ministers, who were such tigers when they were in opposition, would present on behalf of the people for whom they now have responsibility the same kind of vigour and determination that they displayed in opposition, when they constantly complained that the government of the day was not providing enough for them to do the very thing which I am trying to do this afternoon and for which I am now being chastised by the government, then the fishermen of eastern Canada would be a lot better off.

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of questions that I would like to ask, especially since the well-dressed Minister of Employment and Immigration is with us. The President of the Treasury Board has disappeared, but I am sure that somebody will report to him.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to interrupt, but I had hoped that the hon. gentlemen opposite, to whom I have listened with great respect and patience, would allow me an opportunity this afternoon to reply to some of the remarks which they have made over the course of today and last night. If it is their intention to go into other areas, I will be denied that opportunity.

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Chairman, had the minister been a little more patient, he would have realized that I was trying to come to his help. What I wanted to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the President of the Treasury Board is whether or not they would allow funds, which are intended for creating employment, to be allotted, for example, in modest amounts for equipment and material to the budget that the minister has for small craft harbours. The paper which was given to the departmental officials in committee this week indicated that in one year alone some $44 million in combined Canada Works and small craft harbours money was allotted to improve the facilities that fishermen use. I would like to know if the minister has been able to convince his colleagues that something should be done in this area.

I can think of no better way to contribute to a community than by having the fishermen themselves participate in the building of some of their facilities. These fishermen have done some remarkable work in the east coast provinces. Members of Parliament, I am sure from both sides of this House, have supported the idea of giving fishermen funds to improve their own facilities. I am not talking about building huge wharfs. I am talking about improving facilities such as bait sheds, and community stages which, with the help of modest amounts of money, can simplify the lives of fishermen.

I would like to ask the minister if he has been successful in convincing the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who particularly has a large amount of money in his budget for job creation, to consider the replacement of small wooden boat vessels as a great source of employment on the whole east coast. In the fiscal year 1978-79 our administration added $7.5 million to the vessel subsidy program to bring the total up to $10 million. This year, in addition to the normal $2.5 million in the budget of April, we decided to add an additional $6 million or $7 million. Can the minister tell us whether that money has been frozen or whether it has been allocated?

The improving of the fleet of the fisheries is a very important priority, especially the smaller vessels, because these non-incorporated fishermen do not have the tax write-offs and other advantages that the major corporations have.

I would like to say a word about the decision to allow the large trawlers to return into the Gulf. I have listened to the minister's arguments and to the debate, and I wonder if the minister bases his decision on the arithmetic on the landings of different parts of the fleet. I know that some of these decisions are difficult. I have scars to show for some of my decisions while I was in that portfolio. The scientists alone cannot carry the responsibility. They may make a judgment, based on the arithmetic and possibly on some abstract laws of economics, that it perhaps might be better to have all the fish caught by a very small number of vessels such as large factory freezer trawlers, but what would that do to our communities?

I have with me the figures on the landings which were given to the committee this week. The large vessels which will come in and compete for a modest amount of fish are mainly from two provinces, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. In Nova Scotia inshore fishermen in 1974 had landings of 39,000 tons. In 1975 they had landings of 36,000 tons; in 1976, 35,000 tons; in 1977, 35,000 tons, and by 1978 they had only reached 44,000 tons in landings. However, the large offshore vessels, which through their representatives this week before the committee were crying that they were hard done by and which have paid spokesmen to lobby for them, in 1974 had landings of 122,000 tons; in 1975, 122,000 tons; and in 1976, 125,000 tons. The takeoff point is 1977 where they had landings of 130,000 tons.

• (1540)

Listen to this. These poor, bereft, forgotten, large boat owners from Nova Scotia landed a 161,000 metric tons in 1978. These gentlemen have not done too badly from what they used to call the "disastrous policy". They used to advertise in the The Globe and Mail because they could afford to do that.

Mr. McGrath: That includes inshore fishermen.

Mr. LeBlanc: I can only read from the minister's own department's document—"Offshore—Hauturier" for 1974, 122,527 and for 1978, it is 161,026.

Mr. McGrath: Read the footnote.

Mr. LeBlanc: If the figures are wrong, I am quite willing to make the correction.

Mr. McGrath: Read the footnote.

Mr. LeBlanc: The footnote does not destroy what I have been trying to say. Let us look at the arithmetic for Newfoundland which is the home of a lot of the large vessels. Again, the minister's own document shows "Offshore—Hauturier", 121,956 in 1974; in 1975, 122,758; in 1976, 156,451; in 1977, 159,204; and in 1978, 154,353 metric tons. We know that in 1979 the large offshore trawlers have been doing very well and I suspect the amount will be away above this.

It is the inshore fishermen who need to be protected by the only person who can do it. The minister must protect the fragmented and disorganized inshore fishermen of the east coast. I have one simple difference of opinion with the minister.

There are other figures that have to be put on the record which are also taken from a document issued by the department. These figures relate to the stern trawlers, the poor forgotten element of our fisheries, and show the average yearly landings per trip. In other words, if there are a lot of fish, they take a lot on every trip. In 1976 the Newfoundland stern trawlers were taking an average of 176,000 pounds per trip; in 1978, they took 216,000 pounds per trip, and by 1979 they were taking 263,000 pounds per trip. That figure only covers January to August, 1979, so it will go much higher.

