Lumbermen and Settlers.

It is said the British Columbia lumbermen who have been at Ottawa asking for a duty of two dollars per thousand feet on lumber, did not get an encouraging reply from the Government. The result of the mission will be made known when the budget is brought down. The case for and against the petition is easily stated. They are undoubtedly deprived of a large market in Manitoba and the Territories because distance and, therefore, freight rates are in favor of their Minnesota competitors. A duty of two dollars per thousand would raise the price of lumber in the Canadian West and enable the British Columbia lumbermen to overcome the greater cost of transportation. But the settlers of Manitoba and the Territories want lumber at the cheapest price. It is the first purchase the immigrant is compelled to make when he takes up land. The average settler is not a rich man, and for a few years he has a great many hardships to bear. A tax on lumber would materially add to his burdens at the time he is least able to carry them. National policy suggests that if the West is to attract population the conditions of life should be made as easy and comfortable as possible for the newcomers. The lumbermen of British Columbia cannot be protected except at the expense of the struggling settlers. It is a choice between the two classes, and it is clearly a case where the interests of the consumers outweigh those of the producers.

Fighting for Her Life.

The war in the far east is essentially a commercial war, in which Japan is fighting for her very existence. Dr. K. Asakawa, a Japanese professor in Dartmouth College, tells in the current issue of the Yale Review, how both the need for more room and food and the possibility of industrial expansion render it a matter of national life or death to Japan that her people and business should not be shut out from the mainland of Asia. During the past thirty years the population of Japan has advanced from 34,000,000 to 46,700,000, exclusive of Formosa, or 57 per cent. About 600,000 are now added every year. The tillable land of Japan does not and cannot support so large a population and the deficit of home-grown food increases with the population. Less than 13 per cent of the land is under cultivation and not more than 25 per cent is capable of cultivation. Intensive methods are already in use, and production cannot be increased in that way. When all the land shall have been brought under tillage the per capita share will be less than one-half an acre—below that of England, a conspicuous example of a country not able to feed itself.

In this situation the Japanese have turned, as the English turned, to manufactures. Last year 84.6 per cent of the exports of Japan were wholly or partly manufactured articles, while her imports, like those of England, are largely food and raw materials. To a nation thus placed, unable to produce its food and materials, increasing rapidly in numbers, advancing with equal or greater rapidity in varied industry, laborious, energetic, industrious, endowed, moreover, with the maritime instincts and gifts of an island race, trade becomes the very breath of their nostrils. They simply cannot live without it. And the natural field for their nearest and most useful trade is the Peninsula of Korea, and the mainland of North-eastern China. Within the last thirteen years the commerce of Japan with East Asia has grown 568 per cent. That is to say, it is more than six times greater than in 1890, and it constitutes nearly one-half of her entire foreign trade. From this source come the bulk of her food and materials. In 1892 she brought from East Asia an insignificant amount of cotton and rice. Last year she imported from that region $35,000,000 in cotton and nearly $10,000,000 in various foods, with $5,000,000 of cakes used as manure.

The enlightened mind of the Japanese perceives that the future of the country depends on trade and on trade as free as possible. It is the instinct of self-preservation that has induced them to proclaim the open door wherever their arms or their influence can prevail. The same instinct prompts them to seek the independence and development of Korea and the progressive development under Chinese rule of Manchuria and Northern China generally. Prof. Asakawa insists that the Japanese seek neither annexation on the mainland nor exclusive privileges, believing that these would bring vexatious conflicts of interest with other powers and entail endless responsibilities. They seek and seek only an open field for the exercise of that intelligence, skill, energy and enterprise which they have proved that they possess in rare degree.

