Distant Mutterings.

All over the world is heard the mutterings of unrest: that sinister sound of coming trouble, which presages uprisings against authority, and sets class against class. The war, which was fought for the welfare of democracy, has brought about many changes from the old order of things. Monarchs have been dethroned and autocracies cast down by the populaces of certain countries, but the signs of the time, the real "peoples rule" are yet wanting, and have yet to be demonstrated. Rather is the rule set up in place of kingship. a species of Bolshevism, which owns no man for master, and where every one is held to be the equal of his fellow-in theory. Democracy, as it is understood or misunderstood in many quarters, is apt to degenerate into mob rule, which is but another exemplification of the doctrine of Might. The safety of democracy for which millions have died is not the kind of government that appeals to the heart more than to the head. True, it is the principle or system of gov-

No person can deny the re- and enjoyable evening to a conclusion markable progress that Bolshevism has made within the last few months, and yet, apparently, nothing has been done to check its march, or to keep it within bounds.

Leading writers abroad have declared that Bolshevism is due to three causes-hunger, ignorance, and rascally demagogy-but principally the latter. It may be true that the former might be attributed to its rise and spread in Russian, but the argument cannot hold good-if applied to some other countries in which, at present, there is a strong tendency and leaning toward it, unless we consider hunger in a less concrete form than its generally accepted meaning, and dent-at-law. Miss Saunders is arqualify it as mental starvation, or a craving for brain nourishment. Ignorance will always exist, and on many questions there is a plentiful ignorance abroad in every country and no person will appear or act more crassly ignorant than he who doe not wish to be convinced that certain views which he holds are erroneous But in Anglo Saxon lands there is not either that physical or mental hunger or simulated ignorance which is existent in other parts of the world but notwithstanding this, there is grave danger of the menace of Bolshevism taking root, and that danger is made more real by the fondness for and the sympathy which, the An- Jan. 23rd, 1919 glo Saxon has for the demagogue who is, as a rule, the archpriest of some new social reform, having always, on the surface, the benefit of the masses clearly depicted. The At Hazeley Down Camp Hospita street corner orator, with his insidious propaganda, is always attentively listened to and acclaimed by cheering crowds, and in this, the real danger o law and order, lies. Mr. Summers Lectures.

In his lecture at St. Joseph's last night P. J. Summers, K.C., fully bore out his reputation of witty racenteur as he kept his audience in a ripple of laughter from start to finish. And yet only within the past four years have these tortuous formu las been definitely superseded.

Then calling on his own recollections Mr. Summers told many funny stories of the past generation of lawyers. The late Messrs. Raftus and Boone, Blundell and O'Donnell figured mainly in these reminiscences. Their wit and wisdom, their liveliness of repartee and fondness for practical jokes were vividly portrayed. Finally he sketched graphically some episodes of the circuit courts. In particular he related how an eminent K.C., who now wears silk and is congruous refreshment, by the ruse of large audience manifested its delight several times by prolonged applause. After Rev. Last night's meeting was a good one in every way. There seemed a calmness in it which reminded us of the tranquility of "still waters which run deep." There was a depth in the singing which told for the good of all present, and which must certainly have helped the speaker in the utterance of her beautiful words. And then there was the prayer as offered by the Rev. Mr. Hemmeon, and which in its supplication and spirit seemed to unite every heart. With this spiritual atmosphere it is not be wondered Part of 1918. In one article he calls at that every word of last night's message was eagerly taken in, and that the story of "Fishers of Men" was touching and convincing.

ADDRESS: Little Bay Islands.

January 21st, 1919. Captain Abram Kean. S. S. Prospero.

As a small token of appreciation of the valuable services rendered the herring packers of this place, both new and in the past, while acting as Master of the s.s. Prospero, and more especially at the present crisis, when the chances of the season's pack being left here for the winter, was fraught with the possibility of an enormous loss being sustained; we the undersigned, ask you to accept the enclosed present, with the assurance of our best wishes for your future prosperity, and the hope that the owners of the ship will be awarded the contract for the continuation of the Northern Coastal Service, and that you may long live to command the good ship Prospero, or her successor, which to us will be a guarantee for the future, of satisfactory service to the public in this connection. Signed,-Strong and Murcell, E. D.

REPLY:

Gentlemen,-I assure you I very respect in the address you have presented me, and the very handsome present accompanying it. I think I would do myself an injustice if I said I did not have something to do with sending this ship down here this my long experience of the coast I was consulted in the matter, and knowing that great loss would be Total make this trip a successful one, and in doing so I had no thought other than my duty, consequently I appreciate all the more your magnificent gift.