This week the Nova Scotia trawlers organized, but it is interesting to note that the inshore fishermen were not represented. The provincial minister, Mr. Cameron, said they had been "suckered" into this movement. Maybe the small fishermen of Nova Scotia know about the figures. In 1976 the large stern trawlers that had been complaining they did not get enough fish, were taking an average of 207,000 pounds per trip. By 1978 they were getting 276,000 pounds per trip. In 1979, the year of disaster when they need help—when they came to see the minister, aided and abetted by the provincial minister—these large Nova Scotia stern trawlers landed 286,000 pounds per trip.

The minister has to make difficult decisions, Mr. Chairman, and I recognize that he is subject to many pressures. As I said last night, however, at some point he will have to make up his mind if he is going to defend those who do not have a strong voice. I heard him say again, this afternoon, that the industry also needs strong voices. Mr. Chairman, I have never failed to hear the voice of the industry, especially the large companies—

Mr. McGrath: You are misrepresenting. I said it needs to speak with one voice.

Mr. LeBlanc: I have never noticed the industry silent on the issues, Mr. Chairman. In fact they can afford to advertise, and from the figures I have just quoted for landings, I can see why—

An hon. Member: At taxpayers' expense.

Mr. LeBlanc: I have given the figures for the offshore fishermen in New Brunswick and should like now to turn to the figures for the inshore fishermen, also taken from the document the minister tabled this week at the committee. In 1974 the inshore fishermen of New Brunswick were taking 3,329 metric tons; in 1975, 3,079; in 1976, 3,737, but by 1978 landings had dropped to 3,144 metric tons. These are the people against whom the minister is now deciding to send large, offshore trawlers, who have done as well as I have indicated. I hope I can leave enough time for the minister to answer these questions. I should like to hear his explanation of why he has done this.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to reply, although I have less than 15 minutes to do so. I had hoped to be given the full 20 minutes because the hon. gentleman who just took his seat has had two interventions. He spoke last night, and today repeated essentially what he said at that time.

An hon. Member: I am going to get up on a point of order if you talk like that.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, that is the hon. gentleman who likes to call me a pussycat. I have been around here long enough to know that a pussycat is a reasonably ineffectual fellow—

An hon. Member: Exactly.

Mr. McGrath: I like to look upon myself as a tom-cat because a tom-cat has the ability to survive. That is the important thing.

An hon. Member: What else does a tom-cat do?

Mr. McGrath: The question is about cod in zone 4T. It is basically a question of philosophy. I have listened to what I can only call, regretfully, the hypocritical intervention of my hon. friend opposite. I was saddened by the hypocrisy of my predecessor. He asks why I opened the Gulf and why the 100-footers were allowed in the Gulf. The hon. gentleman could answer that himself, because he closed the Gulf in 1976. When he did so, he issued a statement to the effect that the prime objective was to protect the small vessel fisheries, and the economic foundation of many coastal communities in the Gulf, while making allowance for larger vessels from elsewhere which traditionally fished there. There was a clear implication in that statement that when the fish stocks recovered, the larger vessels would be allowed back in. That is what they read into it.

Mr. LeBlanc: Your arithmetic does not prove that they have recovered.

Mr. McGrath: If the hon. gentleman wants to talk about arithmetic, I would draw his attention to the fact that at the time of the closure of the Gulf the TAC was at 15,000 metric tons and today the TAC is 49,000 metric tons. It has recovered to the point that we can now allow the larger vessels to go back in there.

When the hon. member for Gaspé spoke this afternoon he talked about "sharks". These sharks were supported before the committee by two very important trade unionists, a representative of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers Union, and the president of the Canadian Seafood Workers Union. They represented Canadians who derive employment from—

Mr. LeBlanc: One company.

Mr. McGrath: It does not matter whether it is one, two or three companies; the fact is that these people are employed and depend upon these companies for a living, as do the people employed in the plants.

I listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys, and was most impressed with what he had to say. I do not know whether it was his maiden speech or not. He spoke of the danger of provincializing cod stocks. I see that as a clear danger. The moment you provincialize cod stocks, you balkanize the east coast fishery, the Government of Canada has lost control, and there is no way it can adjudicate between the provinces. In fact there is no way to effectively manage that stock.

It is interesting to note the representations made to the committee by the government of Nova Scotia. It referred to the provincialization of cod stocks and rejected that as a concept. If we were to keep the Gulf closed to offshore trawlers it would mean, in effect, that the southern Gulf would be exclusively open to inshore fishermen from Cape Breton and New Brunswick. The same argument can be applied to any cod stock. The important thing is that there was a clear understanding at the time the Gulf was closed that trawlers would be allowed back in—

● (1550)

Mr. LeBlanc: When stocks justified it and the inshore fishermen had taken a fair share.

Mr. McGrath: The inshore fishermen were consulted, and determined that they could take an additional 4,000 metric tons of the new TAC. That is what they were allocated, and that is what they got. That left 9,000 metric tons, and 6,000 of that was allocated to the trawler fleet. This was not done because of any pressure from Nova Scotia. There was none. This was not done because of any pressure from the large processing companies of whom the hon. gentlemen are trying to paint me as their great advocate—indeed, I had not heard from them. There were no representations from them whatsoever. The allocations were made. The hon. gentleman knows full well—he sits there smiling with that self-righteous look upon his face as though he was the only one in this House who cared about the inshore fishermen. That kind of hypocrisy does not become him because he was a good minister of fisheries. I suggest he should not sit there and pretend he is the representative of all that is right and good with respect to the fishery.