Across the one path to this future so imperatively needed, so ardently desired, forecast and pursued with such extraordinary enlightenment, stands Russia, not only barring the advance of Japan, but threatening her with industrial and political destruction. Russia aims to seize North-eastern Asia, including Korea, to the exclusion, politically and commercially, of all other powers, so far as possible. Russia wants to make Asia tributary above all to Russian power and to Russian trade, to Russian industries; and since the latter are as yet conducted at a disadvantage against those of other leading nations as regards capital and skill, the Russian policy is to bar out foreign competition. These conflicting necessities—that of the Jap who must have colonies and foreign markets, that of the Russian who is bound to keep out foreigners and monopolize markets where she can—were bound to clash desperately the moment they touched each other.

That Confidential Letter.

A great pother has been raised by the opposition over the production of the letter of the promoters of the Grand Trunk Pacific in which they asked for a bonus of $6,400 and 5,000 acres per mile for a line from North Bay to the Pacific coast. This letter was not brought down when the Opposition asked for the correspondence on the question. It was marked confidential by the writers, and the Government treated it as such. During the present session Conservative members of Parliament and Conservative newspapers have intimated that the Grand Trunk was willing to build a line from North Bay to the Pacific coast free of cost to the country. This statement put the Government in a false position. With the consent of the writers of the letter the seal of secrecy was removed, and Mr. Fielding divulged its contents to the House. It was in the nature of a bombshell for "honorable gentlemen opposite," who had professed to favor the original proposition of the Grand Trunk without knowing what it was. That proposition, if accepted, would have cost the country $33,000,000, reckoning the land grant to be worth $3 an acre. The Government is getting a line nearly a thousand miles longer for between $13,000,000 and $15,000,000. No wonder honorable gentlemen opposite are flustered. They profess to be very angry because the letter had not been brought down with the other correspondence. They are really angry because it has seen the light. They accuse Sir Wilfrid Laurier of bad faith in saying he had laid all the correspondence on the table of the House, knowing that this confidential document was not in the batch. Sir Wilfrid would have been guilty of bad faith had he produced it without the consent of the authors. The Government could have no object in concealing it because it is one of the strongest vindications of the Grand Trunk Pacific project.

The fact of the matter is that honorable gentlemen opposite are kicking up a cloud of dust and throwing handfuls at the Premier to divert attention from Mr. Borden's bad break in making use of Mr. Blair's stolen memorandum.

John Morley says the first condition of colonial prosperity is the prosperity of Great Britain. It is certainly in Canada's interest to have her best customer prosperous, but the rule works both ways. The prosperity of Great Britain is becoming increasingly dependent upon the prosperity of her colonies.

THE DECADENT VANDERBILTS.

[Everybody's Magazine.]

If the formation of a permanent aristocracy depended alone on the Vanderbilts the present promise would be shaky. Here is a group of the fourth generation, and the only man of undoubted high intelligence, the strange and disinherited one. If the estate should now disintegrate there would apparently be nothing left but the memory of a great name. Of inward superiority there seems no mark save in Cornelius, who, so to speak, with six or seven millions, is beginning at the bottom again.

The race-current appears very thin now; the only momentum is in the wealth, and if that should be pulverized under a mighty attack by a new swordman, the Vanderbilts would scatter off just like any other American citizens, and the name which for 25 years has been crowded on public attention as the symbol of American splendor and rank would become a past glory.

A GERMAN NIGHTMARE.

[Capt. August Niemann, Berlin.]

"It required the genius of Bismarck to awaken the German Michel to a sense of his power. Shall Germany be content to be depicted as a kicking man for light, for air, and for daily bread, or has she retained some of the power which won her victories?"

"Will the three powers which stood together after Japan's victory over China to thwart England's plans—Germany, France and Russia remain longer idle, or will they combine for their mutual benefit?"

I see in spirit the armies and navies of Germany, France and Russia advancing against the common enemy, which, like a polydip encircles the world with its web of intrigues.

The irresistible onset of the three allied powers releases the whole of Europe from its suffocating embrace. The future bears the great war in its womb. . . . I look into the future and am mindful of the duties and tasks of my country.

"My dreams of Germany bring clearly before me the war and the victory of three allied great nations, Germany, France and Russia, and the fresh transportation of the possession of the world."

