M. C. CAMERON'S EXPOSURES.

On our second page this week we give the full text of the speech made by Mr. M. C. Cameron, M. P., on Tory corruption and the maintenance of the present Dominion Administration by the policy of plunder. This speech is taken from the corrected official report of the House, and is a magazine of information so far as the exposure of the corrupt methods of the Government is concerned. We would advise our readers—Grit and Tory—to read it. When last Mr. Cameron, at Brucefield, Wingham and other points, took up this phase of the political situation, the Tory press all over the country denied his assertions, and denied that he had made any charge on the floor of Parliament. They stated that "there was no such thing as Mr. Cameron's going to Brucefield, Wingham and other points to make any charge on the floor of Parliament." When, however, the members for West Huron arose in his place in Parliament and not only formulated the charges of venality, exposed the policy of plunder, and drove home the truth in regard to Governmental mismanagement, but also exposed the public domain and treasure to hangmen on political leeches, partisan blood suckers, and members of Parliament who had turned their backs on the people, and were ready to sell their votes for a bribe, and to vote for a time in the camp, and for a time to give testimony at the first calling of the case. The article mentioned only the first case of Mr. Cameron, and said regarding it, "The neighbors have informed me the evidence was straight as a string." Yet in the face of that, I understand one of the witnesses in the Wednesday case, named Scobie, is satisfied that his testimony fills the bill. As I presented it, and how far gone with a big G. in consequence. As I said before, the prototype of a witness in an article written on Monday can hardly have been taken from a case tried the following Wednesday; still if this man Scobie is satisfied that he is the kind of a man delineated (notwithstanding a denial by the editors, as I am vitally led to believe) why for one an not going to get my own skin up against his. This man Scobie either told the truth or lied when he was in the witness-box. If he told the truth he has nothing to find fault with; if he didn't, well, he's to be pitied; but he has no business to put on a cap that is never intended for him. My word has drawn attention to an unfortunate condition of affairs that has existed since the first Scott's Act was heard in Canada, and if it will have the effect of making witnesses in Huron less flippant, I'll be satisfied to listen to a little occasional "widening" from "self-convicted" kickers.

—And I've been informed by several of the neighbors that the aforesaid Scobie is going to "punch the head" of the editor of THE SIGNAL, or words to that effect, for allowing my article to be inserted. Well, I wouldn't advise Mister Scobie to try that on. There are two parties to a fight—the man who looks the other chap, and the man who gets licked. I am pretty well acquainted with the editor, and I know he can't run worth a cent, although he has had men rise in their wrath at various times and threaten to smite him. He graduated in a pretty hot corner of the vineyard, and although "slow to anger is quick to act," and if he undertook to go into the "knocking" business, I verily believe he would turn right up with care. Of Scobie's pugilistic propensities I know nothing personally, and have no overwhelming anxiety to have my friend the editor test his prowess; but I do know that he abused one of his workmen a short time ago and was knocked down for his pains, after which he was satisfied with his experience as a fighter, and was constrained to call in the majesty of the law to punish the man who had downed him. Now, that isn't a good fighting record, and I don't think the editor will climb a tree or leave the limits just at present. To use a homely expression we used to have on the farm, "He's lived too long in the woods to be scared by the howling of an owl."

And this reminds me that this fighting business is a bad line. I've known in the olden times a heap of trouble to emanate from it. The most brawny blackguard is not always the "best man," and I question very much if Charles A. Dana, of the New York Sun, is not a far "better man," so far as the interests and well-being of his country are concerned, than John L. Sullivan, the famous Boston professor of pugilism, although the latter could take the former up with one hand and stand him on his head without the slightest trouble. No, siree; this "best man" business tested by brute force is no good, and no decent man will go into it to right his supposed grievances. It's of more consequence now-a-days that a man should have a level head than that his hand should be as large and as heavy as an ax head. Do you catch on?

The election of Ald. Presentaine in the Tory stronghold of Chabilly looks like the handwriting on the wall so far as Dominion elections in Quebec are concerned. Exit, Chabilly!

WHAT'S UP?

Things That Are Happening Around Us.

He Still Lives—Plain Talking on Straight Issues.—"The Mind's the Measure of the Man."