The hon. gentleman from Gloucester made a great rhetorical intervention in this debate. I read what he had to say and discovered there was nothing in it. There was just 20 minutes of bombast and rhetoric. He made no substantial contribution whatsoever.

The question of section 4T cod has been gone over in committee. It has been dealt with in the House during the course of the question period. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador surprised me when he said he was against opening the Gulf. Let the hon. gentleman go to Burin-St. Georges and defend that position. I would like to see how long he would last if he went there. The fish plants on the south coast of Newfoundland depend to a large extent on that fish stock. He knows it. Indeed, of the 17 or so trawlers operating in section 4T in the southern Gulf today, 15 of them are from southern Newfoundland fish plants.

An hon. Member: What is going on in Burin-St. Georges?

Mr. McGrath: What is going on in Burin-St. Georges? The hon. member who asked me that knows full well that a byelection is to be held. I am afraid the NDP will come in as a very poor third. Their candidate is not doing well. If he was, hon. gentlemen would be helping him out today. Because they are not, it tells me everything about it.

I listened very carefully to the remarks made by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent. He did have some substantive and important remarks to make. He talked about the 200-mile limit and what it meant to the resurgence of the fish stocks as well as the new pressures it has created on fisheries management. As a result of the growth of the stocks, new complex problems have been created. The hon. gentlemen then went on to talk about freezer trawlers. A picture was painted that there has been some great change in policy on freezer trawlers. There have been no changes in freezer trawler policy. We are still operating under the same policy. The only freezer trawlers that were licensed were licensed by the hon. gentleman opposite when he was minister of fisheries.

Mr. LeBlanc: To catch northern shrimp.

Mr. McGrath: To catch northern shrimp, and with unrestricted groundfish licences.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McGrath: With unrestricted groundfish licences.

Mr. LeBlanc: Not unless it was a replacement.

Mr. McGrath: No. There are no restrictions whatsoever on these freezer trawlers which are now operating. To catch northern shrimp they have unrestricted groundfish licences. The hon. gentleman should admit that. These are the only freezer trawler licences that have been issued. In effect, what I am saying is that with all the inherent faults with fisheries management today we are essentially operating under the same policy put together by my hon. friend but with one very notable exception. That is, the hon. gentleman opposite likes to present himself as the champion of the inshore fisherman. I do not quarrel with that, but when he does it to the exclusion of the rest of the industry, it can only create confrontation. It is creating confrontation. That has been the legacy of the hon. gentleman. There is no co-operation in the industry. When the hon. member was minister he set one group against another. He said it all when he said this: "I suspect at some point he will not be able to speak comfortably for both."

The day that I cannot speak comfortably for both segments of this industry, both of which are vitally important to the economy of the Atlantic provinces and, indeed, the west coast, then I cease to operate responsibly as Minister of Fisheries of Canada. That was the mistake the hon. gentleman made. He was merely the spokesman for one segment. That is why we have problems.

Mr. LeBlanc: I do not apologize for it one bit.

Mr. McGrath: That is why we have the problems we have today. The hon. gentleman from New Brunswick speaks about patronage. He did not identify where the patronage was. The only patronage that has caused me any trouble was when the hon. gentleman opposite was Minister of Fisheries and he yielded to pressure put on him by his colleague, the then deputy prime minister. He issued crab fish licences in Cape Breton which caused no end of trouble. Eleven licences were recommended by the committee, and the hon. gentleman yielded to the pressure of the then government house leader and issued five licences purely on the basis that the applicants were prominent supporters of the Liberal party. That kind of patronage has to end. The hon. gentleman knows what I am talking about. It has been around for the last six months. If he does not know what I am talking about he has failed to follow the ombudsman's program on CBC. It has aired this problem twice.

Mr. LeBlanc: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If the minister is going to make a retroactive charge based on one of the most ill-informed programs that I have seen on television in a long time, I hope he will produce the evidence.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I can produce the evidence by putting the names of the fisherman on the record. However, I do not think it will serve any useful purpose to do that. Licences were issued as a result of political pressure, and that really surprised me. I can assure the hon. gentleman, and my friend from New Brunswick who made the charge of patronage, that there has been no patronage since I became Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I can assure him that there will be no licences issued as long as I am Minister of Fisheries and Oceans on the basis of political pressure or on the basis of the political persuasion of the applicant for the licence. I think that is a reprehensible practice. It tends to undermine the management of the fishery. It is difficult enough—

An hon. Member: Does the Premier of P.E.I. agree with that?

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell me what is he talking about, when he asks if the Premier of P.E.I. agrees?

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the minister's question—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Ethier): Order, please—

Mr. LeBlanc: —when he ruled in favour of one fisherman they thought it was on the basis of representation from the Premier of P.E.I., who is a Tory premier.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I am sure that both hon. gentlemen will be able to continue when the committee reconvenes on Monday. It now being four o'clock p.m., it is my duty to rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader the business of the House for Monday.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to call as the first order of government business the redistribution reference about which I spoke. I hope that will not take very long. This will be followed by Bill C-10, which is without amendment from the committee, for third reading. We will then again take up the business of this bill which we were dealing with this afternoon.