ARRESTED AS A SPY

Colonel in English Army Gets Into Trouble in France.

Paris, June 6.—A colonel in the English artillery, whose name is not given, is reported to have been arrested for espionage in the Island of Belle Isle, close to one of the forts.

The colonel, it is stated, visited the island after providing himself with a map as a guide, and, having made observations on the east coast of the island, where numerous works of defense are situated, proceeded to make a survey of the fortifications of the Grand Rock.

His description was forwarded to the local police from a point, where his movements had excited suspicion.

Dublin, June 6.—Two men attempted to wreck a Jewish shop in Henry street, Lincolns, where the anti-Jewish crusade reported some time ago is still in progress.

CATTLE EXPORT FIGURES.

Montreal, June 6.—The cattle shipments from the port of Montreal during the month of May, this year, though much below those of the same month last year, are well above those in the same month for some years previous. The season opened just one week later, and shipments of cattle amounted to 13,365, as against 22,778 last year. This year there were 23 steamers, compared with 34 last year. The highest figure in the three years previous to last year, in the same month, were 12,903. The reason of this falling off, as compared with last year, is that the ports of Boston and Portland were closed last year. The outlook is for a good season from this port, owing to the large number of cattle the Grand Trunk is bringing from Chicago.

Going for Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

Don't put yourself in this man's place, but keep a bottle of this remedy in your home. There is nothing so good for Colic, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery and Diarrhoea. It is equally valuable for Summer Complaint and Cholera Infantum and has saved the lives of more children than any other medicine in use.

When reduced with water and sweetened it is pleasant to take.

You, or some one of your family, are sure to need this remedy sooner or later and when that time comes you will need it badly; you will need it quickly. Why not buy it now and be prepared for such an emergency? Price, 35 cents.

KNOWING TOO MUCH.

[By the author of "Letters of a Self-Made Merchant to His Son."]

"Some men fail from knowing too little; but more fail from knowing too much, and still more from knowing it all."

Never ask a man what he knows, but what he can do. A fellow may know everything that's happened since the Lord started the ball to rolling, and not be able to do anything to help keep it from stopping. But when a man can do anything, he's bound to know something worth while. Books are all right, but dead men's brains are no good unless you mix a live one's with them. It isn't what a man's got in the bank, but what he's got in his head that makes him a great merchant. Rob a miser's safe and he's broke; but you can't break a big merchant with a jimmy and a stick of dynamite. The first would have to start again just where he began—hoarding up pennies; the second would have his principal asset intact. But accumulating knowledge or piling up the past is just to have a little more of either than the next fellow is a fool game that no bread-gauge man has time enough to sit in. Too much learning, like too much money, makes most men narrow."

SOMETHING JUST AS GOOD.

[Hamilton Times.]

If the increase in the price of sardines and porthouse steak induces the people to eat so-called inferior and cheaper cuts the increase will not be an unmixed evil. Steak is not more healthful than other parts of the beef, although perhaps more palatable. But with the aid of the three domestic sciences teaching appetizing dishes may be made out of those portions of the animal the price of which has not risen. To popularize the cheaper cuts would be a great triumph for the science.

FIGHTING FOR A NAME.

"You can just let up on that kind of talk," Bill retorted, with a dangerous flash in his eyes. "I'm not going to be blamed for a thing that you would have been just as likely to do yourself. But," clenching his fist with sudden passion, "you may let your boots I will take it out of that proud beggar for spoiling our kettle of fish," and he concluded his sentence with a volley of oaths and curses too vile to be recorded.

"You say he has a position in the National Bank," Ned remarked after a thoughtful pause.

"Yes."
"A position of trust?"
"I don't know whether he has or not, neither do I care," irritably responded Ned's implacable foe.

"Well, I mean to find out; and who knows—"

He bent forward and whispered something which appeared to electrify Bill, and put new vim and courage in him.

"That's so!" he cried, a fiendish expression lighting his features. "I never thought of that! You're a rum one, Gould! Zounds, that would be cheek like the one they've just done us out of. But it will take time."

