not agree with us we still continue to take.
We hurry through our meals as if life and death depended on ur doing so as rapidly as possible. If it is necessary to hurry, do so, but not at your meals. We neglect a slight attack of indigestion, though it makes us miserable indeed at the time. A second attack is treated in the same manner, and before we realize it our digestive apparatus is very much out of order.
We advise you strongly to never neglect an attack of indigestion, however slight.

We have placed within everybody's reach a remedy so simple, vemon win