Mr. Breau: Will the minister say whether we will follow the same priority list that was talked about previously? Will we have here the minister of fisheries or the minister for DREE?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the question the hon. member asks is quite relevant. I indicated there would be ministers available yesterday, ministers available today, and ministers will be available on Monday, if we get to the bill, for as long as it is considered necessary. There have been discussions between the opposition House leader and myself with regard to curtailing the debate. I asked how long we would be.

Ministers are busy. They have to spend some time in their departments and at meetings. I want the House to understand that from time to time it may be necessary for a parliamentary secretary to be here. The parliamentary secretary will be prepared to answer questions. The purpose of this process is to get questions from members of the House of Commons and to do our best to answer them.

I have undertaken with my friends and have made arrangements, after discussions, to have ministers available, subject to those unavoidable things that ministers may have in their lives.

I ask for the courtesy of the House, given that availability and the fact that officials are also waiting to answer questions. Speeches can be made at any time. We are anxious to answer questions.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that we were very co-operative in not debating the two motions. The reason we wanted to make speeches was because we did not take the time at the first stage. I remind the President of the Privy Council that in the case of Bill C-10 and with other bills it will go a lot quicker if we get the opportunity to discuss them in this forum with the ministers.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I appreciate the point. Because of that courtesy extended to me, we are making available ministers and parliamentary secretaries for the purpose of answering questions. The process will work in that way. I also say there is a reasonable limit to the process. I will be discussing with the opposition House leader and my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, their judgment as to what the limit ought to be. I hope we can get some reasonable definitiveness, without curtailing the rights of the House.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, partly following on my colleague's comments, I should draw to Your Honour's attention that while we have had two days on this bill, there has not been one question specifically in relation to any of the items in the bill. It has been a discourse prompted by certain members of the opposition without literally touching on one point that is in this bill.

I suggest, with all due respect, that some consideration be given between now and Tuesday, or Monday if the bill is reached then, to this whole question of speakers having some relevance to what they are questioning on or speaking about. Surely it is a misuse of the whole parliamentary process to have a bill before us, where we are at the clause by clause stage and have agreed to stand all the provisions down to schedule D, and that, notwithstanding that co-operation, there has not been a question dealing with any item in the bill.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to drag this out, but it seems that is an unfair comment that should not be left on the record unanswered. Let me answer it by speaking on behalf of my friends in the Liberal party, not on behalf of my own friends.

The President of the Treasury Board says there has not been a single question about any item in the bill. Fisheries and Oceans are in the bill. That is what my friends have been talking about all afternoon. There are in schedule D, estimates for fisheries and oceans. It is in order to ask questions about what is in the schedule. I do not know what the President of the Treasury Board is talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Rather than have further comments, perhaps this can be raised at the next sitting of the Committee of the Whole.

It being past four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order, paper, namely notices of motions, public bills, private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, today I think we will discuss notice of motion No. 11 presented by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). Could all the other notices of motion be stood by unanimous consent of the House?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The House has heard the hon. parliamentary secretary's request. Shall all motions before motion No. 11 be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED COMMITMENT TO CERTAIN GOALS

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, a new constitution for Canada should specifically commit Canada to the goals of

(a) promoting international peace and security;

(b) maintaining just and honourable relations between nations;

(c) fostering respect for international law and treaty obligations;

(d) encouraging the settlement of international disputes by arbitration; and

(e) transferring agreed national powers to world authorities when this would facilitate world peace.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I would not object if the House were ready for the question, but I think we want to have some discussion on this issue. The very purpose of putting it on the order paper was to give us an opportunity for some extended discussion.

I am very pleased to move this motion, not only on my personal behalf but on behalf of the World Federalist Parliamentary Association which, in a sense, is the real sponsor of this motion. Perhaps I might begin by again reading it and then making some further comments. It is moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, a new constitution for Canada should specifically commit Canada to the goals of

(a) promoting international peace and security;

(b) maintaining just and honourable relations between nations;

(c) fostering respect for international law and treaty obligations;

(d) encouraging the settlement of international disputes by arbitration; and

(e) transferring agreed national powers to world authorities when this would facilitate world peace.

The parliamentary association of world federalists is a grouping of members and senators, some 100 in number, who are devoted in a broad way not only to the cause of world peace but to achieving world peace through forms of federalism in the world. I have had the honour of being the chairman of that group in Parliament since May, 1976, and I plan to lay down that burden at the annual meeting on November 28. I would like to say I have had very excellent co-operation from the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), the vice chairman of the organization, and the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), who preceded me as chairman.

This is really a multi-party and a two-House venture which enables us to come together to try to organize the activity and the thoughts of Parliament toward supranational activities and agencies. The ultimate goal is, of course, world government in the sense of a federal world government which preserves the governments of the individual parts but also leads us gradually toward some kind of world unity. But we need more direct and proximate goals, subsidiary goals, if you like, so the World Federal Parliamentary Association along with world federalists in general has a number of intermediate goals which it supports as being realizable in the short run. Among such have been the reform of the United Nations, the internationalization of the seabed question, and the objectives of the motion I propose this afternoon, one seeking to place in our constitution, which I believe all Canadians are determined to renew at this time in our history, a statement indicative of our desire in Canada to participate in international authorities and to subject ourselves to world law to the extent that it exists, and, to the extent it does not, to try to make it exist.

I might mention in passing that the World Association of World Federalists also adopts similar subsidiary goals and that the title of the next international conference, to be held in Tokyo next July, is "Toward a New International Order in the Third Development Decade". A great deal of stress is being placed by the World Association of World Federalists on the question of world development.