"Of course, all such undertakings should be conducted slowly and carefully; meantime we must work the 'pump' for all it is worth. It is a good thing, in spite of our having been so long clear of it, the only objectionable feature in it is the way we came by the invention. If we can only organize a stock company, and then sell out our interests to the other shareholders, it will be a good thing for us. It is hardly possible that Hunting may have friends somewhere, who will be looking him up by and bye; so the quicker we get the thing off our hands, the better after making something handsome out of it, the better it will be for us."

"That is so; but how?" Bill inquired thoughtfully.

"Well, you must work the pump business here in Boston and New York while I throw my arts around this aspirant for bank honors."

"How long will it take you, do you imagine?"

"Months—perhaps a year; I cannot tell. I suspect the fellow of the incurable sore, and I shall have to accomplish by strategy what I should never gain by direct overtures," Mr.
Gould reflectively observed. "I should like to be rather slow business," Bill remarked, with a frown, "and I've got to have money—money—I'm dead broke," he concluded, with a covert glance into the other's face.

"But I gave you fifty only the day before yesterday," Bill said.

"I know it," was the half-defiant reply, "but I had to have a dress suit for that party, and the tailor wouldn't let it out without half the price being paid down, and a promise of the rest within a week. Besides, my hotel bill is due."

Mr. Gould pulled out a well-filled pocketbook, which Bill eyed with envious glance, and taking a couple of tens from the pile of crisp bills, handed them to him.

"Now, mind," he said sharply, "you are not going to bleed me often like this; don't say money to me again for a month."

Bill seized the notes eagerly, and he thrust them into his pocket and then the two men separated. Mr. Gould went up Summer, toward Washington street, as his companion turned off into Chauncy street.

Mr. Gould walked slowly and with head bent, apparently absorbed in the development of some important scheme.
He must manage to get acquainted with this youngster, he muttered, "and try to disabuse his mind of the belief that I have anything in common with his old acquaintance, Bill Hunting. He would instantly distrust me if he suspected that we are pals. If I can manage it—it will be a rare chance."

He broke off suddenly, for just then he turned the corner of a street, and found himself face to face with the man with the object of his thoughts.

Ned had been sent to a store to pay a bill, and was just coming out as Gould came along.

"I beg your pardon now," the man said, smiling, and with much courtesy, "but I am a stranger in the city—can you direct me to Court Square?"

"Certainly," Ned replied. "I have an errand myself in that vicinity and will show you the way."

"My name is Gould," the stranger explained, by way of introduction, as he turned to accompany him. "Albert Gould."

He began conversing with him in a genial, affable way, and Ned was highly entertained, in spite of the feeling of repugnance, which he had at first experienced toward him upon seeing him in Bill Hunting's company.

His manner was polished, his language well chosen, and witty at times, while it was evident that he had traveled a great deal and had been a keen observer.

Before they reached Court Square, Ned's dislike and suspicion had all vanished, and he began to feel quite interested in the "extremely entertaining gentleman."

Finally Ned paused before a building.

ing for this is Court Square," he remarked, actually regretting that he must part with his pleasant companion.
"I have an errand here and I must bid you good morning."

"Ah, so our walk is ended!" the man returned with a note of regret in his tones. "But I thank you very much, young man, for your courtesy." Then he added, with a little deprecating smile, "I wonder if I might trespass still further upon your kindness?"

"Certainly, sir; I shall only be too glad if I can be of any service to you."

Ned returned politely.

"Well, then—they say a man is always thinking of something to eat"— this with a genial smile and a roughish twinkle in his eyes, "I do not always find it convenient to go to my hotel at noon, and eating in a noisy restaurant makes me nearly crazy. Can you direct me to some quiet place where I can get a good lunch, and one convenient to the business centers?"

Ned laughed with amusement.

"I am the last person to direct you to a place of that kind," he said, "for I am obliged to go upon very economical plan in providing for my inner man. But if you are not epicurean in your tastes—if you would be satisfied with plain food, well-cooked, I know of a very quiet, clean place, where the prices are moderate, too."