"All alive, fresh and still alive," as the fisherman said of his Labrador herring, is my condition notwithstanding the breathings of threatening and slaughter that have been hurled at the devoted head of yours truly during the past week. And it gives me infinite pleasure to be able to chronicle the fact that my esteemed associates in the upholding of law and order (the editor) still lives, and moves, and has his being, and preserves his scalp-lock intact. An attempt has been made to cleave the apple of discord in our midst, to raise aloft the death's head and crossbones, and to make us all believe that Goderich is no abiding place for the good, the true and the beautiful, of whom I have endeavored to be the advocate for some time past. What I mean to say is that there's agitation in the air, agony in the breezes that blow, and blood on the face of the moon, owing to the description I gave last week of a few specimens of witnesses who testify in liquor cases. Now, it isn't necessary for me to reproduce the article, but if this explanation of mine doesn't settle the matter, I'll reproduce it for the benefit of my readers and take my vote on the question, as to whether any personal application was made. In the first place, I have to write my article early in the week, or it runs a chance of being crowded out, and to save my readers from bitter disappointment I am particular about placing the manuscript in the printer's hands, while the week is yet young. Last week I wrote the article Monday evening, and I have been informed by the foreman of the newspaper, that it was in type on Tuesday—that is to say, while the witnesses on the second McBride case were dodging around to avoid giving testimony at the first calling of the case. The article mentioned only the first case of Mr. Cameron, and said regarding it, "The neighbors have informed me the evidence was straight as a string." Yet in the face of that, I understand one of the witnesses in the Wednesday case, named Scobie, is satisfied that his testimony fills the bill. As I presented it, and how far gone with a big G. in consequence. As I said before, the prototype of a witness in an article written on Monday can hardly have been taken from a case tried the following Wednesday; still if this man Scobie is satisfied that he is the kind of a man delineated (notwithstanding a denial by the editors, as I am vitally led to believe) why for one an not going to get my own skin up against his. THE I.O.O.F. EXCURSION.

The Ips and Downs of a Trip to Port Huron—A Lively Little Yankee City.

Tuesday morning last some 500 passengers boarded the United Empire at this port to proceed on the I.O.O.F. excursion to Port Huron. The boat was late in arriving, and was nearly two hours after the advertised time in leaving Goderich. This and the further fact that the wind was high and the late lumpy miller somewhat against the number of the excursionists. The trip down occupied about six hours, and many of the excursionists rejoiced when they got in sight of Point Edward, and came ashore at Port Huron, facing the Canadian town of Sarnia. The Empire was high out of water, and as a consequence rolled heavily on the down trip, the result being that a large number of the excursionists fell victims to the influence of SEA SICKNESS.

If there had not been so many in the same predicament and if the victims had not exhibited so pitiable a condition, the way in which some of the stricken ones gave themselves up to the horrors of despair, would have looked very ludicrous. Sea-sickness is a good leveller, and will take the dignity out of a person quicker than anything else we know of.

was reached about 3:15 p.m., and the large majority of the passengers disembarked, and proceeded up town for luncheon. Port Huron is pretty well spread out and has a population of about 9,000. It is a fine city, and the various religious denominations are represented by good places of worship. The main streets are paved with blocks, but the side streets do not seem to do so. DREADFUL ACCIDENT.

Miss Stewart and Daughter, Formerly of Stanley, Burned to Death in Dicks.

When death results from natural causes it is sad enough, but when it is the result of accident it becomes much more lamentable. A letter was received from Vivian, Dak., under date of the 21st inst., which conveys the sad intelligence that Mrs. W. Stewart and her daughter, Lou, aged about five years, were so terribly burned that they have died from their injuries. It seems that the little girl attempted to start the kitchen fire, but as it did not burn very well, Mrs. Stewart took the coal oil can and was pouring oil on the flames, when the oil caught fire, exploding the burning oil on both mother and daughter, setting their clothes on fire. As there was not one else around the house at the time, and they both died after seven hours' terrible suffering, the daughter dying about five minutes before her mother, who was not aware of the death of her child. The son, who wrote the particulars of this sad affair to a friend here, states that his father is nearly heart-broken, and the neighbors have been exceedingly kind, doing everything possible to ameliorate his circumstances.