I would also like to mention that the Canadian Parliamentary Association has been very instrumental in the establishment of a new association of parliamentarians devoted to the cause of world federalism which goes by the title of Parliamentarians for World Order. A number of meetings have been held, initially at Canadian initiative, over the past few years in Washington, New York, London and Paris, to mention the major ones. The new parliamentary association will probably devote most of its efforts to working through the United Nations and its specialized agencies, and we shall be able to take a stronger position with respect to international issues than is possible for an organization such as the Inter-Parliamentary Union which is less dedicated to a particular goal and more dedicated merely to providing a forum.

The motion before us today was inspired by the submission last fall to the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada, of which I had the honour to be joint chairman, by the World Federalists of Canada, and was prepared by Mr. T. James Stark, chairman of Operation Dismantle, and Dr. Hanna Newcombe, co-chairman of the Peace Research Institute, Dundas. The introduction to that document reads as follows:

> In so far as a number of other countries have constitutionally dealt with the important issue of national sovereignty and the need for "collective security" and international order, the World Federalists of Canada ask that our government look toward the future in the formulation of our new constitution and make general provision for the resolution of these two interdependent interests.

In support of their proposal, the World Federalists of Canada cited action taken by a number of other countries which I think worth drawing to the attention of hon. members. For example, article 25 of the constitution of the Federal Republic of Germany reads as follows:

> The general rules of public international law shall be an integral part of federal law. They shall take precedence over the laws and shall directly create rights and duties for the inhabitants of the federal territory.

That is a very strong provision to place in a national constitution. It makes international law an integral part of domestic law and subjects domestic law directly to the rules of international law.

The constitution of India provides in article 51:

> The state shall endeavour to:
>
> (a) promote international peace and security;
>
> (b) maintain just and honourable relations between nations;
>
> (c) foster respect for international law and treaty obligations in the dealing of organized peoples with one another; and
> (d) encourage settlement of international disputes by arbitration.

It will not escape the attention of hon. members that the proposals I am making this afternoon in my motion are very close to those which are contained in that article of the Indian constitution. The principal difference is the addition, in the motion, of a fifth category in accordance with the request of the World Federalists of Canada which in its brief to the Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada went on as follows:

> We recommend that in recognition of the interdependence of all nations and peoples, Canada declare its willingness to transfer by legislation certain sovereign powers to a world authority such as the United Nations or a federal world government as and if such actions would facilitate world peace (collective security) and a more just and human world order.

That is the source of the fifth part of the motion which is presented here today.

The special joint committee had a great deal to do in a very short time last year and was not able to consider this proposal in its only report—we had expected that the committee would be reconstituted last winter but that never happened, so the committee never really had a chance to go into this question. But I do wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the provisions of Bill C-60, a principal subject matter of consideration by the committee, did not contain any reference to international law or to the international order. There is in Bill C-60 a statement—"the stated aims of the Canadian federation shall be—". Then follows a series of stated aims, all of which are very fine, but none of which expands our horizons to the world scene, even though one of the subclauses does use the phrase "to expand the horizons of Canadians as individuals and enhance the collective security and distinctiveness of the people." The explanation of that sentiment in the detail which followed made no reference to the international order, and it is such a reference that this motion would seek to incorporate in a future document of this kind.

● (1620)

One may well ask why such a document should contain such a reference to the international order when in fact it perhaps might not have any direct influence on Canadian policy, we being a peace-loving people who have in any event been very co-operative in the international arena? We have been prominent in supplying, for instance, support for peacekeeping forces. We are generally known as one of the "good countries" in the world which is always prepared to try to help on the international scene.

However, to take such a view would ignore the symbolic value of a statement of this kind, and that, of course, is what is contained in a statement such as that in Bill C-60. The section to which we would wish to make an amendment if that bill were before us was entitled "Statement of Aims of the Canadian Federation". The authors of that statement of aims laboured hard to try to encompass in their wording all of the various symbolic aspects of the meaning of being a Canadian. I think what we are asking is whether we can really express ourselves as Canadians, in the sense in which we really are, without saying something about the international order too, given the fact that Canadians have played such a co-operative role in the world and undoubtedly will continue to do so.

So, if we are to express our reality as it is, then surely we owe it to ourselves and perhaps to the world to make this kind of statement in our fundamental document. It was Aristotle who said that a constitution is not just a way of organizing offices in the state. It is something much more than that. It is ultimately the principal means of stating the way of life of a people. That is just what I am suggesting here, that this fundamental document should express our way of life as it is, and our way of life in Canada surely does include a devotion to the principles of international law and a very strong desire on behalf of our people to act as good neighbours in the world.

In this sense I think it is extremely important that our fundamental constitutional document should state this. It should pay lip service to it. It should pay service to it by declaring it as an ideal to which the Canadian people aspire.

Mankind has in its long history been perhaps more motivated by symbols than by any of the hard realities of daily life, often perhaps because we wish to get away from those hard realities and sometimes, unfortunately, because unscrupulous leaders try to distract us from the hardships of some daily realities by using symbols as a way of extricating people's thoughts from their daily round.

Wars have been caused by symbols such as the concept of Lebensraum, Jenkin's ear, or whatever. Symbols have been matters of extreme importance in the history of mankind, and if we in Canada are to be expressing in a symbolic way what Canada is about, surely, a very important part of that expression is to say where we stand in relation to the rest of the world. No man is an island, no country can stand alone, and no country can express itself in a world which is as interdependent as everyone recognizes our world to be without expressing the relationship to the whole.