"I am sure that will suit me," the man responded eagerly.

Ned gave him the street and number, which he carefully noted down in an elegant little Russian leather memorandum book, with a heavy gold pencil set with a blood-stone all of which Ned's keen eyes took in at a single glance.

"I go there to get my dinner," he remarked, "and find myself very well served."

Mr. Gould's eyes flashed with a sudden gleam of triumph.

This information was just what he had been angling for, and he was well pleased to have obtained it with so little trouble.

He thanked Ned and remarked:
"I shall give the place a trial, and perhaps I shall have the pleasure of meeting you again there some day. By the way," he added, as if he thought had but just occurred to him, "won't you kindly tell me to whom I am indebted for this favor?"

"My name is Richard Heatherton," Ned briefly responded.

"That is a high-sounding name, young man, and, if I am not mistaken, you will do credit to it. Now, good-morning, and thank you again," and the polished Mr. Gould bowed to Ned with the best of courtesy, as if he had been the governor of the state, and went on his way.

"I do not believe he can be a bad sort of a man, even if he was with Bill Hunting," Ned murmured, as he mounted the stairs leading to the office where he had business.

"Hum!—Heatherton! Bill said he went by the name of Wallingford!" thought the stranger, with a perplexed air, as, after leaving Ned, he retraced his steps to Washington street.

Required Help to Move in Bed

WAS A GREAT SUFFERER AND ALMOST IN DESPAIR - NEW HOPE AND STRENGTH CAME WITH THE USE OF

NERVE FOOD.

This great food cure is doing wonders for weak, worn-out and discouraged people.

Many medicines which are prescribed in such cases are merely stimulants which give temporary relief and arouse false hope.

Because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food actually forms new, rich blood and increases the vitality of the body, its benefits are thorough and lasting and its cures permanent.

Mrs. M. A. Clock, Meaford, Ont., writes: "Three years ago I became very much run down in health and suffered from weak, tired feelings, indigestion and nervousness. At times I was so badly used up that I required help to move in bed. While sick and downhearted I received Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and then sent for some of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

"Under this treatment I soon began to improve, and by the time I had used eleven boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was happy to find myself strong and well again. I often think of what a lot of money I spent for medicines which did me no good, and believe I owe my life to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I will hope women who suffer as I did will benefit by my experience and use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

A European writer has discovered that the "cure" city has been a popular odor. Paris is pervaded by a faint odor aroma of garlic greets the new arrival its own, cranberries of peculiar pungency. St. Petersburg suggests old leather boots.

HE NEVER KNEW FAILURE—Careful observation of the effects of Parment's Vegetable Pills has shown that the cause of the disease is the disorder of the system, and stimulate them to healthy action. There may be cases in which the disease has been long seated and does not easily yield to medicine, but even in such cases these Pills have been known to bring relief when all other remedies have failed. These "assertions" can be substantiated by many who have used the Pills, and medical men speak highly of their qualities.

the stable won the Seagram Cup and a number of other events. In the harness pair, with 15.3 hands, Falkirk and Kirk Maiden, Mrs. Beck won second.

In the single harness contest, under 15.3 hands, Lady Norfolk came third.
The did not make it in the judging of saddle horses, 15.25 hands. In the heavyweight green hunters, Black Night won third. Sparkle won the championship for harness horses, and Falkirk and Westminster Belle won the sporting tandem, and the latter also won the "champion" for harness horses.
These were all of the winnings of the

BASEBALL OF A VARIETY SERVED UP AT TECUMSEH PARK

Rockets Lose to the Londons by a Score of 1 to 0—Little Hitting, Good Fielding.