Mr. W. Stewart was for years a tenant on one of Mr. Waldron's farms, London road, Stanley, and only removed to Dakota last spring, having the most cheering prospects ahead of him. His wife was about 45 years of age, and was loved as a neighbor and friend. She had many acquaintances here, who will regret very deeply to learn of the lamentable death of herself and daughter, and there are no bounds to the sympathy that will be expressed for Mr. Stewart.

WHAT AILS SCOBIE?

"Oh He's all Right, Only He Labors under a Delusion."

As D. McGillicuddy, of THE SIGNAL, was on his way home Friday evening last, he stopped at the corner of South street and the Square to converse with Geo. B. Cox, of the British Exchange hotel, about some general topics. Shortly after that, John Scobie, one of the witnesses in a recent whisky case, came up and joined the party uninvited. Quoth he to the editor:

"Mr. McGillicuddy, are you the man that runs the d—, d, thirty sheets that's printed on North street?"

"To which the reply was coolly made, 'I'm the editor of THE HURON SIGNAL.'"

Scobie—"What make you print in that I didn't tell the truth—that I perjured myself—that I didn't know what good liquor was—that I couldn't give straight evidence—that—"

McGillicuddy—"I didn't print anything of the kind about you."

Scobie—"It's a d—, d, he."

McGillicuddy—"It's nothing of the kind, and you don't know what you're talking about."

Scobie—"You give the names of witnesses in your paper, and you publish a pack of d—, d, lies."

McGillicuddy—"If you mean the second McBride case, we published what you swore to; for the evidence and witnesses' names are taken from the clerk's records."

Scobie—"What clerk's?"

McGillicuddy—"The magistrate's clerk—William Campbell."

Scobie—"Well, what have you got in the 'Town Happenings,' on the front page?"

McGillicuddy—"Nothing about you, although you appear anxious to take it to yourself."

Scobie—"You're a d—, d, liar, and I can lick you d—, d, quick."

McGillicuddy—"You can do nothing of the kind, and you know it."

Scobie then raised his left arm as if to strike, but McGillicuddy merely put his arms in front of his breast and stood out from the wall, so that he would not receive a recoil blow from the brickwork in case of a sudden onslaught by Scobie.

At this juncture Geo. B. Cox stepped between the men, and said "Gentlemen, don't quarrel about the matter here."

McGillicuddy said, "I don't want any quarrel, but I won't be bullied by this fellow."

Scobie then became howlingly brave, and swore he was going to "smash" his opponent, and began to call out the vilest and most abominable epithets that a low blackguard could utter.

McGillicuddy, who had been standing between Cox and the wall, now stepped around beside him on the centre of the sidewalk and said to Scobie, "You are a nice man to pretend to be the respectable head of a family, to be using filthy language of such a nature. You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

Scobie came forward, and facing McGillicuddy said, "None of your d—, d, sanctimonious talk to me."

McGillicuddy replied, "I am not giving sanctimonious talk, but know what is right and decent. You'll hear from me tomorrow."

Scobie—"I can hear from you any time. Come down to the barn and I'll settle it d—, d, quick."

McGillicuddy—"No; I'm no low blackguard, and I'll not make one of myself by going down to the barn with you. I'm surprised at a man like you, who ought to occupy a reputable position in society, becoming a cat-fighter for a man who is too cowardly to do his own fighting on this whiskey business."

Scobie—"I'm no d—, d, low sucker, and I pay for all the whiskey I drink."

McGillicuddy—"Perhaps you're not, but it's mighty strange you can't speak to the last fact when you're placed in the witness box."

This reply seemed to daunt Scobie, for he leaned back against the wall and failed to retort, and McGillicuddy seeing that he had touched a weak spot in the fellow, after waiting in vain for any further exhibition of bile, quietly turned on his heel and walked off.

And so ended the first meeting.

Mr. McGillicuddy has not yet taken to the woods.

PORT ALBERT.

Mrs. J. O'Connor and child returned to her home in Detroit last week.

Mrs. W. J. Given spent last week in Dunlop, the guest of Mrs. Allen.

