'Those who sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him." The hireling, weary of his load, Longs to behold the evining sun; And there remains a bless'd abode, To cheer us when our race is run. What privilege! to see the stream That bounds the worlds fo faith and sight ; To catch the first inspiring gleam Of heav'n's unfolding visions bright. To feel our tenement decline, Our tabric shake without a sigh, Supported by a hope divine, The hope of Immortality ! At length to pass the barrier dread ! The pang of parting scarce perceiv'd ; And while survivors' tears are shed To be, by Christ, with smiles receiv'd : To sleep in Jesus !- rapturous thought To close in peace our mortal days, Safe to the heav'nly Canaan brought, To join the anthems Angels raise To sleep in Jesus! what delight! Increasing still and evermore : To mingle with the saints in light. And be as pure and happy too; To dread no pain, to know no care, No sin or frailty to molest ; And on each glorious object there To see Eternity imprest !

There was a child, a helpless child Full of vain fears and fancies wild, That often wept and sometimes smiled Upon its mother's breast;

Feebly its meaning stammered out, And tottered tremblingly about, And knew no wider world without Its little home of rest.

There was a boy, a light-heart boy, One whom no troubles could annoy, Save some lost sport, or shattered toy, Forgotten in an hour ; No dark remembrance troubled him, No future fear his path could dim. But joys before his eyes would swim.

And hope rise like a tower.

There was a youth, an ardent youth. Full of high promise, courage, truth; He felt no scathe, he knew no ruth, Save love's sweet wound alone : He thought but of two soft blue eyes, He sought no gain but beauty's prize, And sweeter held love's saddest sighs, Thaa music's softest tones.

There was a man, a wary man, Whose bosom nursed full many a plan. For making life's contracted span A path of gain and gold ; And how to sow and how to reap, And how to swell his shining heap, And how the wealth acquired to keep Secure within its fold.

There was an old, grey-haired one, On whom had fourscore winters done Their work appointed, and had spun His thread of life so fine, That scarce its thin line could be seen. And with the slightest touch, I ween, 'Twould be as it had never been,

ACCIDENT AT THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS IN THE REGENT'S PARK.—On Wednesday morning, soon after eight o'clock, John Gir-ling, the keeper of the reptiles, lost his life by an act of imprudence on his own part that he most improperly began to play with some of the most venomous serpents, and actually removed one of them, the Indian cobra di casello, from its cage.