Baseball of the major league variety, and yet not played by professionals, was served up to the fans in one of the games at Tecumseh Park on Saturday afternoon. It was in the game between the Londons and the Rockets, in which the score stood 1 to 0 in favor of the champions, that the fine brand of ball was seen. The most striking feature of the battle was the work of both pitchers. In the seven innings London secured only two hits off Jackson, while the Rockets only secured two more off Gibson, making a total of six for the game. Both twirlers were of particularly fine form. It was in the fourth inning that the Londons made their hit, which was a single by Jackson, who one hit by pitcher—in this inning, O'Rourke got four while one and a half was hit by the ball. Then Graham made a clean drive to center field, and under the ball he started for the plate, which he reached by a fast run. In the last half of the sixth inning, when the Rockets would tie the score, Jackson made a clean drive to center and came around to second on Hosie's hit to right field. When Jackson came to bat, and hit the ball down towards first base. From some parts of the stand it looked as if the ball had battered run to first, where he was called out. Jackson, in the meantime, had reached third, and when the ball was thrown to first base to catch De-wan, he attempted to make home. Wan-less, however, made a quick return to the plate, and Jackson was out. The umpire, Mr. Albert Smith, called Jackson out, and this stirred up a horrible nest. The crowd gathered about the umpire, insisting that the drive by Dewan was outside the foul line, but the umpire held to his decision, and the number of the Rockets' rooters, who so far forgot themselves as to call insulting names at the umpire, and created the nearest exhibition to rowdyism that has been witnessed at Tecumseh Park this year.

A slight accident happened in the earlier part of the game. While attempting to get Gibson in a "box behind the bases," Wilson was struck in the eye with the ball. He escaped serious injury.

The Blue Labels had the misfortune to be without their third baseman in their game with the McClarys, Mc-Garry, who not a regular player by any means, appeared to be unfamiliar with the team and surroundings, and the sixth and seventh innings were played. The McClarys line secured one run in the first. Edwards earned it.
He hit to left field, then stole second.
Barrett, of the Blue Labels, is looked upon as the equal of any of the other pitchers in the league. He pitched well, and was able to get him twice. In the fifth the Labels tied the score and in the sixth and seventh innings they led one. In the seventh, however, the foundrymen, aided by a couple of errors and a pass, were able to get three times—another instance of the good luck of McGinnity. Neither Harper nor McGinnity has lost a game this year.

St. Louis and Boston played twelve innings, a two bagger and a wild throw giving St. Louis the winning run.
Pittsburg warmed up towards the close of the play and won what for a time looked like Brooklyn's game.
The tail ends in the National—the Phillies—were easy for Chicago, the tail batting McPherson will win in the American league. Detroit had another taste of its poor luck, when it lost to the Highlanders. Chester was hit safely by three runs.
Boston bunched hits in the third and won from Cleveland—3 to 2.

Washington won a game. It was from Chicago, at Chicago. What adds more to the White Sox's humility.
It was a shut out.

Philadelphia played an errorless game, Philadelphia out-kicked the home team.

THE BATTLE OF THE CHAMPIONS.
HOLDS 80 CHAMPIONSHIPS

Thomas F. Kieley, the champion all-round athlete of Great Britain and Ireland and the present holder of several English and Irish championships, has reached New York. He came to take part in the all-round championship games in St. Louis. Before going there, however, he will make his initial appearance at the games at Celtic Park, New York.

Kieley has a long record. He captured the Irish championship title every year the event was held, and it was finally abolished when no competitors were forthcoming to oppose the "Carriekman."

He is the holder of 80 championships the last quarter determined to do or the Athletics' goal a game was fluked in, leaving the score 2 to 1 in favor of the visitors, with about ten minutes to play. The Brantfords commenced to play rag, but just before the time St. Catharines sent the ball in the net and the game ended a tie—two all. The spectators were very anxious to have to call the game a draw, to have the Rockets and the Athletics at a later date off on neutral grounds at a later date.

NEITHER PITCHER HAS LOST GAME

Equally Good Records in the National.

Cincinnati scored in the first, New York tied in the ninth, and each team got its second run in the eleventh.
Cincinnati got ten hits off McGinnity, while Harper was hit safely only three times—another instance of the good