Miss E. McMillan has returned from a visit to friends in Goderich.

Miss J. Carrick, of Kintail, is the guest of Miss M. McMillan.

The Gordon arrived in port with a load of stone for the bridge, but the stone, not being of suitable quality, had to be returned.

Mr. Mahaffy has shipped several loads of lumber by his schooner Enterprise to Goderich recently.

The great mill is idle at present, the water having to be lowered during the building of the abutments.

Mr. Mahaffy is, we understand, in a position to oblige customers by exchanging flour or feed for grain.

Our pathmaster should have the culvert on London road near the school house repaired, or direct the attention of the representative of this ward to it. It is in a very dangerous state, and being right on the public road, it is a wonder that some accident has not occurred there before this.

CHAPTER XXIV. (Continued.)

"I must confess," said the diary, "that I was thoroughly put out of temper by Miss D.'s interference. But there was worse to come. It seems that I am universally regarded as a sort of dry nurse, mentor, tutor—heaven knows what—to my cousin; and instead of going straight to him the good folks here come to me with his delinquencies. I had turned into the village when I was accosted, at his own garden gate, by the parish minister, Mr. Macdonald. He is a grey-haired, stern-looking man, with a great sense of duty—but also, I should imagine, a very tender heart. I had seen him several times during Bertie's illness. 'Will you step in for a few minutes?' he said. 'There's a little matter I want to talk over with you.'"

or with him after a scene of that kind. Let me set down what passed between us while the memory of it is fresh, so that I may not afterwards be deluded into thinking either that I myself was peculiarly patient, or that he would hear reason. "He came in, as I expected, about six o'clock, utterly flustered and worried. A bad moment for my remonstrance; but I had been too much irritated during the day to think of postponing it. (N. B.—My first mistake. I made plenty more before I had done.) "He did not seem satisfied by the results of his visit, whatever they may have been; and, after dinner, he threw himself down on the sofa in a dispirited sort of way and took up a newspaper. We had spoken little during our meal; I had waited until we were quite alone before I began to say what I had to say. Then—mistake number two—I made a formal opening, which put him on guard at once. "If you are at liberty, I said, 'I should be glad of a few minutes' conversation with you.' "He flung down his newspaper with an impatient groan. 'Oh, it's come at last, has it?' he said. 'I've been expecting it. Well, go on, Anthony.' "You have been expecting me to say what I think of your conduct during the last week or two, have you? I asked. "Exactly. Out with it, as fast as you can and get it over. Only I forewarn you, I mean to answer no questions. "If that is the case, I might as well hold my tongue. "I wish to heaven, Anthony, he said with sudden seriousness, 'that you would.' "This is absurd, I said, in a tone which I know now to have been far too authoritative. 'You must answer me, I have a right to ask questions, and I claim to be answered.' "What right? I asked. "For a moment I was silent. I had the right, and I had the claim, but he did not know the full extent of either. And I did not want him to know. I answered rather lamely, 'I am older than you. I am your nearest relation. I have some right to know what you are doing.' "Oh, yes, you are my heir, said he lightly. 'I had forgotten that. But I am not doing anything prejudicial to your interests.' "I am not considering my own interests, I said, drawing myself away from his touch. You cannot wish me to expose myself to such reproach as the one you have favored me with. You and I meet for the last time as friends unless you will give me some assurance that you have not acted, and do not mean to act, dishonorably. "His face changed. He flushed violently and then he grew pale. He looked at me for a few seconds, silently, with set lips and contracted brows. 'Do me a favor, he then said, 'that you require any such assurance from me?' "After the way that you have behaved lately, I cried, 'you may think your self lucky if all your assurances acquit you in the world's eyes. For myself I may believe you, but I doubt if others will.' "Then I might as well spare myself the trouble,' he said quietly, and with an entire air of self-command. "What if I said, you refuse me your word?" "Most certainly I do. Your mode of asking for it is offensive. If you cannot trust me without assurances, you are not likely to do so with them. "We part then?" "That must be as you please," he said. "Once more I turned to go. Again he detained me—this time by a question. "Before you go have you any specific charge to bring against me? You have spoken vaguely. What do you think I am doing?" "I think, I said brutally, 'that you have fallen in love with Mrs. Drummond, are you going to jilt Lady Lillias Ruthven for Mrs. Drummond's sake.' "Ah, he said in the coolest possible tone. 'Thanks. I thought as much.' "And allow me to tell you, I continued, 'that if you do this thing you will be guilty of the blackest treachery that man could devise. Lady Lillias Ruthven has been unkind enough, from all accounts, to give you her affections; she has borne trouble and pain and banishment on your account; and yet you—after five or six months' separation from her—you can bear to insult her, to mortify her, by throwing her over for a milliner's apprentice with a pretty face and a dubious history?' "That's enough. Don't insult a woman of whom you know nothing," he said, abruptly. "Are you so infatuated? I asked. 'A word against this girl is enough to rouse you, is it? I am sorry for it. Some men would have been so angry before this—by being accused of such an act of ignominious treachery at all. You could bear that, if it seems. It needs a word against your own mistress.' "Are you mad, Anthony? he cried. But I went on. "Mad! I have been mad indeed to think that a spark of honor and manliness existed in you. I have tested you long enough. You are unworthy of the position I have let you hold—so far. If you had behaved with common honesty and fairness I would never have lifted a finger to turn you out. But you don't deserve it. You are not fit to have other men's fortunes in your hand. Glenberrie belongs to me, and before God I swear that I will have it." "I clutched the table as I spoke, for the room seemed to reel before my eyes. For a moment or two I could neither see nor hear distinctly. He uttered an exclamation of anger or astonishment—I know not which; but when I came to myself I saw that he was standing on the other side of the table, regarding me with anything but anger in his face. Indeed, there was something in it not unlike pity and anxiety, instead of the indignation I had expected to confront.