These are the reasons, among others—and I know other hon. members such as the hon. member for Edmonton South will wish to state others—why the Parliamentary Association of World Federalists felt that this motion should be put for debate before the House. This is not a motion which has been appearing every year. It is not a traditional motion, as are many motions we see in private members' hours. I think some of those motions have been around for probably ten, 12 or 15 years. This is the first time this subject has been debated. We have put it on because we believe it is very important, and we want to bespeak the support of the House for it.

We want as strongly as possible to urge the government, if it should in the near future, I hope, be coming forward with new proposals on the Constitution of Canada, to recognize that this is one of the most important things to be stated in the aims of the Canadian federation.

I will now leave the rest of the time to other speakers. I merely want to say that I have been very grateful for the support I have been given in the ultra-national role, if I may put it that way, which the Canadian Parliamentary Association of World Federalists has assumed.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) should be commended for bringing forward this very important motion. He has done an ingenious thing here this afternoon by wedding two of his principal concerns in his career in Parliament, namely, his concern about world federalism and his concern about constitutional reform. He has brought those two concerns together in an admirable way, and I thank him for deepening the attention of the House about matters which go beyond the immediate crises and exigencies which occupy all our attention on a regular basis.

This debate is useful because it brings to the floor of the House of Commons a reflection of the work of one of the parliamentary associations to which all of us belong in one form or another. There are various conferences held in various parts of the world at regular periods. Very seldom do we have an opportunity to consider the findings of the parliamentary associations which are, at the very least, performing an educative function for members of Parliament on world conditions.

This debate gives me an opportunity to make a plea once more—as has been done in the past—to have the reports of parliamentary associations automatically referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for its consideration, because I think it is in that way that a structured input of the findings of associations can benefit us all.

Today the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has leaped forward, thanks to the luck of the draw, and has been enabled to bring forward a motion that is very timely, because he is also reflecting on a meeting which was held only last Friday at the United Nations in New York when members of Parliament from 31 nations took part in a discussion of global conditions, which occupied the attention of the United Nations. This meeting was sponsored by the International Parliamentary Union and the parliamentarians for a world order to which the hon. member has referred. Indeed, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), and myself were present.

I may say in passing that we missed the company of the Secretary of State (Mr. MacDonald). If he had not been otherwise preoccupied with the things I see on his desk now, I am sure he would have been there too, for indeed the Secretary of State has been one of those parliamentarians who has taken a vigorous leadership role in the development of the world federalists parliamentary association. Indeed, that work owes much to him and his predecessors for developing it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is in better hands now.

Mr. Roche: If it is not in better hands, it is in other hands at the moment.

However, before I leave the World Federalist Parliamentary Association, I remind the Secretary of State and others that the distinguished Dr. Frank Leddy, former president of the University of Windsor, will be addressing the annual meeting of the World Federalist Parliamentary Association on November 28 at 12.30 p.m. on these premises.

● (1630)

With all that said, we come now to the substance of what the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is asking us to consider. Another reason for the timeliness of the remarks he made today is the forthcoming foreign policy review being conducted by the government in association with the special joint Senate-Commons committee which will be set up to consider the totality of the Canadian foreign policy. Indeed, the subjects he has drawn to our attention today—on which I will be commenting in more detail in a moment—are the kinds of subjects that should be considered by those who are charged with considering, in a parliamentary sense, what Canada's foreign policy ought to be as we head into the 1980s in a world that is going to be more discernably interdependent than it now is.

In the 1970s we have seen the kind of world that is emerging, indeed one could say exploding, the major trend of geopolitics affecting north-south relations, the emergence of China, the whole question of the Middle East, Southern Africa, the world economic system, the energy question, reallocation of resources, the sharing of resources. All these questions have had a major impact on whether or not our world can be made not only a safe place but a stable environment in which we and those who come immediately after us will live.

It is opportune for us to consider the questions that the hon. member has brought forward, but I have to say that it does not take constitutional reform or a new constitution in order to highlight the questions of promoting international peace and security—which is the first of the five specific comments the hon. member has made in his motion—because the present constitution does not impede the attaining of those goals. What is really necessary, before we become embroiled again in the questions of constitutional reform, is to do a better job as government and Parliament in informing the Canadian people, in giving more attention here as a government, to those questions that are at the heart of world peace, security and justice in this changing world. That does not take constitutional reform.

When we consider the five goals that are being presented to us today in the motion, we must remember that those goals are in fact incorporated in the United Nations Charter which was, of course, subscribed to by Canada as a founding member and, I might say, as a leading member of U.N. We know that Canada has played a substantial role in the development of the United Nations.

While I welcome the motion put forward by the hon. member, indeed its consideration at the proper time and with proper provincial input into the questions of constitutional reform with respect to international obligations, I think it would be preferable to highlight at this moment the work of the United Nations as a body established in the international community to further the very goals which the hon. member and myself, and indeed our colleagues, want to see furthered. For you see, Mr. Speaker, however slow the pace, it is a certainty that the United Nations is already putting into place the beginnings of an international legal order.

The U.N. Declaration and Covenants on Human Rights—and I speak of economic and social as well as political and civil—provide, for the first time, humanity with a profound philosophical base expressed in practical terms. Here we have an official recognition, a world recognition, of the respect that ought to be accorded to every human being in the world in virtue of his humanity. In reaching out to the open seas and to outer space, the U.N. treaties today that we have at our service emphasize the common heritage of mankind.

