

enough should be made to return to protection—of the Free Traders should direct to put their threats into execution, they would give them such a demonstration as the world had never seen. But the whole thing was ludicrous in the extreme.— The aristocracy, gentry, young men, &c., of all parties were astounded by a number of the Free Traders, and by a very distinguished white body, the Quakers. (Laughter.) And these were the things that were threatening them while they were acting in the most discreditable (cheers). But there was more than absolute hostility. When they found a sworn member of Her Majesty's Privy Council joining in this threat, they must say, that this was more disgraceful transaction ever heard of. (Laughter.) Then that day they infuriated their master, which should never again be taken down until beneath it every British artisan enjoyed a full, a true, a just, and a fair protection (Loud and long-continued cheering).

After a few words from Mr. G. S. Dewart, Galloway, another question was carried amidst enthusiastic applause.

Lord Richmonde proposed a vote of thanks to the Duke of Richmond, President of the National Assembly. Sir James J. R. Mackenzie seconded.

The motion passed with great cheering.

The Duke of Richmond and he should indeed feel himself unworthy of any position in this country, if, in receiving so great a compliment from the great body of the farmers of England which he saw, he did not feel the greatest gratitude to those who had brought him or rather since the war was at an end, taken every opportunity of associating with the farmers of England. (Cheers.) He knew them well, knew their motives; and, therefore, he recognized from them, whom he had now the honor to address, as well as from the Free Traders, the advantages to be derived from the Rail Road, whenever and wherever they had been constructed. He said that the intentions of the Government of which he was a member had been to offer the franchise to the Free Traders, and that, through this provision, the benefit of the most important article, either under a series of acts, or under a bill of rights, or any other law, was to be given to the Free Traders at large that Protection they would and must have. (Loud cheers.) Would that the Free Traders, with their new convert, Sir James Graham—(Hissing)—could only for one moment listen to the echo of those cheers! It was exactly as far as Nova Scotia, had scarcely turned his back upon his native shores, when he was assailed and injured by the press of this protection. They had not deserved the protection of the Duke of Richmond. But, he said, the (the Duke of Richmond) could explain some of the hostility of these members of Parliament to the landed interest. Did they believe that Sir James Graham, in his speech, had not turned out of the representation of Cumberland? Did they believe that Lord John Russell did not think of his defeat in Huntington? That Lord Palmerston was not aware he was turned out of Hampshire; that his noble friend Lord Grey had forgotten that he was turned out by the farmers of Cumberland? He assured his audience, that in individuals changed their opinion for this; but what he said was, that they felt themselves personally injured. That showed what good judges the farmers were; for they found them out and turned them out. He wished them to carry that principle a little further. ("We will," said one of the speakers); "but that was exactly what he was recommending them to do. He asked them to look at the vote of their country members, and to turn out every one of them who did not vote for Mr. Disraeli's motion. (Cheers.)

He asked them not to pledge their members to make up the sum, but ask them this question—will you support Lord Stanley? If they said "No," then don't have them. They would have no more of this sort of work—a man saying that he was half a Protectionist, and that he would do something for the agricultural interest. They knew that nothing could benefit such a principle as free Protection. He asked them to reject all calls for contributions and to give openly "Yes," when they asked them if they would support Lord Stanley. He would not trouble them more at this moment—("Go on,"
said one of the speakers); "but that was exactly

The meeting then separated, at a quarter past five, having lasted five hours and a quarter.

At the Supplemental Meeting, in St. Martin's Hall, Long-acre, the change was taken by Earl Stanley, Mr. G. F. Young—Captain Viger, M. P., Mr. Bull, of Cambridge, Rev. Charles Day, and several farmers. The resolutions were copies of those adopted at the principal meeting.

THE DINNER.

In the evening, some two or three hundred of the gentlemen who had attended the meeting during the day assembled at the Freemasons' Tavern. There were present Mr. Drury, F. Young (the chairman), the Duke of Richmond, Earl Stanhope, the Earl of Winchilsea, Lord Berner, Sir F. Foxe, Colonel Stithop, M. P., Captain Bennett, M. P., Mr. Brooker, M. P., Captains H. P. H. Green, Esq., Colonel Kitchener, Mr. Butt, Q. C., & Mr. Higgs officiated as toast-master.

The customary loyal, patriotic, and Protectionist toasts were duly honoured, and the party did not separate until a late hour.

Mr. Disraeli's Speech.—The remarkable speech recently delivered by Mr. G. S. Dewart in the House of Commons, has drawn upon that gentleman a torrent of invective from the orators and organists of the Popish party. Mr. Drury made no reply to his own characteristic way,