He was singularly pale, but after a few minutes' silence he spoke calmly. "If Glenberrie is yours by law," he said, 'I shall be only too glad to give it up. Do you mean that you can substantiate this claim?' "I can—and I will." "He bowed his head. 'I desire nothing better,' he said simply. Then, while I stood panting a little with the overwhelming rush of emotion which my own words had caused me, confused, half-blinded thoughts, he went on with a dignity of manner which struck me even at that moment as something new and noteworthy. Where did he get it from, I wonder? In some man I should have said that it came from a consciousness of integrity; but in this case—no, that could not be. Before you go," he said, 'let me give you a word of warning. It is possible that we may never meet again as friends by terms, because, as you know, you will have to take back what you have said to-night before it can be forgotten or forgiven; but one thing I will say first. You have had a hard life, a hard training, you were wronged by your kinsmen and strangers; I should say you have fought your way through as much difficulty and danger as ever fell to one man's lot, and you have been very successful. But you have not come out unscathed. You believe in no one's honesty but your own. You judge harshly and bitterly of any man whom God has put into a higher position in the world than your own. You think wealth always means wickedness. Well, that is where you are wrong. Wealth lies in that. Until you open your eyes to see men's good points as well as their bad ones you will never believe in friendship, or love, or truth. And then he walked straight out of the room without giving me the opportunity to reply. I heard his lock himself into his room. There was nothing for me to do but to go at once. "So ends the farce of friendship and cousinly affection, I suppose. I would give the world to recall what I said about Glenberrie, but it is too late now. I must go through with it. After all, I did but tell him the truth. He deserved it. He deserved that he should lose a position that he has not known how to uphold worthily. I may do no better in the long-run, but at any rate I have broken no woman's heart; I have never thrown away my honor for a toy. If I could but get rid of one lurking doubt of the question—"

Here the page was torn across. There was no more. TO BE CONTINUED.