The urgent needs of the world are being met by the vast extension of United Nations practical work, the programs in addition to the covenants which are pieces of paper. Eighty per cent of the United Nations effort and budget go into the development questions that are at the heart of the hon. member's motion today. Indeed, our daily life would grind to a halt without those international institutions which we now have in place regulating air transport, the control of epidemics, posts and telegraphs, weather reports, or the responsibility for satellites. All these are operations within the United Nations system, whether we consider U.N. activities in Geneva, in Vienna, in Nairobi, in New York or other places where U.N. commissions and boards are hammering out the infrastructure for the world community that is emerging before our eyes. So I do think we do not give the United Nations sufficient credit, nor do we give ourselves sufficient credit, as Canadians who have participated not only at the start of the United Nations but indeed in the old League of Nations, for recognizing the movement forward of humanity at this very moment.

I know that the world is in chaos in many respects. We are having just one indication today of the kind of chaos that exists in the world and that has affected the life of this government, indeed the life of the government of the United States. One does not have to go through a long catalogue to remind oneself of the parade of injustices and discrimination and of all the negative things in the world. They are there and we cannot turn our backs on them, but while we consider that, I think we should also be as reflective of the creative things that are happening in the world to help bring mankind together. This is not just an empty vision I am presenting to you. It is a reflection of the reality of the many movements throughout the world which are perhaps spinoffs of the United Nations and spinoffs of other international associations.

In the past few years I have had the opportunity of travelling to quite a number of countries. When I go into their societies and cultures I find something very interesting happening in our world. There is more positive development taking place than is reflected in the headlines which tell us about the confrontations and the terrible things that are happening. There is more creativity present than we realize, and I think that is a reflection of what the United Nations principally has been able to achieve.

I am just suggesting here that perhaps it would be helpful if we, as parliamentarians, gave more emphasis to the creative side of the world which would give a greater sense of encouragement and hope to Canadians generally, if an argument can be put forward that Canadians are kind of turned off international development, because progress does not seem to have been made when you measure it by a very limited yardstick. Therefore, it would be helpful to remember that there are 168 non-governmental organizations in this country which drew in excess of $50 million in matching funds from the Canadian government last year. These 168 non-governmental organizations reflect the work of thousands of Canadians who stand for the very things mentioned in the motion and which we see as an ongoing operation.

● (1640)

I should like to remind the House that on November 6 the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) said that the government attaches great importance to the work of non-governmental organizations, and that the support of government for these organizations will increase, and not decrease, in the years ahead. That is very good news, particularly for those many Canadians who are concerned with the direction of the government in foreign policies geared to promoting creative development in the international world community, which the hon. member drew to our attention.

Briefly I should like to consider some of the points in the hon. member's motion. The question of promoting international peace and security is handled in the Charter of the United Nations. When we talk about peace and security, we would be remiss if we did not remind ourselves of the role of Canada in peacekeeping forces in several areas of the world. Indeed it is a tradition for Canada to maintain its participation in international peacekeeping forces. That is one example of how we have contributed to the promotion of international peace and security.

In the second part of his motion the hon. member calls our attention to the need to maintain just and honourable relations between nations. Of course to that we say "amen". In addition to maintaining an extensive diplomatic network, Canada has adhered to many conventions regulating the conduct of relations between nations. We helped to draft a convention on friendly relations between states. We adhere to the 1961 Vienna convention on diplomatic relations, and participated in establishing the 1963 Vienna convention on consular relations. It was ratified in 1974, not only to protect its own citizens, but also to regularize this aspect of relations between states.

When we consider the next item, fostering respect for international law and treaty obligation, we see that Canada strongly supports the rule of law in international affairs. The strong participation of Canada in the ongoing Law of the Sea conference is an example of our participation in this endeavour.

The fourth item is encouraging the settlement of international disputes by arbitration, which is the most important aspect of this motion. But we must remember that Canada accepts the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. In certain instances we are prepared to accept arbitration as a means of settling international disputes. Arbitration clauses are often included in our bilateral agreements with other countries. Many of the items mentioned in the motion are before us in an ongoing manner.

The hon. member drew to our attention particularly the fifth item in his motion which deals with transferring agreed national powers to world authorities to facilitate world peace. The United Nations is building the framework for such a world order. It is a very slow, one might even say methodical, process. We are in motion on that. But we should remember that in any transferring of national powers to world authorities, the role of the provinces would be paramount, in any consideration of that subject, because some of the powers being considered now lie within provincial jurisdiction.

In closing, I commend the hon. member for his motion, for making a plea for the interparliamentary association to which we belong becoming more vigorous and following the lead of the World Federalist Parliamentary Association in bringing to the floor of the House and before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence their findings, so that all members of the House can share in the activities of these very worth-while associations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the speech and the remarks of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). It sure beat his lectures at the University of Toronto Law School which I attended.

Mr. MacGuigan: You should have heard Atkey's.

Mr. Waddell: I notice the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) sitting opposite. I was spared his lectures.

Mr. Atkey: There is a lot of time.

Mr. Waddell: I applaud the initiative of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville. Had I been permitted, I might have brought some apple pie to the chamber from Jean Pigott's bakery, because the motion is somewhat apple pie-ish, if I can use a term that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) might applaud.