Ben Miller. Mr. Thomas Glenhill has purchased the Bonmillers and is now in possession. Tom is right good fellow and we hope to see him do a good business. Thos. Elliott, our late merchant, is still in our midst busy collecting accounts; we believe he intends taking a situation elsewhere; he will be missed. The work on the new bridge is progressing favorably; the contractor, Mr. Hardy, had to take down the old one sooner than he intended as his timber did not arrive as soon as he expected. Most of the fall wheat in this neighborhood will be cut this week if the weather proves favorable. At the late meeting of the High Court O. P. Mr. G. Handy was appointed D. D. H. C. R. for the West Riding of Huron. We expect to hear of him organizing some new Courts shortly. "Leaves have their time to fall," says the poet; but Wild Strawberry leaves are on the rise just now, being utilized in such enormous quantities in making Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—the infallible remedy for Cholera, Malaria, Diarrhoea and other Summer Complaints. The Niagara Falls, according to a Toronto traveller, is "der sublimity of vet-ness."

The First Sign

Of falling health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weakness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Miss.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harkey, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—E. P. Johnson, 325 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A BASEBALL REPORT

A Philological Society Finds New and Wonderful Beauties in the English Language.

I can conceive of no more delightful study for the philologist and metaphorist than a modern account of the great national game of baseball.

"You will observe, my friends," I began, "that the points were occupied by Whitney and Hackett as our battery, and that Grasshopper Jim filled the pitcher's box."

"Why did they put the pitcher in a box?" inquired the young lady with a bang.

"I don't know," I answered doubtfully, "unless it is a measure of economy. Pitchers come high."

"I know," said the woman, with intellectual curvature of the nose, "it is to keep the opposing players from hurting him."

"What is a base on balls?" asked a fair girl in white lawn.

"What did Horning do, after he was doubled up?" inquired the young woman with the bang.

"I presume not," said the girl with the intellectual nose.

"Does it, it's all so strange," said the representative of sentiment.

"Then," I went on, not heeding the interruption, "Wiss hit a la to Meyers and went out on first."

"What's a la-la?" cried the girls in chorus.

"Opinions differ," I replied. "When Rowe made that home run on the Kansas City grounds, I heard O. P. Dickerson say it was a la-la, but E. K. Wilson observed that it was a hit."

"Kansas City now came to bat," I continued, "and found Stemmyers at once. He got onto him in great shape and pounded him all over the field."

"How brutal!" exclaimed the girls.

"Why didn't he hide in the box?" "That doesn't seem to make any difference," said the intellectual girl.

"How brutal!" exclaimed the girls.

"Yes," said the girl with the bang, "my brother told me that when the Chicago were in Washington Mr. Orange tried to pitch, and made the Chicago mad, and every one of them hit him, and they actually laid him out cold in the fifth inning."

"True," said the sentimental girl, "George was telling me some time ago that the Kansas City boys were just laying, as he called it, for Buffington, and were going to knock the life out of him."

"It must be a terrible thing to be a pitcher," said the fair young thing in white.

"If you will give me your attention, ladies," I said a little severely, "we will proceed with the last half of the first inning. The boys were on their muscle, and wielded the willow with fine effect. After two runs had been scored Lillis was called out on strikes and kicked vigorously at the umpire."

"What is the umpire?" inquired the sentimental girl.

"Oh, I know that," replied the fair one in white; "he is the little man who does all the taking and whom the boys call 'rats.'"

"I think it's very wrong to kick him," said an amiable girl, speaking for the first time.

"I have no doubt he meant to do what's right."

"The innings closed with three runs for Kansas City," I went on, and after that the Boston had a picnic.

"Oh, wasn't that nice!" cried the girls. "I hope they invited the umpire." [Times.]

Ladies troubled with Pimples, Blotches, Rough Hands or Face, or sores of any description, should use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Ointment.

A Wise Prescription.

During the summer months people are liable to sudden attacks of neural complaints, and with no prompt remedy or medical aid at hand, life may be in danger.

Reasons why you should purchase Fluid Lightning in preference to all other remedies are: Rapid results—cures instantly. It is easily applied—no trouble—no loss of time.

F. L. Youkum says, in the Texas Farm and Ranch: A handful of lime sprinkled over a heap of Irish potatoes before you cover them up for the winter—open it if it be in the summer time when you cover them up—will assuredly save them.

"What is McGreggor's Speedy Cure for?" It is for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Indigestion, Biliousness, and it is the finest blood purifier in the known world today.

Right in the city of Hamilton, where it is manufactured, there has been over one thousand dollars worth sold in the last year retail, and the great majority of the sales are by one recommending it to another.