We on this side of the House cannot argue about items (a), (b), (c) and (d) of the motion. They seem to make sense, and we are in favour of those items. Item (e) is the interesting one. It reads as follows:

transferring agreed national powers to world authorities when this would facilitate world peace.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville asked us to put this in the Canadian constitution. It is interesting that he brings up the matter of transferring powers from the Canadian government to the world government in this new constitution of ours at the same time as we see in the House, day after day, the present government transferring powers to the provinces. The clause itself is too vague, and I am sure the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville would agree if he were lecturing in law again. Already we have transferred out of Canada a lot of effective powers and control. For example, we have transferred control of our energy policy outside of Canada.

In the last three weeks in the House we have dealt with the problems of a west coast oil port and a gas pipeline to the United States. We have dealt with the problems of acid rain, and we are about to deal with some communications problems in radio and television and the Americanization of Canadian airwaves and programs. We were supposed to hear from President Carter today, but unfortunately he had to postpone his visit. We were awaiting his arrival because it was necessary to go to him to solve many of our problems. In effect, Canada has transferred a lot of power and control over domestic matters to international authority, mainly American.

Another area I should like to mention is that we have lost control over the flow of information because we transferred computer and transmission data, television broadcasts and control of television influence, to the United States. Last night I met with some American public broadcasters who were here in Ottawa to get some Canadian programs because they had Canadian listeners. So not only is our broadcasting being Americanized, but American stations are interested in Canadian material. Having made those points about the de facto surrender of sovereign Canadian powers to foreign authorities, mainly American, it seems to me that—getting back to world federalism—there is no need for a new constitution. But it is clear that the old one is out of date and that many changes are necessary.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

One of the major ministers of the government, Senator de Cotret, sits in the Senate. As a newcomer and an outsider to Ottawa, this to me is very obscene. A 35-year old man is made a Senator and given a pension for life. Why could that money not be given to people who are in need, such as pensioners or parents of single families?

We can solve some of the immediate problems mentioned in the resolution, such as promoting international peace, maintaining just and honourable relations between nations, and encouraging the settlement of international dispute, by arbitration, without constitutional amendments. We can do this by many of the strategies which have been proposed over the past fews weeks in the House, such as taking control over our own resource revenue, being responsible for our own culture and communication, fashioning an industrial strategy, and taking care of the problems of our own native people. The hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), for example, brought up the horrible situation today of a Canadian war veteran who had died in a very sad state of affairs. Perhaps if these policies were implemented, we would not be slipping away from sovereignty.

I wish to make a point with regard to constitutional reform. I know that the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) has said that the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is concerned and has made this matter a cause in his parliamentary career, but where I come from in the west, constitutional reform is not an important issue. This issue seems to be more important to the people here in Ottawa than it does to the people in the west. Before I became a member of Parliament I met the hon. member for Edmonton South in New York. I have always been an admirer of the hon. member and I hope that some day he gets a chance to be our Secretary of State for External Affairs. I say that very sincerely, because I was impressed as an ordinary citizen seeing him in action in New York.

The hon. member talked about the future and spirit of world government, and that is really what this resolution is about. I share that spirit and that hope that there will be a world government. This has always been a platform of our party, and perhaps of other parties as well. It is important to my party that we have a very strong international association. Indeed, the international socialist meeting was held in Vancouver last year, and that spirit was clearly evident there.

I believe that we will see a world government one day. It may not be in my lifetime, or even in the lifetime of our children, but when it arrives I think that it will come, as the hon. member for Edmonton South stated, through the back door in a functional way, with the social agencies having gradually intertwined themselves through the nations of the world.

Martin Luther King once said, "Through our scientific genius we have made of the world a neighbourhood; now through our moral and spiritual genius we must make it a brotherhood". I believe that this resolution serves that end, and I support it for that reason.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in the moments remaining I would like to be identified with those who have expressed their appreciation to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) for the introduction of this motion. The intention of the motion is, I believe, synonymous with the direction of our times. We live in the reality of a world which thrives on interdependence. It is significant that all five goals referred to are incorporated in the character of the United Nations of which Canada is a founding member. Canada has continually sought to play its part in all aspects of the United Nations.

It is significant that the United Nations is working toward a forum not just for governments, but for parliamentarians who go back to the grassroots level and who would like to help interpret some of these global issues for the people of our world.

Along with two other members of this House it was my privilege to be part of the Canadian parliamentary delegation to the United Nations Inter-Parliamentary Union conference in Sri Lanka at the end of August. There I saw illustrated interdependence. The United Nations had brought together over 66 nations. These nations were not bound to attend because of constitutional change, although in some cases it was for that reason, but through their common covenant in the United Nations. These nations were there to look ahead into the 1980s and to determine how effectively development assistance funds could be used in bettering world order. As a representative of a member nation of the Commonwealth, I was reminded again of our interdependence and our mutual linkage with the Commonwealth. I was mindful that Canada—through the input of CIDA—has, without duress, been sharing in the development programs of the world.

There was one other ingredient that came home to me, and that was the role of the Canadian voluntary community in that partnership and in developments toward a world community. It is my hope that in the forthcoming review of our foreign aid policy we will have an opportunity to give expression to Canada's direction for the 1980s and that coming out of that review, to be held with representatives of all parties and of the other place, there will be a momentum created by the initiatives suggested in relation to the constitution, so that there will be represented the will of the Canadian people at all levels of government and through non-government organizations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
